Jasper W. Day. The real estate and loan business established at Billings by Jasper W. Day in 1917, while still practically in its infancy, has gone hand in hand with the development of the city since that year, and undoubtedly has contributed materially toward the advantageous disposal of property and the honorable and satisfactory placing of loans during the comparatively short period of its existence. Mr. Day, a progressive and enterprising citizen of his community, is likewise engaged in ranching, and in each of his ventures is meeting with the kind of success that rewards well directed efforts that are governed by honorable principles and integrity.

Mr. Day was born at Rubicon, Wisconsin, August 14, 1875, a son of James and Sarah (Hodson) Day. James Day was born at Ipswich, England, in 1834, on the old manor farm of his father, also named James Day, who passed his entire life in Ipswich, where he cultivated his estate. The younger James Day was reared and educated at Ipswich, where he resided until he was eighteen years of age, and at that time immigrated to the United States and became a pioneer farmer of Dodge County, Wisconsin. Settling down to the pursuits of the soil, he rounded out a useful and successful career as an agriculturist, and died in 1913, at Hartford, Wisconsin, within ten miles of his old homestead, which he had cleared and reclaimed from the wilderness. He was a republican, but never sought the honors of public life, being content with his farm, his home and his family. In Wisconsin he was married to Sarah Hodson, who was born in 1837, in Sheffield, England, and who survives him as a resident of Hartford, Wisconsin, and they became the parents of the following children: George T., a farmer of the vicinity of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin; James B., a large property owner and real estate broker of Hartford; Albertus, the owner of much farming property and a real estate broker of Fond du Lac; Mary J., the wife of George W. Baker, a Texas ranchman; Frederick, the owner of valuable coal mining property at Farmington, Illinois; Frank, a real estate broker and large property owner of West Bend, Wisconsin; Caroline, who is unmarried and makes her home with her mother; Jasper W., of this review; and Walter R., who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in the locality of Horicon, Wisconsin.

Jasper W. Day received his education in the public schools of Dodge County, Wisconsin, and after a two-year course in the Hartford (Wisconsin) High School attended the Dixon Business College at Dixon, Illinois, from which he was graduated in 1895. Mr. Day's next experience was in the line of farming, a vocation for which he had been fitted by his early training on his father's farm, but after one year became attracted to railroading, as are so many country youths, and was station agent and telegraph operator for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad at various points in Wisconsin until 1901. From the latter year until 1906 he was located in the same capacity at Huntley, Montana, for the Northern Pacific Railway, and during this time, in the fall of 1905, branched out into a new line of activity, when he opened the first store at Huntley, an enterprise which he conducted for five years before disposing of his interests. Realizing the opportunities in that growing and thriving little city, Mr. Day turned his attention to the real estate and loan business, which he followed at Huntley until 1917, doing much to develop and advance the interests of the community, but in the year mentioned felt that he should have a wider scope for the demonstration of his abilities, and accordingly came to Billings, where he has since carried on extensive and constantly-growing operations, with offices at No. 210 Stapleton Building. Mr. Day handles farms, farm loans and city properties, and has been the medium through which some large transactions have been brought to a satisfactory conclusion. He owns his own modern home at No. 112 Wyoming Avenue. As a rancher, Mr. Day is the owner of 3,000 acres of splendid land in Yellowstone and Stillwater counties, on which he grows grain and alfalfa, and has likewise been an extensive cattle raiser. All of his operations have been characterized by strict adherence to high business ideals and principles and he has accordingly secured a position high in the confidence of his business associates.

Mr. Day was married January 20, 1896, at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, to Miss Sadie A. Mann, daughter of the late John W. and Sarah (Bloor) Mann, farming people of Neosho, Wisconsin, both now deceased. One child has been born to this union: Hazel F., who was the first white child born at Huntley Montana, while this was still within the boundaries of the Crow Reservation. She is now a junior in the Billings High School.

Mr. Day is a stanch republican in his political adherence, but has not found time to enter actively into public or political life. His fraternal connection is with Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and he holds membership also in the Billings Midland Club.

JUDGE DAVID M. DURFEE. There are some men who both as lawyers and jurists treat law as a science, founded on established principles. Such men never make any arguments in court without displaying their habits of thinking, resorting at once to some well-founded principle of law and drawing their deductions logically from their premises. One of these ornaments to the bar and bench is Judge David M. Durfee now engaged in the practice of his profession at Philipsburg. In his practice he has risen to lofty heights of professional eminence by his profound penetration, his power of analysis, the comprehensive grasp and strength of his understanding, and the firmness, frankness and integrity of his character. Judge Durfee was born in Schenectady County, New York, July 22, 1855, a son of David P. Durfee, and a member of one of the old-established families of this country. Thomas Durfee, the founder of the family, came to the American colonies from England in 1660, and located at Portsmouth, Rhode Island, and one of his descendants, who bore his name, became chief justice of Rhode Island. Another descendant of the original Thomas Durfee, Earl Durfee, the great-grandfather of Judge Durfee, served as a soldier in the American Revolution. A son of Earl Durfee, Abraham Durfee was the grandfather of Judge Durfee, and he was born in Rhode Island in 1777, and died in Schenectady County, New York, in 1863, having been one of the pioneer farmers of that region. He married a Miss Potter, who belonged to the same family as Bishop Potter of New York.

David P. Durfee, father of Judge Durfee, was born in Schenectady County, New York in 1811, and died in the same county in 1889, having spent his entire life there following the occupation of a farmer. A Jacksonian democrat, he remained steadfast to the principles of the great leader, and was elected on his party ticket highway commmissioner of his county. For many years he was a member of the Masonic fraternity. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Margaret Rector, was born in the same county as her husband, in 1817, and died there in 1878. Their children were as follows: Francis M., who died at Philipsburg when sixty-two years old, came west to Colorado in 1861, to Virginia City, Montana, in 1864, and Philipsburg in the '70s, being a pioneer rancher, lumberman and miner and operated his sawmill at an early day at Clancy, Jefferson County, Montana; James E., who was a miner and rancher, died near San Diego, California, in 1914; Louisa E., who married Louis Ruff, now deceased, a farmer of Schenectady County, New York, resides in that county; Oscar F., who is a farmer of Schoharie County, New York; Adelaide, who married Thomas Botscheider, a contractor and builder of Philipsburg, and a rancher and banker; Judge Durfee, whose name heads this review; and Leonard A., who was a pioneer lumberman of Philipsburg in business with his brother, Francis, died here in 1879.

Judge David M. Durfee received his preliminary educational training in the schools of Schenectady County, and the Schoharie Academy at Schoharie, New York, following which for two years he was engaged in teaching in the schools of his native state. He then entered the law office of N. P. Hinman of Albany, New York, and remained there for a year, and then for three years resumed the duties of a school master in Somerset County, Maryland, and at the same time kept on with his legal studies to such good purpose that he was admitted to the bar of Maryland at Annapolis by the Supreme Court of the state, in 1882. Realizing that the openings for an ambitious young man in his profession were better in the more recently developed sections of the country, Mr. Durfee came west to Philipsburg, and until he had established himself in practice spent six months in the lumber woods, and also taught school, being thus employed for three years. In 1885 he began to realize upon his good judgment in selecting this region, and entered upon an active practice, and has the distinction of being the first of his calling in Philipsburg. In 1886 his fellow citizens honored him by electing him county attorney of Deerlodge County, which then included Philipsburg, and he held the office for two years, and in that time so proved his mettle, that in 1889 he was selected as one of the delegates to the constitutional convention. His record up to this time was of such a nature as to make him the logical candidate for judge of Deerlodge County, and he was elected to the office in the fall of 1889 with a flattering majority, and served for three years, the short term, and in this office, as in his first one, he was the first man to be elected to it. In 1892 Granite County was organized, and Judge Durfee returned to Philipsburg the following year, preferring to cast his lot with the new county, and here he has since been engaged in a general civil and criminal practice. During the period which ensued, Judge Durfee has not been permitted to remain out of public life, but has held the office of prosecuting attorney for six terms, of two years each, and is the present incumbent of that important office. Since casting his first vote Judge Durfee, like his father, is a follower of the principles enunciated by Andrew Jackson, and is a strong factor in the democratic party. His offices are conveniently located in the McDonald Theatre Building on Sansome Street. Judge Durfee is a Catholic. He belongs to Philipsburg Lodge, Knights of Pythias, having joined this order in Maryland; Missoula Council, Knights of Columbus, in which he has taken the third degree; Selah Tribe, Improved Order of Red Men of Philipsburg, and the Philipsburg Commercial Club. The convenient modern residence occupied by the Durfee family on the corner of Pearl and Sutter streets is owned by Judge Durfee as well as three dwellings in Missoula, Montana.

On February 1, 1888, Judge Durfee was united in marriage with Miss Emelie J. Irving of Baltimore, Maryland, a daughter of Thomas and Emelie (Delmas) Irving, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Irving was a prominent man and successful merchant of Baltimore. The marriage ceremony of Judge and Mrs. Durfee was performed by Cardinal Gibbons. In 1902 Mrs. Durfee was accidentally shot at Missoula, Montana. Their children were as follows: Eulalie, who married Buford Collings, a farmer of Kansas City, Missouri; Thomas Irving, who is an electrical engineer for the Minnesota Steel Company, resides at Duluth,

D. M. Dunfee

Minnesota; Adelaide, who married Ellery C. Proctor, a merchant of Proctor, Montana; Marie J., who is a graduate nurse, resides at Missoula, Montana. In November, 1903, Judge Durfee was married to Miss Elizabeth E. Kelley at Missoula, Montana, a daughter of Patrick Kelley of San Francisco, California, a well known builder and contractor who died in 1918. Judge and Mrs. Durfee have one daughter, Eileen, who was born October 31, 1912.

For some years Judge Durfee has been connected with every important case in Granite County, and in their conduct has proven himself to be one of the most enlightened, intrepid and persevering friends of law and order this section possesses, and constantly inspires admiration and lively interest for the intensity and sagacity with which he pursues his investigations. As a jurist he was masterly in his handling of testimony, and his whole soul was enlisted in securing impartial justice for those brought into his court. Montana has few men of Judge Durfee's calibre, and Granite County is proud of the distinction conferred upon it by his presence within its confines.

Frederick Panton Rixon. Prominent among the business men of Billings who have found time from their personal affairs to devote to the interests of their community is found Frederick Panton Rixon. While Mr. Rixon is a Canadian by birth, having been born in the Province of Ontario, November 23, 1874, he is a thorough Montanan by training, and has been a resident of Billings for thirty-eight years, during a large part of which time he has been engaged in the drug business. His public service record is a long and honorable one, and includes the accomplishment of much valuable and constructive work as county treasurer and a member of the Montana House of Representatives.

Mr. Rixon belongs to a family which originated in England and the founder of which in Canada emigrated first to Baltimore, Maryland, he being the great-grandfather of Frederick P. Rixon. From Baltimore he went to the Province of Ontario, where his son, Frederick P. Rixon's grandfather, was born and where the latter spent the remainder of his life engaged in agricultural pursuits. John Rixon, the father of Frederick P., was born in 1839, in Canada, and was there reared, educated and married. During the greater part of his life he was engaged in farming and journalism, and his career was one in which he displayed versatile and marked, if not eminent talents. In 1881 he came to the United States, coming into Miles City, Montana, by railway, and then driving overland by team as a pioneer to the straggling little village of Billings, at that time situated beyond the point to which the railways had yet extended. At Billings he entered the office of the Herald, one of the city's first newspapers, and from that time forward until his death in November, 1904, was identified with newspaper work. He was a republican in his political adherence, and was a member of the Episcopal Church and a devout churchman. Mr. Rixon married Susanna Panton, who was born in Ontario, Canada, in 1845, and who survives her husband and makes her home at Billings. They became the parents of the following children: Anna, the wife of P. L. Reece, a railroad contractor of Nicholson, Pennsylvania; Mary, who died at the age of seventeen years; Rebecca, who married Leslie Bates, manager for a large fire insurance company at San Francisco, California; Eleanor, the wife of John B. Fritschi, also connected with a fire insurance concern at San Francisco; Frederick Panton, of this review; William P., engaged in the real estate and insurance business at Billings; Winifred, the wife of Charles J. Chapple, a druggist of Billings, and Harold Alfred Rixon, who is assistant cashier of the Security Bank of Billings.

Frederick Panton Rixon received his education in the public schools of Billings, having accompanied his parents here as a lad of seven years. When he was thirteen years of age he decided that he had sufficient education to start himself off in life, and at that time entered a drug store and received his introduction to the vocation which was to later become his life work. Also, for two years, he was in the service of the Northern Pacific Railway, but eventually, at the age of seventeen years, decided that his educational training was not sufficient for his needs, and accordingly returned to his studies, which he pursued for several years. When he considered that he was adequately equipped he returned to the drug business, which he thoroughly mastered, and in 1904 became a member of the drug firm of Holmes & Rixon, an association which continued successfully over a period of sixteen years. In 1916 Mr. Rixon became sole proprietor of the business, when he bought the interests of his partner, and the establishment, located in the Yellowstone National Bank Building, is today one of the leading pharmacies of Billings. Mr. Rixon is an excellent business man, noted for his integrity and a sense of business honor that makes certain the handling of only reliable goods and the careful preparation of prescriptions, while his unfailing courtesy has also contributed to the factors which have given him business success. A republican in politics and a citizen who believes in the responsibility of every man to perform public service, for some years he has been before his fellow-citizens in official capacities. Elected city treasurer in 1896, he established an excellent record, but did not run for a second term. He next served for three years as deputy clerk of the court, and in 1914 was sent to the House of Representatives in the fifteenth session of that body. There his services were constructive in character and beneficial to his district and his state. He also served one term as county treasurer. Mr. Rixon is a member of the Episcopal Church and senior warden thereof. He belongs to the Billings Midland Club and is prominent in fraternal circles, holding membership in Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Billings Lodge Knights of Pythias, and Billings Camp Woodmen of the World.

Mr. Rixon's modern home is located at No. 24 North Thirty-first Street. He is unmarried.

George P. J. Arnold, Jr. It is not within the ability of every man to be successful both as an employer and employe. Certain characteristics are necessary in order that a man may represent both capital and labor. He must be fair in his judgments, upright in his actions, and open to argument. While George P. J. Arnold, Jr., is not exactly a mediator between capital and labor as the term generally applies and is understood, still in his capacity as general manager of the Lewistown branch of the Banking Corporation of Montana, the largest investment banking company in the Northwest, he occupies a position calling for a display of much executive ability and the exercise of tact and good judgment.

Mr. Arnold was born in the city of New York, July 30, 1873, a son of George P. J. and Elizabeth (Hammerschmidt) Arnold, natives of Germany, the former of whom died at the age of sixty-eight years, in 1904, while the latter passed away November 10, 1893. They were married in New York city and became the parents of two sons and two daughters, of whom three children are living, George P. J. having been the second child in order of birth. George P. J. Arnold, the elder, was drafted into the Prussian army, and served in the Franco-Prussian war as a drummer boy. Subsequently he learned the cigar making trade, and followed it in his native land until he was twenty-seven years of age. For a long time he had been dissatisfied with the German form of government, and had wished to become a citizen of a free country, but had been hampered by a lack of finances. After his arrival in New York city he secured employment at his trade, and later, after having accumulated some capital, embarked in business on his own account, his first establishment being in New York City and his second at Jersey City, where his last years were spent. While he was a member of the German Mainz Society, he was always a stanch citizen of his adopted land. In politics he was originally a whig and later a republican.

George P. J. Arnold, Jr., is a self-made man. He attended the public schools of New York City only until he was fourteen years of age, at which time he went to work for a wholesale liquor dealer at a wage of $3.00 per week. Subsequently he learned the gold-beater's trade at Jersey City, and after spending about five years in that vocation turned his attention to the coal and ice business at Jersey City and continued as the proprietor of such an enterprise there until 1899. Mr. Arnold's next venture was in selling and contracting asbestos material, but this he gave up in 1903 when his activities and energetic nature carried him into an entirely different line of work as first assistant steward on the steamer City of Memphis, for the Ocean Steamship Company. Six months of experience sufficed to convince Mr. Arnold that he did not care to make this his life work, and his inclinations took another radical change, this in the direction of general farming near Clinton, Connecticut, which occupation he followed for three years. In 1906 he moved to Delaware and followed fruit farming, he having purchased a property of this character. He sold this farm in May, 1908, and on the 30th of that month arrived at Lewistown, Montana, where, June 8, 1908, he homesteaded on 160 acres of land in Fergus County, eight miles from the present site of Denton. There he built the first cabin, into which he and his wife moved, and began operations which have since increased his holdings in that community to 640 acres. This property he rents out. On March 1, 1914, Mr. Arnold became branch manager for the E. C. Shoemaker Company, farm mortgages, at Stanford, Fergus County, and in the spring of 1915 became assistant manager for the same concern at Lewistown. In December, 1916, the business of this company was taken over by The Banking Corporation of Montana, now the largest investment banking company in the Northwest, and in 1917, Mr. Arnold was advanced to his present position as general manager of the business at Lewistown. A man of unusual public spirit, interested in local affairs and jealous of the reputation of the city of his adoption, he has become a powerful factor in the furtherance of any measure which has for its aim the advancement of the people or the betterment of existing conditions. He invariably acts from conviction, and is steadfast in his friendships as he is in the sincerity and integrity of his actions. Although his interests are widespread and the demand upon his time imperative, he is uniformly courteous, listening patiently and acting wisely according to the judgment his ripe experience has given him. His political convictions cause him to support the republican party.

Mr. Arnold was married May 17, 1896, to Miss Emma A. LaDue, who was born at White Plains, New York, a daughter of Alonzo and Susan A. (Baxter) LaDue, natives of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess County, New York, and Johnsonville, Rensellaer County, New York, respectively. Mrs. Arnold's ancestors on both sides of the family came from France and settled in America at an early date of the colonial era, forming a settlement in New York. Mr. LaDue passed his days as a farmer in New York and Connecticut, his death occurring in the latter state in December, 1902. He and his wife were the parents of four daughters and two sons, of whom four children are living, Mrs. Arnold having been the second child in order of birth.

Joseph Bertrand is a well known Montana merchant, and established the first place of business in the town of Roberts in Carbon County. He is still the active head of this business, which has grown and prospered under his direction.

Merchandising has constituted Mr. Bertrand's life experience. He was born at the city of Quebec, Canada, July 16, 1854. His people were French and were identified with the French colonization of Canada. His father, George Bertrand, was born in the Province of Quebec in 1823 and spent his life there, dying in 1859. He was a tailor by trade, and in religion, like all his ancestors, was a Catholic. His wife was Genevieve Falardeau, who was born in Quebec in 1829 and died there in 1907, when nearly eighty years of age. Joseph Bertrand was the oldest of their three children. Odilon was a painter and decorator by trade and died at Quebec in 1904, while Edmond died in 1869, at the age of twelve years.

Joseph Bertrand at the age of fifteen left school and found self-supporting employment. He had some experience in stores in Canada and in 1882 went to Detroit, Michigan, where he clerked in stores and in 1885 went to Chicago and gained considerable knowledge of merchandising in that city.

Mr. Bertrand came to Montana in 1887, more than thirty years ago, and for nine years was employed by the well known firm of T. C. Power & Brother at Lewistown. In 1896 he engaged in business for himself, and had a prosperous establishment at Lewistown until 1905, when he sold out and moved to the new town of Roberts, where he established the pioneer general store. This store is one of the larger businesses of its kind in Carbon County and its trade comes from the country surrounding Roberts in a radius of sixteen miles. Mr. Bertrand owns both the store and the building in which it is located, and also has a modern home in Roberts.

As a voter Mr. Bertrand is a republican, is a Catholic, is affiliated with Billings Council No. 1259, Knights of Columbus, and is a fourth degree knight, and is a member of the Detroit, Michigan, branch of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association.

He married Miss Margaret McCann, of Lewistown, Montana, in 1889. She is a daughter of James and Sarah (Creighton) McCann, the former a farmer now deceased, while the mother resides at Roundup, Montana. For many years much of the inspiration for Mr. Bertrand in his business career has been his children. He is the father of a large household, twelve sons and daughters having been born to him and his good wife. George, the oldest, was in France with the Aviation Corps of the American armies during the World war. Margaret, the second child, is at home. Arnold helps his father in the store at Roberts. Helen is in a nurse's training school at Billings. Bernard is an apprenticed machinist at Livingston. Blanche is a graduate of St. Vincent Academy at Helena and is a teacher at Boyd, Montana. Dorothy and Frances are both students of the St. Vincent Academy at Helena. Esther is in public school at Roberts. Irene attends St. Vincent's Academy, while Geraldine and Julius, the youngest of the family, are in school at Roberts.

R. J. Boatman

RUFUS B. KELLEY spent his early youth on the Minnesota frontier, has been a hard worker for over forty years, and in that time has been a farmer, mason contractor, lumberman, auctioneer and real estate dealer, and in the last two vocations is established today at Columbus.

He was born in Crawford County, Wisconsin, December 26, 1854. Mr. Kelley has an ancestry made up of an admixture of French, Holland and Welsh strains. Through his mother he is descended from King William IV of Holland. His great-grandfather Kelley was a native of Scotland and came to America in colonial times. Elisha P. Kelley, father of Rufus B., was born at Windham in Windham County, Connecticut, in 1819. He grew up in his native county, at the age of eighteen went to Ottawa, Illinois, where he married, and next removed to Crawford County, Wisconsin, when there were only three white families in the entire county. During 1866-1880 he lived near Albert Lea, Minnesota, where he was again a pioneer. In 1880 he moved to Morrison County, Minnesota, and spent the rest of his life there, dying in November, 1881. He was a farmer in all these various localities. In politics he voted as a democrat. Elisha P. Kelley married Clara Gillette. She was born at Peekskill, New York, in 1826 and died near Albert Lea, Freeborn County, Minnesota, in 1876. She was the mother of eight children: Regina E., who married Harvey T. Rittenhouse and died at Minnesota City, Minnesota, in 1909, where her husband still resides; Miranda, wife of John L. B. Howe, a retired farmer of Glenville, Minnesota; Casper C., a farmer in Cass County, Minnesota; Luella, living at Absarokee, Montana, widow of Albert Seeley, who was a farmer and trader; Rufus B., fifth in age; David B., an implement dealer near Fairmount, Minnesota; Ida, wife of F. E. Runner, a prominent banker, capitalist, rancher and stock man of Absarokee, Montana; and George G., who lives at Absarokee.

Rufus B. Kelley was about twelve years old when his parents moved to Minnesota, and he acquired his education in Freeborn County, that state. He lived on his father's farm to the age of twenty-five and then went to the northern districts of Minnesota, working as as mason, farmer and lumberman. He came out to Montana and located at Columbus in 1907, but soon afterward moved to the Absarokee community, where he was in business as a mason contractor and a farmer for eight or nine years. In September, 1916, he returned to Columbus, and has since engaged in auctioneering and in the real estate business as a partner of Julian D. Ray. Their offices are in the Simpson Building and they do a large general real estate business, handling city and ranch properties. Mr. Kelley individually owns a residence surrounded by large and well appointed grounds on Fourth Avenue and other local real estate.

He is a democrat in politics. He has long been identified with the Odd Fellows fraternity, serving as noble grand for many terms and was a member of the Grand Lodge of Minnesota as well as of Montana. His local affiliation is with Yellowstone Lodge No. 85. He is also a member of the Chamber of Commerce at Columbus.

December 21, 1880, at Verndale, Minnesota, he married Miss Harriet Eddy, daughter of Abel and Harriet (Bristol) Eddy. Abel Eddy was born at Utica, New York, in 1810, grew up in his native state, was married in Michigan, lived in Illinois for a time, next settled at Clarksville, Iowa, and finally, in 1878, moved to Verndale, Minnesota, where he died in 1897. He spent all his active career as a farmer and carpenter and was a democrat in politics. Abel Eddy married Miss Harriet Bristol, who was born in New York State in 1820 and died at Verndale, Minnesota, in 1896. Of their children George, Sarah, John and Mary, the first four, are all deceased; Chester is a merchant at Sumner, Washington; Andalusia is deceased; Cheney is a farmer at Donley, Minnesota; Lydia, Charles and Eustasia are deceased; Frank is a large and prosperous land owner at Morris, Minnesota; while Mrs. Kelley is the twelfth and youngest of the family. She was reared and received her education in the public schools at Verndale. Mrs. Kelley is an active member of the Congregational Church, belongs to the Woman's Club at Columbus, the Rebekahs and was an active Red Cross worker during the war.

Mr. and Mrs. Kelley have an interesting family of seven children. Murta May, the oldest, is the wife of Frank Young, a real estate broker at Absarokee, Montana; the second child, Albert Lee, died when six years old; Gladys is the wife of Harley Beasley a farmer at Absarokee; John L. is in the real estate business at Billings; Earl A. was in the Medical Corps of the army during the war, being stationed at Camp Bowie, Texas; Fred H. is a carpenter by trade and lives at home; Boyd, the youngest, enlisted in June, 1918, at the age of seventeen, was sent to Mare Island, California, and later to Galveston, Texas, where he trained for the Marine Corps and was mustered out in March, 1919. He is now engaged on the county survey and lives at home.

ROBERT THORNTON BOATMAN. Until recently, when he disposed of many of his holdings, Robert Thorton Boatman directed ranching and stock raising interests that made him one of the most prominent men in that line in the state. Mr. Boatman is a resident of Dillon and still owns a ranch and has by no means retired from the career he began here more than thirty years ago. He is one of the comparatively few men past the age of fifty who can claim Montana as their native state. He was born in the Ruby Valley, April 21, 1866, and is a son of George T. Boatman. His grandfather, Robert Boatman, was of Scotch ancestry and spent his active life as a farmer, and died during a cholera epidemic near Frankfort, Kentucky, in 1833.

The late George T. Boatman, who died at Dillon, March 26, 1919, was a distinguished Montana pioneer. His life was specially distinguished by the sturdy industry and business ability which enabled him to do a great deal for every community in which he lived. He was born at Frankfort, Kentucky, August 24, 1832, and a year after his birth his parents moved to Pleasant Green, Missouri, where he lived until he was grown. He was a farmer there, also operated a grist, flour and saw mill, and the extent of his enterprises made him a man of consequence in the community. During the Civil war he served as a Confederate soldier in the armies of General Price. One of his forefathers had fought on the American side in the Revolutionary war.

In 1865, about the close of the war, he left Missouri and with ox team crossed the plains to Montana, his first destination being Alder Gulch. His first work there was making spilings and mining timber. Soon afterward he settled in Ruby Valley, homesteading 160 acres six miles southwest of Sheridan. In addition to developing his claim he made himself useful to his community by resuming his milling interests, operating for seven years the Silver Springs mills, one of the chief sources of flour supply in that early day. In 1887 he settled on a ranch five miles north of Dillon, on what is now known as the Beaverhead ranch, and owned 1,280 acres there. He improved the land and by irrigating made it one of the most valuable farms in that section of the state. He finally left his ranch to spend his last years in Dillon. He was a democrat in politics and a very active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His minister said of him: "Brother Boatman's life was a positive influence for good. He was for many years a class leader in the Methodist Church. He enjoyed worship in God's house and whenever his strength permitted he was on hand at the public services. He lived a consistent, honored, faithful witness to the saving power of Christ. God was not a stranger to him and he looked forward with anticipation to his heavenly home."

George T. Boatman married in Missouri, Harriet L. Johnson, who is still living at Dillon. They walked as companions along life's highway for over sixty years. She was born near Zanesville, Ohio, September 30, 1836. Her brother, Henry R. Johnson, also a resident of Dillon, is a retired rancher, and came to Montana in 1864, homesteading in the Beaverhead Valley. Mrs. Boatman's father was William Johnson, who was born in New York State in 1800, was reared there, was married in Ohio, and in 1838 moved to Missouri and settled near Pleasant Green. He followed the trade of stone mason and was also a farmer and died at Pleasant Green, Missouri, in 1852, Politically he was a whig and was an active member of the Methodist Church. William Johnson married Mary Armstrong, a native of Pennsylvania and of Scotch ancestry. She also died at Pleasant Green. Her father, James Armstrong, was a native of Scotland and on coming to this country settled in Ohio.

George T. Boatman and wife had a large family of nine children. Mary, the oldest, was first married to Thomas Martin, a merchant at Glendale, Montana, and also in the ore transportation business. She is now the wife of J. B. Townsend, a farmer and fruit grower at Stevensville, Montana. Sarah J., the second of the family, lives at Dillon, widow of Elmer J. Terry, who in early life was a school teacher and later was a gardener and farmer near the Little Pipestone in Montana. The third of the family, William H. Boatman, lives at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and the next in age is Robert Thornton. Laura I. is the wife of John H. Brundage, a rancher and stockman in the Centennial Valley of Montana. George T., Jr., lives at Madison, Wisconsin. Etta is the wife of William O. Metzel, who recently sold his ranch properties in the Upper Ruby Valley. Mr. Metzel was killed in an automobile accident near Spokane, Washington, in July, 1919. His widow resides in Dillon, with her two sons. Ruby M. is also a resident of Dillon and in 1919 disposed of some valuable ranch interests in the Centennial Valley.

Robert Thornton Boatman spent his early life in Montana Territory and received his early education in the rural schools of Ruby Valley in Madison County. At the age of fifteen he ran away from home, seeking new adventures and experiences. That was in 1881, and he hired out as a cattle driver, assisting in taking a herd of cattle to Calgary, Canada. He remained on the western prairies of Canada for seven years, during most of that time being employed by I. G. Baker & Company, a large cattle, horse and freighting concern. While in Canada Mr. Boatman had his nearest approximation to military service. While at McLeod in 1885, in charge of a freighting outfit the teams were taken over by the Canadian Government and divided into four horse teams, used to transport ammunition and artillery. That was the period of the Riel Rebellion in Western Canada, Riel having stirred up some of the Indian tribes to hostilities. Accepting his new role in the army transport service, Mr. Boatman drove a team from McLeod to Calgary and there joined a large command under Major General Strange. They took the artillery from Calgary to Edmonton on the North Saskatchewan, and finally to Fort Pitt, which had been destroyed and was still smoking ruins. In that vicinity the Canadian troops engaged in several battles with the Indians. Prior to the first battle with the Indians, Major General Strange went to the drivers personally and gave them instructions as to their duties during the fight. This was at Frenchman's Butte, about four miles north of Fort Pitt. The general was very particular in his instructions to the drivers to stay with their artillery, no matter what happened, and under no circumstances to leave it. The drivers were naturally anxious regarding the behavior of their horses when the artillery began firing, and it may also be said that they were not unconcerned regarding their own behavior in this, their first time under fire. However, the horses stood firm and so did the men and made a very fine showing. The artillery shelled the Indians out of the trenches they had dug and forced them to cut their way north through the heavy timber. The Indians had dug their trenches just behind a row of muskeags and had covered them so skillfully that it was only by the help of powerful field glasses that their position was ascertained. General Strange after the battle made a speech to the men, stating that he could have captured the Indians right there by ordering a charge over these muskeags, but it would have entailed a heavy loss of life in his command, and as he knew it was a matter of but a short time when he would capture them without this loss of life he considered it best not to order the charge. After the battle the troops were instructed to fall back about three miles to where the camp was corralled in battle formation and proceeded to make further preparation for the capture of the Indians. The first shot of the artillery was fired for 700 yards, as that was the distance figured to the trenches, but it was discovered that the shot went over the trenches, so the range was reduced to 600 yards and this proved to be correct and drove the Indians out. After the battle it was discovered that the first shot must have exploded right in the Indians' camp, where the old men, children, dogs, etc., were, this being called the squaw camp, for evidences were found that the shell did big damage to the inhabitants there. It was the first time that the Indians had had shrapnel used against them and caused them to remark afterwards that the white man did not fight fair, as they shot the same bullet twice. Mr. Boatman also accompanied the forces north to Beaver River and Cole Lake, where the last remnants of the rebel tribes were scattered. He was released from his army service at Fort Pitt.

In 1888 he returned to Montana at Dillon and for several years worked with some cattle outfits. In 1892 he began buying and shipping horses and mules, which he still continues, and during the past quarter of a century he has been probably the largest individual shipper of horses out of Montana. In the early days he shipped horses and mules to Kansas, Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky and other southern states. In 1898 he took charge of the Home Park Ranch in the Upper Ruby Valley, but in 1907 moved into the Centennial Valley, where he had acquired some extensive land holdings. He used these lands chiefly for cattle raising and feeding. He owned 2,700 acres there and also had 3,000 acres under lease. Most of his ranch property he sold in 1917 to Ed Roe. Mr. Boatman also owned 1,920 acres on the north side of the lake in Centennial Valley, but sold this in the spring of 1919, with his cattle, to the Centennial Land and Cattle Company.

Mr. Boatman owns a modern home at 325 South Dakota Street in Dillon. He also has under lease a ranch in the Big Hole Basin, and is using it to run his cattle and other stock. At Home Park he was postmaster four years under McKinley's administration, and in 1894-95 was a justice of the peace in Centennial Valley. He is a stanch republican, is affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is a member of Virginia City Lodge No. 1, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Virginia Lodge No. 7, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is also an Elk.

In 1906 Mr. Boatman married Elizabeth J. Peterson, who died at Dillon in 1914. She was the mother of four children: Thornton, who died at the age of eight years; Harriet, born May 10, 1910; Robert G., born October 15, 1914; and Ralph F., twin brother of Robert. On December 20, 1916, Mr. Boatman married Martha E. Minter, daughter of C. H. and Mary J. (Scale) Minter. Her father was born in Virginia in 1844, and was married near Booneville, Kentucky, where he was a farmer and miller and later engaged in the timber and logging business. In 1899 he moved to the vicinity of Bethel, Ohio, where he lived on a farm until his death in 1911. He was a republican and a member of the Methodist Church. Mrs. Boatman's mother resides at Dillon. Mrs. Boatman was educated in the public schools near Booneville, Kentucky. She is an active member of the Methodist Church.

JOHN LOGAN was a railroad telegrapher and agent for the Northern Pacific lines until he entered the service of the Columbus State Bank ten years ago, and is cashier of that institution, the first bank established in Stillwater County.

Mr. Logan was born at Melrose, Iowa, August 8, 1886. His father, Luke Logan, still living at Melrose, was born in Kings County, Ireland, in 1844, and came to the United States about 1865. He moved out to Melrose, Iowa, in 1870, and was married at Georgetown in that state. His wife was Margaret Lahart, who was born at Tyrone, Iowa, in 1854. They were married in the Big Stone Church at Georgetown. At that time this was the largest church between the Mississippi River and the old Missions of California. Luke Logan became a pioneer farmer near Melrose, later was a merchant for a number of years, and then returned to his farm. He was a democrat and a Catholic.

John Logan attended public school at Melrose, his education being continued to the age of seventeen. For one year he taught school in Monroe County, Iowa, and in 1906 came to Columbus, Montana. After a few months as an employe in the Northern Pacific freight house he served two years as telegraph operator for that railroad, and then for two years was station agent. He entered the Columbus State Bank in 1910 as bookkeeper, was promoted to assistant cashier, and since 1914 has been cashier.

The Columbus State Bank was established in 1903 under a state charter, and in its prosperous record of the past ten years Mr. Logan has been an influential factor. The bank is capitalized at $40,000 and has a surplus of $10,000. A. C. Johnson of Helena is president and the vice president is F. V. DeClercq.

Mr. Logan is president of the Stillwater Club and is a member of the Catholic Church and a democrat in politics. He married at Billings, Montana, in 1912, Miss Daisy Penman, daughter of David and Marjorie (Preston) Penman, both deceased. Her father came from Maryland with the Northern Pacific Railway for the purpose of opening mines at Timberline and Cokedale. He died at Columbus in 1914. Mrs. Logan is a graduate of the University of Montana at Missoula. To their marriage were born two daughters, Margaret, born June 6, 1913, and Helen, born March 3, 1915.

HEBER GUY MORGAN, M. D. While the town of Roberts in Carbon County has only one physician and surgeon, the community is peculiarly fortunate in having access to such talents and wide experience as those exemplified by Doctor Morgan.

Doctor Morgan, who first came out to Montana about thirteen years ago, was born at Smith Lake, Minnesota, February 13, 1883. He represents an old Virginia family of Welsh origin. The Morgans came from Wales and first settled on the eastern shore of Maryland. Doctor Morgan's ancestor Morgan Morgan settled at Bunker Hill, in that portion of old Virginia now West Virginia, as early as 1726, nearly two centuries ago. Doctor Morgan's grandfather was Achilles Morgan, who was born in Virginia in 1819 and died at New Martinsville, now West Virginia, in 1905. He spent his life as a farmer. His wife was a Miss Massey, a native of Maryland, who died when quite young of diphtheria. John W. Morgan, their son, was born in New Martinsville in 1857, lived there to the age of twenty-one, and in 1878 settled at Smith Lake, Minnesota, where he was engaged in the grain and mercantile business for eight years, and during that time his son Doctor Morgan was born. He then went back to New Martinsville, West Virginia, and farmed there but is now living retired. He is a democrat and an active supporter of the Christian Church. John W. Morgan married Belle Irene Bowser, who was born in Ohio in 1857 and died at New Martinsville, West Virginia, April 1, 1914. Doctor Morgan is the older of their two sons. Achilles, the other son, died at the age of twenty years, at Morgantown, West Virginia.

Doctor Morgan attended public school at New Martinsville, graduating from high school in 1902. He then entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, and completed his course and received the M. D. degree on May 30, 1906. He is a member of the Phi Beta Pi honorary medical fraternity. For three months in 1906 he served as interne in the State Insane Hospital at Mount Pleasant, Iowa, and in September of the same year came to Montana and for two years was connected with the State Insane Hospital at Warm Springs as an interne. In 1908 he went to Twin Falls, Idaho, and remained there in practice as a contract surgeon with the United States Government for three years. For a brief time following that engagement he was connected with the State Insane Hospital at Engleside, Nebraska, then returned to his old home at New Martinsville, West Virginia, where he lived from July, 1913, to 1915.

Doctor Morgan settled permanently at Roberts, Montana, in 1915, and is the only representative of his profession and finds his services in great demand. In 1917 he established the only drug store at Roberts and he owns the building in which it is conducted and has his own residence there. Doctor Morgan is an independent democrat.

He married at Hastings, Nebraska, in 1913, Miss Genevieve L. Simmons, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Simmons, who reside at Cherokee, Iowa. Her father is a farmer. Doctor and Mrs. Morgan have one daughter, Edna.

WALTER L. HURD. As homesteader, rancher, editor, legislator and business man Walter LeRoy Hurd has become widely known outside his home community of Columbus, and is in fact one of Montana's most progressive and liberal minded citizens.

He represents a long line of sturdy American ancestors. The Hurd family was introduced to the American colonies from England by three brothers who settled in Massachusetts. One of these brothers was named Timothy Hurd. A current tradition in agricultural history is that Timothy Hurd introduced the grass seed to the colonies that has always been known as "Timothy" and is one of the most popular and widely used pasture and hay grasses. The great-grandfather of Walter LeRoy Hurd was an Episcopal minister in New York State. He was noted not only for his ministerial calling but also for his powerful physique. One of his sons, Curtis Hurd, afterward became attorney general of the State of New York. Elisha H. Hurd, grandfather of Walter L., was born in New York State in 1814, and lived the life of a farmer, partly in New York and partly in Iowa. He died at Williams, Iowa, in 1889. As a young man he had served in the New York State Militia. He married Fannie DeKay, who was born in New Jersey in 1816 and died at Austin, Minnesota, in 1907, when past ninety years of age.

Reuben J. Hurd, father of the Columbus business man, was born near Franklinville, New York, in 1843, and grew up in Winnishiek County, Iowa. Since the age of twenty he has lived in Hamilton County Iowa, and is one of the few pioneers still left in that community. While his main business has been farming and stock raising he has acquired other interests, helped organize the First National Bank of Williams and was its president and is still a director, is an extensive land owner, and is honored throughout Hamilton County not only for his success but for the probity of his character. Always averse to politics, voting merely as a democrat, he has, nevertheless, served as a member of the town council and the school board at Williams. Reuben J. Hurd married Winifred J. Crane. She was born in Fayette County, Iowa, in 1857, and they were married in Hamilton County. Their family of children are: Lulu B., wife of Robert Lynch, a farmer and stock buyer at Blairsburg, Iowa; Walter LeRoy; Ralph R., who is a surveyor and civil engineer and lives on a ranch near Williams, Iowa; Gladys, wife of Ivan Smith, a farmer near Williams; Stanton F., who has a farm near Alden, Iowa; and Howard H., who trained in an army camp enlisted in February, 1918, and was sent overseas April 4, 1918, serving as a non-commissioned officer with the third division of regular troops and after the signing of the armistice was sent with the Army of Occupation to Germany.

Walter L. Hurd was educated in the public schools of Williams, Iowa, graduating from high school in 1904. For one year he attended the academy at Grinnell, Iowa, and then took the regular college course of the Iowa College at Grinnell, graduating with the degree Ph. B. in 1909. The following year he spent in the real estate business at Williams and in Webster City, Iowa, and in the fall of 1910 identified himself with Columbus, Montana. He homesteaded 160 acres and still owns that, which is a part of his rather extensive landed possessions. He has 1,280 acres of land, one section being located nine miles north of Columbus and the other in Eastern Montana.

In December, 1914, Mr. Hurd bought the Stillwater County Democrat and was its editor for 2½ years. Early in the war he was made secretary and chief clerk of the local exemption board of Stillwater County, and at the sacrifice of many other private interests he devoted his time to the duties of office and other war work until the signing of the armistice. In April, 1919, he engaged in the insurance business at Columbus.

He had previously served as a justice of the peace, and was elected a representative to the Legislature from Stillwater County in the fall of 1916. He served in the regular Fifteenth Session and the extra session of February, 1918. He was chairman of the printing committee and a member of the committees on labor, townships and counties, corporations, mines and mining. An important bill of which he was author and which he introduced while chairman of the printing committee was the bill fixing the maximum rate for county printing, generally regarded as a wise measure of economy. He also took a great deal of interest in all agricultural legislation while he was in the House. Mr. Hurd is a democrat and a member of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce.

June 29, 1916, at Williams, Iowa, he married Miss Daisy Gibbon, daughter of Robert E. and Emily Gibbon. Her parents reside at Williams, where her father is a mail carrier. Mrs. Hurd is a graduate of the Williams High School and finished her education in Ellsworth College at Iowa Falls. Mr. and Mrs. Hurd are the parents of one child, Walter L., born July 18, 1919.

HENRY I. GRANT came to Montana thirty-five years ago, and at one time owned some of the large herds of sheep grazing in the Yellowstone Valley. He is still a prominent rancher, but his interests for many years have been centered at Columbus, where he is a merchant and is also president of the Stockmen's National Bank.

Mr. Grant has lived in America since he was ten years of age. He was born near Christiana, Norway, August 7, 1865. His father, Iver Grant, who was born near the capital city of Norway in 1824, is still living at the advanced age of ninety-five, at Sioux City, Iowa. He was a Norwegian farmer and also served his time in the Norwegian army. In 1869 he brought his family to America and settled at LeMars, Iowa, where he followed the carpenter's trade. About 1885 he moved to Sioux City and continued his business as a carpenter and contractor until he retired through the infirmities of years. He is a republican and for many years has been an active supporter of the Lutheran Church. His wife was Bertha Berg, who was born near Christiana in 1832 and died at Sioux City, Iowa, in 1914, at the age of eighty-two. They 1898, bringing with him unbounded spirit and determination and the experience of a Missouri farmer. Under the guidance of his brother "Dick" Richardson, one of the first settlers of this region, who induced him to stop in this locality, he bridged safely the first few years, and has since developed into one of the prominent and prosperous men of his section.

Mr. Richardson was born in Hancock County, Illinois, August 6, 1878, a son of George Richardson, and was five years of age when he removed with his parents to Knox County, Missouri, where he received his education in the country schools. There he remained, assisting his father, until his nineteenth year, when his brother "Dick" forwarded him transportation and he came to Montana, as noted, and became a hand on his brother's ranch. He was soon attracted to sheep shearing and became an adept with the clippers which removed the fleece, and followed the business in season until the spring of 1905. The price of shearing was 7 cents a head and board, and by an expert 100 head could be turned off daily. In 1899, in company with Loren Gillman and Kenneth McKenzie, he took a bunch of horses into Dakota and sold them out for the McKenzies, and the boyish trio disposed of them in three months and returned with a new experience and with some credit as horse salesmen. To keep the horse band together it was necessary for the boys to stand night guard over the 165 head, and three "broke" saddle horses were all that were in the bunch. These and other experiences came to Mr. Richardson while he remained a wage worker by the month.

In the spring of 1905 Will Richardson had accumulated a bunch of horses and joined Peter C. Jensen in a sheep enterprise, taking a bunch on the shares of Hunter & Anderson. They located them on Timber and Crow Creeks and divided up after three years, Mr. Richardson coming to Powder River with 2,200 head. He held them here and was in the sheep business until the fall of 1916, and his profits from them laid the foundation for his future and larger enterprise. Before quitting sheep, something he did because of poor and cramped range facilities, he engaged in the cattle business. He started this in 1901 with a bunch of natives, or mixed bloods, branded with the "Lazy H. E." After a time he sold this brand along with his ranch, but when he bought the ranch back a few years later he adopted the brand "A Lazy R," and this he is running still. He became a shipper when in the wool business, and makes annual trips to either the Omaha or Chicago markets with his cattle.

Mr. Richardson was in this country before the Government surveyed the lands, and located his homestead in 1900. He took a squatter's right, and this subsequently became his homestead, and Mrs. Richardson entered a desert claim nearby. Both subsequently purchased adjacent tracts and now have title from the Government to more than 700 acres, to which may be added three sections of railroad lands purchased, this forming Mr. Richardson's ranch, save for a school section under lease. His ranch is all fenced and he is farming enough land to grow feed and alfalfa for his stock. Mr. Richardson's first home of his own was a log house of several rooms, still being used as a residence, and he bached it in one room until he married and took Mr. Richardson there. His modern residence succeeded the log cabin in 1915, this being an eight-room bungalow overlooking the river valley to the north.

Mr. Richardson was married at Miles City, Montana, October 13, 1908, to Miss Clara E. Walters, who was born in Custer County, Montana, February 7, 1886, a daughter of Nicholas Walters, and grew up in the home of a sister. Her parents returned to their native Switzerland in her childhood and when grown she visited them, and the parents subsequently returned to Montana, where Mr. Walters died, although his widow still survives. Their Swiss home was at Mooreland, where Mr. Walters was a small farmer. Their children were: Reno; Leopold, a ranchman of Custer County; Sarah, the widow of Rudolph Sumers, a rancher of Tongue River; Fred, of Custer County; Mrs. Richardson; and Edith, the wife of Vernon Zinner, a Custer County ranchman. Mr. and Mrs. Richardson are the parents of two sons: George Walter and Claude Brainard.

In his political adherence Mr. Richardson is a republican in national affairs, and his first presidential vote was cast in favor of the candidacy of Major McKinley in 1900. In county elections he does not recognize party factions or lines, but votes for the man he deems best qualified for the office at stake.

William L. Kyle, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners of Stillwater County, is eminently well qualified for the responsibilities indicated by his office. He knows Stillwater County from the standpoint of a homesteader and rancher, a merchant at Columbus, and the community of Columbus has long recognized him as one of the most stalwart and effective workers for everything connected with the advancement and progress of that locality.

Mr. Kyle was born at Austin, Minnesota, February 12, 1872, son of Joseph Kyle. His father was born in Ireland in 1817. On coming to the United States he located at Council Hill, Illinois, and when this country became involved in civil war he enlisted in an Illinois regiment of infantry and served 2½ years as a Union soldier. He afterward became a pioneer at Austin, Minnesota, where he conducted a meat market. He died there in 1876. In politics he was a republican and was a member of the Episcopal Church. Joseph Kyle married Mary Ann Alderson, who was born in 1844, of English descent, and died at Austin, Minnesota, February 20, 1873. Their children were: Ida M., living in Seattle, Washington, widow of James R. Harvey, who was a railroad man; Frederick B., a farmer at Austin, Minnesota; Ella, wife of Osborne Nutt, employed in the offices of the Coleman Docks; Joseph, a railroad employe who died at Spokane, Washington; Hester A., wife of William Fitzpatrick, a plumber at Memphis, Tennessee; and William L., who was left an orphan when he was four years of age.

He spent his early boyhood at Austin, attended public schools there, but at the age of thirteen went to work as a farm hand in Mower County, Minnesota. He lived in Mower County until he came to Montana in 1892. At that early day in the Yellowstone Valley Mr. Kyle took up a homestead near Columbus, on the Yellowstone River. He lived on his quarter section seven years, and still owns it as a highly developed farm. This homestead is two miles from Columbus on the Flaherty Flats. On leaving the ranch Mr. Kyle spent six years with the Columbus Mercantile Company, and then engaged in the grocery business. His partner the first year was J. L. Montgomery, at the end of which time Mr. Mandeville bought Mr. Montgomery's interest and the business is now the partnership of Kyle & Mandeville. They handle both groceries and hardware and have one of the leading stores of its kind in Stillwater County.

Mr. Kyle is also owner of a good home in Columbus. Anything that concerns the welfare of that city is a matter of concern to him personally. He has been a leader in all civic and material improvements and takes much pride in the progress of the last twenty years. He is president of the Shane Ditch Company and has occupied that position for several years. He was elected a commissioner in the fall of 1918 for a six year term and was elected chairman of the board. He also served four years on the City Council. Mr. Kyle is an ardent republican, and has always been identified with the policies and standards of the Grand Old Party. He is a past grand of Yellowstone Lodge No. 85 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a member of Columbus Camp No. 6408 of the Modern Woodmen of America, and belongs to the Stillwater Club. In 1894, at Austin, Minnesota, he married Miss M. Minerva Eddy, daughter of W. H. and Abigail Eddy. Her father was an early settler and farmer of Mower County, Minnesota, and is now retired, making his home with Mr. and Mrs. Kyle. Mr. and Mrs. Kyle have one daughter, Mary Abigail, born April 5, 1898. She is a graduate of the Columbus High School, spent one year in Bozeman College, and in 1918 attended Billings Business College.

JULIAN D. RAY, who came to Montana in the capacity of an educator and was formerly head of the public school system of Columbus, is by choice and diligent study a practical and scientific agriculturist, and has developed one of the fine ranches of Stillwater County. He is also engaged in the real estate and insurance business at Columbus.

Mr. Ray was born at Hagarstown, Fayette County, Illinois, May 22, 1886. He is related to several prominent and old time Illinois families. The Rays originally came from Scotland and were colonial settlers in Pennsylvania. His grandfather, James Ray, was born in Pennsylvania in 1820, and was a pioneer Illinois farmer. When past forty years of age he volunteered with an Illinois regiment and served four years in the Union army. He died at Vera, Illinois, in 1865, just seven days after his return from the war. J. D. Ray, father of Julian D. Ray, was born near Vandalia in Fayette County, Illinois, in 1859, and was a small boy when his soldied father died. He is a miller by trade but since 1890 has been a farmer near Hagarstown. He has held local offices, being elected as a republican, is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America. J. D. Ray married Josephine E. Henninger, who was born in Fayette County, Illinois, in May, 1858. Julian is their only child. Josephine E. Henninger is a daughter of William Henninger, who was born in Virginia in 1817 and in 1835, at the age of eighteen, came to Fayette County, Illinois, where he was one of the early settlers. He acquired land, developed important interests as a stockman, and was a well known drover of cattle, horses and hogs at the St. Louis market. He died at Hagarstown, Illinois, in 1880. His wife was Mary I. Oglesby, who was born in Kentucky in 1819 and died at Hagarstown in 1908. The Oglesbys are a distinguished family of Kentucky, Missouri and Illinois and are also related to the Marmadukes. Both the Marmadukes and Oglesbys came from England in colonial times. Through this relationship Julian D. Ray is eligible to membership in the Sons of the American Revolution.

Julian D. Ray attended rural schools in his native Illinois County, and spent one year in the preparatory department and four years in regular college work at McKendree College at Lebanon, Illinois. He graduated A. B. in 1911. He was a member of the Platonian Literary Society, and the many prominent graduates of old McKendree who were members of the same society have made it almost a national institution. On leaving college Mr. Ray was for two years principal of the high school at Altamont, Illinois, and in 1913 came to Montana and took up his duties as superintendent of city schools at Columbus. He rendered a valuable service to the educational affairs of the town until 1917. He then spent a year proving up his homestead four miles northeast of Columbus, and has since operated a fine farm, at present owning 320 acres. For three summers and one full year he has been a student in the agricultural school of the University of Illinois, and both in school and on his Montana ranch has been a close student of agricultural science.

In February, 1918, Mr. Ray engaged in the real estate business at Columbus, where he resides in a modern home at the corner of B and Third streets. He also has the local agency for the Central Life Insurance Company at DesMoines. He is in partnership with R. B. Kelley in the Columbus Land and Livestock Company, and the firm does a large business in city properties and ranches. Mr. Ray is a republican, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with Stillwater Lodge No. 62, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Yellowstone Lodge No. 85, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Hagarstown, Illinois, Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America, and Billings Lodge No. 394 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is also secretary of the Columbus Commercial Club.

He married at Billings in May, 1917, Miss Ida May Ehrenreich. Her parents Mr. and Mrs. John Ehrenreich are residents of Albany, Oregon, on a farm. Mrs. Ray is a graduate of the Oregon State Normal College.

L. B. BANKS has been a resident of Montana nearly twenty years, and for a large part of that time has been associated with the business interests originally established by the late Senator J. B. Annin at Columbus. He is a Columbus merchant, and is also vice president of the Stockmen's National Bank in that city.

Mr. Banks was born at New Berlin, New York, January 26, 1872. He is of English ancestry, his people having been identified with the colonial settlement of Connecticut. His father L. B. Banks, Sr., was born in Connecticut in 1830, and spent practically all his mature years at New Berlin, New York, where he was a farmer. He died at New Berlin in 1900. He was a republican and a member of the Episcopal Church. His wife, Polly Lottridge, is still living at New Berlin, where she was born more than three quarters of a century ago, in 1842. L. B. Banks was the third of their four children. C. L. Banks is a hotel proprietor and farmer at New Berlin; Nellie died at the age of twenty-four; and Belle is the wife of L. C. Van Wagner, physician and surgeon at New Berlin.

L. B. Banks attended public school in his native town and lived on his father's farm until he was fifteen years old. He was a farmer in the New York community where he was born and reared until he came to Livingston, Montana, in 1900. During the next twenty-two months he was employed in a local store and then became associated with the late J. B. Annin in a mercantile business at Cokedale. When the mines were closed at Cokedale he removed to Columbus in 1903. Senator Annin had established a store at Columbus in 1892, and for the past fifteen years Mr. Banks has been its manager and he and the Annin estate own the entire business. It is one of the leading department stores in the Upper Yellowstone Valley.

Mr. Banks also owns a ranch on the Stillwater

River, having 150 acres of irrigated land. He is a republican and a member of the Stillwater Club. Mr. Banks has never married.

F. E. RUNNER, a prominent rancher and banker at Absarokee, is an old time Montanan, having come here nearly forty years ago. His chief business has been cattle and sheep, and he has been one of the leading figures in that industry in the Yellowstone Valley.

Mr. Runner was born in Hancock County, Illinois, August 7, 1858. His ancestors some generations ago came out of Germany and settled in Pennsylvania, where his grandfather, Alexander Runner, spent all his life. Alexander Runner, father of the Absarokee banker, was born in Ohio in 1830. He grew up and married at Mount Vernon in that state, and then removed to Hancock County, Illinois. He was a lawyer by profession, but in 1862 he removed to Keokuk, Iowa, retired from his profession and devoted the rest of his life to farming in Lee County, that state. He died at Keokuk in 1897. He was a democrat in politics and a member of the Masonic fraternity. Alexander Runner married Miss Elizabeth Alling, who was born in Ohio in 1834 and died at Keokuk in the same year as her husband, in 1897. She was the mother of three children: Emma, the oldest, died in Colorado at the age of thirty-five, the wife of Mr. Cole. The two sons are Milton H. and F. E. Runner, the former also a rancher at Absarokee.

F. E. Runner attended rural schools in Lee County, Iowa, and was four years old when his parents moved to that county. He lived on his father's farm to the age of eighteen and in 1876 began his career of western experience and adventure. From 1876 to 1880 he was a miner in the Black Hills of North Dakota. He came to Miles City, Montana, in 1880 to carry out a contract for building a portion of the Northern Pacific Railroad between Miles City and Rosebud. He was engaged in that contract for a year and a half and after that followed different occupations. In 1901 he bought the pioneer store of Absarokee, which had been founded by Mr. Simonson. This business grew and prospered under his supervision until it became the largest store in that part of the state. Mr. Runner sold out in 1909. In the meantime he had become engaged in ranching as a sheep and cattle man, and he still owns 1900 acres in the vicinity of Absarokee. His home is a quarter of a mile from town.

For the past two years Mr. Runner has been president of the Stillwater National Bank of Absarokee. This bank was established in 1909 as a private bank by O. H. Hovda. In 1915 it was reorganized as the Stillwater Valley State Bank and in 1917 took out a national charter. Besides Mr. Runner as president H. N. Howland is vice president and A. W. DeGroot is cashier. The bank has earned the solid support of the community it serves and is capitalized at $25,000 and has surplus and profits of $10,000.

Mr. Runner married at Big Timber, Montana, in 1899, Miss Ida M. Kelley, a native of Minnesota. They have one son, Edward Gillette, born March 22, 1911, now attending the public schools of Absarokee.

M. W. PENWELL. For over a half century the name of Penwell has been well and favorably known in Montana. It is a familiar name also in the Middle West and even in New England, for to that section came the earliest Penwells from England. John Penwell was a handsome Welsh jeweler called to exercise his craft by an English baron. He promptly fell in love with his employer's red haired daughter and was sent out of the country by her irate father. Landing in Philadelphia about 1730, he met every boat for seven years, when his sweetheart finally, having escaped her watchful parents, arrived and they were married. To this union four sons were born, Solomon, John, David and Samuel. Solomon when grown returned to England and no more was heard of him. John died a bachelor. David had seven sons, John, David, Joseph, Samuel, Isaac, Reuben and Henry; of these John married Esther Hyde, and they had four sons, George, Reuben, John Nelson and David, the latter being, it is believed, the father of M. W. Penwell. There was also a Penwell among the passengers on the Mayflower, Grandmother Penwell being a descendant of Admiral Jonathan Carver of the Mayflower fleet. Interesting as is this fact to consider, it is still more interesting to follow the career of the Penwell who came pioneering to Montana, an adventurous youth of twenty-three years, and to find him today numbered with the representative ranchmen of this great state.

M. W. Penwell was born near Bentonville in Fayette County, Indiana, September 24, 1840. His parents were David H. and Samantha (Carver) Penwell, the former of whom was born in Indiana, in 1809, and died at Shelbyville, Illinois, in 1866. The latter was born in Steuben County, New York, in 1811, and died at Eureka, Kansas in 1895. They were the parents of the following children: Louisa and Marcellus both of whom are deceased; Oscar E., who owns a ranch situated fifteen miles south of Helena, Montana, resides at Los Angeles, California; M. W., whose home address is Belgrade, Montana; Jonathan, who is a farmer and stockman near Eureka, Kansas; George, who is also interested in farming and stockraising near Eureka; Susan, who is the widow of William Ward, formerly a farmer near McAlester, Oklahoma; and Esther, who is the wife of Ervin Homerighouse, a jeweler, of Shelbyville, Illinois. In 1848 the father of the above family removed to Wabash County, Indiana, where he engaged in farming until 1856, when he went to Missouri, but spent only one summer there, returning then to Illinois, and his death occurred at Shelbyville. In addition to farming he followed the carpenter trade. He was never unduly active in politics but had united with the republican party on its formation.

M. W. Penwell remained at home on his father's farm until twenty-one years old, in the meanwhile securing a fair amount of educational training in the Shelbyville schools, then bought a threshing machine and operated it until 1863. It was in that year that he came to Montana, and after a visit of several days at Bannock went on to Virginia City and tried mining for a year. He found himself then in a position to invest in land, and his first move in this direction was the pre-empting of 160 acres on the present site of Belgrade. This was the nucleus of his great fortune in land, the beginning of his acquisition of thousands of acres in the Mountain State. He still owns the valuable 160 acres, situated four miles northeast of Belgrade, that he subsequently homesteaded, which is a part of his ranch of 930 acres there. Additionally he owns 1,030 acres in the Horseshoe Bend in Broadwater County, 480 acres located fifteen miles from Rosebud, and additionally has 5,000 acres in the northern part of Rosebud County.

The accumulation of this great amount of land and its profitable use in diversified farming and stockraising has necessarily engaged the close and careful attention of Mr. Penwell for many years. Great as have been his responsibilities in this direction, they have not precluded activity as a public-spirited citizen ever ready to be useful to his state and community. He has been a generous contributor to many important progressive movements here, and as a member of the State Legislature, to which he was elected in 1918, on the republican ticket, he is serving his constituents faithfully and honestly.

At Shelbyville, Illinois, in 1867, Mr. Penwell was united in marriage to Miss Mary Anna Biggs, a daughter of Robert and Martha Biggs, both of whom are deceased. The father of Mrs. Penwell was born in Kentucky and moved from there to Illinois, where he was a farmer. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Penwell, as follows: Florence, who was educated at the Montana State College, resides at home; Park, who is a graduate of the Montana State College, Bozeman, is a prosperous farmer near Forsythe in Rosebud County; Guy, who lives at Moscow, Idaho, is connected with the Combined Harvester Company, and is a graduate of the Montana State College and was also a student in the Montana Wesleyan University at Helena; Grace, who is a graduate of the Montana State College at Bozeman, is the wife of William Cochran, a hardware merchant at Lewistown, Montana; Della who is a graduate of the Montana State College, is the wife of Preston Gallaher, who is in business at Belgrade; Clyde, who was graduated from the department of electrical engineering at the Montana State College, is an electrician in the power plant at Great Falls, Montana, having subsequently been graduated from Cornell College, Ithaca, New York; Jean, who attended the Montana State College, owns a homestead in Garfield County, Montana; and Carrie, who is a graduate of the Montana State College, resides with her parents at Belgrade. A family of such educational attainment necessarily is influential in social life, and the Penwell home is one of great hospitality.

On April 25, 1917, this worthy couple celebrated their golden wedding, which was an important social event of the district.

H. N. Howland came to Montana seventeen years ago, and has been active in business both at Billings and Absarokee, where he became proprietor of the only hardware business and is also vice president of the Stillwater Valley National Bank.

Mr. Howland was born at Farwell in Isabella County, Michigan, July 25, 1882. His grandfather was Albert Howland, who was born at London, England, in 1815, and for a number of years was superintendent and owned an interest in a chalk mine in England. He also served his time in the regular British army. He brought his family to the United States in 1875, and devoted the rest of his years to farming and stock raising in Isabella County, Michigan. He died there in 1904. James W. Howland, father of the Absarokee business man, was born at Gravesend, a suburb of London, in 1850 and came to the United States in 1871, at the age of twenty-one. For several years he was an employe of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway in Ohio, and in 1880 he moved to Farwell, Michigan, and developed a farm in that new locality. He continued farming until he retired in 1905, and has since lived at Pomona, California. He is a republican. As a youth he served in the British army. He married Alice Ames, who was born in Ohio in 1854 and died at Farwell, Michigan, in 1900. H. N. Howland is the oldest of their four children. Carlessa is the wife of Art O'Donald, living on a ranch near Billings; Clifford, a resident of Cleveland, Ohio, enlisted in 1917 in the heavy artillery, was sent overseas, and was in the service until mustered out in 1919. The youngest of the family is Minnie, who lives with her father in California.

H. N. Howland attended public school near Farwell, Michigan, and also spent two years in the Normal School at Mount Pleasant in that state. For about two years he was employed with a saw milling concern at Cadillac, Michigan, and left there in 1902 to come to Montana. The first five years in Montana Mr. Howland spent as ranch manager for I. D. O'Donnell, known as "Montana's best farmer." In 1907 he bought the Windsor livery barns at Billings, and was proprietor of that business four years, when he sold out and came to Absarokee in 1911. Here he established a hardware business, and it is not only the only hardware store in the town but is one of the leading supply houses for those materials in this part of the Yellowstone Valley. On May 19, 1919, he sold this place to M. L. Bevers. Mr. Howland owns town property, including a modern home, and, as noted above, is vice president of the Stillwater Valley National Bank. He is a republican and is affiliated with Billings Lodge No. 394 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

He married at Billings in 1906 Miss Ethel L. Lockwood, a daughter of Albert and Lavina (Lucas) Lockwood. Her father was a dairyman in Ontario, Canada, and both her parents are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Howland have two children: Arnold James, born March 29, 1909, and Robert L., born June 19, 1914.

Henry A. Torgrimson has in a few brief years built up one of the largest general mercantile supply houses in Southern Montana, at Absarokee. He is a thorough business man, a citizen of sturdy mould and character, and is a fair representative of a family which has carved its name deeply in the annals of both Montana and Minnesota.

Mr. Torgrimson was born at Grand Meadow, Mower County, Minnesota, March 19, 1877. His father, E. Torgrimson, was born at Valders, Norway, February 23, 1841, and was reared and married there. He was liberally educated, and was a teacher in a Norwegian religious school for eighteen years. On April 9, 1869, he and his wife embarked for the United States, and he sought a home on the northwestern frontier at Fountain in Fillmore County, Minnesota. He taught school there. In 1881 he went to Spring Valley, Minnesota, and engaged in the general merchandise business, while in 1887 he moved to Grand Meadow and was a general merchant there until 1899. On selling out his store to his two sons, Torval and Gabriel, he returned to visit the scenes of his birthplace in Norway, and though nominally retired since then has been associated with various members of his family in important business affairs. In 1901 he went to Deering, McHenry County, North Dakota, and with his sons Casper and Emil and his daughter Emily homesteaded, each taking up 160 acres. Emil sold his homestead later to his father, who now owns 1,280 acres in that locality. He resides at Grand Meadow. He is a vigorous republican in political doctrine and a member of the Norwegian Lutheran Church and is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America. On March 24, 1869, E. Torgrimson married Olada Torkelson. The occasion of their golden wedding on March 24, 1919, was made a happy event when numerous children, grandchildren and friends gathered to congratulate this fine old couple, among the most esteemed residents of Grand Meadow, Minnesota. The oldest child is Elisa, wife of Jacob Fjelde, a professor in Madison College at Madison, Minnesota. Mrs. Fjelde has for a number of years been noted for her literary skill, especially as a poet, and has written both in the Norwegian and English languages. On the occasion of her parents' golden wedding she wrote a poem in their honor, and it was subsequently translated into English. It contains six stanzas, and while the translation does not reveal all the rich flavor of the original, one of the stanzas should be quoted:

"Half a century you traveled together;
Not a rose-covered pathway you trod;
What with sunshine and all kinds of weather
Worry, work, cares, were blessings from God!
So from out of this blossom profusion
Choose the sweetest, most beautiful one
Symbolizing the happy conclusion
Of the fifty short years that are gone!"

The second of the family was Torval, who owned the general store established by his father and died at Grand Meadow, Minnesota, in 1907. Casper, also mentioned above, is in the real estate and loan business at Minot, North Dakota. Gabriel is now proprietor of the store at Grand Meadow. The next in age is Henry A. Emil is a farmer in Alberta, Canada, while Emily is still at home with her parents.

Henry A. Torgrimson attended public school at Grand Meadow but from the age of fourteen was acquiring business experience by work in store in the intervals of his schooling. He came to Absarokee, Montana, in 1900, buying a squatter's right to 160 acres on the West Rosebud. He proved up and lived on the claim seven years and which he still owns. In Absarokee for four years, until 1911, he was employed by the Absarokee Trading Company, and then rented a general store and under his energetic direction this has become one of the leading mercantile enterprises of that community. Mr. Torgrimson bought the building on Main Street in May, 1919. It is a stone structure and in the rear is a large warehouse 30 by 60 feet, and he also has another warehouse in Columbus of similar construction and size. As a merchant Mr. Torgrimson handles groceries, dry goods, shoes, clothing, machinery of all kinds, hardware, farm implements, glass ware, automobiles and accessories, coal, furniture, beds, springs and mattresses, threshing machines, and not only the quality and quantity of his merchandise appeal to an increasing patronage, but also the service that accompanies them. Mr. Torgrimson owns a half interest in another general store partnership, known as Torgrimson & Rash, at Reed Point.

His prosperity since coming to Montana is represented by other interests, including 320 acres at Millstone in Musselshell County, 520 acres twelve miles south of Absarokee on the West Rosebud, and he is a director in the Stockmens National Bank at Columbus.

Probably the most complete and attractive modern home at Absarokee is the place Mr. Torgrimson has provided for his family. It has all the modern improvements, including running water, furnace heat, electric light, and the home is in the midst of eight acres of ground in the heart of town. Mr. Torgrimson is a republican in politics and a member of the Lutheran Church.

On August 28, 1898, at Grand Meadow, Minnesota, he married Miss Margaret Hovda, daughter of Herman O. and Betsey (Simonson) Hovda. While her father lives at Grand Meadow, he is also well known in Southern Montana, having supplied some of the financial power to Absarokee. Mrs. Torgrimson's mother is deceased. They have two children: Elmen, born September 6, 1899, a graduate of a business college at Helena and actively associated with his father in the business; and Byron, born March 8, 1904, a sophomore in the Absarokee High School.

L. H. VAUGHN is a pushing and successful young merchant at Columbus, is proprietor of a thoroughly equipped and stocked department store and is still under thirty years of age. However, he has been in the mercantile business practically since early boyhood.

He was born at Elkton, Missouri, August 18, 1891. The Vaughns are of Scotch-Irish stock and were early settlers in Kentucky, where his grandfather, John Vaughn, was born. John Vaughn when a boy went to Southern Missouri, but was of a family inclined to allegiance with the Union and enlisted in the Civil war in the Union army. He contracted pneumonia and died in Hickory County, Missouri, while the war was in progress.

W. H. Vaughn, father of the Columbus merchant, was born in Missouri in 1862 and spent all his life as a farmer in Hickory County. He now lives at Flemington, Missouri. He is a republican and an active member of the Christian Church. W. H. Vaughn married Kitty Williams, who was born in Hickory County in 1866. Altha, the oldest of their children, is the wife of James Robbins, a farmer in Polk County, Missouri; Fred is in the produce business at Buffalo, Missouri; L. H. Vaughn is the third of five children; Carlos is connected with the June McCracken department store at Livingston, Montana; while Tine is a farmer in Hickory County.

L. H. Vaughn attended rural schools in Hickory County, also Weaubleau College one term, and the Southwestern Baptist College at Bolivar, Missouri, one year. During 1909-10 he was a student in the Central Business College at Sedalia. Meanwhile he had acquired considerable experience in the mercantile business as a clerk. His first employment was in a store at Ellston, two miles from his home, and he walked back and forth every day to his work. His wages were $12.50 a month. Mr. Vaughn came West in the spring of 1910, first visiting in Colorado Springs, then spending six months with the Blackwell-Weiland Company, book and stationery merchants at Oklahoma City, and following that for a year and a half was employed by J. H. McCaslin, a merchant at Flemington, Missouri. He bought a store at Rogersville, Missouri, but sold out after six months and then came to Livingston, Montana, and on September 1, 1914, began work for June McCracken in his department store. At the end of nine months he had achieved a partnership and still associated with Mr. McCracken opened a department store at Columbus. He has since been its manager and in March, 1919, bought the McCracken interest.

Mr. Vaughn is a republican, a member of the Christian Church, and is affiliated with the Stillwater Club. He married at Springfield, Missouri, in 1916 Miss Blair Cox, who was born at Hermitage, Missouri, and was educated in the high school at Bois D'Arc. They have one daughter, Kathryn Blair, born January 8, 1919.

REV. FREDERICK DUNSTAN LUCAS took up his work as a Catholic missionary in Montana in 1912, and since 1917 has been pastor of St. Mary's Church at Columbus and has supervision of several outlying missions in the Yellowstone Valley.

Father F. Lucas is an Englishman by birth. He was born at Birmingham January 10, 1872. His father, John Lucas, was born at Brighton, England, in 1845, and spent his active life at Birmingham and Coventry, dying in the latter place in 1897. For many years he was engaged in bicycle manufacture. He was liberal in politics. His wife was Miss Eliza Harris, who was born in South Wales in 1847 and died at Coventry in 1897. Their family consisted of six children: Arthur, a retired merchant at Coventry, England; Walter, who lives in London; Frederick Dunstan; Samuel, a physician and surgeon at Coventry; Alice, wife of Mr. Petch, who is in the bicycle business at Coventry; and William John, a veterinary surgeon at Coventry.

Frederick Dunstan Lucas had a splendid preparation for his career in some of the best schools in England and on the continent. He received his primary education in private schools at Birmingham and for two years was a student in the Brothers School at Malines, Belgium. He had a three years preparatory course in St. Edmund's College at Hitchin, England, and in 1902 came to the United States and entered the Fathers of St. Edmund's Seminary at Swanton, Vermont. He was diligently engaged in his philosophical and theological studies for seven years and was ordained a priest in 1909. The following two years he taught history and religion in St. Michael's College at Winooski, Vermont. Father Lucas came to Montana in 1912 and for fifteen months was chaplain of Ursuline Academy at Great Falls. He was chaplain of the Cheyenne Mission St. Labres, and on returning to Great Falls was made assistant at St. Anne's Cathedral. He remained there three years and in 1917 came to his present work as pastor of St. Mary's Church at Columbus. His mission charges are at Big Timber, Absarokee, Reed Point, Melville and Greycliff. The church edifice at Columbus was built about 1912, and the parsonage was erected in 1917, the same year that he became pastor.

Father Lucas is a member of Great Falls Council, Knights of Columbus, and is a third degree Knight.

THOMAS P. MCGRATH. It is not given to everyone to succeed in both business and politics, but Thomas P. McGrath is an exception and not only has attained to prosperity, but is making a fine record for himself as county commissioner of Deerlodge County, and is recognized as one of the representative men of Anaconda. He was born in Houghton County, Michigan, September 14, 1874, a son of Thomas McGrath. The birth of Thomas McGrath took place in County Tipperary, Ireland, in 1832, and his death occurred at Hancock, Michigan, in 1886. He came to the United States when not much more than a lad and located at Syracuse, New York, from whence, after his marriage, he moved to Houghton County, Michigan, being all his life a general workman. In politics he was a democrat, and in religious faith a Catholic. He married Margaret Murray, born in County Tipperary, Ireland, in 1833, who died at Anaconda, Montana, in October, 1911. Their children were as follows: Michael, who died at Anaconda, April 1, 1914, was a mechanic, and is survived by his widow and five children, who live at No. 609 West Park Avenue, Anaconda; Anna, who married Morgan Conway, a watchman for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company of Anaconda; John, who was a painter and decorator, died at Anaconda in July, 1915; Martin, who was a painter and decorator, died at Anaconda in July, 1903; Bridget, who is deceased, having passed away at Anaconda in 1907, married Michael Cronnelly, who is now a miner of Butte, Montana; and Thomas P., who was the youngest born.

When he was thirteen years of age Thomas P. McGrath left the schools of Houghton County, which until then he had been attending, and began working in the concentrators of the mills of his native county, so continuing for ten years. In 1897 he came to Anaconda to enter the employ of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and spent two years in its concentrating department. He then established himself in a cafe and grocery business and conducted it until January 11, 1919, when he sold and since then has been devoting himself to his duties as county commissioner. Mr. McGrath was elected to this office in the fall of 1916, for a term of six years, and assumed its duties in January, 1917. He is a democrat and active in his party. The Roman Catholic Church has his membership, and he belongs to Anaconda Council No. 822, Knights of Columbus, of which he is a third degree knight; the Mount Haggen Court No. 629, Catholic Order of Foresters; Anaconda Lodge No. 557, Loyal Order of Moose; and Anaconda Aerie No. 18, Fraternal Order of Eagles. Mr. McGrath owns his modern residence at No. 700 West Third Street.

In 1904 Mr. McGrath was united in marriage with Miss Katherine Weiss, a daughter of Jacob and Ann Weiss, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Weiss was a rancher in British Columbia. Mr. and Mrs. McGrath have two children, namely: Gertrude, who was born December 25, 1905; and William, who was born May 25, 1907. Since coming to Deerlodge County Mr. McGrath has taken a deep interest in the development of this section and as county commissioner has been more productive of good results than many others who have held official positions in this section, and the record he is now making may well lead to higher honors in the future.

E. B. FELLOWS, serving his second term as sheriff of Stillwater County, is an old time Montana resident. He came out to this territory when a boy about thirteen years old, and has had a varied experience as cowboy, stage driver and homesteader, and has been a resident of the community around Columbus for a number of years.

He was born at Cornwallis Valley in Kings County, Nova Scotia, June 13, 1873. His father, William H. Fellows, was born in England and was a youth when he came with his parents to Nova Scotia. Grandfather Fellows died in Kings County, Nova Scotia. William H. Fellows spent his active business life as a hardware merchant in Nova Scotia and died in Kings County in 1913. His wife, Augusta Fellows, was born in Nova Scotia and her mother was a member of the Randolph family of Virginia. She died at Cornwallis in 1875. She was the mother of four children, E. B. Fellows being the youngest. The second and third child, Fred and Nellie, died in childhood. Blanche is the wife of Egbert Ransome, who is connected with the Richardson Scale Works at Passaic, New Jersey.

E. B. Fellows attended public schools in his native town to the age of thirteen and then for a time drove a milk wagon on the streets of the City of Boston. Late in 1886 he arrived at Helena, Montana, and soon afterward went to Great Falls, where he entered the employ of one of the numerous cattle outfits operating the ranges, and as a cowboy he functioned usefully for several years. At the age of sixteen he was driver of a stage from Great Falls to Geyser. He also drove a delivery-wagon at Marysville one year and then returning to Helena was train checker for the Helena Cab Company eight years. For one year he was agent for a transportation company in the Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. Fellows came to Columbus in 1908 and took up a homestead of 320 acres above Absarokee on the Stillwater River. He proved up his land and subsequently sold it. For eight months he was also proprietor of the Corner Store at Absarokee, selling out at a good profit. Mr. Fellows has an irrigated ranch fourteen miles south of Columbus and is able to look back over his career in Montana with the satisfaction of a man who has materially prospered and who has gained the confidence and friendship of most of the best citizens.

He was elected sheriff of Stillwater County in 1916. In 1918 he made no contest for re-election but was chosen by the largest majority of any candidate on either ticket. He has had his home in Columbus since 1917. Mr. Fellows is a republican and a member of the Stillwater Club of Columbus. He is also affiliated with Yellowstone Lodge No. 85 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

He married Miss Helen Fairburn at Helena in 1908. She is a daughter of John and Hannah Fairburn, the latter now deceased. Her father is a farmer and bee man living at Whittemore, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Fellows have one son, Charles E., born March 6, 1914.

Hon. Joseph Burt Annin. A career of general distinction, broad and beneficent service, leaving a lasting impress on the material and civic progress of Columbus and Stillwater County, was closed in the death of the late Joseph Burt Annin at his home in Columbus June 22, 1918.

The brief record of his life reveals an early struggle with poverty, a self reliant independence in achieving success in spite of difficulties, and a steady courage and public spirit in all the rapidly increasing variety and importance of later relationships.

He was born October 26, 1865, at Leroy, New York, and when he was five years old his parents moved to New Jersey and settled on a fruit farm. His father died there in 1876, and Joseph and his mother then returned to New York State. He was paying his way and getting experience as clerk in a grocery store at the age of fourteen. In 1886 he came West, and lived at Evanston, Wyoming, until 1889, being manager of a mercantile store there for two years. He then became manager of the Thompson Brothers grocery store at Livingston, Montana, and was a resident of this state nearly thirty years. Later he engaged in general merchandising at Cokedale, eight miles west of Livingston, and in 1892 came to Columbus, then known as Stillwater, where he established the firm of Annin & DeHart. This was later merged into the Columbus Mercantile Company, and he was manager of the company until it dissolved in 1915. From that time until the close of his life he was engaged in the dry goods business under the name Annin & Banks. He also acquired large land interests to the extent of about 800 acres, and he always kept in close touch with agricultural progress.

A good business man, he never had an ambition to become wealthy but to make his abilities serve the broader welfare of his people and state. Many services and achievements are properly credited to him, not least of which is the establishment and development of a first class public school system at Columbus. As an instance of his public spirit he mortgaged his stock of goods in order that the first bridge might be built across the Yellowstone River. He was a real leader in public affairs, was elected county commissioner of Yellowstone County in 1896, his election as a republican being a striking evidence of his popularity in a campaign when republicans were in decided disfavor in Montana. He served as commissioner six years, was senator from Yellowstone County during the Tenth and Eleventh Sessions, beginning in 1906, and in 1912 was again chosen to the Legislature, this time in the House of Representatives. In 1914, after the creation of the new County of Stillwater, he was elected senator from Stillwater and, was active during the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Sessions. He was a man of real power in the Legislature, and that power was due not only to his ability as a parliamentarian but to the confidence felt in his judgment and his undoubted strength of character. He was also a candidate for lieutenant governor in the campaign of 1916.

By many years of consecutive effort he had acquired a modest competence, had served dutifully and well, and might properly have laid aside responsibilities and enjoyed a leisure but for the destiny which made circumstances peculiarly trying for him as for the world. For several years he had endured the anxiety caused by the illness of his wife, and when America entered the war with Germany his two oldest sons entered the service and he felt it necessary to assume additional burdens during their absence. He was a leader in Red Cross and Liberty Loan campaigns and work and neglected no patriotic duty. It is a matter of general regret among his family and friends that he did not live a few months longer to see the triumph of the allied cause.

As was natural, many heartfelt tributes were paid his memory, and from the funeral address delivered by Reverend Mr. Pope of Billings it is appropriate to quote a few passages that will serve the better to describe his character and the quality of his citizenship.

"Mentally and physically Mr. Annin was a very active man. He read widely upon political and public questions. He was mentally alert. He could analyze a question quickly. His judgment was seldom far afield. He was courageous. He was no moral coward. And when once his mind was fully made up as to his duty he would not permit considerations of friendship to interfere with or to thwart his duty as a citizen. This was exemplified in his attitude upon the prohibition issue. He believed the liquor traffic to be a menace to public welfare. With him it was not a matter of political advantage or of political loss. He had many personal and political friends—and few men more highly valued friends than he—who were financially interested in the liquor business. The natural bent of his heart would make difficult indeed any public action of his that would injure the feelings or the business of his friends. But he had a duty to his own household, he felt a duty to this community, he was under obligations to the state. He could not and he would not permit the claims of personal, but selfish, friends to supercede the claims of society. No personal consideration, political or financial, could stand between him and the performance of his duty. His championship of the cause of prohibition is perhaps his greatest contribution to society. It was he who introduced the amendment to the constitution in the State Senate which resulted in a substitute measure being submitted to the people, and he fathered the comprehensive measure providing for law enforcement, to go into effect January 1, 1919.

"In business he displayed the same qualities of mind and heart as in his private and public life. He was kind and generous and trusting. In the early days of the settlement of this country he trusted many settlers far beyond the point to which they were entitled, measured by the rules of good business practice. He did business enough to get rich. He did not get rich. He could not and would not oppress the poor. In many instances he doubtless was imposed upon by unscrupulous persons. He apparently preferred to be embarrassed himself rather than embarrass the poor in their struggle for a foothold and a living. He did not die a rich man. But he took with him to the world beyond the only riches that will count in the kindom of our Lord—a clean heart and a wholesome life.

"He was a patriot. He was devoted to his country and its flag, and to this he was willing to give to the last measure of devotion. His two oldest sons were in uniform and fought overseas in the service of humanity. He gave the last great measure of a father's heart to his country."

Mr. Annin married Janet H. Haldane at Helena. She and three sons survive. The oldest son, James T. Annin, was a lieutenant in the American army; Hawthorn Bert was a lieutenant; and Douglas was sixteen years of age when his father died.

James T. Annin, oldest son of the late Joseph B. Annin, whose career has been described above, was born at Livingston, Montana, April 10, 1890. He graduated from the Columbus High School in 1906 and received his Bachelor of Science degree from the Montana State College at Bozeman in 1911. The following two years he farmed near Columbus, and in 1912 bought the Columbus News and has since been busily engaged as a newspaper man. In September, 1917, the Columbus News was consolidated with the Columbus Democrat. The company is incorporated with H. H. Harrison, president, E. D. Shaffer, vice president, and James Annin, secretary and manager. The Columbus News was established in 1901 and the Columbus Democrat in 1913. The Columbus News is independent in politics, and is the leading paper in Stillwater County, being the official paper of the county and the city of Columbus. The company has complete modern facilities and one of the best equipped plants in the Northwest.

James T. Annin is a republican in politics. He enlisted September 19, 1917, in a machine gun unit, was trained at Camp Lewis, Washington, and in June, 1918, was sent overseas, being first sergeant of Company D of the Three Hundred Forty-eighth Machine Gun Battalion. November 1, 1918, he was commissioned second lieutenant. He served in several phases of the great battle of Meuse-Argonne, and was honorably discharged April 1, 1919.

Hawthorn Burt Annin, brother of James T. Annin, was born at Cokedale, Montana, March 28, 1892. He graduated from the Columbus High School in 1907, and for 2½ years was a student in the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis. After returning to Columbus he worked in his father's store for two years and in 1914 bought a garage, of which he is still proprietor and which is the leading establishment of its kind in Stillwater County. He has a large space devoted to the garage, and also a well equipped shop and handles all automobile accessories. He is agent for Ford cars and also for the Fordson tractors.

At Denver, Colorado, June 27, 1917, he married Miss Caryl Hodgson, a daughter of W. and Mina D. Hodgson, residents of Denver, where her father is a fireman in the Union Pacific shops. Mrs. Annin is a graduate of the State Normal School in Colorado. They have one son, Joseph Burt, born July 3, 1918.

Frank E. Wright. A Montana pioneer, Frank E. Wright, who died May 25, 1917, was the type of citizen who both in early and later times had the character and ability to impress himself upon the life and affairs of his community and state. He was one of the foremost business men and citizens of Lewistown, where he had lived for many years.

He was born at Independence, Iowa, December 23, 1857, and a year or so later his parents returned to their old home at Penn Yan, New York. Frank Wright grew up in New York, had a substantial education, and was about twenty-three years of age when he came to Montana in the spring of 1880. He lived at Helena and Phillipsburg until early in 1882, when he engaged in the general merchandise business at Utica. In 1887 he assisted in organizing the Bank of Fergus County, of which he became assistant cashier, and on the death of J. H. Moe in 1894 became cashier. That office he held, and through it he rendered a signal service to the business community of Lewistown until 1906, when he retired from the active responsibilities of the bank, but remained as its vice president until 1916.

It was consistent with his ability as a leader of men that he should take an active part in Fergus County from the time of its organization. He was the first man honored with the office of county treasurer, and held that post for eight years. He was long a prominent republican. He was one of the organizers of the Judith Club at Lewistown, and for many years its secretary. One of his chief interests was Masonry. He took his first degrees in Lewistown Lodge No. 37, served it later as worshipful master, was a member and past high priest of Hiram Chapter No. 14, Royal Arch Masons, a member and past eminent commander of Lewistown Commandery No. 14, Knights Templar, and belonged to Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine. The Knights Templar formed his escort of honor at his funeral.

In 1891 Mr. Wright married Miss Minnie Sloan, of Penn Yan, New York. He was survived by Mrs. Wright and also by two sisters and four brothers. Two of these brothers are Montana citizens, Edmund, of Lewistown, and Arthur, of Butte.

Many tributes were paid Frank E. Wright when he passed away. His old friend and pastor delivered a touching address, in which he spoke as follows: "Mr. Wright came to Montana in the morning of his life, in the hours when youth and ambition urged on to accomplishment. He was here at the beginning of things and helped to lay the foundations of the county and city. He was for many, many years a prominent figure in the business life, and yet there were many men in the city and county who excelled him in business, but Frank Wright had one gift that none excelled him in. This was the gift of making friends. He journeyed through life binding men to him with bands of steel. In times of business distress he had met all who sought his counsel with a smile and had given to them of his strength, so that they went away refreshed and with new courage. And always he had that same smile while back of the smile was a warm, generous, cheerful and courageous heart. What was the secret he had of making all men his friends? It was his deep interest in men, in their welfare, in their happiness. This interest was not assumed, but deep, genuine and sincere. The response to it was natural and irresistible.

"So he passed this morning in the noon of life and entered into the afternoon. So, when at last the eveningtime came, there was light. From all parts of the city and from the places outside the city people turned to the church where this service was being held until it was too small to accommodate all of those who loved and mourned him. That was the light at eveningtime. To everyone who knew Frank Wright his passing meant that for such an individual life had lost something he held sweet, dear. This was love's tribute to the man who had passed on. It was the light that came at eveningtime."

CHARLES D. ALLEN, who has spent most of his life in the Northwest, has been a lumberman, has helped build railroads and operate them, has been a prospector and miner and in recent years has followed the settled occupation of farming and stock raising, and is especially prominent in public affairs as chairman of the Board of County Commissioners of Fergus County.

Mr. Allen was born in Jackson County, Michigan, September 28, 1867, a son of Elijah T. and Stella (Doolittle) Allen. His father settled in Michigan in the early '60s, and soon after going to that state enlisted in Company E of the Eighth Regiment, Michigan Infantry, serving three years. He shared in the brilliant record of that regiment, participating in thirty-nine battles and skirmishes. He was in one specially brilliant exploit of the war. After the destruction of a portion of a Confederate fort volunteers were called for to storm and take possession of the enemy position. Four hundred and eighty men volunteered for the dangerous task, Elijah Allen among them, and out of this storming party only 220 came back alive, most of them badly wounded. Elijah Allen lost his left eye in that encounter. After the war he engaged in farming in Jackson County, Michigan until 1881, when he moved to Aberdeen, South Dakota, and followed the business of carpenter, contractor and painter. He entered a tract of Government land and improved the homestead and remained there until his death in 1898, at the age of sixty-three. His wife was born in Michigan and died in 1893, at the age of forty-three years. Elijah Allen was a republican in politics, a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and affiliated with the Masons and Odd Fellows.

Charles D. Allen is the first in a family of four children, two of whom are still living. He was about thirteen years old when his parents moved to South Dakota. In the meantime he had acquired his education in the public schools of Jackson and Ingham counties, Michigan. When ten years of age he earned his first money by pulling weeds out of a cornfield at twenty-five cents a day. At the age of sixteen he left home and went to work for a railway contractor who was constructing a railway out of Aberdeen. Later he worked in the lumber woods of Minnesota on the headwaters of the Mississippi River, and in 1895 arrived in Helena, Montana. Here his services as a lumberman were employed in cutting timber for the mines of the Lump Gulch Mine. In September, 1896, he went by train to Fort Benton and into the North Moccasin Mountains, where he prospected and mined for about two years. He located what was later known as the Kendall Mine, and sold his interest in that noted property to Henry Kendall for $500. He remained as manager of the mine for about 1½ years, and when it was sold to Finch & Campbell continued as superintendent and manager until January 15, 1906. This gave him an extensive experience in the mining industry. From Montana he went to Nevada soon after the great gold discoveries there, and with headquarters at Goldfield became a buyer and seller of mine leases. He was in that business for about two years, and then after six or seven months of travel in the Southwest and California returned to Lewistown and in October, 1909, engaged in farming. He owns 320 acres, and besides handling that property is interested in a number of business ventures at Lewistown and elsewhere.

Mr. Allen was elected a member of the County Board of Commissioners of Fergus County, in 1912, and has served as chairman of the board for six years. He is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hiram Chapter No. 14, Royal Arch Masons, Lewistown Commandery No. 15, Knights Templar and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena He is also a member of Lewistown Lodge No. 456 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In politics Mr. Allen is a democrat.

January 22, 1910, he married Anna E. Robinson, a native of California. They have one daughter, Lavie .Gertrude.

JAMES M. SLIGH, M. D. The modern physician and surgeon of necessity has to be a man of wonderful energy, broad views and fine initiative, combined with inexhaustible energy and capacity for work. His long training fits him to cope with many problems outside of his profession so that he is usually one of the leading factors in municipal development. Dr. James M. Sligh, of Anaconda, belongs to this type of the profession; he is endowed with natural gifts which he has utilized to the best advantage in his calling. He was born at Rochester, New York, May 19, 1845, a son of James W. Sligh, and grandson of Robert Sligh. Robert Sligh was born in Ayton, River Tweed, Scotland, in 1785, and died at Grand Rapids, Michigan, in 1857. About 1854 he came to the United States, and locating at Grand Rapids, Michigan, lived in retirement, although he had been a shipwright in his native land.

James W. Sligh was born on the River Tweed, Scotland, in 1820, and when only thirteen years of age came to the United States and settled at Rochester, New York, where in time he became a dealer in furnishing goods for men. In 1861 he enlisted for the Civil war in Company E, First Michigan Engineers, and was killed while in the service in 1863, near Tullahoma, Tennessee. He was an advocate of the principles of the then newly organized republican party, and had long belonged to the Masonic fraternity. The maiden name of his wife was Elizabeth Wilson, and she was born in 1821 in County Armagh, Ireland. Her death occurred at Grand Rapids, Michigan, in 1889. Her parents brought her to the United States when she was a child, settling at Rochester, New York. She and her husband had the following children: Doctor Sligh, who was the eldest; Elizabeth, who married M. L. Hawkins, a wholesale grocer of Grand Rapids, Michigan, who survives her, she having died in that city in 1896; Charles, who is a successful business man of Grand Rapids, owns and operates the largest bedroom furniture factory in the world; Julia, who resides at Grand Rapids, is the widow of Judge Follett, who died in Texas, and was probate-judge and a man of ample means; and Robert, who was a deputy sheriff, died in Colorado in 1884.

Doctor Sligh attended the public schools of Grand

Jas M Sligh

Rapids, Michigan, and was graduated from its high school. In August, 1861, he enlisted in the First Michigan Engineers and served all through the Civil war, rising from private to be captain, and as such was mustered out in September, 1865, having served on the staff of General Thomas as a non-commissioned officer and later as a commissioned one. He participated in the engagements at Green River, where General Zollicoffer was killed; the 100 Days Campaign from Chattanooga to Atlanta; and that at Nashville, Tennessee.

Following his discharge Doctor Sligh entered the Detroit Medical College, from which he was graduated in 1880 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Subsequently Doctor Sligh has done post-graduate work, during 1893 at the New York Post Graduate School, and in 1906 at the Chicago Post Graduate School. Until 1887 Doctor Sligh was engaged in a general practice at Grand Rapids, but in that year went west to Seattle, Washington, where he spent a short period, and then during the remainder of 1887 and 1888 was at Helena, Montana as surgeon of the Montana Central Railroad. From 1889 to 1896 he was surgeon of the Granite and Bimetallic mines in Granite County. In the fall of 1896 he came to Anaconda, being one of the pioneers in his profession in this city, and has since continued in a general practice. His offices are at No. 110 West Third Street. Like his father, he is a republican and was the first man to be elected to the Upper House of the State Assembly from Granite County, his election taking place in 1890. At present he is city health officer, and has been county health officer, his efforts in behalf of his community resulting in a noticeable improvement in sanitary conditions and requirements. The Episcopal Church holds his membership. He belongs to Oriental Lodge No. 240, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Detroit, Michigan, and to the Rotary Club. Professionally he maintains membership in the Deerlodge County Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association. He owns his office, as well as his residence, the latter being at the same location as the former.

In 1867 Doctor Sligh was married at Grand Rapids, Michigan, to Miss Sara Hill, a daughter of Mrs. Sara Hill of Grand Rapids, Michigan, who is now deceased. Doctor Sligh has the following children: Lilla, who was graduated from the Detroit, Michigan, High School, married A. B. Kennan, a government employe for many years, lives at Newport, Rhode Island, Bessie, who was also graduated from the Detroit High School, is the widow of Judge McIntyre, judge of the District Court of Helena, Montana, died in that city in 1917, and there Mrs. McIntyre still maintains her residence; Carrie, who was graduated from the same high school as her sisters, married George Sigler, a farmer, and they live at Florence, Arizona; and Charles, who is in California. The fourth child, a daughter, Catherine, died at the age of twenty years.

Doctor Sligh has always been a splendid example of what physician ought to be, and has always inspired confidence in a marked degree. Wherever he has been located he has had an immense practice, and at present he is really overworked caring for those who look to him for assistance. In his official capacity Doctor Sligh has been productive of more practical good than anyone who has held these positions, and Anaconda and Deerlodge County owe him a debt not easily discharged. He is a ceaseless worker and a stimulus to those about him, and in addition to his ever growing practice does a large amount of work for charity's sake alone. It is not an exaggeration to say that Doctor Sligh has done as much for medicine as any other man of his profession in Montana, and beyond all this he is a man who draws other men to him and holds them in the closest bonds of friendship.

HAZEN M. PARKER. Some of the most capable business men of any community are those who have fitted themselves for professional careers. The long and arduous training for any of the learned callings and the experiences therein so develop and equip a man that he can readily turn to whatever branch of business activity appeals to him with a greater certainty of achieving a fair measure of success. This is illustrated in the career of Hazen M. Parker, who was formerly engaged in the practice of law in Minneapolis, Minnesota, but is now in the loan and insurance business in Billings. Mr. Parker was born at Peacham, Vermont, March 26, 1855, a son of Dr. Luther F. and Louisa M. Parker, and a grandson of Isaac Parker.

The several branches of the Parker family were early established in America, the progenitors of the different branches, four brothers, coming from England and locating in Massachusetts within twenty years after the landing of the Mayflower. They soon began to migrate to different parts of New England, and are now scattered all over this country and have everywhere become interwoven with the social fabric.

Early in the development of Vermont one of these emigrants settled in Cavendish, Vermont, and it was at that place that Isaac Parker was born on September 23, 1790. He was graduated from Middlebury College, Middlebury, Vermont, in 1815, having entered that college immediately after the War of 1812. All of his life thereafter he lived at Coventry, Vermont, and there died July 31, 1882. He was a proficient student of the Latin and Greek languages as well as of general educational subjects, and, although his vocation was that of farming, he always took an active part in educational matters and was a man of great influence in affairs of the state.

On December 24, 1818, he was married to Arabella Cobb, who was born June 24, 1795, and died at Coventry, November 14, 1872. Isaac Parker and his wife reared a large family.

Dr. Luther F. Parker, their second son, was born at Coventry, September 21, 1821, and died at Peacham, September 12, 1898, having been engaged in the practice of medicine at Peacham for more than forty years. Doctor Parker was a thoroughly-equipped and successful physician. He spent two years at the University of Vermont at Burlington and then became a student in the medical department of Dartmouth College, from which he graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He was always a leader in social and political activities and in church and educational matters. His sympathies were always broad and intense and he was always fearless in attacking and exposing wrong wherever it appeared. For many years he was active trustee of the Caledonia County grammar school, commonly called "Peacham Academy," and was every year on the examining board. This school was one of the three schools established by the state prior to 1800, and is still in flourishing condition. It is to the influence of Doctor Parker that this school owes much of its efficiency. For several sessions, he took a leading part in the Legislature of the state, as representative of his town. He was a consistent, but intrepid, member of the Congregational Church.

On June 6, 1850, Doctor Parker was married to Louisa Martin, who was born in Peacham in 1822, and who died in 1896. Their children who reached maturity were as follows: Jennie M., who married Edward C. Hardy, of Framingham, Massachusetts, engaged in mercantile business in Boston; Hazen M., whose name heads this review; Elizabeth A., who is unmarried and lives on the old homestead in Peacham; Ellen L., who married Walter H. Bayley, a farmer in Peacham; and Alma A., who married Col. George Harvey, the owner and editor of the North American Review, and lives at Deal, New Jersey.

Hazen M. Parker is connected with some of the prominent people of Vermont. The eldest sister of his grandfather, Isaac Parker, named Hannah (Parker) Redfield, was the mother of Isaac F. Redfield, for many years chief justice of the Supreme Court of Vermont, and the author of several legal treatises, and the mother of Timothy P. Redfield, for a long time one of the associate justices of the Supreme Court of Vermont. Another sister of Isaac Parker, Grace (Parker) Proctor, was the mother of Redfield Proctor, who established the Vermont Marble Company, was governor of Vermont, secretary of war under President Benjamin Harrison, and afterward United States senator from Vermont.

After attending the common schools of Peacham, Vermont, Hazen M. Parker prepared for college in Peacham Academy and entered Middlebury College and took the regular classical course and was graduated therefrom in 1880, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He was one of the Phi Beta Kappa men of his class and a member of the Delta Upsilon fraternity. In 1880 he began the study of law in Montpelier, Vermont, and in the succeeding year went to Minneapolis, Minnesota, and finished his legal course and was admitted to the bar in that city in April, 1883. Until the spring of 1905 Mr. Parker was successfully engaged in the general practice of law at Minneapolis, when he closed out his law business and began railroad construction work with Winston Brothers Company of Minneapolis, extensive railroad contractors, and continued actively in railroad construction work till the fall of 1913, when he settled in Billings, sold his construction outfit and began the business he is now in. Much of his railroad work had been in Montana, and when Mr. Parker came to Billings and became acquainted with the city and the tributary country he thought he saw a good opening and began to establish himself in a loan and insurance line with offices in the Stapleton Block, where he still is located, and has built up valuable connections. However, he has not been able to forget his old habits and still does a limited amount of law work.

Mr. Parker lives in his home at 224 Avenue D, owns a small ranch east of town a few miles, devoted mostly to stockraising.

Mr. Parker is a zealous student of economics and of social questions and takes a lively interest in civic matters, but is not a politician and is not bound by party ties. He is a democrat in the broad, but not party sense, and votes for principles and affiliates with such political organizations and supports such men as he thinks most nearly represent such principles.

On December 6, 1882, Mr. Parker was married to Miss Julia T. Douglas, of Middlebury, Vermont. Mrs. Parker is a descendant of the famous "Black" Douglas of Scotland, on her maternal side, and belongs to one of the best strains of New England stock. She was born in February, 1855, in Western Vermont, near the shore of Lake Champlain, and was reared mostly in Middlebury, amid the gorgeous sunsets of the Adirondacks.

Mr. and Mrs. Parker, have only one child, a son, Fletcher Douglas Parker, who was born in Minneapolis, Minnesota, in July, 1888. He was educated in the graded and high schools of Minneapolis and of Proctor, Vermont, and in Williams College, from which he was graduated in 1911 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He entered college a stranger from the West, but was graduated as president of his class, a Gargoyle man and a member of Phi Delta Theta fraternity. Having determined to enter the Christian ministry, he took his theological course at Hartford Theological Seminary, from which he was graduated in 1915. Two months before his graduation he was called to the pastorate of the Trinitarian Congregational Church of New Bedford, Massachusetts, at a larger salary than any new graduate from that institution had received for forty years. The following September he began his work with that church and continued as its pastor for 3½ years. He soon became recognized as a leader in ministerial and civic affairs. During the European war he devoted much time to work for soldiers in camp and in the field. In the Autumn of 1918 he was called to become secretary and superintendent of Boston City Missions. By reason of this call he resigned his pastorate of New Bedford and on February 1, 1919, began his new work. In 1916 he was married to Katharine Ordway, of Winchester, Massachusetts, and has resided at Winchester since he left New Bedford.

It is an interesting coincidence that in the year 1640 the immigrant Parker ancestor first appeared in American records in Woburn, Massachusetts, which included Winchester, and that in the same year the immigrant Douglas ancestor first appeared in American records in Boston, Massachusetts. Their descendant, Fletcher Douglas Parker, now lives where his Parker ancestor lived and his work is where his Douglas ancestor lived.

From this sketch it is seen that Mr. Hazen M. Parker is in a line of men who for several generations have done and are doing real work in the world. They have done it unselfishly with no aim to amass wealth. His grandfather and his father met the questions and faced the issues of their day with intelligence and courage and with a view to social good. He believes that greater questions of social welfare and more momentous social issues are at stake now than they ever dreamed of and he is trying to meet these questions and these issues with the same vigor and the same fidelity and with the same view to social justice that characterized them and has tried to pass on to his son the same determination.

An omission has been made in this sketch and the above only half tells the story. In the background loom up the peers of all of these men, their wives and mothers. These women all came from the best type of New England families and exerted their full share of influence. If Doctor Parker inherited from his father, Isaac Parker, an ability and a fondness for study, he also inherited from his mother, Arabella (Cobb) Parker, the physical vigor and many of the sturdy qualities which characterized him. If Hazen M. Parker inherited good qualities from the Parker side, he had equally good inheritances from the Martin side. His life was molded by one of the most competent and lovable mothers that ever breathed the Green Mountain air. If Fletcher Douglas Parker has in his makeup a composite of the qualities derived from his Parker, Martin and Cobb ancestry, he also has the resolute vigor and devotion of his Douglas and Potter maternal ancestry.

HARRY C. CARPENTER, of Billings, is manager of the Carpenter Paper Company of Montana, and son of one of the founders of that well known paper house, which was established at Omaha, February 1st, 1887, and is the medium through which much of the paper for printing and other purposes is distributed throughout the West.

Mr. Carpenter was born at Omaha, April 9, 1889. The Carpenters are of Scotch and French stock, have been in America since colonial times. His grandfather, Chester L. Carpenter, was born in Delaware County, New York, in 1816, was an early settler and farmer at Marengo, Illinois, and late in life retired and moved to Omaha, where he died in 1905. One of his sons, John C., now deceased, was a veteran of the Civil war.

J. Frank Carpenter, father of Harry C., was born at Marengo, Illinois, in 1860, grew up on a farm there, and on leaving the farm went to Chicago. He began his career in that city as a paper peddler and later became city salesman for one of the leading paper houses in Chicago. With a competent knowledge and experience of the paper business he went to Omaha in 1887 and with his brother, I. W. Carpenter, established the Carpenter Paper Company. During the past thirty-five years this has grown to be a great business, and branch houses have been established all over the Middle West from the Mexican to the Canadian borders and from Salt Lake City to Des Moines, Iowa. J. Frank Carpenter was secretary of the company and died at Omaha, Nebraska, in 1907. He was a republican, a member of the Baptist Church, and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. J. Frank Carpenter married Marion Avery, who was born in Marengo, Illinois, in 1862, and is still living at Omaha. She is the mother of four children: Gilbert, treasurer and salesman at Omaha for the Carpenter Paper Company; Harry C., of Billings; and Marion and Eleanor, both unmarried and living at home.

Harry C. Carpenter graduated from the Omaha High School in 1909, following which he completed a liberal education with one year in the University of Wisconsin and two years in Cornell University at Ithaca, New York. On leaving college he went to work for the Carpenter Paper Company at Omaha as sales clerk. He was rapidly promoted, first to stock clerk, then as assistant salesman, and in April, 1917, came to Billings as assistant manager. In November, 1918, he was made manager of the Billings branch. In this state the business is incorporated as the Carpenter Paper Company of Montana. The offices are in the Oliver Building at Billings, and from that office the business is directed over Northern Wyoming and those portions of Montana east of Bozeman, Helena and Great Falls. The company handles a complete line of print paper, also wrapping paper, and represents the manufacturers of wrapping sundries, such as wooden butter dishes, twine, toilet paper, congoleum, etc.

Mr. Carpenter is a republican, is subscription secretary of the Baptist Church at Billings, a member of the United Commercial Travelers, the Billings Club, the Rotary Club and the Midland Club. He owns a modern home at 320 Clark Avenue.

He married Miss Elva Hammer at Harlan, Iowa, in 1915. Her parents are Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Hammer of Billings, her father being a real estate salesman. Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter have two children: Naomi, born September 15, 1916, and Harry C., Jr., born October 25, 1918.

STEWART MCCONOCHIE, who began the practice of law at Lewistown in 1912, is serving his second term as county attorney of Fergus County. He has made a splendid record both in office and as a private lawyer, and is looked upon as one of the younger men of exceptional attainments in the state.

He was born at Cambria in Columbia County, Wisconsin, February 29, 1880, a son of Robert N. and Annie J. (Rowe) McConochie. His father was a native of Wisconsin and his mother of Bowmanville, Ontario, Canada. Robert N. McConochie was a Wisconsin farmer, and afterward became prominent in business affairs in Columbia County, serving as president of the Portage Loan and Trust Company from its organization until his death. He also served one term in the Wisconsin Legislature and was chairman of the Board of County Supervisors. He was a republican, a Presbyterian and an Elk. He and his wife had two children, Stewart and Margaret.

Stewart McConochie had a liberal education. He prepared for college in Wayland Academy at Beaver Dam, Wisconsin, and graduated from the University of Wisconsin with the class of 1906. While in University he was prominent in various student activities, being editor-in-chief of the Daily Cardinal, associate editor of the Badger, and was manager of the university basketball team and for his work in that department of athletics received the university letter. He was also a member of the Iron Cross, an honorary society, and the Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity.

Mr. McConochie was admitted to the Wisconsin bar in 1908, and for several years was engaged in practice at Madison, Wisconsin. He located at Lewistown, Montana, in 1910 and was in the real estate business until admitted to the bar in 1912, and has been engaged in the practice of law since May of that year. He was assistant county attorney from 1912 to January 1, 1915. In 1916 he was elected to the full responsibilities of the office of county attorney. He took office January 1, 1917, and was re-elected for his second term in November, 1918. Mr. McConochie is a democrat, and is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and with Lodge No. 1239 of the Loyal Order of Moose.

June 25, 1913, he married Hazel M. Kaull, who was born in Redfield, South Dakota. They have one daughter, Jean Marie.

CHARLES SPEAR. The acknowledged and recognized prestige attained by the leading men of large communities is chiefly due to that spirit of advancement which urges them onward and upward. The possession of this ambition to gain imposing preeminence is shared by all who attain to successful position, and even the humblest may develop into a man of high standing provided he possesses the ability to forge ahead. Many a life has been reconstructed from small beginnings, and few of the really able men of the country have been born with the proverbial "silver spoon" in their mouths. Of the leading citizens of Billings, one who has exemplified in his career the rewards to be gained through properly directed ambition, and who has himself risen from obscurity, is Charles Spear, president of the American Bank and Trust Company, a leading ranchman and a citizen who has been honored by election to positions of marked trust and responsibility.

Mr. Spear was born on a farm in Atchison County, Missouri, May 15, 1860, a son of Willis and Jane (Ferguson) Spear. His great-grandfather, David Spear, a soldier of the Continental line from Massachusetts during the Revolutionary war, spent the greater part of his life in that state, being engaged in farming, but later removed to Connecticut, where he passed the remainder of his days in the pursuits of the soil. He married Mary Clark also born in Massachusetts, who was a descendant of Richard Clark, one of the passengers of the Mayflower. Of the children of David and Mary Spear, John Spear, the grandfather of Charles, was born in February, 1788, in Massachusetts, and died in Nodaway County, Missouri, in October, 1886. He lived successively in Connecticut, New York, Ohio and Indiana, and removed finally to Missouri, in which state, as also in Indiana and Ohio, he was a pioneer farmer. He married Polly Osborne, who was born in Connecticut, daughter of Moses Osborne, a farmer who died in that state.

Willis Spear was born in 1824, in Western New York, and was a small boy when his parents removed to Ohio, the family settling near Ashtabula. He resided there until 1845, when he went to Iowa, then a territory, in 1846 moved on to New Orleans, Louisiana, and in 1847 joined the United States troops, with which he went to Mexico, subsequently serving throughout the Mexican war. He went to the City of Mexico with the victorious army, where he received his honorable discharge, having served as a scout from the time the troops left Vera Cruz. After the declaration of peace he remained in Mexico for one year, and in the spring of 1849 went to Texas, where he was residing when he learned of the discovery of gold in California. With about ninety other hardy and adventurous souls he went through Northern Mexico into California, where he was engaged in mining and other vocations until 1853, and then returned to near South Bend, Indiana. The call of the West sounded clear to him, however, and he soon again turned his face toward the setting sun, locating at Des Moines, Iowa, at that time only a small settlement surrounding the fort. After two years of farming he went to the northwestern part of Missouri and engaged in farming until 1874, when he went to Wyoming and resided one year. In 1875 he came to Montana and lived at Phillipsburg and Drummond until 1883, when he went to near Sheridan, Wyoming. When he retired from active pursuits he settled at Billings, in 1895, but soon returned to Sheridan, Wyoming, where his death occurred in 1912. He was a republican in his political views. Mr. Spear was truly a product of his times, with the spirit of adventure and unrest which at all times led him into adventure and to the new places. His associates always found him a man of honor, who was self-reliant and forceful, willing to stand upon his own feet, and courageous in any undertaking in which he enlisted. He married Jane Ferguson, who was born in 1826 in Ohio, and died at Billings in 1905, and they became the parents of six children: Oceana, who died at Rochester, Minnesota, as the wife of M. L. Hoyt, formerly a resident of Billings but now of Big Horn, Wyoming, who is office manager for W. M. Spear and his associates in the cattle business; Mary, the wife of Paul McCormick, a retired pioneer, now a resident of Billings, formerly a prominent cattle raiser, merchant and all-round business man: Charles; W. M., of Sheridan, Wyoming, who has large cattle interests; Emily, the wife of J. S. DeWitt, formerly a blacksmith and jeweler and now a resident of Long Beach, California; and William H., a leading stockman of Sheridan, Wyoming.

Charles Spear was educated in the public schools of Missouri and Montana and resided with his parents until he reached the age of twenty-one years. At that time he secured a position with the Paul McCormick Company at Junction, Montana, remaining in the employ of that concern for 7½ years, from October, 1882, until 1890. In the latter year he engaged in the grocery and hardware business at Billings, as Donavan & Spear, there being but one other firm of the kind in the city at that time, that of Yegen Brothers. In 1900 he disposed of his interests in this business, and two years later became one of the organizers of the Billings State Bank, of which he was first cashier and later president. At the time of the consolidation of the three leading banks at Billings into the American Bank and Trust Company Mr. Spear became vice president of the new institution, and March 1, 1919, was elected president, a position which he still retains, and in which he is directing the policies of the bank in a capable, confident and conservative manner. Mr. Spear has various other interests and is president of the Billings Building and Loan Association. Since 1917 he has devoted a large share of his time to his 4,000-acre cattle ranch at Kane, Wyoming, where he runs 1,400 head of cattle, and in addition is the owner of another ranch of 160 acres in the Yellowstone Valley. In addition to his own residence, at No. 1015 North Thirtieth street, Mr. Spear owns considerable realty at Billings, including several valuable and desirable dwellings. His political belief makes him a republican. He has always been a good and public-spirited citizen and has found time from his various business activities to serve his city as alderman for two terms and his county as a member of the board of commissioners one term, and his public record is an excellent one. Fraternally Mr. Spear is affiliated with Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons; Aldemar Commandery No. 9, Knights Templar; Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine of Helena, and Edna Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star. He also holds membership in the Billings Club and the Billings Midland Empire Club.

Mr. Spear was married July 27, 1886, at Junction, Montana, to Frances Gruwell, daughter of C. O. and Sarah B. (Bohannan) Gruwell, who reside near Twin Falls, Idaho, where Mr. Gruwell is engaged in farming. Mrs. Spear was born at Fort Benton, Montana, in 1868, and is a representative of one of Montana's pioneer families. To Mr. and Mrs. Spear there have been born eight children: Clara, the wife of Ira Scribner, of New York City, one of the few men who follow the unusual profession of stage architect; Dora, the wife of W. F. O'Day, of Billings, assistant cashier of the American Bank and Trust Company; Gladys, the wife of Earl Bemis, a resident of Louisville, Kentucky; Frances, the wife of Basil Brooks, of Cheyenne, Wyoming, at present in the United States service; Charles Gruwell, at home, his father's assistant; and Martha, John and Mary Jane, who reside with their parents.

Patrick M. Halloran. Indentified almost continuously since boyhood with railroad interests, few men of his years may lay claim to wider experience along certain lines, or better preparatory training for the exceedingly important offices he now holds than Patrick M. Halloran, auditor, treasurer and secretary of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railway Company, at Anaconda, Montana.

Patrick M. Halloran was born November 11, 1860, at Hamilton, in the Province of Ontario, Canada. His parents were Patrick and Jane (Devine) Halloran, both natives of Ireland, the father born in County Clare in 1827, and the mother in County Sligo, in 1832. In early manhood the father emigrated to Canada and located at Hamilton when that city had a population not exceeding 5,000. He was married there, and both he and wife died in that city, the father, in June, 1902, and the mother, January 4, 1919. For many years he had been engaged in a grocery business. In early political life he was a conservative but later united with the liberal party. Both parents were members of the Roman Catholic Church. The following children were born to them: James Williams, who was born October 5, 1856, operates the grocery store at Hamilton that his father established; John M., who was born December 16, 1858, is a general merchant at Spokane, Washington; Patrick M.; Edward J., who was born December 25, 1863, is manager of a large wholesale carriage goods house at Toronto, is a prominent business man of that city; Catherine, who was born January 26, 1866, resides with her brother, James W., at Hamilton, Canada; Sarah, who was born December 28, 1867, is a nun in Canada, who from 1889 resided in St. Joseph's convent at Hamilton, as mother of novices and in 1919 was promoted to mother superior at Arthur, Ontario; Mary, who was born May 26, 1872, has, like her older sister, devoted her life to the service of the church, was mother of novices in the Loretto order, at Toronto, and in 1919 was promoted to mother superior in the Loretto Academy at Englewood, Chicago, Illinois.

Patrick M. Halloran was educated in the parochial schools at Hamilton, and was only fourteen years old when he became self-supporting as a clerk in the car accountant's office, of the Great Western Railway. When he reached the age of nineteen years he left familiar home surroundings and his native land. After reaching Chicago he secured a position in a grocery store, but after three months of work as a grocery clerk, he decided to return to the railroad, and, as he had had previous experience, secured a clerkship in the car accountant's office of the Northwestern Railroad, Chicago, with a salary of $30 a month. After eleven weeks with the Chicago office he was sent in the same capacity to Milwaukee, where he then became car accountant for the Milwaukee, Lake Shore & Western Railway. Rapid promotion followed until he became chief clerk and general bookkeeper, with a salary of $125 a month, continuing as such until April, 1887, during this time occasionally serving also as auditor. In the above month and year he once more essayed mercantile life, embarking in a furnishing goods business at Hurley, Wisconsin, but shortly afterward lost his store and stock in a fire that almost destroyed the entire city.

Mr. Halloran then became station agent at Hurley and remained there for 1½ years, when other sections appeared more desirable than the mining town and this led to his becoming chief clerk at Colorado Springs for the Colorado Midland Railway, where he remained until 1892. Failing health then indicated needed rest, and he spent a season in his old home in Canada and at Toronto. In October, 1901, he came back to Chicago and for several months assisted in the office of the auditor of freight receipts with the Wisconsin Central Railway, then became general freight and passenger agent and auditor at Marshfield, Wisconsin, for the Marshfield & Southeastern Railway, now a part of the Soo System. Mr. Halloran remained there for four years, or until the lumber importance of that region gave out, when he became an employe of the Wisconsin Central Railway in the ticket office at Milwaukee for a few months. Later, for the same railway, he was rate clerk at Manitowoc, where he remained one year. Just about that time, in March, 1897, came his appointment as auditor, treasurer and secretary for the Butte, Anaconda and Pacific Railway, in answer to an application for position made three years previously. This offer he immediately accepted and his efficient services have been given to this transportation line ever since. He has seven clerks under his supervision and his offices are with the general offices of the road, on West Commercial Avenue, Anaconda.

On October 2, 1891, Mr. Halloran was united in marriage to Miss Mary S. Harte, who died July 2, 1903. Her parents were Patrick and Barbara (Higgins) Harte, both now deceased. At one time Mr. Harte was a well known teacher and journalist at Hamilton. To the above marriage children were born as follows: Angela, who was born September 13, 1892, at Marshfield, Wisconsin, is city physician for crippled children in New York City, having prepared for this noble work by a course of three years in a nurse's training school at Hamilton, and a year in the Women's Hospital, New York City; William P., who was born November 1, 1893, at Marshfield, is chief clerk to the general freight agent of the Butte, Anaconda and Pacific Railway Company at Anaconda, and additionally conducts a successful shorthand school here, having been educated in Gonzaga College, Spokane, Washington, and Mount St. Charles College, Helena, Montana; Rachel Jeannette, who was born October 19, 1897, at Anaconda, is clerk in a business house at Hamilton, Ontario, and formerly taught school; Catherine, who was born February 8, 1899, is a teacher at Hamilton, Canada; John F., who was born June 16, 1900, was graduated from the high school at Hamilton at the age of fifteen, left Notre Dame University to enter the navy, but the ending of the great war made his sacrifice unnecessary and he will complete his college course; Paul Francis, who was born January 29, 1902, is employed in Hamilton; and Mary, who was born June 25, 1903, was a pupil in the Hamilton High School and is now attending Loretta Convent at Toronto, Ontario.

On September 29, 1908, Mr. Halloran was married to Miss May La Belle, who is a daughter of Joseph La Belle and wife, the latter of whom is deceased. The father of Mrs. Halloran is a farmer in Alberta, Canada. They have four children, namely: Inez, who was born November 12, 1909; James, who was born November 20, 1911; Helen, who was born June 16, 1915; and Philip, who was born November 1, 1919. Mr. Halloran belongs to the Roman Catholic Church. He is quite prominent in the order of Knights of Columbus, a member of Anaconda Council No. 882 and treasurer of this council for the past thirteen years, and since its organization fifteen years ago has been treasurer of the State Council. For the past twenty-five years he has been a member of the Catholic Order of Foresters. He is a man of social impulses and enjoys out-door sports, finding pleasure as a member of the Anaconda Curling Club and the Anaconda Tennis Club, and is president of the latter. He belongs also to that rather exclusive organization, the Anaconda Country Club. Politically a democrat, he takes a good citizen's interest in party success as well as the general welfare. During 1918 he was president of the City School Board and still belongs to this civic body, and in innumerable ways works to benefit city and state.

ROBERT T. ALLEN, SR., of Billings, is one of the few lawyers still active in practice who tried their first cases while Montana was still a territory. He has been a resident of Billings over thirty-five years, and is widely known for his talents as a lawyer and as one of the leading citizens.

He was born in Noble County, Ohio, June 6, 1850, of an old family of that state and the still older State of Virginia. His grandfather, John Allen, was born in Virginia, grew up and married there, and went as a pioneer to Ohio and died in Monroe County, that state, in 1866. He was a farmer, and served in the Mexican war. He married Mollie Blondon, a native of Virginia. The Allens as a family were colonial settlers in Virginia, coming from England.

Robert Allen, father of the Billings lawyer, was born in Virginia in 1814. He became a farmer and wagon maker in Noble County, Ohio, and died there in 1850, the same year his son was born. He was a member of the Methodist Church. Robert Allen married Rachel Guiler. She was born in Pennsylvania March 4, 1828, and died at Billings, Montana, December 24, 1917. Her father, William Guiler, was born in Ireland in 1780, came to America in early life, served with the Americans in the War of 1812 and was a pioneer farmer in Ohio. He died near Freedom in Noble County in 1864. His wife, Mary Franklin, was also a native of Ireland. Robert Allen and wife had two children, Dr. W. A. Allen, a dentist at Billings, and Robert T.

Robert T. Allen acquired his early education in the rural schools of his native Ohio county. In 1864, when he was fourteen years old, his widowed mother moved to Centerville, Iowa, and he graduated from the high school there in 1868. His preparation for the legal profession was made in the University of Iowa at Iowa City, where he graduated with the LL. B. degree in 1875. For a time Mr. Allen taught school, and for one year practiced law with the firm of Hall & Baldwin at Burlington, Iowa. He came to Billings in 1882, and was associated with all the pioneer lawyers of that day. He still gives his time to an active practice, with offices in the Chicago Building. Mr. Allen has perhaps been chiefly distinguished as a criminal lawyer. One of his most notable cases was the prosecution of the Bussy case. Bussy had taken refuge in a box and was shot fifteen times and killed. His assailant through the efforts of Mr. Allen was convicted and sentenced to six years in the penitentiary. Mr. Allen served as county attorney one term, city attorney one term, and one term as justice of the peace.

He is a republican, and is a prominent Methodist. He was one of the seven organizers of the Methodist Church at Billings, and has filled every lay office in that church. He is a former member of the Good Templars and a member of the Commercial Club.

Mr. Allen lives in a modern home at 317 North Thirty-second Street. He married at Fountain City, Wisconsin, in 1885 Miss Minnie Finkelburg. Her father, J. A. Finkelnburg, who died at St. Augustine, Florida, was at one time judge of the District Court of Buffalo County, Wisconsin, and afterward served in the Wisconsin State Senate. Mr. and Mrs. Allen have three children. Roscoe F. is a mining engineer with offices at Los Angeles, and in the practice of his profession has spent three and a half years in old Mexico and two and a half years in Central America. Pattie, who is unmarried, was for eight years a teacher in the Billings High School and in 1918 took up a new work as an educator at San Antonio, Texas. Bernice is the chief stenographer of the Merchants National Bank at Billings.

THOMAS M. KEHOE. The career of Hon. Thomas M. Kehoe, one of the foremost citizens of Billings, as been one of intense and unceasing activity, of participation in events which have made history, and of achievements as a business man, rancher, soldier and statesman. His rise from clerkship in a drug store to the ownership of large tracts of valuable Montana lands and the incumbency of positions of importance and responsibility in various walks of life has been at the same time somewhat spectacular, thoroughly consistent and entirely well merited.

Mr. Kehoe was born at Bailey's Harbor, Wisconsin, July 19, 1870, a son of Patrick and Mary (Madigan) Kehoe. His father was born in 1836, in County Wicklow, Ireland, and at the age of seventeen years accompanied his parents to America, the family first locating in the Province of Ontario, Canada. One year later the eighteen-year-old youth made his way to the United States and after spending two years in Illinois, where he was married, went to Bailey's Harbor, Wisconsin, and embarked in the lumber shipping business, which he followed for several years on the Great Lakes. In 1874 he removed to Worth County, Iowa, where he embarked in farming, and continued to be an agriculturist in that state until 1900, when he practically retired from active affairs and took up his residence at Minneapolis, Minnesota. Shortly thereafter, however, he went to Fergus Falls, Minnesota, and there his death occurred September 4, 1916. Mr. Kehoe was a man of strong and rugged personality, of sound integrity, and of real native ability. He was a stanch democrat, and his religious faith was that of the Roman Catholic Church. He married Mary Madigan, who was born in 1838 in County Limerick, Ireland, and in her early girlhood was brought by her parents to America, the family first settling in Ontario, Canada, from whence they subsequently removed to Illinois, where she met and married Mr. Kehoe. Mrs. Kehoe died in Worth County, Iowa, in 1889, the mother of two sons: Edward J., a farmer in the vicinity of Fergus Falls, Minnesota; and Thomas M.

Thomas M. Kehoe attended the public schools of Worth County, Iowa, while spending his boyhood on his father's farm, and subsequently enrolled as a student at the Minneapolis Academy, from which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1894. He next took a three-year course in the University of Minnesota, at Minneapolis, and was graduated in pharmacy in 1897. During his college career he was one of the members of the varsity football team, with which he won his letter, was a great favorite with the students, and displayed remarkable prowess not only upon the gridiron but in all lines of athletic sport. Following his graduation he secured a position in a drug store at Minneapolis, but at this time his career was interrupted by the outbreak of the Spanish-American war. Mr. Kehoe offered his services as a volunteer and was accepted as a member of the Fifteenth Minnesota Infantry, being sent for training to Camp Ramsey and later to Fort Snelling. He then went with his command to Camp Meade, Pennsylvania, and was later sent to Camp McKenzie, Augusta, Georgia, but the war came to a termination before he could get into active service and he was mustered out with the rank of sergeant. In March, 1899, he returned to St. Paul, Minnesota, where he was located in the summer of the same year when a call was made for 100,000 volunteers to put down the Philippine insurrection. He at once volunteered and was accepted, becoming a member of the Forty-Fifth United States Volunteers, and in this enlistment saw much active service, going through the campaign on the Island of Luzon, Philippine Islands, as a member of Gen. John C. Bates' division. Following the surrender of Aguinaldo he returned to the United States and was mustered out at San Francisco with the rank of sergeant, and returned to St. Paul, where he again resumed his prosaic duties as a drug clerk.

Mr. Kehoe's entry into Montana occurred in the fall of 1901, when he located at Missoula and secured a position in a drug store. In the summer of 1905 he changed his location to Billings and opened the Red Cross Drug Store, of which establishment he was proprietor for five years, during which time he built up a large and prosperous business. Mr. Kehoe was appointed a member of the Montana State Board of Pharmacy in 1910, by Governor E. L. Norris, and served efficiently in that capacity for four years, and in 1915 was chosen deputy sheriff of Yellowstone County, and acted in that position for two years. In the meantime he had commenced farming operations, which he has since developed to impressive proportions. Gradually, but surely, Mr. Kehoe had been coming more and more before the people, his natural qualities of leadership asserting themselves and making themselves carry an influence upon others. His fitness for the post of state legislator made him the logical choice of the democratic party in his district in the fall of 1916, and he was sent to the Legislature as representative from Yellowstone County. In that distinguished body, during the Fifteenth Session, he immediately displayed his abilities and assumed a position among the leaders of the House. In addition to acting as speaker pro tem he was chairman of the important way and means committee, and a member of the insurance, education and corporations other than municipal committees, and in addition to other important, valuable and constructive work was the father of the successful bill for the commission manager form of government for cities.

Since his retirement from the Legislature Mr. Kehoe has devoted himself largely to the improvement of his ranches, although he makes his home at Billings, where he has quarters at the Billings Club. His main ranch is located six miles north of Pompey's Pillar, consisting of 640 acres devoted to the growing of grain, and in addition he owns a property of a like acreage, as yet unimproved, in the same locality. He is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and is prominent in the Knights of Columbus, in which he is a fourth degree knight, a member of Billings Council No. 1259, and past state deputy for the state of Montana. He belongs also to the Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is vice president of the Billings Club. Likewise, he is a member of Camp Bruce Wallace of the United Spanish War Veterans, and past department commander for the State of Montana. Mr. Kehoe is unmarried.

CHARLES D. THURBER. American enterprise has developed one section of this vast country after another. As soon as one community becomes too congested the more aggressive members of it go forth to less thickly settled regions, taking with them indomitable courage and faith in their new environment. Thus it is that Billings has had so remarkable a growth. Its leading business and professional men are those who have come here because they did not find in their old home sufficient opportunity for development of their capabilities, and because they recognized the possibilities of the great State of Montana for those willing to work hard to make them actualities. Charles D. Thurber, proprietor of the Billings Carriage Works, is just such a man, and his success is indicative of the man and his community. He was born at Hillsboro, Vernon County, Wisconsin, September 29, 1867, coming of Scotch ancestry, his forebearers leaving that country for the American colonies and here helping to determine the policies of New York.

George W. Thurber, father of Charles D. Thurber, was born in 1843 at South Bend, Indiana, to which place the family had come with the westward tide of civilization, and he died at Barron, Wisconsin, in 1899, having gone to that state from Indiana when eighteen years of age. In 1861 George W. Thurber set an example which his grandson followed many years afterward, that of fighting for his country by enlisting in the Sixth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and serving during the whole of the Civil war. He participated in the battle of Gettysburg, where he was captured and sent to Belle Isle, from which he escaped. Unfortunately he was re-captured and confined at Andersonville, from which he was not released until after peace was declared. Returning to Wisconsin, he resumed his agricultural work, and spent the remainder of his life in that state. A republican of the stanchest type, he was called upon to fill a number of the township offices. The Baptist Church held his membership and benefited by his generosity of time and money. For many years he was a member of the Masonic fraternity. George W. Thurber was united in marriage with Lottie Jane Hill, born at Hillsboro, Wisconsin, which was named for her father, William W. Hill, the first settler in the township, as well as the first in the eastern part of Vernon County. Her death occurred at Baron, Wisconsin, in 1901, when she was forty-eight years old. She and her husband had the following children: Charles D., whose name heads this review; Alice, who died at the age of twenty-five years; Inez, who married Sam Bailkey, manager of the Excelsior Mill of Oshkosh, Wisconsin; Myrtle, who married E. C. Leonard, now deceased, was foreman for the Verick Motor Company, and his widow resides at Minneapolis, Minnesota; William, who resides at Fargo, North Dakota, is engaged in farming; and Arthur, of whom nothing definite is known.

Charles D. Thurber attended the schools of Hillsboro and Baron, Wisconsin, and remained on his father's farm until he was twelve years old, at which time he began learning the blacksmithing trade, before school and on holidays. After completing his trade he followed it at Baron and in Minnesota, and in 1905 came to Montana and for four years was in the employ of the Witmer Carriage Works at Helena, leaving there in 1909 for Basin, Montana, where he was connected with the Heinze machine plant until 1911. In that year he came to Billings and established his present business, of which he continues to be the proprietor. His plant is located at No. 2311 First Avenue, North, and here he carries on a general blacksmithing and repair business on carriages and automobiles. His is the leading establishment of its kind at Billings, and so excellent is his work that his trade is drawn from a wide territory. Mr. Thurber is independent in his political views, but takes a deep interest in the improvement of civic conditions. His fraternal connections are with Billings Lodge, Knights of Pythias, and Billings Camp, Modern Woodmen of America. His family residence, which is a comfortable one, is at No. 107 North Nineteenth Street.

In 1889 Mr. Thurber was married first to Miss Bessie Treat, born at Bloomer, Wisconsin, and she died at Baron, Wisconsin, in 1898, having borne her husband the following children: Wilbur, who as a member of the National army on overseas service was sent into Germany after the signing of the armistice; Hazel, who married Trueman Hopkins, a smelter, lives at Anaconda, Montana; and Verna, who is married and lives at Wallace, Idaho, where her husband is interested in mining. Mr. Thurber was married second, in 1904, at Sleepy Eye, Minnesota, to Miss Ida Ehlenburg, born in Illinois, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ehlenburg. Mr. Ehlenburg, who is a retired railroad man, lives at Gilberta, Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Thurber have three children, namely: Harold, Cleo and Charlotte, all of whom are attending the public schools of Billings.

James William Drake. One of the oldest railway train men and conductors in the Northwest, James William Drake has had an active experience of thirty years and of nearly a quarter of a century in Montana. He is now one of the veteran railway conductors for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul.

Mr. Drake, whose home is at Lewistown, was born in Clay County, South Dakota, on his father's farm, May 27, 1870, son of Frederick M. and Nellie E. (Rotnor) Drake. His parents were both born in Elgin, Illinois. Frederick Drake at the age of sixteen enlisted in the Union army and was with his command in all its skirmishes and battles until the close of hostilities, when he received his honorable discharge. He then engaged in the drug business at West Union, Iowa, later located at Decorah, Iowa, and engaged in general contracting, building state and county roads. From there he moved to St. Paul, Minnesota, and in 1883 went to work for the Great Northern Railway as a freight conductor. Later his home was in Minneapolis, where he was on the police force for several years. He died in 1903, at the age of fifty-six. He was a republican in politics. His wife died in 1905, also aged fifty-six. James William is the oldest of four sons and has one brother living.

Mr. Drake received his education in the public schools of St. Paul and Minneapolis, and his first employment was with the St. Paul and Duluth Railway in the train service. Later he was with the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway as passenger conductor, and in October, 1895, came to Montana and had his first headquarters at Livingstone. He was with the Northern Pacific as passenger conductor on the main line and some of the branches until 1905. In that year he removed to the Province of British Columbia and spent some time in proving up a homestead. In 1907 he returned to Montana and resumed his work as a railroad man with the Jaw Bone Railway and continued in the service when this line was taken over by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul. Mr. Drake has been a member of the Order of Railway Conductors for twenty-one years, and state chairman for the legislative board of the four great railroad organizations during the four years following the Twelfth Legislative Assembly.

He is also active in Masonry, having become a Mason at Billings, where he was identified with Ashland Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons, Aldemar Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar. Albert Schlechten. While Mr. Schlechten owns a fine ranch near Helena, his profession and vocation for a number of years has been artistic photography. He has built up a business recognized as the foremost of its kind in Gallatin County.

Mr. Schlechten was born near the City of Berne, Switzerland, January 14, 1876. His parents spent all their lives in the same locality. His father, Christian, was born in the same locality in 1850 and died in 1917. He was a cabinet maker by trade, served the regular time in the Swiss army, and was a Protestant in religion and a member of the State Church of Switzerland. His wife was Marguerite Krebs, who was born in 1840 and died in 1918. Albert is the oldest of their children. The next, Alfred, is in the photographic business at Bozeman. The following two, Emma and Lena, both live in Switzerland. Anna, the youngest, is the wife of Jack Schneider, employed by the Bozeman Bottling Works.

Albert Schlechten secured the equivalent of a grammar and high school education in Switzerland. He was sixteen years of age when he came to this country in 1892. For four years he lived near Stedman, Missouri, and worked as a farm hand. He learned photography in a studio at Centralia, Missouri. He rapidly acquired a knowledge of the photographic technique, and soon became noted for his fine work in the photographic profession. Equipped with his unusual skill, though with a very modest capital, Mr. Schlechten came to Bozeman in 1900 and established his present business. His studio is now the chief one patronized for artistic work in Gallatin County. He built the Schlechten Block in 1903 at 12 South Black Avenue. This contains his studio with every apparatus and facility for high class photography, and also furnishes quarters for business offices and living apartments. Mr. Schlechten owns other real estate in Bozeman. His ranch near Helena comprises 320 acres of improved land with water rights on the Spokane Bench.

Mr. Schlechten served with Company A, Second Regiment Montana State Militia. He is an independent republican in politics and is affiliated with Bozeman Lodge No. 463 of the Elks. In 1912, at Bozeman, he married Miss Clara Schmidt. She was born in Denmark and was educated there. They have two children, Albert Wilbur, born in 1915, and Betty Marguerite, born in August, 1918.

Charles A. MacCallum. There is no such thing as chance. Advancement in any line comes through ability, concentration and industry, not luck. Good judgment is the outgrowth of accumulated experience and observation, and when it is a characteristic of a person and is combined with the faculty of performing painstaking and conscientious work, chance is placed on the shelf and certainty takes its place. Charles A. MacCallum, secretary, treasurer and manager of the MacCallum-Cloutier Mercantile Company of Anaconda, is a man who early recognized that if he wanted to get ahead in the world he must not rely upon a hoped-for good fortune, but upon his own gray matter, and as a result his concern is one of the leading ones of its kind in this region.

Charles A. MacCallum was born at Montreal, Canada, January 29, 1870, a son of Charles F. MacCallum, a native of Montreal, Canada, where he was born in 1836, and he died at Anaconda, Montana, in 1904. His family originated from Scotland, and its representatives have been noted for their excellent common sense and shrewd business acumen. Growing up at Montreal, Charles F. MacCallum became public weigher for the city, and held that position until he came to the United States in 1890, having retired and found pleasant surroundings at Anaconda. While living in Canada he served in the militia, and he supported the policies of the conservative party. He was a Roman Catholic. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Anna Maria Cushing, was born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, in 1833, and she died at Anaconda in 1905. Their children were as follows: Maria, who was married to U. S. Tuttle, now deceased, resides in California; Morley, who died at St. Paul, Minnesota, was a merchant of that city; Victoria, who is deceased, married A. P. Cloutier, a merchant, who is also deceased; Albert Cushing is a very successful insurance man and banker of Seattle, Washington; Amelia, who married D. F. Hallahan, a merchant of Spokane, Washington; and Charles A., who was the youngest.

After being graduated from the Montreal High School Charles A. MacCallum took a two years' course in McGill College, and in April, 1888, came to Anaconda to join the selling force of the department store of MacCallum & Cloutier, which was established in 1885 by A. C. MacCallum and A. P. Cloutier. In 1902 the company was incorporated as the MacCallum-Cloutier Mercantile Company, at which time Mr. MacCallum bought an interest in the business, and continued with it until 1910. In that year he went to Vancouver, British Columbia, and there conducted a real estate business for five years. In 1915 inducements were offered him to return to the old company, and he accepted them, and assumed the management of the store, located on East Park Avenue, from 419 to 423, and it supplies the greater part of Deerlodge County. The stock is timely and of superlative value, facts appreciated by the careful buyers of this region, and the annual business shows a healthy increase.

In 1896 Mr. MacCallum was married at Anaconda to Miss Mary Cannovan, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Cannovan, the later of whom is deceased. John Cannovan lives at Columbia Falls, Montana. He is a veteran of the war between the North and South. Mr. and Mrs. MacCallum have had the following children born to them: Gerald Cushing, who was born in June, 1897, is a graduate of the Anaconda High School, and is a member of the sales force of his father's store; Eleanor, who was born in 1902, is attending the Anaconda High School; Charles T., who was born in 1905, is attending the public schools of the city; Constance, who was born in 1907 and Doris, who was born in 1911, are both attending school; and Raymond, who was born in 1914, is the youngest. Mr. MacCallum recently sold his residence and now lives at No. 403 West Third Street. He is a republican. The Roman Catholic Church holds his membership. Fraternally he belongs to Anaconda Council No. 882, Knights of Columbus, of which he is a third degree knight; Anaconda Camp No. 154, Woodmen of the World; and Mount Haggin Court No. 629, Catholic Order of Foresters.

J. P. Fabrick is associate general manager at Bozeman for the North American Mortgage Company. He has the supervision of a large territory where the business of this corporation is represented in the Northwest. He is a man of unusual qualifications and business judgment. He was reared and trained as an expert dairyman in the greatest dairy center of the world, and by practical experience knows farming under European and Western American conditions.

Mr. Fabrick was born in the Province of Friesland in the northern part of Holland February 15, 1883. His father, Peter Fabrick, was born in the same province in 1854 and spent the greater part of his life there as a farmer. In 1908 he came to the United States and acquired farming interests at Manhattan, Montana, but is now living practically retired. Since coming to America he has acquired the full rights of an American citizen, is a democratic voter and a member of the Presbyterian Church. Peter Fabrick married G. de Ruiter, who was born in Friesland in 1854 and died there in 1915. All of their children live in America, as follows: A. Her parents both died in Holland, where her father was a physician and surgeon. Mrs. Fabrick acquired the equivalent of a high school education in Holland. They have two children: Sjoukje, born December 27, 1907, and Jennie, born May 19, 1909.

George P. Finch, a retired rancher at Bozeman, is one of the interesting old time characters still surviving whose theater of activities for many years was the wide plains of the Far West, though for over thirty years his work and home have been in the mountain valleys of Montana. Mr. Finch represents an era of the great West when in order to do the essential work of the country the conditions required men of personal courage, endurance, strength, coolness in danger and a never ceasing activity. Mr. Finch was cowboy and bull-whacker, riding and driving over the great trails of the Southwest, West and North, and for many years lived a life brimful of experience and adventure.

He was born in a quiet country community near Sandwich, Kendall County, Illinois, January 28, 1863. His grandfather, Cyrenus Finch, was one of the earliest settlers in that section of Northern Illinois. He had a farm and stock ranch there in the early days and died in Kendall County in 1866. His ancestors came originally from England and were early settlers both in Ohio and Illinois. Martin George Finch, father of George P., was also born near Sandwich in Kendall County, grew up in the country and in 1861 enlisted in the One Hundred and Twelfth Illinois Infantry. He was a Union soldier three years and nine months. After the war he returned to Kendall County, was a farmer, and afterward moved to Kansas and followed the business of building, contracting and carpenter work at Paola until his death in 1912. He was a republican. Martin G. Finch married Phoebe Covey, who was born in Illinois and died in Kendall County in 1869. Geroge P. was the oldest of their children. Elizabeth married Lee Rose and died at Peoria, Illinois, where her husband was a civil service employe of the Internal Revenue Department. Hubert was proprietor of a meat market at Buda, Illinois, where he died at the age of forty-two. Bert is a meat cutter at Bozeman.

George P. Finch, when seven years of age and after his mother's death, was bound out to a stockman near Central City, Nebraska. He remained there seven years, but it was a hard experience which he does not like to recall. In the meantime his education was advanced only to a modest acquaintance with the second reader studies. Since then, however, by reading and study and contact with men and the world he has acquired the equivalent of a substantial education. When he ran away from his employer and master at Central City he entered upon that life of travel and adventure which was his lot until he finally settled down upon a ranch in Montana. He was through the states of Iowa and Missouri working at odd jobs to pay his way. During 1877-79 he was a cowboy in the employ of the Prairie Cattle Company, operating in New Mexico. His next employers were Lee & Reynolds, and for whom he drove an ox team, freighting between Dodge City, Kansas, and through Indian Territory and Texas. In 1881 he accompanied a herd of cattle north to Buffalo, Park, Kansas, but soon returned to his job as a freighter and cowboy in Texas. In May, 1882, he took another herd of cattle north over the trail to Ogallala, Nebraska. For a time he was in Northwestern Nebraska working as a bull-whacker between Sidney and Red Cloud, and in the fall went into the Black Hills district in South Dakota. At that time he came into Montana as far as Junction City, driving a mule team for the Northwestern Stage and Transportation Company and operating between Pierre and Deadwood and through all the Black Hill towns of that date. In 1884 he accompanied a mule train to Fort Custer, Montana. This outfit had a contract with the Government to stack hay at Fort Custer. After the contract was finished. Mr Finch went back to the Black Hills. He was again in Junction City, Montana, in 1884-85, and in the spring of 1885 in the course of his travels one day pitched his noon camp in the Judith Basin, and the site of that camp is now included in his present ranch located 4½ miles south and east of old Youbet. From 1886 until December, 1887, Mr. Finch had charge of Guerney & Woods mule outfit. Following that for a period of ten years he freighted on his own account. In the meantime he pre-empted a ranch of 160 acres and a tree claim of 160 acres, proving up on both and finally selling this property in 1897. In 1893 he contracted with the Government to transport supplies to the camp of workmen engaged in constructing ditches on the Crow Reservation.

In June, 1897, Mr. Finch sold out his freighting outfit and on February 22, 1898, he married and returned to Judith Basin, to the ranch which he had pre-empted in 1888. After selling his homestead he located on his present ranch between Garnell and Judith Gap. Mr. Finch now owns 920 acres. In 1898 he bought what was known as the D herd of horses, and the horse business was his chief activity until 1906. He is widely known among Montana horsemen. In 1906 Mr. Finch leased his ranch and has since lived in Bozeman, where he has a modern home with private garage at 201 6th Avenue, South.

It would be a long story to tell all the experiences, privations and hardships Mr. Finch endured in the days of his cowboy, freighting and other pioneer life. He frequently came in contact with hostile Indians. In the fall of 1878 he and several companions were surrounded by the Apache Indians on a hill and were kept in a state of siege from 10 o'clock one day until 2 o'clock in the afternoon of the day following. They shot their horses and lay behind them for protection. Mr. Finch was nominally a republican for many years but for the past twelve years has voted independently. He served several years as a stock inspector in Montana. He is affiliated with Gallatin Camp No. 5245, Modern Woodmen of America, Bridger Camp No. 62, Woodmen of the World, Bozeman Lodge No. 18, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Zoma Chapter No. 12, Royal Arch Masons, St. John's Commandery No. 12, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena.

On February 22, 1898, at Billings, he married Miss Mollie Lewis, a daughter of H. V. and Anna Lewis. Her parents are residents of Ashland, Nebraska. Her father is a veteran Union soldier, and attained the rank of captain. Mr. and Mrs. Finch have two children: Carl V., born October 28, 1901, a student in the Gallatin County High School, and Halley E., born February 19, 1904, who is in grammar school at Bozeman.

FRANK WIGGINS. The gentleman whose life history is herewith outlined is a man who has lived to good purpose and achieved a satisfactory degree of success, solely by his individual efforts. By a straightforward and commendable course Mr. Wiggins has made his way to a respectable position in the business world of Park County, winning the hearty admiration of the people of his community and earning a reputation as an enterprising, progressive man of affairs, which the public has not been slow to recognize and appreciate. Those who know him best will readily acquiesce in the statement that he is eminently deserving of the success which is his and of the popularity which he enjoys in his home community.

Frank Wiggins, cashier of the First State Bank at Clyde Park, Park County, is descended from sterling Irish stock, his paternal grandfather, Jeremiah Wiggins, having been born in the northern part of Ireland in 1821. In mature years he immigrated to America, locating in the province of Ontario, Canada, where he became a building contractor. Subsequently he came to Postville, Iowa, and still later located in Luverne, Minnesota, where he spent the remainder of his days, practically retired from active business pursuits. In his native land he was a soldier in the British army and had a good military training. His son, William Wiggins, was born in Postville, Iowa, in 1861, and was there reared and received his education. He became a railroad contractor and followed that business for many years, his headquarters during the major portion of that time being Kansas City, Kansas. In 1891 he moved to Luverne, Minnesota, and for four years was engaged in the grain business. Since that time he has been occupied in farming and stock raising, in which he has been successful. He is a democrat in politics and at one time served as assessor of Rock County, Minnesota. In Ottawa, Kansas, Mr. Wiggins was married to Mary McCarty, who was born in 1868 in Southern Ireland and who was brought to the United States by her parents in 1875. Her father being a railroad contractor, their home was wherever he was located for the time being, and thus they lived in Ohio, Indiana, Missouri and Kansas. To these parents were born nine children, namely: Frank, whose name heads these paragraphs; John, who is a salesman for the United Motor Corporation at Livingston, Montana; William, Jr., who lives with his parents, enlisted in the United States army in June, 1918, was sent overseas the following month, and was mustered out in February, 1919, with the rank of corporal; Muriel, who also is with her parents, is a teacher; Raymond is associated with his father in the home ranch, as are Edward, Gerald and Burt; Dorothy is a student in the public school.

Frank Wiggins was born at Kansas City, Kansas, on December 9, 1887. He received his elementary education in the rural schools of Rock County, Minnesota, and the high school of Luverne. He then entered Valparaiso University, at Valparaiso, Indiana, which he attended for two years, taking commercial and special courses. In 1910 Mr. Wiggins engaged in the clothing business at Luverne, to which he devoted himself about 3½ years. In March, 1914, he came to Wilsall, Montana, and entered the Farmers State Bank as assistant cashier. In November, 1917, he became assistant cashier of the Reed Point State Bank, where he remained until October, 1918, when he accepted a similar position with the First State Bank of Livingston, Montana. On May 1, 1919, when the First State Bank of Clyde Park opened its doors, Mr. Wiggins began his connection with the institution as cashier, and is devoting himself indefatigably to the interests of this bank. The bank, though one of the youngest in this section of the state, has already earned an enviable reputation as a sound and conservative financial institution. The present officers of the bank are: President, L. R. Nye; vice president, Walter J. Hill, and cashier, Frank Wiggins. It has a capital of $25,000 and undivided profits of $5,000.

Politically Mr. Wiggins is a stanch supporter of the democratic party and fraternally is a member of Luverne Lodge, Knights of Pythias, of Luverne, Minnesota.

On December 3, 1916, at Wilsall, Montana, Frank Wiggins was married to Cora McDonald, the daughter of J. P. and Florence M. (Wittenberger) McDonald. Mr. McDonald is the proprietor of a bakery at Wilsall and is numbered among the enterprising men of that city. Mrs. Wiggins received a splendid education, being a graduate of the Colorado Springs High School and of the Conservatory of Music at Colorado Springs, Colorado. She is a skilled pianist and is also an expert stenographer. To Mr. and Mrs. Wiggins has been born one child, Gerald Francis, whose birth occurred on August 31, 1917.

GEORGE BARTZ. Among the strong and influential citizens of Gallatin County, the record of whose lives have become an essential part of the history of that section, the gentleman whose name appears above has exerted a beneficial influence throughout the community where he resides. His chief characteristics are keenness of perception, a tireless energy, honesty of purpose and motive and every-day common sense, which have enabled him not only to advance his own interests, but also to largely contribute to the moral and material advancement of the locality.

George Bartz was born at Poughkeepsie, New York, on March 29, 1865. His father, Nicholas Bartz, was born in Germany in 1835 and died at Des Moines, Iowa, in 1907. He came to the United States about 1864 and settled in Poughkeepsie, New York, where he lived for a short time, moving then to Des Moines, Iowa, where he became the pioneer florist of that locality. He was successful in business and enjoyed a high reputation because of his ability and worth. He was a republican in his political views. At the age of twenty-one he began to work on his own account, working mainly on farms in that locality until 1887, when he came to Bozeman, Montana, and during the following two years was employed as a farm hand. Then for three years he was employed in an implement store, followed by employment as a clerk in a grocery store, until 1909. In that year Mr. Bartz bought an interest in the T. H. Rea Grocery Company, but two years later he sold his interest in that company and established a store of his own on West Main Street. He has given his undivided attention to this business, with the result that he has developed the business until today it ranks as one of the leading grocery stores in Gallatin County. Mr. Bartz is a hard worker and conscientious in his business methods, so that the people with whom he has had dealings are among his best friends.

Mr. Bartz's personal relations with his fellowmen have been mutually pleasant and agreeable, and he is highly regarded by all, being easily approached, obliging and straightforward in all the relations of life.

tana for over thirty years, and after the death of her husband, who was a prominent merchant and mining engineer, she entered in 1900 the Murray Hospital at Butte, and was the first to graduate as a trained nurse from that institution.

For nearly twenty years she has given all her energy and enthusiasm to her great and noble calling. She practiced at Butte and other localities in Montana and on September 1, 1914, came to Dillon and opened the Curtis Hospital. He married Hannah Mowbray, a native of Woodstock, New Brunswick, and of Scotch ancestry.

JOSEPH PIEDALUE, M. D. Each calling or business, if honorable, has its place in human existence, constituting a part of the plan whereby life's methods are pursued and man reaches his ultimate destiny. Emerson said that "All are needed by each one." And that is as true in one avenue of life's activities as another. However, the importance of a business or profession is in a very large measure determined by its beneficence or usefulness. So dependent is man upon his fellow men that the worth of each individual is largely reckoned by what he has done for humanity. There is no class to whom greater gratitude is due from the world at large than to those self-sacrificing, sympathetic, noble-minded men whose life work has been the alleviation of suffering that rests upon humanity, thus lengthening the span of human existence. There is no known standard by which their beneficent influence can be measured; their helpfulness is as broad as the universe and their power goes hand in hand with the wonderful laws of nature that come from the very source of life itself.

Joseph Piedalue, one of the best known and most successful physicians and surgeons of Southern Montana, living at Bozeman, was born near Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, Canada, on January 24, 1859. His father, Isaac Piedalue, was also born in that province, in 1827, and died in Montreal in the fall of 1915. He was reared in his native province and became a farmer. In 1885 he emigrated to Nebraska, locating near Imperial, where he became a farmer and stockraiser. In the course of time he became a citizen of the United States, and he was prospered in his business affairs so that he was able to retire and in 1909 located at Missoula, Montana, where he made his home until his return to Montreal in 1912, where his death occurred. He became a democrat after coming to the States and was a member of the Roman Catholic Church. During his young manhood he served in the Canadian militia, in which he held an officer's commission. He married Elodie Roy, who was born in 1830 in the Province of Quebec and whose death occurred there in 1872. To them were born the following children: Absalon, who is a farmer at Greeley, Colorado; Arthur, who is a farmer at Roman, Montana; Joseph, the immediate subject of this review; Anatole, who is a farmer near Hyde Park, Vermont; Lea, who is the wife of Z. Mercau, now retired and living in Los Angeles, California, but who was a pioneer rancher in the Missoula Valley, Montana; Febranie, who is the wife of Delphis Brassard, a contractor and builder at Chicopee, Massachusetts; Hector, who is a farmer and stockraiser at Champion, Nebraska; Stephanie, who is the wife of S. Robert, formerly a builder and contractor, but now a farmer near Missoula, Montana.

Jos. Piedalue

Joseph Piedalue is descended from good old Breton stock, his progenitors having resided for generations in Brittany, France, whence they came to L'Acadie, Nova Scotia. Driven from that land, they came to the Province of Quebec and gave to their new home the same name as their former home.

Joseph Piedalue received a splendid education, for, after completing his studies in the public schools of his native province, he attended the L'Assumption College near Montreal, Canada, where he studied for eight years, comprising both preparatory and classical courses, and graduating from the latter in 1881. He then matriculated in the medical department of Victoria University, at Montreal, where he was graduated in 1885, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Doctor Piedalue immediately entered upon the active practice of his profession at Frenchtown, Montana, where he remained until 1891, when he moved to Columbia Falls, Montana, being the first physician to locate there. A few years later he located in Helena, Montana, but a year later moved to Chestnut, this state, where he served as mine physician until 1904, when he came to Bozeman, where his family had been living, and here he has since been successfully engaged in the general practice, meeting with the most pronounced success and winning the confidence and esteem of the people generally. Doctor Piedalue has been prospered financially and is the owner of a fine ranch of 160 acres 3½ miles south of Bozeman, the land being irrigated. The doctor has served as city physician, as coroner and as county health officer, his official service covering a period of nine years.

Politically the doctor is a democrat and his religious affiliation is with the Roman Catholic Church. Fraternally he is a member of Bozeman Council No. 1413, Knights of Columbia; Bozeman Lodge No. 463, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Bridger Camp No. 62, Woodmen of the World; Gallatin Castle No. 82, Royal Highlanders; Eureka Homestead No. 415, Brotherhood of American Yeomen. He is also a member of the Gallatin County Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

In 1885, at L'Acadie, Province of Quebec, Canada, Doctor Piedalue was married to Laura Robert, the daughter of Alexander and Sophie (Lefebvre) Robert, the former of whom is now deceased. The father was a successful farmer, and his daughter, Mrs. Piedalue, received a good education, having studied in convents. To Doctor and Mrs. Piedalue were born the following children: Mary Alice, who is the wife of Charles Hancock, a jeweler and druggist at Lewistown, Montana; Alexander died in youth; Laura is a teacher of domestic science in the high school at Helena, Montana; Irene is engaged in social service work at Spokane, Washington; Aimee Mary, who lives at home, is employed in the Commercial National Bank; Robert Joseph, who is a dentist in Bozeman, enlisted in May, 1918, was sent to Camp Fremont, California, and was mustered out in February, 1919, with the rank of corporal, and he is now practicing his profession of dentistry in Conrad, Montana; Roy enlisted in the United States Navy in April, 1917, was assigned to the hospital corps, and died in a hospital at Philadelphia on January 10, 1919, at the age of twenty-one years.

Throughout his busy life Doctor Piedalue has ever been a close student, keeping well abreast of the times in matters pertaining to his profession, and to the practice of his art he has brought rare skill and resource. His life has been a busy and successful one and he stands today as one of the leaders of his profession in this community, secure in the confidence and esteem of the people with whom he has been associated.

William S. Bole, M. D. Professional success results from merit. Frequently in commercial life one may come into possession of a lucrative business through inheritance or gift, but in what are known as the learned professions advancement is gained only through painstaking and long-continued effort. Prestige in the healing art is the outcome of strong mentality, close application, thorough mastery of its great underlying principles and the ability to apply theory to practice in the treatment of diseases. Good intellectual training, thorough professional knowledge and the possession and utilization of the qualities and attributes essential to success have made the subject of this review eminent in his chosen calling, and he stands today among the scholarly and enterprising physicians in a community noted for the high order of its medical talent.

William S. Bole was born in St. Paul, Minnesota, on the 17th day of July, 1882. His father, William M. Bole, who is now editor of the Great Falls Tribune, at Great Falls, Montana, was born in the State of Vermont in 1859, and was there reared and learned the printing trade. He was married in Boston, Massachusetts, and shortly afterward moved to St. Paul, Minnesota, where he was employed at his trade. He then held a position in the postoffice for a while, and afterward started and ran a weekly paper there. In 1890 he moved to Great Falls, Montana, and became connected with the Leader of that city. In 1894 he and O. F. Warden bought the Great Falls Tribune, which they published until 1901, when they sold the property and Mr. Bole came to Bozeman and edited the Chronicle, which he later bought. He sold the Chronicle in 1917, but in the meanwhile, in 1905, he and Mr. Worden had repurchased the Great Falls Tribune, of which Mr. Bole is still the editor. He is a democrat in politics and in religion is affiliated with the Presbyterian Church. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity. Mr. Bole married Elizabeth Dow, who was born in Vermont in 1864, and the immediate subject of this review is their only child.

William S. Bole received his elementary education in the public schools of St. Paul and Great Falls, attending the high school in the latter city until the junior year. He then became a student in the Montana State College, at Bozeman, where he was graduated in 1906, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. Having decided to make the practice of medicine his life work, he then matriculated in the medical department of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Maryland, where he was graduated in 1910, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He then entered upon the active practice at Great Falls, but two years later came to Bozeman, where he has since remained, engaging in a general medical and surgical practice. His record is simply the account of a life which has been in the main uneventful as far as stirring incidents are concerned, yet has been distinguished by the most substantial qualities of character.

Politically Doctor Bole is an earnest supporter of the democratic party, and takes an intelligent interest in public events. While a resident of Cascade County he served as county health officer and also as county physician. He is a member of the Gallatin County Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. The doctor is an active supporter of every movement which gives promise of being of material advantage to the community in any way. He is a stockholder in the Tribune Printing and Supply Company.

In 1907, at Bozeman, Doctor Bole was married to Edith Jackson, daughter of Thomas and Emma (Gordon) Jackson. They became pioneer settlers near Harrison, Montana, and both died there. To Doctor and Mrs. Bole have been born two children, namely: Emma E., born in November, 1911, and Marion E., born in April, 1914. The doctor is essentially a man among men, commanding respect by innate force as well as by his ability, and he holds the unequivocal confidence and esteem of the people among whom he has lived and labored.

JOHN S. CABLE. Among the earnest and enterprising men whose depth of character have gained them a prominent place in the community and the respect and confidence of their fellow citizens is John S. Cable, manager of the Thompson Yards at Clyde Park. A man of decided views and laudable ambitions, his influence has ever made for the advancement of his kind, and today he ranks among the representative business men of his community.

John S. Cable was born at Wilmot, South Dakota, on September 15, 1892, and is a son of D. S. and Alice (Tripp) Cable. D. S. Cable, who still resides at Wilmot, was born in 1854, at Syracuse, New York, where he was reared and educated. Eventually he followed the tide of migration westward and after stopping for a time at various points, went to Wilmot, South Dakota, of which locality he was a pioneer, having been there at the time of the opening of the Indian reservation lands to white settlers. He went into the drug business, in which he has prospered, and is now retired from active business life. He took an active part in the public affairs of the newly opened country, serving as recorder of deeds and as an abstractor. He is a member of the Episcopal Church and his fraternal relations are with the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married Alice Tripp, who was born in 1859 at Dundas, Minnesota, and to them were born three children, namely: Marie, who is assistant cashier of the Citizens State Bank at Clyde Park, John S., the immediate subject of this sketch, and Frank Ewart, who is a farmer and who still remains with his parents.

John S. Cable was educated in the public schools of Wilmot, graduating from the high school there in 1910. In 1911 he took a course in the Mankato Commercial College, at Mankato, Minnesota. In the following year he came to Yellowstone Park and for about three months was employed as a carpenter's helper. He then came to Clyde Park and entered the employ of H. M. Allen as manager of the latter's lumber yard. He has remained identified with this enterprise to the present time and has seen the plant grow from a humble beginning to the leading yard in this part of Park County. Several years ago the concern was reorganized under the title of Thompson Yards, Incorporated, and is rated among the strong and reliable firms of this section of the state. Mr. Cable is still the active manager of the yards and has demonstrated his ability and fitness for responsible work of this nature. He has a wide and accurate knowledge of the details of the business and, having the ability to apply his knowledge, he has proven the right man in the right place. He has taken an active part in all movements for the advancement of the community's interests, and is a stockholder and a director of the First State Bank of Clyde Park.

Mr. Cable assumes an independent attitude in political matters preferring to support the men and measures which meet his approval than to follow party dictates. His religious membership is with the Episcopal Church, while his fraternal relations are with Clyde Park Lodge No. 64, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is a past noble grand.

In 1914, at Livingston, Montana, John S. Cable was married to Lois Haycraft, daughter of George and Libbie Haycraft, who now reside in Clyde Park, Mr. Haycraft having retired from active life. Mr. and Mrs. Cable have one child, Clinton G., born on May 5, 1916.

Mr. Cable has proven himself a useful member of the community in which he lives, being not only the administrative officer of one of the chief industries, but he has also met a large local need by holding the agency for some of the leading life, fire, tornado and hail insurance companies, for which he has written a vast amount of business in this section of the county. Genial and unassuming in personal manner, he has won and retains a host of warm personal friends, who esteem him because of his personal qualities.

ANDREW G. KRAUSS, exchange manager at Bozeman for the Mountain State Telegraph & Telephone Company, has been an executive official of this corporation in different cities and states of the Northwest for a number of years. He is a business man of wide commercial experience and training, and is a member of a prominent business family of New York State.

He was born at Attica, New York, October 28, 1877. His father, J. A. Krauss, was born in 1853 and died in March, 1917, spending his entire life at Attica. He was one of the leading business men and citizens of the community. For many years he was a boot and shoe manufacturer. In the early days of the oil industry he made a specialty of manufacturing oil drillers' boots. One time he had the largest factory of its kind in the United States and was one of the two manufacturers who specialized in that special grade of boot. About 1895 he discontinued manufacturing when unable to obtain a supply of raw material from France. After discontinuing his manufacturing department he continued in the retail shoe and clothing business until his death. He also had outside interests, including property in the gold mining district around Cobalt, Canada, and had invested some money in a gold mine at Helena, Montana. He was a democrat but little interested in partisan politics. Several times he was elected a councilman at Attica, but always by the republicans. He was a director in the Bank of Attica, was affiliated with the Presbyterian Church and an active member of the Masonic Order. J. A. Krauss married Miss Frederica Mentz who was born at Attica in 1854 and died there in 1884. Caroline, the oldest of their children, is the wife of C. F. Bartles, who is manager of the mercantile business of the Krauss estate at Attica. Andrew G., is the second of the family. Helen is the wife of Mr. Glor, and they live on a large farm near Attica. Louise is married and her husband is in the retail store of the Krauss estate at Attica. John is manager of a retail shoe store at Springfield, Massachusetts.

Andrew G. Krauss was educated in the public schools of Attica, graduating from high school in 1895. In 1898 he graduated from the law department of Cornell University at Ithaca. While in university he was a member of the Delta Chi college fraternity. After getting his law diploma he spent one year in the law firm of Fisher, Wende & Coatsworth at Buffalo. Mr. Krauss has found his knowledge of law valuable to him in a business way but has never made any serious effort to take up the profession. In 1900 he came to Helena, Montana, and spend two years as assistant manager of the old Amber mine at York. For about a year he had charge of the books of the sheriff's office at Butte. Then followed a visit to his old home at Attica, and later he obtained a lease on the old Amber mine at York, Montana, and personally operated it for six months. His next home was at Portland, Oregon, where for two years he had charge of a clothing and shoe store and for a time was with the general mercantile house of Olds, Workman & King. Mr. Krauss then spent three years at Attica in charge of his father's business. Until 1912 he was buyer of the clothing and furnishing goods department of a large department store at Caldwell, Idaho.

His connection with the Mountain State Telegraph & Telephone Company began in 1912, when he became a salesman in the district office at Boise. After a year he was promoted to credit man and then to district salesman, and eventually became special representative covering the State of Idaho. In 1915 he was sent as special representative and division general manager to Salt Lake City, remaining there two years, afterward was with the same company at Helena and in 1918 was given the management of the exchange at Bozeman, including the Bozeman, Belgrade, Manhattan and Sayleville exchanges. His official headquarters are in the exchange at 13 North Tracy Avenue in Bozeman.

Mr. Krauss is a republican voter. He married at Butte, Montana, in 1901, Miss Helen McCarthy. She was born near St. Paul, Minnesota, and is a graduate of a Sisters' school at St. Paul. They have four children: J. A. Russell, born April 2, 1903; Eloise, born in May, 1904; Norman Douglas, born in January, 1906; and Julian Roach, born in March, 1909.

Benjamin Franklin White, the last territorial governor of Montana, is a real pioneer of the Northwest, and enjoys the peculiar esteem and affection of the people of Dillon and Southwestern Montana, where he has made his home for forty years. Mr. White is one of the oldest bankers of Montana, having for thirty-five years been the active head of the First National Bank of Dillon, which he has made one of the largest and strongest banks in the entire state.

He was born at Fairhaven, Massachusetts, December 3, 1838, and is a direct descendant of the father of Peregrine White, the first white child born at Summit, Massachusetts, after the Pilgrims landed there in 1620. Governor White's grandfather, William White, was born in Southern Massachusetts, and is buried at Long Plain, Massachusetts. He lived in his native state and in Rhode Island, and founded the first cotton mill at Providence. Benjamin White, father of Governor White, became interested in his father's cotton mill in Rhode Island, and was one of the leaders in the textile industry for many years. He died in Massachusetts when about ninety years of age. He married Caroline Stockbridge, who died in Massachusetts at the age of eighty-five. They had two sons: George M., a retired manufacturer at New Bedford, Massachusetts, and Benjamin Franklin.

Benjamin Franklin White lived in his native community until he was nineteen years of age, acquiring his education in the public schools and is a graduate of the Pierce Academy at Middleborough, Massachusetts. He began earning money as a boy, and a sum of thirteen dollars he earned hauling logs for an uncle he used to purchase a watch. He was not content to enjoy the prosperity and comfort of a well ordered home in New England. Urged on by some of the spirit of his Pilgrim ancestors he went to sea, sailed to Australia and China, and in 1858 came around the Horn to San Francisco. He was in California until 1866, engaged in mining and ranching. From 1866 to 1879 he lived in Oneida County, Idaho, where he became extensively interested in the salt business. He also served as county clerk and recorder of that county.

With the building of the Utah Northern Railroad, now the Oregon Short Line, into Montana, Mr. White followed the progress of that road as freight forwarder, and developed the largest wagon freight service in the West, using 2,000 wagons for the reshipment of goods all over Montana from the terminus of the railroad. When the road reached Dillon in the fall of 1880 Governor White had found his permanent home and business location. Dillon was the headquarters of his great freighting business for many years. He also had a large commissary establishment, and in 1881 opened a private bank as an accessory to his freighting and other business. In 1884 the bank was incorporated as the First National Bank, and to the upbuilding of that institution Mr. White has given his primary attention ever since. The First National Bank of Dillon is housed in a substantial brick building on North Montana Street, and has a capital of $200,000, surplus and profits of $200,000, while its deposits in 1919 aggregated $4,000,000. By its resources and the personnel of its management it easily takes first rank among the large banking houses of the Northwest. With Mr. White as president is associated E. J. Bowman of Anaconda as vice president, and J. H. Gilbert, cashier.

For a man immersed in practical business affairs, Mr. White has an unusually long record of public service. He was a member of the Territorial Legislature in 1882 and in 1889 was appointed by President Harrison as territorial governor. He remained in that office until after the state had been admitted and until the first governor was installed. He was again in the Legislature and speaker of the House of Representatives from 1902 to 1904, and was a member of the State Senate from 1904 to 1908. Governor White was commissioner for Montana at the World's Fair at Chicago in 1893 and at the Louisiana Exposition at St. Louis in 1904. For a quarter of a century almost continuously he served as mayor of Dillon, beginning with the incorporation of the city. He has also served on the Beaverhead County High School Board and the City School Board, has been president of the Dillon Commercial Club, and has made every interest of his home city his own.

Mr. White is a member of the Montana and American Bankers' Association and is president of the White Investment Company, which he established as a family corporation to manage a large amount of property, including dwellings, business and general real estate at Dillon. Governor White has one of the substantial and beautiful private homes of Dillon, at the corner of Orr and Idaho streets.

In February, 1879, in Oneida County, Idaho, he married Miss Elizabeth Davis, daughter of Emrys and Margaret Davis. They are the parents of four children: Carolyn, born in 1881, a graduate of Mill College at Oakland, California, and living at home with her parents; Emrys, born in 1883, finished his education in Shattuck Military Academy at Faribault, Minnesota, and is owner of an orange grove at Santa Ana, California; Ralph, who also attended Shattuck Academy, had an orange grove at Redlands, California, and died there in August, 1918, at the age of twenty-six; Margaret W., the youngest, is a graduate of Smith College at Northampton, Massachusetts.

CHARLES C. ESGAR is sheriff of Gallatin County. He came to Montana thirty years ago and for many years was busily engaged in homesteading and ranching. For the past ten years his energies have been taken up by public duties and responsibilities.

Mr. Esgar was born in Tioga County, Pennsylvania, December 15, 1868. His grandfather, Samuel Esgar, was a native of Wales, came to America with his family about 1844, lived in several states and died near Chicago, Illinois. Robert Esgar, father of Sheriff Esgar, was born in Wales in 1842 and was an infant when brought to this country. He was reared in Pennsylvania, and was married in Tioga County, that state. At Blossburg, Tioga County, he served for a number of years as chief of police. Coming to Montana in 1888, he homesteaded a quarter section in the Bridger Canyon, proved up the homestead and handled cattle and other stock over leased lands and the public domain, and eventually owned a farm of 420 acres. He died at Bridger Canyon, near Bozeman, in January, 1898. He was a republican, and though reared a Methodist became affiliated with the Latter Day Saints Church. He was a member of the Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias. Robert Esgar married Eliza Hanwell, who was born in Tioga County, Pennsylvania, in 1844, and is now living at Bozeman. She was the mother of seven children: S. G., a rancher in Gallatin County; Mary Louisa, who died in Gallatin County in 1900, the wife of John Dawes, a retired rancher of that county; Charles C.; Sadie, wife of John Raby, a farmer at Bridger Canyon; Robert M., a Bozeman merchant; John D., who lives on a farm in Park County; and Frank H., a farmer and merchant at Kansas City, Missouri.

For three years he worked as a miner at Chestnut, and then took up a homestead of 160 acres in Bridger Canyon. He sold this homestead, and afterward owned and occupied and sold a number of ranches, and continued active as a productive factor in Montana agriculture until 1909.

For three years beginning in 1909 Mr. Esgar served as deputy sheriff. For five years he was deputy state game warden, and in 1918 was elected sheriff of Gallatin County, beginning his two year term on January 6, 1919. His official residence is the county jail, and he also owns a dwelling on West Lamme Street. Politically Mr. Esgar is a democrat. He is affiliated with Bozeman Lodge No. 463 of the Elks, and Pythagoras Lodge No. 2, Knights of Pythias.

In October, 1895, at Bridger Canyon, Gallatin County, he married Miss Ida Yadon, daughter of J. V. and Nancy (Lay) Yadon, residents of Bozeman. Mrs. Esgar died at Bozeman in January, 1913. She was the mother of two children: Chloe May, a graduate of the eighth grade public schools and attending Lamoni, Iowa, College and now at home; and Charles R., a student in the grammar schools at Bozeman. In January, 1915, at Spokane, Washington, Sheriff Esgar married Miss Leona E. Martin. She was born in Iowa.

He finally owned 900 acres and spent the rest of his life as a rancher and died while visiting his son, Doctor Dawes, at Billings on February 15, 1906. He served a number of years as justice of the peace in Fergus County, was a democrat, a very active member of the Baptist Church and was affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America. John A. J. Harvey A. Corbin. The dignity of farming and the profits accruing from this calling are now receiving universal recognition, but prior to the period which is making such unprecedented demands upon those engaged in raising food for the world there were a number who devoted their abilities to tilling the soil, and brought up their children to the same calling. Harvey A. Corbin, of Miles City, owner of one of the best ranches in the Tongue River District of Custer County, comes of a long line of agriculturists, whose names are inscribed first as farmers of Maine and later of New York State. The grandfather of Harvey A. Corbin, born on a farm in Maine, left that state for Clinton County, New York, where he was engaged in farming all of his life, and there his son, Asa Corbin, father of Harvey A. Corbin, was born and died, passing away in 1869, at the age of forty-nine years. Asa Corbin was married to Elizabeth Finney, who died at the home of her son Harvey A. Corbin in 1905, being then aged seventy-five years. Mr. Corbin has one sister, Mary, who is the wife of James Fiddes, of San Francisco, California, they being the only children of Asa Corbin and his wife.

Harvey A. Corbin was born on a farm in Clinton County, New York, not far from Plattsburg, November 2, 1860, and he was reared at Moore's Junction of that same state. A very active lad, the confinement of the schoolroom irked him, and when he had completed the courses included in a common school education he severed his connection with educational institutions and sought a place in the larger school of experience. Until he left New York his means of subsistence were found in farm work, and this early training, which was hard and thorough, fitted him, as nothing else could have done, for his future expansion into a ranchman of many acres and large and varied interests.

Always ambitious, the restless spirit of this energetic young man could not be content with the eventless routine of a New York State farm, and in 1883 he struck out westward, arriving in Custer County, Montana, in June of that year. Help was scarce, and an experienced farm worker did not lack for employment, although the wages of those days only ranged from $30 to $40 per month, and the work was hard and the hours long. With the cheerful optimism of youth Mr. Corbin accepted the hardships of this period as just so much more experience, and kept his eyes open for opportunities, finding them during the subsequent three years, so that he was able to take a homestead on the Tongue River, ten miles south of Miles City. On this land he erected a crude shelter of logs, using dirt for both the floor and roof, and into it he moved his scanty possessions and had his first home of his own. He had invested in several horses and used them to break the soil and put in corn and potatoes, which crops have always yielded abundantly, and which he still raises. Making his money earn more for him, Mr. Corbin was soon able to acquire a few cows and a calf or two, and from this small beginning has developed his present immense cattle industry. When he first went into the stock business, however, the feeding of cattle and horses was not much of a problem because the land was then all unfenced and with the exception of a milch cow or saddle horse the stock could forage, even during the winter. The little log shack in time was succeeded by the present comfortable ranch house, and barn after barn was built to house the increasing head of stock. All these improvements, together with many others, Mr. Corbin has made and is rewarded by now having one of the best improved and valuable ranch properties in Custer County or along the Tongue and Powder Rivers trail. It was perhaps a dozen years before Mr. Corbin began buying railroad land on the long-time payment plan, but when he commenced so doing, continued to add to his acreage in this manner until there are now about 900 acres of deeded land entered upon the tax rolls to his credit. A portion of his ranch is under the Tongue River Irrigation Canal, which provides him with alfalfa meadow, from which an average of 4½ tons of hay are sure to be mowed annually. Experiments have taught Mr. Corbin that for his purposes the Shorthorn cattle and Shire horses are the best, and he is breeding them upon a large scale. He is one of the commissioners of the Tongue River Irrigation Canal, and has carried on his part in local politics as a layman, rendering efficient service when required as a member of the Election Board, or in a similar capacity. In national matters he votes with the democratic party.

In July, 1899, Mr. Corbin was united in marriage with Miss Carrie Card, a daughter of Joseph Card, an early settler of Weld County, Colorado, where Mrs. Corbin was born, but she was reared chiefly in Deadwood, South Dakota. Her parents had eleven children, of whom the survivors, in addition to herself are: Mrs. Annie Williams, of Miles City, Montana; Millie, who is the wife of John Christtenson, of St. Paul, Minnesota; Will, who is a resident of Central City, South Dakota; Joseph, who is a resident of Upton, Wyoming; and Warren, who is a resident of Spearfish, South Dakota. Mrs. Corbin is the next to the youngest of these surviving children, and was born June 20, 1874. Mr. and Mrs. Corbin have no children.

THOMAS CONNOLLY. It is a generally accepted fact that some of the most successful men of this country are those who come here from the Emerald Isle, and of them Montana has its share. Thomas Connolly, one of the enterprising ranchmen of Hill County, owns and operates about three sections of land at Cottonwood, twenty-five miles northwest of Havre, and he is proud of the fact that he was born in County Roscommon, Ireland. His birth occurred on March 25, 1881, and he has acquired all he now owns since 1901. His father, Thomas Connolly, was born in County Roscommon, in 1837, and his mother, Elizabeth (Quigley) Connolly, is a native of the same county. Both survive and live in County Roscommon, where the father has been a farmer all of his mature years. He and his wife had eleven children born to them, of whom three died in infancy, and four sons and four daughters lived to maturity, Thomas Connolly being the seventh in order of birth.

Until he was eighteen years of age Thomas Connolly remained on his father's farm and attended the public schools. On April 23, 1899, he took passage on a steamer for New York City, his ticket being a through one to Great Falls, Montana, where he joined an uncle, John C. Quigley, a sheepman, with a ranch fifteen miles west of Choteau in Teton County, and there Thomas Connolly remained about a year. In 1901 he and his brother Patrick formed a partnership and continued together until the latter's death in 1915. They operated in sheep until 1912, and then reduced their flocks to fifty head and branched out into cattle and horse raising. In 1918 Mr. Connolly sold the greater number of his cattle and is now specializing on breeding Percheron horses. About 500 acres of his ranch are devoted to wheat and other small grain, and he is very successful in his farming. In 1911 Mr. Connolly was appointed postmaster of Cottonwood, Hill County, and in connection with the office conducted a general store, housing both in a building he erected for that purpose in 1911. After three years he leased his business so as to give all of his time to farming and horse breeding. Mr. Connolly was honored by Governor Samuel Stewart who appointed him a member of the Grain Grading Inspection and Warehouse Commission in April, 1919, and for the past eight years he has been a member of the School Board of his district. In politics he is a strong republican. His fraternal connections are with Havre Lodge No. 1201, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On August 13, 1914, Mr. Connolly was united in marriage with Ethel Weir, born at Grafton, North Dakota, a daughter of John and Susan (Fennell) Weir, both of whom were born in Ontario, Canada. They had three children, but Mrs. Connolly is the only one now living. Mr. Weir is deceased, but his widow survives him. Mr. and Mrs. Connolly have one daughter. The case of Mr. Connolly is a rather remarkable one in that he has been able to attain to such prosperity in so short a period and all through his own exertions. It is not difficult for a young man to achieve success when he is backed by large property interests and influential friends, but it is a different matter for him to reach his goal only through his personal acumen, far-sightedness and industry.

WILLIAM B. CALHOUN. A man of naturally sound judgment and shrewd perception, characteristic of the Scotch race of which William B. Calhoun, druggist of Clyde Park, is a descendant, he has so ordered his career as to be eminently eligible to representation in a work of this kind. He has risen through his strictly moral habits, his attention to business and his desire to deal fairly, promptly and honestly with his fellow men, and today his name stands high in all business circles with which he has come into relationship.

William Baron Calhoun was born at Sparta, Wisconsin, on the 25th day of January, 1870, and is a son of William A. and Emogene (Holmes) Calhoun. The Calhoun family of which he is a lineal descendant immigrated to this country from Scotland, where the name was spelled Kalhoun. They located in Massachusetts during the days of the colonies, and there the subject's paternal grandfather, William Baron Calhoun, was born, lived and died, his last home being at Springfield. William A. Calhoun was born at Springfield and his death occurred at Wilmar, Minnesota, in 1878. He was reared in Springfield and sometime after his marriage he moved to Sparta, Wisconsin. A short time later he located in Wilmar, Minnesota, where he became the proprietor of a hotel and where he spent the remainder of his days. He was a republican in politics and at one time served as sheriff of Kandiyohi County, Minnesota. He was a faithful member of the Episcopal Church. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted in a Massachusetts regiment of volunteer infantry, with which he served through the war. At Spottsylvania Courthouse he was severely wounded, a bullet plowing through his left arm from elbow to wrist. He married Emogene Holmes, who was born at Bradford, Pennsylvania, and whose death occurred at Sparta, Wisconsin, in 1898. They became the parents of three children, namely: Mary Margaret, who remains unmarried, is principal of a ward school at Billings, Montana; William B.; and Bertha Belle, unmarried, has charge of the silks and dress goods department of Yegen Brothers store at Billings.

William B. Calhoun received his general education in the public schools of Sparta, Wisconsin, graduating from the high school there in the spring of 1890. He then took a course in pharmacy in the University of Wisconsin, at Madison, after which he was employed for eight months in a drug store at Antigo, Wisconsin. In 1892 Mr. Calhoun went to Billings, Montana, and was employed in a drug store there until the outbreak of the Spanish-American war in 1898. In May of that year he enlisted in the volunteer cavalry, known as the Montana Rough Riders. The command was sent to Camp George A. Thomas at Chickamauga Park, where Mr. Calhoun served as chief steward in the regimental hospital. He was mustered out of the service in September, 1898, and at once returned to Billings, spending the next year in a drug store. During the following four years he served as deputy assessor of Yellowstone County, under Assessor A. P. Smith, and at the expiration of his official term he went to Bridger, Montana, where he entered the employ of the Glidden Mercantile Company, with whom he remained six years. The following year he spent at Salt Lake City, and in 1911 he came to Clyde Park and bought the drug store owned by F. A. Scheuber. This is the pioneer drug store at Clyde Park and has always enjoyed its full share of public patronage in that line. Mr. Calhoun is a registered pharmacist in both Montana and Minnesota and is an expert prescription druggist. By a course of right dealing he has gained not only a large clientele, but also a host of friends, who esteem him for his personal qualities of character.

Politically Mr. Calhoun is a republican. Fraternally he is a member of Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Clyde Park Lodge No. 64, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is a past noble grand, and Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

In 1908, at Livingston, Mr. Calhoun was married to Cathryn Stroup, who was born at Mount Clements, Michigan, and they are the parents of one child, Harriet Emogene, born January 12, 1915.

FRED F. WILLSON is a widely known Montana architect. In architecture "many are called but few are chosen," in other words, few have the training, the artistic sense, the skill and technique to make them worthy of the word by which they describe their vocation. The practical work of Mr. Willson as an architect may be found in many cities of Montana and in some of the leading state institutions.

He is the only son of the late Gen. Lester S. Willson, who died at Bozeman, January 26, 1919. General Willson was born at Canton, St. Lawrence County, New York, June 16, 1839, son of Ambrose and Julia A. (Hill) Willson and of old English ancestry. He was educated in the public schools and academy at Canton, and left the store of an uncle to enter Company A of the Sixtieth New York Infantry in August, 1861. He was made sergeant in September, second lieutenant in October, 1862, soon afterward was promoted to first lieutenant and adjutant, and declined a commission as captain. However, in August, 1864, he was made a captain, in October of the same year lieutenant colonel, and in May, 1865, was promoted to colonel, though he never served as such. His rank as brevet colonel and brevet brigadier general was made to date from March 13, 1865. He was given those honors on the recommendation of Generals Hooker and Slocum, "for gallant and meritorious service under General Sherman at Atlanta." He saw some of the hardest service of the war, being in the Virginia campaigns of 1861-62, at Antietam, Chancellorsville, where he was severely wounded, and his wound kept him out of the Gettysburg campaign. From the fall of 1863 he was under General Hooker in the campaigns marked by the great battles of Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. It was through his personal influence that his regiment veteranized and re-enlisted in November, 1863. It is said that the Sixtieth New York was the second regiment of the Union army to take this step. He and his command were in all the battles of Sherman's campaign from Chattanooga to Atlanta, and thence on the historic march to the sea and up through the Carolinas. The Sixtieth New York was one of the first two regiments to enter the City of Atlanta and the Sixtieth was declared by competent authority to be the best regiment in the Union army. General Willson enjoyed the confidence and personal association with such great military figures as Sherman, Hooker, Slocum, Gary, Greene.

After the war he was appointed assistant quartermaster general of the State of New York, with the rank of colonel. This office had the adjustment of many business matters with the railroads pertaining to the transportation of troops, supplies and the settlement of accounts between the state and federal government. General Wilson retired from that responsibility in March, 1867, and from that date until his death his name and career were identified with Montana, where he was prominent in mining, merchandising, banking and where from 1883 to 1886 he served as quartermaster general of the territory with the rank of brigadier general. Even with this casual review of his career it is evident that he was one of the outstanding figures in the territorial and early state history of Montana. He did much to build up and maintain the influence and prestige of the republican party in Montana, and was a member of the Territorial Legislature in 1868-69. He was a charter member of the William English Post of the Grand Army, had filled most of its offices and was at one time department commander of Montana and was a member of New York Commandery of the Loyal Legion. He was also a Mason, being affiliated with the lodge at Bozeman.

March 2, 1869, General Willson married at Albany, New York, Miss Emma D. Weeks, a native of Vermont. She is still living at Bozeman. They were the parents of three children, Fred F. being the only survivor.

Fred F. Willson was born at Bozeman, November 11, 1877. He attended public schools at his native town, spent four years in the Bozeman Academy, and completed his junior year in the Montana State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts. He completed his college work in Columbia University at New York City, graduating Bachelor of Science in Architecture with the class of 1902. While at Columbia he was a member of the Delta Upsilon fraternity. He had set his mind upon architecture as his calling when a youth, and has never deviated from a stanch and loyal devotion to the art and profession. After leaving university he returned to Helena and spent two years with C. S. Haire, a prominent architect there. His two years of practical work at Helena were then supplemented by two years abroad. His headquarters were in Paris, where he was a student with a graduate of the Ecole de Beaux Arts, but at the same time carried on extensive travels and observation through England, France, Germany, Holland, Belgium, Italy and Spain. While his work as an architect has been noted for originality of design, that originality has always been tempered by the broad and thorough knowledge he has of architecture as exemplified in the best creations of all the centuries and in the greatest centers of art in the civilized world. On returning to America in 1906 he remained for some time in New York City following his profession. He has since established an associate relationship with a prominent firm of New York architects comprised of Theodore C. Visscher and James Burley. Mr. Willson returned to Bozeman in April, 1906, and for the following four years had charge of Link and Haire's office at Butte. Since then he has practiced his profession with offices in Bozeman. He has a suite of offices and a complete organization in the Commercial National Bank Building. Mr. Willson is responsible for the architectural development of the Orphans' Home Building at Twin Bridges; the Chemical Building on the campus of the state college, and designed the Commercial National Bank Building at Bozeman and the Emerson School. The Emerson School at Bozeman is a building which has attracted the attention and admiration of educational bodies all over the United States. He has recently begun work on the engineering building for the Montana State College, and has designed and built schools, apartment houses and business structures at Dillon, Anaconda, Columbus, Manhattan and in many other towns and cities of the state. Mr. Willson owns one of the most beautiful homes of Bozeman, at 509 Tracy Avenue. He designed and built this residence in 1914. Since his father's death he and his mother have been administrators of the estate. He individually owns 640 acres in the Powder River country, and is president of the Bozeman Investment Company and a director and stockholder of the Willson Company, a business which was established by his father more than half a century ago.

Mr. Willson is a present member of the city council of Bozeman. Politically he is a republican. He is a member of the Historical Library Board of Helena, a member of the State Architectural Society, which he served two terms as president and is now a director, is affiliated with the Presbyterian Church, with Bozeman Lodge No. 18, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Bozeman Lodge No. 463, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Silver Bow Club of Butte and the Chamber of Commerce at Bozeman. He is also a member of the Columbia University Alumni Association and the New York Commandery of the Loyal Legion.

October 15, 1913, near Bozeman, he married Miss Helen Fisher, daughter of E. H. and Clara (McCabe) Fisher, residents of Bozeman, her father being president of the Owenshouse Company. Mrs. Willson is a graduate of the Gallatin County High School and the Montana State College. They have one son, Lester S., II, born March 3, 1916.

H. F. Brink. Upon the roll of representative citizens and prominent and influential business men of Wilsall consistently appears the name of H. F. Brink, the able president of the First National Bank. He is one of those sturdy spirits who has contributed largely to the material welfare of the locality in which he resides. During his residence in this locality he has won his way into the affections of the people, for he possesses those sterling qualities of character which commend themselves to persons of intelligence and the highest morality.

The Brink family is of sturdy old Holland stock, whence the subject's progenitors came to New York State in colonial days and thereafter took a leading part in the stirring events of those historic times. His paternal grandfather, Henry W. Brink, was born in New York State in 1804. He became one of the pioneer settlers of Illinois, becoming a farmer and also owning a hotel at Woodstock, where his death occurred in 1892. He married Hannah French, who was born in New York State in 1812 and who died at Woodstock in 1896. Among their children was the subject's father, M. D. Brink, who was born in New York State in 1832. At the age of eleven years he accompanied the family on their migration to Illinois and was reared in McHenry County until twenty years of age. In 1852, lured by the wonderful stories of the great Eldorado of the West, he went to California and spent three years in prospecting, in which he was fairly successful. He then returned to McHenry County, but shortly thereafter moved to Northeastern Iowa, and to Osage County, that state, in 1865. He was a successful brick manufacturer practically all his life. In 1872 he located in Nashua, Iowa, where he operated a brickyard and farmed until his retirement from active business pursuits, about twenty years prior to his death, which occurred at Independence, Iowa, on October 21, 1917. His real estate is now owned by the subject's brother, C. G. Brink, who cared for his father during the last twenty years of his life. M. D. Brink was a republican in politics and a man of strong character, who exerted a beneficent influence on all with whom he came in contact. He married Helen Aurand, who was born in New York State in 1837 and who now resides at Park Rapids, Minnesota. They became the parents of the following children: Lee A., who is a minister of the Congregational Church at Maize, Kansas; Minnie, who is the wife of Frank Campbell, a farmer at Park Rapids, Minnesota; H. F., whose name forms the caption to this review; C. G., who is operating the homestead farm at Nashua, Iowa; Loutie M., the wife of Oscar Armagost, a contractor and builder at Topeka, Kansas; Nellie, the wife of Milo Butler, a farmer at Windham, Ohio.

H. F. Brink was born at Osage, Iowa, on May 16, 1868. He was educated in the schools of Chickasaw County and remained at home until seventeen years of age. He then learned the trade of a flour miller at Nashua, to which he applied himself until twenty-three years of age, when he engaged in farming for about a year. He then bought a homestead at Park Rapids, Minnesota, to which he devoted his attention for six years, or until 1898, when he came to Norris, Montana, and for four months was employed as a clerk in a store. During the following two years he was engaged in the livery business, but sold that business and for eleven years was engaged in the lumber and coal business. Disposing of that business, he then went to Columbus, Montana, and bought a farm on the Stillwater River, which he operated about 1½ years. In 1912 he came to Wilsall and established the pioneer hardware and implement business here, which he has continued ever since, this now being the leading business of the kind in this section of the country. He has been financially successful in his business operations and owns, besides his store building, a splendid modern residence, a drug store and real estate in Wilsall. He is also president of the First National Bank of Wilsall, one of the strong and influential financial institutions of this county, and much of the success of which is due to the sound judgment and wise policy of its president.

Politically Mr. Brink has been aligned with the republican party and has served his community as justice of the peace. His religious affiliation is with the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is a member of Wilsall Lodge No. 103, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is treasurer, and of Jeffers (Montana) Lodge, Modern Woodmen of America.

On July 16, 1890, at Verndale, Minnesota, Mr. Brink was married to Lucy Wilson, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Wilson, both of whom are deceased. The father had been a farmer in Dane County, Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Brink are the parents of the following children: Grace, the wife of Robert W. Lucas, a real estate dealer and stockman at Wilsall; Lee R., who is engaged in business with his father at Wilsall. Mr. Brink has given consistent support to every measure looking to the advancement of the best interests of his community, and to a large measure the prosperity of the town is due to his influence.

R. N. Stryker. The gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph is deemed eminently worthy of representation along with the best and most industrious citizens of the locality in which he resides, owing to the fact that he belongs to the energetic and enterprising class that has contributed to the later-day success of the favored section of the great treasure state honored by his citizenship. He enjoys distinctive prestige in business circles, his practical intelligence, mature judgment and sound business sense winning for him the confidence and good will of all with whom he has come in contact.

Like several others of the best known citizens of Southern Montana, Mr. Stryker is descended from Holland stock, his progenitors having come to America in the days of Peter Stuyvesant and locating in New Jersey. The subject's paternal grandfather, William Stryker, was born in 1813 in New Jersey, but in an early day removed to Illinois, where he was numbered among the pioneer farmers. His death occurred at Jerseyville, Illinois, in 1883. He married Phoebe Davis, a native of New Jersey and who also died at Jerseyville, Illinois.

J. V. Stryker, father of the subject of this sketch, was born in 1851 at Whitehall, Illinois, and died at Pawnee City, Nebraska, in 1909. He was reared at Whitehall, but subsequently removed to Springfield, that state, where he became a breeder and trainer of trotting horses, in which vocation he attained a national reputation, some of the speediest horses on American race tracks having come from his stables. In 1897 he moved to Pawnee City, Nebraska, where he retired from business and spent his last days. He was favorably known as a man of fine attainments in other lines than his special calling and enjoyed the acquaintance of many of the leading men of the country. He was a democrat in politics and was appointed ambassador to England, but declined the appointment. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church. He married Gretta Nevius, who was born in 1859, in Galesburg, Illinois, and who now resides at Wilsall. Their children are as follows: Frank, who is in the employ of the Northwestern Railway at Council Bluffs, Iowa; R. N., the immediate subject of this sketch; Fred, who is the owner of a ranch at Wilsall; Charles, of Barnhamville, Virginia, enlisted in the United States army in 1918 and was mustered out in 1919; James, who is engaged in railroad construction work at Denver, Colorado; Barlett, whose home is in San Francisco, is in the United States aviation service.

R. N. Stryker was born at Jerseyville, Illinois, on December 27, 1881, and received his education in the public schools of Springfield, Illinois, and the high school at Pawnee City, Nebraska, where he was graduated in 1903. He then studied engineering one year in the University of Nebraska, at Lincoln. In 1904 Mr. Stryker came to Montana and in 1906 filed on a homestead at Meyersburg, now Wilsall. He still owns that land and altogether has 360 acres, with fine water rights, the whole comprising one of the best equipped stock ranches in Southern Montana. The fine residence, modern barns and convenient outhouses all comprise a plant of which the owner is justifiably proud. In the spring of 1919 Mr. Stryker moved into Wilsall in order to take up the duties of assistant cashier of the First National Bank, which had just been organized and which already has gained an excellent reputation as a strong and influential financial institution. The bank is capitalized at $25,000, with a surplus of $5,000, and the official personnel is as follows: President, H. F. Brink; vice president, John F. Sinclair; second vice president, Dr. L. R. Carson; cashier, O. E. Sahr; assistant cashier, R. N. Stryker. Mr. Stryker is a republican in politics.

In 1912, at Clyde Park, Montana, Mr. Stryker was married to Ethel Fellows, daughter of Martin and Almeda (Stillwell) Fellows, both of whom are deceased. Mrs. Stryker is a lady of splendid culture, having attended the State Normal School at St. Cloud, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Stryker have two children, Harriet, born January 24. 1913, and Almeda, born June 1, 1916. Mr. Stryker has been successful in his business enterprises and today no one here enjoys a larger circle of warm friends and acquaintances, who esteem him because of his sterling qualities of character and his business ability.

V. F. Guinzy. In such men as V. F. Guinzy, a successful business man and rancher of Wilsall, there is peculiar satisfaction in offering their life histories—justification for works of this character —not that their lives have been such as to gain them particularly wide notoriety or the admiring plaudits of men, but that they have been true to the trusts reposed in them and have shown such attributes of character as entitle them to the regards of all.

V. F. Guinzy was born in Peoria, Illinois, on February 21, 1883, and is a son of A. and Jennie (Jordan) Guinzy. The father was born in Italy in 1841, and came to the United States in 1874, settling at Yates City, Fulton County, Illinois, where he followed the vocation of a coal miner. In 1880 he went to St. David, Illinois, where he also mined, but about ten years later he located in Collinsville, Illinois, and engaged in the dry goods business, to which he gave his attention until 1907, when he retired and is now living at Wood River, Illinois. He is a democrat in politics. Before coming to America he was in the military service of his country and took part in the Abbysinian war under General Garibaldi. Mr. Guinzy married Jennie Jordan, who was born in 1860 in Yates City, Illinois, and whose death occurred at St. David, Illinois, in 1887. To this union were born the following children: Joseph, who is a coal miner at Collinsville, Illinois; V. F., the immediate subject of this review; Edward, who is also a coal miner at Collinsville.

V. F. Guinzy received a good elementary education in the public schools of Collinsville, Illinois, and having decided to apply himself to the legal profession he entered the Missouri College of Law at St. Louis, where he was graduated in 1902, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. In that same year he was admitted to the bar, with license to practice in either Missouri or Illinois. He became a member of the law firm of Grund, Guinzy & McNeely in St. Louis, with which he was associated for three years. He then went to Lead, in the Black Hills of South Dakota, where for three years he was connected with the celebrated Homestake Mining Company, one of the greatest and most successful mining companies in the West. Severing his connection with that company, he returned to Collinsville, Illinois, and engaged in the real estate business until 1915, when he came to Wilsall and entered the employ of the Northern Pacific Railway Company. In 1916 Mr. Guinzy became manager of the Farmers Exchange, a co-operative company at Wilsall, with which he is still associated. He occupies the responsible positions of secretary, treasurer and general manager of the concern and has so conducted its affairs as to win the approbation of all concerned in the enterprise. The office and elevator are situated along the Northern Pacific Railroad tracks, and through this elevator is shipped an enormous quantity of grain from the farmers of Park County. The officers of the company, besides Mr. Guinzy, are George M. Parker, president, and W. E. Cunning, vice president. The Farmers Exchange was organized in 1916 and has already proven a very successful and popular enterprise in the interests of the farmers of the community. Much of the popularity and success of the Exchange is directly due to the indefatigable efforts and hustling qualities of the manager, who has proved himself the "right man in the right place."

Mr. Guinzy has other interests, being a stockholder in the Collinsville Building and Loan Association and in the United States Building and Loan Association of Butte, Montana. He owns a comfortable and modern residence adjoining Wilsall, including ten acres of land, which he is successfully utilizing as a chicken farm. He also has a ranch of 160 acres of irrigated land about one-half mile east of Wilsall, which he is developing into a splendid property.

Politically Mr. Guinzy is a democrat and takes a live interest in the trend of public affairs, though not a seeker after public office. Fraternally he is a member of East St. Louis Lodge No. 664, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Wilsall Lodge No. 103, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Collinsville Lodge, Loyal Order of Moose, and to the Societa Dogali.

In 1904, at St. Louis, Missouri, Mr. Guinzy married Caroline Baima, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Baima, of Collinsville, Illinois, where Mr. Baima is a coal miner. To Mr. and Mrs. Guinzy have been born two children, Cleda, born February 14, 1905, and Olivia, born October 31, 1907.

Plain and unassuming in manner, Mr. Guinzy has so ordered his life that today he occupies an enviable position in the community with which he has cast his lot and to the general progress of which he is contributing in a very definite way.

HUGH ALLAN MACMILLAN, M. D. A physician and surgeon whose services have been greatly appreciated in Dillon since he began practice there six or seven years ago, Doctor MacMillan has never neglected an opportunity to improve his abilities and increase his experience. By hard work he paid his expenses through medical college and after graduating took several special courses both in this country and abroad.

As his name indicates, he is of Scotch ancestry and was born in Inverness County, Nova Scotia, January 25, 1882. His grandfather, Angus Laughlin MacMillan, was a native of Inverness, Scotland, born in 1806, married a Scotch girl, Ann MacDonald, and became one of the pioneer settlers of Lake Ainslie in County Inverness, Nova Scotia. He lived on a farm there and died in 1884. Many of his descendants are still found in that typically Scotch community. His son, Neil MacMillan, father of Doctor MacMillan, was born in the same county of Nova Scotia in October, 1838, and spent all his life there, for many years being a successful merchant. He died in May, 1913. He was a conservative in politics and was a brother of Rev. Hugh MacMillan of Elmsdale, Nova Scotia, a Presbyterian clergyman and long one of the most prominent Liberals in Canadian politics. Neil MacMillan was a member of the city council for twenty-four years and never knew a defeat in any political campaign. Many of the MacMillans have become prominent in professions. Neil MacMillan was probably the most prominent member and active supporter of the Presbyterian Church in his community. He was also an Orangeman, and at one time he was in the Canadian forces which put down a rebellion. The Canadian government did not formally recognize his services until in 1914, a year after his death, when his widow received a $100 bonus for the military duty he performed. Neil MacMillan married Miss Christine MacDougall, who was born at Lake Ainslie in 1843 and is still living there. Her father, Hector MacDougall, was a native of Scotland and a pioneer farmer in Inverness County of Nova Scotia. He married Ann MacLain, who was born in Scotland in 1803, and she died at Lake Ainslie in 1896, at the age of ninety-three. Neil MacMillan and wife had the following children: Annie B., wife of Jack MacDougall, a plasterer and contractor at Boston, Massachusetts; Elizabeth, who died at the age of twenty-one; Mae C., living at Boston, widow of Dan MacMillan, who was a school teacher; Angus L., a carpenter and builder at Butte, Montana; Jennie M., at home with her mother; Doctor MacMillan; and four other children that died in infancy.

Doctor MacMillan attended the public schools of Lake Ainslie and in 1896 graduated from the Whycocomagh Academy. Following that for several years he was employed in different vocations in Boston and in 1901 came out to Butte, Montana. For two years he worked for Dr. O. Y. Warren at Warren Springs, and then returned to Butte and spent a year and a half in the carpenter shop of the Rarus mine. While he was earning a living by different occupations, he had for several years definitely made up his mind to become a physician and all the money he could save was set aside to complete his education. For several summers until 1909 he worked for the Butte Street Railway. He acquired his medical education during the regular winter sessions of the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, Maryland, and graduated with his M. D. degree on June 3, 1910. While at Baltimore he was a member of the Delta Delta Chapter of the Phi Chi college fraternity. Doctor MacMillan attended the New York Post Graduate School in 1914-15, and was awarded a special diploma in surgery. He also has a special degree in diseases of the chest as a result of post-graduate work done at the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore. In 1919 Doctor MacMillan went abroad and took special courses in the University of Edinburgh.

He began practice in 1910 at Helena with Dr. George H. Barber and Doctor Tracy. While there he was contract physician and surgeon for the Holter & Hauser Lake Dams Company until that piece of construction was completed. In 1912 he removed to Elk Horn, Jefferson County, and in January, 1913, began his career at Dillon, where he enjoys a large general medical and surgical practice. He was absent from his practice for about a year during the late war. January 21, 1918, he was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps and was assigned to special duty as a surgeon at Little Rock, Arkansas, in General Hospital No. 33. He was mustered out January 11, 1919. He was recommended for promotion shortly after joining the service, and received his commission as captain in the Reserve Corps shortly after receiving his discharge from active service. Doctor MacMillan served as county physician in 1915 and is a member of the Silver Bow, Montana State and American Medical associations. His offices are in the Telephone Building at Dillon.

Doctor MacMillan is a member of the Presbyterian Church, in which faith he was reared, is affiliated with the Arcanna Lodge No. 110, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Baltimore, is a member of Scottish Rite Consistory No. 2 at Butte and Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine of the same city. He is also a member of Virginia City Lodge No. 390 of the Elks.

May 5, 1909, at Newark, New Jersey, Doctor MacMillan married Miss Ellen Morgan Bowling, daughter of E. Gill and Nan (Hawkins) Bowling. They have one son, Hugh Allan, Jr., born September 28, 1912. Mrs. MacMillan is member of a very prominent family of Maryland. Her father was a Maryland business man and a son of Colonel Bowling, one of the prominent men of the state in his time. His estate was divided among fourteen children, E. Gill Bowling being the only son. Mrs. MacMillan's mother is still living at Cumberland, Maryland. Her father, Doctor Hawkins, was one of the first graduates of the University of Maryland, and lived on a grant of land in Charles County at La Plata which had been acquired by the family direct from the Crown.

HUGH D. PAGE. Sound education strengthens the character and makes possible successful operation along varied lines and constructive achievement which will serve as an inspiration for activities of the best sort. Hugh D. Page, now representing one of the leading nursery houses of the West at Billings, is an example of the progress which can be made by a professional man in the marts of trade. He was born at Glennville, Minnesota, October 21, 1879, a son of J. R. Page, and a grandson of Abraham Page. The Page family originated in Holland, but representatives of it came to the American colonies many years ago, and, locating in Pennsylvania, were instrumental in developing that province into one of the original thirteen states of the Union. Abraham Page was born at Williamsport, Pennsylvania, and died at LaPorte, Indiana, at the age of sixty-five years, before the birth of Hugh D. Page. A farmer, he moved to Indiana in 1845, seeking better opportunities for acquiring land at reasonable prices, and was one of the pioneers of LaPorte. He was married to Mary Shriveley, born in Pennsylvania, who also died at LaPorte.

J. R. Page was born at Williamsport, Pennsylvania, and died at Glennville, Minnesota, in December, 1918. Until he was seven years old the family lived at Williamsport, but at that time removal was made to Indiana, and there he was reared and lived until some time after his marriage. His first business venture was that of operating a clothing business, and he later became interested in conducting a large farm. When he was thirty years of age, in 1868, he moved to Glennville, Minnesota, and there managed a large farm until his death. First a republican, he later espoused the principles of the prohibition party and voted for its candidates. For two terms he served as a commissioner of Freeborn County, Minnesota. Before leaving Indiana he had united with the Baptist Church, but after he went to Minnesota he joined the United Brethren Church, and was very active in its work. J. R. Page was married to Matilda Mimmum, born at Meadowville, Pennsylvania, in 1839, and died at Glennville in May, 1914. Their children were as follows: Joseph Simon, who is a farmer of Glennville; Ada, who married O. S. Geesey, a stockman of Dupree, South Dakota; J. J., who is a clothing merchant of Northwood, Iowa; True R., who is a photographer of Brown's Valley, Minnesota; William A., who is baggageman at the Union Depot of Billings; and Hugh D., whose name heads this review.

Hugh D. Page attended the public schools of his native place, and was graduated from its high school. He then became a student of the Southern Minnesota Normal School at Austin, and was graduated from the commercial and teacher's courses in 1898. Entering the Austin Law College of Austin, Minnesota, he was graduated therefrom in 1901 with the degree of Doctor of Law, and for the subsequent three years he was in the office of Judge S. T. Littleton of Owatonna, Minnesota. An opening occurring, Mr. Page embarked in a real estate business at Owatonna, and continued to operate it until 1909. Having in the meanwhile become interested in the work of beautifying property by the proper planting of trees and shrubs, in 1909 he associated himself with the Jewell Nursery Company, and in that line of endeavor found congenial and remunerative work. While with that company he covered Montana and Wyoming, and in 1913 located at Billings, where he has since resided. In 1913 he resigned his position with the Jewell people and incorporated the Page-Clark Seed and Nursery Company of Billings and continued its president until 1917, in that year severing his connections to become manager for the Montana Farmers Seed Company, with which he remained for a year. In the fall of 1918 he incorporated the Page Nursery Company to handle trees, shrubs and plants, with offices at No. 12, First National Bank Building. Independent in his political views, Mr. Page has been a justice of the peace, having served as such at Glennville. The Baptist Church holds his membership, and he served it during 1917 as trustee and clerk. Fraternally he belongs to Owatonna Lodge, Brotherhood of American Yeomen, and the Illinois United Commercial Travelers.

In 1903 Mr. Page was united in marriage at Owatonna, Minnesota, to Miss Jessie M. Gleason, a daughter of Emerson and Mary (Fate) Gleason. Mr. Gleason is a stockbuyer, and he and his wife still reside at Owatonna. Mrs. Page was graduated from the Austin Business College, and she, too, belongs to the Baptist Church. Mr. and Mrs. Page have the following children: Winfield Emerson, who was born May 23, 1904; Harlan Kenneth, who was born December 28, 1907; Maxine Violetta, who was born May 12, 1912; and Lorraine Virginia, who was born August 1, 1916. Scrupulously upright in his dealings, Mr. Page has inspired confidence wherever he has been associated with business or professional duties, and his judgments of men and affairs are sound and sincere.

JOHN N. OSBORNE. The business of writing insurance as a vocation is one that has reached enormous proportions. This is not entirely due to the realization of the people of the growing necessity for proper protection, but in a large degree because the masses are being properly educated by men engaged in this line of endeavor of the benefits accruing from insurance. It is not every man who can hope to achieve success in this field, and it is one that demands the possession of peculiar gifts and characteristics, and the man who is desirous of being successful in the sale of this commodity must not only understand every angle of the business thoroughly, but be a competent judge of human nature, possessed in a remarkable degree of that faculty which enables him to speak logically and forcibly upon his subject, and be persevering and indefatigably industrious. Montana has long been the home of some of the most capable insurance agents in the West, and one who has been a leader in his field for several years is John N. Osborne of Lewistown.

Mr. Osborne was born on his father's farm in Vernon County, Missouri, May 12, 1878, a son of John M. and Lydia (Hornback) Osborne, the former born in Tennessee, April 9, 1850, and the latter in Illinois, April 5, 1853. They were married in Vernon County, Missouri, and became the parents of six children, five surviving, and John N. being the third in order of birth. John M. Osborne continued to be engaged in farming in Vernon County, Missouri, until 1888, in which year he came to Gallatin County, Montana, but after remaining some time returned to Missouri and later desposed of his farm. In 1896 he again came to Montana, this time to locate permanently with his family in Gallatin County, where he has since been extensively engaged in grain and hay farming. He is one of the prominent men in the Baptist Church, and in politics is a democrat.

John N. Osborne secured a public school education in Missouri, and remained with his parents until he reached the age of seventeen years. At that time he struck out on his own account, coming to Gallatin County, Montana, where he obtained employment on a ranch. He next took up the business of sheep shearing, which he followed for twelve years, and followed this by a period of working at his trade of carpenter and subsequent operations in the field of contracting and building at Moore, where he remained about three years. Still he had not found his proper vocation, nor did he do so until he started selling life insurance for the Montana Life Insurance Company. Realizing that this was his forte, he applied himself whole heartedly to learning its every detail, and so successful did he become that at the end of three years he was made general agent of the concern. In March, 1915, he established his office in the Montana Building at Lewiston, where he still remains. Mr. Osborne has been successful in the securing and placing of some large policies and in forming a wide circle of friendships. He is a democrat in his political views, although not a politician. As a fraternalist he belongs to Lewiston Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Helena Consistory No. 3, thirty-second degree; and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; and Lewiston Lodge No. 456, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On December 25, 1910, Mr. Osborne was married to Miss Bertha J. Weston, who was born in Kansas, daughter of William C. and Etha (Bock) Weston, the former born in Boston, Massachusetts, and the latter in Illinois. There were six children in the family, of whom five are living, and Mrs. Osborne is the fourth in order of birth. As a young man Mr. Weston journeyed westward to Kansas, and after his marriage made his way to White Sulphur Springs, Montana, where he was for some years engaged in freighting. His home is now in Fergus County, where he is a prominent cattle man. He is a republican in his political views. Mr. and Mrs. Osborne are the parents of three children: Mabel Clair, Bessie Mildred and John Weston.

WILLIAM O. HUTCHINSON. The representative and honored citizen of Wilsall whose name forms the caption to this review has been distinctively the architect of his own fortunes, has been true and loyal in all the relations of life and stands as a type of that sterling manhood which ever commands respect and honor. He is a man who would have won his way in any locality where fate might have placed him, for he has sound judgment, coupled with great energy and business tact, together with upright principles, all of which make for success wherever and whenever they are rightfully and persistently applied. By reason of these principles he has won and retained a host of friends in whatever community he is known.

William O. Hutchinson traces his family line back to sterling old English ancestry, his progenitors having come to this country in colonial days. His father, E. W. Hutchinson, was born in 1833 in Pittsylvania County, Virginia, but was reared to manhood about fifty miles north of St. Louis, Missouri. Upon reaching mature years he took up farming as a vocation, which he followed until 1853, when, lured by the stories of fortunes to be found in the gold diggings of the coast, he went to California, where he prospected for three years. He then returned by way of the Isthmus of Panama, across the Gulf of Mexico and up the Mississippi River, settling near Wright City, Warren County, Missouri, where he engaged in farming. In the fall of 1866 he removed to a farm in Macon County, Missouri, where he remained until a few years before his death, when he located in Jacksonville, Missouri, where his death occurred in 1910.

Politically E. W. Hutchinson was an ardent democrat and took a prominent part in public affairs in the several communities where he lived. While a resident of Macon County, Missouri, he served one term as county judge and one term as presiding judge, and at the time of his death he was serving as mayor of Jacksonville. Religiously he was an earnest member of the Christian church, to which he gave active and consistent support. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity and was chaplain of his lodge at the time of his death.

E. W. Hutchinson married Sarah Elizabeth Coleman, who was born in 1828 in Trimble County, Kentucky, and who died at Jacksonville, Missouri, in 1912. To them were born five children, namely: Atta, who died at the age of twenty-one years; William O., the immediate subject of this sketch; Jesse, who died in infancy; Charles B., who is a practicing osteopathic physician at Duluth, Minnesota; and Edgar P., a farmer and real estate broker at Moberly, Missouri.

William O. Hutchinson received his elementary education in the rural schools of Macon County, Missouri, after which he was for two years a student in the State Normal School at Kirksville, Missouri. Leaving that institution in 1882, he taught two terms of school in Missouri and then came to Helena, Montana, and spent one season as a farmer. He then engaged in teaching school at Prickly Pear Valley, where East Helena now stands, at the time of the construction of the smelter theme, and was thus employed there seven years, until 1892, the greater part of the time as principal. He also taught in another district in the Prickly Pear Valley and in Beaver Creek Valley. During this period Mr. Hutchinson not only made a splendid record as an educator, but impressed his character upon the people to such an extent that he was appointed postmaster of East Helena under President Grover Cleveland, serving five years in that position. He also bought a drug store in East Helena, which he conducted until 1900, when he sold it. Mr. Hutchinson was elected county commissioner of Lewis and Clark County, serving five years, and then became associated with Louis Penwell in the sheep business, the firm being known as the Riverside Land and Livestock Company. The company was formed in 1903 and Mr. Hutchinson was managing director of the business until 1907, when he was put in full charge as general foreman, serving as such until the company sold its interests in 1909. In 1910 Mr. Hutchinson became connected with the Montana Life Insurance Company as inspector of farm loans, in which capacity he traveled all over Montana. In 1912 he severed his connection with that company and, joining interests with S. S. Working bought the leading mercantile concern at Wilsall. They incorporated the Wilsall Mercantile Company, with the following officers: President, William O. Hutchinson; vice president, V. L. Sherwin; secretary-treasurer and general manager, S. S. Working. The store is located at the corner of Elliott and Clark streets, and one evidence of the phenomenal growth of their business is the fact that they were compelled to build a splendid new business block, 50 by 100 feet, with basement of the same size, fully cemented. They have their own steam and electric light plants and in every way the building is adapted to the purpose to which it is devoted. It is a department store and every department is kept well stocked with up-to-date styles and full lines of such goods as meet the requirements of the local trade. The store is known far and wide, trade being drawn from a radius of twenty-five miles.

Mr. Hutchinson is also interested in a number of other enterprises, among which are the Farmers State Bank of Wilsall, of which he is a director; the Montana Life Insurance Company; the Conrad Trust and Savings Bank, of Helena; and is president of the Wilsall Townsite Company, which owns all the unsold platted lots of the townsite of Wilsall. He also owns a farm of 280 acres in Broadwater County, Montana.

Politically Mr. Hutchinson is a democrat and has for years taken an active interest in party affairs. In 1898 he was elected a representative to the Legislature from Lewis and Clark County, serving in the sixth legislative session. He served on the mercantile committee, the committee on credentials and elections and other important committees of that body. He is a member of the Christian Church and his fraternal relations are with Silver State Lodge No. 46, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which was organized in 1892 and of which he was a charter member. He was also formerly a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

Mr. Hutchinson has been twice married, first on August 10, 1887, at East Helena, to Cora E. Burns, the daughter of Capt. A. F. and Annie Burns, both of whom are now deceased. Captain Burns was one of the pioneer ranchers of Prickly Pear Valley. To Mr. and Mrs. Hutchinson were born the following children: Jesse D., who is general agent at Topeka, Kansas, for the Goodrich Rubber Company, graduated from the Helena High School and then was a student in the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, for two years. For seven years he was in the claim department of the Santa Fe Railway. Annie E. is the wife of A. R. Sanders, of White Sulphur Springs, Montana, a district forest ranger in the Castle Mountains. She graduated from the high school at Helena, attended Knox College two years at Galesburg, Illinois, taught school for one year, and then attended the Montana State University at Missoula, where she graduated in 1914. Mrs. Cora Hutchinson died in October, 1890, at East Helena, and in September, 1892, Mr. Hutchinson married Allie Updike, a native of Illinois. To this union has been born one child, Alma Atta, who is now a teacher in the high school of Wilsall.

As a man of ability, sturdy integrity and usefulness, Mr. Hutchinson has merited the consideration of his fellow men, for while engaged in the prosecution of his own business affairs he has never been neglectful of his duties to his community and state, and today he is honored by all who know him.

S. S. Working. Examples that impress force of character on all who study them are worthy of record in the annals of history wherever they are found. By a few general observations the biographer hopes to convey in the following paragraphs, succinctly and yet without fulsome encomium, some idea of the high standing of S. S. Working, of Wilsall, as a business man and representative citizen. Those who know him best will readily acquiesce in the statement that many elements of a solid and practical nature are united in his composition and which during a series of years have brought him into prominent notice through his section of the state, his life and achievements earning for him a conspicuous place among his compeers.

S. S. Working was born at Windom, Minnesota, on February 13, 1872, and is a son of D. W. and Elizabeth (Gunderson) Working. The family is descended from sterling old English stock, the progenitors having come to this country during the colonial period, and the subject's paternal grandfather was a soldier in the War of 1812. D. W. Working was born in 1827, at Centerville, Center County, Pennsylvania, and his death occurred at Abilene, Kansas, in 1908. He was reared in his native town, but after attaining manhood he removed to Henderson, Minnesota, where he followed farming as a vocation and where he was married. Later he moved to Windom, Minnesota, where the subject of this sketch was born, and still later went to Logan, Kansas, where he farmed and also engaged in contracting and building from 1878 to 1885. In the latter year he became a resident of Abilene, Kansas, where he followed farming until his death. He was a man of fine personal character and enjoyed the esteem of all who knew him. He was a republican in his political faith and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was a veteran of two wars, having served as a musician during the Mexican war, and as a member of Company A, Fourth Regiment of Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, during the Civil war. In the latter great struggle he served for three years and was with Grant in many of the notable battles of the war, including Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and the Siege of Vicksburg. He was an orderly for General Grant and later was with General Sherman on the historic march to the sea. He was twice injured during his service, receiving a bayonet wound in the right leg, and being injured in the spine while on a vessel on the Mississippi River, but recovered from both injuries. Mrs. Elizabeth (Gunderson) Working was born in 1824 in Christiania, Norway, and died at Logan, Kansas, in 1879. To this worthy couple were born the following children: J. B., who is now retired and lives at Palacios, Texas; Anna E. is the wife of F. E. Ross, a contractor and builder at Los Gatos, California; Lincoln is an attorney at Glasgow, Montana; D. W. is dean of the State Agricultural College at Tucson, Arizona; J. C. operates a ranch at Bakersfield, California; Ida is the wife of Alexia Podchernikoff, an artist of San Francisco, California; S. S., the immediate subject of this review.

S. S. Working received his elementary education in the public schools of Logan and Abilene, Kansas, and also attended the Santa Rosa Business College, at Santa Rosa, California. In 1895 he came to Montana and clerked in a store at East Helena until 1901. He then became postmaster of East Helena and also engaged in the mercantile business there until 1911. He was successful and in 1912 he came to Wilsall and bought the leading mercantile business here. He foresaw a splendid future for this place and at once proceeded to put the business on a permanent and solid basis by incorporating the Wilsall Mercantile Company in 1914. It is a typical department store and is accounted one of the largest and best in Southern Montana. The official personnel of the company is as follows: President, W. O. Hutchinson; vice president, V. L. Sherwin; secretary-treasurer; S. S. Working, who is also general manager of the business. The store is located at the corner of Clark and Elliott streets and is well stocked with a well selected stock of goods in every department. Right prices, courteous treatment and quick service are elements which have attracted trade from a radius of twenty-five miles and the concern is considered one of the most important commercial enterprises in the locality.

Mr. Working is also financially interested in several other business propositions, including the Farmers State Bank of Wilsall, of which he is president, the Wilsall Townsite Company, of which he is secretary and treasurer, the Conrad Trust and Savings Bank of Helena, and owns a ranch of 320 acres about ten miles northeast of Wilsall, besides a fine modern residence in Wilsall. He is keenly alive to every movement that promises to promote the interests of the community in any way and is an ardent supporter of every worthy cause.

Politically Mr. Working is a stanch republican and has served on the school boards of East Helena and Wilsall. Fraternally he is a member of Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Livingston Chapter No. 7, Royal Arch Masons; St. Bernard Commandery No. 6, Knights Templar; Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; Livingston Lodge No. 246, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and Wilsall Lodge No. 103, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is also a member of the Montana State Bankers Association and the American Bankers Association.

In 1901, at East Helena, Mr. Working was married to Jean Drury, daughter of J. R. and Sarah (Cauby) Drury. The father, who during his active life was a farmer at Unionville, Missouri, is now deceased, and his widow resides at Unionville. Mrs. Working, after completing her common school training, was a student in the State Normal School at Twin Bridges, Montana. To Mr. and Mrs. Working have been born three children, namely: Paul D., born December 22, 1901; Webster B., born January 19, 1903; and Margaret, born July 22, 1908.

Mr. Working holds worthy prestige in business circles, being regarded as distinctively a man of affairs, and wields a potent influence among those with whom his lot has been cast, having won definite success and shown what a man of right principles and determination can win by proper effort.

WILLIAM C. SPOTTSWOOD is vice president, treasurer and manager of the Bonner Mercantile Company, one of the largest and one of the oldest mercantile houses in Western Montana. Mr. Spottswood who has been actively identified with this concern at Deer Lodge for the past thirteen years, has a veteran's experience in business and for many years covered the northwestern territory as a traveling salesman for one of the largest dry goods houses in the West.

Mr. Spottswood was born at Lake City, Minnesota, May 31, 1859, and comes of a family identified with Minnesota in territorial times. The Spottswoods are a noted American Colonial family of Scotch descent. One of the first governors of the Virginia Colony was Governor Spottswood, a native of Scotland, who was sent over by the Crown to govern in Virginia. One of his three sons moved north to Pennsylvania, and from the Pennsylvania branch is descended William C. Spottswood of Deer Lodge.

The latter's father was Charles C. Spottswood who was born in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, in 1831. He grew up at Harrisburg and when he was a boy of about fourteen the science of telegraphy was first put into practical use. He learned the art and was the first telegraph operator for the Pennsylvania lines when that road was built west from Harrisburg. For some time he was an operator at Carlisle, Pennsylvania. In 1856 he left the East and gave up railroading to identify himself with the Northwest frontier at Lake City, Minnesota. He served as steamboat agent there for the Diamond Joe Line and also practiced law, having been admitted to the bar at Lewistown, Pennsylvania. He served as county attorney for Wabasha County, Minnesota, and was honored with other local offices. In later years he moved to North Dakota and died at Minot, that state, in 1914. He was a democrat, and a very active member of the Episcopal Church. Charles C. Spottswood married Nancy P. Lilly, who was born at Lewistown, Pennsylvania, in 1834 and died at Minneapolis in 1888. Lizzie, the oldest of their children is a resident of Minneapolis, widow of Rev. James R. Rogers, who was a Presbyterian clergyman. Anna M. of Minot, North Dakota, is the widow of George R. Ransom, who was an attorney practicing for a number of years at Willmar, Minnesota. Dr. E. W. Spottswood is a graduate from the medical department of the University of Minnesota, and is practicing medicine and surgery at Missoula, Montana.

William C. Spottswood, the third in the family, was educated in the public schools of Lake City, graduated from high school in 1878, and then took the commercial course at the State University at Minneapolis, graduating in 1880. From that time forward, a period of forty years, his life has been one of extensive effort in commercial lines. He was in the retail hardware business until he sold his store at Willmar, Minnesota, in 1883. For ten years he was traveling representative for the wholesale hardware house of Janney, Brooks & Eastman, and then had charge of the sales department thirteen years.

Mr. Spottswood came to Deer Lodge in January, 1906, and has since been the active manager of the Bonner Mercantile Company, succeeding in that position C. J. Joslyn who had been manager for twenty-one years. The Bonner Mercantile Company was established in 1865 in early territorial times as the E. L. Bonner Company. It was incorporated as the Bonner Mercantile Company in 1906. This is one of the leading general department stores of Western Montana, and maintains a splendid establishment at Main Street corner of Missouri Avenue in Deer Lodge. Carrie S. Bonner of Missoula is president of the company, with Mr. Spottswood vice president, treasurer and manager, and Mrs. L. B. Spottswood of Missoula, secretary.

Mr. Spottswood is also vice president of the Deer Lodge Electric Light Company. He is a democratic voter, a vestryman in the Deer Lodge Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with Lodge No. 14 of the Masons, Valley Chapter No. 4 Royal Arch Masons, Ivanhoe Commandery No. 16, Knights Templar, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena and Valley Lodge No. 6 Knights of Pythias at Deer Lodge.

Mr. Spottswood resides at 410 Missouri Avenue. In 1896 at Minneapolis he married Grace M. Perkins, daughter of George D. and Mary I. (Moody) Perkins, both now deceased. Her father for many years was in the real estate and insurance business. He spent most of his life in the Northwest and as a young man was a neighbor and acquaintance of the late James J. Hill. Mrs. Spottswood is a graduate of the Ladies Seminary at Minneapolis. She is a niece of Senator Paris Gibson of Great Falls, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Spottswood have two children: Donald P., born February 8, 1898, is a student of electrical engineering at the University of Minnesota of Minneapolis. Dorothy, born May 24, 1903, is a graduate of the Deer Lodge public schools, and is attending St. Mary's Academy at Faribault, Minnesota.

CHRISTIAN AND PETER YEGEN. To the City of Billings during the past thirty years a tremendous amount of personal ability, initiative and commercial resource has been supplied by Yegen Brothers. While they have sold out or retired from many of their former interests, these interests are still factors in the city's commercial life, and the present owners feel a sense of gratitude and debt to the enterprise of these pioneer business men.

Both brothers were born in Switzerland, sons of Conrad and Emerita (Prader) Yegen. Christian was born November 19, 1857, and Peter August 7, 1860. Christian Yegen was educated for a career as teacher, his father's profession, but determined to become a business man instead. In 1879 he located at Bismarck, North Dakota, joining his brother John and sister Dorothea. He learned the baking trade under his brother, and the following year took a small farm. In 1881 he sent for his brother Peter, who had been farming in Switzerland. With the aid of their sister they continued on the farm another year and then invested their capital in a restaurant at Glendive and subsequently moved to Terry Station, where they conducted the section house, and with a fare consisting chiefly of buffalo meat, sauer kraut, cranberries and bread, supplied a very popular and profitable service. By 1882 they had accumulated a capital of $3,000, and this they then invested in a small bakery at Billings. The bakery prospered until the railroad moved on, and with other reverses the partners found themselves without capital or business and $400 in debt. They started all over again, baking bread in the morning and peddling the product in the afternoon. Inside of a year they bought a building, and soon expanded their enterprise with a stock of groceries. Later they moved to a larger building on the site of the still later splendid establishment of Yegen Brothers. In 1893 they installed a stock of hardware, and successive additions were made to their building equipment and their stock, including a dry goods department. In 1900 they erected a cold storage plant. In that year they also engaged in the banking business, opening the first savings bank at Billings, and afterward opening savings banks at Anaconda and Gardiner. About 1904 they bought the wholesale grocery business of Millis & Company. The firm of Yegen Brothers was incorporated in 1902. The brothers had bought their sister's interest in 1895. Yegen Brothers also platted two additions to the City of Billings. While their mercantile interests are now in other hands they remain honored and influential factors in the business, civic and social community of a city which they have largely helped to make.

Christian Yegen was elected an alderman in 1892, later was a member of the Legislature, was chosen mayor of Billings in 1896, and in 1904 was sent to the State Senate. Peter Yegen has for a number of years served on the Billings Library Board.

August 27, 1893, Christian Yegen married Miss Laura B. Clark. They had five children, Laura, Dora, Mildred, Virginia and Christian. Peter Yegen married Miss Marguerite Trepp, a native of Switzerland, in 1800. They have three children, David, Peter and Elizabeth.

JOHN H. HARVAT. In any group of Montanans where eligibility rests upon masterful ability to overcome circumstances and difficulties, great power in handling men and affairs, and the achievement of big things from small beginnings, the name of John H. Harvat has a generally acknowledged place.

His career has been frequently a theme for newspaper correspondence both in Montana and elsewhere. While he probably did not recognize it at the time, his early life was a part and parcel of that richly colored experience which modern readers are prone to regard as the romance of the great West.

Mr. Harvat was born at Iowa City, October 9, 1860. His father, Joseph Harvat, was born in Austria in 1829, was reared and married in that country, his wife being Mary Cerny. On coming to the United States he settled at Iowa City on a farm and spent the rest of his life there. He died in 1899, and his wife also passed away in Iowa City. Of their children Jacob J. was a meat man and died at Denver, Colorado, at the age of forty-one; Mary lives at Iowa City, widow of Rudolph Grissel, who was a merchant; Daniel died in Germany; Jennie lives at San Francisco, widow of John Vevovda, and is in the harness business; Joseph J. was in the meat business at Denver, where he died at the age of thirty-seven; John H. is the next in age; Annie is the wife of George Holbert, an attorney at New York City; Emma is unmarried and lives at Iowa City; Clara died in Oklahoma; and George is a traveling salesman with home in Texas.

John H. Harvat attended public schools at Iowa City, including high school, and in 1878 completed a course in the Iowa City Business College. Up to that time he had never been out of his home county. Going to Omaha, he found it a difficult matter to secure employment even at such wages as fifty cents a day. He worked in a grocery store for several months, and was then attracted to Colorado, partly being influenced by stories of the great wealth acquired in the mineral districts of that state. He worked in hotels, afterward for a few months had some experience working in the mines of Silver Cliff, and finally joined a brother at Georgetown, Colorado. The experiences in this stage of his life, while they must be briefly noted here, forms an important chapter in his life career. He was frequently discouraged, and probably at that time Mr. Harvat became convinced that there was no such thing as "luck" in life for him and that success depended entirely upon a steady, consistent effort in a line of practical service to humanity. For two years he remained at Georgetown learning the meat market business. Then again he tried mining at Leadville, and while in that district made his first independent effort as a merchant in meats and groceries. He failed and was once more adrift without money, but still with some faith in himself.

It was at this time that he sought opportunity in Montana. He arrived at Bozeman over the stage route from Virginia City. He came to Montana penniless, and for about two months worked on a ranch for his board, and then secured employment with a meat market at Bozeman. Mr. Harvat in August, 1880, left Bozeman and went to Park City, now Livingston. At that time there were only three buildings in the town and he is now the oldest remaining male resident of Livingston or the original Park City. For a time he was employed by a firm of contractors furnishing meat to the railway construction crews, and in 1882 engaged in the meat business with Tom McDonald as a partner. Then for the first time in all his previous consecutive experience success began to reward his efforts, he developed a great and thriving enterprise and continued it until 1900, when he sold out to other parties.

Mr. Harvat was a member of the Vigilante Committee in the early days and he knows a great deal of pioneer affairs of Montana, and has vivid memories of many of the old timers now gone to their reward.

Since 1900 Mr. Harvat has been a sheep rancher, and his operations through twenty years have made him one of the leading figures in the sheep industry of the Northwest. His first venture in that business, however, largely partook of failure. He kept on, acquired rights to range and bought land of his own, and at this time has ranch properties near Livingston aggregrating 16,000 acres, and he keeps flocks of sheep aggregating 12,000 through the year. He has been one of the biggest shippers of wool to Boston and has also sent hundreds of carloads of mutton sheep to the Chicago market. It is estimated that Mr. Harvat as owner has individually been interested in as high as 100,000 sheep in a single year. Besides his own ranch lands he has frequently leased as much more. On one of his ranches, a mile east of Livingston, he has built a modern home, and he has his property equipped with the most modern facilities for sheep shearing and for handling the sheep business in every detail. As his sons grew to manhood he made them responsible co-workers and eventually organized the Harvat Sheep Company, capitalized at $500,000.

Through all the ups and downs of his career since coming to Montana he has been deeply interested in the welfare of Livingston, has owned property in that city more than thirty years, and has done much to improve and expand its advantages. He still owns the business block on Main Street at the corner of Second Street. He has served as a member of the Livingston School Board, is active in the Commercial Club, is a member of Livingston Lodge No. 246 of Elks, is a Catholic and a republican.

While he has acknowledged many vicissitudes in his business career, his domestic life since his marriage has been one of unalloyed happiness. On April 30, 1889, at Iowa City, he married Miss Elizabeth Haberstroh, daughter of Julius and Barbara Haberstroh, still living in Iowa City. Her father is a retired carpenter and contractor. The four children of Mr. and Mrs. Harvat are Marie, Paul J., Edwin J. and J. H., Jr. All the children received part of their finishing education in Notre Dame University, Indiana, the daughter being a graduate of St. Mary's College there. Marie is the wife of William Ahearn, a timekeeper for the Northern Pacific Railway, living at Livingston. Paul J. and J. H., Jr., are both associated with their father. Edwin J. enlisted in the army in 1918 and in July went overseas with the rank of captain in the expeditionary troops to France.

Gayle M. Fletcher. A gentleman of pleasing address and upright character, possessing a natural aptitude for business pursuits, Gayle M. Fletcher, agent for various manufacturing concerns, has made rapid progress along the road to success and attained a position of note among the leading men of Billings, his home city. A son of Joseph C. Fletcher, he was born in Beatrice, Nebraska, August 18, 1878, of Irish and English ancestry. His grandfather Fletcher was born in Ireland in 1800, and as a young man immigrated to America, locating first in Ontario, Canada. When about thirty-five years old he followed the tide of emigration to Iowa, and until his death in 1890, resided in Keokuk, where for many years he had followed the trade of a stone mason.

Although he was born, in 1844, in the Province of Ontario, Canada, Joseph C. Fletcher was brought up and educated in Keokuk, Iowa. In 1863, fired with true patriotic ardor, he enlisted in the Third Iowa Cavalry for service in the Civil war. Subsequently while in battle at Guntown, Mississippi, he was captured and confined as a prisoner of war for a year in Andersonville Prison. While thus confined he suffered untold hardships, losing over eighty pounds of good, honest flesh, his weight having been 173 pounds at the time of his enlistment, and but 92 pounds when he was exchanged. Returning to Iowa he married, and shortly after that happy event established himself in the furniture business at Beatrice, Nebraska, where he still resides, for the past thirty years having been successfully engaged in the real estate business. A steadfast republican, he has been prominent in civic and political affairs, and has served town and county in various official capacities. He belongs to the Grand Army of the Republic.

Joseph C. Fletcher married Samantha E. Monce, in Nebraska City, Nebraska. She was born in Ohio in 1848, and to them five children have been born, as follows: Fred, a manufacturer in Forestville, Connecticut; Harry, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, is a traveling salesman; Arthur, formerly a successful merchant of Beatrice, Nebraska, died in that ctiy at the early age of forty years; Gayle M., the special subject of this sketch; and Thomas, a well-known manufacturer of Los Angeles, California.

After his graduation in 1897 from the Beatrice, Nebraska, High School, Gayle M. Fletcher was employed as a bookkeeper for a year. The ensuing six years he worked in Cambria, Wyoming, for Kilpatrick Brothers & Collins, who were railroad contractors, and had valuable mining interests in that locality. Going from there to Sheridan, Wyoming, he was there engaged in the real estate and insurance business for a year Coming to Montana in 1905, Mr. Fletcher was similarly employed at Billings for a year. Accepting then his present position as manufacturers' agent, he has since made a specialty of outfitting banks, stores, offices, courthouses and other public buildings with up-to-date furniture, fixtures and equipments of all kinds. His business increases from year to year, his territory now including all of Montana and Wyoming. His sales are extesive, and are not only gratifying to him, but are highly satisfactory to the firms which he represents and pleasing to his many customers. His offices are in the Stapleton Block in Billings.

Mr. Fletcher is a republican in politics, and an attendant of the Congregational Church, toward the support of which he contributes generously. Fraternally he is a member of Billings Lodge No. 113, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; of Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Helena; of Cambria Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Cambria, Wyoming; of Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; of the Royal Highlanders; of the Montana branch of the United Commercial Travelers of America; of the Billings Club; of the Billings Midland Empire Club; and of the Billings Golf and Country Club. He is also a stockholder in the American Bank and Trust Company and in the Security Trust and Savings Bank, financial institutions of high standing.

Mr. Fletcher married in 1902, at Helena, Montana, Miss Estella Walker, who was born in Illinois, and was there educated, having been graduated from the Jacksonville Female Academy at Jacksonville, Illinois. Helen, the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher, was born March 30, 1904, and is now, in 1919, attending the Billings High School.

RALPH A. SHARP. It is claimed that what has developed the United States from a few colonies along the Atlantic coast into the greatest nation in the world has been its pioneer spirit, which has urged its people onward and enabled them to go into a wilderness and make of it a place of desirability. Certain it is that many of the truly American families show in their records that in almost every generation there have been migrations of some of their representatives ever westward, and that following upon them have come civilization and constructive development. The Sharp family is one of these and dates back in America to colonial days. At a time when Tennessee was a battlefield for the struggles between the Indians and the whites members of this family came into the region, and after making the usual sacrifices of comfort and, in some instances, life, became substantial settlers of the great commonwealth. Still pushing onward, the family was brought into Montana, and one of the representatives of it in this state is Ralph A. Sharp, cashier of the Custer State Bank of Custer.

Ralph A. Sharp was born in Gage County, Nebraska, January 16, 1883, a son of Cain Sharp, and grandson of Jonathan Sharp, who was born in Tennessee in 1824. After the close of the Civil war Jonathan Sharp came West to Nebraska and locating at Liberty, there lived until his death, which took place in 1900. All of his life he was engaged in farming. Jonathan Sharp was married to Margaret Lynch, born in Tennessee, and died at Liberty, Nebraska. Their children were as follows: Martha, who married Allen Jimerson, a farmer who is now deceased, but his widow survives him and makes her home at Liberty; Nicholas, who is a retired farmer and carpenter of Lincoln, Nebraska; William, who is a farmer of Liberty; Lewis, who is a farmer of Liberty; George, who is a Baptist minister of McCook, Nebraska; Cain, who is spoken of below; Susie, who married Linville Wymore, is deceased, as is her husband; Cordelia, who is the widow of William Coffee, lives at Liberty; Sarah, who married Houston Ellison, a farmer of Liberty; Ella who married Charles Reis, a farmer of Liberty; and Melissa, who is unmarried and resides at Liberty.

Cain Sharp was born in the mountains of Tennessee in 1861, and now resides at Soldier, Kansas. He was reared in Gage County, Nebraska, and has been a farmer all of his life. A few years ago he moved to Kansas, and still continues his farming activities. His political convictions make him a democrat. Cain Sharp was married to Nancy McFarland, who was born in Tennessee in 1863, and they became the parents of the following children: Ida, who married O. R. Maxwell, a farmer of Burlingame, Kansas; Ralph A., whose name heads this review; and Ivan, who is a general worker of Holton, Kansas.

Ralph A. Sharp attended the common and high schools of Liberty, Nebraska, being graduated from the latter in 1899. He then entered the employ of a railroad as telegrapher, and was in Nebraska and Kansas for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad until 1906. In that year he came to Billings, Montana, as bookkeeper for J. H. Reynolds, at that time constructing 100 miles of road for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad from Harlowton, Montana, east, and held that position for two years, when he moved to Custer, Montana, to be bookkeeper for Harry F. Scott, a merchant of Custer, which position he held until 1915. In the meanwhile Messrs. Scott and Sharp established the Custer State Bank, which was opened for business in April, 1910, Mr. Sharp being made cashier, and the business so increased that since 1915 he has had to devote all of his time to the bank. The present officers of the bank are as follows: George Ganssle, one of the leading merchants of Custer, president; Harry F. Scott, now of Billings, vice president; and Mr. Sharp, cashier. The capital stock is $25,000; and surplus $10,000, and its deposits average $140,000. Under the wise policies of the present administration the affairs of this institution are in excellent condition, and the bank has a stability and standing that speaks well for it and the community. Mr. Sharp owns one of the finest residences at Custer. In politics he is a republican.

In 1908 Mr. Sharp was married to Miss Beda Kron at Cyrus, Pope County, Minnesota, she being a native of that county. Mr. and Mrs. Sharp have the following children: Ralph Kron, who was born March 29, 1911; Earl, who was born September 27, 1913; and Neil, who was born August 7, 1918. Mr. Sharp has achieved a success that is very commendable, all the more so because it has been attained through no spectacular methods, but along legitimate paths of industry and thrift. Not only has he won his place in his community to which his talents entitle him commercially, but he is justly recognized as one of the worthwhile men of Custer, and one upon whose soundness of judgment and reliability of character the utmost reliance may be placed.

JOHN E. MANLEY, who recently became a town dweller at Deer Lodge, where he enjoys a post of honor and responsibility in public affairs as chairman of the board of county commissioners has spent the greater part of his life under the open sky and is still one of the leading ranchers of Powell County. He has lived in Montana for over thirty years, and was engaged in mining before he entered the sheep business.

Mr. Manley was born in the Northwest, in Houston County, Minnesota, November 28, 1862. His father was Anthony A. Manley who was born at Manchester, England, in 1820. When he was seven years of age in 1827 the family came from England and settled in Pennsylvania, where the grandparents spent the rest of their lives. Anthony Manley was reared and married in Pennsylvania and in 1840 was one of the first to seek a home on the Northwestern prairies in the territory of Minnesota. He homesteaded 160 acres in Houston County and eventually owned a large farm of 600 acres. He lived there until his death in 1890 and out of many years of toil he achieved a substantial degree of prosperity. He was an honored citizen of his county and served as justice of the peace many years. In politics he was a democrat. Anthony Manley married Catherine Mulcahey, who was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, in 1824, and died in Houston County, Minnesota, in 1904. Mary, the oldest of their children, is the wife of Orris Layne, a farmer of Minnesota, living in Fillmore County. John E. and James A. are twins, the latter an attorney at New Rockford, North Dakota. Catherine died unmarried at the age of twenty-four. Frank is in the insurance business at Indianapolis. Emmett went to the Philippines with the North Dakota Volunteers in 1898, and after being mustered out of the army remained in the islands, and now has a large practice as a lawyer.

John E. Manley was reared on his father's farm in Minnesota and secured his education in the rural schools of that state. Two years before coming west Mr. Manley was married. He arrived at Deer Lodge, Montana, in March, 1889, in company with his wife and young daughter. The following ten years he spent as a miner, and then invested his modest capital in a ranch in the Nevada Valley. He still owns that land, since increased to a large ranch on which he runs sheep and cattle. The active management of the ranch property now devolves upon his sons. In 1919 Mr. Manley invested $60,000 in additional land for his sheep and cattle. He has had his ups and downs and vicissitudes as a rancher in Montana. The worst accident to befall him came in 1906 when he was hit with a stacking pole and his back broken. He was in a hospital a year and on crutches three years more, but gradually has recovered his health and strength so as to be able to attend to his business affairs. In November, 1918, he moved to a home in Deer Lodge at 506 Milwaukee Avenue.

Mr. Manley was elected a county commissioner of Powell County in 1906, was re-elected in 1908, and in 1914 was chosen for another six year term. He was made chairman of the board in 1918, having held that post of honor twice before. Mr. Manley is a republican and is a director in the United States National Bank of Deer Lodge.

In Houston County, Minnesota, in 1887, he married Miss Mary Ellen Gaffney. Her parents Mr. and Mrs. William Gaffney, both now deceased, lived in Winona County, Minnesota, where her father was a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Manley had three children. Catherine their only daughter, who died of the influenza in 1919, was a graduate of the high school of Winona, Minnesota, and the wife of John R. Quigley, a rancher at Avon, Montana. Emmett, the older son, finished his education in the Butte Business College and with his brother Clifford runs the ranch. Clifford also attended the Butte Business College.

GEORGE L. KILLORN. Fealty to facts in the analyzation of the character of a citizen of the type of George L. Killorn of Clyde Park, is all that is required to make a biographical sketch interesting to those who have at heart the good name of the community, because it is the honorable reputation of the man of affairs, more than any other consideration, that gives character and stability to the body politic. Though of modest demeanor, with no ambition to distinguish himself in public position or as a leader of men, Mr. Killorn's career has been signally honorable and it may be studied with profit by the youth entering upon his life work.

George L. Killorn was born at Livingston, Park County, Montana, on August 15, 1889, and is the son of John and Ellen (Lewis) Killorn, who are now living at Wilsall. John Killorn was born in Ireland in 1866, the son of James Killorn, who left the Emerald Isle in an early day and became a pioneer settler and miner at Bozeman. John Killorn accompanied his parents on their immigration to this country and was reared to manhood in Missouri. In 1891 he came to Livingston, Montana, where he was married, and then for a few years was a miner at Cokedale. He then bought and has since resided on a ranch near where Wilsall now stands, which he has improved and kept at a high standard, so that it is now numbered among the best ranches for its size in this locality. He owns 240 acres under cultivation and 1,920 acres of pasture land, which he devotes to the raising of high-grade cattle. He has been financially successful and at the same time has won the confidence and esteem of his fellow men. He is a democrat in his political views and served as sheriff of Park County for four years. Fraternally he is a member of Livingston Lodge No. 246, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mr. Killorn married Ellen Lewis, who was born in England, and who bore him the following children: George L., the immediate subject of this review; Ella, the wife of James Schofield, of Butte; John, who enlisted in the United States army in 1917, being sent overseas in December of that year, and was assigned to the Aerial Corps of the One Hundred and Eighty-sixth Division and was in the Argonne drive and other major engagements, making a good record and receiving the rank of top sergeant; Jane is unmarried and is a professional stenographer at Livingston.

George L. Killorn received his elementary education in the public schools of Livingston, attending also the Park County High School one year. He was then a student in the Yellowstone Business College at Livingston for two years. In 1911 he came to Clyde Park and became assistant cashier of the Citizens State Bank, holding that position two years. He then entered the employ of Wolcott & Bliler, general merchants, as credit man, remaining with them for five years. In 1916 Mr. Killorn bought the leading dry goods store at Clyde Park and has since then devoted himself closely to this enterprise. He carries a large and well-selected stock of goods and enjoys a patronage from a wide radius of surrounding country. In 1917 Mr. Killorn was appointed postmaster of Clyde Park, being the present occupant of that position, and has given the best of satisfaction to the patrons of the office. Mr. Killorn is a democrat in his political affiliations. He is a member of Livingston Lodge No. 246, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Livingston, and is popular in the circles in which he moves.

In 1912, at Livingston, Mr. Killorn was married to Isadore Maggs, the daughter of James and Emma (Baumgardner) Maggs. The father is deceased, and his widow now resides at Coshocton, Ohio. Mrs. Killorn is a lady of wide culture, having completed her elementary education in the high school at Coshocton, after which she attended and graduated from the Columbus College of Oratory and Music. She possesses exceptional talents as an elocutionist and is the holder of five medals won in state oratorical contests. Mr. and Mrs. Killorn have a wide circle of warm personal friends, among whom they are deservedly popular.

R. H. Dean. Though a native of Missouri, R. H. Dean has lived in Montana over forty years. He is a prominent lumber dealer at Bozeman, a business he has followed for several years. A period of his life which might be regarded with most interest was twenty years as a railroad contractor, during which time he constructed a number of miles of Montana railway.

Mr. Dean was born in Randolph County, Missouri, December 26, 1866. His father bore the same name and was a Montana pioneer and his grandfather, Richard H. Dean, was born in Ireland in 1801 and brought his family to America about 1843. In Wisconsin he was engaged in the elevator and grain business a number of years and about 1864 went with other members of the family to Randolph County, Missouri, and lived retired until his death in 1881. R. H. Dean, father of the Bozeman business man, was born in Ireland in 1837, and was six years old when brought to America. He grew up near Columbus, Wisconsin, was married in that state, and was associated with his father in the grain elevator business. After removing to Randolph County, Missouri, in 1864, he became a farmer. As a Montana pioneer he settled in the Missouri Valley, not far from the present site of Townsend, in 1877. The quarter section homestead and the 160 acre timber claim which he took up and developed on Deep Creek, five miles south of Townsend he still owns. For many years he was a successful rancher in that locality, and is now living retired at Townsend. He is a republican in politics. R. H. Dean married Mary E. Ranney, who was born in New York State in 1840. They had four children: Jessie, wife of Henry Seiben, a banker and stockman at Helena; R. H., Jr.; Dollie, of Helena, widow of Harry Burgess, a stockman and dairyman; and Daisy, wife of Herbert Brady, a bookkeeper at Great Falls, Montana.

R. H. Dean began his education in Missouri and continued it after he was eleven years of age in the country schools of Meagher County, in what is now Broadwater County. For three years he attended the Helena Business College, graduating in 1886. Then followed twenty years of work as a railroad contractor, the duties of that occupation calling him to all parts of the state. He was a contractor for the Northern Pacific, and his principal undertaking was the building of the Montana Railroad known as the Jaw Bone line, between Lombard and Castle. After retiring from railway construction he engaged in the retail lumber business at Manhattan, remaining there until January, 1919, when he sold his interests and his home and came to Bozeman. Here he is manager of the Gallatin Lumber Company, one of the largest concerns of its kind in Southern Montana. The company is incorporated for $50,000 and has a large plant at the corner of Third Avenue and Main Street. L. W. Truitt is president of the company, Martin Jacoby vice president, with Mr. Dean general manager and secretary and M. F. Getchell, treasurer.

Mr. Dean in politics is a democrat. He was active in public affairs at Manhattan, being one of the first councilmen upon the organization of the city in 1912 and serving continuously until 1918. For one term he was also mayor. He is affiliated with Manhattan Lodge of Masons and at Bozeman is a member of Western Star Lodge No. 4, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Bridger Camp No. 2, Woodmen of the World, and Lodge No. 463 of the Elks.

In 1898, at Bozeman, Mr. Dean married Miss Sallie Chrisman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Chrisman, both now deceased. Her father for many years was county treasurer of Gallatin County. Mrs. Dean died at Bozeman in 1904, leaving one son, Richard Howell Dean, who was born June 16, 1901, and is now a student in the Montana State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts. In 1908, at Manhattan, Mr. Dean married Mrs. Evelyn (Collins) Carmack, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Collins, who are residents of Toston, Montana, her father being a farmer.

Frank H. Garver since 1911 has been Professor of History and Economics in the Montana State Normal College at Dillon. He is one of the leading historical scholars and authorities in the Northwest, and in Montana and elsewhere has given much of his time to research and investigation and is author of many addresses, magazine articles and contributions to historical journals.

Professor Garver was born at Albion in Marshall County, Iowa, March 9, 1875, son of Andrew A. and Diana (Ballard) Garver. His father was of English ancestry, the Garvers coming to Pennsylvania in colonial times. The Ballards were a Colonial Virginia family. Andrew A. Garver was born at Mechanicsville, Pennsylvania, in 1838, was reared there and at the first call for soldiers to put down the rebellion in 1861 joined a Pennsylvania regiment of infantry. He was in the three months' service, but on account of physical disability was rejected for a second enlistment. In 1863 he moved to Iowa, locating in Marshall County, where he was a farmer for over thirty years. In 1895 he went into the famous Grand River Valley of Colorado and engaged in fruit growing at Grand Junction, where he died in 1896. In Iowa he was a leader in civic affairs and held a number of township offices, being president of the school board for many years. He was a republican and late in life became a convert to the Swedenborgian creed. His wife, Diana Ballard, was born in Henry County, Iowa, in 1840 and died at Albion in that state in 1885. They had five children, of whom two are living Frank H., the subject of this sketch, and Katherine, wife of C. J. Manning, principal of the Beaverhead County High School at Dillon.

Frank H. Garver grew up on his father's farm in Marshall County, Iowa. His advantages in the country schools were supplemented by attending the Albion Seminary from 1890 to 1893, and after that the Epworth Seminary at Epworth, Iowa, where he graduated with the class of 1895. He spent three years and received in 1898 his A. B. degree from Upper Iowa University at Fayette. After graduating Mr. Garver took up his professional work as teacher of history and politics at Morningside College, Sioux City, Iowa. He was head of that department until 1911. In the meantime by residence and non-residence work at the University of Iowa he received his Master of Arts degree in 1908 and after another two years of study was granted his Doctor of Philosophy degree in 1911. Doctor Garver then came to the Montana State Normal College as Professor of History and Economics.

He spent ten years in the service of the State Historical Society of Iowa as research assistant and later as research associate. During that time he contributed historical articles to the "Annals of Iowa," the "Iowa Journal of History and Politics," "The Mississippi Valley Historical Review," and "The American Political Science Review." He has been a regular attendant at many of the regional and national historical societies, has borne a part in their discussions, and has been on the program for formal articles and addresses. During his residence in Montana Doctor Garver has made a special study of Montana history and is frequently referred to as an authority on controverted points. Some of his historical articles have been published in the Butte Miner, the Anaconda Standard, the Butte Post, and he is also author of several pamphlets on Montana history. One of his services has been in assisting to mark and define important historical sites. He and Prof. M. L. Wilson, of the State Agricultural College at Bozeman, in 1917 followed the Custer Trail from the mouth of the Rosebud to the battlefield, identified a number of camps and also points on the battlefield, and placed permanent markers. Doctor Garver each summer gives a special course on Montana history at the State Normal College.

He is a member of the State Teachers' Association, the State Historical Society of Iowa, the Mississippi Valley Historical Society, the American Political Science Association and the American Historical Association. He served one year as president of the Dillon Chautauqua Association, was a library trustee while living at Sioux City, Iowa, and is a member and trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Dillon. Politically he is an independent voter. Doctor Garver has some important business interests, being a stockholder in the Beaverhead State Bank of Dillon, and president of the Slade Shoe Company of Des Moines, Iowa.

August 26, 1900, at Mount Vernon, Iowa, he married Miss Edna L. Sniffen, daughter of Robert and Ellen (Phelps) Sniffen. Her mother lives at Sioux City and her father, deceased, was a merchant, farmer and miner in Iowa and New Mexico. Mrs. Garver is a graduate of the Epworth Seminary in Iowa and received her A. B. degree from Cornell College at Mount Vernon, Iowa. Doctor and Mrs. Garver have two children: Raymond, born October 30, 1901, and Jeannette, born March 13, 1904.

FRANK CHARLTON NOBLE. Among other skilled and experienced men holding important positions with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company is Frank Charlton Noble, chief civil engineer, admittedly one of the corporation's most valued employes. He was born at Boston, Massachusetts, March 10, 1856, a son of John Noble, and grandson of Samuel Noble, who died at Boston before Frank C. Noble was born. He came to the United States from his native place of Londonderry, Ireland, in 1818, settling at once at Boston, where he spent the remainder of his life. The maternal grandfather of Frank C. Noble was James Hickman, and he was born in Eastham, Cape Cod, Massachusetts, and lived there and at Duxbury, Massachusetts, until 1849, when he went to California in search of gold, and died there about 1850. Until leaving Massachusetts he was a carpenter. He married Eusebia Sawyer, a native of Marlboro, Massachusetts, and she died in her native state.

John Noble was born at Boston, Massachusetts, in 1818, and died in that city in 1886, having been a civil engineer by profession. After the organization of the republican party he accepted its principles and adherred to them until his death, and was very active in local affairs, serving for years as a member of the city council of Boston and on the city school board and the English High School board, of which he was chairman for a considerable period. In him the Methodist Episcopal Church had a conscientious member and active worker. Prior to her marriage his wife bore the maiden name of Eusebia Sawyer Hickman, and she was born in Marlboro, Massachusetts, in 1820, her death occurring at Boston, Massachusetts, in 1904. She and her husband had the following children: Annie J., who is unmarried, lives at East Boston, Massachusets; Eliza Gerry, who married Fred Putnam, lives at Reading, Massachusetts, where he is engaged in clerking; Frank C., whose name heads this review; Mary E., who died at Boston, Massachusetts, in 1917, unmarried; and Edith Warren, who is also unmarried, lives in East Boston, Massachusetts.

Frank C. Noble attended the public schools of Boston, and was graduated from the Boston High School in 1873, and from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1881 as a civil engineer, he having elected to follow his father's calling. He immediately came West in 1881 and was a civil engineer for the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad in Nebraska, until 1894. In that year he came to Montana and was engaged in surveying the location from Anaconda west for the Butte, Anaconda and Pacific Railroad's west extension, but six months later returned to Boston, where he followed his profession until 1898. Once more he came west, this time to accept a position with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company as civil engineer, and has remained with it ever since, being promoted until he is now chief of the civil engineering department. His offices are in the general office building of the company's reduction plant two miles east of Anaconda. Like his father he early embraced the principles enunciated by the republican party, and also followed him in his choice of a church home, being a member of the Anaconda Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Noble belongs to the Montana Society of Engineers, and to the Anaconda Club. He is not married and resides at the Montana Hotel.

HARRY A. MACPHERSON, secretary, treasurer and manager of the MacPherson Mercantile Company of Deer Lodge, has been a resident of Montana for over thirty-five years. His father was one of the first steamboat captains to pilot a boat up the Yellowstone River. The MacPhersons have always been pioneers. He is descended from Brim MacPherson, one of four brothers who came from Scotland to Maryland in Colonial times. Two of these brothers remained around Baltimore and two others went to Canada.

Mr. MacPherson's grandfather E. B. MacPherson was born in Maryland in 1800 and during the '30s moved to Missouri, locating at Booneville, where he developed a large plantation, owned many slaves and was proprietor of the City Hotel of Booneville. When he came west he brought a number of thoroughbred horses on the boat down the Ohio and up the Mississippi. After coming west he formed a friendship with Abraham Lincoln, and though a slave holder he was very loyal to the great emancipator and at the time of the Civil war he set all his negroes free, giving each one a suit of clothes and $15.

Edward B. MacPherson, father of the Deer Lodge merchant, was born at Baltimore in 1830 and was a small child when his parents settled at Booneville, Missouri, where he was reared. As a young man he moved to St. Louis and was married in that city and became a steamboat captain. He not only piloted boats up and down the Mississippi between St. Louis and New Orleans, but also followed steamboating on the upper reaches of the Missouri River to Fort Benton, Montana, and along the Yellowstone branch of the Missouri. After many years of activity he retired in 1903, and lived at Deer Lodge until his death in 1905. He was a democrat and a member of the Presbyterian Church. Edward B. MacPherson married Mary Diller, who was born at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in 1832 and died at St. Louis in 1899. They had only two children, Harry A. and Mamie. The daughter died in 1876 when eight years of age.

Harry A. MacPherson was born at St. Louis, Missouri, October 25, 1864, and spent his early life in that city, attending the public schools, for three years the academic department of Washington University, and two years in the St. Louis High School. At the age of sixteen he went to work for a wholesale boot and shoe house at St. Louis, but in the summer of 1879 came to Montana, and for four years was with the firm of Caplice & Smith, general merchants at Philipsburg. He also represented them in their branch store at New Chicago, and in 1886 established his permanent home at Deer Lodge. Mr. MacPherson was continuously in the employ of the E. L. Bonner Mercantile Company, one of the oldest business organizations in the state, until 1909. In that year he established his present business, incorporated as the MacPherson Mercantile Company. He has a complete department store, well equipped and stocked in every department. The president of the company is Peter Pauly, Mrs. Peter Pauly is vice president, while Mr. MacPherson has the active management and is secretary and treasurer. The MacPherson store is at the corner of Main and Missouri Avenue.

Mr. MacPherson also owns a modern home at 414 Fourth Street and has two dwelling houses on Fifth Street. He served four years as a member of the city council, is a democrat, and is an active member and in 1918 was president of the Business Men's Association. He is a member of the Episcopal Church, is past chancellor commander of Valley Lodge No. 6 Knights of Pythias, a member of Royal Lodge, Loyal Order of Moose at Deer Lodge. In 1897 he married Miss Retta Ward, daughter of H. G. and Caroline (Turner) Ward, both now deceased. Her father was a pioneer liveryman at Deer Lodge, and for some years had charge of S. E. Larabie's race horses. Mr. and Mrs. MacPherson have one son, Kenneth, born June 21, 1903, now a student in the Powell County High School and member of the Boy Scouts organization.

CHARLES HAYDEN EGGLESTON, associate editor of the Anaconda Standard, one of the leading journals of this part of Montana, is recognized as one of the clever newspaper men of his day. He was born at Fulton, Oswego County, New York, February 16, 1858, a son of Charles S. Eggleston and grandson of Charles G. Eggleston, a native of New York State, who died near Utica, New York, before his grandson was born. For some years he had been a general merchant of that region. The Eggleston family originated in England, from whence representatives of it came to New York during the colonial period in the history of this country.

Charles S. Eggleston was born in the vicinity of Utica, New York, in 1824, and he died at Fulton, New York, in 1893. Reared at his birthplace, Charles S. Eggleston for a time was a clerk in a general store but in 1854 became professor of languages in the Falley Seminary at Fulton, New York. In 1860 he established a book store, and continued in charge of it until his death. A member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he took an active part in its support. His political faith made him a republican, and he was stanch in his adherence to the principles of that party. Charles S. Eggleston was married to Helen Paddock, born at Wolcott, New York, in 1831, and she died at Fulton, New York in 1867, having borne her husband the following children: Mary, who died at Fulton, New York, aged thirty years, married W. H. Bridge, a manufacturer, who survives her and lives at Fulton, New York; Frances H. who married A. B. Blodgett, superintendent of schools of Syracuse, New York, now deceased, lives at Washington, District of Columbia; Charles Hayden, whose name heads this review; Clara who died in infancy; and Theodore, who also died in infancy.

Charles Hayden Eggleston attended the public schools of Fulton, New York, and the University of Syracuse, New York, being graduated therefrom in 1878 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and member of the Greek letter college fraternity, Delta Upsilon. From 1878 to 1882 Mr. Eggleston was a bookkeeper in a brokerage office at Buffalo, New York, and then in the latter year entered the newspaper field as reporter for the Syracuse Standard, rising to be city editor in 1885, and continuing as such until 1889. In September, 1889, Mr. Eggleston came to Anaconda as associate editor of the Anaconda Standard, which he helped in organizing, the editor being J. H. Durston, now editor of the Butte Post. The other associate of Mr. Eggleston in organizing the Standard was W. W. Wallsworth. The first copy was issued September 5, 1889, and the policy of the paper has always been democratic. The financial backer of the paper was Marcus Daly. The Standard Publishing Company owns the fine building at the corner of Main and Third streets. The original plant was burned on February 4, 1918, and the present two-story brick structure was immediately built to replace it. The presses, job room and business office are on the ground floor, while the editorial, composing and stereotyping rooms are on the second. Several additional rooms are rented as offices. The plant is equipped with all modern machinery and appliances for the issuance of a daily paper and carrying on of a large job printing business. The Standard circulates all over the state and is the official paper of Deerlodge County. Mr. Eggleston is a democrat and is very active in his party, being elected on its ticket to the Upper House of the State Legislature of Montana in 1893 and 1907, serving in all eight years. While in office he served on the corporations other than municipal committees and other important committees, and served his constituents faithfully and well. Both by inheritance and belief he is a Methodist, and serves the church of Anaconda as trustee. Fraternally he belongs to Anaconda Lodge No. 239, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and socially is a member of the Anaconda Rotary Club, the Anaconda Club and the Anaconda Country Club. He owns a modern residence at No. 712 Hickory Street.

On December 23, 1884, Mr. Eggleston was married at Syracuse, New York, to Miss Jessie Virginia Coleman, a daughter of C. C. Coleman, who died in Syracuse, New York, as did his wife, where he had operated for a number of years as a real estate broker. Mr. and Mrs. Eggleston have one son, Charles L., who lives at Berkeley, California, and is with the Southern Pacific Railroad.

Rodney E. Foster. The active career of Rodney E. Foster of Dillon covers about twenty years. The first ten he spent as a railroad fireman and engineer in Michigan. The last ten he has lived in Montana, and in this great state has found bigger and broader opportunities for usefulness and success. He is one of the leading livestock commission men of Montana and is connected officially with several companies controlling great tracts of land and handling sheep and other livestock by the thousands.

Mr. Foster was born at Dundee, Michigan, January 19, 1880. His Foster ancestors were Scotch and English and were colonial settlers in the State of Maine. He might properly claim the inheritance of pioneer instinct from his father, C. D. Foster, who was a western plainsman for many years. C. D. Foster was born in Maine in 1837, and spent a number of years of his early life in Nevada and California. He had the distinction of being the first man to drive a stage out of Carson City, Nevada. He was all over the plains in the early days. For five years he was a stage driver in the Sacramento Valley of California and also did placer mining in the early days of the Pacific Coast. About 1877 he returned East and was satisfied after that with the quiet environment of the farm at Dundee, Michigan. He married there and was a farmer and stock raiser until his death in September, 1918. Politically he was a republican and was a very regular attendant and active supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife was Miss Lusetta Hall, who was born in Holland, Ohio, in 1843, and is still living at Dundee, Michigan. Their children were: F. A., agent for the Boston & Albany Railway Company, living at Litchfield, Connecticut; C. C. Foster, who died at Chicago in November, 1918, and for many years was a millinery salesman for Hyland Brothers; George W., a resident of Boston and traveling salesman for Strong & Sons, a boot and shoe house of that city; C. D., who is in the sheep business and handles about 3,000 head every year with home at Harrison, Montana; Arthur B., who was a clerk and died at Butte, Montana, in 1912; Rodney E.; and Isabelle, wife of Frank Strong, in the elevator and grain business at Rockwood, Michigan.

Rodney E. Foster received his early education in the public schools of Dundee, Michigan, graduating from high school in 1899. Soon afterward he entered the service of the Grand Trunk Railway, and was fireman five years and locomotive engineer five years, his headquarters being at Detroit. He came to Montana and located at Dillon in 1909, and has since engaged in the livestock business. As a livestock commission man his offices are in the Telephone Building at Dillon. Mr. Foster is associated with Senator E. O. Selway as assistant general manager of the Selway Sheep Company. Senator Selway is president, Frank Schultz is vice president, and George M. Melton is secretary and treasurer. This company has one ranch of 7,000 acres on Blacktail Creek, and two other ranches comprising 3,000 acres between Divide and Melrose. The company's operations are conducted on a large scale and involve the handling of about 23,000 sheep annually.

Mr. Foster is president of the Montana Livestock Commission Company and in association with George M. Melton owns a ranch of 2,400 acres with water rights at Feely, Montana. Mr. Foster is a republican voter, a member of the Episcopal Church, is affiliated with Oroy Plata Lodge No. 390 of the Elks at Virginia City, and is a former member and past chancellor commander of the Knights of Pythias. He and his family live in a modern home at 903 South Washington Street. He married at Kansas City, Missouri, June 10, 1904, Miss Emma G. Churchill, daughter of Charles and Addie (McDaniels) Churchill. Mrs. Churchill lives with Mr. and Mrs. Foster. Mr. Churchill, deceased, was for many years chief mail clerk on the Missouri Pacific Railway with headquarters at St. Louis. Mr. and Mrs. Foster have two children: Rodney C. and Walter.

Lewis Clark Ford, M. D. The oldest physician in point of service at Lima, Montana, Dr. Lewis Clark Ford, Sr., came to this state thirty years ago and has since been in continuous practice. During this long period he has not only risen to a high place in his profession, but has been an active, helpful and constructive factor in the development of the section, his name and services having been identified with numerous movements which have contributed to progress and advancement along various lines.

Doctor Ford belongs to a family which originated in England and crossed the Atlantic during the seventeenth century. He was born at Keokuk, Iowa, July 4, 1852, a son of Eliakim Reed and Margaret (Stilwell) Ford. His father was born December 10, 1822, in the State of New York, and as a young man removed to Keokuk, Iowa, where he was married June 23, 1849, to Margaret Stilwell, born at Keokuk, November 22, 1829, as the first white child born there, a daughter of Moses and Anna Maria (Van Orsdal) Stilwell. She died at Keokuk, May 18, 1875, having been the mother of seven children: Eliakim, born May 9, 1850, who died December 2, 1851; Lewis Clark; Ernest, born August 18, 1854, who died March 29, 1855; Frank Bailey, born October 4, 1856, who when last heard from was a resident of Phoenix, Arizona; Edgar, born February 22, 1859, who died August 23, 1864; George Lee, born February 22, 1862, who died August 23, 1864; and Anna Maria, born October 13, 1867, the wife of Clarence M. King, of Seattle, Washington. Eliakim R. Ford married for his second wife November 14, 1878, Jane Lee, of South Peters, St. Charles County, Missouri, who died at De Soto, that state, in 1912. Eliakim Reed Ford was a banker, real estate broker and prominent business man and leading citizen. In 1864 he came to what is now Beaverhead County, Montana, then Owyhee County and a part of Idaho, to develop a mine, but decided to buy and operate a stampmill instead, and this venture proving unsucessful, he lost a fortune and returned to Keokuk, where he bought into the Iowa Coal Company, which he conducted at Oskaloosa, with headquarters at Keokuk. He was president of that company until he disposed of his interests in 1866 and went to St. Louis, where he interested himself in real estate ventures until 1870, then going to St. Charles, Missouri, where he had large and important interests. Eventually he went to Richfield, Missouri, where he settled down on a farm, and there his death occurred December 29, 1886. He was a republican of the old school, and a memof the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. At the outbreak of the Civil war he was acting as professor of gynecology at the University of Iowa Medical College, and became the surgeon in charge of the medical corps of the home guards, with which he served during the period of the war.

Lewis Clark Ford attended the public schools of Keokuk and the Peekskill Military Academy, at Peekskill-on-the-Hudson, and in 1868 was graduated from the Keokuk High School. Following this he clerked in a bookstore at Keokuk for two years, and then went to Cornwall, Missouri, as agent for the Iron Mountain Railway, and while there carried on merchandising and acted as superintendent of a mine for two years. Returning to St. Louis, for eighteen months he was engaged in the coal business, and then went to Keokuk again. Accidental happenings often change the entire course of men's lives, and it was so in the case of Doctor Ford. At Keokuk he imposed upon himself the duty of caring for a close friend who had been injured in an accident, and while performing this service he became impressed with the value of the medical profession and decided to enter that science. His preliminary studies were prosecuted under Dr. J. C. Hughes, Sr., dean of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Keokuk, and in 1876 he was graduated from that institution with the degree of Doctor of Medicine.

Doctor Ford began the practice of medicine in 1876 at Keokuk, Iowa, and then moved to Nauvoo, Illinois, where he remained for two years, and then went to Como, Colorado, where he was surgeon for the Denver & South Park Railroad for two years, then going to Monte Vista, that state, where he remained until 1889. During that period he served as coroner of Park County, Colorado, and county physician of Rio Grande County. On March 29, 1889, he took up his residence and began practice at Lima, Montana, where he has since remained in continuous practice, and at this time is the pioneer physician of the city. From 1909 until 1919 he served as coroner of Beaverhead County, and during the past thirty years has held his present position as assistant surgeon for the Oregon Short Line. His standing in his profession is of the highest, and he is generally esteemed as a man of the highest professional ethics by his fellow members in the Montana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. For a number of years he served as justice of the peace, and for twelve years acted as postmaster at Lima, during the administrations of Presidents McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft. He votes the straight republican ticket.

Doctor Ford is the owner of a modern residence on Main Street, several other dwellings, Ford's Hall and the drug store building, and is a stockholder in the Lima State Bank. With other progressive and public-spirited men he has backed movements which have had for their object the development and betterment of the section, principal among which were the reservoir and ditch schemes. Associated in these projects were Charles T. Stewart, secretary of state, Edward Ripley, of Dillon, A. J. Holmes, of Garden City, Kansas, and James Dresser, of Mason City, Michigan, their object being the development of the reservoir and ditch twelve miles east of Lima. These men were starting out to make their fortunes at that time, and were not men of large means, with the possible exception of Mr. Dresser, who was relied upon to finance the proposition, although he had to borrow from the Mason City Bank. The reservoir was completed, a tunnel dug through the sand rock at the side of the dam, which was located in Madison (now Beaverhead) County, and the reservoir was started in 1891, but a series of misfortunes, including the year of the financial panic and the caving of the roof of the tunnel in 1894, caused Doctor Ford and the others to dispose of their interests, and the cattlemen, who did not wish homesteaders to occupy the lands of Red Rock Valley, succeeded with other influences in having the dam condemned. Later Joseph Williams, Judge Lindsay, William Stewart, and Marco Medin took up the matter but later sold out to a Chicago financier who in turn sold it to the Beaverhead Valley Water Users Association. The reservoir and dam now supply the entire Red Rock Valley, as well as some farm lands beyond this region. Doctor Ford is prominent as a fraternalist, belonging to Evergreen Lodge No. 45, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Lima, of which he is past master; Dillon Chapter No. 8, Royal Arch Masons; St. Elmo Commandery No. 7, Knights Templar, of Dillon; Butte Consistory, thirty-second degree; Bagdad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Butte, and Elva Boardman Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, of Lima, of which he is past patron. He is also a member of the Montana State Medical Association and the American Medical Association.

On August 16, 1878, Doctor Ford was united in marriage at Nauvoo, Illinois, with Lucie Miller Ohler, daughter of Benjamin and Susan (Adams) Ohler, born at Barbourville, Kentucky, November 17, 1854. To this union there have been born four children: Lewis Clark, Jr., born July 9, 1879, who resides on his ranch east of Snowline, Beaverhead County; Lucie Miller, born in December, 1880, who was married June 25, 1907, to Dr. Maurice Anson Walker, a physician and surgeon of Dillon; Adda Susan, born March 22, 1886, who was married March 27, 1911, to Raymond Alton Richardson, of Lima, a conductor on the Oregon Short Line Railway; and Lucille, born February 22, 1895, who died in infancy.

THOMAS J. MCKENZIE, M. D. Distinguished not only as the pioneer physician and surgeon at Anaconda, but as a leader also in its civil development and public affairs, Dr. Thomas J. McKenzie for thirty years has been one of the needed, practical, far-sighted men of this city whose earnest efforts in every direction have been for the general welfare. Doctor McKenzie is a native of Tennessee, and was born at Lexington, March 27, 1865.

The parents of Doctor McKenzie were Dr. James F. and Elizabeth (Galbraith) McKenzie. The father was born in 1824, in Kentucky, but was reared and married in Tennessee. He was a graduate of the medical department of the Kentucky University at Louisville. After practicing his profession for thirty-five years at Lexington, Tennessee, and in the vicinity, he retired and in 1884 removed to Texas, and his death occurred at Hillsboro in that state in 1891. During the war between the states he served in the Confederate army. In politics he was always a democrat, belonged to the Masonic fraternity and was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The mother of Doctor McKenzie survives and lives at Fort Worth, Texas. Her birth took place in 1839, in Mississippi. They were the parents of the following children: John F., who is a farmer near Pittsburg, Texas; Emma, who is the wife of D. M. Alexander, an attorney at Fort Worth, Texas; Thomas J.; Jasper N., who died at Hillsboro, Texas, when aged twenty-one years; Dan, who is in Government service at Fort Worth; Ada, who is the wife of Frank S. Sullenberger, president of a bank at Amarillo, Texas; Oda, who lives at Fort Worth; Ida, who is the wife of Ross Ozier, of Amarillo, where he has a cattle ranch; Urna, who is the wife of A. J. McKinnon, a banker at Tucson, Arizona; William C., who is a cattleman near Amarillo; Maude, who is the wife of W. C. Corn, who has extensive cattle interests near Fort Worth; and Mertie, who resides at Fort Worth, Texas.

Thomas J. McKenzie was primarily educated in the public schools of Lexington, Tennessee, and later of Henderson, Kentucky, and was graduated from the high school of the latter city in 1879, then entering the University of West Tennessee, from which he was graduated in 1884. In 1885 he went to Hillsboro, Texas, where he spent the year punching cattle. In the meanwhile his preparatory medical reading was not neglected, for he early chose his father's profession, and in 1886 he entered the University Medical College at Louisville, from which he was graduated in February, 1889, with his degree of M. D. For about a year afterward he served as an interne in the Louisville City Hospital, and on many occasions has attended clinics and taken post graduate courses in the Polyclinic and Rush Medical schools, Chicago; the Post Graduate School in New York, and with the Mayo Brothers at Rochester, Minnesota. Doctor McKenzie came to Anaconda, March 9, 1889, and has remained here. His professional standing is high and he is identified with all the leading medical organizations of this section, being a member of the Deer Lodge County Medical Association and is former president, is an ex-president also of the Montana State Medical Association, and belongs to and is highly valued in the American Medical Association. For twenty-two years he was surgeon for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and for the past twenty-six years has been surgeon for the Butte, Anaconda and Pacific Railway, this connection beginning before the railroad came through Anaconda.

Not alone has Doctor McKenzie been permitted to devote himself to his profession. Recognition and appreciation of his public spirit, his sense of justice, his business ability and sterling character led to his election as mayor of Anaconda in 1905 on the democratic ticket, and he served in 1906 and 1907, during which time many public improvements were made, needed reforms suggested and inoperative laws put in operation, all for the betterment of the city.

At Anaconda, in 1891, Doctor McKenzie was united in marriage to Miss Thula Hardenbrook, who is a daughter of A. and Thula (Walker) Hardenbrook, the latter of whom is deceased. The father of Mrs. McKenzie is a retired physician now living at Missoula, Montana, who came to Anaconda in pioneer times. Doctor and Mrs. McKenzie have had five children, namely: Frank W., who was a corporal in the aviation service in the great war, was sent overseas and was on his way to Metz when the armistice was signed, was mustered out of the National army July 1, 1919, and is now at home; Allen, who died when aged eight years; Anna, who is a graduate of the Anaconda High School and completed the junior year at the State University at Missoula, is a stenographer for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Anaconda; Elizabeth, who attends school in the city; and Thomas J., Jr., the youngest who is nine years of age. Mrs. McKenzie is vice regent of the Daughters of the Revolution for the State of Montana and her daughters also belong to this patriotic body. Doctor McKenzie belongs to Acacia Lodge No. 33, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and to the Rotary Club of Anaconda. He maintains his offices in the Electric Light Building on Main Street, and owns his handsome modern residence at No. 406 Elm Street, Anaconda. He takes pride in an intelligent and worthy ancestry that leads back to Scotland.

CHARLES E. ASPLING. On of the earliest settlers at Deer Lodge was the late Thomas Aspling. His son Charles E. Aspling came to Montana when about ten years of age, and as he entered the shop of a pioneer newspaper soon afterward he could make a strong claim to being one of the oldest printers and newspaper men in the state. He has not been in the newspaper and printing business continuously, though during the past fifty years he has served a number of the best known publications in Montana. Mr. Aspling is proprietor and editor of the Powell County Post at Deer Lodge.

He was born at Parkville, Missouri, January 24, 1854. His grandfather Peter Aspling brought his family from Canterbury, England, in 1824, and settled in Southern Missouri around Springfield, where he spent the rest of his life as a farmer. The late Thomas Aspling was born at Canterbury, England, in 1815, and lived a full century. His death occurred at Deer Lodge in 1915. He was about nine years of age when he accompanied the family to this country, and from his father's farm in Southern Missouri he went to St. Louis, where he grew to manhood. Not long afterward he settled in the extreme western Missouri on the Missouri River at Parkville, then an important and historic town. He married there and was an Indian trader and also owned a grist and flour mill. In 1857 he opened a stock of goods a few miles south of Parkville in what is now Kansas City, Missouri, and was one of the first merchants of that now splendid metropolis. Thomas Aspling had all the qualities of the western pioneer, possessing the ability to adapt himself to the difficult and frequently dangerous circumstances and with a zest for adventure that led him to keep well out on the frontier of western civilization. In 1864 he came to Montana and was a placer miner at Virginia City, Alder Gulch and in the Last Chance mine near Helena. Thomas Aspling established his pioneer business at Deer Lodge in 1866. At first he ran a commissary for the miners, and later engaged in the general merchandise business, continuing it upwards of forty years until he retired in 1905. At the time of his death he was one of the oldest members of the Masonic fraternity, having joined that organization in St. Louis. He became a charter member of Deer Lodge Lodge No. 14, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and was also a member of Valley Chapter No. 4, Royal Arch Masons. He voted independently in politics and was a prominent Presbyterian, helping establish that church in Deer Lodge and serving it as an elder for many years. Thomas Aspling married Georgiana Kelley, who was born at Fredericksburg, Virginia, in 1832. She died at Deer Lodge in 1899. They were the parents of three sons. T. P., the oldest, was a merchant at Dupuyer in Choteau County, Montana, where he died in 1907. Charles E. is the second in age. Robert, the youngest, accidentally shot himself while out hunting at the age of fourteen.

Charles E. Aspling left his books and studies in the public schools of Deer Lodge at the age of fifteen. He had entered the printing office of the Independent when it was established at Deer Lodge in 1867, and learned the trade and worked for the Independent four years, later helping move it to Helena. Afterwards he returned to Deer Lodge and for fourteen years was foreman of the printing office of the New Northwest. Beginning in 1884 Mr. Aspling was in business as a merchant at Anaconda four years, and when the Anaconda Standard was established he joined that publication and was with it for eight years. Mr. Aspling left the newspaper office to do some active work as a miner through Powell and Granite counties, and is still interested in mining being president of the Elk Mining Company. Resuming his residence at Deer Lodge in 1905 he was with the Silver State for three years, and in 1909 established the Powell County Post, of which he has since been editor and proprietor. This is the leading paper in Powell County, having a circulation over that and surrounding counties, and is democratic in politics. The plant on Missouri Avenue just off Main Street has every facility in the way of machinery and equipment for the publication of a modern newspaper. Mr. Aspling owns the business and his son James is his active partner in the business. His substantial home adjoins his printing plant.

Mr. Aspling has always been a democratic voter. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is a past chancellor commander of Valley Lodge No. 6, Knights of Pythias, and a past grand master of the exchequer of the Grand Lodge of Montana. He is a member of the Deer Lodge Chamber of Commerce.

In 1875 at Deer Lodge he married Miss Mattie Emma Self, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Self, now deceased. Her father followed the trade of machinist in Nebraska and Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Aspling have four children. Their oldest son Charles M. volunteered in the army in 1917 and went overseas in 1918 as a corporal in the Fourth Engineers. During one of the drives of the summer of 1918 he was severely gassed, and was sent to a field hospital and afterward invalided home, and had a long period of recovery at Fort Bayard, New Mexico. He has since returned home and is now deputy county clerk of Powell County. The only daughter, Mary E., is the wife of Arthur E. Davis, an abstractor at Butte. Thomas B. is a machinist in the local shops at Deer Lodge of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway. James S., his father's partner, is a graduate of the Powell County High School.

FREDERICK LAIST, general manager of the reduction department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Anaconda, and one of the most experienced men of his calling in the country, has won his present standing through his own merit. He was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, October 30, 1878, a son of Otto Laist, now a resident of Oakland, California. Otto Laist was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1836, and when about twenty years of age came to the United States, settling at Cincinnati, where until 1892 he was engaged in the manufacture of glycerine, but in that year disposed of his interests and went to Oakland, California, to become an employe of the California Powder Company. He is now retired from active life. Politically Otto Laist is a republican. The maiden name of his wife was Anna Hochstetter, and she was born in Wurtemberg, Germany. Their children are as follows: Alexander, who lives at Hancock, Michigan, is superintendent of the Quincy smelter; Theodore F., who is an architect of Chicago; Otto, who is a physician and surgeon of San Francisco, California; Frederick, whose name heads this review; and Herbert H. R., who is a manufactures' agent of San Francisco, California.

Frederick Laist attended the public schools of Cincinnati, Ohio, through the sixth grade, and then his parents moving to Oakland, California, he completed the grammar course and took the high school course in that city, being graduated in the latter in 1898, following which he became a student at the University of California at Berkeley, from which he was graduated in 1901, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. In the fall of that same year Mr. Laist became a teacher in the Santa Ana High School of chemistry and physics, and a year later left California for the University of Utah, at which he was instructor of chemistry for a year. For the subsequent year he was identified with work in the mines and smelters of Utah, coming to Anaconda in the spring of 1903 and entering the testing department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and has since remained with this corporation, rising steadily through the positions of chief chemist, superintendent of the blast furnace, assistant superintendent, general superintendent and metallurgical manager to his present one of general manager of the reduction department, including the plants at Anaconda and Great Falls, Montana. He also occupies an advisory position with reference to the plans for the work of the company in South America. The Anaconda Copper Mining Company has large properties under the name of the Andes Copper Mining Company, of which Mr. Laist is consulting engineer. The plant and offices of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company are located three miles east of Anaconda. Under Mr. Laist's supervivsion are 5,000 employes at the two plants of Anaconda and Great Falls. Mr. Laist is an independent republican. During the great war he took an active part in filling the quota for this region in the various Liberty Loan drives, and was president of the War Chest fund, raising considerably more than the allotment for his district. Taking an intelligent interest in the work of the Rotary Club, Mr. Laist served it as president in 1918, and was president of the Anaconda Club in 1917. He also belongs to the Anaconda Country Club, the Silver Bow Club of Butte, Montana, the American Institute of Mining Engineers, the American Chemical Society, and the Sigma Psi Greek letter fraternity. The Laist residence at No. 218 West Seventh Street, Anaconda, is owned by him.

In April, 1908, Mr. Laist was married to Miss

Rosalba Murphy, at Butte, Montana, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Murphy. Mrs. Murphy is deceased, but Mr. Murphy survives and lives at Portland, Oregon. He is now retired, but at one time was a pioneer mining man of Butte, Montana. Mrs. Laist was graduated from the Butte High School. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Laist are as follows: James Wallace, born in August, 1910; Dorothy Ann, who was born in August, 1912; and Virginia, who was born in September, 1914. Mr. Laist is a constructive optimist, with a practical vision and an abiding faith in the possibilities and prosperity of Anaconda, and any measure looking toward its advancement has in him a sponsor. His work during the period this country was at war was of a character tht will not be easily forgotten, and he is performing equally important work in the difficult reconstruction days which are proving the worth of real patriots, even more than when actual warfare was in progress.

JOHN H. DUFFY, who has the distinction of being the leading attorney of Anaconda, is a man of acute mind, carefully developed to its full powers, his natural acumen sharpened by training and experience, which attributes have enabled him to augment his resources in handling the important litigation entrusted to his care, and to gain verdicts for his clients others less learned and adept would have failed to obtain. He was born at Sacramento, California, March 4, 1859, a son of James Duffy. The birth of James Duffy took place at Strokestown, County Roscommon, Ireland in 1821, and he died at Sacramento, California, in 1893. Leaving Ireland when but a lad of sixteen years, he reached New York City just when enlistments were being asked for the Mexican war, and he offered his services to what he intended should be his adopted country. Although too young for a soldier, he was accepted as a drummer boy, and as such participated in the ensuing campaign and was a source of inspiration to his comrades. As a resultant effect of the gold excitement of 1849 James Duffy went to Sacramento in 1850, and mined on the American and Feather rivers, and in Nevada County, California, prospecting for gold and meeting with moderate success. He was a practical man, and soon saw that there was much money to be made freighting in a section where there were no railroads and necessities had to be brought in from the outside. In this he reaped a harvest that was deserved, for he was one of the pioneer freighters and endured many hardships and encountered dangers that might have proven fatal had he not been unsually courageous and resourceful. With the outbreak of the Civil war this intrepid frontiersman and former drummer boy enlisted in the Union army in 1861, and served until its close, and then having helped to secure peace, came back to Sacramento and was engaged in the construction work of the state capitol building until it was completed. As an aftermath of his freighting experiences Mr. Duffy then bought a necessary number of horses, wagons and other equipment and established himself in an express business that he conducted until his death, having made himself useful all his life, and proving a valuable asset to the country to which he had come in his immature boyhood. He was a democrat. Both by inheritance and conviction he was a member of the Roman Catholic Church. His wife bore the maiden name of Catherine Smith, and she was born at West Meath, Ireland, in 1823, and died at Los Angeles, California, in 1916. Of the six children born to James Duffy and his wife, John H. Duffy is the only one who outlived childhood.

After attending the public schools of Sacramento, John H. Duffy took a business and collegiate course under President E. C. Atkinson at the Sacramento Business College, from which he was graduated in June, 1876, and in August of that year began the study of law in the office of J. N. Young. After a year he went in the office of J. C. Goods, a leading attorney of Sacramento, and when Mr. Goods died seventeen months later Mr. Duffy entered the office of J. W. Armstrong, who was later superior judge of Sacramento County, and remained in that office for two years. For the subsequent year he was with C. T. Jones, and then returned to the office of J. N. Young, where he remained until March 3, 1882. On March 12th of that year he came to Montana and located at Butte, was admitted to the bar in August, and thereafter was engaged in a general law practice at Butte until June, 1895, when he came to Anaconda, and has been located here ever since. His practice is not confined to any local area, but extends all over the state. Mr. Duffy's offices are in Nos. 9, 10 and 12 Durston Block, and there he has what is perhaps the most complete working library in Montana. Mr. Duffy is a Wilsonian democrat, and has been very active in his party, serving as county attorney of Deer Lodge County for two consecutive terms, from 1897 to 1901. He is a member of the Roman Catholic Church. The Anaconda Club holds his membership, and he also belongs to Anaconda Lodge No. 239, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, with which order he has been connected for twenty years, and for four years he has been a trustee of the local lodge. His modern residence at No. 122 West Fifth Street is one of the very best ones at Anaconda, and is surrounded by beautifully kept grounds 90 by 100 feet.

In December, 1887, Mr. Duffy was married at Deer Lodge, Montana, to Miss Martha Welch, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Welch of Athens, Michigan, where he was a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Duffy have the following children: Catherine Amelia and Floy Marie. The elder daughter was married to W. A. McIntyre, and they have three children, namely: Duffy McIntyre, who was born in 1915; Floy Martha, who was born in 1916; and Mary Belle, who was born June 9, 1919. Mrs. McIntyre was graduated from the Anaconda High School and also from a Miss Clark's School of Washington, District of Columbia. The McIntyre family residence is on the corner of Eighth and Hickory streets, Anaconda, which Mr. McIntyre owns, and he and his brother, Alexander McIntyre, conduct a men's furnishing store on East Park Street. The younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Duffy is a graduate of the Anaconda High School, and is now residing with her parents.

D. A. GALT is secretary and treasurer of the Beaverhead Motors Company, Incorporated, at Dillon. Mr. Galt, a newcomer in Montana, is an aggressive young business man, and has had a varied and successful experience as an engineer and in other lines of industry.

He was born at Sterling, Illinois, May 6, 1890. His ancestors came from England and were early settlers in Pennsylvania. His father, LeRoy Galt, was born at Sterling, Illinois, in 1850, and spent his active business life there as a manufacturer of farm implements and as a banker. He retired from business in 1918 and now lives at Winter Park, Florida. He is a republican, an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and rendered many valuable services to his home community in Illinois. He married Miss Annie Carter, who was born in Worcester, Massachusetts, in 1852 and died at Sterling, Illinois, in 1896. They had four children, D. A. Galt being the youngest. The oldest is Thomas A., in the sales department of the Adams-Westlake Company, a prominent and nationally known house manufacturing brass and other castings. Margaret is the wife of J. E. Gilroy, director of physical education in the public schools of Gary, Indiana. Helen is employed in the Daly Bank & Trust Company of Anaconda, Montana. LeRoy Galt married for his second wife Mary Harvey, a native of Sterling, Illinois, and they have one son, Robert, now a student in the University of Florida.

D. A. Galt graduated from the Sterling High School in 1909, and finished his sophomore year in the University of Illinois at Champaign. He specialized in science and engineering courses. In 1911 he went to the extreme southern point of the United States, Brownsville, Texas, and was employed as civil engineer on the canal there and also did some farming. In 1914 he went to Freeport, Illinois, and at Bridgeport was engaged in the vegetable and greenhouse business until May, 1918. At that date he identified himself with Montana and was for about nine months city engineer of Anaconda. He came to Dillon in March, 1919, and acquired an interest in the Beaverhead Motors Company, Incorporated. The business was incorporated March 10, 1919. Roy Murray, of Butte, is president, Fred Woodside, of Dillon, is vice president, and D. A. Galt has the responsibilities of secretary and treasurer. The company are the accredited agents over a large section of Montana who are handling the Ford cars and Ford tractors. The plant and offices are on Idaho Street.

Mr. Galt is a republican voter and a member of the Presbyterian Church. In 1913, at Sterling, Illinois, he married Miss Helen Briggs, a daugher of F. D. and Edith (McDermott) Briggs, residents of Sterling. Her father is a traveling representative of the Rock Falls Manufacturing Company. Mr. and Mrs. Galt have one son, William Briggs, born January 22, 1917.

Joseph Eaton Monroe. The service by which his name is most widely known in Montana was Professor Monroe's connection for over twenty years with the Montana Normal College at Dillon, where he was head of the physics and chemistry department, and later president of the institution. He still takes a great interest in educational affairs, being president for 1919 of the Montana State Teachers Association. However he gave up his work at the Montana Normal College early in that year and is now engaged in banking and is also mayor of Dillon.

Mr. Monroe was born at Xenia, Ohio, November 26, 1864. His grandfather was Robert Munro, as he spelled the name, a land owner at Dornoch, Scotland, where he spent his life. Robert was a son of James Munro. Hugh Monroe, father of J. E. Monroe, was born at Dornoch in 1807, was well educated, and as a youth spent some time in the British army. He came to the United States in 1840, and for five years was a contractor on the old Wabash and Erie Canal, his residence during that time being at Toledo. He then moved to the southwestern section of Ohio, was married at Xenia, and spent the greater part of his life as a farmer. He died at Mound Valley, Kansas, in 1882. He began voting in this country as a whig and later was a stanch republican. He was a devout United Presbyterian. Hugh Monroe married Jemima Steele, who was born at Urbana, Ohio, in 1823 and died at Muncie, Indiana, in 1892. There were ten children: Elizabeth C., of Mound Valley, Kansas, where her husband, James Beggs, was a pioneer farmer and stockman and died in April, 1919; Robert W., who died at Muncie, Indiana, in 1916; Sarah J., a resident of Muncie, Indiana, widow of John A. Keener, who was an attorney; Mary E., who died at Muncie in 1914, wife of Dr. G. R. Green, a physician and surgeon at Muncie; Agnes, wife of Robert H. Traver, a retired stockman at Poughkeepsie, New York; John Riley, who died at Mound Valley, Kansas, in 1909, whose business was as a druggist; Jennie F., who died unmarried at Muncie in 1906; James A., a contractor and builder at Tulsa, Oklahoma; Anna R., twin sister of James, wife of J. O. Wilson, a banker at Mound Valley, Kansas.

Joseph Eaton Monroe was the youngest of the family. He received most of his education in the public schools of Muncie, Indiana, graduating from high school there in the class of 1879. He soon afterward went to Mound Valley, Kansas, and prepared for a career of teaching in the Fort Scott Normal College at Fort Scott, Kansas. He was graduated with the class of 1886, and during the next three years was principal of a normal school at Great Bend, Kansas. In 1889 he went abroad, back to the land of his ancestors, and spent several years in post-graduate work specializing in physics and chemistry in the University of Scotland at Glasgow. After this intensive training Professor Monroe returned to Fort Scott, Kansas and was professor of physics and chemistry in the Normal College in that city until 1897.

He came to Dillon in 1897 to take the Chair of Physics and Chemistry in the Montana Normal College. In 1906 he was given the additional duties of vice president, and in 1912 became president, and for seven years gave his talents and energies to the administrative duties of his office. He resigned March 22, 1919. He is now associated with the State Bank of Dillon.

Mr. Monroe was elected mayor of Dillon on April 7, 1919. During his residence at Dillon he has interested himself in all the larger questions of local welfare and the first months spent in his present office have witnessed a very thorough and business like administration of municipal affairs. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church and is a prominent Mason, being past master of Dillon Lodge No. 23, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, past high priest of Dillon Chapter No. 8, Royal Arch Masons, past commander of St. Elmo Commandery No. 7, Knights Templar, and in 1914 was potentate of Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Butte. Mr. Monroe owns a modern home at 506 Atlantic Street and another dwelling house at 430 Atlantic Street. He married at Wellsville, Missouri, in 1895, Miss Elizabeth Eidson, daughter of Matthew B. and Mary J. (Waters) Eidson. Her mother is a resident of St. Louis. Her father, who spent his active life as a contractor and architect, died at Fort Scott, Kansas, in 1910.

Charles Henry Williams. While Montana in former years had many immense domains owned by individuals or syndicates devoted to the grazing of livestock, the developments of recent years have left few of these large holdings. One of the big undivided ranches at the present time is that owned by the firm of Williams & Pauly. This firm has an immense sheep ranch not far from Deer Lodge. Senator Williams of this firm is a Montana pioneer and has been in the livestock industry for many years and he is one of the best known stock men in the state. His four terms as State Senator have also made him widely known as a figure in public life.

Mr. Williams was born in Appanoose County, Iowa, September 28, 1856. In the paternal line he is of Welsh ancestry, his forefathers having settled in Vermont in Colonial times. His grandfather was born in Bennington County, Vermont, about 1809 and moved West and became a pioneer in the Ohio Western Reserve, acquiring a farm not far from the Village of Cleveland and now almost a part of that city. He lived there until he died in 1890. He married a Miss Muzzy of Vermont of French ancestry. Z. E. Williams, father of Senator Williams, was born in Bennington County, Vermont, in 1825 and was a child when his parents moved to the vicinity of Cleveland, Ohio, where he grew up on his father's farm. That farm is still intact, being owned by Senator Williams and other heirs and is a highly valuable property. Z. E. Williams was married at Cleveland and for many years was a railroad contractor. In 1848 he moved to Sheboygan County, Wisconsin, was a pioneer farmer in that locality, and in 1853 went to Appanoose County, Iowa, where he cleared up and developed one of the best farms in that then wilderness section remote from any railroad. He was a hard working Iowa farmer for many years, but in 1908 retired and moved to Deer Lodge, Montana, where he died in 1913. Politically he was a democrat. Z. E. Williams married Aseneth E. Jackson who was born at Troy, New York, in 1828 and died at Deer Lodge, Montana, in 1903. Her father, William Jackson, was a Michigan farmer and was a cousin of President Andrew Jackson. The children of Z. E. Williams and wife were: Delilah, who died in Appanoose County, Iowa, in 1878, unmarried; Charles Henry; Adda M., who died at Anaconda, Montana, at the age of thirty years, wife of Arthur Truscott who is now a mine operator near Princeton, Montana; W. J. Williams associated with his brother Charles on the ranch; Emma who died unmarried in 1878.

Charles Henry Williams attended rural schools in his native Iowa county, and spent two years in the State Normal School at Kirksville, Missouri. For a period of six years he farmed in the summer in Appanoose County and taught school in the winter.

In 1882 Mr. Williams hitched up a pair of mules and with a wagon drove the entire distance from Eastern Iowa to Montana. He was seventy-nine days making the journey. One of his first acts after coming to the territory was homesteading 160 acres six miles north of Deer Lodge. That homestead is included in his present magnificent ranch, and has been a part of his holdings for over thirty-five years. At the present time Senator Williams and his partner Peter Pauly own 30,000 acres of patented land and they lease 10,000 acres more. They handle about 20,000 sheep annually and the pride of their ranch is a herd of 300 pure bred Shorthorn cattle. The ranch leaves nothing to be desired in the way of modern facilities and improvements. One of the features is the beautiful country home of Senator Williams, a house of fourteen rooms lighted by electricity with hot and cold running water, and all the conveniences of a modern home. On his farm he also has one of the largest and best equipped barns in the state, with many other buildings for the housing of stock and feed. Convenient to the ranch is a Milwaukee railway station, affording excellent shipping facilities. Senator Williams is also president of the Cochrell Implement Company.

He has long been a prominent figure in republican politics. He was elected a member of the State Senate for the thirteenth session, and has been re-elected and has served in the fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth sessions. For several terms he has been a member of the judiciary committee and in the sixteenth session was on that committee and has been a hard working member of other committees and also on the floor of the Senate. In the sixteenth session Mr. Williams was chairman of the joint committee for investigating the State Department. Out of the work of this committee came the creation of the present efficiency commission for reorganizing the various state departments and getting the business of the state administration reduced to a basis of efficiency, so that the citizens may know the work and expenditures to be credited to each department. Senator Williams is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce at Deer Lodge.

In 1880 in Appanoose County, Iowa, he married Miss Allie Davis, daughter of Thomas C. and Emeline Davis, the latter now deceased. Her father is a retired farmer at Alpha, Kentucky. Senator and Mrs. Williams had a family of five children: Lee the oldest is a graduate in electrical and civil engineering at Cornell University, New York, is practicing his profession and is also interested in the Cochrell Implement Company at Deer Lodge. Bessie is a graduate of the Montana State Agricultural College at Bozeman, attended the Lake Forest Seminary in Illinois, and is the wife of Frank Tavenner, formerly of Lewiston, Montana, now a resident of Ellensburg, Washington, and an electrical engineer employed in the construction department of the Milwaukee Railway and also having been identified with the work of electrification of various sections of that road. The third child, Earl, died at the age of thirteen. Ray, who attended the State Agricultural College at Bozeman and for two years the Polytechnic Institute of California is on his father's ranch. Walter is a student in the public schools of Deer Lodge.

PETER PAULY. From sheep herder to membership in a firm that controls one of the largest holdings and runs some of the largest flocks in Southwestern Montana, Mr. Pauly has had an enviable business record as a Montana resident for more than thirty years.

Mr. Pauly is of French nativity and ancestry and was born at Sarrance, France, December 25, 1871. His father Bernard was born in 1835 and died in 1909, and spent all his life at Sarrance, where he was a farmer and cattle raiser. He was active in public affairs, serving as mayor of his home town, was a French soldier and a member of the Catholic Church. He married Charlotte Pefaur who was born in 1844 at Oloron and still lives on the home farm. Their children were Mary, wife of Pierre Guicharneau, a farmer and livestock dealer at Asasp; John L., who lives on the paternal farm at Sarrance; Annie, wife of John P. Lacu, a farmer at Lucg de Bearn; Vincent, a farmer at Harlem, Montana; Catherine, who died in France unmarried at the age of forty-eight; Peter; Louise, wife of Francis Agoure, a professor at Pau; Joseph, whose home is in California; and Josephine, who is married to a farmer and lives in France.

Peter Pauly was educated in the schools of his home locality, and in the fall of 1889 came to the United States and settled in the Milk River Valley near Chinook, Montana. For three years and nine months he herded sheep. But in 1893 he started in the sheep business for himself with a little band of 1,000 head. He moved into the Deer Lodge Valley and eventually associated himself with Sen. C. H. Williams. With increasing experience Mr. Pauly became a recognized expert in the sheep breeding industry. His favorite sheep was the

Peter Pauly

American Rambouillet and, firmly believing that this breed was the best, he set about building up his flock. Almost twenty years ago, after looking over many of the leading flocks of Michigan and Ohio, he brought home, as a foundation flock, a carload of registered Rambouillet breeding ewes selected from the herds of eight of the leading flockmasters of the East. With other importations and with careful breeding this modest enterprise has grown to a large and well known business. The firm of Williams and Pauly now owns one of the choicest Rambouillet flocks in the state, and their ranch is particularly well adapted for sheep raising. Their headquarters are located about six miles west of Deer Lodge.

Mr. Pauly is also president of the McPherson Mercantile Company at Deer Lodge, and owns considerable real estate in that city including his modern home at 616 Fourth Street. He is a fourth degree Knight of Columbus, having affiliation with Deer Lodge Council No. 1810, and is also a member of Anaconda Lodge No. 239 of the Elks. He is a Catholic and in politics an independent voter. On February 10, 1900, in California, Mr. Pauly married Miss Mary Jane Pucheu. Her parents are both deceased, her father Francis Pucheu having been a farmer at Asasp, France, where Mrs. Pauly was born. Mr. and Mrs. Pauly have four children: Sylvan J., who was born July 9, 1901, and is a graduate of the Mount St. Charles High School at Helena; Elize M., born March 31, 1904; Elsie C., born August 18, 1907; and Harry C., born March 1, 1910.

Elmer Bosshard. One of the men of signal enterprise and great promise in his community is Elmer Bosshard, whose business until recently was chiefly dealing in and shipping livestock. He is now engaged in banking in Nashua.

Mr. Bosshard, who has resided in Montana for fifteen years, was born in LaCrosse County, Wisconsin, July 20, 1885, son of Adolph and grandson of John Bosshard. John Bosshard was a native of Switzerland, immigrated to the United States in 1851, the same year he entered a homestead in Southwestern Wisconsin, and spent the rest of his life in LaCrosse County. He is buried at Bangor. He was twice married. By his first wife there are two surviving children, Adolph and Elizabeth. By the second marriage the only survivor is Otto Bosshard, a prominent lawyer at LaCrosse.

Adolph Bosshard was born in LaCrosse County in 1853 and has spent his life as a farmer and stock grower in that locality. He is now living retired at Bangor. He has been a director of the Farmers State Bank of Bangor, is a democrat in politics and holds membership in several fraternal insurance orders. He married Tolena Fremstad, a native of Monroe County, Wisconsin, and of Norwegian parentage. Her mother lived to the advanced age of ninety-one, passing away in December, 1919. Mrs. Adolph Bosshard died in 1895, the mother of the following children: Amelia, wife of Wilfred Lemieux, of Fairview, Montana; Walter, of Van Hook, North Dakota; and Elmer. Adolph Bosshard's second wife was Annie Schroeder, a native of Germany and of Low German stock. They have three children: Lucy, John and Helen.

Elmer Bosshard grew up in a country district of Southwestern Wisconsin, graduated from the Bangor High School in 1904, and completed his education and prepared for the serious business of life by one year spent in the University of Wisconsin. In September, 1905, he arrived at Mondak, and for a time was associated with a brother-in-law in a general store. In the spring of 1906 they moved to Fairview and continued their business for six months longer. Elmer Bosshard selling out his interests in the fall, spent the winter in the West, exploring Washington and Idaho, and in the spring of 1907 returned to Montana and acquired an outfit to engage in freighting up the Yellowstone Valley to Sidney. He combined freighting with practical farming until 1914. During 1915 and 1916 he was handling horses as a buyer and shipper to the Miles City market. Mr. Bosshard has never exercised his right of a homestead, though his wife employed that privilege, entered a claim and proved it up. Her homestead is about six miles below Fairview. Besides farming Mr. Bosshard has become a dealer and speculator in lands and has helped develop some valuable tracts and prepare the soil for the production of crops. At Fairview he built a home and developed a small tract across State Street, within the limits of North Dakota.

In 1917 Mr. Bosshard and A. M. Gardner formed a partnership for the buying and shipping of livestock from Fairview. In 1918 he acquired his partner's interest and continued the business on his own responsibility. His enterprise furnished a convenient market for a large amount of cattle and hogs which have been moved out of the region toward Eastern markets in recent years. On June 3, 1920, Mr. Bosshard purchased a large block of the stock of the First National Bank of Nashua, was elected its cashier and transferred his residence to this point. Mr. Bosshard has done well in his business career, and still has a prospect of many useful years before him. He cast his first presidential ballot for Mr. Taft in 1908 and in 1916, like thousands of other republicans, supported Mr. Wilson.

At Williston, North Dakota, February 17, 1910, he married Miss Sweetie Dakota Moore. She was born at Hillsboro, North Dakota, October 6, 1887, a daughter of John and Lucy (Honstain) Moore. Her father was a native of Wisconsin, while the Honstains were a Pennsylvania family. The Moores are farmers and were early identified with the Yellowstone Valley near Fairview. The children in the Moore family are: Arthur, of Fairview; Pearl, of Baker, Montana; Edward, of Fairview; Mrs. Bosshard; and Lilburn, of Enid, Montana. Two children have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Bosshard, Adolph and Hazel.

James F. Blair. Among the alert, progressive and thoroughly substantial business men who have come to the forefront during recent years by reason of their connection with the automobile industry, one who has been recruited from the ranks of Montana ranchmen is James F. Blair, proprietor of the leading general garage of Southwestern Montana, situated at Dillon. As a ranchman Mr. Blair had established a reputation for ability and industry that gained him high standing in the Horse Prairie country of Beaverhead County, and since locating at Dillon he has added to this reputation and substantiated it by the manner in which he has entered his new field of activity.

James F. Blair is a native Montanan, born at Bannack, September 12, 1878, a son of William G. and Emma (Frester) Blair. His father, born in 1844, in Tennessee, was reared in Kentucky, and when but little more than a lad enlisted for service during the war between the states, in which he served four years, and during which he received a gunshot wound in the knee that lamed him for life. In 1867 he became a pioneer into Beaverhead County, Montana, where he first worked on a ranch at Red Rock, and following his marriage in that county resided at Bannack, where, during the early days he drove stage from Bannack to Virginia City and carried the mail for several years. Subsequently he took up ranching and became one of the successful ranchers and cattlemen of his locality, and was so occupied until his retirement in 1913 to California, where he now makes his home at Los Angeles. Mr. Blair is a democrat in politics. He married Emma Frester, who was born in 1851, at Battle Creek, Michigan, and they became the parents of three children: Nellie, the wife of J. H. Shesher, a rancher of Horse Prairie, Beaverhead County; Frank P., a rancher of Grant, this state; and James F.

After attending the public schools of the rural community of Beaverhead County, James F. Blair took a course in the Ogden (Utah) Business College, from which he was graduated in 1898, and at that time began ranching on Horse Prairie, where he became the owner of great herds of cattle and 3,000 acres of land. Disposing of his ranches and stock in May, 1917, he came to Dillon, and in the summer of 1918 built the leading general garage of Southwestern Montana, situated on the corner of South Idaho and Sebree streets, with a floor space of 75x115 feet. A general garage business is done, and Mr. Blair and his partner, W. E. Lloyd, handle Stearns-Knight and Velie cars, and all kinds of automobile accessories. In addition a machine shop is maintained which is one of the best equipped in Montana, fully capable of making repairs on all kinds of cars. In addition to the garage Mr. Blair is the owner of a modern residence at No. 703 South Pacific Street, and has various business interests, including stock in the Farm Loans Corporation of Helena, and mining interests in Alaska. His business standing is of the best, and his associates know him as a man of practical ideas, excellent judgment and unswerving integrity, in whom they may place the utmost confidence. He is a democrat in politics, but not a politician, and his fraternal connection is with the Bannack Lodge No. 16, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

In March, 1904, at Dillon, Mr. Blair was united in marriage with Miss Edith G. Parkinson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tim Parkinson, the former a Utah farmer, now deceased, and the latter a resident of Wellsville, that state. Mr. and Mrs. Blair are the parents of four children: June, born June 26, 1905; Nellie, born September 12, 1906; Gymie, born March 23, 1909; and Tim, born January 22, 1911.

WALTER E. LLOYD. The activities of Walter E. Lloyd during a somewhat diversified career have included participation in freighting, cow-punching and ranching, and, at present, in conducting at Dillon what is generally accounted the leading and best-equipped garage in Southwestern Montana. From the time he was twelve years of age Mr. Lloyd has been self-supporting, and his rise to a position of business eminence at Dillon has come through his tireless industry and the able and intelligent manner in which he has made use of his talents and opportunities.

Mr. Lloyd was born in Deer Lodge County, Montana, July 3, 1872, a son of Charles W. and Evaline Lloyd, the latter a native of Iowa. His father was born in 1834, in the State of New York, and was a lad when he came west, accompanying an ox-train across the plains to the gold fields of California. In 1867 he became a pioneer of Deer Lodge County, Montana, where he engaged in mining, and died at Granite Mountain, in what is now Granite County, in 1883. He was a republican in politics. Mrs. Lloyd died in the same community in 1880. They were the parents of two children: Walter E.; and Charles, who is engaged in mining in Beaverhead County, Montana.

Walter E. Lloyd attended the rural schools of Deer Lodge County, but the early death of his father made it necessary that he become self-supporting when he was but twelve years of age, at which time he secured work on a ranch. During the pioneer days he followed whatever occupation presented itself, and until he was twenty-three years of age his work was largely that of a cowboy. Later he freighted from Red Rock to Bannack, and eventually engaged in ranching near the latter place, twenty-five miles from Dillon. His operations there were decidedly successful, being prosecuted with vigor and good judgment, and he became the owner of 5,000 acres of land and a large cattle raiser. In 1916 he disposed of his ranch and stock and moved to Dillon, where he assisted his partner, James F. Blair, to establish their present garage, situated at the corner of Idaho and Sebree streets, which is the leading and best-equipped general garage in Southwestern Montana. The firm of Lloyd & Blair handles Stearns-Knight and Velie cars and all kinds of accessories, and also conducts a machine shop, fully equipped for the repair of all kinds of automobiles, and the business enjoys an excellent patronage. Mr. Lloyd is a businessman of marked capacity and high principles and commands the respect of business men and the general public. He is an independent voter who prefers to use his own judgment in his choice of candidates, and as a fraternalist belongs to Jackson (Montana) Tribe, Improved Order Red Men.

In 1898 Mr. Lloyd was married at Bannack, Montana, to Miss Elizabeth Parkinson, a native of Utah.

CHARLES CLIFFORD THORNTON is member of a prominent Minnesota family of bankers and business men and a few years ago came to Dillon, Montana, and established the Securities State Bank, now one of the solid and prosperous financial institutions of Southwestern Montana.

Dr. Thornton, whose active experience has given him a wide knowledge of the northwestern country, was born at Benson, Minnesota, January 23, 1884. His father was the late Frank M. Thornton, who was born in Belfast, Ireland, in 1840. He was five years of age when his mother brought him to New York City and later she took up a homestead on Lake Harriet, in what is now the City of Minneapolis. Frank M. Thornton therefore grew up on the Minnesota frontier, and lived on his mother's homestead until the outbreak of the Civil war. In 1861 he became captain of a regiment of infantry of Ohio troops, and was all through the war, a gallant and hard fighting soldier. He came out with the rank of major. About 1869 he cast in his lot with the new community of Benson, Minnesota. For half a century that town has had the greater part of its civic and business enterprise centered in the Thornton family. Frank M. Thornton was interested in the hardware, elevator and grain business, established the old Bank of Benson, serving as its cashier and later as its president, holding that office at the time of his death in 1905. He lent his influence and means in every way to the substantial upbuilding of Benson, showing himself a man of progress when the community needed a forward push and also conservative as a safeguard to undue speculation and over-hasty development. He was a good business man and on many occasions proved his sincere philanthropy. He was a republican in politics and he and his family were the chief influences in upbuilding and maintaining an Episcopal church in Benson. He was also an active member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and a regular attendant at lodge meetings and filled all the chairs in the order. He built a fine home at Benson, owned much other town property and also several ranches in Swift County and had a beautiful summer home at Glenwood, owning 200 acres extending about a mile along the front of Minnewaska Lake. This beautiful and attractive property is still owned by his estate. Frank M. Thornton married Elizabeth Clague, who was born on the Isle of Man in 1845 and died at Benson, Minnesota, in 1913. The Dillon banker was the sixth of a family of eight children. Frank C. Thornton, the oldest, is president of the First National Bank of Benson. Frances Eleanor is the wife of Frank Stone, president of the Swift County Bank of Benson. Eric L. is vice president of the Metropolitan Bank of St. Paul, is a lawyer by profession, and was formerly secretary to Governor Burnquist of Minnesota. Elizabeth is the wife of George Champlin, an attorney living at Lake Crystal, Minnesota. Edwin B. is an electrical engineer practicing his profession at Toledo, Ohio. Mabel married C. G. Ferguson, advertising manager for the Baker Importing Company and a resident of Minneapolis. Harry, the youngest of the family, is employed in the First National Bank at Benson.

Charles Clifford Thornton was graduated from the Benson High School in 1903. The experience of the past sixteen years has brought him in touch with many prominent business interests. He first learned the banking business as an employe of the First National Bank of Benson, and on his own merit was promoted to the duties of assistant cashier. In 1908 he left Minnesota and for several years was a resident of Vancouver, British Columbia, where he was associated with S. W. Thacker in the investment and real estate business. In 1915 he returned to his home town and for six months had some active participation in the First National Bank. He is still a director of that institution and one of its principal stockholders. Mr. Thornton came to Dillon, Montana, in the fall of 1916 and organized the Security State Bank, of which he has since been president. This bank has a capital of $50,000, surplus and profits of $5,000, average deposits of $200,000. The bank is housed in the Hotel Andrus Building. The vice president is Nels Nelson, a well known retired stockman and capitalist of Dillon, and the cashier is Marshall Field.

Mr. Thornton is also interested in the organization of a national bank at Lima, which will be known as the Security National Bank of Lima. The charter was received October 29, 1919, and the capital stock is $25,000. This is the sixth banking institution in the county. C. C. Thornton, president of the Security State Bank at this place, is president; Frank Merril of Lima is the vice president and the board of directors will be composed of those two gentlemen with A. F. Waldorf of Dillon, and Emery Keller and C. S. Truax of Lima. The other stockholders are Nels Nelson, Marshall Field, John Peterson, J. T. McKnight, J. T. Thiel, L. E. Brainard, Leo Truax, Miss Maggie Halligan, Mrs. C. B. Van Housen, Smith McKnight, William Gleed, Ed Gleed, M. P. Christensen, Sherman Vance, E. W. Geary, Victor Mathews, Dr. L. C. Ford, John A. West, Will Wall and Ed Kenison.

The bank will be located next to the Merril store and a fine new brick and stone building will be erected in the near future for the housing of the new institution. It will be well equipped and handsomely furnished.

Mr. Thornton owns considerable real estate in Benson, Minnesota, and Vancouver, B. C., and is interested in a ranch in Beaverhead County, Montana. He is a member of the Montana and American Bankers Association, is a republican voter, affiliated with the Episcopal Church, and is a member of Vancouver Lodge of Masons and Benson Lodge Knights of Pythias.

In 1912, at Morris, Minnesota, he married Miss Adele Bailey, daughter of W. J. and Sarah (Wolf) Bailey. Her father is a contractor and builder, and her parents still live at Morris, Minnesota. Mrs. Thornton is a graduate in domestic science from the Thomas Training School at Detroit, Michigan, and for a year before her marriage lived at Herman, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Thornton have one son, Howard, born March 30, 1913.

Frank Conley. During the closing years of the territorial period and for thirty years of Montana's statehood, Frank Conley has been the warden of the penitentiary at Deer Lodge. It is doubtful if any official in similar institutions in the country have served a longer period than Frank Conley. On any subject connected with prison management he speaks with the voice of authority born of an unusually long and interesting experience.

Mr. Conley is not only a veteran state official, but has long been helpfully identified with the Town of Deer Lodge, has served as its mayor over a score of years, and has never neglected an opportunity to upbuild and increase the prestige of his home city.

Mr. Conley was born at Havre de Grace, Maryland, February 28, 1864. His father, James P. Conley, was born in Ireland in 1821. As a young man he was guilty of infringing some of the poaching laws of Ireland and left that country for that reason and came to America. He married at Baltimore and followed the business of drover for a number of years with home at Havre de Grace. He died in March, 1865. His wife was Mary McCan, who was born in Ireland in 1823 and died at Carroll, Iowa, in 1880. Frank Conley was the youngest of their seven children. Jack the oldest has been a successful business man and is now living on the income of his property at Seattle, Washington. James is a worker in the shipyards at Seattle. Mary lives at Carroll, Iowa, widow of Ed Daly, who was a blacksmith there. Kate has her home at Danbury, Iowa, widow of John Gleason, a farmer. Eliza is the wife of George Kennebeck, a lumber dealer at Carroll, Iowa. Martin died at the age of fifteen.

Frank Conley was only an infant when his father died. He attended his first school at Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, and afterwards went with his mother to Carroll, Iowa. All his education was acquired before he was fourteen years of age. As a means of helping support his mother he worked in a grocery store five years, giving his wages to the family.

Mr. Conley came to Montana in 1880 and from Miles City went with a surveying party to the Yellowstone National Park, spending eighteen months in that work. For four years he was deputy sheriff of Custer County with home at Miles City. Mr. Conley came to Deer Lodge in 1886, and was first employed as a guard in the territorial penitentiary. The penitentiary was then a Federal institution, and in 1889 it became an institution of the state government. At that time Mr. Conley and Tom McTague made a contract with the state to manage the prison and act as wardens. The contract system continued until 1908, at which time a change in the system of management was effected, with direct responsibility to the state administration. Governor Norris continued Mr. Conley in the management in the capacity of warden and he has been reappointed to those duties by every successive governor.

Mr. Conley has served as mayor of Deer Lodge twenty-four years. In that time the city has grown from 800 to 5,000 population, and Mr. Conley has exerted his influence in behalf of every advancement and improvement made in a quarter of a century. Recently he has been busy arranging a vote on a $100,000 bond issue for a new courthouse and a $30,000 bond issue for a new city hall. Mr. Conley is also chairman of the State Highway Commission, having been elected chairman by his fellow commissioners in May, 1919.

In politics he is a republican. He is affiliated with Deer Lodge Lodge No. 14, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, with Valley Chapter No. 4, Royal Arch Masons, Montana Commandery of the Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is president of the Deer Lodge Hotel Corporation and is owner of a fine modern residence on Main Street. In 1902 at Missoula he married Miss Hilda Higgins. Her father was Captain Higgins, founder of Missoula. They have two children: Hilda, born March 12, 1904; and Helen, born April 19, 1907.

Clarence W. Hudson, a banker of long and successful experience, was the prime leader in establishing the Beaverhead State Bank at Dillon. This bank opened for business in May, 1917, has had a rapid growth and development and is now one of the strong financial institutions of Southwestern Montana. It has a capital stock of $50,000, surplus of $10,000, and its deposits in the summer of 1919 aggregated $200,000. It has been under the able management of Mr. Hudson since the start. G. T. Paul is president, and there are three vice presidents, Frank Landon, T. J. Mullany and Clarence W. Hudson. Mr. Hudson is also cashier and active manager.

Mr. Hudson was born at Nashville, Tennessee, March 2, 1878, and his father, John M. Hudson, was born at Gallatin, Tennessee, in 1838. John M. Hudson spent his life in Gallatin and Nashville, was married in the latter city, and for many years was foreman in the press room of the Methodist Publishing House at Nashville. He was a sincere Methodist himself, was a democrat in politics and was a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason. He died at Nashville in 1903. His wife was Nannie Woodford, who was born at Hartford, Connecticut, in 1850 and is now living at Omaha, Nebraska. Clarence W. Hudson was the younger of two sons. His brother Arthur was in the transportation business in South America and died at Babahoya, Ecuador, in 1901.

Clarence W. Hudson received his early education in the public schools of Nashville and completed his sophomore year in the Woolwine College of Tullahoma, Tennessee, in 1896. For one year he was a bookkeeper in the employ of the Methodist Publishing House. He made his first acquaintance with the northwestern country in 1897, when he was sent to Dietz, Wyoming, as manager of the commissary maintained by his uncle, C. N. Dietz, of Omaha. He looked after the interests of his uncle in Wyoming for five years. In 1902 he engaged in the wholesale and retail mercantile business at Sheridan, Wyoming, but four years later sold out and returned to Kentucky. For three years he was cashier of the Eagle Bank at Owensboro. He was then instrumental in organizing the United States National Bank at Owensboro. This was the result of a consolidation of the three Owensboro banks, with combined capitalization of $125,000, and the new bank doubled that capitalization. It is now the largest bank in Owensboro, operating on a capital of $250,000. Mr. Hudson remained at Owensboro as cashier of this bank for five years.

He returned to the Northwest in 1914 and for two years was cashier of the Stockmen's National Bank at Fort Benton. He left Fort Benton to interest local capital at Dillon in the organization of the Beaverhead State Bank.

Mr. Hudson is a republican in politics, is a deacon in the Baptist Church at Dillon, is affiliated with Dillon Lodge No. 23, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Dillon Chapter No. 8, Royal Arch Masons, St. Elmo Commandery No. 7, Knights Templar, and is a member of Rizpah Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Madisonville, Kentucky.

He and his family reside at 717 South Pacific Street in Dillon. He married at Owensboro, Kentucky, July 2, 1901, Bessie Nave, a daughter of John H. and America (Norris) Nave. Her mother is deceased. Her father was for many years a tobacconist at Owensboro and is now living retired with his daughter, Mrs. Hudson. Mrs. Hudson is a graduate of the high school of Louisville, Kentucky, and also of the Miss Annie Nold College of that city. Mr. and Mrs. Hudson have one child, Delia, born July 27, 1906.

Herbert Floyd Best. One of the ablest dental surgeons in Southwestern Montana is Dr. H. F. Best, who for the past thirteen years has been engaged in a busy practice at Dillon. Doctor Best is member of an old and prominent family of Dillon, being a son of O. M. Best. His father's career as a merchant and business man and as head of the Western Wholesale Grocery Company is told in a separate article.

Dr. Herbert Floyd Best was born while his parents lived at Climax, Michigan, February 21, 1883. He was about two years old when the family came to Montana and located at Dillon, where he grew up and received his education in the public schools. He attended the Beaverhead County High School at Dillon, spent two years in the Montana Normal College, and took his professional degree in the Northwestern University of Chicago, where he graduated in 1906. While in university he was a member of the Psi Sigma Phi Dental Greek Letter fraternity. In 1917 Dr. Best took post-graduate work in dentistry at the University of Pennsylvania, and received a certificate in Dental Surgery. He began practice at Butte in 1906, but in 1908 returned to his home town of Dillon and has all the modern equipment of a dental surgeon in his offices at 2 East Bannack Street.

Doctor Best is a stockholder in the Security State Bank of Dillon. He owns a modern home at 526 South Washington Street. Her father, who died at Dysart, Iowa, in 1910, was a successful farmer and also owned a canning factory. Dr. and Mrs. Best have one daughter, Helen Ida, born November 3, 1914, and one son, Winfield Judson, born November 6, 1919.

Esek Ray Mosher, acting president of Montana Normal College at Dillon, has held the chair of Mabel L. Campbell.

Mathematics in that institution for the past twelve years. Mr. Mosher is a man of thorough scholarship, comes of a family of scholars, and has been engaged in educational work since the age of twenty-one, when he graduated from the University of Minnesota.

Mr. Mosher was born at Dexter, Michigan, April 15, 1882. Some of his paternal ancestors came to America and settled in Massachusetts as early as 1621. His father was Roswell Curtis Mosher, who was born in New York State October 6, 1854. He spent his early life in Michigan, was married at Kalamazoo in that state, and lived for two years at Dexter. He spent his active life as a clergyman of the Baptist Church. He was a graduate of Kalamazoo College, a Baptist institution, with the A. On account of failing health he moved to Missoula, Montana, in 1906, and died there shortly afterward, on the 6th of May of that year. He was a republican in politics. Rev. Mr. Mosher married Margaret Emily Kane, who was born in Pennsylvania February 14, 1857. She is now living at Greeley, Colorado. Esek Ray was the second of four children. Judson P. Best is one of the leading young business men of Dillon, and is founder of the Best Candy Company, Incorporated, manufacturers of standard product sold and distributed throughout Montana, Oregon, Utah, Washington, Wyoming and Idaho.

Mr. Best is a son of O. M. Best, the veteran business man and merchant of Dillon, president of the Western Wholesale Grocery Company. The story of his father's career in Montana is told on other pages. Judson P. Best was born at Dillon August 26, 1891. He graduated from the Beaverhead County High School in 1910, and entered the University of Michigan to complete his education. He finished his junior year there in 1913 and then returned west. For eight months he was in the real estate business at Port Angeles, Washington, and from there returned to Dillon and entered the Western Wholesale Grocery Company under his father. He had an increasing part in that business until April, 1919, and is secretary and treasurer of the company. In January, 1919, he established the Best Candy Company and was the sole proprietor of the business until January 1, 1920, when the business was incorporated with Mr. Best as president, Roy S. Stephenson as vice president, and Roy M. Carruthers, secretary-treasurer. Mrs. Mabel (Lindstadt) Campbell. The life history of the estimable and popular superintendent of schools of Missoula County, Montana, Mrs. Mabel (Lindstadt) Campbell, most happily illustrates what may be attained by faithful and continued effort in carrying out noble purposes. It is a story of a life whose success is measured by its usefulness—a life that has made the world better and brighter. Her career has been dignified and womanly, her manner unaffected and her actions, springing from a heart charged with love and altruistic sentiment for humanity, have been a blessing to all who have come within range of her influence.

Mrs. Mabel (Lindstadt) Campbell is a native daughter of the great Treasure state, having been born at Philipsburg, Montana, and she is the daughter of August W. and Minnie (Miller) Lindstadt. In the paternal line of descent Mrs. Campbell is descended from John Lindstadt, who was born in Stettin, Germany, came to the United States, was married to Caroline Bitte, and died in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in 1890. Among their children was August W., father of Mrs. Campbell. He was born in 1855 at Stettin, Germany, and his death occurred at Missoula, Montana, in 1912. At the age of fifteen years he had run away from home and came to the United States. He at once went to work, and so industrious and economical was he that in three years he had saved enough money to bring over his parents and two brothers, all of whom settled in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, He, however, went to Mariposa County, California, where he followed his trade, that of a butcher. Subsequently he came to Montana, locating in Deer Lodge Valley in 1884, and there he was married. In 1886 he moved to Butte, where he was employed at his trade for a year, and then located in Philipsburg, where and in Granite he spent the ensuing eighteen years. He then came to Missoula and was connected with the John R. Daily Company up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1912. Mr. Lindstadt was a democrat in political faith, and was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

As above stated, while residing at Deer Lodge Valley Mr. Lindstadt was married to Minnie Miller, who was born in New York City in 1868 and who now makes her home with her daughter, the subject of this review. Her father, Christopher Miller, was born in Germany in 1825 and died at Deer Lodge Valley in 1874, the year in which he came to Montana. He had married Margaret Gerken, who was born near Hamburg, Germany, in 1841, and who died at Deer Lodge Valley, Montana, in 1911. In 1874, after their marriage, they had come to Montana by way of Salt Lake City, to which city they had traveled by rail, whence they traveled to Deer Lodge Valley by emigrant wagons.

Mabel Lindstadt attended the public schools of Philipsburg, Montana, through the seventh grade. In 1906 the family moved to Missoula, where she completed her public school training, graduating from the high school here in 1910. She was then a student in the Minnesota State Normal School at Duluth, Minnesota, where she was graduated in November, 1912. During the following year she was engaged as a school teacher in a rural district in St. Louis County, Minnesota, where all of her pupils were foreigners, none of them being able to speak English. This was certainly a severe initiation for a young girl into the educational field, but nothing daunted, she stuck to her school and completed her year to the entire satisfaction of the school board. She then returned to Missoula, and during the following year she was employed to teach a rural school in Missoula County. From 1914 to 1917 she was engaged in teaching in the public schools of Missoula. In November, 1916, she was elected to the office of county superintendent of schools, and in January, 1917, she entered upon the discharge of the duties of that office. So entirely satisfactory was her conduct of the office that in 1918 she was elected, without opposition, to succeed herself and is still the incumbent of that office. The office of county superintendent of schools is a most important one and Mrs. Campbell has made a most favorable impression throughout the county because of her businesslike method of conducting the office. She has supervision over fifty schools, ninety-seven teachers and over two thousand pupils. As a teacher she had met with merited success, and in her present capacity as superintendent her record presents a series of successes and advancements such as few attain. She has pursued her chosen calling with all the interest of an enthusiast, is thoroughly in harmony with the spirit of the work and has a proper conception of the dignity of the profession to which her life and energies are so unselfishly devoted.

Politically Mrs. Campbell is a democrat, while fraternally she is a member of Electa Chapter No. 7, Order of the Eastern Star, and the local lodge of the Daughters of Rebekah. She is also a member of the Montana State Teachers' Association and the National Teachers' Association.

On December 23, 1918, she became the wife of Nigel H. Campbell, who was born in Missouri, where he was reared and where he followed farming pursuits until his removal to Missoula, Montana, in 1916. Here he has been in the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. He is a gentleman of splendid personal qualities of character and is well liked by a large circle of acquaintances in the city of his adoption.

A. L. Stone. A large group of important business interests in Southwestern Montana have as one of their chief directing spirits Mr. A. L. Stone of Dillon. He is a Montana pioneer. Not one of the very first settlers, but has been identified with Montana since the late territorial period, altogether nearly thirty-five years. He has been busily engaged in practical work since boyhood, and yet has found time to cultivate those interests represented outside the realm of practical business. His father was a thorough scholar and Mr. Stone's own children have had every incentive and advantage of a liberalizing education.

Mr. Stone is a native of Kansas, born in Shawnee County, not far from the City of Topeka, October 16, 1860. His father, Lewis Anson Stone, was born at Royalton, New York, in 1825 and in 1837, at the age of twelve years, accompanied his parents to a pioneer home in Eaton County, Michigan. He received most of his education in Michigan, was a student in an academy at Olivet, and received his Master's degree from Oberlin College, Ohio. For twenty-five years he was engaged in educational work and was a pioneer of Kansas. Three years after the birth of his son A. Louis, he moved to Whiteside County, Illinois, and several years later returned to Kansas and settled on a farm in Leavenworth County, where he died in 1904, at the age of seventy-nine. He married Miss Martha A. Hotchkiss in 1857, daughter of Freeman Hotchkiss, a farmer, contractor and builder. She was well educated and for a number of years assisted her husband in his school and college work. She died in Leavenworth County in 1872. A. Louis Stone had one sister, Eva Louise, who died in February, 1919. Her husband, J. M. Gilman, still lives on the old Stone homestead farm near Leavenworth, Kansas. Mr. Gilman has long been prominent in republican politics in Kansas and for several terms was a member of the State Legislature.

A. L. Stone from the age of about six years grew up on his father's farm in Leavenworth County. He attended school there and also had much help from his father and mother in his studies. He earned his first money when ten years old running a rake in the field and gathering up scatterings. He was a regular hand on the farm and after getting his education was a teacher in Leavenworth County six years. At the same time he became interested in merchandising. Not enjoying the best of health in Kansas, he sold his interests and came to Montana in 1885. For a time he was clerk with McMillan & Cluett at Butte and in 1888 moved to Dillon, where he has made his home and has been an increasing factor in business affairs for over thirty years. Within a year after he went to work for the Dillon Implement Company he became secretary and treasurer of the company. He withdrew from this firm in 1899 and on the first of August established the State Bank of Dillon, being its cashier and manager until September 24, 1912, at which time he was chosen president. Under his management this bank has become one of the strongest in the state. It has capital of $100,000, surplus and profits of an equal amount, while its deposits aggregate $1,250,000. Mr. Stone is president, Martin Barrett is vice president, and W. A. Graeter is cashier.

Mr. Stone was chairman of the Executive Committee in 1909-10 and vice president for 1910-13 of the Montana Bankers Association. His address upon the "Resources of Montana" before the Bankers' Convention in August, 1919, was a notable review and 5,000 copies were published by the association for distribution.

A busy man, he has nevertheless found time to promote the welfare of his home locality, particularly in the matter of schools. From 1889 to 1892 he was superintendent of schools of Beaverhead Elks, the Beaverhead Club, and is a democrat in County. He is now a member of the State Board of Education. He has also been a member of the City Council of Dillon. He is affiliated with the politics. His family are members of the Episcopal Church.

At San Francisco April 8, 1896, Mr. Stone married Miss Albina Smith, daughter of Eden Smith of Illinois. The Stone family have a handsome modern home at 318 South Idaho Street but since 1917 Mr. Stone has maintained a home in Los Angeles in order that his children might enjoy the best of educational and other advantages in that city. He and his wife have five children: Irma, the oldest, born April 18, 1897, was sent abroad when eleven years of age and spent a year in Berlin. She is a graduate of Radcliffe College, the woman's department of Harvard University, receiving her Master of Arts degree there. She was a resident student in Old Mexico during 1909-10, and is well versed in modern languages. During 1918 she was teacher of Spanish and French in the high school of LaPorte, Indiana. Robert Malcolm, the second child, was born May 23, 1901, and during 1918-19 was a member of the Reserve Officers Training Camp in the University of California at Berkeley, and in the fall of 1919 entered upon his sophomore year in that university. Martha, born October 8, 1902, is a graduate of the Los Angeles High School and entered the University of California in 1919. Donald was born August 22, 1904, and is in his second year of the Los Angeles High School, while Henry Lee was born May 30, 1906, and has completed the eighth grade of the Los Angeles grammar schools.

AUGUSTUS F. GRAETER. While there are scores of Montanans called pioneers because they came to this country before the territory was erected into a state, it is a very diminished number which makes up the group of those Montanans whose lives and fortunes were cast with this isolated section of the Northwest during the early '60s. One of these, honored not only by length of residence, but by the quality of his public spirit, the great range of his business enterprise, and the kindness and strength of his character, is Augustus F. Graeter of Dillon, who became a resident of Montana in 1862.

He was born at Allentown, Pennsylvania, July 29, 1834. His father, Augustus Graeter, was born at Geppingen, near Stuttgart, Germany, March 16, 1803, and was highly educated, attending colleges and universities at Leipsic and Stuttgart. He came to America in 1828 and spent many years as a printer and publisher, publishing both books and newspapers in the German language. He was in that business at Allentown, Pennsylvania, and in 1836 moved to Warren, Ohio, where in addition to other work he was a farmer and hotel proprietor. Politically he was a whig and finally a republican. He died at Warren March 8, 1863, at the age of sixty. He married Sarah Hoffman, who was born near Allentown, Pennsylvania, and died at Warren, Ohio, at the age of eighty-four. Of their eight children Augustus F. was the second. Adolphus, the oldest, was a finished and talented musician, for a number of years conducted a music store and died at Warren, Ohio; Sarah died at Warren; Olivia lives at Butte, Montana, widow of Mr. Hopkins, a pioneer Montanan, and a miner by occupation; Isabella is the wife of Frank Ritzel, publisher of the Warren Chronicle in Ohio; Walter was a Union soldier with an Ohio regiment and died while in the army; Frederika Bailey lives at Warren, Ohio, is a widow, her husband having been a printer; Alfred died at Dillon, Montana, in 1914 and was prominently known in this section of the state, having served as recorder and sheriff of his county and later was in the mining business at Argenta.

Augustus F. Graeter was an infant when his parents moved to Ohio, and he received his early advantages in the country schools of Warren, Ohio. He lived on his father's farm and also in the town of Warren until he was fifteen years of age. He spent one year in a store at Meadville, Pennsylvania, again worked on the farm in Ohio one season, and from there went to Wisconsin where he essayed the role of a book agent, but with only a fair degree of success, his honesty not permitting him to exaggerate the merits of his stock in trade. He returned to the more substantial if more laborious work of cutting cordwood and selling it to boats on the Fox River. Then for another brief period he was back on his father's Ohio farm and clerk in a dry goods store at Warren.

Mr. Graeter has been identified with a number of pioneer communities west of the Missouri Valley. In 1856 he went out to Nebraska, then a place of great historic interest on account of the Kansas-Nebraska controversy in Congress. He was associated with a relative by marriage in a general store at Florence, and when the business was removed to Omaha he clerked there for a time. In the fall of 1857 he and a friend, taking a span of oxen, started overland for Pike's Peak. A long journey brought them to the banks of Cherry Creek, where now is the City of Denver. Mr. Graeter took up a claim of 160 acres now identified in the modern city of Denver by Blake and Larimer Streets. In order to hold his claim he complied with the legal requirements of that time, placing four logs as a foundation for a cabin. The net results of his prospecting for gold up Cherry Creek were very meager. During the winter about forty men joined him and his companions on Cherry Creek, and he, like the others, built a log cabin for shelter. Mr. Graeter's partner was A. J. Smith, and during the winter of 1857-58 they returned to Omaha for supplies. The early spring of 1858 found them at Black Hawk, near the present site of Missouri City. Mr. Graeter mined gold there for two years, and during that time put up two log cabins. He returned to Omaha in 1859-60, and the next spring went back to his mining properties. In the spring of 1862 he was camped for several days along Snake River. His partners and associates at that time were A. J. Smith and Major Brooke. They suffered all the hardships and danger of a country infested with hostile Indians, remote from central markets, where every day presented a battle with circumstances and the forces of the wilderness. Finally the party arrived at Fort Lemhi, Idaho, and that was as far as they got toward their destination, the great placer gold camp of Florence. Mr. Graeter and five others decided to winter at Bitter Root and crossed the divide into Cottonwood Grove. Here the party were surrounded by Blackfoot Indians, who mistaking the white men for Snake Indians with whom they were at war, stole their stock but on the mistake being discovered the stock was returned. Later the white men retraced their steps to Fort Lemhi, where Mr. Graeter again joined Smith and Major Brooke. They next set out for winter quarters at Fort Caldwell, but hearing of gold at Bannack diverted their course to that region. Bannack was the principal center of Mr. Graeter's operations and experiences as a Montana gold miner, and he operated there off and on for a quarter of a century. Success came to him in fair measure. Charles Dahler and Hirshfield were his backers in his mining enterprise. At one time he borrowed $50,000 to build a ditch, completed the project and received returns sufficient to repay his loan and give him something. He was also successful in a dredging proposition at Bannack. For a number of years he made a good living while engaged in ranching on Horse Prairie.

Since 1899 Mr. Graeter's home has been at Dillon, where he has been actively identified with merchandising, banking, ranching and real estate. He bought a ranch in the Canyon. In 1899 he was one of the six men who established the State Bank at Dillon, and is still a stockholder and director in that institution. His name has been prominently associated with the grocery business, and he is still a half owner and president of the Graeter Grocery Company and is a director in the Western Wholesale Grocery Company. He is president of the Graeter Park and Realty Company of Dillon, president of the Dillon Realty Improvement Company, and is owner of two business buildings on Bannack Street and other local property. For a number of years he lived in a fine home in South Idaho Street, which he gave to his daughter Sarah. He gave to his present wife at the time of their marriage the fine residence in which they reside at 109 South Washington Street.

Mr. Graeter is a democrat in politics, and in early days was very much interested in politics as a means of helping his friends to office. His only public position was county commissioner and a member of the City Council. He is prominent in Masonry, being affiliated with Dillon Lodge No. 23, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Dillon Chapter No. 8, Royal Arch Masons, St. Elmo Commandery No. 7, Knights Templars, and Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Butte.

On July 29, 1860, at Florence, Nebraska, Mr. Graeter married Miss Emily M. Drury. She died at Bannack, Montana, in 1878, the mother of two children, Luther and Blanche. Luther is a miner at Eureka, California. Blanche died in 1917, at Eureka, California, wife of Charles Falk, who is a manufacturer of redwood lumber. In 1880, at Bannack, Montana, Mr. Graeter married Mary J. Taylor. She was his faithful wife and companion for twenty-eight years, and won many lasting friends in the pioneer communities where she and Mr. Graeter lived. She was an active member of the Baptist Church. She died October 6, 1908, in Dillon. She was born in New Brunswick September 26, 1849. By his second marriage Mr. Graeter has two children: Arthur, cashier of the State Bank of Dillon; and Sarah, wife of E. L. Poindexter, who is publisher of the Dillon Examiner and former postmaster. In October, 1916, at Dillon, Mr. Graeter married Mrs. May Padley, widow of C. H. Padley, who was at one time engaged in the retail meat business at Dillon.

The Western Montana National Bank was organized in 1888, the principal stockholders being G. A. Wolf, J. H. T. Ryman and Ferdinand Kennett, and was the second bank organized in western Montana.

Frederick Thorne Sterling was born in Fredericton, New Brunswick, Canada, January 19, 1863, his ancestors coming from England and Scotland, the Sterlings settling at Martha's Vineyard before the Revolutionary war. Mrs. Una B. Herrick. The history of a county or state, as well as that of a nation, is chiefly the chronicle of the lives and deeds of those who have conferred honor and dignity upon society. The world judges the characer of a community by those of its representative citizens and yields its tributes of admiration and respect to those whose works and actions constitute the record of a state's prosperity and pride. So do we judge an institution by those who represent it, and by this token Montana State College, at Bozeman, is fortunate, for among those who represent this institution none occupies a more enviable place in the esteem of the community than Mrs. Una B. Herrick, dean of women.

Mrs. Una (Brasfield) Herrick was born in Madison County, Kentucky. In New York City Una Brasfield became the wife of Dr. Clinton G. Herrick, a successful and well known physician and surgeon, a native of Burlington, Vermont.

Mrs. Herrick's father, James M. Brasfield, was born in 1800 in Madison County, Kentucky, and his death occurred there in 1894, at the advanced age of ninety-four years. He spent his life in Madison County, where he owned slaves and operated a plantation. He made a specialty of breeding saddle horses and as such acquired a wide reputation throughout Kentucky. He was a democrat in politics and was a leader of his party in his community. He was an active member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he was an elder for the long period of seventy-five years. He was also a member of the Masonic fraternity.

James M. Brasfield married Narcissa C. Haynes, a cousin of Bob and Alfred Taylor, brothers, who were at the same time candidates for election as governor of Tennessee, one as a republican and the other a democrat. She was born in 1822 in Murfreesboro, Tennessee, and died in April, 1916.

Mrs. Herrick's paternal grandfather, James Lewis Brasfield, was born, reared and died in Madison County, Kentucky. He was a prominent man, being the owner of a plantation and slaves. He married Mary Mobereley, also a native of Madison County, where her death occurred. The paternal line of the Brasfield family is traced back to England, whence the family came to America during the days of the colonies and settled in Kentucky. Members of the family took an active part in the struggle of the colonists to gain their independence, and thus Mrs. Herrick is qualified for membership in the society of Daughters of the American Revolution, as she is also through her maternal ancestors.

Louis D. Blodgett. Unless a man possesses real business ability he will not continue to be honored by his associates and placed in positions entailing heavy responsibilities and requiring certain specified attainments. Thus it is that such continued expressions of confidence indicate stability of character and business experience, and the people of Three Forks, Montana, have every reason to rely upon the good judgment of Louis D. Blodgett, vice president of the Adams Realty Company, vice president of the American National Bank, and a ranchman of large interests. He was born at Waukegan, Illinois, April 4, 1876, a son of A. Z. Blodgett. His paternal grandfather was born at Amherst, Massachusetts, but came to Illinois at an early day, becoming a pioneer of the region now known as Downer's Grove in Du Page County, where he died before his grandson, Louis D. Blodgett, was born. He was a farmer and blacksmith, and made one of the first mold board plows ever used in Illinois. The Blodgett family is a very old one in this country, representatives of it having come to Maine from England during the colonial period, and going from there to other colonies.

A. Z. Blodgett was born in a covered wagon at Fort Dearborn in 1833, his parents having taken refuge there from the Indians, and he died at Waukegan, Illinois, in 1916, having spent his entire life in Illinois. Prior to the war between the states he was land commissioner and agent for the Northwestern Railroad. With the declaration of war, he felt that his duty lay in the army, and he enlisted in 1861 in Company D, Ninety-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving all through the war with Generals Grant and Sherman, and was wounded at the Battle of Chickamauga. Returning home after his honorable discharge, he resumed his duties and continued to discharge them until his retirement at the age of sixty-five years on a pension. A strong republican, he was the successful candidate of his party for mayor of Waukegan upon several occasions. The Presbyterian Church had in him a consistent member. Well known as a Mason, he rose in that order to the Thirty-second degree, and he was also a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. A. Z. Blodgett was married to Mary E. Porter, born at Belleville, Ontario, Canada, in 1835, who died at Waukegan, Illinois, in 1899. Their children were as follows: Henry, who resides at Gooding, Idaho, was made registrar of the land office created under the Carry Land Act; Cyrus, who is in the freight department of the Northwestern Railroad at Waukegan, Illinois; John, who is manager of the Underwood Typewriter Company at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Frank, who is chief train dispatcher for the Northwestern Railroad at Mason City, Iowa; and Louis D., whose name heads this review.

Louis D. Blodgett attended the public schools of Waukegan, and was graduated from its high school in 1892. Following the completion of his education, Mr. Blodgett was in the employ of the Northern Trust Company of Chicago for two years, and then went on the road handling cigars for the Fred F. Greenleaf Cigar Company, covering North Dakota and South Dakota, and operating from Sioux Falls. In 1899 he left the road and for six months was with the Power Mercantile Company at Lewistown, leaving that concern to engage with the Lewistown Commercial Company, owners of a general store. After some years, Mr. Blodgett became manager of the Spring Creek Coal Company, and still later became interested in ranching. In 1913 he assumed charge of the Lewistown Chamber of Commerce, although he retained his ranch, and still owns 1,000 acres of land in Fergus County, Montana, and 160 acres in Saskatchewan, Canada. In 1917 Mr. Blodgett located permanently at Three Forks, assuming then the duties pertaining to the vice presidency of the Adams Realty Company, which is one of the largest real estate concerns operating with their own properties in Montana. This company owns 16,000 acres of land in the vicinity of Three Forks, and carries on farming on an extensive scale. In addition to this large tract the company also owns property all through Eastern Montana, along the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, and also handles farm loans. The company headquarters are at Three Forks, and Mr. Blodgett's associates are: J. Q. Adams, president; J. A. Siffert, secretary; and C. B. McCulloh, treasurer. The company is incorporated and has a capital stock of $500,000. The offices are located in a suite of rooms at No. 121 Main Street. Mr. Blodgett is also president of the Judith Ranch Company, vice president of the American National Bank and was elected first president of the Glacier and Geysers Association. Like his father, strong in his adherence to the principles of the republican party, Mr. Blodgett takes an intelligent interest in public events. He is an Episcopalian. Fraternally he belongs to Three Forks Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Three Forks Chapter, No. 29, Royal Arch Masons. The Chamber of Commerce of Three Forks has in him a forceful member. In addition to his ranch holdings he owns a modern residence at No. 120 Birch Street, Three Forks.

In 1909 Mr. Blodgett was maried at Buffalo, North Dakota, to Miss Adalaide M. Thompson, a daughter of David and Mary Thompson, both a pioneer in the grain and elevator business at of whom are now deceased. Mr. Thompson was Hastings, Minnesota. Mrs. Blodgett was graduated from the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis with the degree of Bachelor of Science. There are no children of this marriage. Mr. Blodgett's rather remarkable advance in his business affairs is but the legitimate outcome of intelligent and persistent effort, and the adherence to the principles of uprightness instilled in him by his parents during the formative period of his life.

WILLIAM H. BRENNAN. Few of the old timers have had more varied and useful experiences in Montana than William H. Brennan, of Missoula. He has been in the great west nearly fifty years. Montana has been his home the greater part of this period. He has been a prospector, gold and silver miner, has taken out several fortunes from the lodes of Montana, has been a contractor in the construction and equipment of railroads and industrial plants, and even now, though well able to retire and enjoy leisure, is giving his daily supervision to a prosperous mercantile business at Missoula.

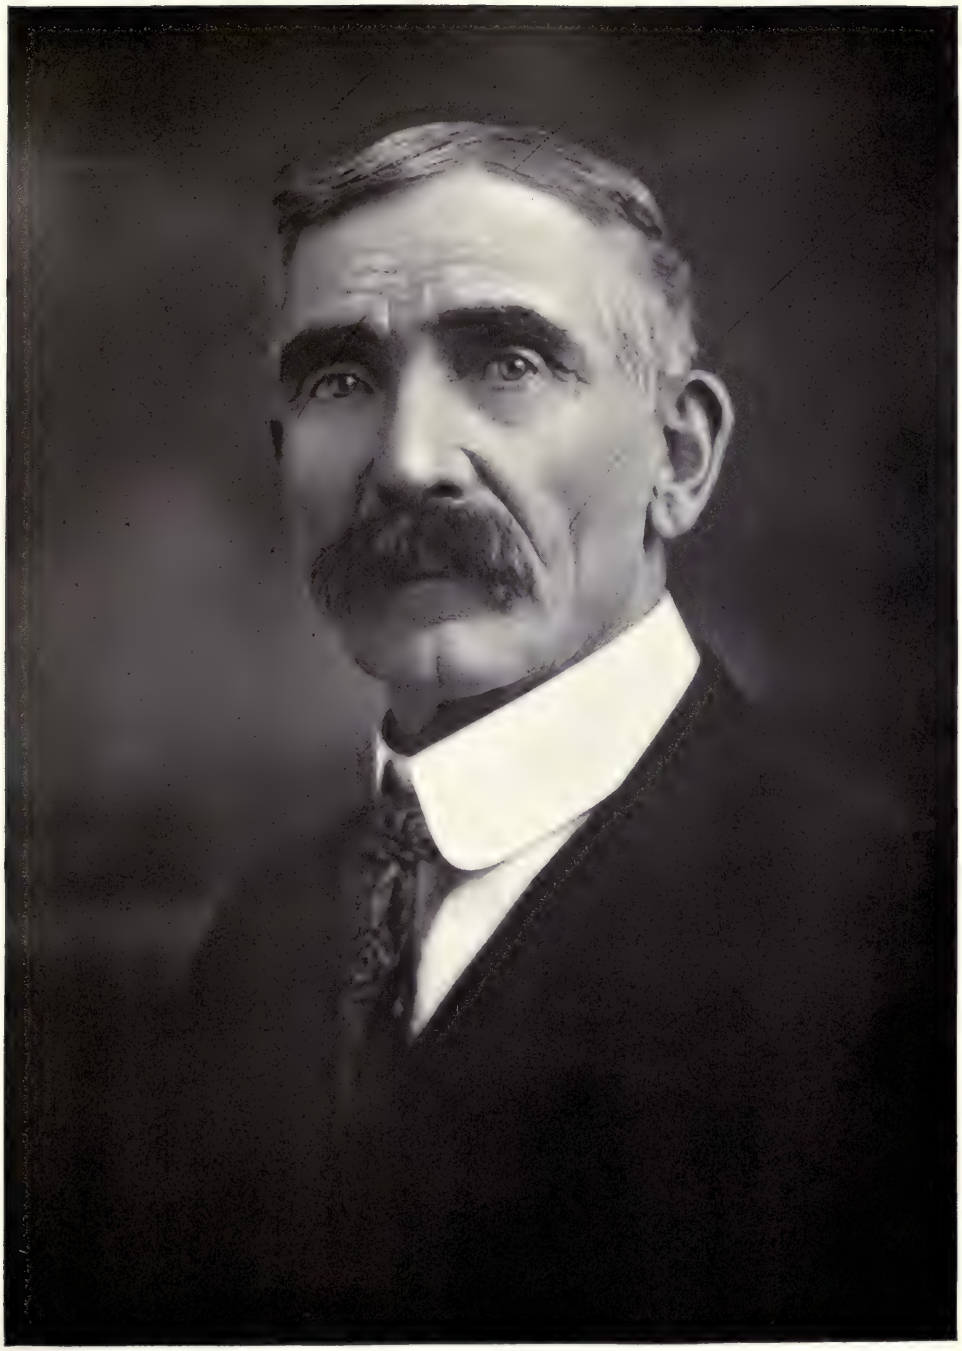
Mr. Brennan was born in the province of Ontario, Canada, November 29, 1856. His father, James Brennan, was born in County Carlow, Ireland, in 1813, and at the age of eighteen came to Canada and spent the rest of his life as an Ontario farmer. He died in 1905, at the advanced age of ninety-two. He was a conservative in politics, but had no desire for office, though he once served as reeve in Howland Township. He was an active member of the Catholic Church. His wife was Clarissa Keys, who was born at Prescott, Ontario, in 1824, and died in that province in 1900. Thomas, the oldest of their children, was a Western Union telegraph operator, received a sunstroke while at work in Arizona, and then went back to Canada and died two years later, in 1887; Margaret, whose home is at Owen Sound, on Georgian Bay, Canada, is the widow of William Malone, who was a farmer; William H. is the third in age; Eliza is the wife of John Vasey, a blacksmith at Newark, California; John is a lumberman in California; Edward is in the bakery business at Missoula; Mrs. Ellen Fogarty is the wife of a plasterer and contractor in Ontario; Marcella is the wife of Thomas Coffey, a mine operator at Oakland, California; James is a farmer in the Bitter Root Valley of Montana; and Nathaniel lives at Winnipeg, Canada.

William H. Brennan attended the separate schools of Ontario and lived at home until he was fourteen years of age. Two years later, in 1872, he went to California. A year and seven months he worked as a ranch hand, then entered the service of Governor Latham at Menlo Park, California, operating the governor's gas works for the manufacture of gas, and also pumped water for the lawns a year and seven months. This experience enabled him to take a position in the San Francisco Gas Works for seven months. He drove a horse car nine months and was a street railway conductor for nine months in San Francisco, following which he was superintendent of the horse car lines of that city for two years. He did his first mining in Bodie, California, working in the mines there for eight months, then spent four months installing machinery at the Silver King Mine. After a brief stay at San Francisco Mr. Brennan came to Silver Bow, Montana, in 1879. He prospected over a large district for the next several years and in 1882 went with the Gloucester Mill, near Helena, and under the boss process was engaged in amalgamating silver and gold for fifteen months. After a vacation of three months spent at Helena Mr. Brennan took a contract for the Helena Mine to sink a shaft two hundred feet and run a fourteen hundred foot level. This contract required a year, eight months and one day for its performance. While engaged in this work Mr. Brennan kept his horse picketed four miles from Helena. A party of Indians coming along scared the horse, so that it jerked out its picket. On examining this picket Mr. Brennan discovered evidences of gold and silver in the dirt that clung to the stake, and he immediately made a claim there and began taking out ore. Three carloads were shipped to the Wicks Smelter and it assayed seventy-two ounces of silver per ton and $18 in gold. This claim accidentally thus discovered gave Mr. Brennan a start as a money capitalist.

In 1887 Mr. Brennan began contracting, furnishing all the bridge timber to be used by the Montana Central Railway between Butte and Helena and also the timber for the section houses and snow fences. During two years he furnished more than four million feet of lumber to that road. He entered the field of lumber manufacture by the purchase of two sawmills, one at Philipsburg and one at Ellison. He also invested $8,000 in railroad grading and construction outfit. He sold a third sawmill to Harry McLaughlin. His first sawmill at Clancy Gulch was the first saw milling machinery shipped into Montana. His business as a lumber producer continued with prosperity from 1887 to 1891. In the meantime he also used his railroad outfit for building the Pipestone road. Mr. Brennan came into the Bitter Root Valley with Marcus Daly, and for more than a year had a contract to furnish the Anaconda Copper Mining Company 1,500,000 feet of timber per month. The mill he operated for this contract he later sold to the Bitter Root Development Company.

Mr. Brennan has the distinction of having erected the first house in the present thriving town of Hamilton, Montana. That was in 1892, and he was engaged in an extensive business as a stonemason contractor, with Hamilton as his headquarters, until 1891. One work he did at that time was the construction of the dam across the Bitter Root at the mouth of Sleeping Child. Mr. Brennan, with a partner, Joseph Farrell, erected a mill at Pony, Montana, in 1901, also established a lumber yard there, conducting both plants for two seasons. About that time he was seized with the mining fever, and did some prospecting and spent a year as shift boss in the Garnet mine and was then promoted to foreman. After eight months the mine shut down and was never opened again. In the course of his prospecting Mr. Brennan went up into the Boss Tweed district of Madison County, discovered a body of gold ore, and getting a lease on the property for three months with his partner, Ed Smith, he took out $25,000 worth of gold, the dirt assaying at $80 a ton.

Among the many varied experiences of Mr. Brennan he has been a successful rancher. After the mining venture just noted he bought a ranch two miles from Harrison, Montana, his associate being his brother-in-law, Joseph Farrell. They paid $19 an acre for 920 acres, and when they sold the property in 1918 the purchase price was $70 an acre. In 1918 Mr. Brennan moved to Missoula and bought the O. K. Trading Company's property, consisting of a general store and residence at the corner of South Fifth and Arthur streets. This is the business to which he now gives his time and attention.



W. H. Brennan

Mr. Brennan is an independent democrat. While living at Hamilton he served as town marshal. He is a member of the Catholic Church and is a third degree Knight of Columbus, being affiliated with Missoula Council No. 1021, and is also a member of Pony Camp, Modern Woodmen of America.

In 1889, at Helena, Mr. Brennan married Miss Rosie Ferrell, daughter of Brown and Elizabeth (Denning) Ferrell. Her parents live at Pony, Montana, her father being a retired farmer. Brown Ferrell is a real Montana pioneer, having located at Virginia City as early as 1863. For many years he was a pioneer prospector and placer miner, and later went on a ranch. Mrs. Brennan has the distinction of being one of the oldest native daughters of Virginia City, where she was born March 22, 1866. Clarissa, the oldest of Mr. and Mrs. Brennan's children, is the wife of Fred Carman, a rancher near Harrison; James is with the Interstate Lumber Company at Whitehall, Montana; Francis, who is now assisting his father in the store, spent fourteen months overseas with the 248th Aerial Squadron, being trained as a mechanic in England for eight months and for six months was in France, and he has a record in the air of sixty-eight hours; John, who also assists his father in business, enlisted, but the armistice was signed before he was able to get into active service; William is a student in the Loyola High School at Missoula; while Rose and Mary Alice, the youngest, are pupils of the Sisters Academy.

Irving U. Danley. It is quite possible that no other resident of Montana can lay claim to the certain distinction that belongs to Irving U. Danley, a representative business man and prominent citizen of Manhattan, Montana, that of having a great-grandfather's name perpetuated by inscription on the monument that commemorates the battle of Bunker Hill in the Revolutionary war. Later members of the family have added military glory, Mr. Danley's grandfather, Col. James Danley, being an officer in the War of 1812, and his father, the late S. K. Danley, was a wounded veteran of the Civil war.

Irving U. Danley was born at Chicago, Illinois, August 24, 1865. His parents were S. K. and Adaline (Randall) Danley, the latter of whom was born in Oneida County, New York, in 1827 and died at Marseilles, Illinois, in 1900. S. K. Danley was born in 1817 in an ox cart on Kentucky soil while his parents were enroute from Virginia to Missouri and his death occurred at Marseilles, Illinois, in 1905. He was reared in Missouri, learned to be a horseshoer, moved to Wisconsin and was married at Milwaukee, and some time afterward moved to Chicago, where he lived five years and worked at the carpenter trade. Early in the Civil war he enlisted and became a member of Company A, Eighty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served through the war, participating in many battles and campaigns. He was at Shiloh and was with Sherman on the march to the sea, and later was wounded in an engagement on the bank of the Hiawatha River.

In 1866 Mr. Danley moved to Marseilles, Illinois, where he lived during the rest of his life, during his active years working as a carpenter and builder. In politics he was a republican, and he was active in the Grand Army of the Republic. For many years he was a deacon in the Congregational Church. His children were the following: Stella, who died at Marseilles, Illinois, was the widow of William Parker; Irving U., and Nettie, who died in infancy.

Irving U. Danley was graduated from the high school at Marseilles in 1881. He early developed interest in mechanics and his first work was done on the Rock Island Railway as a fireman, later being promoted to a locomotive engineer, and as such he worked in Illinois and Iowa. Later as a stationary engineer he was employed in the City of Philadelphia. His work and pleasure have made him an extensive traveler, and in pursuit of one or the other he has visited every state in the Union, together with Canada, Central America and Mexico. In 1884 he came to Montana and worked as a stationary engineer at Butte and also at Helena, and afterward at Grand Mere, Canada. In 1900 he came to Manhattan, Montana, and undertook the job of putting in the machinery and starting the paper mills here, which required three years to complete. Following the successful closing of that contract he went in with the Sanborn Company, general merchants, and remained four years. In 1910 he opened a garage, which he has developed into the largest enterprise of its kind at Manhattan, and the business done is probably of more volume than any other garage business in the county. It is situated on Railroad Avenue, with floor space of 50 by 100 feet, well equipped for the handling of automobiles and exhibition of Franklin cars, of which he is a selling agent. This is a business that interests Mr. Danley and he is doing exceedingly well. He carries a full line of automobile accessories.

At Bozeman, Montana, in 1908, Mr. Danley was united in marriage to Miss Myrtle Haskins, a lady of education and social accomplishments and a graduate of the Montana State College. She is a daughter of C. H. and Kate (Bell) Haskins, the latter of whom resides at Bozeman. The father of Mrs. Danley died at Bozeman, being a retired ranchman and pioneer. Mr. Danley has always been consistent in his adherence to the principles of the republican party. He has long been identified with Masonry. He was the first master of Manhattan Lodge No. 59, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and belongs to Zona Chapter No. 12, Royal Arch Masons; St. John's Commandery No. 12, Knights Templar; Livingston Consistory No. 1, Thirty-second degree; and is also a member of Algeria Temple, Mystic Shrine, at Helena. He was the first patron of Sweetbrier Chapter No. 49, Order of the Eastern Star. He is an active member of the Commercial Club and is interested in every business project that promises to be of substantial benefit to the city.

E. L. Heidel, cashier of the Belgrade State Bank, of Belgrade, Montana, is a worthy representative of the younger financial element of his county. To a very considerable extent it is this element in any community, especially outside of the great cities, which infuses spirit and zest into the activities of the place. It is this element whose entrance upon the arena of active life dates back only comparatively a few years which monopolizes a large part of the vigor, zeal and pushing energy which keeps the nerves of the financial world ramifying through all the towns of the country strung to the full tension of strenuous endeavor.

Mr. Heidel was born at Valley City, North Dakota, November 13, 1891, a son of C. E. Heidel. His grandfather, August Heidel, was born in 1836, in Germany, and was twelve years of age when he came to the United States with his father, being reared in Missouri, where he was also married. He was subsequently a pioneer settler in the vicinity of St. Paul, Minnesota, where he was engaged in farming until his death in 1912. C. E. Heidel was born in Missouri, in 1861, and was reared there and in North Dakota, being for some years a general merchant at Valley City. In 1893 he removed to Minneapolis, where he was city agent for the Sleepy-Eye Milling Company, and left that concern to become a traveling representative for the North Dakota Implement Company, covering North and South Dakota and Minnesota for ten years. Mr. Heidel then became the organizer of the Black Rock Mining Company, going to Butte, Montana, in 1903, but after three years sold out to the Butte-Superior Mining Company, which later turned out to be one of the richest mines in the state, and, having received a good remuneration for his share, he practically retired from business and settled at Helena, Montana, where his death occurred in 1914. He was a member of Butte Lodge, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and while residing in North Dakota was a lieutenant in the National Guards of that state. He was married at Valley City, North Dakota, to Miss Hattie Weiser, who was born in 1864, at Shakopee, Minnesota, and died at Pomona, California, in 1902. They were the parents of three children: C. S., a graduate of the Minnesota School of Mines, University of Minnesota, and now a resident of Helena, Montana, where he is state hydrographer and assistant to A. W. Mahon, state engineer; A. W., a graduate of the University of Minnesota College of Law, degree LL. B., formerly assistant to Attorney General C. S. Ford, and at one time assistant to the United States district attorney, now a resident of Broadus, Powder River County, Montana, where he assisted in the organization of the Powder River County Bank, of which he is cashier, although he will later resume his law practice; and E. L., of this notice.

E. L. Heidel attended the public schools of Minneapolis, Minnesota; California; North Dakota, and Sioux City, Iowa, and in 1909 was graduated from the Central High School, Minneapolis. At that time he entered the Security National Bank of that city, starting his banking experience at the bottom in the humble capacity of bank messenger and being promoted through the various stages until he reached the post of assistant credit manager. In the meanwhile he was devoting himself to the study of law in the night school of the University of Minnesota, and while he has never engaged in active practice his experience and knowledge in this connection have been of incalculable value to him in his financial work. In 1913 Mr. Heidel became identified with the Commercial National Bank of Bozeman as teller, and after one year went to Great Falls, Montana, where he became connected with the Great Falls National Bank in the capacity of assistant cashier. In September, 1917, he transferred his services to Belgrade, where he became cashier of the Belgrade State Bank, a position which he occupies at this time. This bank was established in 1902 as a state bank, and is accounted one of the most substantial and successful in this part of the state. Its officials are: president, Louis Accola, of Bozeman; vice president, George J. Heck, of Belgrade; and cashier, E. L. Heidel. The capital of this institution is $50,000, its surplus and profits amounting to $60,000, while its deposits amount to $500,000. The banking house is situated on Northern Pacific Avenue, at the corner of Broadway. Mr. Heidel is an exceptionally enterprising young man and is universally recognized as thoroughly competent in all matters of finance. He is the owner of a ranch in the Judith Basin of Montana, near Stanford, and of a modern residence at the corner of Broadway and Madison Avenue. He is a democrat, but has taken no active part in political matters, and his religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, while as a fraternalist he holds membership in Belgrade Lodge No. 68, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and the Alpha Tau Omega, Greek letter college fraternity. He is likewise a member of the Belgrade Commercial Club and has a number of social and civic connections.

In 1910, at Minneapolis, Mr. Heidel married Miss Frances Brown, a native of Louisiana, and they have two children: Charles, born July 12, 1914; and Eva Lee, born June 7, 1917.

HELMER HAGELIE. The beautiful little City of Manhattan, Montana, has developed and prospered largely because of the sterling character of its citizens. They have been clearsighted enough to welcome to their midst able and enterprising business men, and the result has been progress along every line. Particularly has this been true in the mercantile trade, for in the Manhattan Mercantile Company the city has an organization that compares favorably with any in the state. Credit for a large part of this commercial importance is due Helmer Hagelie, a member of the corporation and who has been the company's able, indefatigable and judicious manager for the past six years.

Helmer Hagelie was born at Ossian in Winneshiek County, Iowa, February 1, 1882. He is a son of Chris and Martha (Osheim) Hagelie, and a grandson of Halvor Hagelie. The grandfather was born in Norway, in 1809, and came to the United States and settled as a farmer in Iowa prior to the Civil war, in which he served as a soldier in an Iowa regiment. In 1892 he retired to Buxton, North Dakota, and died there. The father of Helmer Hagelie was born at Ossian, Iowa, January 12, 1858, and remained there engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1892, when he went to Buxton, North Dakota, where he has farm interests. The mother was born at Ossian in 1863 and also survives. They are members of the Lutheran Church at Buxton. Of their children, Helmer was the first born, the others being as follows: Clara, who is the wife of Ole Foss, a farmer living near Buxton; Gilbert, who is a farmer near there; Cora, who married and lives near Buxton; Bennie, who is a farmer near Buxton; Liva, who resides with her parents, is a teacher in the public schools of Buxton; Martha, who is also a teacher there; Albert, who is a student at Buxton; Agnes, who was graduated from the Buxton High school in 1919, and Reuben, who is a student in the high school at Buxton. The son Bennie entered the army in September, 1917, and was in overseas service in the Fourth Division and saw active service until the armistice was signed. He received his discharge in August, 1919. He was wounded twice during this time. The parents, deeming education an important asset, have given their children every advantage in this line in their power.

Helmer Hagelie entered Hauges Seminary at Redwing, Minnesota, where he remained a student until 1897, leaving in his senior year. He then accepted a clerical position in the store of Oscar Sorlie at Buxton, and during the three years he continued there applied himself closely to learning business details, and by 1900, when he became connected with a store at Thompson, Iowa, was a competent clerk. Two years later he went into John Paulson's general store at Hillsboro, North Dakota, one year later leaving in order to go into business for himself, and for the next three years was the senior partner in the firm of Hagelie & Murphy at Reynolds, North Dakota. In 1908 he came to Montana and for two and a half years was manager of the dry goods department for the Heisberg Mercantile Company at Conrad, then went to Helena as a department manager for T. C. Power, and for two years was with the Bogy Mercantile Company at Chinook, Montana. As a result of these various changes Mr. Hagelie had become thoroughly acquainted not only with the trade but with different trade territories and their needs and demands, and when he came to the Manhattan Mercantile Company, in the spring of 1913, he was a man of matured judgment in regard to the mercantile business and well qualified for the responsible position of manager of this large business. It is the leading establishment of its kind in Gallatin County, and with its numerous special departments carries a complete stock of seasonable gools that under present careful managerial inspection represents the best in the market. The store is an imposing building with 100 by 80 feet floor space and is situated on Railroad Avenue. Mr. Hagelie has additional business interests, being treasurer and a director of the Trident Store Company, of Trident, Montana, and his two ranches, comprising 480 acres near Chinook, Montana, demand some attention. He also owns a handsome modern residence on Broadway, Manchester.

At Reynolds, North Dakota, in 1904, Mr. Hagelie was united in marriage to Miss Marie Bridston, who is a daughter of H. O. and Dorothy Bridston, the former of whom is a substantial farmer. Mrs. Hagelie completed her liberal education in the Maysville Normal School at Maysville, North Dakota, and before marriage was a teacher for some time. Mr. and Mrs. Hagelie have two children, namely: Verna, who was born December 6, 1906; and Raymond, who was born October 21, 1910.

Although his life has been one of business care and responsibility, Mr. Hagelie has never deemed politics or public service other than citizenship duties, and has honestly endeavored to be useful in such relations to his community. On April, 1919, he was elected a member of the City Council of Manhattan, on the democratic ticket, his fellow citizens thereby showing their approval of his thorough way of doing business and bringing about substantial results. He is serving also as secretary of the Commercial Club. Mr. and Mrs. Hagelie are members of the Lutheran Church.

Fred M. Byrne. In the less extensive and populous cities of the West the postmaster is very likely to be brought into contact with a greater number of the inhabitants and at more frequent intervals than almost any other member of the community. Few are the individual residents of either sex who do not become familiar with his presence and deportment and cognizant of his habits and characteristics, and there are likewise few, on the other hand, whom he has not learned to know. With such an intimate relationship existing between the man conducting the postoffice and the townspeople depending upon it, fortunate is the incumbent of that office when all the residents of the place have for him only words of commendation. Such is the favored position of Postmaster Fred M. Byrne, who located at Belgrade in 1910 as agent for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, and who a few years later was appointed postmaster, a position which he had held with marked fidelity and efficiency to the present time.

Mr. Byrne is a member of a family which settled in colonial days in Virginia, where his grandfather was born and where he died. Himself a native of West Columbia, West Virginia, he was born January 12, 1873, a son of Thomas Marshall and Hannah (Boyce) (Kay) Byrne. His father was born in 1823, in Braxton County, West Virginia, where he was reared and first married and where he was originally in the oil business, although he later took up merchandising. During the late '50s he moved to West Columbia, West Virginia, where he continued to occupy himself as a merchant until his death in March, 1897. He was a democrat, but took only a good citizens part in public affairs. His second wife was Hannah (Boyce) Kay, who was born in 1840 in England, and still survives her husband as a resident of Wheaton, Minnesota, and they were the parents of six children: George, formerly a blacksmith of Olivia, Minnesota, who died in 1898 at the age of twenty-six years; Fred M.; Betty, the wife of E. A. Johnson, in the machinery and hardware business at Huntington, West Virginia; Ralph E., station agent for the Chicago, St. Paul & Milwaukee Railway at Bowman, North Dakota; Frank P., twin of Ralph E., ex-postmaster and present deputy sheriff of Three Forks, Montana; and Minnie, the wife of E. G. Hammond, a grain buyer of Wheaton, Minnesota.

Fred M. Byrne was educated in the public schools of West Columbia and Charleston, West Virginia, and at seventeen years of age left school to take up the study of telegraphy, although for two years he also applied himself to truck gardening. Upon mastering his chosen vocation he began working for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway in Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota, and in the fall of 1910 was sent to Belgrade, Montana, as agent for his company. For three years he faithfully discharged the duties of his position, and in 1914 was appointed by President Wilson as postmaster, and has since acted in this capacity. His continuous conduct of the office up to this time has met with the hearty commendation of the people, and in addition to being a conscientious worker in an endeavor to elevate the service, is the possessor of those qualities of candor, sincerity, faithfulness and affability which give the best class of public officials a high standing in the estimation of those whose interests are entrusted to their care.

Mr. Byrne is a stanch democrat and unwavering in his support of the principles and candidates of the party which he joined at the time of the attainment of his majority. He belongs to Belgrade Lodge No. 68, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Belgrade Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, in both of which he has numerous friends, and is also a member of the Belgrade Commercial Club. His career has been successful from a materialistic viewpoint, and in addition to being a stockholder in the Farmers Bank of Belgrade he is the owner of a modern, attractive and well furnished home, where his many friends are always sure of a cordial welcome, located on Quaw Boulevard.

In 1903, at Olivia, Minnesota, Mr. Byrne was united in marriage with Miss Lillian Pfeiffer, daughter of John and Mary Pfeiffer, former farming people of Minnesota who are both deceased. Mrs. Byrne, who is a graduate of the Winona (Minnesota) Normal School, was a schoolteacher before her marriage, and is a lady of many graces and accomplishments. They are the parents of two children: Margaret, born February 10, 1905, a freshman in the Belgrade High School; and Marshall, born April 24, 1907, who is attending the graded public school at Belgrade.

Torjus Lundevall is a banker of long experience and training, and since 1917 has been actively identified with the banking, financial and other business interests of the city of Scobey. He was associated with other Minnesota business men and bankers who organized the Citizens State Bank at Scobey about nine years ago.

Mr. Lundevall was born at Kviteseid, Norway,

October 29, 1871, son of Olaf and Aasne (Groven) Lundevall, who spent all their lives in the Norwegian country. Of their five children the four sons are still living, Torjus being the only one in America. He grew up in Norway and was very well educated both in literary matters and for business. He attended a teachers' seminary, the Government Latin School and the Government Business College in Norway. For one term he taught in a country community, and was bookkeeper in a wholesale dry goods house at Christiania until he immigrated to the United States. From Christiania he sailed on the ship Angelo to Hull, crossed Britain by rail to Liverpool, and came to New York on the Gallia. His destination was Crookston, Minnesota, where a friend of his father lived. He reached there with $15 in cash, and sent that back home as soon as he found work. The first summer he taught in a Norwegian parochial school, following which he completed a course in a business college at Minneapolis, and for one year was employed as a stenographer at Montevideo, Minnesota. Mr. Lundevall acquired a very thorough knowledge of banking in the State Bank of Milan, Minnesota, an institution with which he was connected for eight years, beginning as bookkeeper and terminating his service as cashier. For twelve years he was associated with the State Bank of Greenbush, Minnesota, successively as cashier and vice president, and was actively identified with its management for twelve years. It was from Greenbush that Mr. Lundevall came to Scobey in 1917. He had become interested in the establishment of the Citizens State Bank as early as 1911, when he became a stockholder in the private bank of T. Anderson, Oie & Company, who subsequently chartered the Citizens State Bank. However, his active association with the bank and its related enterprises began only in 1917. He is now vice president of the bank, president of the Citizens Loan Company and secretary of the Citizens Realty Company, all of which have come into existence as auxiliaries of the mother institution.

Mr. Lundevall had been in America only a short time when he applied for his first citizenship papers and completed his naturalization in about five years. His father's old friend told him that whatever he did politically, "do not be a democrat." He cast his first presidential vote for Major McKinley and has supported the principles of his party since. His only public official service has been as a member of Village Councils and Boards of Education. He took the lodge degrees of Masonry at Appleton, Minnesota, and is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America. During the war, like other patriotic citizens of Scobey, he actively contributed to the purchase of bonds and worked in behalf of the Red Cross. Mr. Lundevall since coming to Scobey has built a modern eight-room house on Timmons Street.

At Albert Lea, Minnesota, June 22, 1898, he married Miss Evenna Groven, who was born in Minnesota, March 16, 1872, only child of Evan and Annie (Harelson) Groven, natives of Norway. Mrs. Lundevall attended the Lutheran Academy at Albert Lea, and prior to her marriage was employed as a clerk in a business at Northwood, North Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Lundevall have two children, Valborg Astoria, a student in St. Olaf College at Northfield, Minnesota, and Dagmar, attending the public schools of Scobey.

WILLIAM JEWETT KRESS, M. D. The entire absence of competition cannot account for the professional success and personal prestige of Dr. William Jewett Kress, of Belgrade, for while he is the only physician of this thriving and enterprising little city his achievements have been such as to mark him as a man of the highest ability and professional capacity, and his services have been such during his comparatively short residence here as to strengthen the reputation which he won both professionally and personally in long years of practice in other parts of the country.

Doctor Kress was born in Vancouver, Washington, September 6, 1873, and belongs to a family which originally came from Germany during Colonial days and settled in Pennsylvania. His father, General John A. Kress, who resides in retirement at No. 5030 Vernon Avenue, St. Louis, Missouri, was born in 1841, at Cory, Pennsylvania, and had a long and brilliant military career. Graduated from West Point Military Academy, he entered the United States Army as a first lieutenant, and served all through the war between the states, during which he rose to the rank of captain. Later he saw much fighting during the border Indian warfare days, and later took an active part in the Spanish-American war, being retired at the age of sixty-four years with a splendid record and the rank of brigadier general. He is a republican in politics, a Mason, and a member of the Episcopal Church. General Kress married Lydia Homet, who was born in 1854 in the state of New York and died at St. Louis, Missouri, in 1885, and they became the parents of seven children: Frederick, a graduate of Annapolis Naval Academy, class of 1886, who was an officer in the United States Navy and died at Benicia, California, when but twenty-three years of age; Marion, who died at the age of twenty years as the wife of the late Frederick Richardson, who was a ranch owner near Los Angeles, California; Helen, who died at St. Louis, aged twenty-nine years, as the wife of the late Fred Gurley, a railroad man; Dr. William Jewett, of this review; Frances, of St. Louis, widow of Lieutenant John Morrison, United States America, who met a soldier's death during the Philippine campaign; Clarence C., a physician anl surgeon, and past assistant surgeon of the United States Navy, now stationed on the United States Steamship Minnesota; and John A., Jr., who died at the age of twenty-one years at San Antonio, Texas, where he was a ranch owner.

William Jewett Kress received his early education in the public schools of St. Louis, Missouri, where he was graduated from high school in 1890, following which he entered Washington University and was graduated with the class of 1894, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine. Subsequently he took post-graduate work at the New York Polyclinic and at Bellevue Hospital in 1895, and in 1896 began the practice of his calling at Butte, Montana, where until 1898 he was in partnership with Dr. George H. Wells, with whom he conducted a private hospital. In 1898 he went to St. Louis, where he continued in practice until 1915, and in that year returned to Montana as a mine physician at Sand Coulee. In 1918, Doctor Kress embarked in practice at Belgrade, where he is the only physician, and where he carries on a general medical and surgical practice with offices in the Belgrade Building. He has a pleasing and confidence-inspiring personality, and his professional and general equipment has led him far toward the realization of a broad and exceptionally useful life. In the ranks of his calling he has advanced to a high place in the esteem of his fellow practitioners, and he is a valued member of the Gallatin County Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. In the capacity of city health officer he applies his conscientious energies to preserving the health and sanitation of the city of his adoption, and for a time he also acted in the capacity of health officer of Gallatin County. In his political adherence he maintains an independent stand, voting for man rather than party, and in all civic movements can be found allying his influence with the forces making for progress and advancement. His fraternal connection is with Belgrade Lodge No. 82, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Doctor Kress owns his own modern home at the corner of Broadway Street and Central Avenue.

In 1908, at Poughkeepsie, New York, Doctor Kress was united in marriage with Miss Blanche Ella Taylor, daughter of Lyman P. Taylor, a native of Illinois and railroad man who died at Omaha. He married Mary Ellen Van Wormer, a native of Rome, New York, who resides with Doctor and Mrs. Kress, and through whom Mrs. Kress is a direct descendant of Anika Jans, who came to America at the time of Peter Stuyvesant.

JOHN H. CONGDON. Extensive mercantile and mining interests serve to make John H. Congdon, a foremost business man of Manhattan, one of the men of independent fortune of Gallatin county, Montana, and that his portion in the financial world has been largely due to his own energy and enterprise is all the more creditable.

John H. Congdon was born at Dover, New Jersey, November 6, 1866, and is a son of William and Mary (Shears) Congdon, the latter of whom resides with her son at Manhattan. William Congdon was born in England, in January, 1840, and died at Manhattan, Montana, April 17, 1919. He came to the United States in 1862, went to Michigan and at first worked in the copper mines, but later became a contractor in ore mining and lived at Mount Hope, New Jersey. In 1872 he came west again and until 1874 was concerned in silver and gold mining at several points in Nevada, then went to Grass Valley, California, and became a gold miner. He remained on the Pacific coast until 1877, then returned for a year to New Jersey, but in 1878 came to Colorado, where he leased both gold and silver mines. In 1880 he became interested at Leadville, in gold and silver mining, and for a number of years afterward was connected with the Small Hopes Consolidated Mining Company there. In 1891 he gave himself another year of rest in his New Jersey home, but 1892 found him at Butte, Montana, interested in copper mining with the Amalgamated Company, and he remained there as foreman and also in an official capacity until 1912, when he came to Manhattan. Here he built a handsome residence, which his son John H. now owns, and here his last years were spent in great comfort. He was a republican in the political field and for many years was a member of the Masonic fraternity. His acquaintance was wide in mining circles and his judgment was considered worth while, for he had thorough experience, often in virgin fields. Of his children, John H. is the eldest, the others being: Anna, who is the wife of Newton Ely, a retired merchant tailor living at Dover, New Jersey; A. C., who is a resident of Butte, Montana, is a member of the mercantile firm of Evans & Congdon, also is at the head of the Economy Grocery Company, and is an extensive rancher in the Upper Madison District, Montana; and Lucy, who resides with her mother and brother at Manhattan and looks after their home comfort.

John H. Congdon attended the public schools and after his high school course spent eighteen months in Coleman's Business College at Newark, New Jersey, but prior to this had spent two years at Leadville, Colorado, attending school during the winters and working as a shipping clerk for his father during the summers. After completing his education he went to New York and worked there in a grocery house until 1892, when he came to Butte and was employed in a store in that city until 1899. He then embarked in business for himself by establishing a general merchandise enterprise which he conducted under the style of the J. H. Congdon Company until 1908, when he sold to Evans & Congdon, his brother, A. C. Congdon, being the junior member of the firm. In the same year he became interested in prospecting and mining in German Gulch at Twin Mountains, where at present he owns extensive interests. In 1909 Mr. Congdon came to Manhattan with the Sanborn Company, merchants, and continued financially interested in this company until 1915, in which year he bought his present store, in association with his brother A. C., as sole owners, and the business is conducted as the Congdon Company. It is a large establishment situated on Railroad Avenue, and is one of the important business houses of the place. Mr. Congdon is a stockholder and a director in the Home State Bank, and he is secretary and treasurer of the Garfield Mining Company, a large development proposition, and both copper and gold have been located by a tunnel of 1,690 feet. Mr. Congdon owns, as mentioned above, the family home at Manhattan and has a large amount of other city property. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, is a republican in political attitude, and belongs to Lodge No. 80, Odd Fellows, at Manhattan. Personally Mr. Congdon impresses one most favorably, his face indicating strength and business purpose, and his manner friendliness and sincerity.

MYRON STANLEY CARPENTER. Of the journalists of Montana whose experiences in newspaper life have covered a period of more than a quarter of a century, few have found in their chosen careers greater contentment or more material success than that which has come to Myron Stanley Carpenter, owner and publisher of the Belgrade Journal. Like numerous others of the guild, he began his connection with the business at the case, and his long identification with the editing and preparing of publications has covered a wide range of experiences and an extensive stretch of territory. At Belgrade, where both he and his paper are permanently located, he has become one of his community's most prominent and influential citizens and a molder of public thought both through the columns of his journal and in his capacity as a public official.

Mr. Carpenter was born at Ripon, Wisconsin, April 16, 1872, a son of Seth Bell Carpenter, and a member of a family which traces its ancestry back in this country to the landing of the Mayflower passengers. Seth Bell Carpenter was born in Vermont, in 1836, and was a young man when he took up his residence and engaged in the meat business at Ripon, Wisconsin. In June, 1872, he removed with his family to Green Lake, Wisconsin, where he embarked in the same line of business, and where he spent the rest of his life, with the exception of two years passed in Kansas and four years in the north central part of Wisconsin. He died at Green Lake in 1898, in the faith of the Congregational Church, of which he had been a lifelong member and generous supporter. Politically a republican, he was one of his party's influential men in his community, and served as roadmaster at Green Lake for a number of years. Fraternally he was affiliated with the Masons. Mr.

Carpenter married Nancy Matilda Stanley, who was born in 1834, also in Vermont, and died at Green Lake, Wisconsin, in 1902, and they were the parents of the following children: Viola A., who died unmarried at Green Lake, at the age of forty-five years; Loretta, who married first Edwin Long, a farmer and merchant at Green Lake, and after his death married Lorenzo D. Patterson, and resides on a farm near Green Lake, where Mr. Patterson is the owner of a large and valuable property and one of the wealthy men of his community; Clara C. is the widow of Walter Cole, who was a merchant at Green Lake, and she lost her son, Harvey, in the great drive in the Argonne Forest, France, October 7, 1918; Elva, the wife of H. P. Smith, identified with a banking house at Superior, Wisconsin; Freeman, a rancher and meat merchant at Maxville, Kansas; Myron Stanley; and Wilson R., who died at the age of sixteen years.

Myron Stanley Carpenter was educated in the public schools of Green Lake, Wisconsin, and at the age of fourteen years began work for his father in the meat business. This line, however, did not prove congenial, and when he attained his majority he turned his attention to the printer's trade, which he followed at Hortonville, Wisconsin, until 1894. In the fall of that year he returned to Green Lake and founded the Green Lake County Reporter, a modest publication at the start which he built up into sizeable proportions, retaining it until 1907, when he accepted an attractive offer and disposed of his interests. He next purchased an interest in the Princeton Republic, at Princeton, Wisconsin, but sold it after 2½ months and returned to Green Lake, where he established a job printing office, in conjunction with the conduct of which he published an advertising sheet known as the Live Wire. Mr. Carpenter continued to be thus employed until September, 1909, when he came to Montana and formed a connection with the Belgrade Journal. This lasted until October, 1910, when he established the Three Forks News and edited it until 1911, when he sold his stock. He was foreman of the mechanical department of the Bozeman Chronicle during the campaign of 1912. In the meantime Mr. Carpenter had homesteaded 160 acres of land situated fifteen miles north of Three Forks, a property which he still owns, and lived on his ranch until September, 1913, when the call of the craft again became too strong to resist and he became editor of the Three Forks News. He purchased the controlling interest in the Belgrade Journal, March 15, 1915, and at this time he and his wife are sole owners of this weekly publication, which is printed every Thursday. The Journal was established in 1900, and is independent in its political stand. It has an excellent circulation throughout Gallatin and the surrounding counties and devotes its columns to clean and authentic news and interesting features, with timely and well-written editorials and special articles. The plant and offices are situated on Northern Pacific Avenue, and a well-equipped job office is maintained at which reliable and attractive work is done.

Mr. Carpenter is a stanch democrat and his long activities in the ranks of his party culminated in 1918 when he became the democratic nominee for the Legislature. The campaign was one of the hardest-fought in the history of the county, Mr. Carpenter being defeated by five votes by M. W. Penwell, the choice of the republican party. Mr. Carpenter is serving his community capably in the capacities of justice of the peace and police magistrate. He is a valued and active member of the Belgrade Commercial Club, of which he was president for two years and secretary for a like period, and also is popular with his fellow-members in Belgrade Lodge No. 82, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Three Forks Camp, Modern Woodmen of America. With his family he belongs to the Presbyterian Church, in which he is an elder.

On December 16, 1896, Mr. Carpenter was married at Green Lake, Wisconsin, to Miss Andilusia Randall, a daughter of Hubert and Maria (Merrithew) Randall, the latter of whom resides on her homestead ranch in Montana. Mr. Randall, who was a veteran of the Civil war and a lifelong agriculturist in Wisconsin, died at Marshfield, that state. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter, namely: Randall Seth, who attended the State Normal School at Superior, Wisconsin, entered the Students' Army Training Corps while there, and became a bugler and a corporal, and is now residing at Belgrade, where he is assisting his father with his business duties and also in the conduct of his ranch; and Miss Erma Arvis, who is a sophomore at the Belgrade High School.

WILLIAM E. PARKINS. In the various activities which make up the life of the thriving and enterprising City of Belgrade, William E. Parkins has been a factor of prominence. His business connections include the assistant secretaryship of the Gallatin Valley Milling Company and a directorship in the Farmers Bank of Belgrade, as a public servant he is capably discharging the duties of council member, and in religious and social circles he is known as a man of constructive tendencies and one with the best interests of his community at heart.

Mr. Parkins was born in Madison County, Montana, March 13, 1878, a son of W. J. Parkins. His father was a native of Godmanchester, England, born in 1840, and reared and educated in his native place. He came to the United States during the late '50s and was married at Littleton, Colorado. In 1864 he came to Montana, locating in the Ruby Valley of Madison County, where he became a pioneer rancher, homesteader and stockman, and despite the fact that he died at the early age of forty-two years, in 1882, was one of the reasonably successful men of his locality. He was a republican in politics and a member of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Parkins married Marcia Montgomery, who was born at Waddington, New York, and still survives, making her home with her son at Belgrade, and three children were born to the union; Hattie M., who died at Craig, Montana, in 1913, as the wife of E. J. Trerise, now a retired farmer of Helena, Montana; William E.; and a daughter who died in infancy. Following the death of her husband Mrs. Parkins took her children back to Littleton, Colorado, and then to Denver, spending four years in these two places, later spent a year each in Madison County, Montana, and Denver, Colorado, and then went to Boise, Idaho, for one year. She had formerly been married to Dr. J. H. Miller, who was born in 1830, in Maryland, and was a physician by profession. He came to Helena, Montana, in 1889, where he practiced medicine for one year, and then located at Belgrade, spending ten years, subsequently practicing at Twin Bridges, Virginia City, Norris and finally Littleton, Colorado, where he died in 1912. He and his wife had no children, and after his death she moved to Belgrade to live with her son, William E.

tana; Boise City, Idaho; and Helena, Belgrade and Bozeman, Montana, and at the last-named place finished the freshman year in the Montana State College. Leaving that institution in 1898, he secured employment as a stenographer and office assistant at Bozeman, and later acted in a like capacity at Butte. In the fall of 1903 he came to Belgrade as bookkeeper for the Gallatin Valley Milling Company, and since that time has been steadily promoted until he now occupies the position of assistant secretary with this concern and has risen to a recognized place among the capable business men of his city. The mills and offices of this company are situated along the tracks of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul and Northern Pacific Railway's tracks, and the mills have a capacity of 250 barrels of flour daily. Mr. Parkins has been a factor in securing increased business for his concern and in making it one of the substantial houses of its kind in the county. He has various connections and is a director in the Farmers Bank of Belgrade, and his associates have every reason to place faith and confidence in his ability. Politically a republican, Mr. Parkins has interested himself in a practical way in civic affairs, and is at present a member of the council and one of the working and constructive members of that body. His religious connection is with the Episcopal Church, which he is serving as treasurer, and fraternally he is past master of Belgrade Lodge No. 68, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He also belongs to the Commercial Club.

Mr. Parkins was married in 1914, at Bozeman, Montana, to Miss Emma Rehsteiner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Rehsteiner, both of whom are deceased. Mrs. Parkins, who is a native of Tell City, Indiana, was a professional nurse prior to her marriage, and is a lady of many graces and accomplishments. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Parkins: William E., Jr., born March 1, 1916; and Katherine, born May 10, 1917.

Major William W. Alderson. While not chronologically the first, Major William W. Alderson was among the very first not only in point of time but in influence and achievement among the pioneers of Bozeman, and has long been regarded as one of the city's real founders and builders.

He was born at Arkendale, North Riding, Yorkshire, England, February 28, 1831, and died at Bozeman, October 15, 1906, at the age of seventy-five, having been a resident of Bozeman more than forty years. When he was seventeen years of age he came with his parents to the United States. The Alderson family settled in western Illinois, near the city of Galena. On May 30, 1854, at Shullsburg, Wisconsin, Mr. Alderson married Frances W. Weatherby. For a few years he was engaged in business at Shullsburg, but in 1858 moved to Minnesota Territory, and was one of the first to engage in the milling business in Winona County. In the fall of 1860 he returned to Illinois, living for a time at Council Hill, where he had charge of the milling business of his brother, Simon Alderson, and also did some farming.

In the spring of 1864, Mr. Alderson and his younger brother, John Alderson, came across the plains to the Northwest, to the then great Idaho Territory, part of which is now Montana. Perhaps a dozen earlier settlers had preceded them into the Gallatin Valley. The Aldersons arrived at the present site of Bozeman on July 14, 1864. They soon settled on a claim a mile south of the present Main Street of Bozeman. John remained with his brother a few years, but Major Alderson lived there ten years and in the meantime, while engaged in farming and dairying, he helped to establish the town of Bozeman, and proposed the name for the town, which was adopted August 9, 1864, in honor of the famous guide, John M. Bozeman, who piloted many emigrant trains through the mountain pass approaching this city.

Mr. Alderson and his brother started the building of a log house larger than their first cabin in 1865, William J. Beall, one of the founders of the city, assisting in the work. The house was completed in 1866, when Mr. Alderson was joined by his family, consisting of his wife and four children, who arrived from Wisconsin, having made the trip up the Missouri River from St. Louis to Fort Benton. Part of the original Alderson claim is now a choice residence section of the city of Bozeman, and the old log house that was the Alderson home for several years is still standing, one of the picturesque landmarks of the Gallatin Valley.

Mr. Alderson and his brother were among the first to raise wheat in the Gallatin Valley in 1865, and since that time farming has been a profitable industry. In order to secure seed they drove to Cache Valley, Utah, and by the time they completed the trip the wheat and oats cost them 20 cents per pound. Their first plow, purchased in Virginia City, cost $150, and the teeth of their harrow, made from an old wagon tire, cost 40 cents per pound. Mr. Alderson brought the first Wood's Harvester to Montana in 1865.

Mr. Alderson was not only active in the early agricultural advancement of the community, but he was also a leader in religious and educational work. He had been ordained as a local preacher before coming west, and he conducted the first religious services in Gallatin Valley, at the farm home of Oscar E. Penwell and his brother, Merritt W. Penwell, in July, 1865, on the ranch where M. W. Penwell and his family now reside, about twelve miles northwest of Bozeman. He organized the first Sunday school in Bozeman in 1866, and raised the funds to build the first church in this part of Montana, the Methodist Episcopal Church built in 1866 and 1867. He performed the marriage ceremony for many pioneer couples, and was called from the fields on his farm to perform the burial services for pioneers and their children.

The records of the school district still in existence show that Mr. Alderson was a member of the school board of the district in which Bozeman is located in 1868, and he served for twelve years on the board. He hauled lumber to build the first school house in the district, a building now used as a residence. He was also instrumental in securing the first brick school house in the district. For four years he was a member of the City Council, and was interested in many public movements.

In 1873 Mr. Alderson was appointed United States Indian agent at the Milk River Agency, and for three years he successfully held in check and managed the Sioux and Assiniboines, inducing many of these Indians to engage in farming. It was during his service as Indian agent that he acquired the title of Major. He resigned in 1876 in order to return to Bozeman to be with his family.

As a member of the Fifteenth Territorial Assembly in 1886 and 1887, Major Alderson served with notable ability and indefatigable energy through the regular and special sessions. He was also a representative from Gallatin County in the Fourth Legislative Assembly of the state of Montana, and as chairman of the committee on buildings and grounds, and also as a member of the committee on appropriations, he had much to do with securing for Montana the splendid educational institutions of which it now boasts.

Major Alderson helped to organize the Society of Montana Pioneers, and also the Pioneers Society of Gallatin County. He served efficiently as president of both organizations. He took a prominent part in the organization of the republican party in Gallatin County under conditions that were the reverse of encouraging.

It was perhaps in his long and active career as a newspaper man that Major Alderson was best known throughout the state and in other states. It was more with a view to increasing his usefulness than as a financial venture that he entered the journalistic field in 1877 by purchasing the Avant Courier, a weekly paper that had been established in 1871 as the successor of the Montana Pick and Plow, Bozeman's first paper. For nearly thirty years he continued to wield an important influence in the state through his fearless editorial utterances.

The Avant Courier was for several years the only paper published between Bismarck and Helena, and its files are considered valuable historical records. The Avant Courier and Gallatin County Republican were merged July 1, 1905, and in the consolidation Major Alderson was elected managing editor, a position he filled most ably until a short time before his death, dictating editorials after he became too weak physically to write, his mind being active until near the end. The columns of his paper were always open to the people of the community, and Major Alderson took special pride in chronicling events marking progress or that were calculated to add to the fame of the favored region in the upbuilding of which he played an important part. His pen was always ready to advance the interests of the community and the state in which he lived.

The Montana Press Association was another organization that Major Alderson helped to organize, and during its prosperous years he was one of its most earnest workers. He served as first vice president and as second president of the organization. In his address as president of the association he spoke to the news gatherers as follows: "However humble your lot or unpretentious your station in the field of journalism, never lose sight of the fact that you are, or should be, a gentleman, the peer of all your patrons, and a reliable news gatherer in the community. Whether the circulation of your paper reaches 300, 500 or 1,000, you have a larger if not a more appreciative and intelligent audience than any preacher or platform orator within the range of your editorial thunder, and that your weekly productions will be critically scanned and deliberately estimated in the scales of calm and deliberate public opinion."

The newspapers of the state did not hesitate to speak in appreciation of Major Alderson's work while he was living, and at the time of his death there were many editorial tributes, among them being a number of references to him as the "dean of Montana journalism," while the editor of the Butte Miner said, among other things: "To a great extent, what Charles A. Dana was to the newspaper world of the United States, Major Alderson was to the profession in Montana."

The Alderson family moved from the ranch home in 1874 to a commodious residence half a mile nearer the city, the home on Central Avenue, now one of the prettiest streets in the city, being the scene of many happy gatherings and community social affairs. Here Mr. and Mrs. Alderson celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 1904, and all their living children except one and some grandchildren were home to celebrate the occasion. At this home both Major Alderson and his wife died.

Mrs. Alderson was born in Durham County, England, May 5, 1834, and died at Bozeman, December 19, 1910. Of the nine children born to Major and Mrs. Alderson, Matthew W., the oldest, is editor of the Northwestern Stockman and Farmer at Helena. Edward C., a farmer and guide, died in Bozeman in 1917. The third is Mrs. E. L. Houston, of Bozeman. Mary F., who died in Chicago in 1903, was first married to Milton Russell, and later became the wife of Dr. Charles Dietz, of Chicago. Anna G. is the wife of James S. Hammond, a merchant at Billings. Margaret H., with her husband, Stephen A. Ulmer, lives on the Alderson ranch, where Charles R. Alderson, the next member of the family, is manager and one of the owners. William B. died at the age of sixteen, and George Franklin, the youngest, is linotype operator for the Bozeman Chronicle. There are eleven grandchildren living and four great-grandchildren.

Mrs. Elizabeth Lina (Alderson) Houston has many of the literary gifts of her honored father, and has long been prominent as a teacher and newspaper writer. She was born near Winona, Minnesota, and was brought to the Gallatin Valley in early childhood. She was educated at Bozeman, being a member of the first class graduated from the Bozeman High School. She attended through the sophomore year Northwestern University at Evanston, Illinois, leaving school in 1883, and the following year, at Bozeman, became the wife of Mr. Stafford Houston.

The late Mr. Houston was born in Carroll County, Missouri, and died at Fillmore, California. He was a graduate of a business college in his native county and was in the insurance business in St. Louis, while following his marriage he lived at Bozeman and conducted a stationery business. He served as deputy sheriff of Gallatin County, was a democrat in politics and a member of the Episcopal Church. Mr. and Mrs. Houston had one daughter, Edith, who was the wife of Howard M. Richardson, formerly manager for the Copeland Lumber Company at Manhattan, Montana. Mrs. Richardson died February 16, 1920, from influenza-pneumonia, and five days later her husband died from the same cause. They left a son, John Robert, who is being reared by the grandmother, Mrs. Houston, and a daughter, Elizabeth, born the day before her mother's death, who is being reared by Mrs. Houston's sister, Mrs. S. A. Ulmer, and her husband.

After the death of her husband Mrs. Houston went to Chicago and for eleven years was engaged alternately in work as bookkeeper and teacher. She returned to Bozeman in 1902 and has also taught school in this city, though for the greater part of the time she has been engaged in newspaper work. At present she is news writer for the Bozeman Chronicle, and reports for the large dailies. Mrs. Houston has collected an enormous amount of data, preparatory to the compilation of a history of the Gallatin Valley. She has prepared many interesting sketches of local pioneers, and for the past ten years has been secretary of the Pioneers Society of Gallatin County. She is Montana director of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and for two years was president of the State Federation. She has served as a member of the County Educational Examining Board for nine years and is a member of the Board of Trustees of the Gallatin County High School. Mrs. Houston is a member of the Episcopal Church. Her home is in the Blackmore Apartments.

JOHN DIMON, M. D., physician and surgeon of Three Forks, is one of the capable and highly trained members of his profession in Gallatin County. He was born in Clay County, Kansas, January 4, 1884, a son of N. H. Dimon, and grandson of Nathan Hedges Dimon, born at Sag Harbor, Long Island, New York, in 1814, and died in Clay County, Kansas, in 1909. During his active life he was a seaman, going on whaling voyages from Sag Harbor, but when he retired he went to Kansas. During the Civil war he served his country as a patriot. His wife before marriage was a Miss Ludlow, of New York State. Record is found of the Dimon family in the colonial history of New York, its representatives having come to this country from England about 1640.

N. H. Dimon was born at Sag Harbor, in 1847, and there grew to manhood. In 1862, although his father was in the service, he enlisted for the remainder of the Civil war in a New York infantry regiment, and was wounded at Cold Harbor, and after he recovered sufficiently to leave the hospital he was honorably discharged. He then took a three years' preparatory course at Colgate University, following it with a four year theological training, and was ordained a minister of the Baptist faith. About 1873 he moved to Clay Center, Kansas, and entered the educational field, alternating school teaching with farming, and meeting with gratifying success. He still resides at Clay Center. Always a republican, he has confined his political activities to exercising his right of suffrage. For many years he has been an honored member of the Odd Fellows. After coming to Clay Center he was married to Priscilla Jane Rowland, born in Pennsylvania in 1847. Mrs. Dimon died at Clay Center in 1915, she and her husband having had two children, namely: Doctor Dimon; and Charles A., who is principal of schools of Holirood, Kansas.

After attending the rural schools of Clay County, John Dimon was graduated from the Clay County High School of Clay Center in 1907, and for the subsequent two years was engaged in teaching school in Clay County. For a year he was a student of Washburn College at Topeka, Kansas, and then matriculated in the Kansas Medical College at Topeka, from which he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. During the next year he was interne at the Santa Fe Hospital at Topeka, leaving that city for Rock Springs, Wyoming. In six months Doctor Dimon went to Nepper, Washington, and was there engaged in practice for eighteen months. Once more he made a change, selecting Elk River, Idaho, for the scene of his labors during the succeeding three years. In the meanwhile his country had entered the great war, and Doctor Dimon, like so many of the members of the medical profession, felt the urgent need of men of his calling in the service, so enlisted in June, 1918, as a first lieutenant in the medical corps and was sent to Fort Reilly, and thence to Travis, Texas, where he was placed in the Eighteenth Sanitary Train, Eighteenth Division. He was also in the base hospital at Camp Travis, and was mustered out December 19, 1918, with the commission of captain in the Medical Reserve Corps. In January, 1919, Doctor Dimon came to Three Forks, establishing his offices in the Ruby Building, and is engaged in a general medical and surgical practice. Doctor Dimon belongs to the local, state and national medical associations. He belongs to Elk River Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Politically he is a republican.

On September 20, 1913, Doctor Dimon was married to Miss Hadassa E. Denham, at Kansas City, Missouri, a daughter of L. M. Denham, now deceased, who was a veterinary surgeon and professional trainer of horses in Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri and Arkansas. Mrs. Denham survives her husband and makes her home at Topeka, Kansas. Doctor and Mrs. Dimon have no children. The experience Doctor Dimon gained during his military service is a valuable one, and aside from the realization that he did his duty as he saw it and was not found lacking when his country called upon him for assistance in discharging its obligations, he feels that his practice is benefitted by his association with others of his profession, and the opportunity he had to handle so many and varied cases. In no calling have such radical changes been effected as that of the healing profession, and a long step forward was taken when the greatest physicians and surgeons met on the common ground of preserving the health and preventing the fatal results from death and disease during the titanic conflict just terminated.

CLEVELAND MARTIN YOUNG. Reliability and efficiency, combined with practical knowledge, work for success in any line, and especially is this true when they are possessed by an alert young business man such as Cleveland Martin Young, druggist of Three Forks. Already he has made his the leading drug store of Gallatin County, and has otherwise made himself known as one of the typical men of Montana who may be depended upon to accomplish whatever they set out to do. Mr. Young was born at Bowling Green, Missouri, August 23, 1885, a son of William E. Young. The Young family is of Scotch descent and was founded in this country during its colonial epoch, grafting on the original excellent national characteristics of Scotland others equally desirable as the members became identified with their new home. William E. Young was born at St. Louis, Missouri, in 1860, and now resides at Three Forks, having had an active career as merchant in Missouri and stockman in Montana, to which he came in 1893, first being at Livingston, but later coming to Three Forks, where he was the pioneer merchant, but continued his stockraising until his retirement. He still owns a ranch of 160 acres of irrigated land, eleven miles west of Three Forks. His residence is in the old town of Three Forks, and he owns the house and grounds. He is a democrat. Both as a Mason and member of the Methodist Episcopal Church he lives up to high ideals, and is held in the highest respect by all who know him. His wife, Laura (Copenhaven) Young, was born at Louisville, Missouri, in 1865, and their children are as follows: Myrtle, who died at the age of twenty-one years; Cleveland Martin, who was the second in order of birth; Thomas J., who is a brakeman for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, lives at Three Forks; Russie, who married Harry Gillingham, an insurance agent, lives at Three Forks; and Eva, who married Harry Gustine, of the county clerk's office, lives at Bozeman, Montana.

Cleveland Martin Young grew up in Gallatin County and attended its schools, his graduation from the Three Forks High School being in 1903. For the subsequent ten years Mr. Young was engaged in stockraising, but in 1913 became a member of the drug house known as the Three Forks Drug Company, in partnership with C. A. Berg. The store is located in the postoffice building on Main Street, and is well equipped and fitted. A full line of drugs and sundries is carried and a very large patronage is enjoyed, that is increasing annually. In addition to his drug interests Mr. Young owns his modern residence on Fifth Avenue. Like his father he is a democrat, but has never sought to come before the public as a candidate for office. In the Methodist Episcopal Church he finds expression of his religious faith. Mr. Young belongs to Three Forks Lodge No. 73, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Three Forks Chapter, Royal Arch Masons.

In 1915 Mr. Young was married at Three Forks to Miss Jessalyn Wilkins, a daughter of A. H. Wilkins, trainmaster for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad. He and his wife are residents of Lewistown, Montana. Mrs. Young is a graduate of the State University at Missoula, Montana, and a cultured lady of varied interests. The son of Mr. and Mrs. Young, Floyd Albert, was born May 4, 1916.

Frank P. Byrne as a young man learned telegraphy. As a telegraph operator he naturally entered the service of a railroad company and had many assignments to the combination duties of telegrapher and station agent. As a rule a railroad telegrapher makes frequent changes of residence, and Mr. Byrne in the course of his service has been identified with many communities along the various lines of the Milwaukee system in the Northwest. In course of time he reached Three Forks, Montana, where for the past ten years he has been regarded as a permanent resident, having left the service of the railroad and has entered vigorously into local affairs.

Mr. Byrne, who is present deputy sheriff, with Mrs. Byrne occupying the position of postmaster, was born at West Columbia in Mason County, West Virginia, May 17, 1877. Several generations of the family lived in Virginia. His parents were Thomas Marshall and Hannah (Boyce) Byrne. His father was born in what is now West Virginia in 1823, was a pioneer oil man and later a merchant and continued in business at West Columbia until his death in March, 1897. Hannah (Boyce) Kay was his second wife. She was born in England in 1839 and is still living, a resident of Wheaton, Minnesota. Of their six children three have been railroad men, Fred M., Ralph E. and Frank P., the two latter are twins, the former a station agent for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway in North Dakota.

Frank P. Byrne acquired his early education in the public schools of his native town. He left home at the age of fourteen and for four years worked as a market gardener at Charleston, West Virginia. Coming west, he learned telegraphy at Brownton, Minnesota, and was first employed as an operator by the Soo Railway at Marine Falls, Minnesota, and subsequently at Heafford Junction, Wisconsin, and Faithhorn Junction, Michigan. In 1890 he joined the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, first as an operator at Cologne and later as agent at various points along the Hastings and Dakota Division. He was promoted and served as train dispatcher at Aberdeen, South Dakota, on the James River Division, during 1906-07. He was then sent to McIntosh, South Dakota, on the Trans-Missouri Division of the Pacific Coast extension of that now trans-continental railway, and was station agent there until 1908. Mr. Byrne has always had an inclination for politics and public affairs, and he was elected and served two years as auditor of Corson County, South Dakota. He resigned that office and came to Three Forks, Montana, in April, 1910. Three Forks was then very young, but a promising town. Mr. Byrne was local agent for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul 1½ years. He gave up railroading to engage in the mercantile business with the Caldwell Company until 1914. He then returned to the Milwaukee Railway as chief timekeeper on the Rocky Mountain Division. In 1916 he was appointed postmaster of Three Forks, and held that office until December 1, 1918, when he resigned in favor of Mrs. Byrne, his wife who is the present postmaster. Since then he has given his chief attention to his duties as deputy sheriff.

Mr. Byrne has always been affiliated with the democratic party in politics. He is affiliated with the Episcopal Church and is a member of Bozeman Lodge No. 463, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Pythagoras Lodge No. 2, Knights of Pythias.

September 19, 1906, at Brookings, South Dakota, he married Miss Emeline Witzel, daughter of Henry A. and Emelia (Wichmann) Witzel, the latter now deceased. Her father is a contractor and builder at Watertown, South Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Byrne have two children: Emeline Elizabeth, born March 31, 1908, and Ralph Emerson, born August 15, 1913.

P. M. Abbott. Varied and interesting has been the record of P. M. Abbott of Three Forks, who now occupies the position in the community to which his talents entitle him, as president of the First National Bank of this city, in which his tact, sound judgment and broader sense of responsibility have full play. He was born in Wood County, Ohio, October 2, 1869, a son of P. S. Abbott, also a native of Ohio, where he was born in 1834, and he died in Wood County that state, in 1877, having been a resident of that commonwealth all of his life. By profession he was an attorney, but in 1862, during the war between the states, he enlisted in the Union army as a member of the First Ohio Heavy Artillery, and was wounded so severely that his injuries were the cause of his demise. After his return from his military service he resumed his practice and was elected prosecuting attorney of Wood County on the republican ticket. P. S. Abbott was married to Mary E. Fisher, born in Ohio in 1833, who died in Wood County, Ohio, in 1887. Her ancestors were Quakers, and came to the American colonies with William Penn, settling near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. One of her family, Daniel Pegg, was a soldier of the American Revolution, enlisted for service from Elizabethtown, New Jersey, was in a skirmish on Staten Island, and was pensioned on June 12, 1833. He later settled in Miami County, Ohio, being at that time, 1834, eighty-two years of age. The Abbotts came to this country from England during the colonial period, and served in the American Revolution. Lyman J. Abbott belongs to this branch of the family, and is a second cousin of P. M. Abbott. P. S. Abbott and his wife had the following children: Margaret, who married F. M. Gilbert, a manufacturer of centrifugal pumps, lives at Chicago; Madge, who is unmarried, lives at Los Angeles, California; Maude, who married a Mr. Cornell, an oil operator, is a widow and lives at Los Angeles; and P. M., whose name heads this review.

P. M. Abbott was graduated from the Bowling Green High School in 1886, following which he learned telegraphy and worked at his calling for various railroads in Ohio and other states. It was as a telegrapher for the Union Pacific Railroad that he came to Montana, his duties keeping him for a time in Beaverhead County, but in 1892, because of his capability, he was transferred to the Montana Division of the Northern Pacific Railway, in Gallatin County, where he remained until 1905, when he engaged in ranching near the present Town of Three Forks, and is still the owner of a fine ranch of 1,080 acres of land, located four miles east of Three Forks. This land is all irrigated, and he has been an extensive stock raiser for years. Mr. Abbott also has extensive land holdings in Broadwater and Jefferson counties. In 1909 the First National Bank of Three Forks was established, and in 1912 Mr. Abbott was made its president, and has continued to hold that office ever since, his stability and conservative policies giving it added financial strength. His associates in the bank are as follows: A. E. Barnes, vice president; and Sam J. Crouch, cashier. The bank has a capital stock of $25,000; a surplus of $8,000, and deposits of $300,000. The handsome two-story, pressed brick building on Main Street, with offices on the second floor, occupied by the bank is its property, and is admittedly one of the most substantial ones in this region. Mr. Abbott is a democrat and his strength with his party is evidenced by the fact that he was elected to the Upper House of the State Assembly in 1912 from Gallatin County and served the term of four years, during that period being connected with some very constructive legislation and belonging to some of the important committees. His record in the Senate is one which proves his ability and public spirit, and will be of value to him if he cares to go before the public again for office. He was the author of the present state highway law, and general road law under which Montana is now making its extensive road construction. Three Forks Lodge No. 88, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, holds his membership and has the advantages of his enthusiastic attendance. Mr. Abbott also belongs to the Sons of Veterans and the Chamber of Commerce of Three Forks. In addition to his other interests he owns mining property.

In 1902 Mr. Abbott was married at Helena, Montana, to Miss Katie Miller, a daughter of James F. and Mary Miller, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Miller was a stockman and rancher of the region about Three Forks. Mr. and Mrs. Abbott have no children. In every position he has occupied Mr. Abbott has been recognized as a useful and competent man, and is now an inspiration for activities of the best sort among his associates.

CHARLES LOCKHART. Enterprising and energetic, and prompt to take advantage of every offered opportunity for increasing his business and industrial interests, Charles Lockhart stands prominent among the leading contractors and builders of Billings, and is well known among the successful agriculturists of Yellowstone County, being owner of a fine ranch at Worden, where his family now reside. He was born March 8, 1879, at Red Oak, Iowa, where his father, the late Jefferson Lockhart, was then engaged in farming.

The descendant of a Scotch-Irish pioneer of Ohio, Jefferson Lockhart was born in that state in 1832, and there grew to man's estate. Familiar with agricultural pursuits from his youth up, he migrated to Iowa when quite young, and for a number of years thereafter was employed in general farming at Red Oak. In 1882 he removed to Wymore, Gage County, Nebraska, where he continued in his independent occupation for awhile. When the Oklahoma strip was opened up for settlers he took up a homestead claim, upon which he lived for a year or more. Going then to Kansas City, Missouri, he embarked in business as a real estate agent, and as a contractor and builder, and there spent his remaining years, dying, however, in Arkansas, where he was visiting friends, his death occurring in April, 1916. He was independent in politics, voting for the best men and measures, and while a resident of Nebraska served as road overseer. He was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, being devoted to its interests, and fraternally belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In his early life he took an active part in several skirmishes with the Indians, fighting heroically.

Jefferson Lockhart married, in Iowa, Emma Hines, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1848, and died in Kansas City, Missouri, in October, 1902. Children were born of their marriage as follows: William, a contractor and builder at San Pedro, California; Ephraim, engaged in farming at Council Bluffs, Iowa; Charles, the subject of this sketch; Thomas, of San Pedro, California, is head clerk on the wharves; and Cora, wife of a Mr. Kelley, an electrician at Toledo, Ohio.

Brought up and educated at Wymore, Nebraska, Charles Lockhart remained on the home farm until eighteen years of age. Going then to Old Mexico, he was there employed as a bridge carpenter for two years, after which he lived for five years in Western Kansas, being engaged in farming and carpentering. Coming to Montana in 1912, Mr. Lockhart located in Billings, but almost directly went to Worden and took up a homestead claim of forty acres of irrigated land on which his family still resides, and of which he has the supervision. For the past two years, since 1917 Mr. Lockhart has resumed his work as a contractor and builder in Billings, having his headquarters at 213 Avenue F, in the dwelling house which he owns, although he makes his home on his ranch. As a contractor Mr. Lockhart has erected many fine residences in Billings, having had a fair share of the city's patronage in that line of industry. Politically he is independent, voting without regard to party prejudices. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Modern Woodmen of America.

Mr. Lockhart married, in Hollenberg, Kansas, in 1902, Miss Emma Wilson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Wilson. Mrs. Wilson died in Hollenberg, on the home farm, which Mr. Wilson still occupies and manages. Mr. and Mrs. Lockhart have four children, namely: Mildred, born March 12, 1905; Bethel, born August 17, 1907; Pauline, born November 10, 1909; and Adeline, born May 13, 1918.

CLARENCE D. HOWE came to Montana while with the Government reclamation service. He was one of the men who supervised some of the extensive projects in the Billings district for the irrigation and reclamation of large bodies of farming land. Upon resigning from the service Mr. Howe took up his home at Worden, where he is a well known banker and rancher.

Mr. Howe was born in Richardson County, Nebraska, July 11, 1880. A record of his paternal ancestors goes back many years in this country, while in England the family have a consecutive history from the time of William the Conqueror. His grandfather, John L. Howe, was born in New York State in 1816, lived for many years at Plattsburg, moved out to Chicago and finally retired to San Diego, California, where he died in 1901. His wife was Cynthia Delano, who was born on an island in Lake Champlain, New York. Ira M. Howe, father of the Worden banker, was born at Plattsburg, New York, in 1848, grew up there, was married at Lancaster, Wisconsin, became a pioneer stock raiser in Richardson County, Nebraska, and in 1893 retired from business and moved to San Diego, California, where he is still living. He is a republican, a member of the Congregational Church and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Ira Howe married Ella Durand, who was born in Westfield, New York, in 1848.

Clarence D. Howe, only living son of his parents, grew up on his father's farm in Richardson County, Nebraska, attended the rural schools there, and continued his education in California. He attended a preparatory school at Pomona and also did work in Pomona College. He left college in his senior year, in 1903, and soon after entered the United States reclamation service. He was employed on a project at Yuma, Arizona, until the spring of 1904, was at Wadsworth, Nevada, until 1905, and in that year came to Montana and was stationed at Huntley, having charge of the construction work on the main canal, which was completed in 1907. He then remained as assistant project manager until 1909, and from that year until 1912 was manager of the Huntley project. In 1912 his headquarters were moved to Helena, Montana, where he was in the supervising engineer's office with the title of inspector of maintenance and operation for the northern division.

In the meantime Mr. Howe had not been blind to the many opportunities for an energetic man in Montana, and on leaving the Government service he organized the Farmers State Bank of Worden. He held the post of cashier until January 1, 1918, since which date he has been vice president and manager. Roy J. Covert, of Billings, is president, and William Shenck is cashier. This bank, capitalized at $20,000.00, with surplus of $4,000.00, is housed in a modern brick building erected in 1913 on Third Street. Mr. Howe has accumulated some valuable ranch property in Yellowstone County, his total holdings aggregating 1,500 acres.

Mr. Howe also takes much interest in republican politics, and served as committeeman of Yellowstone County. He is affiliated with Billings Lodge No. 394 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, is a member of the Billings Midland Empire Club, the Billings Club and Billings Country Club. In June, 1910, at Billings, he married Miss Helen Rowley, daughter of Henry W. and Harriet (Meeker) Rowley, resident of Billings. Her father is a successful business man and financier. Mr. and Mrs. Howe have two daughters, Helen, born February 5, 1913, and Jane, born January 24, 1919.

Ben F. Drake, of Billings, has been a busy man since he came to Montana, has been in the mining districts, a teacher and ranch hand, traveling salesman, manufacturer, and is now apparently settled down to his permanent business as a produce broker, at the head of one of the leading establishments of its kind in the state.

Mr. Drake was born in Moniteau County, Missouri, February 23, 1883. He represents one of the oldest families to settle in the western wilderness after the Revolutionary war. The Drakes originally came from England. His great-grandfather, James Drake, was a Kentucky pioneer who volunteered for service with General Jackson in the War of 1812 and was one of the Americans killed at the battle of New Orleans on January 8, 1815. Mr. Drake's grandfather, Asa Drake, was born in Tennessee in April, 1815, after his father's death. He went as a pioneer to Southern Missouri in 1836, homesteaded a farm in Moniteau County, and lived there and reared a family of fourteen children by his marriage to Sally Smith, a native of Kentucky. He died in Moniteau County in 1882.

P. S. Drake, father of Ben, was born in Morgan County, Missouri, in 1844, grew up and married in his native county and farmed there and in Moniteau County for many years. Later he moved to Montana and located on his ranch at Pony, where he died in 1911. He was a democrat and a very ardent Baptist in religion. His wife was Vianna Parsons, who was born in Iowa in 1851. She is the mother of eight children: Lillian, wife of Arthur H. Woods, a rancher in Carbon County, Montana; John W., a rancher at Pony, this state; Frances, who died at Bear Creek, Montana, where her husband, John Mikesell, formerly a merchant still lives; Mattie, wife of Walter Marye, superintendent of the city pumping plant at Worland, Wyoming; Grace, who for the past nineteen years has been with Armour & Company as head stenographer in the offices at Denver; Ben F.; Marsh, in government service in France; and Flora, living at Pony, widow of Grover Akins, a former rancher there who died in 1919.

Ben F. Drake attended the rural schools of Morgan County, Missouri, and in 1900, at the age of seventeen, came to Montana. For the next two years he worked around the mines and for the Electric Power Company on the Madison River in Madison County, helping survey the Lake site. In 1902 he went back to Missouri, attended public schools and spent six months in William Jewell College at Liberty. He left college in 1903 and came to Carbon County, Montana, spending the two following winters teaching and the corresponding summers on ranches. In 1905 he located at Billings and for five years was a broom manufacturer. The next five years he traveled as a coal salesman, covering the states of Washington, Montana and North Dakota. His present business was established in 1915. He handles butter, eggs and other farm produce wholesale, and is one of the leading bean handlers in the northwest, employing thirty-eight people for the sorting of beans. He shipped a large part of the local bean output to markets at Boston, New York, Chicago, New Orleans and Portland. His plant and warehouses are at 3009 Montana Avenue.

Mr. Drake owns a modern home at 310 Terry Avenue. He is independent in politics, a member of the Baptist Church and is affiliated with Billings Lodge No. 15, Knights of Pythias. In 1912, at Billings, he married Miss Katy Paulson, a daughter of N. K. and Marie (Paulson) Paulson, who reside at Billings. Her father is a retired farmer.

Tom Sandell. During the last half dozen years the farmers of the Shield River communities in Park County have almost invariably marketed their grain through Tom Sandell at Clyde Park. Mr. Sandell learned the grain business from the ground up, and for a number of years has been manager of the chief elevator at Clyde Park. He is now local representative of the Bozeman Milling Company.

Mr. Sandell was born in Telemarken, Norway, December 2, 1883. His people have lived in that part of Norway for many generations. His great-grandfather was a soldier in the Norwegian army in the war of 1814 against Sweden. Grandfather Olaf Sandell was born in 1804 and died in 1893, and spent all his life as a farmer near Telemarken. He also saw some active service as a soldier. Evan Sandell, father of the Clyde Park business man, was born in Telemarken in 1864 and died there in 1899. He served a time in the Norwegian army and otherwise followed the occupation of miner. He was a member of the Norwegian Lutheran Church. His wife was Aslaug Feten, who was born at Telemarken in 1853. She followed her children to the United States after her husband's death and died at Clinton, Wisconsin, in 1911. The oldest son, Olaf, was a carpenter by trade, and while employed at Beloit, Wisconsin, received injuries when a wall fell on him and died as a result of the accident in 1917. Emma, the second child and only daughter, is the wife of James O. Lee, a farmer near Beloit.

Tom Sandell, the youngest of the family, was educated in the public schools of his native Norwegian community and was about fifteen years old when in 1898 he came to the United States. For two years he lived at Sharon, Wisconsin, with his uncle Martin Anderson, an early farmer there, whose father had come from Sogn, Norway. In 1900 Mr. Sandell removed to Capron, Wisconsin, and during the two years there he attended high school and perfected his knowledge of the English language. Returning to Clinton he worked on a farm three years and then for four years farmed south of Beloit in Boone County, Illinois.

The record of his experience in Montana begins in 1910, when he came to Wibaux. For one season he was employed by T. M. Eberson in constructing grain elevators. About that time he determined to learn the grain business, and worked for one season as a helper. As a young man of promise and ability the Occident Elevator Company sent him in 1912 to Clyde Park as manager of their local interests. He represented the Occident Company until 1914, then for one year was manager for P. A. Schneckloth's elevator and since then has been manager at Clyde Park for the Bozeman Milling Company. This company is an incorporated firm with headquarters at Bozeman and operates elevators in different towns of Southern Montana. The elevator at Clyde Park is a large one and is located on the Northern Pacific Railway tracks, having a capacity of 40,000 bushels. The general manager of the company is Charles Vandenhook.

Mr. Sandell is a republican in politics. He is vice-grand of Clyde Park Lodge No. 64, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. As a fixture in the citizenship of Clyde Park he owns a modern home on Main Street and Fourth Avenue. He married at Livingston, Montana, in 1914, Miss Esther Bliler. Her parents, Ves and Clara (Coe) Bliler, live at Bozeman, where her father is assistant in a hardware and implement store. Mrs. Sandell is a graduate of the public schools of Wilsall, Montana. To their marriage were born three children, Tom, Jr., born December 4, 1915, Alice Irene, and Margaret Christine, twins, born October 7, 1917.

JACOB THORKELSON, M. D. Foremost among the medical practitioners of Anaconda stands Dr. Jacob Thorkelson, who has been established in this city, with a suite of offices in the Daly Bank Building, since July, 1918. A specialist in surgery, his medical knowledge and surgical skill are universally acknowledged, and professionally and otherwise Dr. Thorkelson is held in high esteem. Doctor Thorkelson was born and grew to the age of sixteen years in Norway. His parents were Thorkel and Maren (Peterson) Jacobson, both of whom were born and died near Bergen. There were two sons born to them, Jacob and Peter, the latter of whom died in the old home near Bergen.

In considering a man's life career, early environment must be noticed, and it may not be unreasonable to assume that the wide and varied experiences of one whose fortune it was for a number of years to view life from the deck of a sailing vessel, from cabin boy to captain, in a hundred alien ports, had its influence and, further, possibly awakened the sleeping talent that, cultivated, has made Doctor Thorkelson so truly useful in the practice of the noblest of professions.

Following his graduation from the Bergen High School, the youth Thorkelson, then sixteen years old, shipped as a cabin boy on a vessel sailing from a Norway seaport. Promotion followed, and the time came when he commanded American ships out from Philadelphia. During the years that he followed the sea he visited almost every country accessible to vessels, South America, Africa, China, Japan and India, and the ports of Europe and the United States. In 1892 he came to this country with the intention of becoming an American citizen and was naturalized in 1901.

It was in 1907 that Doctor Thorkelson began the serious study of medical science, and with the class of 1911 he was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore, Maryland, with his degree of M. D. During 1912 he served in his alma mater as associate professor of anatomy, and during 1913 held the chair of professor of anatomy in that institution. He then came to Montana and engaged in practice at Dillon, and from there in July, 1918, came to Anaconda. He is surgeon of the Montana State Hospital at Warm Springs, and formerly was county physician of Beaverhead County. He is a member of the Deer Lodge County, Montana State and the American Medical associations, the Association of Anatomists and the Medical Chirurgical Faculty of Maryland, and belongs to the Anaconda and the Anaconda Country clubs. He is also quite prominent in fraternal life, belonging to Laurel Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Laurel, Delaware; Bagdad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Butte, Montana; Hope Chapter No. 17, Royal Arch Masons, and St. Elmo Commandery No. 7, Knights Templar, of Laurel, Delaware; Laurel Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Oray Plate Lodge No. 390, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Virginia City, Montana; and Dillon Tribe, Improved Order of Red Men, of Dillon, Montana.

JAMES E. MEREDITH. While his active relations with the business and civic affairs of Montana are comparatively recent, James E. Meredith is a veteran of the lumber business, and brought to his work as manager of the Midland Lumber and Hardware Company of Pompey's Pillar a fund of experience and learning gained largely in the Northwestern states.

Mr. Meredith was born at Atlantic, Iowa, August 7, 1872. His people came originally from Wales and settled in this country in colonial times. His grandfather was a real pioneer. His name was Joseph. He was born in 1781, and when the middle west was a wilderness he went into the Illinois country and made his living by hunting and trapping. He followed the same business later in Iowa and after the discovery of gold in California went over the plains, to the Pacific Coast in 1849. He finally returned to Illinois and died at Peoria in 1884, more than a hundred years old. John L. Meredith, father of James E., was born in Peoria, Illinois, in 1836, grew up and married there and was one of the early settlers on a farm near Atlantic, Iowa. In 1884 he moved to Groton, South Dakota, continued farming, but from 1913 lived retired at Hot Springs, South Dakota, where he died in the spring of 1915. He was a very staunch republican in his political affiliations and a member of the Methodist Church. John L. Meredith married Keturah Doty, who was born in Illinois, 1837, and died in Groton, South Dakota, in 1905. They were the parents of three children: Addie, living at Groton, South Dakota, widow of James Carmine, who died in 1918, leaving a large farm; Jessie, living at Eureka, California, widow of Albert Sells, who was a farmer at Groton, South Dakota; and James E.

James E. Meredith attended rural schools at Brown County, South Dakota, and lived on his father's farm until the age of eighteen, when for two years he farmed independently, operated a well drilling machine in Brown County for four years, took up the homestead claim of a quarter section near Minot in that state and proved up on it, and lived there until 1902. He left the farm to go into the lumber business, working and learning all details of the industry in a yard conducted by the Rogers Lumber Company at Donnybrook, North Dakota. He was there for two years, and then for seven years was manager of a yard at Fagus, North Dakota, for the Rogers Brothers, Incorporated. In 1910 he became manager for the Atlas Lumber Company at Timberlake, South Dakota, remaining there four years, following which he was manager for the Schultz Lumber Company at Beach, North Dakota, until 1918. In June, 1918, Mr. Meredith came to Pompey's Pillar, Montana, and has since been manager of the Midland Lumber Company. The head offices of this concern are at Miles City.

Mr. Meredith is a republican, and retains his Odd Fellow membership in Timberlake Lodge. He married at Groton, South Dakota, in 1893, Miss Flora Kranhold, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Kranhold, the latter now deceased. Her father is a retired farmer at Groton. Mrs. Meredith, who is a graduate of the Groton High School, has two sons, both of whom were soldiers. Earl J., born February, 1895, was with a hospital unit with the army in France, while Chester O., born May 11, 1897, was with the Army of Occupation in Germany.

Samuel M. Nye. Examples that impress force of character on all who study them are worthy of record. By a few general observations may be conveyed some idea of the characteristics and worthy career of Samuel M. Nye, for many years a well-known mechanic at Livingston, but who is now living in honorable retirement in his pleasant home there, having through his industry and wise frugality accumulated a competency. He has pursued the even tenor of his way in a quiet and unostentatious manner, which never courts publicity, always doing the right as he understands it and attending strictly to his own affairs. The elements of a solid and practical nature which unite in his composition are not a matter of wonderment when we learn that he comes of sterling English ancestry, of the same blood that has entered so largely into the building of that great cosmopolitan character, the American of today.

Samuel M. Nye was born in Lewiston, New York, on October 22, 1852. His father, William Nye, was born in England in 1818 and his death occurred in Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, in 1879. He was reared and married in England and came to the United States in 1851, locating at Lewiston, New York, where he entered the employ of a mercantile firm. In 1858 he moved to Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, and entered the employ of the Great Western Railway, with which he remained until his death. He was a member of the Episcopal Church, to which he gave active support. He married Sarah Elizabeth Tucker, who was born in England in 1818 and who died in Hamilton, Canada, in 1890. They became the parents of seven children, as follows: William W., who was a carpenter, died at Saskatchewan, Canada; George James was the proprietor of a flour mill at Fenelon Falls, Ontario, Canada, where his death occurred; Francis Charles was a machinist, but died at Buffalo, New York; Louisa Jane, who resides at Jamestown, New York, is the widow of William Ross, who was superintendent of a machine shop in that city; Samuel M. is the immediate subject of this sketch; Sarah Elizabeth, of Hamilton, Canada, is the widow of John Patterson, formerly a master tailor in that city; Arthur Jesse, deceased, was superintendent of a steel bridge and machine factory at Toronto, Canada.

Samuel M. Nye attended the public schools of Hamilton, Canada, completing his studies in the grammar school, which he left at the age of fifteen years. He then learned the trade of a boilermaker with the Great Western Railroad, with which he remained until finishing his apprenticeship. He was then employed in Michigan by the Pere Marquette Railway, in Missouri by the Iron Mountain Railway and in Minnesota with the Northern Pacific Railway. He had a splendid record with the latter road, beginning in Brainard, Minnesota, in 1882 and continuing uninterruptedly until 1918, when he resigned. In November, 1884, he was transferred by the company to Livingston, where he became foreman of the boiler shops, which position he held up to the time of his retirement.

In political matters Mr. Nye gives his support to the republican party. He was one of the first councilmen for the city of Livingston and served several terms in that capacity. His fraternal record is a most interesting one. He is a member of Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is a past master and of which he has been secretary since 1893; Livingston Chapter No. 7, Royal Arch Masons; St. Bernard Commandery No. 6, Knights Templar; Eastern Montana Consistory, Scottish Rite Masons, in which he has been exalted to the thirty-third and last degree, and of which body he has been secretary since 1899; Algeria Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine at Helena; Orient Chapter No. 6, Order of the Eastern Star, of which he is a past worthy patron, and he is also a past grand patron of the Order of the Eastern Star for the State of Montana, and he is a member of Mountain View Hive No. 1, Knights of the Maccabees. He was one of the founders of the Railway Club, of which he was an active member for many years. He is a trustee of the Masonic Association of Livingston, which handles all affairs connected with the Masonic Temple. The latter is a commodious and well arranged building, comprising two stories and basement. It contains two large and well arranged lodge rooms, which are used by the Masons and other fraternal orders. The offices of the Chamber of Commerce are also in this building, as are other offices. Mr. Nye has rendered effective and highly appreciated service to the various bodies to which he belongs and in which he is held in the highest esteem.

In 1875, in Hamilton, Canada, Mr. Nye married Sarah E. Shipton, who was born in 1856 in Woolwich, Kent, England, and whose death occurred in 1918 in Livingston. To Mr. and Mrs. Nye have been born the following children: Samuel M., Jr., who died in 1913, at Glendive, Montana, was foreman of the boiler shop of the Northern Pacific Railway at that place; William A. is a printer at The Dalles, Oregon; Walter M. is the owner of a 420-acre ranch near Willsall, Montana; Frank G. is a merchant in Livingston; Charles E. is a boiler-maker by trade; John A., who resides in Livingston, is foreman of air inspection for the Northern Pacific Railway; Louis is vice president of the State Bank of Livingston, one of the leading banks of this section of Montana, and much of the success of which is directly due to the indefatigable efforts and sound business judgment of Mr. Nye; Edith M. is the wife of Glenn R. Brown, a brakeman on the Northern Pacific Railroad. She completed her education in the Park County High School.

Frank B. Bair. Bringing to his calling good business methods, excellent judgment and keen perceptive faculties, Frank B. Bair, of Billings, is meeting with highly satisfactory results in his labors as vice president and general manager of the Montana Live Stock and Loan Company, having been a conspicuous factor in building up and extending the business operations of the organization and in making its influence felt in the leading agricultural and financial circles of Southeastern Montana. Born in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, June 29, 1881, he is still in manhood's prime.

His father, Elias Bair, was born in Pennsylvania, in 1843, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. After his marriage he bought land in Lancaster County, and by dint of perserving toil improved a productive farm, on which he resided many years. In 1899, having accumulated a fair share of this world's goods, he removed to Philadelphia, where he lived retired until his death in 1912. In politics he was identified with the republican party, and in religion he affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Elizabeth Raymond, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1846, and is now a resident of Philadelphia. Of the fourteen children born of their union, two died in infancy, the others being as follows: John D., who is extensively engaged in the live stock business in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania; Annie C., residing in Philadelphia, is the widow of R. L. Shirk, a former employe of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company; William Henry, who was for a time engaged in business at Philadelphia, died in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, when but twenty-six years of age; Jacob R., of Philadelphia, is a conductor on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; Samuel G., foreman for a contracting company, resides in New Jersey; Clement R., of St. Paul, Minnesota, is cashier for Swift & Company; Mary E., wife of Park Foulke, a brick contractor at Coatesville, Pennsylvania; Harvey E., of Philadelphia, holds a responsible position as foreman on the large Woods estate; Frank B., of whom we write; Sarah, wife of Walter Cosner, of Philadelphia, an automobile dealer; Rachel, wife of R. L. Pearson, a salesman in Philadelphia; and Rebecca, who died at the early age of fifteen years.

Acquiring his early education in his native state, Frank B. Bair attended the rural schools of Lancaster County, completing his studies in Philadelphia. Beginning life for himself at the age of fifteen years, he was variously employed for awhile, for three years serving as conductor on a trolley car in Philadelphia. Continuing in that city, he was subsequently engaged in mercantile pursuits for four years, buying and selling goods on the instalment plan. That line of industry being scarce suited to one of his energetic temperament and enterprise, Mr. Bair went to the wide-awake city of Chicago in 1909, and for four years thereafter was employed in the Stock Yards, where, with the Clay, Robinson & Company firm, he became thoroughly acquainted with the details of the live stock business. In 1913, continuing with the same company, he was live stock salesman in St. Paul, Minnesota, for three years, gaining a practical experience that has since been of inestimable value to him. Locating in Billings in 1916, Mr. Blair has since been actively associated with the Montana Live Stock and Loan Company as vice president and general manager of its affairs, a position that he is filling in a most competent manner, the organization under his skillful supervision being in a highly flourishing condition. Mr. Bair is also secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Billings Stock Yards Company, which is carrying on a thriving business. Mr. Bair is one of the busiest men in Billings, his offices being located in the Exchange Building at the stock yards, one mile east of the city.

Although affiliated with the republican ranks, Mr. Bair takes no active part in the management of public affairs, his private interests demanding his entire attention. Socially he is a member of the Billings Midland Empire Club, and fraternally he belongs to Philadelphia Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, and to Saint Paul Camp, Woodmen of the World. Religiously he affiliates with the Methodist Episcopal Church. He owns a fine residence at No. 1029 North Thirtieth Street, where he and his wife take great pleasure in entertaining their many friends.

Mr. Bair married, in 1904, at Mount Carmel, Pennsylvania, Miss Edna M. Philips, a graduate of the Mount Carmel High School. Her parents, Ed. and Ida (Maurer) Philips, are residents of Mount Carmel, where Mr. Philips is a blacksmith in the mines. Mr. and Mrs. Bair have three children, namely: Edna Elizabeth, born in August, 1905; Frank E., born in September, 1915; and Katherine, born in January, 1918.

Livingston Publishing Company. One of the most influential newspapers in Montana is the Livingston Enterprise, owned and published by the Livingston Publishing Company. The Enterprise was established as a weekly in 1910. In 1914 a consolidation was effected between the Enterprise and the Post, the Enterprise being continued as a daily issue with the Post as a weekly. Since 1916 the Enterprise has been a morning paper, previously having been issued in the afternoon. The Livingston Publishing Company has one of the best equipped plants for newspaper work in the state. The Enterprise is regarded as a democratic paper and has a circulation all over Park and surrounding counties.

The company is incorporated, Robert S. Phillips being the president and J. Thomas Melton, the vice president. Mr. Phillips is editor and general manager, and J. Thomas Melton is the business manager.

J. Thomas Melton, business manager of the Enterprise, is a printer and newspaper man of almost lifelong experience. He was born at Texarkana, Arkansas, September 20, 1875, and was only twelve years old when he went to work in a printing office. His ancestors originally lived in England, where the family were noted as cloth manufacturers and their home was known as Melton-Mowbray. Then name of the family was also transferred to a special make of cloth, a broadcloth with a rough finish being known as "Melton cloth."

Several generations ago one branch of the Melton family came to America and settled in South Carolina. D. W. Melton, father of J. Thomas, was born in South Carolina in 1838. He lived there during his early years, and afterward moved to Missouri, where he was a farmer and was in a similar occupation in Louisiana and Arkansas. In 1870 he went to Texarkana, before a town was established there and before there was a railroad and before there was a bridge over the river. After remaining there several years he returned to Iron Mountain, Missouri, for twenty years and then went back to Texarkana and finally moved into Texas and died at Kildare, that state, in 1903. He had served in the Confederate army with a Missouri regiment, being assigned to ambulance duty. He was a democrat in politics. D. W. Melton married Amanda Strickland, who was born in North Carolina in 1840 and died at Texarkana in 1895. Louis, the oldest of their children, is in the lumber business at Kildare, Texas; Eliza is the wife of Henry W. Cook, a carpenter and contractor at Texarkana; William M. is a contractor and builder at Tulsa, Oklahoma; Martha is the wife of A. N. McDaniel, a rancher, mill man, timber dealer and generally prominent in the business affairs of Redwater, Texas; Harriet is the wife of H. W. Cox, a railroad employe living at Texarkana; while J. Thomas is the sixth and youngest of the family.

J. Thomas Melton attended public school in his native town, and in 1887 went to work in a printing office. He spent twelve years learning and working at his trade in Texarkana. In 1897 he started out as a journeyman, and the course of his wanderings took him through Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska Wyoming, South Dakota, California, Oregon, Washington and Idaho. He first visited Montana in 1906, spending a brief time working for the Billings Times under Col. C. M. Morris. After that he resumed his journey toward the coast. On his way back he became foreman of the Times at Wallace, Idaho, for a year. For six years Mr. Melton was at Chandler, Oklahoma, as manager of the Chandler News, and while there he married. In 1909 he established a job printing office at Hamilton, Montana, and after three years sold out. He then spent a year as manager of the Granite County News at Drummond and on account of his wife's health moved to Portland, Oregon, in 1913. Later in the same year he returned to Montana, and was with the Henley Printing Company at Missoula until 1913. He then resumed his residence at Hamilton, spending one year with the Ravalli County Republican. Mr. Melton came to Livingston in 1916 and at first was in the jobbing department of the Enterprise, was made foreman of that department, then superintendent, advertising manager, and since September 1, 1918, has been business manager of the company.

Mr. Melton is a republican in politics. He is an active member and president of the board of trustees of the Christian Science Church at Livingston and is affiliated with Hamilton Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America.

He married Mrs. Effie G. (Gilstrap) Frazier at Chandler, Oklahoma, in 1909. Her father, Austin Gilstrap, was a Kansas farmer. She was born at Colfax, Illinois, and died at Missoula, Montana, in September, 1913. In July, 1916, Mr. Melton married Miss Maude Furnham at Livingston, daughter of David and Matilda (White) Furnham. Her parents live at Sparta, Wisconsin, her father being a Wisconsin farmer.

Judge James F. O'Connor. While Judge O'Connor has been a resident of Livingston only fifteen years, few citizens have more interests by which they may be readily identified with the enterprise and life of the community. He is a former judge of the District Court, a successful lawyer, president of the Northwestern National Bank, a rancher, and was also president of the Livingston Publishing Company, publishers of the Livingston Enterprise.

Judge O'Connor was born at California Junction, Iowa, May 7, 1878. His father, Patrick O'Connor, was born in County Clare, Ireland, in 1827, and at this writing is ninety-two years of age. Evidently he had as much enterprise and vigor of performance as he had years of life. He was reared and married in his native Irish county and came to the United States in 1852. He did his first work as a railroad man in Wisconsin. Subsequently he became a pioneer in California Junction, Iowa, and has spent the greater part of his life as a farmer. He has developed several handsome farms which he still owns in the vicinity of California Junction, and is now living at Missouri Valley, Iowa. He has always been democratic in politics and is a member of the Catholic Church. He married Bridget O'Brien, who was born in County Clare in 1836. The record of their children is a very unusual one. There were ten in all, and the first eight were daughters. Every one of these daughters married a railroad man. The only two sons chose the profession of law. Judge O'Connor is the youngest of the family. His brother was Maurice O'Connor, who died in 1917, at the age of forty-two, at Fort Dodge, Iowa. He was associated in practice with the present Senator Kenyon of Iowa. A brief record of the daughters of the family is as follows: Mary, wife of James H. Clark, of Lincoln, Nebraska; Ellen, wife of Martin Burke, of Missouri Valley, Iowa; Anna, wife of William Mahoney, of Casper, Wyoming; Agnes, who married Michael O'Connor (not related) and lives at Missouri Valley; Elizabeth, wife of W. M. Kelley, of Spokane, Washington; Susan, wife of Charles Shinkle, of St. Louis, Missouri; Johanna, wife of John Dougherty, of Topeka, Kansas; and Emma, wife of J. P. Finucane, of Houston, Texas. All of them it will be noted reside in railroad centers.

James F. O'Connor received his primary education in the rural schools of Harrison County, Iowa, spent three years in the Woodbine Normal School in that state, and took his law course in the University of Nebraska at Lincoln. He was graduated LL. B. in 1904 and the following year came to Montana and began practice at Livingston, where he has been connected with much of the important civil and criminal litigation. His offices are in the postoffice building.

Much of his time, however, has been taken up by public duties and business responsibilities not directly connected with his profession. For a number of years he was president of the Livingston School Board. Governor Norris appointed him judge of the Sixth Judicial District and he filled the unexpired term for 1912-13. At his appointment he was the youngest district judge in the state. In 1916 he was elected a member of the Legislature and during the session of 1917 was speaker of the House. During 1918 for six months he was special counsel to the Federal Trade Commission at Washington, District of Columbia, that being his patriotic service during the war. Judge O'Connor is an influential democrat in the state, is affiliated with Livingston Lodge No. 246, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, was a member of the State Bar Association and is a Catholic in religion.

Besides his official relations as president and director of the Northwestern National Bank, president, director and stockholder in the Livingston Enterprise, he owns a cattle ranch of 640 acres on Shields River in Park County and has a half interest in a 5,000 acre sheep ranch in Ravalli County. His home is at 227 South Yellowstone Street.

Judge O'Connor married Miss Kate Adams at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1898. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Adams, are both deceased, her father having been a farmer. To their marriage were born two children: Miles James, now a freshman in Mt. St. Charles College at Helena, and Geneva, a member of the junior class of the Park County High School.

Albert K. Smith, of Rapelje, is one of the many young men who are swinging the larger responsibilities of business and industry in Montana today. Mr. Smith had his business training in the City of Minneapolis, and since coming to Montana has been identified with ranching on a large scale and also with merchandising, and is manager of the oldest mercantile business at Rapelje.

He was born at Minneapolis, October 30, 1887. His grandfather, John William Smith, was a native of Scotland, and on coming to America located at Boston, where he became a newspaper publisher. He died there more than thirty years ago. Wallace B. Smith, father of Albert K., was born in Boston in 1861, grew up at Rockland, Maine, and as a young man went to Minneapolis. He had a long and active career at railroading, spending thirty-three years as superintendent for the Chicago & Northwestern lines. Though still a resident of Minneapolis, he has acquired and developed extensive interests in Montana. In 1911 he went into the district north of Gibson in Sweetgrass County and homesteaded a ranch, bought more land, and now has 579 acres, constituting a grain and stock ranch. He has always been a republican in politics. Wallace B. Smith married Sarah McBain, who was born in Scotland in 1867 but was reared in Minnesota. They have two children, Grace I. and Albert K., the former a member of the home circle at Minneapolis.

Albert K. Smith graduated from the Minneapolis High School in 1907. He attended the University of Minnesota Law Department and received his law degree from that institution in 1909. While in university he was a member of the Zeta Psi Greek letter fraternity. For ten years he has been closely identified with commercial lines. After leaving the university he was a railroad man at Minneapolis and for 1½ years was city salesman there for Armour & Company. In 1911 he began ranching on his father's land near Gibson, Montana, and he has since acquired 320 acres of his own in that vicinity. He gives his supervision to his ranching, and in 1916 he removed to the site of the present Town of Rapelje, before the railroad was built. He is interested in the Lake Basin Trading Company and is manager of its general store at Rapelje.

He has become a permanent resident of the town, owns a modern home, is secretary of the Rapelje Cemetery Association, is on the board of trustees of the Congregational Church, is a democrat, and is affiliated with Big Timber Lodge of Masons.

At Minneapolis in 1910 he married Miss Marguerite Carr, daughter of W. H. and Martha (Blake) Carr. Her mother is still living at Minneapolis. Her father was a wholesale meat merchant and died at Minneapolis. Mrs. Smith is a graduate of the Mankato Normal at Mankato, Minnesota, and finished her education in the University of Minnesota. To their marriage have been born two children: McBain, born October 10, 1914, and Wallace Bertram, born June 28, 1916.

Oly M. Best came into the business life of the community of Dillon thirty-five years ago. He has been no laggard in business, has been a factor in upbuilding several of the larger companies represented in the city, and is founder and president and manager of the Western Wholesale Grocery Company and also an extensive sheep raiser.

Mr. Best was born in Kalamazoo County, Michigan, February 17, 1857. His paternal ancestors came from Holland and settled in Pennsylvania in colonial days. His father, Amos Best, was born in Schoharie County, New York, in 1833, and spent the greater part of his active life as a farmer in Kalamazoo County, Michigan, where he married. He lived retired at Vicksburg, Michigan, for several years and died there in 1913. He was a prominent member of his community, enjoyed the honor of several local offices, was a republican and a member of the Masonic fraternity. His first wife was Mary A. Kimball, who died at Vicksburg, Michigan, in 1857. Amos Best married for his second wife Lyvah Morse, who was born in 1844 and died at Vicksburg, Michigan, in 1916. She was the mother of three children: Raymond, a farmer at Fromberg, Montana; C. D., a former merchant and now city clerk at Port Angeles, Washington; and Ella, whose first husband was Henry Peet, and she is now the wife of Bird Williams, a shipyards worker at Seattle.

Mr. O. M. Best grew up on his father's farm, attended country schools in Kalamazoo County, Michigan, and at the age of sixteen was ready to make his own living. While employed as a grain buyer by a firm at Vicksburg, Michigan, he spent all his leisure time in learning the art of telegraphy. As a telegraph operator and agent he was connected with the Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway in Michigan and Indiana for ten years. It was as a railway man that Mr. Best came to Montana. Beginning in 1885, for two years he represented the Union Pacific Railway at Dillon as station agent. On leaving the railroad he was employed as bookkeeper for L. C. Fyhrie & Company, merchants. When this firm sold its business in 1889 to the Burfiend Brothers & Company Mr. Best remained with the organization, and when the business was reorganized as the Montana Mercantile Company, Incorporated, in 1890, he acquired an interest in the firm and was active in its affairs for a quarter of a century, until 1915. He still has some financial holdings in this well known Dillon concern.

In 1915 Mr. Best organized the Western Wholesale Grocery Company. He is president and manager of the corporation, J. P. Best is secretary and treasurer, and A. L. Stone is vice president. While the business has been in existence only five years, it is the largest concern of its kind in that part of the state and supplies the bulk of the retail trade in Dillon, Madison and Beaverhead counties, the Big Hole Basin and Centennial Valley of Montana and also Lemhi County and portions of Clark and Fremont counties in Idaho. The company has two warehouses on Montana Street. The main office and warehouse is a two-story building with basement, 100 feet square with 30,000 square feet of floor space. The company has twelve employes.

Mr. Best is half owner and also secretary and treasurer of the Swartz Sheep Company, one of the leading firms handling sheep in the Madison Valley near Ennis. Mr. Best has at different times held offices in his home city and county, and has always taken a diligent participation in local affairs. He is the present county commissioner of Beaverhead County, and in the early days served two terms in the same office. For several terms he was a member of the Dillon City Council and has been a member of the school board. He was on the Beaverhead County High School Board when the school was organized and was chairman of the building committee when the schoolhouse was built. Mr. Best is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with Dillon Lodge No. 23, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Dillon Camp, Woodmen of the World, and the Royal Highlanders.

He and his family live in a modern home at 235 South Idaho Street. He married at Climax, Michigan, in 1880, before coming to Montana, Miss Ida E. Pierce, a daughter of Horace and Julia (Pratt) Pierce. Her mother is still living at Climax, where her father, a farmer, died. Mr. and Mrs. Best have two children, Floyd, a dentist at Dillon; and Judson, owner of a candy factory at Dillon.

James E. Spurling has given fully forty years of his active life to railroading. For more than thirty years he has been in the service of the Northern Pacific Railway, is well known all over that system and is one of the prominent officials in Montana, being division freight and passenger agent at Billings.

Mr. Spurling is a native of Iowa, born at La Grange, November 16, 1862. His paternal ancestors came from Scotland and were colonial settlers in Virginia. His grandfather, William Spurling, was a native of Virginia, spent most of his life in that state as a farmer, and on retiring moved to Melrose, Iowa, where he died.

James E. Spurling was born after his father, James H. Spurling, gave his life to his country as a soldier of the Civil war. James H. Spurling was born in Virginia in 1826, was reared in that state, moved to Indiana, where he married, and shortly after his marriage settled at La Grange, Iowa, where he operated a sawmill. Though of southern ancestry he was strongly identified with the Union cause during the Civil war, and early in that trouble, in 1861, enlisted in the Sixth Iowa Infantry. He was with his regiment in a number of engagements, including the Battle of Fort Donelson, and on the great battlefield of Shiloh, April 6, 1862, he laid down his life. He was a republican in politics and a member of the Methodist Church. James H. Spurling married Ann Bevins, who was born at Jonesville, Indiana, in 1829, and died at Brookings, South Dakota, in December 1918, when nearly ninety years of age. She was the mother of two sons Edwin and James E. Edwin is a retired farmer at Brookings, South Dakota.

James E. Spurling attended public school at Melrose, Iowa, but early realized the responsibilities of life, and leaving school at the age of fifteen went to work as a messenger in the Melrose depot of the Chicago Burlington and Quincy Railway. He was there a year, learned telegraphy, and as a telegraph operator was employed at different points through Iowa by the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy until 1880. From Iowa he went to Minnesota and became a telegraph operator and station agent in the service of the Great Northern Railway. In 1881 he left railroading temporarily, and for six months was with the Langdon Shepherd Construction Company in Canada. For the year following he was with the Utah Northern Railway in Idaho, and from that time until 1886 was in the employ of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway in Dakota territory.

Mr. Spurling joined the Northern Pacific Railway in 1886. His first duties were in Dakota territory and his first experience in Montana was in 1891, when he was made agent at Butte. He remained there three years, and then returned to Jamestown, North Dakota, as agent until 1905. In that year he was made traveling freight agent, covering a large territory east of the Missouri River. In 1907 he was appointed to his present important duties as division freight and passenger agent at Billings, his offices being at 2812 Montana Avenue.

In the meantime Mr. Spurling has acquired considerable business and property interests, being a director in the First National Bank of Molt, and secretary of the Montana Live Stock Company of Billings. He owns a modern home at 703 North Thirty-second Street. Mr. Spurling is a republican, is affiliated with the Rotary Club of Billings, the local organization of Hoo Hoos, and is a member of Jamestown Lodge No. 6, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Jamestown Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons, in North Dakota.

In 1884, at Ironton, Wisconsin, he married Miss Tessie Mulholland, a daughter of Patrick and Mary (Trueman) Mulholland. Her parents are both deceased. Her father for a number of years was foreman in an iron foundry in Ironton, Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Spurling have four children. Edwin C. is local agent for the Northern Pacific Railway at Terry, Montana, and is a graduate of the Jamestown High School. Martha is the wife of Joseph L. Markham, advertising manager for the Billings Gazette. Tessie married Thomas M. Murn, a lawyer at Terry, Montana. Margaret, the youngest of the family, is still at home.

Herbert P. Imislund is a prominent Lewiston business man, the president of the Montana and Eastern Corporation, a large investment concern, handling the funds of outside capitalists invested in this state. The offices of the corporation are in the Imislund Building, at the heart of Lewistown's financial district.

Mr. Imislund is an old time Montana citizen, having been here for thirty years or more. He was born in Trempealeau county, Wisconsin, July 27, 1864. His parents, Peter H. and Annie (Anderson) Imislund, were both natives of Norway. His father came to this country when a young lad, and the family were pioneers in Trempealeau county. He cleared up a tract of government land in that section of Wisconsin, and lived there until his death at the age of forty-eight. He was a republican voter. His widow survived until 1916, and was eighty years of age at the time of her death.

Herbert P. Imislund, second of four children, spent his boyhood days on his father's Wisconsin farm, attending school only during the winter sessions. Leaving home in 1889, he came direct to Billings, Montana, traveling by railroad and thence going by stage to Maiden, where for three or four years he worked as a farm hand with the N Bar Ranch and others. He then became a clerk in the general store of James Charters at Grass Range, and after about three years bought the business and continued it under his own name for some eleven or twelve years. Mr. Imislund while at Grass Range was also interested with B. F. Moulton in a large ranch raising sheep and cattle. After selling his store at Grass Range in 1906 Mr. Imislund came to Lewistown and has since given all his time to his business as an investment banker.

He is a republican and is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hiram Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons, and Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On June 12, 1901, he married Margaret Charters. She was born near Portage, Wisconsin. They have one daughter, Lillian Judith.

GEORGE ARNOTT, JR. Well equipped for his chosen profession not only by his native talent and ability, but by his acquired knowledge of legal lore, George Arnott, Jr., of the well-known firm of Snell & Arnott, is numbered among the successful lawyers of Billings, where he has established a fine practice. A native of Illinois, he was born August 9, 1885, in Paxton, where his father, George Arnott, Sr., resided for upwards of thirty years. Of French Huguenot stock on the paternal side, the family from which he is descended fled with thousands of other Huguenots from France to Scotland in 1685. Later one of Mr. Arnott's ancestors became celebrated as a physician, and in that capacity was serving Napoleon Bonaparte when he was banished to the Island of St. Helena. The immigrant ancestor of the Arnott family crossed the Atlantic shortly after the close of the Revolutionary war.

James Arnott, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born in Orange County, New York, in 1810, and during his earlier life was there employed as a tiller of the soil. In 1869, following the tide of migration westward, he located in Ford County, Illinois, becoming a pioneer of Paxton, where he bought land and engaged in farming during the remainder of his life, dying there in 1895. His wife, whose maiden name was Agnes Coulter, was a life-long resident of New York state, her last years having been spent on the home farm in Orange County.

George Arnott, Sr., was born in Greenwich, New York, May 1, 1849, and was there brought up and educated. Going with his father to Illinois in 1869, he subsequently bought land in Paxton, and was there successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits for thirty-three years. Removing then with his family to Missouri, he purchased land in Tarkio, and there lived retired from active pursuits until 1910, a period of eight years. In 1910 he came to Montana, where he has large landed interests, owning a ranch of 1,000 acres at Judith Basin and 5,000 acres at Big Hole Basin, in Beaverhead County. He is a resident of Billings, where he has a modernly built home. He is a republican in politics, and an influential member of the Congregational Church. He married Susie Gray, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1852, and to them seven children have been born, as follows: James, a ranchman, died in Belden, Nebraska, aged twenty-seven years; Le Roy, who manages the large ranch at Big Hole Basin; Jessie, wife of George E. Snell, of the firm of Snell & Arnott, at Billings; Mary, who married Frank Sande, proprietor of a laundry at Thermopolis, Wyoming, died in Billings, Montana, March 17, 1916; George, Jr.; Ed, a ranchman at Windham, Montana; Annabelle, now, in 1919, a sophomore at the University of California, in Berkeley.

Receiving his preliminary education in the public schools of Paxton, Illinois, George Arnott, Jr., continued his studies in the preparatory department of Tarkio College, in Tarkio, Missouri, remaining in that institution three years. Going from there to Ann Arbor, he entered the University of Michigan, and was there graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1908. In July, 1908, Mr. Arnott settled in Billings, and having become junior member of the law firm of Snell & Arnott has since been actively and prosperously employed in legal work, with offices at Nos. 310-12-14 Securities Building, and a pleasant home at No. 302 Clark Avenue. By means of thrift and good judgment he has acquired title to valuable land, owning a ranch of 400 acres in the Yellowstone Valley, and a half interest in a ranch of 430 acres in Fergus County. He is likewise a stockholder in the Billings Gas Company, of which he is the treasurer.

Mr. Arnott married, in 1913, at Billings, Miss Irena Swearingen, who was graduated from the National Cathedral School, Washington, District of Columbia. Her parents, J. R. and Florence (Cardell) Swearingen, are residents of Billings, Mr. Swearingen being president of the Montana Sash and Door Company. Mr. and Mrs. Arnott have one child, Florence, born March 6, 1916. Socially Mr. Arnott is a member of the Billings Club and of the Billings Golf and Country Club. Fraternally he belongs to Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, and to the Billings Lodge of Perfection. He is also an active member of the Yellowstone County Bar Association and of the Montana State Bar Association.

T. S. HOGAN. Endowed with excellent business and executive ability, T. S. Hogan, who now owns and occupies one of the most highly improved ranches of Yellowstone County, it being situated six miles south of Huntley, has achieved distinction as a man of affairs, having attained prominence not only as an attorney and a statesman but as a successful and progressive agriculturist. A native of Wisconsin, he was born at Chippewa Falls December 23, 1869, and was there reared and educated.

John Hogan, his father, was born in Tipperary, Ireland, in 1831. Immigrating to the United States in early manhood, he located first in Cleveland, Ohio, where he followed his trade of a stone mason for a time. Ambitious to better his fortunes and to become permanently settled in life, he followed the pioneer's trail to Wisconsin in 1859, and having there obtained title to a tract of land was subsequently engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred there in 1905. He was a faithful adherent of the democratic party, and a member of the Roman Catholic Church. He married, in Cleveland, Ohio, Bridget A'Hern, who was born in Waterford, Ireland, and is now a resident of Aberdeen, Washington. Seven children were born of their union, as follows: Mary, wife of James P. Sheehey, a cotton grower in San Antonio, Texas; P. R., who is engaged in the lumber business at Aberdeen, Washington; M. E., a lumber dealer in Troy, Montana; J. C., a well-known attorney of Aberdeen, Washington; William, who resides at Spokane, Washington, where he has extensive mining interests; Amelia, wife of D. J. Manning, a prosperous farmer of Hysham, Montana; and T. S., the special subject of this brief personal notice.

Acquiring his elementary education at Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, T. S. Hogan was graduated from the high school with the class of 1886, and for three years thereafter taught school in his native county. Migrating westward in 1889, he spent a year in Aberdeen, Washington, being variously employed while there. In 1890 he became a resident of Montana, and for a year did general work in the mines at Butte. In 1891 Mr. Hogan began work in the silver belt, at Anaconda, Montana, and subsequently was for three years employed in refining gold and silver for the Anaconda Company.

Taking an active part in public affairs, Mr. Hogan was elected secretary of state in 1896, and served most faithfully in that capacity for four years, his residence during that time having been in Helena.

In 1901 he returned to Butte, and, having been admitted to the Montana Bar in 1900, while secretary of state, he began the practice of law, which he had read to advantage in early manhood, and continued in practice there for four years. Removing to Billings, Yellowstone County, in 1905, he there continued the practice of his profession seven years, building up an extensive and lucrative patronage. In the meantime Mr. Hogan purchased 4,000 acres of land lying six miles south of Huntley, and has since devoted his time and attention to its improvement, having one of the finest and most valuable grain and stock ranches in the county.

An independent democrat in politics, radical in his views, and honest in the expression of his opinions, Mr. Hogan is influential in matters concerning the public, and for four years served as state senator, from 1914 until 1918. While thus occupied he was a member of several committees of importance, including among others the judiciary, capital and labor, agriculture and insurance. He also introduced the Workmen's Compensation Law, which has been incorporated on the statute books of Montana. Ever loyal to his constituents, he looked after their interests while in the senate with rare fidelity, using the same good judgment in the management of public affairs that he did in his private dealings.

At Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, in 1893, Mr. Hogan was united in marriage with Miss Kathryn Donovan, a daughter of John and Mary (Manning) Donovan, pioneer settlers of Chippewa Falls, where both spent their last years, dying on the farm they redeemed from its original wilderness. Six children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hogan, namely: Emmett V., born April 24, 1897, was graduated from the Billings High School, after which he continued his studies at the State University in Bozeman, and now has charge of all the stock on the home ranch; Mary T., born in 1900, is a graduate of the Billings High School; Fred T., born in 1902, assists his father on the ranch; Ruth, born in 1904; Maurine, born in 1906; and Helen, born in 1909.

JOHN E. CLIFFORD, who came to Montana in 1886, has at many times been in close touch with the larger affairs of the state in its commerce and industry, and has been an interesting witness and participant in important phases of state history. Mr. Clifford has been a leading figure in state politics for a number of years, and is at present serving his second term as state parole commissioner.

Mr. Clifford was born at Weston in Platte County, Missouri, April 13, 1862. His father, Jeremiah Clifford, was born in County Kerry, Ireland, in 1835, and came to the United States in 1856. He immediately went to what was then the western frontier of Western Missouri, and for a number of years was a railroad man. He died at Atchison, Kansas, July 29, 1891. He was a democrat and Catholic and member of the Catholic Knights of America. He married Johanna Foley at Jefferson City, Missouri, in 1857. She was born in County Kerry, Ireland, in 1839, and died at Kansas City, Missouri, March 26, 1910. The oldest of their children, D. J. Clifford, died at Jefferson City, Missouri, in 1908, where he was serving as deputy state dairy inspector. W. J. Clifford died at Kansas City, Missouri, March 4, 1918, having been connected with a wholesale house in that city. John E. Clifford is the third in the family. M. E. Clifford is with Smith, McCord & Company, a dry goods house in Kansas City. Mary was married in Atchison, Kansas, to Michael Sullivan, and they now live in Jacksonville, Florida. Kate and Leona are both unmarried and living at Kansas City, the latter being head bookkeeper for Peck's wholesale dry goods house, the largest firm of its kind in Kansas City.

John E. Clifford was educated in the grammar and high schools of Platte City, Missouri, and in 1882 graduated from St. Mary's College in Pottawatomie County, Kansas. From 1882 to 1886 he filled several clerical positions in the Missouri Pacific Railway offices at Atchison, Kansas, working up to the grade of chief clerk.

He left the Middle West in 1886 and arrived at Missoula, Montana, July 13, 1886. Until September 1, 1887, he worked as shipping clerk for the Missoula Mercantile Company. He accepted a proposition from T. J. DeMers to take charge of a large stock of goods into the Indian country at the head of navigation in the Flathead district, then Missoula County, now Flathead County. He housed his merchandise in a large tent. In 1888 Mr. Clifford laid out and platted the Town of De Mersville, Montana, a community now extinct, but which in its time was the scene of much history-making in that part of the state. Mr. Clifford was in that district when the trouble arose between the Government and the Flathead Indians and had many experiences out on the border. In 1891 he was elected mayor of De Mersville, being the first and only mayor of that short-lived town. In 1892 the City of Kalispell was started, and soon drew all the population away from De Mersville. In the meantime, in 1888, Mr. Clifford had been appointed postmaster at his store under President Cleveland, and the postoffice was named Clifford in his honor. He filled that office two years. He was then deputy United States marshal, and in that capacity had an official relation with some of the Indian troubles in his district.

In 1894 Mr. Clifford accompanied the United States Commission to Alaska to determine the boundary lines between that territory and Canada. Returning to Montana in 1895, he spent several years in Missoula and Butte, and in 1901 came to Anaconda, where he was employed in the smelters of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company until 1908. For 1½ years, three terms of six months each, he was recording secretary for the Anaconda Mill and Smeltermen's Union. Mr. Clifford was appointed deputy game warden in 1909 by Governor Norris, holding that office four years. The office of state parole commissioner was created by the Legislature in 1913, and Governor Stewart chose Mr. Clifford as the man best qualified to initiate the duties of that office. After four years in 1917, he was reappointed for a second term.

Mr. Clifford has long been prominent in democratic politics. For six years he was state committeeman of Deer Lodge County, for sixteen years has been a member of the Deer Lodge central committee, and was secretary of the county central committee two years. He has been a trustee of the Hearst Free Public Library at Anaconda for the past twelve years. He holds one of the oldest union cards in Anaconda, and is still a member of the Anaconda Mill and Smeltermen's Union.

Mr. Clifford is a Catholic, affiliated with Mount Haggin Court No. 629, Catholic Order of Foresters, with Anaconda Camp No. 154, Woodmen of the World, with the Knights and Ladies of Security, with Anaconda Aerie No. 18, Fraternal Order of Eagles, and with Anaconda Lodge No. 557, Loyal Order of Moose.

Mr. Clifford and family reside at 411 Pine Street. On December 24, 1887, at Frenchtown, Montana, he married Miss Della De Mers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. De Mers, now deceased. Her father was a famous Montanan, a pioneer trader in general merchandise, and became widely known all over the Northwest. Mrs. Clifford died in Oregon in 1901, the mother of one son. This son, Jerry J., was born at Clifford or De Mersville, Montana, October 14, 1890, and graduated from the Catholic High School at St. Joseph, Missouri. In 1917 he volunteered in the army, was trained as an aviator, arrived in London April 2, 1918, and was in France during the great events of the summer of 1918 and afterwards was with the Army of Occupation. He returned to this country, landing at New York City, July 13, 1919. On June 22, 1904, at Anaconda, Mr. Clifford married Mrs. Nellie M. (Whiston) Ahearn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Whiston, who still live at Anaconda. Her father was an early settler at Anaconda and for thirty years has been connected with the A. C. M. Company. Mr. and Mrs. Clifford have two children: Theresa, born July 31, 1905, and James P., born April 29, 1908. By her first husband Mrs. Clifford has two children: Margaret, born April 17, 1899, and Mollie, born September 22, 1900. Margaret is a graduate of the Catholic High School at Anaconda with the class of 1916, and is now bookkeeper and stenographer for Duncan R. McRae's department store at Anaconda. Mollie, who graduated also in 1916, from St. Peter's Catholic High School at Anaconda, is said to be one of the most efficient and rapid stenographers in Montana. She is stenographer and bookkeeper for the Copper City Commercial Company in their general offices.

J. E. Clifford

David Reise Hopkins, yardmaster for the Northern Pacific Railroal at Laurel, and one of the ranch owners of Carbon County, is one of the substantial men of Yellowstone County. He was born at Logan, Utah, January 4, 1871, a son of W. T. Hopkins, born in Wales in 1843, and died at Logan, Utah, in 1914. His father was killed in an accident in a coal mine in Wales, and following that sad event his widow, in 1851, came to the United States and located in North Ogden, Utah, where her son, W. T. Hopkins, was reared. Her father, Robert Roberts, a native of Wales, accompanied his daughter to the United States and died at Farmington, Utah, before David Reise Hopkins, his grandson, was born. By occupation he was a quarryman, and he was one of the pioneers of Utah.

W. T. Hopkins passed through many exciting experiences during the epoch which saw the development of Utah. He and his people connected themselves with the Mormons and, as did the others of that sturdy and industrious band, worked hard to overcome the obstacles raised by nature and the Indians to prevent any permanent settlement there by the whites. That they did succeed and brought prosperity and wealth to a trackless region are matters of history. During his youth W. T. Hopkins assisted his stepfather in farming, and grew up strong and courageous and was made a member of the band of minute men organized to protect the Mormons from attacks from the hostile Indians. He drove a bull team three round trips from Salt Lake City to Omaha Landing, now South Omaha, Nebraska, as a freighter, taking his life in his hands on each trip. Loving adventure for its own sake, he took up railroad construction work and followed it until 1894, when, acquiring a ranch, he spent the remainder of his life in operating it. He was a strong supporter of the republican party. In him the Mormon Church had a conscientious member. Fraternally he belonged to the Knights of Pythias. He married Ann Roberts at Logan, Utah, born in Wales in 1843, and she survives him, making her home at Logan. Their children were as follows: Sarah Catherine, who married Moses Thatcher, a coal and ice dealer of Logan, Utah; David R., who was the second in order of birth; W. T., Jr., who died at the age of sixteen years.

Until he was sixteen years old David R. Hopkins attended the public schools of Logan, and then began to be self-supporting. In 1886 he came to Montana and for four years was on a ranch at what is now Lima, but was then known as Spring Hill. Leaving the ranch, he became a brakeman on the Utah Northern Railroad, with which he continued until 1894, being principally employed at and near Lima, but in that year left for the Montana Union Railroad as yardman at Butte, Montana. In 1905 he was transferred to Billings, Montana, with the Northern Pacific Railroad, which had absorbed the Montana Union Railroad, as yardmaster, and remained there until 1918, when he was placed in charge of the company's yards at Laurel, which are very extensive, covering four square miles. Under his immediate supervision are seventy-five men and the other interests connected with the conduct of the company's interests at this point. Mr. Hopkins also owns a fine ranch of 320 acres in Carbon County, Montana.

In 1894 Mr. Hopkins was married at Lima, Montana, to Miss Lillian Baker, born at Mapleton, Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins became the parents of the following children: Alfred, who died in infancy; W. B., who was born December 19, 1897, is serving in the United States Navy, overseas; Sarah, who was born March 14, 1902, is at home attending the Laurel High School; Blodwyn, who was born March 24, 1904; and David R., Jr., who was born December 29, 1906. Mr. Hopkins is noted for his energy, sincerity and his reliability, it being a matter of common knowledge that he lives up to his promises and that when he undertakes to get a thing done it is accomplished satisfactorily and expeditiously.

C. P. Hamrick. The opportunities for advancement in Montana are almost limitless provided they are grasped when presented by hands that have been trained to be useful, and directed by practical brains. The records of any industry, particularly in the West, show that the men who have risen to positions of trust and responsibility are those who have made their own way in life, unaided by collegiate training or outside influence. Such a man is C. P. Hamrick, assistant manager of the Bear Creek Coal Company of Bear Creek, Montana, a man of practical ideas and well versed in the methods of honorable industry. He was born at Denver, Colorado, August 29, 1878, a son of J. M. Hamrick, now a resident of Calhoun, Colorado, but by birth a native of Virginia, as he came into the world in Culpeper County, that state, in 1849, his ancestors having come to that section in colonial days from Scotland and Ireland. J. M. Hamrick was reared in his native state, but was married in Tennessee to Emma Gold Spindle, born in Virginia in 1853, and soon thereafter he came west to Denver, Colorado, where for a number of years he conducted a general merchandise business. In 1905 he went to Calhoun, Colorado, where he owns a large ranch, at that time being one of the pioneers of the section. A strong democrat, he has held various local offices in the several communities in which he has lived, and has always taken a prominent part in civic affairs. He has two children, C. P., whose name heads this review; and J. M., Jr., who is a successful business man of Denver, Colorado.

C. P. Hamrick was reared in his native city, and attended its schools until he was sixteen years of age. At that time he felt the urge toward a business career, and left school to engage with the C. S. Morey Mercantile Company, with which he remained for twelve years, working from his initial position as office boy to be one of the company's traveling salesmen, his territory being the State of Colorado. The business of this company was the handling of groceries at wholesale. In 1909 Mr. Hamrick came to Montana, and after a short period spent at Butte, entered the employ of the Great Western Sugar Company at Billings. Later he was connected with Yeager Brothers, Incorporated, as general office man, remaining with that concern until March 1, 1914, when he was made bookkeeper for the Bear Creek Coal Company, being promoted to the position of assistant manager, the manager being Chris Yeager of Billings. The plant and offices are one mile west of the town of Bear Creek, and Mr Hamrick has 200 men under his supervision. The mine produces semi-bituminous coal and has a capacity of 1,800 tons per day.

In 1908 Mr. Hamrick was married at Denver, Colorado, to Miss Beda Lingren, born at Stockholm, Sweden, but reared in Illinois and given a high school education. Mr. and Mrs. Hamrick have no children. His political sentiments make him an independent democrat. Fraternally he belongs to Bear Tooth Lodge No. 534, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Red Lodge, Montana. Mr. Hamrick's success in life is his own product, and he holds the confidence of his employers and the respect of his men, being recognized by his associates as one upon whom responsibilities may be safely laid, for he will never shirk them or fail to accord impartial justice to both sides.

JOSEPH E. PICKENS since coming to Montana in 1907 has played a varied and useful part in the affairs of Huntley, where he is a merchant, postmaster and rancher.

He is descended from ancestors who left England in colonial times and settled in America. His grandfather was born in 1801 and was one of the pioneer farmers around Newcastle, Indiana, where he died in 1889. William Pickens, father of the Huntley merchant, was born in Indiana in 1840, grew up there, married in Iowa, and for several years lived at Muscatine in that state and from there went to the Nebraska frontier and homesteaded 160 acres at Powell. In 1862 he was one of the gold seekers to come to Virginia City, Montana, and had some varied experiences and adventures before he went back to Muscatine, Iowa. He is now living retired at Huntley. Politically he is a democrat. William Pickens married Celinda Thornton, who was born at Muscatine, Iowa, in 1847 and died at Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1905. They had five children, Joseph being the youngest. Lopiz W., the oldest, is a mail clerk at Huntley; Rena is unmarried and lives with her brother Joseph; Walter R. is a farmer at Roundup, Montana, and Arthur O. is associated with his brother Joseph in business.

Joseph E. Pickens was born at Powell, Nebraska, May 14, 1884, and acquired his early education in the public schools of his native town and the high school at Fairbury, Nebraska. For two years he was a student in the University of Utah at Salt Lake City, but left college in 1905. The next two years he spent as an assayer in the mining district of DeLamar, Nevada, and did some mining on his own account for four months. He came to Huntley in 1907 and established a stock of general merchandise and out of that undertaking has developed the leading business of its kind in this part of Yellowstone County. He now has a flourishing trade drawn from all the country thirty miles around Huntley. It is a department store with floor space fifty by sixty feet. In connection with the store he handles the postoffice. He was appointed postmaster in 1909 under the Taft administration and has had two reappointments under President Wilson, the last coming in April, 1919.

Besides these interests Mr. Pickens owns a ranch of 280 acres three miles south of Huntley and has eighty acres of valuable irrigated land a mile northeast of the same town. He also owns his store building. Mr. Pickens is a democrat in politics, and is unmarried.

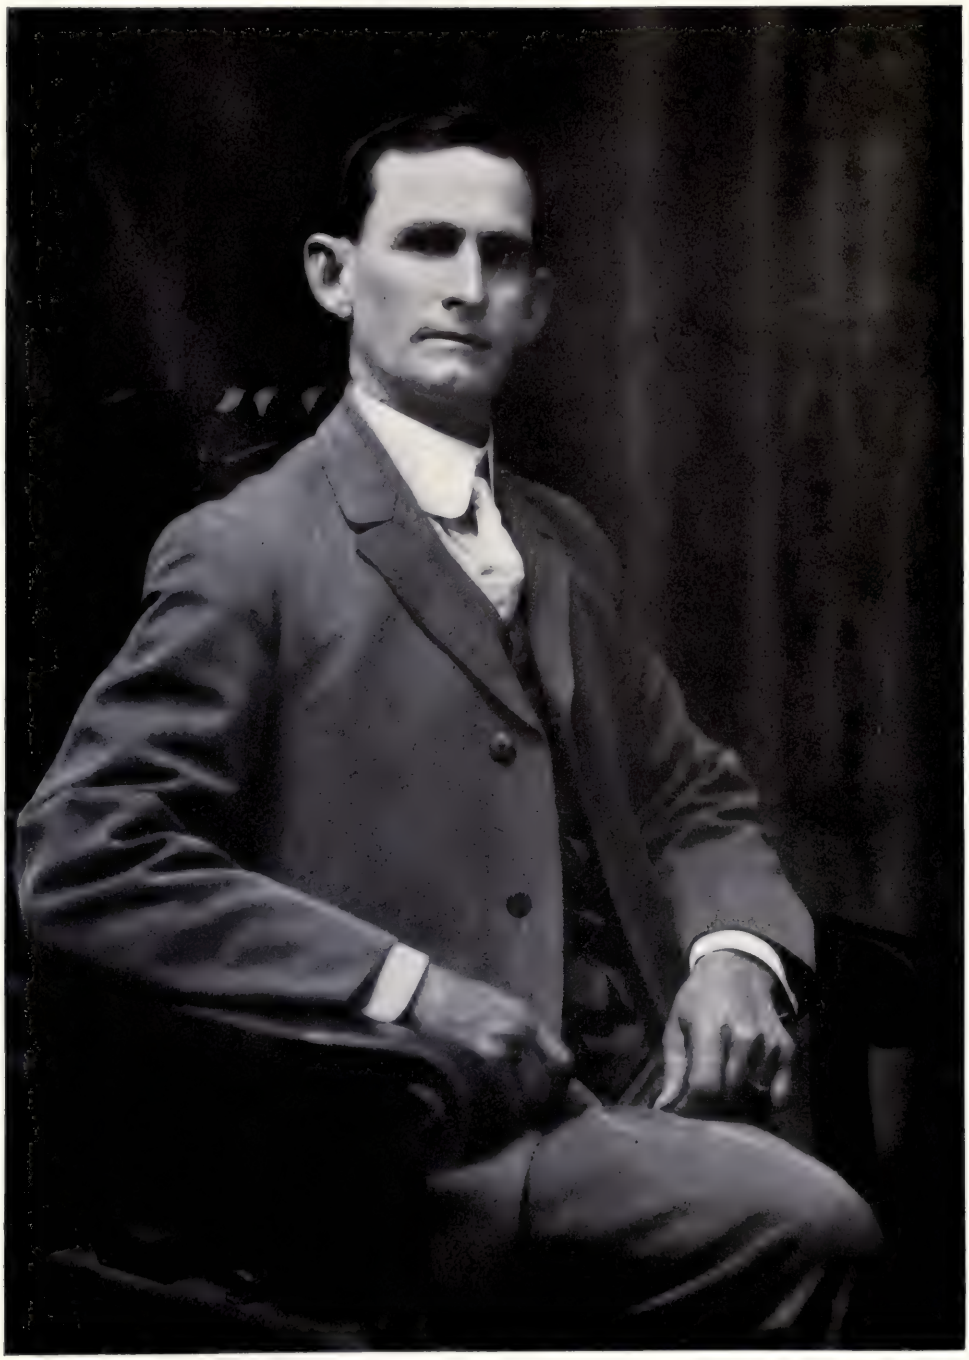
JOHN CARNEY is a veteran in the service of the Northern Pacific Railway, helped build that road into Montana, and is still active as a stationary engineer at Huntley. He is one of the oldest residents of Huntley and by many years of hard work has achieved a competency.

Mr. Carney was born at Canterbury, Windham County, Connecticut, April 3, 1859. His father, Daniel Carney, was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, in 1814, grew up there and learned the trade of marble cutter, and in 1848 established his home at Canterbury, Connecticut. He lived the rest of his life as a farmer and died in October, 1888. He was a democrat and a Catholic, and during the Civil war was a Union soldier throughout the period of hostilities with the Eighteenth Connecticut Infantry. Daniel Carney married Johannah Brean, who was born in County Kerry, Ireland, in 1829. She died at Canterbury, Connecticut, in June, 1867, John being the oldest of her five children. Mary, the second in age, died at the age of forty-nine at Norwich, Connecticut, where her husband, John Savage, a teamster, is still living. Timothy died at Elizabeth, Colorado, at the age of twenty. Daniel owns a large farm and is a prosperous resident of Earlville, Illinois. Johannah, the youngest, died at the age of eighteen.

John Carney lived on his father's Connecticut farm until he was seventeen years of age. In the meantime he had attended the common schools of Canterbury, and on leaving home he learned the butcher's trade at Jewett City in his native state. He was there two years, went to Mendota, Illinois, in 1876 and worked on a farm and in 1881 came to Montana as part of the construction forces building the Northern Pacific Railway to Glendive. At Glendive he helped build the roundhouse and the railroad yards, and while there was made locomotive engineer. He was in command of the throttle until 1888. He was run over by a car in the Glendive Yards and lost his right foot. Incapacitated for train service, he was assigned to duty as engineer in the shops from 1890 to 1895, and in the latter year was transferred to Huntley, where he has charge of the railroad pumping house and has been steadily and faithfully on that job for over twenty years.

In the meantime he has become owner of a modern home at Huntley, and owns a valuable irrigated farm of forty acres east of the town. He has been active in local affairs, serving for the past eight years as justice of the peace, and for seven years was chairman of the School Board. Mr. Carney is a republican, a member of the Catholic Church, and is affiliated with Billings Star Lodge No. 41, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

March 7, 1917, at Norwich, Connecticut, he married Miss Mary E. Archer, daughter of John and Mary (Collier) Archer. Her father was a gunsmith and both her parents died at Norwich.



A. E. Andrus

HARRY E. ANDRUS gave to the business men and citizens generally in Montana an instance of unusual enterprise, foresight and public spirit when in 1916 he built the splendid Hotel Andrus at Dillon. The people of that community had for a number of years been deploring the fact that it was without appropriate hotel facilities, and it was known that the lack of such accommodations was imposing a severe handicap upon its normal commercial development and prosperity. However, there had appeared no individual or group of citizens ready to solve the problem and invest the money required until Mr. Andrus, who for many years had been a successful rancher in Montana, sold his ranch and with the proceeds determined to give Dillon not only a first class hotel, but a monument of real progressiveness and public spirit.

When the hotel was completed the investment totaled $165,000. Mr. Andrus is not only the builder but has continued as its manager, and has seen to it that the service and accommodations are fully up to the high standard set by the building itself. Hotel Andrus is now regarded as one of the four leading hotels of Montana, and no one thing has done more to give Dillon a place among the thriving cities of the state than this institution.

Mr. Andrus, who has spent much of his life in the West, was born at Lafayette, Indiana, August 30, 1867. His father, Horace Andrus, was a native of Illinois, and for a number of years was a farmer near Lafayette. The mother was Mary Slaughter, a native of Kentucky, now living at Boulder, Colorado, where her husband died in 1904. They were the parents of eight children: James, a rancher in Colorado; Clara, who died in 1914, leaving seven children by her husband, James C. G. Smith, who is now clerk and recorder at Fredonia, Kansas, and in the real estate business there; Frank, a rancher at Ladore, Idaho; Harry E.; Lula, wife of C. K. Blanton, a rancher at Boulder, Colorado, and the mother of two children; Mary, wife of Sawyer Clark, a real estate and insurance man at Boulder; Bert, a rancher at Boulder; and Barbara, wife of John Platt, a physician at Lead, South Dakota. The parents of these children were active Presbyterians and the father was a republican.

Harry E. Andrus acquired his education in the public schools of Kansas and Colorado and had some farming experience in both those states. He was a young man twenty-two years of age, had a wife and one child, when behind a span of mules he rode into the State of Montana in 1899. In Montana he put his previous experience to good use, locating in the Sheep Creek Basin and buying a ranch. In the course of a few years he had 1,200 acres devoted to cultivation and as pasture ground for his sheep, and eventually through leasing of land other than that he controlled his ranch domain was 8 by 12 miles square. At times his flocks enumerated as high as 7,000 sheep, and he had one of the best herds of Hereford cattle in the county. He also raised a number of high grade horses. For a quarter of a century all his energies were devoted to ranching, and in 1916 he sold out and devoted the fruits of his long labors to the conspicuous improvement at Dillon above noted.

Mr. Andrus, who is a man deservedly popular throughout Beaverhead County, is a democrat in politics and a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. In 1890 he married Margaret Rosenbaum of Boulder, Colorado, daughter of Antone Rosenbaum of that city. They are the parents of three children, Fern, born in 1897, living at home; Wilma, born in 1898, wife of J. T. Colfer, of Seattle; and Harry, born in 1901, now attending school at Pacific Beach, California.

GEORGE A. WESTOVER is one of the leading members of the Stillwater County Bar, has been in practice at Columbus for ten years, and is mayor of that city.

He was born at Albion in Boone County, Nebraska, June 9, 1884. The Westover family are English and were colonial settlers in Pennsylvania. His grandfather, Amatha Westover, was born in Iowa in 1834, when Iowa was a territory. He lived much of his life along the frontier, and was a pioneer farmer of Eastern Nebraska. He died at Lincoln in that state in 1899. His wife, Ann Westover, was born in Pennsylvania in 1837, and died at Lincoln, Nebraska, in 1902. J. A. Westover, father of the Columbus lawyer, was born in Iowa in 1861, but was reared in Eastern Nebraska, and from Lincoln during the early eighties moved to Boone County, where he engaged in the real estate business for a number of years. He returned to Lincoln in 1898, continued as a real estate operator, and since 1915 has lived retired at Billings, Montana. He is a republican. At Lincoln, Nebraska, in 1882, he married Mina C. Fusha. She was born in 1862 at Vergennes, Vermont. Of their six children George A. is the oldest. Edward J. is associated with his next younger brother, Robert L., in the Yellowstone Trail Garage at Billings, Montana. Leo D., the fourth of the family, is a mechanic living at Omaha, Nebraska, while Joe F. makes his home at Eastport, New York, and is mechanical tester for the Curtiss Aeroplane Company. The youngest of the family is Florence F., wife of Merle E. Smith, an insurance man at Billings.

George A. Westover attended public school in Lincoln, Nebraska, graduating from high school in 1906. He finished his course in the Law Department of the University of Nebraska at Lincoln in 1909, and during the following year practiced in Nebraska's capital city. He came to Columbus in 1910, and has since been busy with a general civil and criminal practice. His offices are in the Columbus State Bank Building. Mr. Westover is a member of the Yellowstone Valley Bar Association, is a republican and is affiliated with Yellowstone Lodge No. 85, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Billings Lodge No. 394 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

At Lincoln, Nebraska, January 1, 1914, he married Miss Nettie E. Wood. Her mother, Mrs. Emeline Wood, lives at Harvard, Nebraska. They have three children: Roland W., born September 30, 1914; June Irene, born June 27, 1916; and Norris Edward, born January 27, 1918.

AUSTIN SWANDAL. To a great extent the prosperity of the agricultural sections of our great country is due to the honest industry, the sturdy perseverance and the wise economy which so prominently characterizes the foreign element that has entered largely into our population. By comparison with their "old country" surroundings these people have readily recognized the fact that in America lie the greatest opportunities for the man of ambition and energy. And because of this many have broken the ties of home and native land and have entered earnestly upon the task of gaining in the new world a home and competence. Among this class may be mentioned Austin Swandal, who by his indefatigable labor and honest effort has not only acquired a well-merited material prosperity, but has also richly earned the high esteem of all with whom he has been associated.

Austin Swandal was born at Stevanger, Norway, on the 28th of October, 1889, and is the son of Austin and Marie (Hereim) Swandal. The latter was born at Stevanger, Norway, in 1869, and died there in 1907. Austin Swandal, Sr., was born at Stevanger in 1862, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. He came to the United States in 1898 and settled at Lennep, Montana, where he was numbered among the pioneer ranchmen. He was successful, but in 1904 he returned to Norway, where he still resides. He had served as a soldier in the Norwegian army. He is a member of the Lutheran Church. To him and his wife were born seven children, namely: Austin, the immediate subject of this sketch; Nels, who resides on a ranch twelve miles north of Wilsall; John, also a rancher, about eleven miles north of Wilsall; Ed, who is in partnership with his brother John; Ole remains with his father in Norway and is a farmer; Matt and Christ are also with their father.

Austin Swandal, the son, received a good practical education in the public schools of Stevanger, Norway, where he remained until 1905, when he came to the United States, locating at Lennep, Montana, where he homesteaded 160 acres, and also a timber claim of the same size. In 1913 he sold this land and moved onto his present ranch, which is situated about ten miles northeast of Wilsall. Mr. Swandal owns 2,720 acres of land and also leases 3,000 acres. He is extensively engaged in the raising of cattle and sheep, in which he has met with eminent success, being counted one of the best ranchmen in this section of the state. He "runs" about 3,000 sheep and 500 cattle annually and has exercised rare discrimination and sound judgment in everything he has undertaken. He has a partner, C. K. Liquin, under the firm name of Liquin & Swandal, Mr. Swandal being the secretary and treasurer of the company.

Politically Mr. Swandal is an ardent supporter of the republican party, and his fraternal relations are with Wilsall Lodge No. 103, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1914 Austin Swandal was married to Ella M. Aspelund, the daughter of Ole Nelson Aspelund and Gusta Amalia Wittre, of Christiania, Norway, where the father, who was formerly owner of a ship and captain on his own ship, is now retired. To Mr. and Mrs. Swandal has been born one child, Gladys Marie, born January 2, 1917.

Ole C. Wogan is postmaster and a merchant at Roberts, has spent most of his active career in commercial affairs, though he came to Montana and went through the experience of developing a homestead.

He was born in Lac qui Parle County, Minnesota, September 10, 1880. His father, Frederick Wogan, was born at Throndjem, Norway, in 1846, grew up in his native country, served in the Norwegian army, and after his marriage came to the United States in the spring of 1880 and was an early settler in Lac qui Parle County, Minnesota. He has done well as a farmer and is still living at Dawson in that county. He is an active member of the Lutheran Church. The maiden name of his wife was Oline Stigen, who was born in the southern part of Norway in 1851. She died at Dawson, Minnesota, in 1913. Their children were: Marit, a lumber dealer at Milan, Minnesota; Ole C.; Anna, who lives with her father; Olaf M., who is employed by his brother Ole at Roberts; Oscar, a barber at Dawson, Minnesota; Selmer, who during the war was in the Aviation Corps and in training at San Antonio, Texas; and Maria, wife of Lauritz Borgendale, a farmer near Dawson, Minnesota.

Ole C. Wogan attended public school at Dawson, graduating from high school and afterwards taking a course in a business college at Austin, Minnesota. For two years he was employed in a drug store at Austin, for another two years was assistant cashier of a bank at Gary, South Dakota, and was employed in the postoffice and as clerk in a store at Mobridge, South Dakota, two years.

Mr. Wogan came to Montana and took up a homestead at Columbus in 1910. He proved up and lived on his farm four years, afterwards selling it. In the meantime he moved to Roberts in 1915 and bought out one of the principal general stores of Carbon County, and now owns both the store and building and has a trade of generous proportions drawn from all the country fifteen miles around Roberts. He also has a ranch of 160 acres near Gibson, Montana, owns a store building and a half interest in the stock at Boyd, Montana, and has one of the good homes in Roberts. He was appointed to the office of postmaster at Roberts in 1917.

Mr. Wogan is a democrat and is affiliated with the Lutheran Church. He married at Gibson, Montana, in 1915, Miss Dora Forsyth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. O. Forsyth, both now deceased. Her father was a Montana pioneer, coming to the territory in 1873, and was a well known rancher. Mr. and Mrs. Wogan have one daughter, Phyllis, born March 2, 1916.

William Harry Bunney. A man who has always been able to take advantage of opportunities when offered him, William Harry Bunney, general manager of the M. W. & S. Railroad, with headquarters at Belfrey, Montana, has risen steadily in the railroad business, and his successive promotions have been accorded him because he has deserved them, and not through the exertion of outside influence in his behalf. Mr. Bunney is a native of Cleveland, Ohio, where he was born January 6, 1880. His father, F. E. Bunney, who is now living at Puyallup, Washington, was born in England in 1852, in the Village of Penge, and was there reared, leaving England for the United States after attaining his majority. Marrying after coming to this country, he settled at Cleveland, Ohio, but left that city in 1882 to go west as far as Denver, Colorado. In 1884 he moved to Butte, Montana, being made station agent for what is now the Northern Pacific Railroad. From 1886 to 1888 he was in a mining business at Anaconda, Montana, but left that point in 1888 for Missoula, where he spent a year in railroading. He then was at Tacoma, Washington, for a time, leaving that city for Puyallup, Washington, where he has since 1910 been agent for the Northern Pacific Railroad. With the exception of the two years he spent in mining, Mr. Bunney has been engaged in railroad work practically all his life, and is still actively engaged in it. He is a republican. For many years he has been a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church. In fraternal matters he maintains membership in the Masonic order and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In 1878 F. E. Bunney was married to Lenora Roberts, born in Kentucky in 1859, and their children were as follows: William Harry, whose name heads this review; and Ethel, who married J. W. McCune, traffic man on the coast for shipping interests, resides at Tacoma, Washington.

William Harry Bunney attended the public schools of Montana and the Tacoma High School, from which he was graduated in 1898. Following that

W. J. McFadden

Mr. Bunney took a commercial course at the Tacoma Business College, and then entered the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad, beginning at the bottom and working up from the job of engine wiper until he was made stenographer in the office. In 1903 he went to St. Paul, Minnesota, as stenographer in the offices of the Northern Pacific Railroad. Later he was made assistant to the chief clerk to the general manager of this road, and held that position until 1908. In that year he was made chief clerk to the superintendent of the road at Missoula, remaining as such until 1912. He was then made chief clerk to the superintendent at Livingston, Montana, holding that position until 1918, when he was made general manager of the M. W. & S. Railroad at Belfrey, Montana. This road was built in 1907 and runs from the Bear Creek coal field to Bridger, connecting with the Northern Pacific Railroad at that point. Mr. Bunney is a republican, and while living at Livingston was chairman of the school board and president of the Railway Club, the leading club of the city. He belongs to Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is past master; Livingston Consistory, of which he is a thirty-second degree Mason; and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Helena, Montana. Mr. Bunney is a director of the Mutual Building and Loan Association of Livingston, and took a very active part in the business and social life of that city, as he is already doing at Belfrey.

In 1900 Mr. Bunney was married at Tacoma, Washington, to Miss Agnes L. Stephenson, born at Portland, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Bunney have three children: Edward, who was born in May, 1902; Howard Irvine, who was born in December, 1905; and Gordon, who was born in May, 1907. Mr. Bunney is a man thoroughly experienced in every detail of his calling, and having worked his way up understands the possibilities of each position, and is able to judge accurately as to the capabilities of each man and to determine if he is rendering faithful and efficient service. No one who had not passed through similar experiences could so ably and justly discharge the onerous responsibilities of this position and meet promptly and capably the numerous problems which arise every day.

WILLIAM P. KNUDSEN. The handling of realty and the writing of fire and life insurance are two kindred lines of business which have for many years enlisted the services of some of the most virile men of the country. No community ever makes much permanent progress until its real estate is handled by men possessing a natural ability for such work, and the nature of their efforts brings them into contact with their prospects in such a confidential manner that it is but natural that they learn of their private affairs and are able to advise wisely as to the securing of proper protection through insurance for their lives and property. One of the men who is fast becoming a potential factor in the realty and insurance circles of Billings, Montana, is William P. Knudsen, president of the Knudsen Realty Company, for he possesses ability of such force as to bring about successful terminations to the majority of his operations.

The birth of Mr. Knudsen took place at Merrill, Wisconsin, September 23, 1888, he being a son of Louis Knudsen. Louis Knudsen was born in Norway in 1852, and he died at Merrill, Wisconsin, in 1892. When only twenty years of age he left Norway for the United States, and after his arrival in this country he built a saw mill forty miles south of Merrill, operating it for a time, but later expanding until he was a builder and contractor and millwright of considerable importance. He located in Wisconsin at a time when pioneer conditions prevailed, and went through the usual experience of the early settler in any new region. The Lutheran Church of Merrill had in him a consistent and earnest member. After coming to Wisconsin Louis Knudsen was united in marriage with Christina Hansen, born in Denmark in 1863, who survives him and lives at Merrill, Wisconsin. After his death she was married to John Nelson, who is a lumber grader at Merrill. Louis Knudsen and his wife had children as follows: Oscar A., who resides at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, is a traveling salesman; Harold M., who is a veterinary surgeon at Kenosha, Wisconsin; William P., whose name heads this review; and Olaf, who is a pattern maker at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. By her second marriage Mrs. Knudsen had two children: James, who is a first class yeoman of the United States Navy on the steamer Leviathan, and Roland, who is also serving in the United States Navy, and is stationed at the Great Lakes Training Station.

William P. Knudsen was reared at Merrill and attended its common and high schools, being graduated from the latter in 1905, following which he learned the fundamentals of business at the Spencerian College at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, putting them to practical use as a bookkeeper for a telephone company at Milwaukee for a year. He left that concern to become cashier and traveling salesman for the O'Neil Oil and Paint Company of the same city, with which he remained for six years. Mr. Knudsen then went to the coast and for four months was with the Burroughs Adding Machine Company of Spokane, Washington, and for eight months was with the Shaw Borden Company, a stationery house of the same city. In 1913 he came to Billings, Montana, and for a brief period worked with the Billings Sugar Company, but later associated himself with the F. B. Connelley Company for a year. For the subsequent two years he was general office manager and credit man for the Ryniker Winter Hardware Company, but all of this time he was looking for a suitable opening for a business of his own, and in July, 1917, he opened the Roberts Realty Company, and later on, in February, 1918, he organized the Knudsen Realty Company, of which he is president; P. A. Hammer, vice president; and Z. B. Knudsen, secretary and treasurer. This concern handles city property, farm lands, stock ranches and business propositions and writes fire, accident, life and health insurance, and has the state agency for the Mutual Benefit Health and Accident Company of Omaha, Nebraska. The offices of the company are 15 North Broadway, Northern Hotel Block. Mr. Knudsen has expressed his confidence in Billings and Montana by investing quite heavily in real estate, owning a comfortable modern residence at 38 Grand Avenue, Billings; a seventy-five acre ranch near Roberts, Montana; and a 320-acre ranch near Forsyth, Montana. Mr. Knudsen has found in Billings his inspiration and is advancing very rapidly along constructive lines, each expansion of his business giving him greater fields for operating. He is well known as a Mason belonging to Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons; and Aldemar Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar; and he is also a member of the Knights of Pythias. The Billings Midland Club and the Billings Real Estate Board, of which he is the secretary-treasurer, have in Mr. Knudsen one of their most enthusiastic members, and one who may be relied upon to boost Billings and work for the creation of the "Greater Billings" spirit. His political inclinations make him a stalwart republican. In addition to his other activities Mr. Knudsen is secretary and treasurer of the Belle Mining Company, another sound corporation of this locality.

In October, 1915, William P. Knudsen was united in marriage with Miss Zona B. Marshall, a daughter of Attorney T. C. and Sarah (Martin) Marshall, prominent residents of Greybull, Wyoming. Mr. and Mrs. Knudsen have no children. Their home is often the scene of delightful social gatherings, for both are model hosts, and, holding their friends in high esteem, like to have them in their immediate circle. Mr. Knudsen is a man of high ideals with regard to business obligations, and his sound judgment and singleness of purpose are recognized by those who have dealings with him.

JOHN C. MARING, general freight and passenger agent at Anaconda for the Butte, Anaconda and Pacific Railroad, is one of the constructive men of this region, and owes his advancement in life to his own efforts. He was born at Harwood, Missouri, October 31, 1873, a son of John Maring, and grandson of John Maring, a native of Germany, who came to the United States in young manhood and became a pioneer of Richland County, Ohio, where he was engaged in farming for many years and there died when eighty years of age. He married a lady of New England birth, and she lived to be eighty-five. The maternal grandfather was a native of Pennsylvania, as was his wife, and he died in that state, where he had long been a farmer, at the age of seventy-six years. His widow survived him for some years, passing away in Michigan when eighty-seven years old.

John Maring, father of John C. Maring, was born in Richland County, Ohio, in 1821, and died in Harwood, Missouri, in December, 1889. A farmer, he operated a rural property in Richland County until 1866, when he moved to Missouri, and finally settled at Harwood. An active supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he was a valued member of that denomination. In politics he was a republican. John Maring was married in Richland County, Ohio, to Elizabeth Glover, born at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, May 14, 1831. She died at Los Molinos, California, May 11, 1916. Their children were as follows: Wilbur F., who is in the insurance business at Carthage, Missouri; Edward, who is a hardware merchant of Ponca City, Oklahoma; Elmer, who is a farmer of Los Molinos, California; Jesse, who is a railroad man with the Frisco System, lives at Enid, Oklahoma; and John C., who was the youngest born.

John C. Maring attended the public schools of Western Missouri, and remained on his father's farm until he was sixteen years old, at which time he entered the employ of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Memphis Railroad in the maintenance of way department as a clerk to the roadmaster, and held that position for two years. In 1894 he entered the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad at Livingston, Montana, as a car clerk, and was successively promoted through the various positions until he was made cashier, and then in 1898 he was sent to Billings, Montana, as freight and passenger agent for the road, and remained there for two years. In 1900 Mr. Maring came to the Butte, Anaconda and Pacific Railroad as a clerk in the freight house at Anaconda, and has steadily risen until he is now general freight and passenger agent for the road with offices in the general office building belonging to his company, located on West Commercial Avenue, Anaconda.

In 1901 Mr. Maring was married at Billings, Montana, to Miss Maude Whaley, born at Clinton, Ontario, Canada, and they have one son, Gilbert, who was born on February 26, 1902. He was graduated from the Anaconda High School in 1919 and is a very promising lad. Mr. Maring is a democrat, but aside from giving an intelligent support to the candidates of his party has participated but little in politics. The family residence is at No. 500 Main Street, Anaconda. The Episcopal Church holds Mr. Maring's membership and has his cooperation in all of its religious work. A hard worker, Mr. Maring has devoted himself to his business and his rapid advancement shows that his efforts have received a gratifying appreciation at the hands of his superiors. Having risen from the bottom he is conversant with all the details of his work and thus able to discharge the responsibilities of his position efficiently and satisfactorily.

JOHN T. SPENCER, editor and proprietor of the Bridger Times, of Bridger, Montana, is one of the trenchant writers of his part of the state, and his newspaper is devoted to the support of the principles and candidates of the republican party. Mr. Spencer is the adopted son of his mother's brother, his father, John Tobiason, having been killed in a shipwreck on Lake Ontario when John T. Spencer was an infant. Born in Norway, John Tobiason followed the sea for a livelihood and sailed all over the globe, braving the dangers of many ocean voyages to meet his death on one of the treacherous "inland seas" of his adopted country while following his calling. He married Ellen Spencer, a native of England, after he came to the United States, and their only child, born September 13, 1875, was left to the care of the bereft young widow, who died at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in 1889. John Tobiason was a member of the Norwegian Lutheran Church. After the death of his father, John T. Spencer was taken by his maternal uncle, Samuel Spencer, who was born in England in 1844 and died at Sheboygan, Wisconsin, in August, 1917, having come to that city in 1871. For a number of years he was a member of its police force.

When he was three years old John T. Spencer, who had been given the name of his adopted father, was taken from his birthplace of Sheboygan to England, but was brought back to it two years later, and there he was reared, being kept at school until he was seventeen years old by his excellent uncle, who knew the value of a sound educational training. When he was seventeen he left school and for a short period worked in a chair factory, leaving it to become a printer's apprentice at Sheboygan. In time he became the owner of his own printing plant and conducted it at Sheboygan from 1896 to 1900. He then traveled on the road as the representative of a furniture manufacturing company, covering Minnesota and North Dakota for five years, traveling out of St. Paul, Minnesota. In 1905 Mr. Spencer came to Missoula, Montana, with the Missoulians and was sent to Thompson Falls, Montana, and started the "Sanders County Ledger" for the Missoulian Company in 1906, when Sanders County was established. After placing this journal on a firm basis Mr. Spencer went to Sand Point, Idaho, for eight months. In September, 1910, he located at Bridger, and the following year, March 17, 1911, bought the "Bridger Times," which he has since edited, continuing its sole proprietor. It has an excellent circulation in Carbon and surrounding counties and is a strong factor in moulding and influencing public opinion. Mr. Spencer owns the building in which his plant and offices are located, and the entire establishment is thoroughly modern in equipment and methods. His paper was established in 1909, but since it came under his charge has been considerably expanded and its policies developed. Mr. Spencer also owns a ranch three miles south of Bridger. A very stanch republican, he served Bridger as alderman, and later as mayor, proving himself capable and fearless, and always lining up with the best element in civic affairs. For several years he has been on the Republican County Central Committee, and is very prominent in politics. The Episcopal Church holds his membership. Fraternally he belongs to Golden Fleece Lodge No. 66, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Carbon Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, of Red Lodge, Montana; Aldemar Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar, of Billings, Montana; Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Helena, Montana; and Bridger Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a director of the American National Bank of Bridger.

On June 11, 1903, Mr. Spencer was united in marriage with Miss Mary J. Pelletier, at Butte, Montana. She is a daughter of Paul and Annie E. Pelletier. Mr. Pelletier was a stockman during his later years, but earlier in life was a placer miner during the pioneer days of Montana, and served with the Vigilantes before law and order was firmly established in the state. His death occurred at New Chicago, Montana, but his widow survives him and makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Spencer. There are no children in the Spencer family.

James P. Bole entered the newspaper profession soon after leaving high school. While he has found time for every interest, having qualified as a lawyer and gained admission to the bar, newspaper work has kept a steady hold on him and he has never found it congenial to interrupt his work in that profession. Mr. Bole is editor of the Bozeman Daily Chronicle and also has some important public responsibilities as receiver of public monies in the United States Land Office at Bozeman.

He is of Scotch ancestry on both sides. He was born at Belfast, Ireland, May 7, 1868. His father, Rev. John Bole, was born at Newton Stuart, Scotland, in 1822, was reared and married in Scotland, and was a graduate in both the classical and theological courses in Glasgow University. He came to the Untied States as a regalurly ordained minister of the Presbyterian Church in 1848. He was pastor of the church at South Ryegate, Vermont, which he served for ten years. After this long period of work in that pastorate he returned to Great Britain and for about six years was pastor of the Presbyterian Church on Linen Hall Street, Belfast, Ireland. It was during this time that his son James P. was born. In 1869, when this son was about a year old, the family returned to America, and the father again resumed work with his old friends and neighbors in the adjoining parish of West Barnet, Vermont, and continued active for thirty years, until he retired in 1899. The family residence, which he established in West Barnet and where he died in 1909, is still kept by his children just as he left it, and it is the scene of almost annual reunions among the children and their families. Rev. John Bole married Marion Simington Brown, who was born at Glasgow, Scotland, in 1826 and died at West Barnet, Vermont, in 1913, having survived her husband four years. Margaret S., the oldest of their children, is the wife of Dr. Charles A. Hamilton, who for many years has been a prominent physician and surgeon at Waterbury, Connecticut. William M., the oldest son, is a prominent Montanan, being editor of the Great Falls Tribune. Dr. Robert S. Bole is a physician and surgeon at St. Paul, Minnesota. Andrew S. is a minister of the Congregational Church, his home being at East Hardwick, Vermont. Marion B. is unmarried and lives with her sister Margaret.

James P. Bole, the youngest of the family, soon after graduating from the Burlington High School in 1887 came West and began newspaper work at St. Paul. For a time he lived in Chicago, and while there was a student in the Chicago College of Law. He was admitted to the bar in 1896, after examination before the Supreme Court of Illinois at Chicago. The following year, 1897, found him at Great Falls, Montana, where he resumed newspaper work and was connected with the Tribune and the Leader until he came to Bozeman in 1907. For the past twelve years he has been editor of the Bozeman Chronicle, as well as stockholder in the Chronicle Publishing Company.

August 30, 1890, at St. Paul Mr. Bole married Miss Mary Josephine McCormick, a daughter of W. F. and Catherine McCormick, of Little Meadows. Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Bole have two daughters, Margaret and Elizabeth. Margaret is a graduate of the Montana State College at Bozeman with the Bachelor of Science degree, and is a member of the Chronicle force. Elizabeth is in the second year of her work at the Montana State College.

George P. Wellcome. The great importance to a community attaching to such lines of business as real estate and insurance is not always relative to its volume, but rather to the integrity of those engaged in the public's behalf. With land as the real basis of wealth, its ownership should be encouraged with titles clear of any entanglements, while insurance protection must be inviolate and above all possibility of lack of good faith. A trustworthy business man of Anaconda, dealing in real estate, loans, insurance and also handling coal, is George P. Wellcome, who is president and manager of the Wellcome-Durston Company.

George P. Wellcome was born at Hoboken, New Jersey, August 18, 1860. His parents were Jacob and Sarah J. (Hagadorn) Wellcome, the latter of whom was born in the State of New York, in 1842, and now resides at Long Beach, California. The father of Mr. Wellcome, a descendant of an old English family of the name, was born in Maine, in 1820, and died at Baltimore, Maryland, in 1901. He grew to man's estate in Maine and after his marriage in New York engaged in business in New York City but maintained his home in Hoboken, New Jersey, until he removed to Newark in 1862. He continued in the cotton and wool brokerage business in New York until 1872, after which he traveled for some years, then retired and settled at Baltimore. Of his three children, George P. is the only survivor. The eldest, John B., settled at Butte, Montana, in 1889, where he was engaged in the practice of law for some time, when he retired to his valuable property known as the Creeklyn ranch, near White Hall, Montana, where his death occurred. The youngest of the family, Blanche E., died at Los Angeles, California, at the age of thirty years.

George P. Wellcome attended the public schools of Newark, New Jersey, and afterward of Newport, New Hampshire, and in 1878 was graduated from the Newport High School. His first business association was a clerical position in the great Boston house of Jordan, Marsh & Company, where he remained three years, gaining first hand experience in the dry goods line, which served him well after locating at Fargo, Dakota Territory. After three years of dry goods experience there he embarked in the business for himself at St. Cloud, Minnesota. In 1889 he sold his interests there and came to Butte, Montana, in July of the same year coming to Anaconda. Here for two years he was in the employ of the firm of Mahan & Lindsley in the real estate and insurance business, then was an employe of the First National Bank of Anaconda, which later became the banking house of Hoge, Daley & Company. He remained with this institution in various capacities for nine years, when he embarked in the real estate and insurance line on his own account at Anaconda. During his entire previous business career Mr. Wellcome had been associated with business houses of the highest possible standing and his standards of business integrity are firmly grounded. Upon the same sound foundation he has built up his own business, which has expanded into one of the largest enterprises of its kind in this section of the state. In 1914 he incorporated as the Wellcome-Durston Company, of which Mr. Wellcome is president and manager and H. H. Durston is vice president, secretary and treasurer. The company occupies a suite in the Daley Bank annex, No. 110 East Park Avenue. The company handles city real estate and farm loans in Deer Lodge and surrounding counties. A general insurance business is done, and this feature of the business is one of great importance. The firm at one time owned much ranch property but has disposed of it to a large extent, but has heavy investments in city realty.

At Anaconda, in 1895, Mr. Wellcome was united in marriage to Miss Katherine Evans, a daughter of Morgan and Ann Evans, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Evans came to this neighborhood as a pioneer in 1862, driving from Logan, Utah, his team of a horse and cow hitched to a wagon. He homesteaded 160 acres in Deer Lodge Valley, which he subsequently increased to 640 acres. Both he and his wife were born in Wales. Mrs. Wellcome is a graduate of Deer Lodge College, Deer Lodge, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Wellcome have one son, George P., who was born October 21, 1910. Mr. Wellcome owns his beautiful modern residence, No. 700 Hickory Street, Anaconda.

In addition to business interests already noted, Mr. Wellcome is president of the Anaconda Coal Company, of which H. H. Durston is vice president, and this firm does the largest coal business in Anaconda. As a staunch republican Mr. Wellcome has been somewhat active in party councils, believing good citizenship demands expression in the assumption of political responsibility. He has served four terms on the City Council and has also been school trustee and on many advisory committees. During the great war he was deeply and patriotically interested and was appointed by Governor Stewart a member of the Council of Defense. He was unremitting in his efforts to make the various war measures successful, and was careful and judicious as one of the trustees of the War Chest Fund. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, belonging to Anaconda Lodge No. 239, and is a member also of the Anaconda, the Anaconda Country and the Rotary clubs.

JOHN BERKIN. The name of Berkin is connected with the pioneer history of Butte and Montana so intimately that it is but proper that an extended notice of the men bearing it appear in a work of this high class. No history of the region would be complete without an account of the work accomplished by John Berkin, mine superintendent and business man, and his father, William Berkin, who has attained to a venerable age and is the second oldest living pioneer of Montana.

John Berkin was born at Swannington, Leicestershire, England, on April 11, 1860, a son of William Berkin, also born in Leicestershire, the date of his birth being June 14, 1826. He is a son of Thomas Berkin, born in Leicestershire, England, where he spent his long and useful life, and where he died at the advanced age of ninety-three years. During all of his active years he was engaged in farming, and he spent practically all of his life in Leicestershire. A conservative in politics and a Calvinist in religion, he was one of the most conscientious of men, stern, but rigidly upright. He married Sarah Tugby, who was born in Leicestershire, England, and died there at the age of eighty-eight years. Their children were as follows: John, who owned and operated a hotel at London, England, died in that city at the age of seventy-six years; Sarah, who died in Leicestershire, England, at the age of seventy-two years; Thomas, who was chief of police in London, England, where he died at the age of sixty-eight years; Matilda, who died in Leicestershire, England, at the age of sixty-five years; Fannie, who died at Helena, Montana, in 1908, married John Hull, a farmer who died at Boulder, Montana, came with her husband to Montana in the late '80s; William, who is mentioned below; and Jesse, who was a miner, died at Rossland, British Columbia, Canada.

William Berkin attended the schools of his native place, and then served an apprenticeship of seven years to the machinist trade at Glasgow, Scotland, completing it by the time he reached his majority. He then returned to Leicestershire and took the contract for erecting the pumping works at the Calcutta coal mines, and his work was so satisfactory that the company which owned these mines sent him into Derbyshire to put up hoisting and pumping machinery at a town called Clay Cross. Returning to Glasgow, William Berkin had charge of the installation of an engine in the steamship "John Bell," and when this work was completed went on its initial trip as second engineer to Montreal, Canada. Upon his return to England he was employed in the machine shop on the docks at Battersea, London. While there he branched out and became a deep sea diver for the London Dock Company, keeping old lock gates in repair.

William Berkin made another change, removing to Jersey, one of the Channel Islands, and spent some time there as a diver on the construction work of a breakwater. His services were next secured by the French government and he was employed as a diver in putting in an addition to a battery at Cherbourg, France. Once more he returned to England and made two trips out of Southampton, England, to Alexandria, Egypt. Subsequent to that William Berkin was employed in the shops of the Semudas Ship Building Yards at London, England, and while he was there the "Great Eastern" was built in an adjoining ship yard. He helped to put in the engines in the pleasure yacht of Prince Constantine of Russia, and delivered this boat at Odessa, Russia.

Going back to Scotland, William Berkin went from there to Canada in 1859 and began working for the Grand Trunk Railroad as a locomotive engineer. Later he visited Niagara Falls, New York, and Portland, Maine, and still later went to Saint John's and Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Canada, to inspect some mines. It was during 1860 that he made a short stay at Chicago, Illinois, and from there went on south to St. Louis, Missouri, where he secured employment as a locomotive engineer for the Belleville Railroad, and later was promoted to be master mechanic at the Illinois Town roundhouse.

The year 1863 marked the arrival of William Berkin into Montana, and for some years his experiences read as an early-day romance. The story of his expedition along the Musselshell River to try and find a better road from Virginia City to the head of navigation of the Missouri River is one of the romances of the early days of Montana. Mr. Berkin is admitted to have endured more hardships, braved more dangers and had more exciting experiences than any of the other pioneers.

William Berkin came out to Fort Benton, Montana, in 1863 for the American Fur Company, a subsidiary of the Hudson Bay Company, and was commissioned to sell a stock of mining tools and supplies which was then in storage at Fort Benson. He hired a negro and a French guide and started his pack train for Virginia City in 1864.

When he arrived there he successfully disposed of the stock, pick handles bringing $3 each; axe handles, $3; gold pans, $5; long-handled shovels, $5; tobacco, $8.50 per pound; white flour at $1 per pound, and other merchandise sold at proportionately high prices. His was the first pack train to make the trip from Fort Benton to Virginia City.

The second trip was made with a bull train of twenty-one teams yoked ten and twenty animals to the wagon. The merchandise which was carried by this train had been brought to Fort Benton by the American Fur Company by boat from St. Louis, Missouri.

About this time Mr. Berkin conceived the idea of finding a better road from Virginia City to Fort Benton by following the Musselshell River. He determined to build a new road, if it could be done cheaply enough, and organized an outfit to blaze the trail. The story of that expedition, as related by Mr. Berkin, is as follows:

"I left Boulder, Jefferson county, February 20, 1865, taking eight hired men and three volunteers. We were equipped with saddle horses, one wagon, five yoke of oxen and supplies for the trip, including rifles and ammunition, one twelve-pound howitzer cannon, two cases of howitzer ammunition and two cases of grapeshot.

"The route was from Boulder by way of Crow Creek, crossing the Missouri River at about where Toston is now. From there we went up Gracing Creek to the summit, where we found heavy snowdrifts. We had to go over steep mountains and often were compelled to let the wagon and cannon down the hillsides with heavy ropes.

"We went on to White Sulphur Springs and over the trail to where Martinsdale is now located. There were no white men in this country. From there we went to a creek about six miles from Martinsdale. It is now called Daisy Dean Creek. Next we reached Haymaker Creek, where we had our first scrap with the Indians.

"We made our camp on March 1. One of the men reported to me that one of the cattle was missing. As it had snowed a little during the night we were enabled to follow the tracks of the Indians who had driven the steer away from the herd. I picked out six of the men and followed the tracks, coming upon the war party in a deep coulee.

"They had not seen us yet, but in the excitement one of my men accidentally discharged his rifle just at the moment I was in the act of firing a shot with my arm through my bridle rein. The bullet from his gun shot my horse through the jaw and the animal pulled me down when he fell. Shooting commenced immediately. I noticed one of the men standing beside me flinch and I asked, 'Are you hit?' He replied that he was and I told him to keep on shooting as long as he could.

"When the scrap was over we looked him over and found that the bullet had gone through his buckskin shirt and burned a red mark on his ribs, it having been a glancing shot. There were nine Indians in the party and we got four of them down in the coulee. They made hurried exits for the 'Happy hunting grounds.' The others fled up the hill on the other side.

"One of my men, Elmer McLaughlin by name, and myself, crossed the coulee and found on the prairie an Indian lying face down in the snow. McLaughlin was going to shoot him to make sure that he wouldn't recover, but I told him to save his ammunition as we were going after the others who were wounded and were escaping.

"We left our horses and took after them on foot. We soon overtook and disposed of them. When we returned to where we left the horses the Indian who had been lying in the snow supposedly dead had gotten up and escaped with McLaughlin's horse.

"I took my horse and followed him about three miles. I could see blood in the snow occasionally and after awhile I came across his old flint-lock gun which he had discarded. I knew then that he was about gone and just before I caught up with him he fell from the horse. He put up his hands, saying, 'kaka nopin,' which means 'hold on, white man.'

"We left camp next morning and went along the Musselshell valley toward the east end of the Snowy Mountains. We came to a creek which flowed from the Snowies and there made camp. There were some buffalo there and one of the men asked me to let him have a horse that he might try to kill one of them for meat. He did not return in the evening, and I sent two men out to look for him. They found his horse with the saddle still on, and a short distance awav the man was found lying in the snow, dead.

"We buried him on this creek and called it 'Careless Creek,' because we surmised that this man's horse had fallen with him and that his gun had discharged itself with the fall, killing him. When the government surveys were made this creek was called 'Careless Creek' in their report.

"We moved from here around the east end of the Snowy Mountains and crossed a creek now known as Flat Willow, and went down another called 'Crooked Creek.' On account of the men being snow-blind, I had to leave all but two, eight miles from Crooked Creek. These two men and myself made it to the mouth of the Musselshell, where it empties into the Missouri River. The river was breaking up and there was a series of immense ice gorges which made it a grand sight.

"We went back to get the rest of the men and prepared to start on our return trip. We made camp on the banks of a small creek which is a tributary to Flat Willow Creek. Here in the night we were again attacked by the Indians, a large band of what we supposed were Blackfeet Indians. We had to crawl down the creek, fighting as best we could until daylight.

"Here we lost another man. After the Indians had been driven off we went back to camp and found that they had killed all of our cattle. They had also taken all of our horses but three, which they had somehow overlooked. They had rendered the wagon useless by knocking out the spokes in the wheels and had sawed the axle of the gun carriage and spiked the gun.

"All of our cooking utensils had been destroyed and our provisions stolen. We made our way with difficulty back to Boulder and a short time later I took one man, saddle horse and pack horses, and brought back the cannon, which was made of brass and weighed about 180 pounds. This was returned to the company and was taken down the river by steamboat to St. Louis.

"The rest of the articles, two cases of grape shot, two cases of shells, a grindstone, log chains and much other stuff we cached under the bank of a tributary of Flat Willow. This cache was discovered a short time ago by my son, T. A. Berkin, and other people living near the place on Flat Willow."

The contents of this cache was later presented to the State Historical Society and placed on display at Helena as one of the mementoes of the pioneer days of Montana.

William Berkin was the man who shipped the first copper ore from Butte, some years after the above related experience, having located the Mountain Chief Mine, from which he took out several tons of ore and shipped it from Butte to Boulder, building a road for this purpose. From Boulder this ore was hauled to Corrinne by bull teams which Mr. Berkin was then operating for the American Fur Company. Shipment was made by railroad from Corrinne to the Atlantic Coast, and by steamship to a point in Wales, where the nearest smelter was located. Mr. Berkin has still in his possession a copy of the bill of lading which he received from the railroad company, and other papers in the deal. This ore was smelted in Wales and Mr. Berkin netted a nice profit from the transaction notwithstanding the heavy transportation charges.

Mr. Berkin built the road from Fort Benton to Virginia City for John J. Roe & Company of St. Louis, Missouri, and continued to freight for this company from 1864 until 1867, between the two points named. From 1867 until 1871 he was engaged in placer mining in Jefferson County, and then began quartz mining in the same county and located some of the first claims in Butte, and operated in and out of what is now Butte from 1866.

The Mountain Chief Mine above referred to as located by him was the second patented claim in the Butte District, and in it he had as a partner Nicholas Wall, of St. Louis, the date of the registration of their patent being June 16, 1868, and they also secured a millsite for the mine, which they owned until 1870. From then on William Berkin has followed placer and quartz mining, and in spite of his advanced age is still engaged in this line of business. As his family record shows, he comes of a long-lived race, and he has not learned that there is such a word as "retire" in the dictionary. He has always been an active supporter of the democratic party. During 1865 and 1866 he rendered an effective public service as deputy United States marshal; he was commissioner of Meagher County from 1886 until 1892; and commissioner at Lewiston when Fergus County was organized, and held that office for two terms of four years each. Mr. Berkin was a member of the first Territorial Legislature of Montana, being elected at Bannock in 1864. For many years a Mason, he belongs to Helena Lodge No. 3, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

In 1850 William Berkin was married in Leicestershire, England, to Miss Jane Hall, born at Swanington, Leicestershire, England, in 1835. She died at Anaconda, Montana, in 1899, having borne her husband the following children: Fannie, who married Kenneth McKinzie, foreman of the foundry of the Washoe Reduction Works at Anaconda, Montana; a daughter who died when four years old; John, whose name heads this review; William, who was a rancher, died at Livingston, Park County, Montana, aged twenty-eight years; Thomas A. is game warden for the district of Flat Willow, Fergus County, Montana, and deputy game warden for the State of Montana; Sarah, who married John Allen, watchman of the Orphan Girl Mine at Butte; Eliza, who died at Boston, Massachusetts, married W. R. Allen, ex-lieutenant governor of Montana, but now a resident of Boston, although he has large mining interests in the Elkhorn mining district of Montana and is building a railroad up the Big Hole River, having promoted these large interests, and a sketch of him appears elsewhere in this work; and Hattie, who married Daniel Kirkpatrick, manager of a chain of stores for the Huerfane Trading Company, resides at Alamosa, Colorado.

John Berkin was brought to Fort Benton when only six years old by his mother and oldest sister, who traveled first to St. Louis, Missouri, and thence to Montana, where they joined his father. After a short stay at Fort Benton the family moved to Alder Gulch, and still later to Boulder, Montana. All of his educational training was received at Jefferson City, Montana, and he left school when he was sixteen years old, and for six years was engaged in placer mining in Jefferson County. He then went in for quartz mining in Jefferson, Madison and other counties of Montana until 1878. He carried the mail from Butte to Boulder, making the trips on horseback, and continued at this for over a year, when in 1880 he was appointed deputy sheriff of Fergus County and discharged the duties of that dangerous position until 1882, when he returned to Boulder, and that same year came back to Butte, where ever since he has been connected with mining interests.

Beginning as an underground miner, Mr. Berkin has gained a thorough and intimate knowledge of mining in all its phases and has been an extensive lessor for himself at Butte and in Madison County for several years. In 1915 he became connected with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company as foreman of the Nettie Mine, and in 1916 was made superintendent of the Bonanza and Orphan Girl mines, both properties of that company. The Orphan Girl Mine is located one-half mile west of the Butte School of Mines, and produces silver and zinc.

Like his father a strong believer in the principles enunciated by the democratic party, Mr. Berkin represented Jefferson County in the Seventh Session of the State Assembly as the successful candidate of his party, and was sent to the Eleventh Session of the same body from Silver Bow County on the same ticket. During the labor trouble in 1914 he was appointed sheriff of Silver Bow County at the time when the candidate elected to that office was recalled from office by the people. It was during this period that the Industrial Workers of the World blew up the Miners Union Hall and other buildings and openly defied law and order. It took courage of no ordinary character and a strong personality to bring order out of the chaos then reigning, but Mr. Berkin succeeded in restoring everything to normal conditions, thereby winning his own place in the history of his own times and the gratitude and respect of his fellow citizens.

During the World war Mr. Berkin was very active in assisting in all of the war work and supporting the policies of the administration, and was exceedingly generous in his own contributions to the Liberty Loans and other drives. He also was extremely helpful in assisting in suppressing all disloyalty and punishing sedition against the Government. He is a Mason, and also belongs to Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Silver Bow Club, and is active in all.

In addition to his other interests Mr. Berkin owns stock in an irrigation project known as the Fergus County Land & Irrigation Company at Flat Willow, Fergus County, Montana, and also in the Little Missouri Irrigation Company in Fallon County, Montana. He is president of the Motor Car Distributing Company of Butte, and in 1907 bought a ranch on the Smith River in Meagher County, and operated it until he sold it to the Story & Work Sheep Company at Bozeman. Mr. Berkin maintains his residence at the Thornton Hotel.

In conjunction with his father's experiences with the Indians it is interesting to learn of his own with the red man. He was reared in a neighborhood occupied by the Nez-Perce Indians and knew their chief, Joseph, so well that he lived among them and learned to speak their language, and became acquainted with other tribes. Mr. Berkin arrived at the battle ground on the Big Hole two days after the massacre of Captain Logan, who was killed outright, and General Gibbons, who was wounded and afterwards died from the effects, and the command in 1877, and assisted in taking care of the wounded and getting them back to Helena, a distance of nearly 200 miles. During 1880 and 1881, although yet a very young man, he was active in suppressing the depredations of horse thieves in what were then Fergus and Meagher counties, and he also participated in several skirmishes with the Indians during the earlier days.

Mr. Berkin has the following children: Nellie, who was graduated from the Boulder High School, married W. G. Whetstone, assistant manager of the Butte Motor Car Distributing Company; Hazel, who was graduated from the Butte High School, married M. R. Hanley, a real-estate operator of Lewiston, Montana; and Isabelle, popularly known as "Mike," who was injured in an automobile accident on September 18, 1919, while on the way from Great Falls to Lewiston, and died on September 22d. She was educated as a violinist at Butte, and was a pupil of Professor Shadduck of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. She began playing in public when only eight years of age, and her remarkable talent soon developed to a point that marked her as a true artist. At the age of eighteen years she began her professional career and was starred as "The Girl from Butte." For several years she was on the Orpheum Circuit and had thousands of admirers in Montana and throughout the United States. When she was married to H. W. Berry, she retired from the stage and she and her husband were residents of Butte, Montana. Her death was a distinct blow to many all over the country, as well as to her immediate family and wide circle of personal friends, for she had endeared herself to them all as well as awakened admiration for her talent.

Both John Berkin and his venerable father are men of a remarkable type. Rugged, fearless and upright, they have gone straight ahead doing what they felt to be their duty regardless of personal risk or adverse criticism. Coming into a wild region they had the ability and willingness to take advantage of the opportunities of a newly opened territory, but, while they achieved a material success, they never prospered at the expense of the community, but at all times placed it under obligation to them for their services in behalf of law and order whenever it was necessary. Without such men as these Montana would never have become the great commonwealth it is today, and consequently the record of their lives is an important part of its history.

C. W. Robison. About a year after getting his law diploma from the Chicago Law School Mr. Robison came to Montana and located at Dillon, where for nearly twenty years he has enjoyed a constantly increasing prestige as an able and hard-working attorney.

He was born at Winterset, Iowa, January 22, 1875, and some of his family were among the first pioneers of that state. The Robisons were colonial settlers in Massachusetts. The grandfather, Spencer Robison, was born in Indiana in 1802 and was one of the first men to break the prairie sod and bring the land of Delaware County, Iowa, into productiveness. He spent his active career as a farmer and died at Winterset, Iowa, in 1870. His wife was a native of Indiana and also died at Winterset. Four of their children are still living: James, a retired farmer at Manchester, Iowa; Joseph, a farmer in Delaware County; Jennie, wife of Ham Lee of Kalispell, Montana; and W. S. Robison.

W. S. Robison, father of the Dillon lawyer, was born in Delaware county, Iowa, in 1853, and lived there to the age of nineteen, when he removed to Winterset. He lived at Des Moines until 1917, since which year his home has been in Omaha, Nebraska. He is a republican and a member of the Masonic fraternity. He married at Winterset Sarah Guye, who was born in Madison County, Iowa, in 1854. Her father, George Guye, was born in Virginia in 1824 and is still living at Winterset, Iowa, at the venerable age of ninety-five. He and his father and his brother James were the first white men to take up land and settle in Madison County, Iowa. George Guye married a Miss Button, a native of Ohio, who died in Madison County, Iowa. The Guyes are of English ancestry and were early settlers in Virginia. C. W. Robison is the oldest of his father's four children. His brother Charles died in Madison County, Iowa, at the age of three, and his sister Grace died at Dexter, Iowa, aged twenty-six. His only living sister is Frances, who makes her home with her parents at Omaha.

C. W. Robison attended public school at Winterset, graduated in 1891 from the Dexter Normal College at Dexter, Iowa, and took his regular college course in Drake University at Des Moines. He received the degree Bachelor of Oratory from that institution in 1897. Mr. Robison spent one year in the office of Senator A. B. Cummins at Des Moines, and thus came in touch with one of the ablest lawyers and one of the now senior statesmen of the country. Mr. Robison received his LL. B. degree from the Chicago Law School in 1899 and the following year came to Dillon and began his professional career. He served as county attorney during 1903-04, but for the most part has given all his time to his growing private practice. His offices are in the Telephone Building. Mr. Robison is a very prominent member of the Improved Order of Red Men. He belongs to Bannack Tribe, is Great Sachem of the State of Montana, is present Great Keeper of Wampum and for twelve years represented the order in the National Convention.

I. D. O'Donnell. In August, 1919, the Country Gentleman of Philadelphia, published under the title "The Best Farmer in Montana," a long article concerning I. D. O'Donnell of Billings. Editorially the paper said: "Thoughtful readers have doubtless learned the Country Gentleman's idea of a 'best farmer' from the series of articles under that title.

A 'best farmer' is not only a 'best' business man, but a 'best' husband, 'best' father, 'best' neighbor and citizen."

Aside from the conspicuous honor thus conferred by a nationally well known farm paper, I. D. O'Donnell is a Montanan concerning whom it will be expected something should be said by way of biographical mention. The article in the Country Gentleman gives a good picture of Mr. O'Donnell not only on his farm but as a business man and citizen. Many of the entertaining paragraphs must be omitted in the present sketch, but the essential facts needed to tell the story of this prominent Montanan are chiefly in the words found in the magazine.

He was born in a log cabin in 1860, and lived there until he was twenty-one years old. The cabin was located back in the woods, a few miles out of Saginaw, Michigan. There were ten brothers and sisters in the family and they lived the simple life of the backwoods people of the time. "We boys," said Mr. O'Donnell, "attended school in the wintertime, when there was any to attend, which was not often; so our winters were chiefly spent getting out black-ash hoop stock."

At the age of twenty-one Mr. O'Donnell had the equivalent of a seventh grade public school education, a strong, well trained body and unlimited ambition. These constituted his entire working capital and it sufficed to carry him a long way toward success. The great unknown West was the lure for all the young and adventurous spirits in those days, so young O'Donnell made his way to Montana. That was in 1882, thirty-seven years ago. He now ranks as one of the old settlers.

The first work O'Donnell found to do in Montana was on a horse ranch owned by the Billings estate. Frederick Billings was at that time president of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and on the ranch were his nephew, E. G. Bailey, and son Parmly Billings, both of whom took a fancy to O'Donnell. After a year and a half of horse wrangling they induced him to move to the Village of Billings. He might easily have become a railroad man, and if he had would undoubtedly have risen to prominence in the transportation world; but he preferred life in the open, so shortly afterward they put him in charge of the Billings ranch, a tract of several thousand acres, which he proceeded to farm on an extensive scale. The next year, in addition to his farming operations, he undertook the management of the large irrigation system controlled by the Billingses and placed it on a substantial basis. Much of the early construction work had been poorly done and he was compelled to do a great amount of rebuilding.

Eight years later, in 1892, he carried on all the negotiations which led up to the purchase of this system by a company of farmers, and after they were concluded he was elected president of the irrigation company, which position he has retained up to the present time. This irrigation system, which serves an area of 100,000 acres, is recognized even today as one of the very best in the entire West.

There was one piece of land on the project that appealed to Mr. O'Donnell especially, but it was owned by the Rev. B. F. Shuart, a Congregational missionary who had taken up the land under the homestead, pre-emption and desert claim acts before the irrigation system was constructed. Mr. Shuart came to Montana from North Dakota in 1882, and was the first minister of the gospel in that part of the state. In addition to preaching and looking after the spiritual welfare of his flock he was a very good farmer and established what for those days was a big dairy herd. He started in first to raise corn, but abandoned that for alfalfa, of which he had at one time a considerable acreage.

Hesper Farm, as the place was christened, was recognized as a leading farm in the valley from the very first, but its fame in early days did not rest either on alfalfa or on dairying. It rested on the fact that more weddings were solemnized there than at any other place in the state. When the young fellows began to succeed and send back home for their best girls, the wedding parties met the trains and drove out immediately to Hesper Farm.

An opportunity came in 1888 to purchase the farm, and O'Donnell took possession and began farming for himself. The Billingses who had recognized his abilities on many occasions, backed him with their credit. Thus his power to make friends and impress other people with his personality was a valuable asset when he wanted to start in business for himself. It has been an asset to him ever since and has enabled him to organize many new industries for the City of Billings, which he found necessary in order to make his farm operations more productive.

For example, he was the first to investigate sugar beet possibilities in Montana, discovering that sugar beets would not only grow well but they contained a higher percentage of sugar than beets grown in most other places. He foresaw possibilities in sugar beet culture, both for the farmers of his vicinity and for the City of Billings, was one of the leaders in organizing a company to erect a sugar-beet factory.

It is rather unusual for a farmer to go into an undertaking of this nature, involving the expenditure of $1,000,000, but O'Donnell thinks in big figures and the people had confidence that whatever he recommended would prove feasible. Contracts covering more than 8,000 acres were made with farmers for raising sugar beets and negotiations were entered into for the sale of the bonds. About this time the Great Western Sugar Company of Denver began extending its operations and it made the new company an offer for its plant, which was accepted.

The formation of a sugar beet company and the erection of a plant not only brought a valuable industry to the City of Billings but it has been of immense value to the farmers of the immediate vicinity. In an indirect way it proved to be one of the most lucrative ventures that O'Donnell ever undertook, for it resulted in the building up of a new system of agriculture on his farm that has increased its value and brought in a splendid income every year.

The sugar beet factory is only one of a number of industries in Billings that Mr. O'Donnell has assisted. He is one of the city's principal boosters and has had more to do with organizing and getting new businesses started than almost any other man there. He built the first creamery, which has since become a large plant, and is still president of it. He founded the Billings Foundry and Machine Company, and is a director in the Merchants National Bank. In fact, he is interested in so many business enterprises in the city that one begins to doubt the validity of his reputation as a farmer. This doubt is dispelled, however, when one meets the man and visits the ranch. The farm consists of a square section of 640 acres. It lies on the first bench above the Yellowstone River, and water is delivered to the entire project of 100,000 acres of which it is a part, by gravity. The soil is sedimentary and naturally fine, dark and rich. The whole section lies almost level except that it has a slight dip toward the south and east, just enough to provide fall for the irrigation water. There was almost no leveling to do in the beginning, and the cost of the ditches was not so high as on many projects. It all lies ideally for irrigation. There is a railroad station within one mile of the farm, where the produce, including sugar beets, is loaded for market, and the roads are very good.

The problem of making money on large farms is one of business management, of handling men and of preventing waste. On many large ranches and everywhere the same problem stands out. A farm of 640 acres is not a big ranch where dry-land farming is practiced, nor a very large ranch in the humid regions; but under intensive methods of irrigation it ranks as a very large farm, requiring the most careful kind of management of crops, water, soil, the various methods employed and of marketing.

The Hesper Farm is incorporated. Mr. O'Donnell is president of the corporation, Mrs. O'Donnell is vice president, and the six children are shareholders.

Mr. O'Donnell was one of the very first in the state to experiment with the raising of alfalfa, and was raising alfalfa in quantity and making money long before most of the other farmers even knew what it looked like. As early as 1895 he began to serve as a farm institute lecturer, and every winter for years he worked with the institute staff spreading the gospel of alfalfa.

One of the best pieces of public work Mr. O'Donnell ever performed and the one he looks back upon with the greatest pride was in connection with the United States Reclamation Service. Five years ago Secretary Lane announced that he intended to discontinue all reclamation work in the State of Montana. This aroused the people of the entire West and especially of Montana, so they arranged for a hearing; and when Secretary Lane visited them O'Donnell explained what was wrong and suggested the proper remedy. The result of the conference was the formation of a Reclamation Commission, composed of five members. The commission was given complete charge of all reclamation work of all the various government irrigation projects scattered over seventeen western states, and O'Donnell was made head of the operations and maintenance, with the title of supervisor of irrigation.

It was a red letter day for the settlers on government irrigation projects when O'Donnell took hold of their problems. He straightened out all their difficulties and made it possible for them to succeed. He not only relieved their difficulties with regard to water and payments, but he worked with them and showed them just how to arrange their fields, how to handle the water, what crops to plant and how to market them. In short, he became a sort of national farm adviser, a task he was eminently qualified to perform, since he had had years of practical experience and was himself a successful irrigation farmer.

The humanizing of the Reclamation Service has been Mr. O'Donnell's greatest public service. He has never held political office and does not expect to, but he has always been interested in boosting his business, in boosting his city, and in boosting his state. He resigned his position with the Reclamation Service last year, but has not resigned from doing what he can for the general public welfare.

This is evident from the fact that he has been for years a member of the board of trustees of the Public Library of Billings. The library was founded and endowed by his old friend Frederick Billings, and has been a special hobby with Mr. O'Donnell. In connection with his library work he has made it a part of his business to gather together all the data available concerning early Montana history. He is also president of the Midland Empire Fair, one of the trustees of the Billings Chamber of Commerce, president of the irrigation company, an officer of the Montana Farm Bureau, a member of the first State Board of Horticulture, and a member of the State Council of Defense. He is president of the Billings Polytechnic Institute, one of Montana's leading educational institutions, has served on the Montana State Fair board, also on the Stock Commission for the state and for a number of years on the school board of his district.

Yet, in spite of his various business and public activities, he is, first of all, a farmer. He started as a farmer, made money as a farmer, and has had a greater influence on farming in his adopted state than any other man in the state. The various outside activities above mentioned are merely incidental to farming, which is his chief interest and his principal source of revenue.

HARRY J. KELLY, who is registrar of the United States Land Office at Lewistown, is a veteran newspaper man, and has worked with leading journals all over the West from the Missouri River to the Pacific Coast. He has been a resident of Montana upwards of thirty years.

Mr. Kelly was born at Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, October 6, 1869, a son of Hugh H. and Ellen (Leonard) Kelly. His parents were natives of Ireland. Hugh Kelly came to this country with his parents and grew up at Rochester, New York, where he finished his education. He became a contractor and builder, and in 1860 located at Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, and in 1878 transferred his home and business to Omaha, Nebraska, where he continued contracting and building until his death at the age of sixty-five. His wife died at the age of forty-eight. They had eight children, six of whom are still living. Harry J. is the fourth child. His father was a Catholic and a democrat in politics.

Mr. Kelly acquired a public school education at Omaha and also attended the Creighton University there. He acquired his early experience in the newspaper business in the offices of the Bee and the Republican-Herald at Omaha. From there in 1888 he removed to Leadville, Colorado, subsequently to Southern California, thence to Seattle, Washington, and in all these places was connected in some capacity with newspapers. He came to Montana and located at Missoula in 1889, and for a time was connected with the Missoulian. He worked on the Butte Miner in 1899, and subsequently helped bring out the first issue of the Anaconda Standard. He returned to Missoula in 1902, and later for about two years was connected with the Spokane Review. In 1905 he moved to Hamilton and bought the Bitteroot Times, a paper which he owned and published for about three years. Mr. Kelly was at Helena serving as sergeant at arms during the sixth session of the State Legislature. Returning to Butte, he was with the Butte Miner, and later came to Lewistown and with Tom Stout organized the Democrat News. He later sold his interest in that paper to Mr. Stout at the time he was appointed, on July 1, 1913, registrar of the United States Land Office. He was re-appointed to the office in 1917. Mr. Kelly had also been elected alderman from the First Ward of Lewiston in 1913, but resigned his place in the municipal government when he accepted his Federal appointment. Mr. Kelly belongs to the Elks and is a democrat in politics.

August 2, 1899, he married Miss Mary See, a native of Montana. They have four children: Helen, employed in the office of the Democrat-News; Margaret, a student in high school; William G. and Harry J., Jr.

ALBERT M. JOHNS. The record of Albert M. Johns, the efficient and popular postmaster at Wilsall, is that of an enterprising gentleman whose life has been intimately associated with the material prosperity and moral advancement of this locality during the most progressive period of its history, and he has always been found on the right side of questions looking to the development of his county in any way.

Albert M. Johns is descended from Welsh ancestry and inherited the sterling qualities which characterize that people. His paternal grandfather, Jackson Johns, who died at Belmont, Ohio, before the birth of the subject, was one of the pioneers of Belmont County, having moved there from Johnstown, Pennsylvania. He was a blacksmith by vocation and a representative of that sturdy class of men who were willing to brave the dangers and endure the hardships of a frontier life in order that their descendants might enjoy the fruitage of their labors. His son, George Johns, was born in 1853 in Belmont County, Ohio, and was there reared and educated. He followed the life of a farmer all of his active days, but is now retired and is living at Metamora. Shortly after his marriage he had moved to Batesville, but in 1883 settled at Metamora. He is a democrat in politics and is a member of the Christian Church and of the Masonic fraternity. He married Jennie Bishop, who was born in Guernsey County, Ohio, in 1855, and to them were born the following children: Albert M., whose name forms the caption to this review; Nellie, who is the wife of Marion Cline, a farmer at New Metamoras, Ohio; Homer, a farmer at Greenbrier, Ohio; Archibald, who is mayor of Friendly, West Virginia; Maude, who is the wife of Herold Cline, an oil operator at Oil Fields, California; Dot, who is the wife of Forest Morgan, a merchant at Amsterdam, Ohio; Wick, a student at Amsterdam, Ohio, as is also his twin brother, Wade.

Albert M. Johns was born at Batesville, Noble County, Ohio, on July 14, 1877, but was educated in the public schools of New Metamoras, Ohio, graduating from the high school there in 1896. He attended the State Normal School at Athens, Ohio, for two years, and then engaged in teaching in Monroe County, Ohio, which vocation he followed for three years. During the following four years he was engaged in the mercantile business at Greenbrier, Ohio, but sold out and engaged in the same line of business at Fleming, Ohio, in which he continued until 1913. In the latter year Mr. Johns came to Wilsall, Montana, and engaged in the general mercantile business, being a pioneer in that line here. He sold out on April 1, 1919, in order to give his entire atention to his duties as postmaster, but it is his intention to resume the business again when he relinquishes his official position. On December 20, 1916, Mr. Johns was appointed postmaster of Wilsall and has discharged the duties of that position to the entire satisfaction of the department and the patrons of the office. Courteous and obliging, Mr. Johns has endeavored to make the office serve the people, and he has won the hearty approbation of all with whom he has had dealings.

Politically Mr. Johns is an earnest supporter of the democratic party. Fraternally he is a member of American Union Lodge No. 1, Free and Accepted Masons, at Marietta, Ohio; American Union Chapter No. 1, Royal Arch Masons, of Marietta; Marietta Council No. 78, Royal and Select Masters; Marietta Commandery No. 50, Knights Templar; Wilsall Lodge No. 103, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Of American Union Lodge, referred to above, it is worthy of note that the lodge was first constituted at Waterman's Tavern on February 20, 1776, nearly five months before the signing of the Declaration of Independence. It worked in the patriot army until 1783, during which period it was visited by General Washington and others of the patriot leaders. The lodge was re-opened in Campus Martius, Marietta, Ohio, on June 28, 1790, by Jonathan Heart, worshipful master, and was the first lodge of Freemasons opened in the Northwest Territory.

In 1898, at New Metamoras, Ohio, Mr. Johns was married to Stella Adamson, the daughter of Barnett and Priscilla (Devaul) Adamson. The father, who was a merchant at Rinards Mill, Ohio, is now deceased, and his widow resides at Marietta. To Mr. and Mrs. Johns have been born the following children: Ernest, born July 8, 1900, is a freshman in the State Agricultural College at Bozeman; Georgia, born in May, 1902, is a junior in the Wilsall High School; Lynn S., born April 14, 1904, a sophomore in the Wilsall High School; Eleanor, born on July 14, 1906, is a public school student; Lloyd George, born May 15, 1918. Mr. Johns' life has been one of unceasing industry and perseverance, and the systematic and honorable methods which he has followed have won him the unbounded confidence of his fellow citizens.

CHARLES P. NEVIN. The concerns doing the largest amount of business in Montana are, generally speaking, in the hands of men who are still in the very prime of vigorous young manhood and who are able to bring to their work the enthusiasm of youth combined with broad and varied experience, because the majority of them have been otherwise engaged before permanently establishing themselves in the lines in which they are finding their life occupation. One of these alert young men is Charles P. Nevin, president of the Magill-Nevin Company of Butte, the largest concern of its kind in the state, wholesalers and retailers of plumbing and heating appliances and materials, and contractors for plumbing.

Charles P. Nevin was born at Virginia City, Nevada, on February 7, 1881, a son of Dennis Nevin, born in County Galway, Ireland, in 1843. He and six brothers came to the United States, and three of them located in Massachusetts, but Dennis Nevin and the three others came west to Nevada. They were married to four sisters, daughters of James Donohue, and were married according to their ages, the eldest Miss Donohue being married to the eldest Nevin brother, and so on to the youngest members of the two families. These very unusual marriages were regarded with romantic interest by the young people over a wide territory, and are still spoken of by the "oldtimers" in and about Virginia City.

Only sixteen years old at the time of his entry into the United States, Dennis Nevin spent a short time at Boston, Massachusetts, before he and his three brothers crossed the plains to the West. The present generation has no conception of what such a trip meant in those early days. Not only were there no proper railroad connections, but there were no roads a good part of the way, and the traveler was in constant danger while passing through the western country from the hostile Indians. The majority of the travelers made their way on horseback, if fortunate enough to own a horse, and, if not, traveled on foot. Parties were made up of a sufficient number to put up a defense against attacks from the Indians, and the women and children were carried in canvas-covered wagons drawn by horses or oxen. In spite of the hardships and dangers of these trips thousands flocked across plains and mountains, for gold had been discovered and the lure of the gold fields drew them not only from the eastern states but from foreign countries as well. The Nevin brothers belonged to the latter class and journeyed westward with hopes of making their fortunes by digging the gold from the soil of first California and later Nevada.

While possessed of the spirit of adventure, Dennis Nevin was an extremely shrewd business man, and he realized that while some might make a lucky strike, there was more real profit in an intelligently conducted business concern that would supply the needs of the miners than in taking a chance at prospecting for gold. Consequently he established and conducted one of the pioneer mercantile houses of Virginia City, Nevada, and so prospered that he was requested by Marcus Daly to come to Butte, Montana, and assume the management of his large properties as superintendent of one of his mines. Complying, Mr. Nevin was made superintendent of the Wakeup Jim Mine, where he lost his life, being accidentally killed in that mine on September 15, 1885. He was a man of very forceful character and reliability and served for two terms as treasurer of Storey County, Nevada, being elected to that office on the democratic ticket. All of his life he was a devout member of the Roman Catholic Church. Mr. Nevin was a famous rifle shot, and belonged to the Emmett Guards, serving it as captain of a company.

Dennis Nevin and Winifred Donohue were married as above stated, being one of the four couples composed of four brothers and four sisters. She was born in County Galway, Ireland, in 1848, and died at Butte, Montana, on December 23, 1900. She and her husband had the following children: Mary Jane, married P. S. Sullivan, who lives at Butte, was assessor of Silver Bow County for three terms, and is now in the employment department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company; Martha Rose, who died at the age of thirty-six years, married Thomas Sheehan, also deceased, who was a merchant of Butte, and a son of one of the pioneers of this city; George F., who is a master mechanic for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, lives at Butte; Margaret, who married Oscar Comstock, lives at Butte; William H., who is superintendent of the Anaconda Mine, is spoken of at length elsewhere in this work; Winifred, who married John Donnelly, a traveling salesman, lives at Butte; and Charles P., who was the sixth.

Charles P. Nevin attended the parochial and public schools of Butte, and was graduated from the Catholic school in the class of 1897. He then entered All Hallows College, Salt Lake City, Utah, and was graduated therefrom in 1900 with the degree of Bachelor of Science. Following the completion of his collegiate course, Mr. Nevin entered the employ of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company in November, 1900, and remained with this corporation until 1909. He resigned to go into the hotel business with his brother-in-law, P. S. Sullivan, and for a year was joint proprietor of the Southern Hotel of Butte. Mr. Nevin then entered the commission and brokerage business under the firm name of Rabbitt & Nevin, and later combined it and the O'Meara Fruit & Produce Company in 1910 under the name of the Montana Provision Company, of which Mr. Nevin was president. In 1912 Mr. Nevin sold his interest in this concern and invested in the purchase of the Krueger Plumbing & Heating Company, and with it as a nucleus organized the Magill-Nevin Company, which is incorporated, and has plant and offices at No. 114 North Main Street, Butte. This is the largest firm of its kind in Montana, and carries on a wholesale and retail business in handling plumbing and heating appliances and materials, and doing a general contracting and jobbing business, with a market that extends all over Western Montana. The officers of the company are as follows: Charles P. Nevin, president; W. J. Magill, vice president and manager; Ira G. Bacon, secretary, and Charles R. Leonard, treasurer.

Mr. Nevin has always been a strong democrat, and in 1902 was candidate for the office of clerk of the District Court and polled the highest vote, but was counted out by two votes. In 1906 he was chairman of the Democratic County Central Committee and conducted the campaign for T. J. Walsh for the office of congressman from the State of Montana. Mr. Nevin was candidate in 1908 for the office of state railroad commissioner and was defeated. The people of Butte elected him mayor in 1909 by the largest majority ever given a candidate for this office, he being the first one to carry every ward in the city. After serving during 1910 and 1911, he retired from active participation in politics on account of the growth of his business, which was rapidly assuming enormous proportions and required his whole attention. Mr. Nevin is president of the Nevin Trunk Company, a director of the Ellis Paint Company, the Centennial Brewing Company, the Cooney Brokerage Company and the Alpine Mining Company, which operates at Banks, Idaho, and takes a constructive part in all of these concerns. His company owns twenty acres of land within the city limits and other real estate, and a large warehouse at the Great Northern Railroad tracks which it uses for the storage of its stock. Mr. Nevin owns a comfortable modern residence at No. 945 West Woolman Street, Butte.

Both by inheritance and conviction Mr. Nevin is a Roman Catholic. He belongs to Butte Council No. 668, Knights of Columbus, in which he has been made a fourth degree Knight, and he is enrolled as one of its charter members. He also belongs to Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, to the United Commercial Travelers, to Butte Camp No. 153, Woodmen of the World, to the Rotary Club, to the Silver Bow Club, of which he is also a director, and to the Butte Country Club.

In 1902 Mr. Nevin was united in marriage at Butte to Miss Matilda O'Malley, a daughter of William P. and Bridget (Lavelle) O'Malley. Mr. O'Malley was a pioneer miner of Butte who came into this region in the early '70s, and died here. His widow survives him and resides at Spokane, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Nevin have one child, Jack, who was born on April 23, 1911.

It would be difficult to find a man more representative of the best type of American citizenship than Mr. Nevin. Not only is he that, but he is a splendid type of the western business man whose interests are all centered in this region and whose training has all been of the vigorous young west. His father and uncles bore a very important part in the development of this part of the country, and when he came to manhood's estate he was eager and ready to continue the good work. As a politician he left his mark on contemporary history, and while he was not elected to all of the offices for which he was his party's candidate, he polled enough votes in a strictly republican district to stand as a very gratifying monument to his personal popularity and prestige. Increasing business cares necessitated his withdrawal from politics, but his influence remains and his advice is sought and taken upon many questions pertaining to civic matters, and the results of his energetic occupancy of the mayor's chair are shown in a better government and improvements and an awakened interest on the part of the ordinary voter in the public weal. Genial by nature, Mr. Nevin is deservedly popular in the different fraternities and social organizations with which he maintains membership as he is with people generally, while his business associates and competitors accord him a respect his acumen exacts.

JOHN W. JACKSON. One of the important industries of a community which may well be regarded as a contributory factor in raising its standards and increasing its love of the beautiful is that which has to do with the cultivation of flowers. It has been often claimed that no man can become successful in this line unless he has deep in his heart a love of the work and a genuine appreciation of its possibilities. Certain it is that the majority of florists possess these characteristics, and when they are supplemented by a technical training and sound business capabilities the outcome is sure to be gratifying. John W. Jackson, one of the successful florists of Anaconda, belongs to the class indicated above, and he is also recognized as one of the representative business men of the city. Mr. Jackson was born at Bradford, England, April 29, 1881, a son of William Jackson, and grandson of Charles Jackson, a native of the same city as his grandson, and there he rounded out his useful life, passing away in 1882. All of his active years he was engaged in mining.

William Jackson, born at Bradford, England, in 1856, died at Rimini, Montana, in 1904. Like his father, he was a miner in England, and when he came to the United States in 1881 he sought employment in the mines in Illinois, where he remained until 1883, and in that year came to Livingston, Montana, where he continued to engage in coal mining. He was engaged in mining at other points in the state. First the Church of England and later the Episcopal Church held his membership. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Frances A. Harrison, was born at Bradford, England, in 1853, and she survives him, making her home at Helena, Montana. Their children were as follows: Edith, who married W. J. Tracy, lives at Helena, Montana, Mr. Tracy, who was formerly a mining engineer being deceased; John W., whose name heads this review; Emily, who is a trained nurse in the employ of the government at Fort Sheridan, Illinois; Mary M., who married Lea Marston, a ranchman of Smoky Butte, Montana; Annie, who lives with her mother; and Rhoda, who also lives with her mother.

John W. Jackson completed the courses of the graded schools and took a two-year course in the Helena High School, and then, in 1900, began learning the florist business at the state nursery at Helena, Montana, rising to be one of the stockholders. In 1917 he sold his interests, and coming to Anaconda bought the greenhouse located at No. 713 Locust Street. He now has 15,000 square feet of glass, and his is the leading one of its kind in Deerlodge County. His offices and store are at No. 203 Main Street, and here he carries on a retail business supplying the people of Anaconda and Deerlodge County. Mr. Jackson is independent in his political views. He belongs to the Episcopal Church of Anaconda. A Mason, he is a member of King Solomon Lodge No. 9, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Helena, Montana; Helena Consistory No. 3, in which he has attained to the thirty-second degree; Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Helena, and he is also a member of Broadwater Camp No. 29, Woodmen of the World, and the Rotary Club of Anaconda. The family residence is at No. 721 Locust Street.

Mr. Jackson was married at Butte, Montana, in 1916 to Miss Byrd Monahan, who was born in Charlotte, Iowa. She is a graduate of the Academy of Clinton, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson have one child, Loretta Caroline, born November 6, 1919.

HAVELOCK G. COY, who is a leading hardware and implement merchant of Anaconda, is one of the representative men of this region, and his business operations form an important factor in the commercial interests of the city. He was born April 30, 1866, a son of Samuel Coy, and great-grandson of Edward Coy. Edward Coy was a pioneer farmer of New Brunswick, Canada, to which he went in 1763 from Pomfret, Connecticut. In 1752 he married Amy Titus, and both died in New Brunswick. The Coys originated in England, but came to the American colonies at an early day, and it is claimed that a member of the family married a lineal descendant of one of the passengers of the Mayflower. Benjamin Coy, son of Edward Coy and grandfather of Havelock G. Coy, was born in New Brunswick, Canada, and there he died before his grandson was born, being then eighty years of age. He was a clergyman of the Baptist Church of New Brunswick.

Samuel Coy, a son of Benjamin Coy and father of Havelock G. Coy, was born in New Brunswick, Canada, in October, 1803, and died there in 1882, having spent his entire life in that province as a farmer. He was a liberal in politics and served in the local militia. Samuel Coy was married to Amelia Esty, born in New Brunswick, in 1825, and died there in 1881. Their children were as follows: Minnie B., who married David S. Coy, a grocer of Toronto, Canada; and Havelock G., whose name heads this review.

Havelock G. Coy received a preparatory normal school education in the public schools of New Brunswick, which he left when sixteen years old to engage in farming, continuing this calling in his native province until 1887. In May of that year he came to Anaconda, Montana, as a pioneer and followed many callings, including laboring, contracting and building and teaming, and then in 1898 he established his present business in a small way and enlarging it as his trade increased until he now has one of the leading establishments of its kind in this entire section. In 1916 he incorporated his business as the Coy Hardware and Implement Company, of which he is president, his associates being A. M. Strom, vice president, and Mrs. Emma Dyas, secretary and treasurer. The store and offices are located at Nos. 409 and 411 East Park Avenue, Anaconda.

Mr. Coy is a republican and was appointed by Judge Winston Commissioner of Deer Lodge County. He is a member of the Baptist Church, and is serving as chairman of its board of trustees. A member of the Rotary Club he is now its president, and he is also president of the Commercial Men's Club. The family residence on Main Street, at No. 600, is owned by him and is modern in every respect.

In 1893 Mr. Coy was married at Boston, Massachusetts, to Miss Annie Edmunds, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Edmunds, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Edmunds was a pattern maker of Canada and Boston, Massachusetts. Mrs. Coy attended the provincial normal school of New Brunswick and was an educator prior to her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Coy have the following children: Annie May, who is attending the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis, taught school for a year at Rockford, Minnesota; and Edmund, who is attending the Anaconda High School.

Having resided at Anaconda for so many years, Mr. Coy has passed through its formative period and has taken part in much of its development. His business is the outgrowth of his intelligent methods and comprehensive appreciation of the needs of his customers, and he richly deserves the prosperity which has attended him, as well as the high position he occupies in public esteem.

Samuel Wesley Collett came to Montana with his father and other members of the family over thirty years ago. His home is still on a farm, and farming has constituted one of his chief activities all the years he has been in the state. However, he is widely known as a Bozeman business man, and his office has been the medium for a tremendous amount of real estate buying and selling. Mr. Collett is one of the best posted men on realty values in Bozeman and over that section of the state.

He is of Scotch-Irish ancestry. The first of the Colletts in America were pioneers in Indiana. Samuel Wesley Collett was born at Belle Plaine, Iowa, August 9, 1869. His father, Samuel Collett, a well known Montana pioneer, was born in Indiana in 1847, and as a boy went to Iowa and served three and a half years with an Iowa regiment of infantry in the Civil war. After the war he lived on the farm in the northern part of that state and subsequently moved to a farm near Belle Plaine. Leaving Iowa in the spring of 1887, he came to Bozeman, and homesteaded 160 acres eighteen miles west of that city. He lived on his Montana ranch for eighteen years and after that had his home in Bozeman, where he acquired extensive real estate properties. He was one of the successful old timers of Montana and his death at Bozeman in 1917 was greatly regretted by his former associates. He was a very active member of the Methodist Church and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while in politics he always voted the republican ticket. Samuel Collett married Martha Winslow, who was born in Iowa in 1846 and died at Bozeman in 1915. A brief record of their children is: John, a former county commissioner and farmer who died at Bozeman in 1918; Samuel Wesley; Melvina, wife of Cal Merritt, a pioneer farmer, rancher and cattleman at Whitehall, Montana; Harry, owner of a grain ranch at Logan, Montana; and Charles, who has a farm south of Bozeman.

Samuel W. Collett acquired his early education in the public schools of Spirit Lake, Iowa. He was eighteen years old when he came to Bozeman in 1887, and after that for twenty years was actively engaged in farming and stock raising. Since 1909 he has been developing a large real estate business, and is regarded as one of the most competent men in that line in Gallatin County. An indication of his prestige as a real estate man and also of the general volume of real estate business during the period is furnished by the record of business done in his office from January 1 until June 1, 1919, the transactions of this period making an impressive aggregate of approximately $442,000. Mr. Collett is a successful farmer on his own account, and owns 600 acres, though a large part of his former holdings he has sold. He still lives on his farm seven miles west of Bozeman.

Mr. Collett is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, is a republican, a trustee of the Methodist Church, and is affiliated with Salesville Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Bozeman Lodge No. 463, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

In 1899, at Anaconda, he married Miss Artie Wall, a native of Indiana. She died on the home farm west of Bozeman in 1907. She was the mother of three children: Gladys, a graduate of the Bozeman High School and of the Columbia Institute at Milton, Oregon, is the wife of Everett Cutting, teacher of wireless telegraphy in the State University at Missoula; Gerald, who was educated in the grammar and high schools at Bozeman, is in business with his father and lives on the farm; Leonard, also on the farm, is a graduate of the Gallatin County High School. In 1911, at Bozeman, Mr. Collett married Mrs. Zada (Fausett) Thompson, a native of Salt Lake City.

Harry S. Masters is in point of years of service one of the oldest telegraphers and dispatchers in the employ of the Northern Pacific Railway. He learned telegraphy during his youth in Canada. He is a native of England but was reared in Canada. Several of his brothers have been railroad men or engaged in some public utility service, and one of his brothers was a Canadian soldier during the World war.

Mr. Masters, who is dispatcher for the Northern Pacific at Livingston, a position he has held for a number of years, was born near the City of Salisbury, England, March 23, 1872. His father, Eli Masters, was born at the same English city in 1839, was a farmer there in early life, and in 1875 brought his family to Canada and settled far out on the Western frontier, near the old military post of Fort Gary, now Winnipeg. He developed a farm on the Western prairies and lived there until his death in 1918. He was a liberal in politics, was a Methodist in religion, and belonged to the Masonic fraternity. In England he had a military training with the English Yeomen. Eli Masters married Harriet Benjafield, who was born near Salisbury in 1838 and is still living, at the age of eighty-one at Winnipeg. Nathaniel, the oldest of their children, is connected with the Municipal Electric Light plant at Winnipeg. Hedley is supervisor of the Winnipeg waterworks, Tom is a telegraph operator with the Canadian Pacific at Vancouver, British Columbia, while Sidney, a farmer in Winnipeg, enlisted in the Canadian army at the outbreak of the war, was sent overseas and was employed in construction work until mustered out after the signing of the armistice. Harry S. is the fifth in the family. Eva is the wife of J. S. Kerr, a conductor with the Canadian Pacific Railway, living at Winnipeg, and Annie is the wife of Walter McPherson, an employe of the Canadian postal service at Winnipeg.

Harry S. Masters was three years old when taken to the Canadian frontier, received his education in the public schools of Winnipeg, and left that city in 1892. At St. Paul, Minnesota, he was a telegraph operator with the Western Union Company for a year and a half, and on March 1, 1894, arrived at Livingston, Montana. For eight years he was manager of the Livingston office of the Western Union, and since then has been in the service of the Northern Pacific Railway Company. As dispatcher his business headquarters are in the general office building on Park Street.

Mr. Masters is also owner of a ranch of 160 acres in the Potter Basin of Park County and has a modern home at 107 North Third Street. He is now serving his third term as alderman of the Second Ward, and is a republican in politics. He is a vestryman in the Episcopal Church, and a member of Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

In April, 1898, he married Miss Grace Potter, daughter of William and Martha (Fraser) Potter. The Potters live in the Potter Basin of Park County. Her father was one of the pioneer homesteaders there and today owns 6,000 acres and is extensively engaged in the sheep industry. Mr. and Mrs. Masters have four children: Harry S., Jr., Gladys, wife of Dan Gallagher, a rancher at Clyde Park, Montana, Mary and Grace, the former in the eighth grade and the latter in the first grade of the public schools at Livingston.

R. Proctor Barclay. Since 1898 R. Proctor Barclay has been a resident of Butte and has risen in business circles until he is now president of the Barclay & Booth Abstract Company, one of the most dependable in its line in the state. The Barclay family was founded in the Virginia colony at a period antedating the American Revolution. The grandfather, Philander Barclay, died in Kentucky before the birth of his grandson R. Proctor Barclay.

R. Proctor Barclay was born at Bowling Green, Kentucky, on April 10, 1872, a son of Joseph W. Barclay, born at Glasgow, Kentucky, in 1830. His death occurred at Pembroke, Kentucky, in 1913, where he previously had large property interests, and had also been an extensive property owner at Chicago, Illinois, and Atchison, Kansas. Growing up at Glasgow and Russellville, Kentucky, he went to Bowling Green, Kentucky, following the close of the war between the states, there being engaged in farming until 1900, when he moved to Pembroke and lived retired until his death. Politically a democrat, he took no active part in public affairs. The Baptist Church held his membership. He was a Mason.

Joseph W. Barclay was married to Sally Proctor, born in Logan County, Kentucky, in 1838, a daughter of Thomas L. Proctor, whose birth occurred in 1797. He died in Logan County, Kentucky, in 1879. He was either a native of Kentucky or brought into the state from Virginia during pioneer times. His wife was Agnes Carson prior to her marriage, and she, too, was born in either Kentucky or Virginia. Her death occurred in Logan County, Kentucky, before the birth of her grandson. Thomas L. Proctor was a farmer and miller and owned extensive timber interests, owned and operated a sawmill and was a large slave owner and one of the prominent men of Logan County whose business operations were diversified and of considerable magnitude. The Proctors were Scotch-Irish and the family was founded in Virginia during the colonial period of American history. Mrs. Joseph W. Barclay died at Bowling Green, Kentucky, in 1911. She and her husband had the following children: Agnes, who is unmarried, lives at Montgomery, Alabama, and is a teacher in the public schools of that city; R. Proctor, whose name heads this review; and Waller P., who came to Montana in 1899, and is associated with his brother in the abstract business. By a former marriage with Sallie Tandy, born at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, Joseph W. Barclay had the following children: Ernest, who is a farmer and tobacco grower of Pembroke, Kentucky; Annie, who is unmarried, is a resident of Bowling Green, where she is engaged in teaching in the public schools; Sallie, who is a resident of Bowling Green, is the widow of J. W. Evans, who died at Russellville, Kentucky, where he had been engaged in merchandising.

R. Proctor Barclay attended the public schools of Bowling Green, and was graduated from Ogden College of Bowling Green in 1893 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He then became deputy clerk of the court of Warren County and held that position until January 1, 1898, when he entered the employ of the Warren Deposit Bank, remaining with that institution until in May, 1898, when he came to Butte, Montana, and formed connections with the Ras Rochester Hardware Company, which were maintained until Mr. Rochester sold his interests in July of that year, Mr. Barclay being chosen to close up the affairs. He then associated himself in October of 1898 with Judge A. H. Barret in the abstract business, operating under the name of the Security Abstract Company. In 1899 Mr. Barrett was elected state treasurer, and Mr. Barclay continued to conduct the business under his own name until April, 1901, when he took T. E. Booth into partnership with him, and in March, 1902, incorporated the business as the Barclay & Booth Abstract Company. Mr. Booth withdrew in May, 1903, and engaged in a loan business, but the name has not been changed. The present officials of the company are as follows: R. P. Barclay, president; W. P. Barclay, vice president; and E. R. McMahon, secretary and treasurer. Mr. Barclay is the active manager and conducts all of the business of the company, and has built up the largest abstract business in Montana. Practically all of the abstracts of the claims that constitute the holdings of all of the large companies in the Butte District within the last twenty-one years have been made by Mr. Barclay. He also has a large business in the general real estate line of abstracting, and this is the only abstract company in Montana that specializes in abstracting properties throughout the whole state and the entire northwest. The offices are at No. 108 West Granite Street, Butte. Mr. Barclay's residence is at No. 4 Malay Block on Hamilton Street, Butte.

In his political faith Mr. Barclay is a democrat, but he has never held any elective office, as his duties have been too heavy to permit of his assuming any of a public character. Having been reared in the Baptist Church, he joined that denomination and has continued to worship with it. The Rotary Club of Butte holds his membership and he is one of its directors. At the International Convention of Rotary held at Salt Lake, in June, 1919, he was elected international secretary of the abstract section of Rotary. He also belongs to Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Silver Bow Club and the Butte Country Club, all of Butte. He is not married.

A man of dependable character, painstaking and conservative, Mr. Barclay has concentrated his abilities on the development of his business, and has brought it to a state of perfection that must be gratifying. The name of the concern he has founded and fostered stands for so much not only in Butte and Montana, but all over the West, that to have its guarantee back of a title insures a sale of any realty wherever located, and it is a recognized fact that it is because Mr. Barclay is in active charge of the affairs of the company that his concern has such weight in the matter of guaranteeing purchasers of property against loss through faulty titles or dishonest representations.

Joseph Sudar, manager of the Bear Creek Trading Company, the leading general mercantile establishment of this part of Montana, is one of the substantial and enterprising men of Bear Creek, who has risen to his present position through his own ability and steadfast adherence to business. He was born at Cratian, Austria, March 10, 1878, a son of Jerry and Martha (Ratkovich) Sudar, both natives of Cratian, Austria. There they were reared and married, and, after useful lives, passed away. They were consistent members of the Roman Catholic Church. The children born to Jerry Sudar and wife were as follows: Frank and Paul, who live at Cratian, Austria; Katy and Mary, both of whom also reside at Cratian, Austria; Joseph, whose name heads this review; Jerry, who is a merchant of Bear Creek, Montana; Jack, who is a miner of Bear Creek, Montana; Rosa, who married George Naglich, a miner of Bear Creek; Milka, who married George Dragich, who is also a miner of Bear Creek.

After attending the public schools of his native city Joseph Sudar worked as a clerk in one of its mercantile concerns, and then in 1903 came to the United States, landing at Baltimore, Maryland, from whence he went to Arkansas and was there engaged in railroad work. During 1904 and 1905 he was engaged in mining at Rugby, Colorado, and then was at Bridger, Montana, until 1907, continuing there as a miner. For five years after coming to Montana he was engaged in mining and clerking in a store, and then with his partner purchased the Bear Creek Trading Company. This store is conveniently located on Main Street, and a very large business is carried on annually.

In politics Mr. Sudar is a democrat, and he is now a member of the City Council and takes an active part in civic affairs. Born and reared a Catholic, he belongs to the Catholic Church of Bear Creek. Since locating permanently at this point Mr. Sudar has displayed his faith in its future by investing in real estate, and owns a comfortable residence here. He is not married. The advancement Mr. Sudar has made in so short a period demonstrates the fact that this country offers unlimited opportunities to those willing to work and save, and his good sense and sterling integrity have won for him the respect of his associates, and increased the volume of business of his company.

Charles W. Allin, proprietor of the Anaconda Lumber Yard, is a man who enjoys the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens and is entitled to both. He was born at Bedford, Missouri, February 15, 1883, a son of Dr. C. W. Allin. Doctor Allin was born at Harrisburg, Kentucky, in 1836, and died at Bedford, Missouri, in 1913. Leaving Harrisburg, Kentucky, in young manhood, Doctor Allin came to the vicinity of Bedford, Missouri. He was graduated from the Keokuk, Iowa Medical College and became a pioneer physician of Livingston County, Missouri, where he was engaged in practice the remainder of his life. During the conflict between the North and South he espoused the cause of the latter, and was a soldier in the Confederate army. Politically he was a democrat. Doctor Allin was married at Bedford, Missouri, to a Miss Hoffman, who died in Missouri, having borne her husband three children, namely: May, who married J. P. Garham, a farmer of Hale, Missouri; an infant daughter; and Hallie, who married A. E. Wright, a farmer of Avalon, Missouri. After the death of his first wife, Doctor Allin was married second to Elizabeth Rickerson, born in April, 1852, near Georgetown, Kentucky, and Charles W. Allin is the only child of this union.

Charles W. Allin attended the public schools of Livingston County, Missouri, completing the ninth grade. He then took a commercial course at the Chillicothe Business College at Chillicothe, Missouri, completing it in September, 1901. Leaving Missouri, he then went to Milligan, Nebraska, and went to work in the lumber yards there, becoming a general helper for F. M. Spaulding, remaining with him for three years. Mr. Allin then went to Holdredge, Nebraska, and was yardman for C. A. Gallaway for three years. In June, 1907, he went with the Belgrave Lumber Company of Belgrave, Montana, as manager, acting as such for five years, and in 1911 he embarked in a lumber business of his own at Graybull, Wyoming, under the name of the Allin-Saunders Lumber Company, his partners being two brothers by the name of Saunders. Disposing of his interests in 1914, he came to Anaconda and established himself under the old name of the Allin-Saunders Lumber Company, but in 1918 became sole owner. This is one of the leading lumber concerns of Deerlodge County, the offices and yard being at No. 223 West Commercial Avenue, at the corner of Commercial Avenue and Locust Street. Mr. Allin also has a large warehouse along the tracks of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad. His business extends all over Deerlodge County. The family resides at No. 223 West Commercial Avenue. In politics Mr. Allin is an independent.

In 1908 Mr. Allin was married at Belgrade, Montana, to Miss Bertha Davis, a daughter of David and Candace (Wakefields) Davis. Mr. Davis was a farmer of the Gallatin Valley, in which he settled in 1863, coming to it from Wales. During the gold rush he was at Virginia City and Alder Gulch, but decided that there would be more profit in homesteading and farming, so secured his ranch in the Gallatin Valley, and was one of the successful pioneer ranchmen of that locality. Mrs. Allin was graduated from the Montana State College at Bozeman. Mr. and Mrs. Allin have one son, Charles W., who was born August 6, 1909. Mr. Allin is proud of his family and of the fact that he is 100 per cent American, the Allins having come to the American colonies from Scotland some time prior to the Revolutionary war and located in Virginia, from whence they later moved into Kentucky. A man of experience in his business, Mr. Allin has been able to conduct it in a manner to bring him ample patronage, and his concern is ranked among the sound commercial factors of the city.

H. P. Sandles. The Sandles family is one of the oldest in Pennsylvania, where it was founded in colonial times, and its representatives have since then taken part in constructive work with relation to the government, and been instrumental in developing many of the states of the Union. Its representative at Red Lodge, Montana, H. P. Sandles, county clerk of Carbon, is one of the alert and thoroughly progressive young men of this section, who during the late war lived up to the highest standards of his progenitors and rendered his country invaluable service during the period of such great stress. H. P. Sandles was born in Indiana County, Pennsylvania, October 24, 1882, on the farm purchased by his great-grandfather and owned successively by his grandfather and father. The latter, also named H. P. Sandles, was born on this same farm in 1859, and here he has spent his life, still being actively engaged in conducting the homestead, and operating quite extensively as a stock dealer. A republican, he is active in his party, but not an office holder. The Presbyterian Church holds his membership and benefits through his generosity and piety. Fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Jennie Kier, was also born in Indiana County, Pennsylvania, in 1861. Their children are as follows: Claude, who is a roller in an Ohio steel mill; Marck, who is a roller in the Gary, Indiana, steel works; Lyle, who is an attorney of Cincinnati, Ohio; H. P., whose name heads this review; and Albert, a twin brother of H. P., who is superintendent of a mine at Hannistown, Pennsylvania.

After completing his courses in the local schools of Indiana County, Pennsylvania, H. P. Sandles became a student of the Elders Ridge Academy, from which he was gradauted in 1901, and was engaged in work as a construction engineer in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois for some time before going to Fernie, British Columbia, where he remained until 1905. During that year he came back to the United States and served as construction engineer for the Northwestern Improvement Company along the Northern Pacific Railroad until 1907, in which year he was sent to Red Lodge, Montana, and remained with the same company until 1916, during that period constructing the Sunset Mine. As a side line Mr. Sandles invested in a moving picture theatre and for seven years was its manager, but sold his interests in February, 1919. In 1916 he was the successful candidate of the republican party for the office of county clerk, and was re-elected in 1918. Few men of Carbon County, or for that matter of Montana, have been as effectively active in promoting the well being of their communities as has Mr. Sandles, and during the great war he acted as chairman of the local board on war drives, and made each one of them a success. In addition he transacted all of the governmental business which could be taken care of by the county clerk, and did not spare himself or his own interests to further those of his country. A Presbyterian by inheritance and inclination, Mr. Sandles is active in that denomination, as he is in any body with which he is connected, and his services are appreciated by his fellow members. Bear Tooth Lodge No. 534, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, holds his membership, and he also belongs to the Red Lodge Chamber of Commerce. Since coming to Red Lodge he has made the city his place of residence, and his office is at present in the courthouse.

In 1910 Mr. Sandles was married at Red Lodge to Miss Mabel Chapman, a daughter of Louis and Alma Chapman. Mr. Chapman was one of the pioneers of Oregon. He came to Montana in 1906 and is now one of the leading lumber merchants of the city. Mr. and Mrs. Sandles have no children. Mr. Sandles is proud of the fact that his family is of Scotch stock, and he inherits many of the sturdy and desirable characteristics of those people. His fidelity to the responsibilities of public office, and his ability to discharge them effectively and promptly, make him one of the best men in the county's roster, and his future if he cares to remain in public life is a bright one, much higher honors no doubt lying in store for one who has proven himself so worthy of them.

R. A. Kelly. The selection of Anaconda as headquarters for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company has brought here a large influx of people who have made it their permanent home and expect to receive from the business men a service in every line of trade. This has created a large demand in all branches, and some of the best minds of the state of a commercial bent are occupied in satisfactorily meeting the wants of the population. One of these men is R. A. Kelly, proprietor of the Washoe Coal Company, and a dealer in real estate and insurance.

R. A. Kelly was born at St. Martins, Ohio, December 17, 1883, a son of John Kelly, and a grandson of Thomas Kelly, born in County Cork, Ireland, in 1821, who died at St. Martins, Ohio, in 1895. He founded the family in this locality, and was engaged in farming for many years. John Kelly was born at St. Martins, Ohio, in 1840, and died there on April 7, 1917, having spent his entire life there as a farmer. His farm was the one on which he was born and descended to him from his father, the original owner. He was a democrat and a Roman Catholic, and strong in both his political and religious convictions. During the war between the states he served in the Union army for two years and ten months, as a member of the Seventh Ohio Cavalry, participating in the Battle of Gettysburg and General Sherman's "March to the Sea." His widow, who bore the maiden name of Catherine Huber, survives him and still lives on the old homestead. She was born at Fayetteville, Ohio, in 1850, and bore her husband the following children: T. J., who is in charge of the copper shipped by the Anaconda Copper Mining Company from Anaconda to Texas, with headquarters at Galveston, Texas; Mary, who married C. J. Tobin, claim agent for the American Railway Express Company at Cincinnati, Ohio; John, who is with the United Steel Company, lives at Chicago, Illinois; Henry, who operates the old homestead for his mother, lives at St. Martins, Ohio; Margaret, who married William Dunham, a rancher of Blanchester, Ohio; Catherine, who married John McConn, president of the Fayetteville Bank, lives at Fayetteville, Ohio; R. A., whose name heads this review; and Anna, who is a teacher in the schools of St. Martins, Ohio.

Growing up in a wholesome home atmosphere, R. A. Kelly was taught to be industrious and thrifty by his excellent parents, and was sent to the public schools of his native place. He remained on the farm until eighteen years of age, but then feeling that his tastes would not be satisfied with a rural life, he went to Cincinnati, Ohio, and engaged with the Adams Express Company for a year, and then for the next two years was in that company's Chicago office. The great copper interests began to attract attention to Montana about this time, and Mr. Kelly felt that he was willing to take almost any position which would bring him into contact with the men who were developing such tremendous industries. Coming to Montana, he became a wiper for the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad, rising to be fireman and then locomotive engineer of that same road, and remaining with it until in January, 1917, when he bought the business of the Washoe Coal Company in partnership with W. H. Tuchscherer, who is now in Siberia with the American Expeditionary Forces, so that the conduct of the company is entirely in Mr. Kelly's capable hands. This company conducts one of the leading coal businesses in this region, and the offices are at No. 209 Main Street, Anaconda, while the yards are along the tracks of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad. In addition to his coal interests Mr. Kelly conducts a real estate and insurance business, operating extensively in the former, and representing the leading insurance companies in the latter line. His wide acquaintance gained during the nearly fourteen years he has been at Anaconda has proved useful to him, and those who do business with him know that they will receive a fair and equitable deal and place implicit faith in his judgment.

On May 5, 1914, Mr. Kelly was married at Anaconda to Miss Matilda Tuchscherer, a daughter of A. J. and Matilda (Trilling) Tuchscherer, of Anaconda. Mr. Tuchscherer is now engaged in the ice business, but was the leading brewer of Deerlodge County until his industry was closed by the war prohibition act. Mr. and Mrs. Kelly became the parents of the following children: Margaret, who was born February 21, 1915; Arthur Robert, who died at the age of nine months; and Edna Marie, who was born December 11, 1917.

Like his father and grandfather, Mr. Kelly is a strong democrat, but aside from voting the ticket of his party has not entered public life, although if he cared to do so there is no doubt but that he would poll a heavy vote on account of his personal popularity. In him the Catholic Church has a consistent member. He belongs to Anaconda Council No. 882, Knights of Columbus, being both a third and fourth degree knight; and to the Locomotive Engineers' and Firemen's Association. Socially he finds congenial companionship at the Anaconda Club. Not only does he own his modern residence at No. 621 West Fourth Street, but another house at No. 409 Walnut Street, for he has faith in the future of Anaconda and proves it by investing in city realty as well as handling it. Keenly alert, Mr. Kelly has never let an opportunity for advancement slip by him, provided he could take advantage of it without wronging another, and while he has been rising he has benefited his community in interesting outside capital and inducing those already here to invest their savings in homes of their own. Recognizing the fact that the owner of his home is a much more interested citizen than the man who drifts about as a renter, he feels that his work in the realty line is good patriotism as well as a sound business proposition, and he has other plans for the future looking toward a still further growth of the city. Genial and warmhearted, he makes and retains friends, and he and his wife are very popular in a congenial circle.

THOMAS A. GRIGG, M. D. Several years ago Doctor Grigg, who located at Butte in 1892, earned a place of genuine eminence in the profession of medicine and surgery in Montana. He was one of the earliest physicians and surgeons of Montana entitled to the distinction of specialist. He had been in practice for several years in Pennsylvania before he came to Montana, and he possessed means as well as the thorough training, upon locating at Butte, to confine his practice largely to the lines of his choice, as a specialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, throat and chest.

Doctor Grigg has also acquired extensive business interests in Montana, and in later years has had much to do with the public affairs of his home city. He was born on Prince Edward Island, Canada, February 11, 1861, youngest child of Dr. William and Willann (Daugherty) Grigg. His father was a native of England, was educated in London, and lived on Prince Edward Island from 1826 until his death at the age of eighty-one in 1881. He was a physician of fine talents, practiced his profession many years, but accumulated his fortune chiefly through his extensive interests in the ship building industry. He married for his first wife a Miss Brooks, and of their nine children one is still living, Mary, whose home is at West Devon, Prince Edward Island. She is the widow of Josiah Pawe, who was a hotel proprietor and farmer. Dr. William Grigg by his second wife, who died at the age of fifty-six, had only two sons, John F. W. and Dr. Thomas A. The former is a farmer in Tyne Valley, Prince Edward Island.

His father being a man of wealth and substantial position, Thomas A. Grigg had every opportunity and encouragement to obtain the most complete qualifications for his chosen work. After leaving high school he studied medicine under his father and other physicians, and in 1883 entered the University of Pennsylvania. He was graduated from the Medical School of that university in 1887, with high honors and with recommendations from several members of the faculty, including men of wide renown in medicine and surgery. Doctor Grigg began practice at Mahanoy City, Pennsylvania, in 1887, and remained there four years. At the same time he was doing advanced work in Philadelphia hospitals, including the Will Eye Hospital and the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania. In 1891 he received a special diploma on the eye, ear, nose and throat and lungs from the Philadelphia Polyclinic.

The strain of concentrated study and practice made it necessary for Doctor Grigg to leave his practice in Pennsylvania and for six months he lived on Lake Chelan, Washington, and in October, 1892, located at Butte. During the many years he has practiced in Butte Doctor Grigg has become known to his professional brethren for his original methods, his advanced thought, and his faithful study and devotion to his profession, particularly along the lines of his specialties. He is a member of the American Medical Association, the Rocky Mountain Interstate Medical Association, the various local societies, the State Medical Society of Pennsylvania, and has been a frequent contributor of professional articles to the Medical Sentinel, published in Portland, Oregon, and other medical publications. He has been honored with the office of president of both the Silver Bow County Medical Society and the State Medical Society. He is examining physician for the Butte Young Men's Christian Association, and is examining physician for Butte Camp No. 153, Woodmen of the World, which he served as first consul commander. He is a member of the Fraternal Aid Union, University Club, Damon Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias at Butte, and has his Masonic affiliations in Mahanoy City Lodge No. 357, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, in Pennsylvania.

Doctor Grigg is secretary and treasurer of the Beaverhead Alberta Oil and Gas Company, operating south of Dillon in Montana. In past years he has acquired extensive mining properties and other real estate in Butte and in the State of Washington. In 1900 he was appointed a member of the Board of United States Examining Surgeons for the Pension Department in Silver Bow County.

Doctor Grigg is a republican, but in the earlier years of his professional work always declined public honors. In 1910 he was elected a member of the board of aldermen to represent the Sixth Ward, and served two terms.

August 20, 1888, Doctor Grigg married Miss Joanna S. Miller. She was born in the same town as Doctor Grigg. Her father, John Miller, was a prominent shipbuilder. Mrs. Grigg is a past president and trustee of the Woman's Club of Butte, and is a member of the Academy of Fine Arts of Chicago. She has been prominent in Butte's social life for many years and as a result of long study is an authority on many matters of art, particularly ceramics, oils and water colors. Doctor Grigg and family reside at 232 West Porphyry Street. He is the father of three children. Elmer Roy, a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, is a young physician and surgeon and now occupies the post of city physician of Butte. Leon Alison, the second child, is a graduate of the Dental School of the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia, and is now well established in his profession at Spokane, Washington. Joanna Ethel, the only daughter, is a graduate of the Butte High School, and is the wife of J. W. McCready, who operates a motor truck service in Butte.

Elmer Roy Grigg, M. D., present city physician of Butte, is a son of Dr. T. A. Grigg, whose career has been set forth above.

The son was born during his father's residence at Mahanoy City, Pennsylvania, November 22, 1890. He received his early education in the schools of Butte, graduating from high school in 1910, and soon afterward entered Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, where he was graduated with the class of 1914. While in college he was a member of the Alpha Kappa fraternity and served as president of the local chapter in 1914. He was also a member of the Hiram R. Loux Urological Society and the Keen Surgical Society at Jefferson Medical College. Returning to Butte after his graduation, he began practice and in the fall of the same year opened an office at Anaconda, where he remained two years. Since then he has been one of the hard working general physicians and surgeons at Butte. His offices are in the Rialto Building. In May, 1918, he was appointed physician to the Butte Tuberculosis Clinic, and since May, 1919, has also been health officer of the city. He maintains offices in the city hall.

Doctor Grigg is a republican, a member of the Presbyterian Church, Silver Bow County Medical Society, and the American Medical Association. He is a director in the Beaverhead Alberta Oil and Gas Company.

Doctor Grigg resides at 319 South Jackson Street. At Helena January 10, 1916, he married Miss Lavina Victoria Bartzen, daughter of Clem and Mary (Youngers) Bartzen. Her parents live at Butte, her father being master mechanic at the Timber Butte Milling Company. Mrs. Grigg is a graduate of the Butte High School with the class of 1911.

B. G. Shorey. The number, extent and importance of the industries, enterprises and institutions owned or controlled by B. G. Shorey both in the past and present are and have been such as to make him one of the leading business citizens and financiers of the City of Billings. His career has been intensely typical of self-made manhood, and its early history is filled with the romance of the plains, under whose harsh but efficient molding the crude, raw youth was developed into a self-reliant, resourceful and capable man. Rancher, banker, man of large business affairs and substantial citizen, Mr. Shorey has at all times exemplified the highest type of true western manhood and the spirit of enterprise.

B. G. Shorey was born at Belfast, Maine, September 7, 1862, a son of Wellington and Louisa (Durham) Shorey. The family, of English-Irish descent, was founded in Maine in colonial days, and in that state, in 1831, Wellington Shorey was born. He was a farmer by vocation and a republican in his political adherence, and never left the state of his birth, dying at Belfast, in 1903. Mr. Shorey married Louisa Durham, who was born in Maine in 1837, and died at Belfast in 1907, and they became the parents of seven children: John D., a contractor and builder of White Sulphur Springs, Montana; J. W., a farmer and stockman of Richland County, Montana; Jennie, the widow of John McGray, a farmer of Knox, Maine, where she resides; Emma, who died unmarried at Belfast in 1909; Charles, a stockman and farmer of Waldo, Maine; Raymond O., a farmer and stockman of Roberts, Montana; and B. G.

The public schools of Belfast furnished B. G. Shorey with his educational training, and until he was eighteen years of age he worked on his father's farm. At that time he decided to strike out for himself, to see something of the world and to make his own opportunities, and accordingly left the parental roof. On March 17, 1882, he arrived over the narrow-gauge railroad at White Sulphur Springs, Montana, the last part of the journey, from Ogden, being made by stage, via Butte and Diamond Gulch. From March to June, 1882, he was employed by Cook & Hussey, following which he went into the Judith Basin and took up a ranch at Ross' Fork. This he sold one year later and went to work for Severance & Son, sheepmen at Judith Gap, a position which he retained one year. Next Mr. Shorey entered the service of Mrs. Corson, who was at that time known as the "Sheep Queen of Montana," and whose ranch was at Hopley's Hole, near the present site of Hollowtown. He remained with Mrs. Corson until the spring of 1886, when he went down into Lake Basin and located a ranch of his own, upon which he spent the next twenty-one years. It was on this property that Mr. Shorey's real abilities were demonstrated, for from a small beginning he developed one of the finest properties in the state, a ranch of 32,000 acres on which it was his custom to run 20,000 sheep and 800 head of cattle. When he sold this property in 1907 he came to Billings, where he has since occupied his handsome $25,000 home at North Thirty-second Street and First Avenue, a residence erected by him in 1903 and still as good a home as there is to be found at Billings. Mr. Shorey is the owner of four large ranches; one at Roberts, Montana, a tract of 1,073 acres; a summer range in the mountains for his cattle, comprising 320 acres; a ranch of 1,963 acres at Custer, on the Big Horn; and one at Sidney, of 1,128 acres. In addition to raising cattle Mr. Shorey is extensively engaged in growing grain. He is the owner of two other dwellings at Billings; the concrete warehouse at Fifth Avenue and Twenty-seventh Street, and the coal docks on Twenty-eighth Street, and also has a large interest in the Babcock Theatre Building, one of the leading business blocks of Billings. In 1910 Mr. Shorey was made president of the Billings State Bank, a position which he held until 1913, when he resigned, and his other connections are numerous and important, including a wide range of industries and enterprises. Ever interested in the welfare of his adopted city, he is a co-operant factor in many measures for the public good, in which his name is an indication of such a movement's worth. In his political belief Mr. Shorey upholds the principles of the republican party and exercises his right of franchise accordingly. He is a member of the Billings Midland Club and Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On August 11, 1889, Mr. Shorey was married at Billings to Miss Helen Simmons, daughter of A. J. and Addie (Ray) Simmons, the latter of whom still survives as a resident of Waldo, Maine. Mr. Simmons who was for many years a farmer and blacksmith at Waldo, and a highly esteemed citizen of that place, is now deceased. He and his wife were the parents of ten daughters and one son, all of whom were reared to maturity. Mr. and Mrs. Shorey have one daughter: Adelaide, who is the wife of James Edgar. Mr. Edgar, who has recently been mustered out of the United States service, is superintending operations on Mr. Shorey's big ranch at Sidney.

GEORGE BENNETT LADD. Prominent among the business men of the younger generation at Billings is found George Bennett Ladd, manager of the grain elevator of Ladd & Cousins. Mr. Ladd is distinctively a member of the progressive and energetic element to which the city owes so much for its present prestige in commercial circles and to which it confidently looks for its future continued advancement. During his comparatively short career he has had the opportunity of gaining experience both as a grower of grain and as a dealer therein, and in his present capacity is in a position to appreciate and recognize the conditions applying to the cases of both producer and handler.

George B. Ladd was born at Inwood, Iowa, August 20, 1884, a son of George P. and Mary Ellen (Skewis) Ladd, and a member of a family which, originating in England, was founded in Massachusetts in colonial times. George P. Ladd was born in Massachusetts in 1851, but as a youth was taken to Wisconsin, where he was educated and reared, and where for some years he was a resident of the Town of Shellsburg. In 1881 he removed to Lyon County, Iowa, where he engaged in farming and rose to a high place in the esteem of his fellow-citizens, who elevated him to the office of county treasurer, a trust which he was holding at the time of his death, which occurred at Rock Rapids, Iowa, April 3, 1914. He was a stanch democrat in his political allegiance, and an active member and generous supporter of the Congregational Church, in which he served as deacon and a member of the Board of Directors. He married Mary Ellen Skewis, who was born in 1852, at Shellsburg, Wisconsin, and survives her husband as a resident of Rock Rapids, Iowa, and they became the parents of seven children: Clarence, who is engaged in the hardware business at Inwood, Iowa; Carrie, who is the wife of C. L. Jones, a practicing attorney at Parker, South Dakota; William Parkhurst, a prominent grain broker of Billings and member of the firm of Ladd & Cousins; Allie W., who is unmarried and makes her home with her mother; George Bennett (Ben), of this notice; Jennie, who is the wife of R. S. Towne, an agriculturist of the locality of Sisters, Oregon; and Earl, who is an automobile agent and the proprietor of a garage at Rock Rapids, Iowa.

George Bennett Ladd was educated in the public schools of Inwood, Iowa, and after his graduation from high school took a commercial course in the Cedar Rapids Business College. Leaving that preparatory institution in 1905, he was variously employed at Inwood for two years and then went to Colorado, where he homesteaded 160 acres four miles northwest of Merino in Logan County, a tract of land which he still owns. Mr. Ladd has always been a firm believer in the value of real estate, particularly farming and ranch property, and has invested a share of his earnings therein, at the present time being the half-owner of 309 acres of good land on Blue Creek, Yellowstone County, Montana, the owner of the other half being his brother William P. Ladd. George B. Ladd resided on his Colorado homestead for eight years, but in 1915 turned his attention to the grain business, in which he had recognized great possibilities. For one year he was located at Huntley, Montana, from whence he went to Roberts, this state, and continued in the same line until September 3, 1918, at that time coming to Billings to take charge as manager of the Farmers Elevator, which is leased by Ladd & Cousins. He has continued to satisfactorily manage this business to the present time, and has displayed marked business capacity and a thorough knowledge of the grain business in all its ramifications. The elevator, a modern structure, with a large capacity, is situated at No. 3325 First Avenue, South.

Mr. Ladd was married in 1910, at Merino, Colorado, to Miss Ida H. Watkins, daughter of James and Mollie (Cluff) Watkins, of Osceola, Nebraska, well known and highly esteemed farming people of that locality. To this union there have come two children: Lloyd, born June 17, 1911, and Lowell, born September 17, 1912. Mr. and Mrs. Ladd reside at their pleasant home at No. 3939 Second Avenue, South. Mr. Ladd is a democrat and has a number of civic and social connections. During the comparatively short period that he has resided at Billings he has given his earnest support to all movements which have promised advancement of the general welfare.

WALTER W. LIVINGSTON came to Montana as one of the pioneer agents for the Northern Pacific Railway. After a few years he left railroading to establish the pioneer electric light company at Bozeman, and for a quarter of a century or more had a responsible place in connection with the public utility service at Bozeman. He was manager of the Montana Power Company of Bozeman and was also secretary of the Pioneer Building & Loan Association.

Mr. Livingston was born at Henderson, Kentucky, December 17, 1855, and died at Bozeman, Montana, November 21, 1919. His paternal ancestors came from Scotland and settled in New York. The grandfather, John Livingston, was born in York County, Pennsylvania, and went at a very early day to Wayne County, Ohio, where he cleared up a tract of land from the woods, spent the rest of his life as a farmer and reared a family of eleven children. His wife was a Miss Dinsmore, a native of York County, Pennsylvania. William Samuel Livingston, father of Walter W., was born in Wayne County, Ohio, in 1820. He was reared in his native state, but when a young man went to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he married. He studied for the ministry and for many years was one of the capable preachers in the Presbyterian Church. He preached at Chillicothe, Zanesville, Ashland, Cleveland and other places in Ohio. His last years were spent at Sewickley, near Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he died in 1884. Politically he was a republican. Rev. Mr. Livingston married Julia H. Brooks, who was born at Williamsport, Pennsylvania, in 1822. She died while visiting at Bozeman in November, 1889. Walter W. was the oldest of their children. J. B. was a railroad official and died in New Jersey. John W. is an accountant at Butte, Montana, and Frank G. is in a similar business at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. Mildred R., the youngest, is the wife of John P. Martin, who is in the postoffice at Bozeman.

Walter W. Livingston attended public school in Ohio, and is indebted for much of his early education to his scholarly father, who directed his studies at home. He also attended an academy at Pittsburg. Leaving school at the age of seventeen he began his railroad career with the Pennsylvania Company at Pittsburg. He was messenger boy for a time under Mr. William Thaw, father of William Thaw, Jr. In time he became an operator and remained in that capacity with the railroad until 1875. From 1875 to 1881 he was connected with one of the pioneer lines in the central west, the Kansas Pacific, as operator and station agent. He spent part of the year 1881 with the Denver & Rio Grande in Colorado, and in the latter part of the same year returned to Pittsburg and resumed his service with the Pennsylvania Company until 1883.

Mr. Livingston came to Montana in September, 1883. He was accountant for a few months in the railroad office at Glendive, in December was appointed as ticket agent and accountant at Livingston, in the spring of 1884 was assigned to duty at Forsyth, and in October of that year was made station agent at Bozeman. Mr. Livingston in 1886 became associated with George Wakefield and Charles S. Hartman in organizing the Bozeman Electric Light Company. This company built and equipped the first electric plant in Bozeman, and Mr. Livingston was one of the men responsible for the first lighting of streets and homes with electric power. He continued as manager of the company until 1887, but from that year until 1892 followed other lines of employment, chiefly in county offices and the Bozeman postoffice. In 1892 he rejoined the Bozeman Electric Company as manager and accountant and continued at this post of duty for over a quarter of a century. Some years ago the Bozeman Electric Company was taken over by the Montana Power Company, which has its headquarters at Butte.

The Pioneer Building and Loan Association is another important institution at Bozeman owing its existence largely to Mr. Livingston, who organized it in 1889. He became its secretary in 1891 and afterward held that office continuously. It is the only building and loan association in Bozeman, and has enjoyed a substantial growth through the years and has been the means of supplying Bozeman with approximately 500 homes. The association has its offices in the Electric Building, at 60 East Main Street.

Mr. Livingston was a republican, but only once was a candidate for office, when in 1889 he ran for clerk of court. He always supported his party and its candidates. He served as vestryman of the Episcopal Church and was a charter member of Bozeman Lodge No. 463, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, was a past exalted ruler, for five years was trustee of the lodge and held an honorary life membership in the same. He was also a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Livingston owned his home at 329 South Black Avenue and owned an adjoining dwelling. October 7, 1884, at St. Paul, Minnesota, he married Miss B. B. Cooper, daughter of John and Nancy Cooper, both deceased. Her father was at one time a contractor and builder at Sewickley, Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Livingston had two children: Walter T., who is a graduate of the Montana State College at Bozeman with the class of 1910, and is now a civil engineer with the Milwaukee Railway, living at Miles City, Montana, and Mildred B., also a graduate of Montana State College.

W. K. Dwyer, for fifteen years connected with the city schools of Anaconda, most of the time as superintendent, is one of the most prominent educators in Montana. He is a man of thorough culture and scholarship and though trained in the law he has done little active practice. Education is the field to which he was naturally inclined, his father having been a distinguished Irish educator.

Mr. Dwyer was born in County Cork, Ireland, July 8, 1870. His father, William Dwyer, was born at Castletown-Bere, County Cork, in 1833, was educated in Marlboro College at Dublin, and for half century was principal of the schools at Castletown-Bere. Several noted men of Montana, including Judge Lynch and John Harrington, both of Butte, were among his pupils. He was a liberal in politics and a member of the Catholic Church. He died at Castletown-Bere in October, 1917. His wife was Mary Hooley, who was born at Castletown-Bere in 1844 and was educated at Swansea, Wales. She died in her native town in Ireland in 1908. Of their children, Mary, the oldest, died at Bandon, Ireland, wife of Timothy Lynch, who is a revenue officer in the City of Cork and is an uncle of Judge Lynch of Butte, above noted. John M. Dwyer, who died at Castletown-Bere, Ireland, at the age of forty-four, was a physician and surgeon and at one time was chief physician for the British Government in British Central Africa. Patrick was a mechanical engineer, came to the United States in 1880, spent several years in Texas and New York State, and then returned to Ireland and died at Castletown-Bere at the age of forty. David T. is pastor of St. Patrick's Catholic Church at Denver, Colorado. W. K. Dwyer is the fifth in the family, and the youngest is Vincent, in the shoe business at Cambridge, Massachusetts.

W. K. Dwyer was educated in the national schools at Castletown-Bere, attended St. Michael's College in County Kerry, graduating in 1888, and in 1891 graduated from St. Patrick's College in Tipperary. The year he completed his work in the latter institution he came to the United States, and for five years or more was a student in some of the best institutions of learning in this country. In 1896 he graduated A. B. and A. M. from St. Mary's University at Baltimore. After that he lived for several years in Chicago, where he pursued postgraduate work in constitutional law, literature, history and education in the University of Chicago, and for one year attended the night law school of Lake Forest University. While attending law school he put in a regular day of work with the Western Electric Company at Chicago.

Mr. Dwyer came to Montana in 1902. The first year he studied law in the office of Peter Breen, then county attorney at Butte. For one year he was instructor in the Butte High School and in 1904 came to Anaconda as principal of the Anaconda High School. Mr. Dwyer was elected superintendent of the city schools of Anaconda in 1905, and his long service in that position coupled with his many versatile gifts of mind make him one of the best known school men of Montana. At Anaconda he has under his supervision seven schools, a staff of sixty-five teachers, with a scholarship enrollment of 1,800. His offices are in the high school building.

Mr. Dwyer for the past four years has been state director for Montana of the National Education Association. He has served eight years as a member of the State Text Book Commission, was chairman for 1919 of the State Schoolmasters Club, and since 1918 has been Montana State Director of the National Education Association. Mr. Dwyer is independent in politics, is affiliated with Anaconda Council No. 882, Knights of Columbus, with the Anaconda Club and Rotary Club, and has been closely associated with a number of civic movements in his home city. He owns a modern home at 505 Hickory Street.

W. D. F. Maloney

In June, 1908, at Anaconda, Mr. Dwyer married Miss Alice Malvey, a daughter of P. J. and Mary (Sullivan) Malvey, who reside at Anaconda. Her father is in the copper refining department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. Mr. and Mrs. Dwyer have two children: William, born April 3, 1909; and Horace, born May 6, 1911.

CHARLES ARTHUR LEWIS. The handling of realty creates a position of dignity in any live and growing community, and some of the oldest and most reliable firms of Billings and other large Montana cities are engaged in this line of endeavor. As Billings has grown, stretching out its arms to embrace outlying communities, new operators have been attracted, who have contributed materially to the city's growth and development. In this class is found Charles Arthur Lewis, who commenced his career at Billings in the realty field in 1917, and who has since not only been successful in this direction, but also in farming, ranching and the dairy business.

Mr. Lewis was born in Gage County, Nebraska, March 25, 1880, a son of Richard and Anna (George) Lewis. The family originated in Wales, its members being lineal descendants of Lord Wales, a member of the peerage, and in that country the grandfather of Charles A. Lewis, Edward Lewis, passed his life as the owner of a large estate. Richard Lewis was born in 1845 in Wales, and was sixteen years of age when he left his native land and immigrated to America, where he spent four years in a lumber camp in the province of Ontario, Canada. Following this he came to the United States and for two years was engaged in farming near Janesville, Wisconsin, subsequently becoming a pioneer farmer and stockman on the frontier of Nebraska, owning a farm in Gage County. There he passed the remainder of his career, competing successfully with discouraging conditions, and eventually won prosperity and the ownership of a valuable property, where his death occurred in 1899. Mr. Lewis was a republican and one of the prominent and influential men of his party. After serving fifteen years as a member of the Board of County Supervisors he was sent to the State Senate, where he gave his constituents, his county and his state excellent service and established a reputation for conscientious discharge of duty. He was a member of the United Brethren Church and an active supporter of its movements, dying firm in its faith. Mr. Lewis married Anna George, who was born in Wales in 1854, was four years of age when brought to the United States, and was reared at Janesville, Wisconsin. She survives her husband and resides at Beatrice, Nebraska. There were four children in the family: Elizabeth I., the wife of Perle E. Rhea, of Billings; Charles Arthur; Lester T., who has resided at Billings since 1919; and Nettie F., the wife of Albert King, of Billings, at present with the American Expeditionary Forces, overseas.

Charles Arthur Lewis received a public school education at Beatrice, Nebraska, and remained on his father's farm until he reached the age of twenty years. At that time he entered upon an independent career as an agriculturist in Gage County, and during the next nineteen years contented himself with the tilling of the soil of Gage County and the reaping of his crops. For some time, however, he had been cognizant of the opportunities offered the careful, shrewd and capable operator in realty, particularly in Montana, and in 1917 Mr. Lewis came to Billings and embarked upon a venture of his own, in which he has since been definitely successful. He maintains offices at No. 1 Selvidge-Babcock Building and is doing a thriving business in handling city properties and ranches, but does not confine himself to this one line, as his farming interests are also large, he being the owner of a valuable ten-acre tract on Orchard Avenue, as well as of an interest in a ranch on Yellowstone Avenue, thirty-eight miles north of Billings. Likewise, he is the owner of the City View Dairy, No. 326 Custer Avenue, one of the largest enterprises of its kind in the city, having his cattle on the ranch and retailing and wholesaling milk, cream and dairy products at Billings and in the surrounding territory. At the present time he has a splendid herd of twenty pure-bred Holstein cattle. Mr. Lewis is the owner of a modern residence at No. 512 Clark Avenue. He is a republican, but takes only a good citizen's interest in public and political affairs.

Mr. Lewis was married July 11, 1900, to Miss Lydia Fisher, of Beatrice, Nebraska, daughter of Fred and Mary (Boward) Fisher, the latter of whom resides in Gage County, Nebraska, where Mr. Fisher, formerly an extensive farmer and stock raiser, died. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis have four children: Bernice, born December 18, 1901, residing with her parents; Beryl, born March 9, 1903, a freshman in the Billings High School; Fordyce, born January 8, 1906, attending the graded school; and Harlin, born June 10, 1909, also a graded school student.

WILLIAM H. MALONEY, who was elected mayor of Butte in 1916, has had a brilliant career as a lawyer in Silver Bow County, and his record completely justifies the expectations of his friends and admirers in the early stages of his career.

Mr. Maloney was born March 15, 1878, at Cambridge, Massachusetts, near the classic campus of Harvard University. The parents were Walter J. and Ellen (Mullen) Maloney, the former a native of Maine and the latter of New Hampshire. William H. Maloney spent his youth at the home of his parents in Michigan, attended local schools, and received his higher education at Joliet College in Quebec Province. His career is an instance of how a youthful enthusiasm and purpose may be translated into mature achievement. As a boy he dreamed of becoming a lawyer, and while he never had the means to attend a college of law he never deviated from his purposes. His first lessons in law were received from a well known attorney at Norway, Michigan.

Mr. Maloney has been a resident of Butte since 1898. He earned a living working in the mines and at night and in every spare hour was absorbed in his law books. Later he studied under Judge Donlan and Matthew Comming, and after a successful test at the bar examinations was admitted in 1905. During the past fifteen years Mr. Maloney has earned by his intellectual gifts and concentrated purpose a high rank in the Butte bar. He has engaged in general practice and has accepted and performed the duties imposed by his profession without fear or favor.

Mr. Maloney was appointed assistant county attorney in January, 1909, and his work in that office added much to his reputation. Politically he is an independent democrat, but his election as mayor of Butte was due to his unflinching stand for honesty and efficiency in municipal government. Mr. Maloney is a Catholic, affiliated with the Fraternal Order of Eagles, being a past president of that order, also with the Catholic Order of Foresters, Ancient Order of Hibernians and the Loyal Order of Moose. June 26, 1906, he married Miss Marine Helen Putnam.

CHARLES N. KIRBY. Among the ranchers of the Billings community of Montana who have become the owners of large landed possessions through the medium of their own efforts, one to whom special mention is due as an example of self-made manhood is Charles N. Kirby, who with his brother George B. Kirby carries on extensive operations in ranching and horse and cattle raising. Mr. Kirby is a native of Young County, Texas, and was born March 4, 1880, his parents being John M. and Rachela (Salls) Kirby.

The Kirby family is of Scotch-Irish descent and several of its early members settled in Pennsylvania, in which state John M. Kirby was born in 1835. He was reared in the Keystone State and in Illinois, and in the latter was married and passed several years as a farmer and stockman, but eventually removed to Young County, Texas, in 1875. That was his home until 1887, when he went to Dayton, Wyoming, but in the summer of 1888 returned to Texas and then went to Florida in 1890, and for three years was interested in the conduct of an orange grove. He returned to Texas in 1893 and resided for two years, and in 1895 practically retired from active pursuits and came to Montana with his son George B., but subsequently took up his abode at Paola, Kansas, where his death occurred in 1900. He was a stalwart democrat, an interested and active member of the Masonic and Odd Fellow fraternities, and a faithful member of the Baptist Church. He married Rachela Salls, who was born in Illinois and died in Young County, Texas, in the spring of 1887, and their children were as follows: James A., a retired farmer of Young County, Texas; George B., associated with his brother Charles N. in ranching and stockraising; Ella, the wife of C. G. Carroll, a real estate broker, of Sheridan, Wyoming; Orpha, deceased, who was the wife of Wesley Gregg, a Texas farmer; Ira J., an ex-farmer and deputy sheriff of Sheridan, Wyoming; W. B., a merchant of Wellington, Texas, and formerly postmaster there; Emma, the wife of J. A. Church, engaged in the storage and warehouse business at Sheridan, Wyoming, of which city he was formerly mayor; Dora, the wife of C. B. Austin, a resident of Sheridan, Wyoming; and Charles N., of this review.

Charles N. Kirby was educated in the rural schools of Texas and Montana, and as a lad accompanied his father on his trip to Florida. In 1895 he came to Montana and located in Custer County, at the head of the Rosebud, where he engaged in the stock business. In 1902 he came to Billings, where he had been preceded by his brother George B. two years before, and since that time they have been engaged in extensive operations as handlers of livestock. Their ranch is situated on the Yellowstone River, four miles northeast of Huntley, where they have 600 acres of irrigated land, and raise hay and grain, although their home is at No. 504 North Broadway, Billings. Mr. Kirby is an independent democrat in politics, and an ex-member of the Highlanders. He is unmarried.

George B. Kirby first came to Montana in 1887 and settled at the head of the Rosebud, where he purchased a relinquishment of 160 acres, to which from time to time there have been added purchases of land until the ranch now comprises 600 acres, as above noted. The brothers have bought and sold ranches continuously, and George B. is now the manager of the ranch, where he has full charge of the operations, and is also a partner in some of the brands of cattle. The brothers removed from the Rosebud with their cattle to the Missouri River in 1901, locating in Dawson County, near the mouth of the Musselshell, but after six years returned to the Yellowstone, where they are located today. George B. Kirby kept the ranch here, but in the spring of 1916 the brothers removed their cattle to the Crow Reservation, where they keep their cattle, and also engage extensively in the raising of stock horses. George B. Kirby is a democrat in his political faith.

The first marriage of George B. Kirby occurred when he was united with Ada Kelley, a native of Texas, who died at Billings in 1910, leaving two children: Neva, unmarried, who is employed in the Montana National Bank at Billings; and Lillian, the wife of J. C. Whitham, of Miles City, Montana, a superintendent in the United States Forestry Service. In 1919 Mr. Kirby was again married.

J. P. STAGG is one of the men to whose energy and foresight is due a great deal of the growth in commercial importance of the business houses of Anaconda. By setting the example of carrying a stock as complete as could be found anywhere, and placing it before the public at reasonable prices under a very satisfactory service, he has taught the citizens of the city that it is not necessary to go elsewhere to trade, and awakened in them a pride in their commercial and industrial enterprises and a desire to patronize them to the exclusion of outside competition. Mr. Stagg has confined his efforts to building up a fine trade in hardware and house furnishings, and his customers are gathered from the city, county and outlying districts.

The birth of J. P. Stagg took place in Jennings County, Indiana, October 28, 1862. His grandfather, Thomas Stagg, born in New York State, founded the family in Indiana, where for some years he was a prosperous farmer of Jennings County. His death occurred prior to the birth of Thomas Stagg. Thomas Stagg was a son of Michael Stagg, a captain of a company of soldiers during the American Revolution, for even then the Staggs had long been residents of the colonies, having come here from Holland.

One of the sons of Thomas Stagg was Thomas Stagg, father of J. P. Stagg, and his birth occurred in Jennings County, Indiana, in 1837, and there he died in 1901. His entire life was spent in that community, and his efforts directed in the lines of agricultural production. A man of earnest purpose, he found expression for his political views in the principles of the republican party, which he ardently supported, and his religious faith was embodied in the tenets of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he was a conscientious member. The Sunday School connected with the church received a vigorous support from him and for years he acted as its superintendent. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Martha Snell, was born in Jennings County, Indiana, in 1839, and died in Ripley County, Indiana, in 1917, surviving him for many years. Their children were as follows: Mary, who lives on the farm of her late husband, David Tabolt, in Ripley County, Indiana; J. P., whose name heads this review; and Delia, who married Ben Brandeweide, a farmer of Jennings County, Indiana.

J. P. Stagg attended the rural schools of Jennings County, and was reared on his father's farm, learning from that excellent man habits of industry and thrift, and the principles of uprightness and honorable living. He remained at home until he attained his majority, during the last three years being employed during the winter months in teaching school in his home county. Going to Vinton, Iowa, he spent a winter in school teaching, and then in the spring of 1884 came to the Deerlodge Valley near Anaconda, where for four years he put to practical use the lessons in farming he had learned during his minority. Feeling that he was better fitted for commercial life, Mr. Stagg then came to Anaconda and for five years was in the employ of the Montana Lumber and Produce Company, in the meanwhile keeping his eyes open and watching for a favorable opportunity. This he found when he realized the lack of proper facilities for giving the people of the city and vicinity a choice in hardware and house furnishings, and so he began in a small way to carry out his ideas in this respect. That he was right in thinking the demand existed is proven by the fact that his business has expanded to large proportions, and his house is the leading one of its kind in this part of the state. Mr. Stagg owns the large store building at No. 319 East Park Avenue which he occupies, with a floor space of 50 by 140 feet facing East Park Avenue, and 75 by 140 feet facing East Third Street. He has also floor space to the extent of 100 by 140 feet in the second story, and a warehouse 150 by 110 feet, two stories in height, along the tracks of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad. He owns a modern residence at the corner of Hickory and Sixth streets, formerly owned by Marcus Daly, which is one of the best and most comfortable homes in the citv.

Mr. Stagg is a republican. He belongs to Acacia Lodge No. 33, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Anaconda Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Montana Commandery, Knights Templar; Bagdad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Butte, Montana; Colfax Lodge, No. 20, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and Anaconda Lodge No. 239, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Socially he belongs to the Rotary Club, of which he is treasurer, and to the Anaconda Club, the Anaconda Country Club and to the Silver Bow Club of Butte.

In 1892 Mr. Stagg was married at Anaconda to Miss Mary E. MacPherson, born at Cornwall, Ontario, Canada, in 1865, died January 19, 1919, at Anaconda. Mr. and Mrs. Stagg had two children, namely: Ira J., who was graduated in 1919 from the University of Southern California at Los Angeles, California, with the degrees of Bachelor of Law and Bachelor of Art, is now at home; and John A., who is now attending the University of Southern California.

GEORGE HENRY DANIEL. The chief train dispatcher of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad at Anaconda, George Henry Daniel, is one of the alert, experienced railroad men this organization has secured for the places of responsibility of its system, and he fully justifies the advancement he has secured in his handling of his everyday problems. He was born at Fort Atkinson, Wisconsin, February 17, 1872, a son of Henry Daniel, who was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, in 1840, died at Carroll, Iowa, in 1882. In 1859 he came to the United States, and spent some time in West Virginia, where he was in the employ of a brewing company, leaving that state for Wisconsin, and establishing himself in a brewing business at Fort Atkinson. This he operated until 1873, when he went to Jefferson in the same state, and founded a brewery that was in operation until closed under the governmental war prohibition act in 1919. Leaving Jefferson in 1876, Mr. Daniel went to Tama City, Iowa, and for two years was engaged in brewing, and then finally located at Carroll, Iowa, where he built and conducted a brewery until his death. He was a democrat and a Catholic, and lived up to his political and religious faith in a consistent manner. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Margaret Lang, was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, January 2, 1837. She survives him and lives at Carroll, Iowa. Their children were as follows: Andrew, who died in infancy; Marie, who also died in infancy; Emanuel W., who is a farmer residing at Carroll, Iowa; George Henry, who was the fourth in order of birth; Regina, who married John H. Lux, a farmer of Carroll, Iowa; and Joseph A., who is an operator for the Western Union Telegraph Company, lives at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

George Henry Daniel's attendance at the public schools of Carroll was terminated when he was ten years of age by his father's death, and he began working as a newsboy on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad and between runs was an apprentice to the jeweler's trade, continuing in this way for three years. He then entered a clothing store at Carroll and spent eight months in its employ, but finding that he preferred railroad work he returned to the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, and beginning as engine wiper rose steadily until he was made fireman and later locomotive engineer. Very ambitious, he utilized his spare moments in learning telegraphy, and so was able to secure a position as telegraph operator with the road, holding positions as such in Iowa and Nebraska until 1891. In that year he took a position as telegrapher, agent and train dispatcher with the Northern Pacific Railroad, and was sent to various stations in Minnesota, remaining with it until September 1, 1898. He then formed connections with his present road, and coming to Anaconda entered the superintendent's office as a clerk, from which position he has risen to his present position through those of acting chief clerk and dispatcher, reaching it in 1903. His offices are in the general office building of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad on West Commercial Avenue, Anaconda. Mr. Daniel is a member of the Roman Catholic Church. He belongs to Anaconda Council No. 882, Knights of Columbus, of which he is a fourth degree knight; to Staples Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, of Staples, Minnesota; and to the Train Dispatchers Association. The modern residence at No. 520 Elm Street, Anaconda, occupied by the Daniels is owned by Mr. Daniel, and he also owns a ranch in Lake County, Oregon.

On January 23, 1898, Mr. Daniel was married at Carroll, Iowa, to Miss Mary Schiltz, a daughter of Peter and Margaret (Hess) Schiltz, the former of whom was a contractor and builder of Carroll, where he died in 1915. The latter survives her husband and continues to reside at Carroll. Mr. and Mrs. Daniel have the following children: George H., Jr., who was born March 28, 1901, is studying electrical engineering; Margaret, who was born in October, 1904, is attending the parochial school; and Marie, who was born on June 21, 1906, is also attending the parochial school.

Few boys of today could start out at the tender age of ten years and become self-supporting, and without any outside assistance rise steadily to positions of importance, and yet this is just what Mr. Daniel has done and takes no special credit in what he has accomplished. Step by step he advanced, always giving to each duty a conscientious attention, but never neglecting any chance to improve himself or increase his store of practical knowledge, and he is today one of the best examples of self-made men to be found in this part of Montana.

JOHN JOSEPH KOPP is proprietor of the largest wholesale meat business in Gallatin County. He is a native Montanan, has spent all his life in the Northwest, and some years ago he took over a business which had been built up by his father and uncle, and has shown a rare degree of enterprise and ability in making it what it is today.

He was born at Bozeman July 16, 1881. His father was John Kopp and his grandfather Joseph Kopp, both natives of Switzerland. Joseph Kopp spent his active career in Switzerland as a farmer and in 1879 came to Bozeman, Montana, and lived retired until his death in that city at the age of ninety years. John Kopp, who is now living in Portland, Oregon, was born in Switzerland in 1853. He arrived at Bozeman in 1877, was one of the pioneers of the city, and for a time was employed by old Dan Maxey, the pioneer butcher of Gallatin County. In 1879 he and his brother Joseph became partners in a business of their own, which they first established in a small log building on Main Street. After a few years John Kopp left Bozeman and went to Seattle, Washington, where he was a brewer and subsequently continued the same business at Astoria, Oregon, for eighteen years. In 1903 he returned to Bozeman and took over his father's meat business and was a factor in the upbuilding of the establishment, now the leading institution of its kind in Southern Montana. After a few years John Kopp retired from his Bozeman business, and has since lived at Portland. He is a democrat. For twelve years he was a police commissioner at Astoria and also a member of the City Council. He and his family are members of the Catholic Church. John Kopp married Anna Boentgen, who was born in Germany in 1855. A brief record of their children is as follows: Julia, wife of C. T. Crosby, a candy manufacturer at Portland, Oregon; John Joseph; Elizabeth, wife of William Haley, now a rancher, but until June 1, 1919, associated in the meat business of Kopp Company at Bozeman; Anna, wife of Charles V. Brown, owner of a large shoe business at Astoria, Oregon; Lena, wife of Charles A. Alward, a druggist at Seaside, Oregon, formerly a resident of Bozeman, where his father was a pioneer in the drug business; Hattie, living with her parents, widow of Paul C. Boord, who was in the grocery business in Indiana and died at Portland, Oregon.

John Joseph Kopp received his early education in the grammar and high schools of Astoria, Oregon, and graduated from a business college at Portland in 1899. He also attended the Portland Academy one year. He worked in the office of his father at Astoria and in 1903 came to Bozeman and from the first took an active part in the meat business. He took over the interests of his uncle, and in fifteen years has greatly extended and increased the business. It is now both wholesale and retail. He is sole proprietor of the wholesale establishment, while in the retail department he has Ray Purdy as a partner.

Mr. Kopp is a democrat, a member of the Catholic Church, is affiliated with Bozeman Council No. 1413, Knights of Columbus, Bridger Camp No. 62, Woodmen of the World, Gallatin Camp No. 5245, Modern Woodmen of America, and Bozeman Lodge No. 463 of the Elks. Mr. Kopp and family reside at 318 South Tracy Avenue. He married in Missouri in 1904 Miss Leila Shotwell, daughter of A. D. and Lilly (Shepperd) Shotwell. Her parents are residents of Fort Worth, Texas, where her father is a train dispatcher. Mrs. Kopp is a graduate of the high school at Somerset, Kentucky. They have three children: John, born December 22, 1908; Charles Baxter, born in October, 1911; and Leila, born January 12, 1918.

JOHN L. TEMPLEMAN has been a Butte lawyer in successful practice for twenty years. Much of his work has been in mining and corporation law, and his services have been called upon to solve the very complicated problems in property and business administration.

Mr. Templeman was born near Axminster, Devonshire, England, March 11, 1872, son of Robert J. and Mary A. (Little) Templeman. His father was a farmer and stock raiser in Devonshire and died in 1881, at the age of forty-one.

John L. Templeman was nine years of age when his father died. Up to that time he had attended school several years, and at the age of ten he accompanied his mother and the other children to America. They lived in Jasper County, Iowa, but his mother died at Parsons, Kansas, in 1907. The other five children were Robert, Charles, Joseph, Henry and Kate.

John L. Templeman attended the district schools of Iowa, graduated from the New Sharon High School in 1893, and had a very liberal education as the foundation for his professional career. He graduated from Iowa College in 1897, and in 1899 received his LL. B. degree from the University of Virginia Law School.

Mr. Templeman was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court soon after he came to Butte in 1900, and was associated with the law firm of Roote & Clark until 1903. The following two years he held the office of city attorney. The next year he was again in practice with Roote & Clark, and then became one of the legal advisers of Senator William A. Clark. Mr. Templeman formed a partnership with Sydney Sanner, a sketch of whom appears he was appointed chief counsel for the Clark interests in Montana. In 1919 he formed a partnership with Sydney Tanner, a sketch of whom appears on other pages of this work. Judge Sanner is an ex-justice of the Supreme Court of Montana. The firm name is Templeman & Sanner.

For a number of years Mr. Templeman has been a prominent worker in the ranks of the democratic party. He is a member of the Montana Bar Association, the Silver Bow and University clubs at Butte. In June, 1902, he married at Butte, Montana, Irene Isabelle LeBeau. They have one son, Percy LeBeau.

ERNEST JOSEPH PARKIN. For more than fifteen years Ernest Joseph Parkin has given his able and scholarly services to the Gallatin County High School at Bozeman, first as an instructor and now for a number of years as principal and active administrative head of that institution.

Mr. Parkin is a scholar and educator of university training, and while education has constituted his life work he has also acquired some valuable property interests in Montana, including some fertile and productive agricultural land.

He was born at Pine Island, Minnesota, December 26, 1873. His people were among the pioneers of that section of Minnesota. He is of English ancestry. His grandfather, George Parkin, was born in England in 1817, and in 1848 brought his family to the United States. He lived three years at New Orleans, six years in St. Louis, and then removed to Green County, Wisconsin, and some years later joined a pioneer colony in Minnesota and took up a tract of government land at Pine Island. That was the last stage of his migrations and experiences, and in the midst of plenty and prosperity he died at Pine Island. He was a democrat after becoming an American citizen. George Parkin married Ann Garlic, a native of England, who died at Pine Island at the age of seventy-two.

Thomas Parkin, father of the Bozeman educator, shared in common with many of the experiences of his father. He was born in Yorkshire, England, in 1842, and was six years of age when brought to the United States. He spent part of his boyhood at New Orleans and St. Louis, and came to manhood in Green County, Wisconsin, from which locality he enlisted in the Thirty-Seventh Wisconsin Infantry and saw active service as a Union soldier in many of the battles of the Civil war. He was at Cold Harbor and Gettysburg, and while in the trenches at Petersburg before Richmond was wounded in the head by a shrapnel during a mine explosion. After the war he returned to Wisconsin, was married in Green County, and shortly afterwards, with a team of horses, a prairie schooner, and with a meager equipment of household goods he emigrated to Pine Island, Minnesota. There he bought land and was busily engaged in farming until recently he sold out and is now living retired at Pine Island. For several years he served as town supervisor. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, a republican in politics, and belongs to the Baptist Church. Thomas Parkin married Ann E. Ross, who was born at Ludlow, Vermont, in 1846. The oldest of their children was Ada, who died when thirteen years of age. Minnie is the wife of C. L. Stebbins, a farmer at Lemon, South Dakota. Edgar and Arthur are associated in the dairy business and as dealers in cheese at Pine Island and do business on a large scale there. Ernest Joseph Parkin is the fifth in the family. Lois is the wife of W. H. Marsh, a dealer in farm implements at Pine Island. Wilbur is a wholesale ice cream manufacturer at Rochester, Minnesota. Thomas is proprietor of a confectionery business at Rochester, while Guy is a chemist and is employed in his profession at St. Paul.

Ernest Joseph Parkin graduated from the high school at Pine Island, Minnesota, in 1898. He completed his sophomore year in Carlton College at Northfield, Minnesota, and from there entered the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis, graduating with his A. B. degree in 1902. For one year he taught mathematics and science at Windom, Minnesota, and the following summer carried on studies and was instructor of mathematics in the summer school of the University of Minnesota. Mr. Parkin has been at Bozeman since the fall of 1903, and the first four years he was teacher of physics in the Gallatin County High School, and since then has been principal. He has under his supervision a staff of twenty-seven teachers, and 470 scholars are enrolled in the County High School.

Mr. Parkin has a home of most substantial comforts, a new modern residence at 522 South Sixth Avenue. As a practical farmer his interests center in a ranch of 640 acres twenty miles west of Bozeman. He is a member of the State Teachers' Association and the Inland Empire Teachers' Association, is a member of the board of trustees of the Baptist Church of Bozeman and a deacon, is an independent republican in political affiliations, and is a past master of Gallatin Lodge No. 6, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, serving two years as master, is past high priest of Zoma Chapter No. 12, Royal Arch Masons, and for one year was eminent commander of St. John's Commandery No. 12, Knights Templar.

In 1905, at Bozeman, he married Miss Alice M. De Boer, a daughter of David and Switska (Postumus) De Boer. Her parents were residents of Rodney, Michigan, where her father, a retired farmer, died in 1918, and where her mother is still living. Mrs. Parkin is a graduate of Ferris Institute at Grand Rapids, Michigan. To their marriage have been born two children: Mila, born October 12, 1906, and Max, born December 16, 1910.

W. L. Collins. Some men seem born to be leaders, and not only command others in a business way, but are capable of reaching and holding high positions in politics. W. L. Collins is freight ticket agent of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad at Anaconda and also commissioner of Deerlodge County, and is equally proficient in both. He was born at Memphis, Tennessee, March 15, 1874, a son of Jeremiah Collins. The birth of Jeremiah Collins took place in County Cork, Ireland, in 1842, and his death at Puyallup, Washington, in February, 1919. When he was still a boy his parents immigrated to the United States and located in New Hampshire, where he was reared, but he left Keene, that state, for Memphis, Tennessee, in young manhood, prior to the outbreak of the war between the North and South. In 1861 he enlisted for service in that conflict as a member of Company G, Merrill's Cavalry from Missouri and remained for 2½ years, when he was honorably discharged. Returning to Memphis, he was there married, and remained there working at his trade as a machinist until 1882. In that year he went to Eldridge, North Dakota, and was engaged in farming until his retirement, at which time he moved to Puyallup, Washington. In politics he was a republican, while in religious faith he was a Roman Catholic. His widow, who bore the maiden name of Mary Madden, survives him and resides at Puyallup, Washington. She was born at Nashville, Tennessee, in 1852. Jeremiah Collins and his wife reared ten children, seven sons and three daughters.

W. L. Collins attended the public schools of Eldridge and other points in North Dakota, and was on his father's farm until he was seventeen years old. At that time he entered the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad and continued with it in North Dakota until 1895, when he was transferred to Billings, Montana, being employed by the Northern Pacific and Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroads as joint ticket agent at that point for four years. In 1899 he came to the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad, and was its cashier at the Butte headquarters for eight years, or until 1907, when he was made freight and ticket agent for this same road at Anaconda, and has so continued ever since. His offices are in the freight house of his road on West Commercial Avenue, Anaconda. Mr. Collins is a republican, and since coming to Anaconda has served as a member of the city council for two terms. In 1914 he was elected county commissioner for a term of six years. He is chairman of the board for Deerlodge County, and is president of the State Associations of County Commissioners, being elected to the latter position at Missoula in 1918 and re-elected at Livingston in January, 1919. Mr. Collins belongs to Anaconda Lodge No. 259, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Anaconda Camp No. 154, Modern Woodmen of America, and to the Rotary Club. He owns his modern residence at No. 614 Locust Street, Anaconda.

In 1896 Mr. Collins was married at Red Lodge, Montana, to Miss Metta Sperry, born at Alden, Iowa. After being graduated in the high school course in her native state Mrs. Collins attended the Jamestown College at Jamestown, North Dakota, and is a highly cultivated and charming lady. Mr. and Mrs. Collins have one child, Fay, who was born December 26, 1899, and is attending the Montana University at Missoula, after having been graduated from the Anaconda High School. Mr. Collins has risen to his present position entirely through his own industry and ability, no outside influence having been exerted in his behalf, and therefore all the more credit is due him. It is not difficult for a man to obtain promotion when money and powerful friends are backing him, but when he succeeds without these aids it means that he possesses more than average capability and willingness to work, and is therefore more valuable to his company and his community. As a public man Mr. Collins measures up equally strong, and there is no doubt but that further political honors await him in the future, for he has proven his worth in the offices to which he has already been elected, and his constituents are liable to want him to represent them in still higher bodies.

Bayard Skiff Morrow, superintendent of the concentration department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, is one of the many young men who are putting into their work not only carefully trained knowledge, but also the enthusiasm of youth and its vigor and mental strength. He was born at Challis, Idaho, October 21, 1881, a son of James B. Morrow, born at East Aurora, New York, in 1841, died at Boise, Idaho, in 1909. Growing up in his native place, he enlisted for service during the Civil war in 1861 as a member of the Seventy-second New York Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered out at the close of the war as a first lieutenant of the Sixty-fifth New York Volunteer Infantry, to which he had been transferred. Only a lad of nineteen at the time of his enlistment, he soon developed into a seasoned soldier, and was with General Grant's command in the campaign in and around Richmond. He had the misfortune to be captured in a raid on a railroad in Virginia and sent to Libby Prison, and after six months of confinement was exchanged. After his discharge he crossed the plains from New York to Salt Lake City, Utah, and then came into Montana, and was engaged in placer mining during 1867 on the present site of Helena. After a short time he left for another placer mine near Salmon City, Idaho, and a few years later became a cattleman in that vicinity. He continued to operate as a cattleman and rancher until 1898, when he retired and moved to Boise City, Idaho, although he continued to hold his ranch. Mr. Morrow was one of the pioneers of that part of Idaho, and Challis is near the old site of his large ranching property, where he was so profitably engaged for so many years.

James B. Morrow was married to Vira Skiff, born at Hume, New York, in 1853, who survives him and makes her home at Boise, Idaho. Their children were as follows: Bayard Skiff, whose name heads this review; Beryl, who married George Huebner, an attorney-at-law, lives at Emmett, Idaho; Hazel M., who is unmarried and lives with her mother; and McKenn F., who is an attorney-at-law and resides at Boise, Idaho. James B. Morrow was a democrat, but aside from casting his vote for the candidates of his party took no part in politics. Well known as a Mason, he was connected with the local lodge in his vicinity.

Bayard Skiff Morrow was reared on his father's ranch and attended the schools of Custer and Lemhi counties in Idaho, and was graduated from a high school of Boise, Idaho, in 1902, following which he took the regular course at the University of Idaho at Moscow, Idaho, from which he was graduated in 1906, with the degrees of Bachelor of Science in Mining Engineering. Immediately following his graduation he went to Wallace, Idaho, and for six months worked in the mines there to secure a practical experience. He then was made assistant assayer in the company's assay office, and held that position for six months. Leaving that company, he became assayer and chemist for the Hecla Mining Company at Wallace, Idaho, and remained there for six years. In 1913 he came to Anaconda, and beginning in the testing department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company has risen to his present position through those of foreman of experimental flotation, foreman of the flotation and the concentrator, on the installation of the process, superintendent of the grinding and flotation department, and superintendent of the copper concentration. His offices are in the general office building of the Washoe Reduction Works, two miles east of Anaconda. Mr. Morrow is a republican. He belongs to the Anaconda Club, Anaconda Country Club, and the American Institute of Mining Engineers. In addition to his other interests Mr Morrow is a stockholder in the Hecla Mining Company, the Western Union Life Insurance Company of Spokane, Washington, and in the Idanha Hotel of Boise, Idaho, the latter being a property inherited by his father's heirs, as well as his residence at No. 610 Main Street, Anaconda.

In 1909 Mr. Morrow was married at Kooskia, Idaho, to Miss Jessie Rowton, a daughter of J. G. and Emma (Clark) Rowton. Mrs. Rowton is deceased, but Mr. Rowton still lives at Kooskia, being a retired farmer. Mrs. Morrow is a graduate of the University of Idaho, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. Mr. and Mrs. Morrow have the following children: Marguerite M., who was born April 2, 1912; and James B., who was born March 16, 1917.

The Morrow family is an old one in New York State, having been founded there during colonial times by representatives of it who came there from the north of Ireland and were Scotch-Irish. The grandfather, Henry Morrow, was born in the Empire State, and died at East Aurora before his grandson B. S. Morrow was born. By trade he was a cabinetmaker and was very well known at East Aurora, where he spent the greater part of his life. His wife was a McKeen, and she also died at East Aurora.

On the maternal side of the house B. S. Morrow also comes of an old family, Stephen Skiff founding it in Connecticut, going there from Wales, and served in the American Revolution. Later a decendant blazed his way through the dense forests from Oneida County, New York, to Alleghany County in the same state. J. B. Skiff, the maternal grandfather of B. S. Morrow, was born near Hume, New York, in 1817, and died there in 1895, having spent his entire life in and about Hume, where he was engaged in farming. He married Lydia Fitch, who was born in New York State, and died at Hume, New York, in 1888. The children born to J. B. Skiff and his wife were as follows: Mrs. Morrow, mother of B. S. Morrow; Lucina, who married H. H. Cochran, a retired ranchman, lives at Emmett, Idaho; Addie, who married E. C. Thomas, who is conducting the old homestead, lives at Hume, New York; Harvey J., of whom there is no definite record; John M. and Stephen, killed in action during the Civil war; Chester A., who died at Hume, New York, in 1897; and Milton, who died at Hume, New York, at the age of seventeen. Mrs. James B. Morrow is a member of Boise Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, and has served as state historian of her chapter.

Frank M. Gray has a secure place in the legal profession of Montana. He is a native of Bozeman and is enjoying a successful practice as a lawyer in the same community where he grew up.

He was born in Bozeman, November 29, 1889. His father was the late John Gray, a Montana pioneer. John Gray was born in Limerick, Ireland, in 1846, son of John Richardson Gray, who spent his life in Limerick, was a member of the landed class, and had a tenant lease under the Crown and was well-to-do. John Gray though reared in a home of substantial comfort chose a life of independence and adventure in extreme early boyhood. He went around the world from Cork, Ireland, as a first cabin boy on an English man-of-war. Much of his time while on the war vessel was spent patroling the waters of Algeria. He next joined a whaling expedition to the North Seas. He was only fifteen years of age, but had seen many ports of the world when he left his vessel at San Francisco, California. Not long afterward he joined an overland train engaged in a hunting expedition to the wilds of Montana. He reached the Gallatin Valley in 1863 and for several years was employed by freighters and stockmen, rode the range and in 1872 bought a ranch on Reese Creek in Gallatin County. In the fall of 1889 he left his ranch and moved to Bozeman, and after that conducted an extensive business as a brokers' exchange, dealing in mining and real estate mortgages, and handling many interests with uniform success. He owned a farm of 520 acres on Reese Creek, three dwelling houses in Bozeman, and an examination of his estate at the time of his death also disclosed possession of various mining properties and real estate mortgages. His success in business was matched by his splendid public spirit and an influence freely extended in behalf of the welfare of his home city. He was a leader in the fight for the location of the state capital at Bozeman. Politically he was a democrat, was a member of Gallatin Lodge No. 6, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, a member of Bozeman Chapter No. 12, Royal Arch Masons, St. John's Commandery No. 12, Knights Templar, and was a thirty-second degree Mason. He was deeply interested in the Masonic craft and went abroad to Paris, France, to take his higher degrees. During the early '90s he was also a member of a Masonic excursion to China.

John Gray married Martha F. Phipps, who was born at Kirksville, Missouri, August 22, 1863, and is still living at Bozeman. They had a family of seven children: Charles E., a farmer at Kewanee, Illinois; Mary G., wife of Alvin C. Busby, a mechanic at Ellensburg, Washington; John W., an agronomist with the State Agricultural College at Bozeman; Ellen V., who died at the age of twelve years; Frank M.; Agnes G., wife of Kenneth A. Wilber, a civil engineer at Glendale, California; and Robertz M., an accountant living at Los Angeles.

Frank M. Gray attended the rural schools of Gallatin County while a boy on his father's ranch, was graduated from the Gallatin County High School in 1910, spent one year in the Missouri State Normal School at Kirksville, his mother's old home, and another year in the Montana State College at Bozeman. Mr. Gray has a broad and extensive knowledge of the United States, acquired during a period of 2½ years in which he traveled in practically every state in the Union and also in Canada and Mexico. In preparation for the law he was first in the law office of H. A. Bolinger at Bozeman, and was admitted to the bar, January 13, 1914. For the past five years he has conducted a general civil and criminal practice. Three years of that time he was justice of the peace and is the present coroner of Gallatin County. Mr. Gray has an interest in his father's estate. He is a democrat in politics, a member of the official board of the Christian Church, is affiliated with Gallatin Lodge No. 6, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and is a member of the Gallatin County, State and American Bar associations. He owns a modern home on the Yellowstone Trail at 109 North Seventh Avenue.

July 22, 1915, at Livingston, he married Miss Shorley M. McCartney, daughter of John H. and Mary L. (Oldham) McCartney. Her parents reside at Cambridge, Ohio, her father being a retired business man. Mrs. Gray is a graduate of the Cambridge High School in Ohio, attended a Pennsylvania college, and before her marriage was a teacher in the public schools of Cambridge. Mr. and Mrs. Gray have one son, Frank M., Jr., born October 25, 1917.

John P. Swee, the present mayor of Ronan, has been a successful lawyer there for the last ten years. He graduated in law at Minneapolis and for five years was in law practice in that city before coming to Montana.

Mr. Swee was born at Pine Island, Minnesota, June 29, 1877. His father, Arnt J. Swee, was born near Christiania, Norway, in 1854, and lived in his native land until he was eighteen years of age. He was a Norwegian sailor. On coming to this country he settled as a pioneer in Goodhue County, Minnesota, and is still living there at Wanamingo. His efforts as a farmer have brought him much prosperity, he has always been an influential figure in his community, and has reared a large family, most of whom are already independent producers and doing well for themselves. Arnt J. Swee is an ardent republican, has held township offices, and is a member of the Lutheran Church. His wife was Miss Ragnhild Hoseth, who was born in 1855, also near Christiania, Norway, but they were married in Goodhue County, Minnesota. They are the parents of fifteen children: Henry, a farmer in Goodhue County; John P.; Mattie, wife of Sivert Hegge, a farmer in Goodhue County; Martin, in the automobile business at Wanamingo; Gustav, who runs his father's farm; Emily, wife of Joseph Miller, a bookbinder at Chicago; Peter, a farmer in Goodhue County; Josephine, wife of Andrew Blakstad, a farmer in Goodhue County; Anna, wife of Fred Haller, who is an automobile mechanic at Wanamingo; Christina, wife of John Ulevig, a Goodhue County farmer; Albert, who also followed agriculture in Goodhue County; Joseph, a farmer in Goodhue County; Adolph, a linotype operator at Clintonville, Wisconsin; Rosella, who is unmarried and lives with her sister Emily at Chicago; and Sidney, at home.

John P. Swee as a boy lived on his father's farm, attended country schools, and spent two years in the Southern Minnesota Normal College at Austin. He was a teacher in his native state until 1902, and in that year entered the law department of the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis, receiving his LL. B. degree in 1905. By subsequent studies at the University he was awarded the degree LL. M. in 1909. In 1905 Mr. Swee began practice at Minneapolis with the firm of Gertsen & Lund in the New York Life Building, but gave up his promising work in the Minnesota metropolis and came to Ronan on November 10, 1910. His time has since been engaged in a general civil and criminal practice, and he has his offices on Central Avenue. In the spring of 1919 Mr. Swee formed a partnership with Lloyd I. Wallace under the firm name Swee & Wallace. Mr. Swee also owns ranch lands in Missoula and Flathead counties to the aggregate of a thousand acres, and has a modern home on Sterling Street in Ronan.

He is an independent republican in politics, and is affiliated with Hell Gate Lodge No. 383 of the Elks at Missoula, and Ronan Lodge of Odd Fellows and Ronan Camp Modern Woodmen of America.

In June, 1911, at Cambridge, Minnesota, he married Miss Lydia Carlson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Siefert Carlson, of Cambridge. Her father is a carpenter and builder. Mrs. Swee is an expert stenographer and at one time was regarded as the most rapid court stenographer in Minneapolis. She is a graduate of the Minneapolis Business College.

THOMAS D. TREGLOAN. One of the best known and most highly esteemed citizens of Park County is the veteran ranchman, Thomas D. Tregloan, a pioneer cattle man who has done his full share in the development of the southern part of Montana, which he has honored by his citizenship for a half century, having consistently given his support to all measures for the public good, and his name has ever been synonymous with honorable dealing in all the relations of life. As he has passed so many years in this locality he has a wide acquaintance among its best citizens, many of whom are included within the circle of his warm personal friends.

Thomas D. Tregloan was born in Grant County, Wisconsin, on June 13, 1850. His father, James Tregloan, was born in Cornwall, England, in 1805, and spent his mature years there as a miner until 1845, when he came to the United States. He first located in Wisconsin, where also he followed mining, but in 1852 he moved to the vicinity of Galena, Illinois, where he owned and operated a smelter until his death, which occurred in 1855. He was a republican in his political views and was a Methodist in his religious faith and a local minister. He married Hannah Goldsworthy, who was also a native of Cornwall, England, born in 1807, and who died at Galena, Illinois, in 1853. Their children were as follows: James, who was a Confederate soldier during the Civil war, entered the employ of the Santa Fe Railway and died in Texas shortly after the close of the war; William, who served the four years in the Civil war as a cavalryman, is a farmer in Carroll County, Iowa; Honor is the widow of Thomas Allen, formerly a miner, and now resides at Hazel Green, Wisconsin; Hannah, who lives in Denver, Colorado, is the widow of Thomas Farley, late a miner; John, of Hazel Green, Wisconsin; Samuel, who is a successful fruit raiser in the Yakima Valley, Washington; Thomas D., whose name forms the caption to this review; and Margaret is the wife of Matthew Rodda, a farmer at Hazel Green, Wisconsin.

Thomas D. Tregloan attended the public schools of Jo Daviess County, Illinois, and remained under the parental roof until the death of his father. In the fall of 1869 he came to Gallatin County, Montana, and became a cowboy, riding the ranges over a large part of this section of the state. In 1875 he came to what is now Park County, though then still a part of Gallatin County, and engaged in the cattle business on his own account. He has been a hard worker and a good manager and has been uniformly successful through the years, so that today he is accounted one of the most successful ranchmen in Montana. He owns 5,000 acres of fine ranch land, situated three miles south of Clyde Park, and here may be found some magnificent herds of blooded Shorthorn and Hereford cattle and grade Shire horses. Mr. Tregloan raises enormous quantities of grain and hay and, knowing every angle of the business, he is able to reap success where others might meet nothing but failure. Until May 4, 1915, he was in partnership with John Harvey, a period of forty years, and the death of Mr. Harvey required the property to be equally divided, one-half being set apart for the Harvey heirs and he retaining the other half. On May 28, 1919, Mr. Tregloan suffered a disastrous fire, the outbuildings, barns and other property being destroyed, but the same have been replaced with more modern and better arranged buildings than those destroyed.

Mr. Tregloan is a stanch republican in politics and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His fraternal relations are with the Livingston Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1886, at Hazel Green, Wisconsin, Mr. Tregloan was married to Mrs. Esther (Cox) Austin, the daughter of John and Eliza (Cundy) Cox. To Mr. and Mrs. Tregloan have been born the following children: Jane, who is a graduate of Oberlin College, at Oberlin, Ohio, married May 1, 1912, Clifford Helgeson, a farmer at Clyde Park, Montana, and they have two children, Esther Elizabeth and Thomas Clifford; Homer, who is a graduate in the civil engineering course at Princeton University and is assisting his father on the ranch, married November 27, 1913, Marguerite Thomas, and they have one child, Jean Armour.

In summing up the chief events in the life of the subject it has been the aim to avoid fulsome encomium; yet there has been a desire to hold up for consideration those facts which have shown the distinction of a true, useful and honorable life—a life characterized by perseverance, energy and well defined purpose. In doing this we are but reiterating the dictum pronounced upon the man by the people who have known him long and well. He enjoys a wide acquaintance throughout the southern part of the state, and it is undoubtedly true that in this region no man enjoys to a greater degree the universal esteem of the people than he.

JOHN R. HALEY. It is oftentimes considered by those in the habit of superficial thinking that the history of so-called great men only is worthy of preservation and that little merit exists among the masses to call forth the praises of the historian or the cheers and appreciation of mankind. A greater mistake was never made. No man is great in all things and very few are great in many things. It is not a history of the lucky stroke which benefits humanity most, but the study and effort which made the lucky stroke possible. It is the preliminary work, the method, that serves as a guide for others. Among the citizens of Southern Montana who have achieved success along steady lines of action is John R. Haley, of Wilsall, a man who richly merits the confidence and esteem which all freely accord him, for he has taken a deep interest in the development of the locality and always stands ready to do his full share in the work of progress.

John R. Haley was born in Sommerset, Pulaski County, Kentucky, on December 31, 1886, and is a son of John P. and Elizabeth Jane (Shepard) Haley. John P. Haley, who is now a resident of Wilsall, was born at Sommerset in 1845 and was reared and married there. He engaged in the mercantile business, which commanded his attention until 1898, when he came to Montana, locating first at Livingston, and then coming to his ranch of 640 acres, located about fourteen miles west of Wilsall. It is irrigated land and he devotes it to the grazing of high-grade cattle and horses. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Improved Order of Red Men. His wife was born in 1851, in Sommerset, Kentucky. She bore her husband the following children: Thomas, who is a ranch owner at Boise, Idaho; Iola was the wife of John B. Newell, but both are deceased; Elizabeth Pearl first married Oliver Morgan, who was a rancher and a clerk in the recorder's office, and who died in 1911, and later she became the wife of William D. Bell, a real estate broker; William is a rancher at Bozeman; and John R.

John R. Haley was educated in the public schools of Sommerset, Kentucky, and the rural schools of Gallatin and Park counties, Montana. Until eighteen years of age he remained with his father, but at that time, ambitious to be independent, he went to Bozeman and entered the employ of the Wilson Company, drygoods and gentlemen's furnishings, with whom he remained for two years. During the following three years he worked in Kopp Company's meat market at Bozeman, followed by a year of farming. In 1911 he came to Wilsall and bought an interest in the livery business of his father-in-law, James McClarty. The firm, which is known as McClarty & Haley, keeps a good line of horses for general purposes, and also conducts a dray line. They carry a general line of feed and handle practically the entire coal and ice trade of the city. They are also agents for the Continental Oil Company. Mr. Haley is a stockholder in the United States Building and Loan Association of Butte. He is a man of sound and conservative business judgment and has been prospered in a satisfactory manner since coming to Montana.

In 1912 Mr. Haley was married to Anna May McClarty, of Wilsall, and they have one child, Margaret Willeta, born on March 31, 1913.

William A. Davis. The prosperity and substantial welfare of a town or community are in a large measure due to the enterprise and wise foresight of its business men. It is progressive, wide-awake men of affairs that make the real history of a community, and their influence in shaping and directing its varied interests is difficult to estimate. William A. Davis, head of the well-known seed house at Bozeman bearing his name, is one of the enterprising spirits to whom is due the substantial growth of the city whose interests he has at heart. With a mind capable of planning, he combines a will strong enough to execute his well-formulated purposes, and his great energy, keen discrimination and perserverance have resulted in material success.

The family from which the subject of this review springs is of Welsh origin, his emigrant ancestor having come from that rock-ribbed little country to Canada. The subject's grandfather, William Davis, was born in Ontario, Canada, and died at Ingersoll, province of Ontario, in 1881. He followed the vocation of farming in that province all his life. He married Miss Swazie, also a native of Ontario, and among their children was Samuel Davis, father of the immediate subject of this sketch. He was born in 1832 in Niagara, province of Ontario, Canada, and died at Detroit, Michigan, in January, 1911. He was reared to manhood and married in his native province, but eventually he came to Buchanan, Michigan, where he followed his trade, that of a carpenter and builder. Later he returned to Ontario, Canada, where he followed his trade until his removal to Detroit, Michigan, in 1882. He spent the remainder of his days there in that vicinity. He was a stanch republican in politics.

Samuel Davis married Hannah Baker, who was born in 1842 in South Bend, Indiana, and now resides in Bozeman, Montana. To them were born the following children: The first child, a girl, died at the age of three years; Almira is the wife of James E. Geedy, a farmer at Delhi, Ontario, Canada; Nellie became the wife of Dr. David Stoval, late of Detroit, now deceased, and she now lives in Ann Arbor, Michigan; Katie is the wife of Charles E. Scott, a dealer in real estate at Portland, Oregon; Noah died at the age of fourteen years; Samuel is a member of the police force of Detroit, Michigan; Hall died in infancy; James H., who was in the furniture business at Detroit, Michigan, died at the age of twenty-nine years; William A. is the next in order of birth; Florence died at the age of four years; and May died at the age of two years.

William A. Davis, who was born at Ingersoll, Ontario, Canada, November 3, 1877, received his education in the public schools of Detroit, Michigan. At the age of seventeen years he entered Smith's Business College at Detroit, completing the course there in 1894. Then for a short time he was employed in an art store, but soon afterwards accompanied the family on its removal to Birmingham, Michigan, where his parents located on a farm. The subject remained there until he was twenty-one years of age, when he became employed by the Jerome B. Rice Seed Company of Detroit, with whom he was identified for twelve years. Starting at the very bottom of the ladder, he worked his way through various promotions until at length, in February, 1911, he was sent to Bozeman as the company's representative, having for six years been a field representative for the company. The advent of the Rice Company in Bozeman was the starting of the seed pea growing industry in Montana. Mr. Davis at all times enjoyed the fullest measure of confidence on the part of his employers and in return he gave them his very best efforts. On December 20, 1911, he severed his relations with the Rice Company and during 1912 he was engaged with a ranching enterprise. In the spring of 1913 he organized the William A. Davis Seed Company, which was incorporated and of which Mr. Davis was the president. In March, 1916, the company was reorganized, under the title of The William A. Davis Company, with the following official personnel: President and treasurer, William A. Davis; vice president, R. J. Hutton, of Detroit; secretary, B. C. Parker. The company has built up a phenomenal business and is now numbered among the big seed concerns of the country. They have erected a fine big warehouse on South Wallace Avenue, designed and arranged specially for the handling and cleaning of various seeds, particularly peas. Immense quantities of their seeds are shipped to Wisconsin and New York State, while many shipments are made to England and France. The active head and manager of the company is, as might naturally be supposed, Mr. Davis, who thoroughly understands every phase of the seed business and whose business ability and indefatigable energy has borne fruit in the enviable position which the company now occupies in local business circles.

Politically Mr. Davis gives his earnest support to the republican party and he is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

On August 21, 1911, at Shenandoah, Iowa, Mr. Davis was married to Bettie I. E. Renstrom, a native of Iowa and a graduate of the Shenandoah Normal College. To them have been born two children, William Arthur, Jr., born August 25, 1912, and Maribel Elizabeth, born July 4, 1915.

G. B. Long has been a leading rancher in Sweetgrass County for over ten years, and is now filling the office of sheriff, to which he was elected as a republican in 1918. Sheriff Long has been on his own responsibilities so far as making a living was concerned since early boyhood, and has been a farm hand, farmer, cowboy, independent rancher, and, while his activities have been satisfactory from a financial standpoint, he has also won the confidence and trust of the best people of every community where he has lived.

He was born on a farm in Macon County, Missouri, April 13, 1878. His father, George Long, was born in Germany in 1821, and in order to escape military conscript he left Germany in 1841 and became a settler in Pennsylvania. He lived at Punxsutawney, that state, for sixteen years, married there, and was a farmer during the summer seasons and in winter helped raft logs down the Susquehanna River. In 1870 he moved to Macon County, Missouri. He was a farmer in that locality until his death in 1885. He was a very ardent democrat in politics, a member of the Lutheran Church and of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. By his first wife he had six children: Margaret, living at Bellingham, Washington, widow of Henry Cress, a former rancher; John, who lives on the old home farm in Macon County; Joseph and Henry both farmers in Macon County, Missouri; Dave, also identified with the agricultural activities of Macon County; and Mary, wife of William Gwinner, a farmer in Macon County. For his second wife George Long married Jane (Baithgell) Sheroughs, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1835. She died in Macon County, Missouri, in 1890. By this marriage there were two children: Emma, wife of Austin McGee, a farmer in Macon County, Missouri; and G. B. Long. Mrs. Long by her first husband had four daughters: Mary, living at Novinger, Missouri, widow of John Nesbith, who was a brick moulder; Caroline, wife of George Lowmaster, a farmer in Macon County; Sarah, wife of Frank Harrison, a Macon County farmer; and Florence, deceased wife of John Long, mentioned above, her step brother.

G. B. Long lived at home with his mother to the age of twelve years, and then became a farm hand during all the summer months, and his work paid for his schooling during the winter season. In 1896, when he was eighteen years old, he went to Springfield, Illinois, and worked on a farm there for twenty-two months. His arrival in Montana was in March, 1898. In Meagher County he spent two years on a ranch, acquiring all the arts of the cowboy, and for another six months he was employed in roundup work, which requires the greatest skill on the part of a cowboy. His employer during that period was Dr. G. H. Wilson. Mr. Long then bought a livery stable at Two Dot, Montana, and conducted it five years and nine months.

On October 1, 1907, he came to Sweetgrass County, buying a ranch on Deer Creek. He finally sold the ranch and in the spring of 1914 disposed of his cattle. He was active in that locality from 1907 to 1914, and since then has continued his operations as a cattle man and banker on an irrigated farm of 320 acres located 5½ miles north of Big Timber.

Mr. Long also owns a modern home in Big Timber. Since his election to the office of sheriff he has given his time to the duties of his official position. He is a member of Doric Lodge No. 53, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Big Timber. Mr. Long married at old Big Elk in Meagher County, January 19, 1901, Mary Viola Nelson, daughter of Eli and Lovina (Shields) Nelson, residents of Butler, Missouri, where her father is a farmer.

John Henry Heidelman, M. D. Through the greater part of his long and successful professional career Doctor Heidelman was a Government physician and surgeon under the Indian Bureau. In that service he first came to Montana about twenty years ago, and was physician on several Indian reservations in this state. Doctor Heidelman since retiring from the Government work has been busied with a large practice at Ronan.

He was born at Madison, Indiana, September 29, 1866. His father, A. H. Heidelman, was born at Osnabruk, Germany, in 1829, came to this country when a young man and lived in Cincinnati, where he married, afterward removed to Madison, Indiana, and in 1876 settled at Indianapolis, where he lived until his death in 1912. He was a millwright and carpenter and followed his trade for many years. During the Civil war he was a Union soldier, serving in the Fortieth Indiana Infantry. He was all through that struggle, was in the division commanded by Thomas and Rosecrans, and participated at Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Knoxville campaign, and in fact in all the engagements of his regiment. He came out of the war almost totally deaf, and for many years drew a well deserved pension from the Government. He was a strong democrat in political affiliations and a member of the Catholic Church. A. H. Heidelman married Elizabeth Ernest Glatt, who was born at Donnersdorf, Oldenberg, Germany, in 1829, and died at Indianapolis in 1915. They had nine children: Benjamin, formerly a carriagemaker and for a number of years employed on finishing work on passenger coaches for the Big Four Railway, now practically retired and following gardening at Indianapolis; Catherine, wife of Frank Osfield, a butcher at Cincinnati; Josephine, wife of Michael Rieger, timekeeper in the freight depot at Indianapolis; Louise, wife of Joseph Hoffstatter, who for many years has been in the furniture making business, and is a stockholder and overseer in a factory at Indianapolis; Elizabeth, of Indianapolis, widow of Frank Muhlbacher, a tailor and grocer; Andrew, a blacksmith at Memphis, Tennessee; Doctor Heidelman; Joseph, a machinist at Indianapolis; and Mary, also a resident of the Indiana capital.

Doctor Heidelman attended public school at Indianapolis, where he lived from the age of ten. He was a student in high school and also at the college in Irvington, an Indianapolis suburb, one year. He entered the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery and graduated M. D. in 1891. For one year he practiced at Indianapolis and in 1892 entered the Indian service of the Government. The first year he was assigned to duty at Pipestone, Minnesota, two years at Winnebago and Omaha, Nebraska, and three years at White Earth, Minnesota.

John H. Heidelman M.D.

In December, 1899, in the course of his duties, he arrived in Montana, and for a year and a half was surgeon for the large Indian school at Fort Shaw. The next year was spent in the Bitter Root Valley, and in January, 1902, he was made surgeon and physician at Jocko on the Flathead Reservation and later at Dixon. Doctor Heidelman resigned from the Indian service in April, 1918, and has since enjoyed a prosperous practice at Ronan, his offices and home being at D and Third streets.

For a number of years he served as a member of the School Board at Jocko. Governor Stewart appointed him examiner of the local draft board at Dixon during the World war. He is independent in politics, is affiliated with Missoula Lodge No. 13, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, is a Royal Arch Mason and an honorary member of the Modern Woodmen of America at Missoula. He belongs to the Alumni Association of the University of Cincinnati Medical School and is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations.

Doctor Héidelman is also interested in several banks, being a director and stockholder in the First National Bank of Ronan, a stockholder in the First National Bank of Jocko and the Farmers and Merchants Bank at Dixon.

In June, 1898, in the St. Paul Parsonage of the Episcopal Church, Doctor Heidelman married Miss Elizabeth Baker, a native of Oak Harbor, Ohio. Mrs. Heidelman is descended from the Lindsley and Green families, well known names in the colonial history of New Jersey and Virginia, and is eligible for membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution. Mrs. Heidelman is a graduate of Valparaiso University at Valparaiso, Indiana, and is an artist of much skill and taste. She painted many portraits while among the Flathead Indians, and also the wonderful scenery of the Flathead Reservation has been a subject for her artistic brush. She is a trustee of School District No. 28 at Ronan. Doctor and Mrs. Heidelman have one son, John Paul, born November 13, 1899. He is now a student of the Ronan High School, and toward the close of the war was called by the draft and was drilled at Bozeman College.

Fred M. Brown has occupied the office of county surveyor of Gallatin County for ten years, is now serving his sixth consecutive term, and both officially and otherwise has had a wide and varied experience in engineering and public work.

He is one of the few men of mature years who can claim Bozeman as their native city. He was born there November 20, 1881, when the town was in its pioneer stage of development. His grandfather was Joseph Nelson Brown, who was born in Illinois in 1815, and died at Oregon City, Oregon, in 1905. For many years he lived in Iowa, where he followed his trade as a carpenter and builder, and on retiring from business moved out to Oregon. J. N. Brown, father of the county surveyor, was born in Illinois in 1850, was reared and married in Iowa, and in 1870 settled among the pioneers in the Gallatin Valley of Montana. He pre-empted 160 acres, proved it up and lived on it for many years. He has been widely known as a brick manufacturer and for many years has followed the business of contracting for dirt roads. He has constructed many miles of highway in Gallatin County and is still engaged in that business. While he sold his original homestead he still owns a farm near Manhattan. As a resident of Bozeman he has served as alderman and is a republican in politics. J. N. Brown married Ariminta McQuillan, who was born in Iowa in 1861. Fred M. is the oldest of their six children. Edith is the wife of John Milloy, and they live in the Province of Saskatchewan, Canada. Everett, the youngest, is associated with his father's business at Bozeman.

Fred M. Brown received his early education in the public schools of Bozeman, graduating from high school in 1899, after which he spent two years in the State Agricultural College. For one year he pursued a special course in civil engineering at the University of California, and then joined his father for two years. He operated the brick plant and also did contracting. During another two years he had some valuable experience as an employe of the United States Department of the Interior, engaged in reclamation work in Montana. Mr. Brown was elected county surveyor of Gallatin County in 1908. He entered upon his duties in January, 1909, and has been five times re-elected. He is an associate member of the American Society of Civil Engineers. He belongs to the Bozeman Chamber of Commerce, is a vestryman of the Episcopal Church, is a past master of Bozeman Lodge No. 18, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and a member of Zoma Chapter No. 12, Royal Arch Masons, at Bozeman. Politically he is a republican.

Mr. Brown built his modern home at 822 South Third Street in 1908, and he also owns a ranch of 720 acres in the Sedan neighborhood. He married at Billings in October, 1904, Miss Mary Holland, daughter of John and Matilda Holland. Her mother is deceased and her father is a retired mining engineer living at Norris, Montana. Mrs. Brown is a graduate of the State Agricultural College at Bozeman. They have two children: Fred H., born June 9, 1905, and Esther, born September 19, 1909.

Walter Aitken was born in Streetsville, Ontario, Canada, on June 17, 1869, being the youngest of nine children of William and Janet Aitken. Mr. Aitken's parents were born, reared and married in Scotland, the father born in Alloa, Clackmannanshire, and the mother (Janet Macgregor) near Deanston, Perthshire. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Aitken before they left Scotland, and the rest of the family were Canadian born, the parents emigrating to Canada in the early '50s. The father died in 1878, and the mother died in New York City, in 1907. Both are buried in Mountain View Cemetery in Galt, Ontario.

Walter Aitken was taken by his parents to Galt when he was but a few months old. He was educated in the public schools of that town and remained there until he was eighteen years of age, when he went to New York City, and while there was a student under private instruction. In 1889 he came to Montana and has been here ever since, except for occasional eastern visits. He settled on Shields River, Park County, and engaged in ranch and livestock work and, as soon as old enough, took up a homestead near where what is now the Town of Clyde Park. He was a cowboy for eight years, off and on, riding the range in the Shields River, Musselshell and Judith Basin countries. In 1895 he forsook the range for newspaper work, doing his first reportorial work on the Livingston Post in the winter of that year. In the spring of the same year he established a weekly newspaper at Columbus, Montana, the first newspaper in Stillwater County. In the fall of the same year he moved the plant to Big Timber and established the Big Timber Express, which he owned and edited until 1900, when he went to Kalispell and established the Bee for Marcus Daly. After the latter's death Mr. Aitken returned to Livingston and was editor of the Livingston Post for two years and of the Livingston Enterprise for four years. For eight years of his newspaper life he was secretary treasurer of the Montana Press Association, and upon his resignation in 1905 was elected an honorary life member of that organization.

While engaged in newspaper work Mr. Aitken had also been a student of the law, and in 1905 took the bar examination before the Supreme Court at Helena, was admitted to practice and in 1906 "hung out his shingle" at Belgrade in Gallatin County. He remained there until 1915, and then moved to Bozeman, where he has a law office and enjoys a good practice. He is a past C. C. of the Knights of Pythias Lodge of Big Timber, a past W. M. of Belgrade Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and a member of the Elks and Woodmen of the World. He is a former president of the Gallatin County Bar Association and is now vice president for Gallatin County of the State Bar Association. He organized the municipal government of Belgrade, and during the nine years of his residence there was continuously city clerk and city attorney. In politics he is a democrat.

On May 22, 1898, Mr. Aitken was married at Livingston to Miss Florence N. Reese, daughter of T. G. and Mary A. (Carter) Reese, the latter now deceased. Mrs. Aitken's father came to Montana in 1882, spent many years as a rancher and stockman in the Paradise Valley, south of Livingston, and is now enjoying a retired life in Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. Aitken have two children: Florence R., born May 17, 1900, at Big Timber, who is in the second year of her work in the Montana State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, and is also assistant librarian of the Bozeman Public Library; Herbert Macgregor, born December 26, 1903, at Livingston, is a sophomore in the Gallatin County High School. The family reside in their own home at 310 South Black Avenue.

MARTIN A. GARY. The man who made a success of life and won the honor and esteem of his fellow citizens deserves more than passing notice. Such is the record, briefly stated, of Martin A. Gary, a well-known citizen of the Town of Livingston, Park County. By a life of persistent and well applied energy along honorable lines he has earned the right to specific mention in a work of the province assigned to the one in hand, along with other progressive and public-spirited men who have their influence felt in their respective communities.

Martin A. Gary, manager of the Livingston branch of the Gary Hay and Grain Company, was born on February 29, 1876, in Sanilac County, Michigan. His father, John Gary, was born in Ireland in 1841 and died at Bozeman, Montana, in 1895. At the age of sixteen years he came to America, locating in the Province of Ontario, Canada, and in 1861, came to Michigan, where he became a cattle buyer and farmer. In 1889 he became a pioneer settler at Big Timber, Montana, where he engaged in cattle and sheep buying. He followed the same line of business at Bozeman, to which place he removed in 1894, and there remained until his death. He was a democrat in politics and a member of the Catholic Church. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah O'Hara, was also a native of Ireland, born in 1848, and her death occurred in Bozeman, Montana, in 1909. To this worthy couple were born three children, namely: Agnes, the wife of F. C. Downing, who is a traveling representative of the Gary Hay and Grain Company of Bozeman, Montana; John P., secretary and manager of the Gary Hay and Grain Company at Bozeman; and Martin A.

Martin A. Gary attended the public schools at Sanilac, Michigan, and Big Timber, Montana, until the age of fifteen years, when he engaged in such general work as he could find to do at Big Timber. In the meantime he had formulated definite plans, following what he had learned of business opportunities, and in 1897, he went to Bozeman and with his brother John P. established the firm of Gary Brothers, dealers in groceries, hay and grain. Their interests grew steadily, so that in 1917 the business was incorporated under the name of the Gary Hay and Grain Company of Bozeman and Livingston. The officers of the corporation were as follows: T. C. Power, of Helena, Montana, president; E. A. Stiefel, of Belgrade, Montana, vice president; Thomas L. Martin, of Helena, Montana, who died October, 1919, secretary; John P. Gary, of Bozeman, treasurer and manager; Martin A. Gary, of Livingston, assistant manager. In 1918 the company bought out Bill Miles & Brother, of Livingston, hay and grain dealers, and Martin A. Gary then came to Livingston and took charge of the company's interests at this point. The Bill Miles & Brother business was one of the pioneer concerns of this locality, having been established more than forty years ago. The retail warehouses and offices of the Gary company are situated at No. 327 South Main Street, while the elevator is situated on West Park Street. The business of the Gary company is the largest of its kind in Park County, and indeed is among the most extensive of its kind in the State of Montana. In addition to his business interests above referred to Mr. Gary and his brother John P. own a ranch, consisting of 186 acres of irrigated land at Clyde Park, Montana, and which is developing into a very valuable piece of property.

In June, 1902, at Bozeman, Montana, Mr. Gary was married to Evelyn Corcoran, the daughter of Patrick and Josephine (Duggan) Corcoran, both of whom are now deceased. Her father was a farmer at Gallatin Valley, whither he had removed as a pioneer in 1863. Mrs. Gary possesses a splendid education, being a graduate of the Gallatin County High School and Montana State College. To Mr. and Mrs. Gary have been born six children, namely: Ronald, born in 1903; Martin, born in 1905; Josephine, in 1909; Margaret, in 1911; Robert Emmet, in 1913, and Patrick, in 1917.

Mr. Gary is a firm believer in the principles of the democratic party, though not a seeker after public office. His religious membership is with the Catholic Church, while fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Columbus, in which he has taken the fourth degree. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce at Livingston and Bozeman and of the Rotary Club in the city of his residence. He has been successful in his business affairs and because of his unswerving honesty in all his dealings with his fellow men and his generous and kindly nature he has won and retains a host of warm personal friends throughout the locality honored by his citizenship.

JOHN P. GARY, who came to Montana as a youth of fifteen, has found many opportunities to prove his usefulness and ability. He is one of the active men in the corporation of the Gary Hay & Grain Company, which probably handles more hay than any other firm dealing in that commodity in Montana. Mr. Gary is manager of the business at Bozeman.

He was born at Minden City, Michigan, January 19, 1874. His father, John Gary, was born in Ireland in 1841, spent his early life at London, England, and at the age of sixteen came to America and settled in the Province of Ontario, and about 1861 moved to Michigan and homesteaded in Sanilac County. His genius and the particular direction taken by his abilities from youth until his last years was stock buying. He was well known as a drover both in Michigan and Montana, coming to the latter state in 1889 and settling at Big Timber. He was in the stock commission business there. In 1893 he moved to Bozeman and continued in the cattle business until his death in 1895. He was a democrat and a Catholic. John Gary married Sarah O'Hara, who was born in Ireland in 1848, and died at Bozeman in September, 1909. She was reared in Ontario. They had a family of three children: Agnes, wife of F. C. Downing, a grain merchant at Butte; John P.; and Martin A., who is manager of the Livingston branch of the Gary Hay & Grain Company.

John P. Gary received his early education in the common schools of Sanilac County, Michigan. He also attended school in Big Timber, Montana, but his education was finished at the age of seventeen. The next three years he worked in different lines, and at the age of twenty entered the service of the Benepe Owenhouse Company at Bozeman, remaining with them three years. For nineteen years he and his brother Martin were associated as Gary Brothers in the grocery, hay and grain business. In the meantime, in about 1900, they engaged in the grain business under the management of John P. Gary. In the year 1909, they bought out the Bozeman Elevator Company's business and plant, consisting of a large 100,000 bushel elevator and a fifty car warehouse. The grain business continued to grow and in the year 1917, in order to engage in broader fields, a new company was organized, and known as the Gary Hay & Grain Company, Incorporated. The firm has branches and elevators at Livingston and other points. The offices are in the Owenhouse Block at Bozeman. T. C. Power, of Helena, is president of the company; E. A. Stiefel, of Belgrade, is vice president; John P. Gary is treasurer and manager; and Martin A. Gary is manager at Livingston. John P. Gary has full charge of the business at Bozeman.

He is also interested in Montana farming with Martin A. Gary, owning an irrigated ranch of 186 acres on the Shields River. He also has a modern home at 324 South Black Avenue in Bozeman. Mr. Gary is a democrat, a member of the Catholic Church, is a fourth degree Knight of Columbus, being affiliated with Bozeman Council No. 1413, Knights of Columbus. He is a member of Gallatin Castle No. 82 of the Royal Highlanders, and of the Bozeman Chamber of Commerce.

In 1904, at Bozeman, he married Miss Mae Marley, a daughter of John F. and Mary (Downs) Marley. Her mother is deceased and her father, who was a pioneer homesteader at Big Timber, is now living at Bozeman. Mrs. Gary is a graduate of the Sweetgrass County High School. To their marriage were born six children: Helen, born May 2, 1906; Elizabeth, born in 1908; John, born July 1, 1909; Agnes, born in June, 1911; Mary Frances, born in June, 1913; and Jean, born August 17, 1917.

Charles Lester Harvey is the only son of the late John Harvey, one of the prominent pioneers of Park County, and is now engaged in the operation of a splendid grain and livestock ranch of 500 acres two miles south of Clyde Park. A considerable part of this ranch has been owned by John Harvey and his son Charles L. for forty years.

The late John Harvey, who died at his country home in 1915, was born in Jo Daviess County, Illinois, in 1850. His parents, James and Letitia (Hosking) Harvey, were of English families. James Harvey was superintendent of a large copper mine in the Lake Superior region, and was killed by a falling stone in 1856. John Harvey was then six years old. He received a public school education, and at the age of sixteen left home and sought his fortune in the West. In 1866 he joined the Willson-Rich train, commanded by Charles Rich, and after many encounters with the Indians arrived in Montana, where John Harvey spent the first two years in the Madison Valley of Gallatin County. He helped build the log school house and for two winters attended school there under Stephen Allen. In the course of time he had enough money to go into the ranching business for himself, and also did freighting and dealing in livestock. In 1879 he and Thomas Tregloan began a partnership which was continued until it was dissolved by the death of John Harvey. Thomas Tregloan is still one of the prominent ranchers of the Shields River Valley. John Harvey and Thomas Tregloan developed a ranch of over 2,000 acres, engaged in raising grain and hay and livestock, and for a number of years also conducted a large meat market in Livingston. John Harvey was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Livingston and was a republican voter, and his wife was a member of the Methodist Church.

In February, 1885, John Harvey married Miss Jennie Cox, daughter of John Cox, who was born in England in 1820, came to the United States when a young man, was a miner in Wisconsin, and lived at Hazel Green for many years, where he died in 1885. He married Eliza Cundy, who was born in Cornwall, England, and died on the Harvey ranch in Montana. Mrs. John Harvey was educated in public schools at Hazel Green. She was the mother of two children, Jamie, who died at the age of three months, and Charles Lester.

Charles Lester Harvey was born near Clyde Park in Park County, August 24, 1891. He was educated in the public schools of Livingston, graduated from the Park County High School in 1909, and subsequently continued his higher education in Oberlin College at Oberlin, Ohio. He received his A. B. degree from that institution in 1914. He was a member of the Phi Beta Sigma college fraternity. He distinguished himself in athletics at Oberlin, and after graduating remained a year as a special student of physical culture and graduated in physical training in 1914. For one year he had also coached the athletic teams of the college. He was captain of the Oberlin Track Team in 1914, and that team stood second among the colleges of Ohio that year. Mr. Harvey has a record in Ohio for the high jump, clearing the bar at 6 feet 1½ inches. For one year after returning from Ohio, Mr. Harvey was instructor and physical director of the Railway Club of Livingston, and then returned to the ranch and has been active manager of the Harvey estate. The partnership interests between the Harvey family and Mr. Tregloan were dissolved in the spring of 1916, C. L. Harvey taking half the land, cattle and horses, and though one of the younger men in the valley he is rated as one of its most successful ranchers. He specializes in high grade horses, and paid $2,500 for his shire stallion.

Mr. Harvey is a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with Livingston Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In 1917, in Park County, he married Miss Lottie Gallagher, daughter of George and Mary Gallagher, ranchers near Clyde Park. Mr. and Mrs. Harvey have one son, Lester, Jr., born August 30, 1918.

Roy Allen Stark is the leading representative and exponent of osteopathy in Ravalli County, and has been established in his profession at Hamilton since 1913.

Doctor Stark has lived most of his life in the northwestern states, having been born in Madelia, Minnesota, June 19, 1888. His paternal ancestors came from England and were among the early Puritan settlers at Plymouth, Massachusetts. His grandfather Stark was born in Vermont in 1827 and was a pioneer settler at Mankato, Minnesota, where he engaged in lumbering. He died at Sioux Falls, North Dakota, in 1914. During the Civil war he served in the Quartermaster's Department under General Sherman. S. H. Stark, father of Doctor Stark of Hamilton, was born at Mankato, Minnesota, in 1862, lived there during his youth, was married at Kasota in the same state, and after his marriage moved to Madelia, where he followed farming. In 1897 he took his family to Parma, Idaho, where he is still living and is engaged extensively in farming and stock raising. He is an independent in politics and a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. S. H. Stark married Celia Pettis, who was born at Kasota, Minnesota, in 1864. They had a family of five children: Myrtle, wife of Harvey Hatch, a farmer at Adrian, Oregon; Ralph, a farmer and stockman at Parma, Idaho; Roy Allen; May, wife of Joseph Stone, a farmer at Roswell, Idaho; and Henry, who died aged twenty-two at Boise.

Roy Allen Stark acquired his early education in the public schools of Roswell, Idaho, attending the high school through the senior year. At the age of seventeen he began earning his living as a helper on his father's ranch, and remained there until he was twenty-two. He then entered the American School of Osteopathy at Kirksville, Missouri, and was graduated after completing the course with the degree D. O. in January, 1913. On May 30, 1913, Doctor Stark located at Hamilton, and in five or six years has built up the leading practice in Ravalli County. His offices are in the Colter-Bell Building on South Second Street, Doctor Stark is a member of the American and Montana Osteopathic societies. He is a past chancellor of Ravalli Lodge No. 36, Knights of Pythias, is a member of Ionic Lodge No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and in politics is independent. He owns a modern home on South Third Street.

September 20, 1916, at Hamilton, Doctor Stark married Miss Emma Nicol, daughter of R. W. and Nellie (Groff) Nicol, the latter now deceased. Her father is a retired rancher at Hamilton, where Mrs. Stark finished her education in the Hamilton High School.

PERRY M. PARKER. The record of the subject of this sketch is that of a man who by his own unaided efforts has worked his way from a modest beginning to a position of comfort and influence in his community. His life has been one of unceasing industry and perseverance, and the systematic and honorable methods he has followed have won for him the unbounded confidence of his fellow citizens.

Perry M. Parker traces his line of descent back to Irish origin, whence the family came to America and settled in Ohio and the Central West. His father, Wesley Parker, was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, where he was reared and where he devoted himself to agricultural pursuits. Shortly after his marriage he moved to Indiana, locating near Peru. In 1871 he went to Minnesota, locating on a farm near Minneapolis. Still later he located at Anoka, that state, where he engaged in the lumber business. In 1885 he went to the State of Washington and engaged in the lumber business, and there his death occurred in 1910. He was a stanch democrat in his political views. He married Angeline Large, who was born in 1845, near Peru, Indiana, and who now resides at Anoka, Minnesota. To them were born the following children: Florence, who was killed in a railroad accident at the age of eighteen years; Perry M. is the next in order of birth; Casper operates a garage at Roseburg, Oregon; Arthur is an electrician at Oakland California.

Perry M. Parker was born on November 22, 1869, at Peru, Indiana, but his education was secured in the schools of Anoka, Minnesota. He laid aside his text-books at the early age of fourteen years and began working by the day at whatever he could turn his hand to. He then went to work in a flour mill, where he remained for six years, thoroughly learning every detail of the business. He then went to Minneapolis and went to work in the Pillsbury Mills, where he was employed for ten years. Thereafter he followed milling in various parts of Minnesota and in North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana. In 1905 Mr. Parker went to Belgrade as superintendent for the Gallatin Valley Milling Company, with which he remained for eleven years. At the end of that period he came to Bozeman and ever since has been superintendent of the lower mills of the Bozeman Milling Company. The mills are situated one mile north of Bozeman and have a daily capacity of 700 barrels of flour. He is an expert in the milling business, and since coming to Bozeman has demonstrated his ability in no uncertain manner, so that he enjoys the fullest measure of confidence on the part of his employers.

Politically Mr. Parker is a stanch democrat, and while living at Belgrade served six years as alderman. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

In 1897 Mr. Parker was married to Jessie Mabel Moore, the ceremony occurring at St. Francis, Minnesota, and they have one child, Donald, born in 1903.

The Moore family, from which Mrs. Parker descended, is of Scottish origin, her ancestors having come to America in the days of the colonies and settled in the State of Maine. Her father, M. B. Moore, who now resides near Billings, Montana, was born in 1849, near Calais, Maine. He married in that state and became a traveling salesman by vocation. Eventually he went to Anoka, Minnesota, where he became connected with the lumbering industry. In 1911 he came to Montana, and since that time has operated a ranch near Billings. He is a democrat and a member of the Masonic fraternity. He married Melvina A. Ellingwood, who was born at Winterport, Maine, and their children are as follows: Jessie Mabel (Mrs. Parker); Ralph E., who is a lumberman at Seattle, Washington; Margie is the wife of Floyd R. Jones, who has a prominent position with the Standard Oil Company at Casper, Wyoming. Mrs. Parker's maternal grandfather, Nathan Ellingwood, was a native of the State of Maine and died at Greenbush, that state, in 1886, though his home had been at Winterport. He was a farmer and lumberman. After his removal to Greenbush he ran a tavern, in which was also situated the village school, besides a store and livery stable. In fact, he became the most important personage in the town, having charge of practically every interest. Mrs. Parker is entitled to membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution on the maternal side.

PEARL DUNCAN HODGE, assistant cashier of the Empire Bank and Trust Company of Lewistown, acquired his early experience in banking in his native State of Missouri, and has been a resident of Montana for the past five years.

He was born on his father's farm in Audrain County, Missouri, on May 8, 1888, a son of John Richard and Dora B. (Younger) Hodge. His parents were both natives of Missouri, his father born May 13, 1857, and his mother December 13, 1859. His father grew up and was educated in Gallaway County, Missouri, and after reaching manhood became a farmer and stock raiser. He was especially successful as a breeder of fine saddle horses and jacks, and his farm was one of wide note and reputation in Northeastern Missouri. He has lived retired from active business since 1918. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and for many years has been a deacon in the Methodist Church and is a democrat in politics.

Pearl Duncan Hodge was the fifth in a family of four sons and two daughters. He spent his boyhood days on his father's farm, working at farm labor when not in the public schools. He attended the Laddonia High School, the State Normal School at Kirskville, Missouri, and after graduating taught for one year. He took a business and stenographic course in the Dakota Business College at Fargo, North Dakota, and also attended Central College at Fayette, Missouri. From 1912 to 1914 he was bookkeeper and stenographer with the Farmers Bank at Laddonia, Missouri, and in June, 1914, removed to Lewistown and entered the service of the Lewistown State Bank as bookkeeper and stenographer. He was promoted to assistant cashier in January, 1918, and since December, 1918, has held a similar position with the Empire Bank & Trust Company.

Mr. Hodge is a member of the Masonic fraternity, the Chamber of Commerce, the Methodist Church, and in politics is a democrat.

June 7, 1915, he married Miss Bessie Pearle Triplett. She was born at McKinney, Texas, a daughter of George W. and Laura P. (Wood) Triplett, her father a native of Missouri and her mother of Texas. Mrs. Hodge is the only child of her parents. Her father has long been a prominent farmer and stock raiser near the Town of Triplett, Missouri, which is named for this family, an old and prominent one in that state. Her father is a member of the Masonic order and a democrat in politics.

HUGH C. GRUWELL. Descended from honored parentage and himself numbered among the leading citizens of his section of the state, Hugh C. Gruwell, cashier of the Farmers State Bank at Wilsall, is entitled to specific recognition in a work of this character. His residence and business relations here have but strengthened his hold on the hearts of the people with whom he has been associated, and today no one here enjoys a larger circle of warm friends and acquaintances, who esteem him because of his sterling qualities of character and his business ability.

Hugh C. Gruwell was born at West Branch, Iowa, on October 28, 1891. He is the son of E. T. Gruwell, who, in varied lines of effort, was one of the most effective and successful men in this part of the country during his residence here and whose removal to the Pacific Coast was generally a matter of regret in this state. E. T. Gruwell was born on July 19, 1864, on a farm near West Branch, Iowa. His early education was obtained in a district school, supplemented by two years of preparatory work in the Cornell College (Mount Vernon, Iowa) Academy. In 1896 he was graduated from the college proper and from the Cornell School of Oratory. His scholastic attainments have been recognized by the honorary degrees of Bachelor of Philosophy, Doctor of Philosophy and Doctor of Divinity. After his graduation he entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church as a member of the Upper Iowa Conference, where he filled three very successful pastorates, at Coggon, Oelwein and Hampton. Then for two years he acted as financial agent for Cornell College, followed by four years' service as superintendent of the Cedar Rapids district of the Methodist Church, and it is noteworthy that he was the youngest man engaged in district work in the conference. Mr. Gruwell possessed a natural analytical mind and keen business insight and he gradually became interested in banking institutions in his state, being connected as officer or director in nine different banks. He was also personally interested in journalism, the versatility of his genius being apparent in the fact that at different times he owned three newspapers, two of them church papers and one of them a weekly publication at West Liberty, Iowa.

In 1912 was bestowed upon him the highest honor in the gift of his home conference, when he was selected delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which met at Minneapolis. In civic affairs he also has a gratifying record. As mayor of the City of Mount Vernon, Iowa, he rendered a clean-cut, business-like administration and was singled out again for the same office. In his re-election there was but one dissenting vote cast. After moving to the Shields River Valley, Montana, he was urged to run for the Legislature, but deemed himself too new in the country and declined a nomination.

In 1912 Mr. Gruwell came to Wilsall, Montana, and organized the Farmers State Bank, of which he became the first cashier, holding the position until 1916, when, upon the resignation of E. G. Blair, he was elected president, retaining that position until his removal to Spokane, Washington, in July, 1918, where he became vice president of the Northwestern Trust Company, one of the big financial institutions of the Pacific Coast. Mr. Gruwell was also interested as a stockholder and director of the Northwestern National Bank at Livingston. Under Mr. Gruwell's guidance the Farmers State Bank became one of the most important banks in Southern Montana and has been for a number of years a potent factor in the splendid development which has characterized this section of the state.

On New Year's eve, 1885, E. T. Gruwell was married at West Branch, Iowa, to Anna B. Jackson, and to them were born three sons, Albert R., deceased, Hugh C., whose name forms the caption to this sketch, and Elmer T., Jr.

As an evidence of the enviable standing of Mr. Gruwell in the Shields River Valley section of Montana, the following excerpt is taken from a tribute to him published in the Livingston Enterprise in 1917: "One of the most effective and consistent boosters for Montana, in general, and the Shields River Valley, in particular, is Mr. E. T. Gruwell, banker and enterprising citizen of Wilsall. By his works he has proved his faith in the Treasure State; and by the same tokens will its future greatness be demonstrated. Men of his caliber upbuild cities and develop states. They never sit idly by, guessing, doubting and wondering; they prove their enterprise and show their faith by rolling up their sleeves and doing things worth while for the community in which they live."

Hugh C. Gruwell attended the public schools of Hampton, Iowa, and attended the high school there through the junior year. He then took the senior year work at Cornel College Academy, Mount Vernon, Iowa. He then took one year of preparatory work at Cornell and 2½ years of the regular college course, leaving there in 1912. In 1914 he entered Harvard University, where he was graduated in 1916, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. His graduating thesis was on "Montana Banking." He is a member of the Greek letter fraternity. Sigma Alpha Epsilon. During the period from 1912 to 1914 Mr. Gruwell had served as assistant cashier of the Farmers State Bank at Wilsall, and on his graduation from Harvard he was elected cashier of that institution, succeeding his father, who had been elected its president. At that time he was the youngest bank cashier in Montana. That his selection was a wise one is today voiced by all who are conversant with the record of this well-known bank. The bank is capitalized at $50,000, with surplus and profits of $22,000. The present officers of the bank are: S. S. Working, president; S. O'N. C. Brady, vice president; Hugh C. Gruwell, cashier; R. A. Cook, assistant cashier.

In 1917, at Long Beach, California, Mr. Gruwell was married to Gertrude Kint, the daughter of J. W. and Emma S. (Kaufman) Kint, who now reside at Los Angeles, California, where Mr. Kint is connected with the Home Savings Bank. Mrs. Gruwell is a lady of unusal accomplishments, being a graduate of the Leland Powers School of Expression at Boston, Massachusetts, and an entertainer of rare ability and charm.

Politically Mr. Gruwell is a republican and fraternally he is a member of Wilsall Lodge No. 103, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is also affiliated with the Montana State Bankers' Association and the American Bankers' Association. He is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is chairman of the board of stewards of his church at Wilsall. A man of generous impulses and genial disposition, he has won and retains a host of warm and loyal friends and is numbered among the representative men of his community.

Roy Osburn, whose active experience since he left his Indiana home at the age of sixteen has carried him over nearly all the states and territories south and west, has been a Montanan since 1903, and is a prominent rancher in the Big Timber section, where he is secretary of the Veasey Land Company of Big Timber.

His grandfather was an Englishman by birth and an early settler in Indiana. Roy Osburn was born in Terre Haute in that state August 6, 1876. His father, I. W. Osburn, is still living in Terre Haute. He was born in Indiana in 1855, and has spent his life there as a carpenter and builder. He is a republican and a Methodist. His first wife was Mary Harrington, who was born in Indiana and died near Terre Haute in 1880, when her son Roy was four years old. Roy was the second of four children. The oldest, Preston, is a carpenter and builder at Terre Haute, Fred is a resident of Dillon, Montana, while George was a carpenter and was taken ill while working in Pueblo, Colorado, and went home to Terre Haute, where he died in 1904. I. W. Osburn by a second marriage has several sons and daughters. The son Millard was with the American Expeditionary Forces in France.

Roy Osburn also has a military record. He was a member of the Regular Army during the Spanish-American war period. He had received his early education in the rural schools of Vigo County, Indiana, also in high school, and left school at the age of sixteen and the following year left home and began seeing the world, traveling south and west until he had seen a great deal of every state except California and Oregon. In 1898 he joined the Heavy Artillery Regiment from Indiana, was sent to Fort Barrancas, Florida, and while there he enlisted in the Regular Army and served three years, being on duty chiefly at Fort Barrancas.

The winter of 1901 he spent at New Orleans, and then went to the oil fields of Texas around Beaumont. When he came to Montana in 1903 he located for a brief time at Livingston, then went to Belgrade as an employe of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and the same year reached the Melville community of Sweetgrass County, where he was in business four years and also became interested in ranching. He established a livery business at Big Timber in 1910 and personally managed it for two years, since which time he has leased it. The Veasey Land Company, of which he is secretary, has a 7,000 acre grain and cattle ranch located twenty-six miles north of Big Timber. Mr. Osburn lives at Big Timber, his home being at the corner of McLeod Street and Sixth Avenue.

He is a republican in politics and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias at Big Timber. He married at Livingston, Montana, in April, 1908, Margaret Veasey, a daughter of Edward and Bridget Veasey, both deceased. Her father was one of the early settlers of Sweetgrass County and acquired extensive interests as a rancher and stockman.

Mr. and Mrs. Osburn have five children: Genevieve, born in 1910; Edward, born in 1912; Marion, born in 1913; Marguerite, born in 1915, and Evelyn, born in 1918.

A. P. Johnston. In the development of the mineral resources of which the county of Mineral is an index, in the development of the roads and other transportation facilities, and all the more important measures for the prosperity and well being of the country and its people, A. P. Johnston is easily the foremost figure at Superior and in Mineral County. He has been in Montana forty years and his life record justifies the placing of his name among the state builders.

He was born on the river St. Claire at Courtright, Lampton County, Ontario, Canada, January 4, 1851. His father, George B. Johnston, was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1819, and came to America and settled at Courtright, Ontario, as early as 1832. For a time he was in the drug business and in 1837 took up an agricultural homestead on the river St. Claire. He died at Courtright in 1892. Throughout a long life he was one of the leading men in his section of Ontario. He was a reformer in politics, served as county assessor of Lampton County, was reeve of Moore Township in this county, and for the last twenty-five years of his life held the office of justice of the peace. He was a close friend of Alexander McKinzie, the Canadian Premier, and for years the citizens of his community reposed in him their confidence and esteem in connection with all civic and political affairs. He was a very active supporter of the Episcopal Church and was a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason. He served as a member of the Home Guard during the Canadian Rebellion of 1837. George B. Johnston married Emily S. Donnelly, who was born at St. Anne in the Province of Quebec in 1818 and died at Sarnia, Ontario, in 1894. Her father was Doctor Donnelly, an eminent surgeon of the English navy. George B. Johnston and wife had seven children.

The oldest, George B. Johnston, Jr., was for years a prominent figure in the mining districts of the West and in Montana. He was a miner and prospector in California and Nevada and came to Montana in 1866. He early became associated with the late Marcus Daly. At that time Daly was shift boss at Washoe, Nevada, in the Comstock Mine. George B. Johnston was a miner under him, and was an influential member of the first miners union. There arose a conflict between the union and the owners and operators of the mine, and it was largely through the influence of George B. Johnston that the trouble was compromised. This brought him the close friendship of Marcus Daly. From 1875 George B. Johnston was engaged in prospecting in the Cedar Creek Placer district in Western Montana. While he was developing some of his mines he also served as principal of the high school at Helena. In 1878 he located at Butte, where he bought a half interest in the Butte Miner. It was his able editorials and influence that made this paper a power in western journalism. On account of ill health caused by overwork he sold his interest in the paper and died at Butte July 2, 1881.

A. P. Johnston

Brief reference to the younger children is as follows: Edmund T., a miner and rancher living at Canal Flat in British Columbia; Maria C., widow of Thomas E. Banker, a lumberman and mechanic, living at Detroit, Michigan, and her daughter, Grace Emily Banker, is a prominent artist; the fourth of the family is A. P. Johnston; Emily Bella is the widow of Hon. Frank Smith, a wealthy oil man and owner of municipal street car lines and at one time a representative in the Canadian Parliament, who died at Sarnia, Ontario, and his widow now has three residences, one at Sarnia, one in Toronto, and at the old Johnston homestead at Cortright, Ontario, a place which her means and taste have greatly beautified; Froome T., a hotel proprietor at Wabogan, Ontario; and Grace M., wife of Louis Allison, an accountant living at Vancouver, British Columbia.

A. P. Johnston received his early education in the public schools of Courtright and Sarnia and finished with a high school course. He lived on his father's farm until 1873 and then for the benefit of his health spent two seasons as a steward on lake boats. He also for three years worked for the Grand Trunk Railway Company at Port Edward, Ontario. In 1879 he returned home for a visit and on the 5th of July, 1880, started for the West, the country which has ever since claimed his residence and highest enthusiasm. He came to Montana by way of Port Arthur and Duluth and Fort Benton, and from that post drove a team to Helena, thence by stage to Butte, and on August 20, 1880, left the stage at Missoula. He came to what is now Superior, Montana, in a wagon driven by C. W. Berry, the only resident of the Superior locality. Berry at that time was proprietor of the Cedar Creek Ferry and postoffice. Mr. Johnston at once acquired an interest in some of the Trout Creek placer fields, then owned by the late Marcus Daly and his two brothers and associates. He spent all the succeeding winter with his brother George engaged in placer mining. Through the death of George Johnston in the following year all his property reverted to A. P. Johnston through the assignments of Marcus Daly and associates. Mr. Johnston continued working these properties for five years. Eventually his operations brought him financial embarrassment, but he was enabled to continue through credit extended him, enabling him to purchase the Bill Berry ranch, then known as the Cedar Creek Ferry and Superior Postoffice, a mile east of the present site of Superior. At that time Mr. Johnston became a popular figure and trader with the travelers over the old Mullan Road and the miners of the vicinity.

Travel and business through Superior were greatly increased as a result of the initial development in the Coeur d'Alene field in 1883. In 1887 occurred the discovery of metal in the Iron Mountain district, and that was another cause contributing to the traffic and industry and the consequent increase in the prosperity of Mr. Johnston's mercantile business. In 1888, when the Iron Mountain mines were discovered at the head of Platte Creek, Mr. Johnston made requisition to the Government to remove the postoffice a mile west of its former site. He then appropriated the ground on which the townsite is today, and subsequently sold about half of the ground to the Milwaukee Railway. He still owns half the townsite, and as a town builder takes great pleasure in the fact that Superior is now the county seat of the rich and prosperous Mineral County. Mr. Johnston spent $28,000 on the Trout Creek placer, beginning a bed rock tunnel which was never completed. Within the last three years he has installed a Keystone drilling machine for modern gold prospecting, so that the ground can be worked as it should be. In 1918 his prospects drew the attention of New York capitalists as a result of a very rich drill test. These capitalists secured an option from Mr. Johnston allowing further drill tests on the property. July 1, 1919, a new test was started and on the first of August the syndicate was completely satisfied with the richness of the ground and exercised their rights under the option, and also bought valuable adjacent territory. This syndicate is now negotiating for the installation of a large dredge and modern machinery to mine the gold. Mr. Johnston in addition to cash considerations still retains a working interest in the property. This ground is located south of Superior and immediately east of the noted Cedar Creek, which cuts the same mineral belt as Trout Creek and several other tributaries in the vicinity. Several hundred acres at the heads of these creeks have been mined. Further down these creeks the gravel is deeper and the old miners with their methods were never able to reach bed rock. As a result of improved processes thousands of acres will be made available and experts predict that they will become the richest mining fields of Montana.

For years Mr. Johnston has been the most enthusiastic leader for good roads, especially for the Yellowstone Trail, following the old Mullan road between Missoula and Spokane. The improvement of this famous trail was one of the causes that led to the organization of Mineral County in 1914. Two-thirds of the entire distance of the trail, 212 miles, between Missoula and Spokane, lies in Mineral County. By 1920, on the basis of work already done, all the hills will have been eliminated. During 1919 Government gravel trucks were moving gravel to the highway daily.

Mr. Johnston is an orator, able to express himself clearly and convincingly on subjects with which he is familiar, and in recent years he has been called upon for speeches in fourteen towns between Missoula and the Bitter Root range. As a result of meetings which he has addressed he has brought citizens into organization as the Yellowstone Trail Club for the purpose of paying assessments into the Yellowstone Trail Fund and also securing funds to purchase advertising literature, including folder maps, showing the trail, its camping places and accommodations between Missoula and Spokane.

Mr. Johnston's home is on his ranch a mile east of Superior along the line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway. In 1886 he set out an orchard of seventy-five trees on his land. Six of these trees were sent to him wrapped in tin foil and moss by his mother from Courtright, Canada. They are apple trees, and by subsequent grafting they have produced many crops of fine apples. Mr. Johnston also specializes in the ever bearing strawberry and has raised great quantities of this fruit.

He is a republican in politics, a member of the Episcopal Church, and was the first noble grand when Welcome Lodge No. 107 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows was installed on March 1, 1915. This Lodge now has seventy-two members. Mr. Johnston is a director of the Superior State Bank, and he donated one of the four best corner lots in the city for its building. He has also given other lots for newspaper buildings, for the Red Men's Hall, and the Municipal Cemetery, and for every other public purpose. He has unselfishly devoted himself to every movement that would upbuild and improve the city.

September 30, 1900, at Missoula, Mr. Johnston married Mrs. Mary L. (Cockrell) McCartney, daughter of Thomas and Keziah (Church) Cockrell. Her father was a native of Washington, Indiana, and a brother of the late Francis Cockrell, long a prominent United States senator from Missouri. Thomas Cockrell was a Union soldier during the Civil war and for many years a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. He was a farmer and stockraiser and died at Neal, Kansas, in 1916. Mrs. Johnston's mother is also deceased. Mr. Johnston has one daughter, Grace A., born June 1, 1905. He also has two step-children, Leta, wife of Roy Bascum, a Northern Pacific engineer living at Missoula, and Bernard, who is in the employ of the Forest Reservation near Superior and lives at home.

William Freeman Schoppe. In one of the most exacting of all callings the subject of this sketch has attained distinction, being recognized as an able and successful member of the faculty of the Montana State College at Bozeman. He is a well educated, symmetrically developed man, his work in his particular field of education having brought him prominently to the notice of the public, the result of which has been a demand for his services where a high standard of professional is required. He is a gentleman of scholarly tastes and studious habits, keeping abreast the times in advanced methods and his general knowledge is broad and comprehensive.

William Freeman Schoppe was born in Coorse County, New Hampshire, on September 14, 1883, and is the son of H. S. and Mary E. (Cushman) Schoppe, who now reside in West Auburn, Maine. H. S. Schoppe was born in 1849 at Beddington, Maine, where he was reared and educated. Shortly after his marriage, which also occurred there he removed to New Hampshire, where he was identified with the lumbering industry until 1886, when he removed to West Auburn, Maine, at about which time he was also in Nicaragua, Central America, handling mahogany timber. He has also followed the lumber business in Honduras and Cuba and other places, aside from the states, but is now retired from active work and is living quietly in a comfortable home at West Auburn. He is a republican in his political views, and is a member of the Congregational Church and of the Masonic fraternity. Mr. Schoppe was married to Mary E. Cushman, who was born in 1854 in Maine, and their only child is the subject of this sketch.

William F. Schoppe received his elementary education in the public schools of West Auburn, Maine, and then attended Hebron Academy, at Hebron, that state, where he was graduated in 1903. He then entered the University of Maine, at Orono, where he was graduated in 1907, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. While in the university he was a member of the Greek letter fraternities Sigma Alpha Epsilon and Alpha Zeta. Immediately following his graduation Mr. Schoppe was called to the State Agricultural College at Kingston, Rhode Island, as assistant in research work in poultry husbandry, where he was engaged from August, 1907, to June, 1908, when he came to Bozeman, Montana, as foreman of the poultry department of the Montana State College. He remained here until the fall of 1911, when he returned to his alma mater, the University of Maine, an associate professor of animal husbandry, poultry division. During the period while Professor Schoppe occupied this chair he was also doing post-graduate work and for this work received the degree of Master of Science in Biology. In June, 1913, Professor Schoppe returned to the Montana State College as assistant professor in poultry husbandry, being so occupied until 1916, when he was advanced to the professorship of poultry husbandry and is still head of this department. He has been remarkably successful, not only in his technical ability as an instructor, but what is of equal importance, in his ability to arouse a general interest in the importance and value of scientific care of poultry.

Politically Professor Schoppe gives his support to the republican party and is a member of the Presbyterian Church, while his fraternal affiliations are with Bozeman Lodge No. 18, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He is a member of the American Poultry Association, the American Association of Investigators and Instructors in Poultry Husbandry, of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and of the American Breeders' Association.

In 1909, at Belfast, Maine, William F. Schoppe was married to Margaret Dorothy Pilsbury, the daughter of Charles and Blanche A. (Sutherland) Pilsbury. The father, who was formerly a newspaper man at Belfast, Maine, is deceased, and his widow now makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Schoppe. Mrs. Schoppe is a lady of splendid culture, being a graduate of the University of Maine. To Professor and Mrs. Schoppe have been born two children, namely: William F., Jr., born July 7, 1911, and Robert Pilsbury, born July 27, 1916.

Clyde M. Lyon. Throughout an active and interesting career duty has ever been the motive of action with Clyde M. Lyon, one of the well-known agriculturists and ranchmen of Southern Montana, and usefulness to his fellow men has by no means been a secondary consideration with him. Thus strong and forceful in his relations with his fellows, he has gained the good will and commendation of his associates and the general public, retaining his reputation among men of integrity and high character, and never losing the dignity which is the birthright of the true gentleman.

Clyde M. Lyon was born at Williamsburg, Iowa, on October 25, 1882, and is the son of N. W. and Rosa Jeanette (Lewis) Lyon. The father was born in Ohio in 1839, and died at North English, Iowa, in 1910. He was reared and married in his native state, and removed to Williamsburg, Iowa, where he owned and managed a hotel. Subsequently he moved to Sheldon, Iowa, but in 1904 he retired and returned to North English, where he spent his remaining days. He was a republican in politics, an earnest member of the Presbyterian Church, was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having served for three years as quartermaster in the Eighteenth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Mrs. Rosa Lyon was born in 1857, in Ohio, and her death occurred at North English, Iowa, in 1911. To these worthy parents were born the following children: Ida May, deceased; Clyde M., whose name heads this sketch; and Vivian Virginia, who resides with her brother, Clyde, and is a graduate of the Billings Commercial School.

Clyde M. Lyon received a good public school education at Williamsburg, graduating from the high school there in 1899. He was then a student in the Iowa Business College at Des Moines, where he graduated in 1901. For a while he was employed in the office of the Des Moines News, and then returned to Williamsburg and for 4½ years ran the Hotel Victoria, of which his father had formerly been proprietor. At the end of that period Mr. Lyon went to South Dakota and proved up on a homestead of 160 acres in Lyman County, which he still owns. Later he located in North English, Iowa, and engaged in the mercantile business there for five years. During the following year he roamed around the great West, getting acquainted with the country and searching for a satisfactory place at which to locate. In 1911 Mr. Lyon came to Wilsall and began ranching. In 1919 he sold his home ranch of 320 acres and in that year also sold three other ranches. He is still the owner of 1,600 acres of land in Park County, and 8,500 acres in Meagher County. He owns a comfortable and modern residence and a store building in Wilsall and is numbered among the prosperous and well-to-do citizens of this community. He engages extensively in the real estate business, having handled many thousands of acres of the best land in this section of the state and been the means of locating some of our best citizens here. He is also interested in the raising of thoroughbred Hereford cattle, in which he has been eminently successful. Mr. Lyon has abounding faith in the Shields River Valley, a country which is said to enjoy the distinction of winning more prizes for its grains and grasses than any other locality in the West.

Politically Mr. Lyon is independent and his religious affiliation is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is an earnest supporter. Fraternally he belongs to North English (Iowa) Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; to Cedar Rapids Consistory of the Scotish Rite (thirty-second degree), and to Wilsall Lodge No. 103, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

At Lakota, North Dakota, Mr. Lyon was married to Jeanette Olive Evans. Her father, D. R. Evans, who now resides in North English, Iowa, was born near Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in 1835, and was reared and married there. He followed the trade of boilermaking there until 1879, when he moved to North English, Iowa, and conducted a farm until his retirement, about twenty years ago. He is a democrat in politics and a strong and active member of the Christian Church, as he was also of the Masonic fraternity. He married Hannah Starr, who was born in 1840 at Brownsville, Pennsylvania, and whose death occurred at North English, Iowa, in 1914. To Mr. and Mrs. Lyon were born the following children: Myrna, born June 5, 1904; Maxine, born June 13, 1908; and Bernice, born June 14, 1917. Because of his splendid personal qualities and his active efforts contributing to the prosperity of this locality Mr. Lyon enjoys to an unusual degree the confidence and regard of his fellow citizens.

INGA SOLBERG is one of Montana's women actively identified with the public life of their home state, and is now in her third consecutive term as county superintendent of schools for Sweetgrass County.

Miss Solberg has spent her life in the Treasure state, and was born eleven miles east of Big Timber, on a farm. Her father, Samuel Solberg, was born near the famous Cathedral city of Trondhjen, Norway, in 1846. He grew up there and was a schoolteacher before he came to the United States. He first came to this country when a single man, and had a varied and adventuresome experience working in stores and mines in Michigan, Wyoming and Montana. He then went back to Norway to claim his bride, and brought her to this country and in 1880 became a permanent settler in Montana. For a couple of years he was a miner at Glendale in Beaverhead County, and in 1882 settled on the homestead of 160 acres eleven miles east of Big Timber, where his daughter was born. He lived on the homestead until 1912, and when he sold his property there he had accumulated 1,820 acres. He is now living retired at Big Timber, where he has a modern home on McLeod Street between Fifth and Sixth avenues. He is a republican and a member of the Lutheran Church. Samuel Solberg married Louise Lundgren, who was born at Romsdalen, Norway, in 1854. Of their children the oldest is Samuel D., a mechanic at Big Timber, Edwin is a barber at Tacoma, Washington, and Conrad is a mechanic at Harlowton, Montana. The fourth of the family is Miss Inga. Harold, the next in age is a pharmacist by profession, and was in the drug business at Big Timber when he enlisted in February, 1918, and went overseas in June, 1918, with the Medical Corps. The youngest is Clara, wife of Roy S. Moore, a rancher near McLeod, Montana.

Miss Inga Solberg acquired her primary education in the rural schools of Sweetgrass County, and graduated in 1905 from the Bozeman Preparatory School, remaining one year longer in the Agricultural College there. She then taught a year in her native county, following which she entered and was a student in Valparaiso University of Indiana one year. Then followed two years more of work in the rural schools, and for 3½ years she was connected with the city schools of Big Timber. Miss Solberg was elected county superintendent in 1915, and the people have stamped their approval upon her administration of the office by re-electing her in 1916 and again in 1918. From her office in the court house at Big Timber she keeps close supervision over 55 schools in the county, a staff of 55 teachers, and a scholarship enrollment of 700.

Miss Solberg is a republican in politics, a member of the Lutheran Church, and is secretary of Sweetgrass Chapter No. 22 of the Eastern Star.

EDWIN B. CATLIN, chairman of the Board of the Hearst Free Public Library at Anaconda, is a pioneer printer of that city, locating in Anaconda thirty years ago. He has been continuously identified from the first with the Anaconda Standard and the Standard Publishing Company.

Mr. Catlin was born at Weedsport, New York, December 2, 1858. His paternal ancestors came from England and settled at Bridgeport, Connecticut, in 1745. His great-grandfather, Jacob Catlin, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Mr. Catlin's father, David Catlin, was born near Weedsport in 1817 and died there in 1887, spending his active career as a grain merchant. He served all through the Civil war as a member of the Ninth New York Infantry. He was a republican, active in the Baptist Church, and a member of the Masonic fraternity. His wife was Caroline Newland, who was born in New York State in 1823 and died at Weedsport in 1888.

Edwin B. Catlin was the only child of his parents to reach mature years. He acquired his early education in the public schools of his native town. Leaving school at the age of fourteen he learned the printing business at Weedsport and followed his trade as a journeyman at Syracuse and Auburn, New York, prior to coming to Anaconda in 1889. At Anaconda he assisted in establishing the Standard. He has been connected with its mechanical and business management ever since, and is now superintendent of the manufacturing and stationery departments of the Standard Publishing Company.

Mr. Catlin is a democrat. He is a member of the Theosophical Society. He resides in a home of his own at 315 West Sixth Street. In 1880 at Canadaigua, New York, he married Miss Jennie E. Gyer, daughter of Frederick and Elizabeth (Beeman) Gyer. Her father was a Union soldier and spent his business life as a tailor at Canandaigua, New York. Mr. and Mrs. Catlin have three children: Harry C., born in 1882, is a miner at Butte; Caro M., born in 1884, is the wife of Everett E. Pickell, living at 615 Maple Street, Anaconda, and in charge of the machinery warehouse of the A. C. M. Company; Florence E., born in 1887, is assistant librarian of the Hearst Free Public Library.

ROBERT P. MCCLELLAND. Biographies should not be published unless there is something in the life and character of the individual worthy of emulation or imitation by others under the circumstances—certainly not for self-aggrandizement; but sufficient has been drawn from the life history of the gentleman whose name appears above to show that there is something in the inner life of the man worthy of more than incidental mention. He began life practically at the bottom of the ladder, which he has climbed to the top with no help but a strong heart, industrious hands, and an intelligent brain, and is a living example of what may be accomplished in this republic by thrift and perseverance, even under discouraging circumstances. Robert P. McClelland comes of sterling old Scottish stock, the subject's paternal ancestors having come to this country and located in Virginia in the days of the colonies. Later the family located in Bourbon County, Kentucky, where was born the subject's grandfather, Alfred McClelland. He was a breeder and raiser of live stock, a vocation which has been adopted by many of his descendants. Among his children was T. A. McClelland, who was born in Kentucky in 1848. He was reared in Texas and Missouri, and was married at Kirksville in the latter state to Mary Norton, a native of Ohio, and who died at Kansas City, Missouri, in 1898. After his marriage Mr. McClelland lived for a time in Joplin, Missouri, engaging in the breeding and raising of cattle. His stock ranged in the Indian Territory, Colorado and Texas, and of course he followed them. In 1894 he removed to Kansas City, Missouri, and engaged in the real estate business. His death occurred there in 1909. He was a democrat in politics, was a veteran of the Civil war, having served in the cause of the Confederacy. To him and his wife were born three children, namely: Robert P.; Thomas N., an oil operator in Kansas City, Missouri; Elisha R., also of Kansas City, a mine operator.

Robert P. McClelland was born at Joplin, Missouri, on July 19, 1879, and received an elementary education in the public schools of Jackson County, Kansas. At the early age of twelve years he left home and thereafter he was responsible for his own fortune. After knocking around on various jobs for a time he at length became a cowboy and for a number of years rode the ranges in Texas, Arizona and Old Mexico. It was a hard life, but he was endowed by nature with the qualities that insure success in any vocation, and as the years went by he not only gained valuable experience, but also made financial headway. In 1905 he went to Oregon, in the vicinity of the Nevada state line, and then to the Big Elk River, Nevada, where he "ran" cattle and horses, and later spent a year at Corvallis, Oregon. In 1914 Mr. McClelland came to Livingston, Montana, engaged in the cattle and land business on a large scale and has become closely identified with this community. His partner is Walter J. Hill, son of James J. Hill, and they operate under the corporate name of the Hill & McClelland Cattle Corporation. The company is capitalized at $500,000, with no indebtedness, and is counted one of the strongest concerns in its line in the State of Montana. Their interests are large and varied. They own a large block of stock in the First State Bank of Livingston, of which Mr. Hill is vice president. They own ranches in Shields Valley and Yellowstone Valley, comprising approximately 200,000 acres, on which they run 6,000 head of pure-bred, high-grade cattle every year. They also own many well-bred Percheron, Shire and Clydesdale horses. One cow, "Suttyanne," which is valued at $5,000, was a prize winner at the International Livestock Exposition held in Chicago, and they also own a fine bull, which was first in his class as a yearling and for which they have been offered $12,500. From these few facts it can readily be seen that the Hill & McClelland Cattle Corporation does things on an extensive scale and they are numbered among the really important concerns of this section of the state.

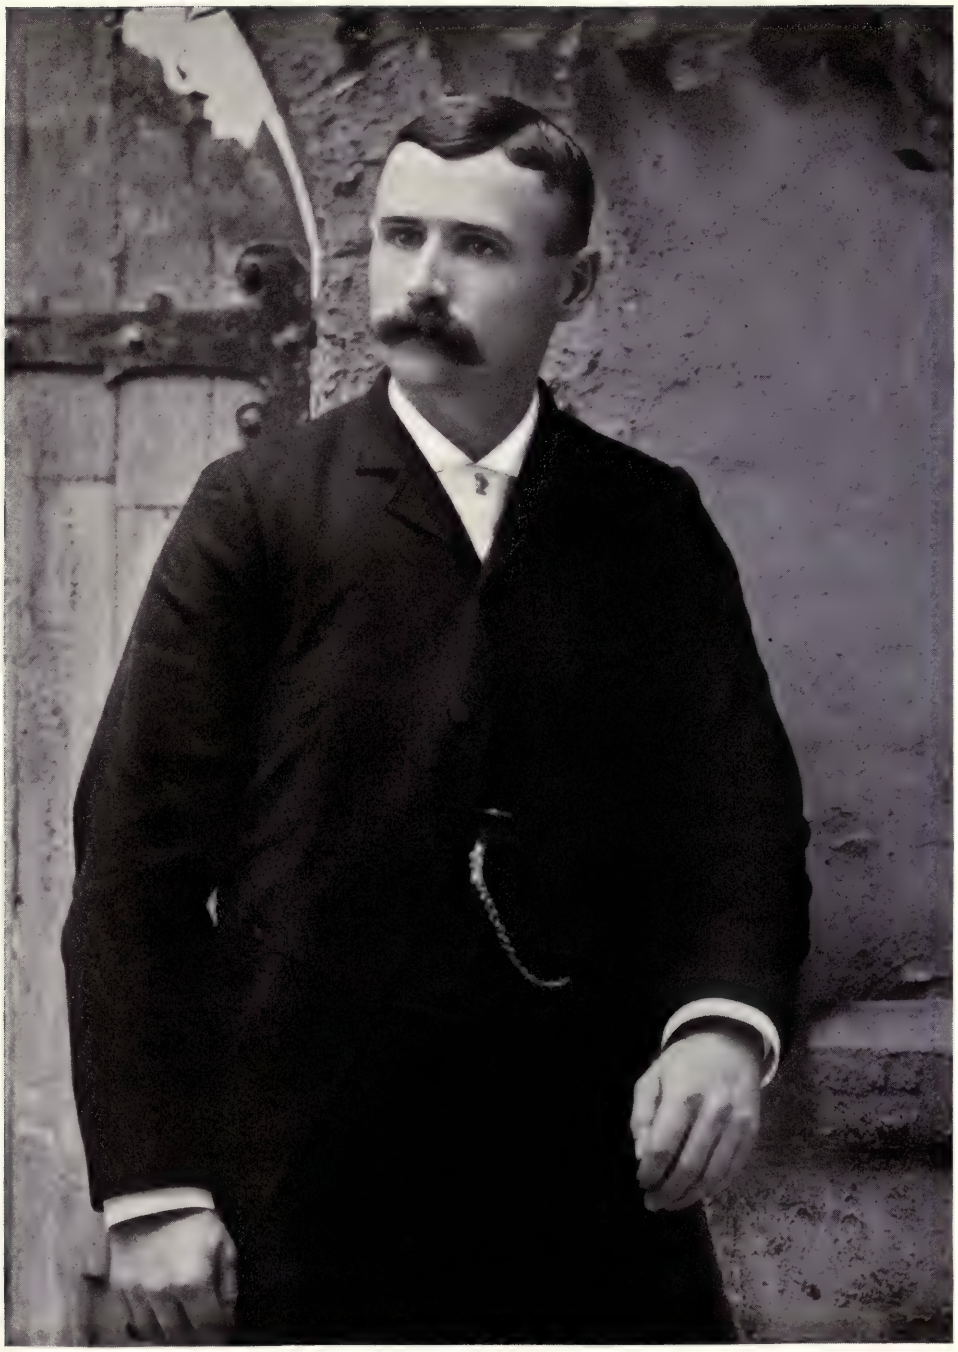
Personally Mr. McClelland is genial and approachable, true to his friends and popular among the circle of his acquaintances. He follows the highest code of business ethics and among his business associates his judgment is held in high esteem. He has personally learned by hard knocks every detail of the cattle business from the ground up, and the success which is now his has been richly earned.

In 1903, at Denver, Colorado, Robert P. McClelland was married to Maude Oleson, a native of Colorado, and they have one child, Mary Lorraine, born June 20, 1909.

Politically Mr. McClelland takes an independent attitude, voting for the men and measures which meet his approval rather than according to party dictates. Fraternally he is a member of Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and of the Albany (Oregon) Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He also holds membership in the Chamber of Commerce and the Commercial Club at Livingston.

JOHN WESLEY MILLER is vice president of the First State Bank of Thompson Falls, and for many years has been one of the most substantial business men and public-spirited citizens of Sanders County. When he first knew Thompson Falls its only pretentions to distinction as an industrial and commercial center was a single saw mill. Mr. Miller for many years was a saw mill operator in the lumber woods of Montana and is a man of rugged mold and has all the characteristics of the old time lumberman and pioneer.

He was born in County Dundas, Province of Ontario, Canada, February 23, 1862. His father, Peter Miller, was born in County Wicklow, Ireland, in 1827. Now, at the age of ninety-two, he is spending his declining days in the home of his son John at Thompson Falls. He came to this country at the age of twenty-one, and for several years lived at Ogdensburg, New York, where he was employed at a hotel and was also a railway employe. In 1851 he went to Ontario, where he operated a saw mill and also followed his trade as a carpenter. He was married in Ontario, though he had first become acquainted with his wife, Catherine Hill, when she came over on the same boat from Ireland. She was born in County Wexford in 1830 and died in Ontario in 1872. Her father, John Hill, was a pioneer farmer and woodsman in the Province of Ontario. In 1876, after the death of his first wife,



J. W. Miller

Peter Miller moved his family to McLeod County, Minnesota, and became a farmer. In the spring of 1884 he went to McLean County, North Dakota, and finally retired when nearly eighty years of age and has lived at Thompson Falls since 1906. He is a republican voter, and has been honored with various local offices. He was a town supervisor in Ontario and held a similar office in Minnesota, and for four years was county judge of McLean County, North Dakota. He is a regular member of the Episcopal Church. By his first marriage he had three children, John Wesley being the oldest. Emma is the wife of Duncan McDonald, superintendent of the Grant Construction Company at St. Paul; Mary Elizabeth is the wife of Henry Heisler, also residents of St. Paul, Minnesota, where Mr. Heisler is department manager of the Golden Rule Store. Peter Miller married for his second wife Jane MacElroy, who was born in Ireland in 1829 and died in McLean County, North Dakota, in December, 1903. She was the mother of two children: Christiana, wife of Charles Billows, who is employed in the Cement Works at St. Paul; and Hulbert, who died at the age of six years.

John Wesley Miller attended his first schools in a country district of County Dundas, Ontario. He was about fourteen years of age when his father moved to Minnesota. He was on his father's farm to the age of nineteen. One winter he worked in the woods near Staples, Minnesota. He came to Montana in the fall of 1881, and in the Missoula County of that time he helped clear the right of way for the Northern Pacific Railway. After that he worked in the woods and in the summer of 1883 was an employe in a brick plant at Missoula. For eighteen years Mr. Miller did the work of a lumber jack in the woods and saw mills of Montana, part of the time around Butte, also on the Flathead Reservation and several years at Thompson Falls. He first came to Thompson Falls in 1883. He located there permanently in 1892, but in 1903, after retiring from the lumber business, he removed to McLean County, North Dakota, and for three and a half years conducted a farm there. He sold this North Dakota farm, consisting of 462 acres, in 1919. His home at Thompson Falls has been continuous since the fall of 1906. Mr. Miller owns 680 acres, consisting of 400 acres of timber land in Sanders County, a well developed farm of eighty acres two miles west of Thompson Falls, and another timber tract of 200 acres up the Thompson River. While most of his fortune has been made in land and timber, Mr. Miller also confesses to a moderate success in mining and prospecting. Among other property he is owner of two dwelling houses and a modern home at Thompson Falls, and is an important stockholder in the First State Bank, of which he is vice president.

Mr. Miller served one term of six years as county commissioner of Sanders County and has also been a member of the School Board at Thompson Falls. In politics he is a republican. He is a past master of Thompson Falls Lodge No. 70, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, is past grand of Lone Star Lodge No. 33, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and a member of Missoula Encampment No. 5.

In 1892, in Missoula County, he married Miss Irena Coats, daughter of D. C. and Mary (Green) Coats, the latter now deceased. D. C. Coats lives with Mr. and Mrs. Miller. He was a Minnesota pioneer, settling in that territory in 1852. He farmed in Minnesota, and was with a regiment from that state in the Civil war. He came to Montana in 1887, bringing with him the machinery and equipment for a saw mill, which he established in the Flathead district. For ten years he lived at Kalispell, where he conducted a confectionery store and owned several dwelling houses. He has lived retired at Thompson Falls since July, 1909.

J. Charles Johnson. Occupying a place of prominence in the business affairs of Fairview, J. Charles Johnson has achieved marked success as a lumber dealer, and as a man of sound judgment and keen foresight has acquired city property of value, owning not only the Johnson Lumber Yard, but the Orpheum Theatre and the Blue Rock Products Company, all being well paying investments. A son of J. O. Johnson, he was born February 4, 1882, in Decorah, Iowa, of Danish-Norwegian ancestry.

Born in Copenhagen, Denmark, J. O. Johnson received excellent educational advantages in his native city, and there became familiar with the printer's trade. Immigrating as a young man to the United States, he located in Decorah, Iowa, where he has since resided, for many years having been editor and manager for the Lutheran Publishing Company. He married a native daughter of Norway, and they became the parents of two children, J. Charles, the subject of this brief sketch, and William, of Minneapolis, Minnesota.

J. Charles Johnson was educated in Decorah, and after leaving the public schools continued his studies for four years at the Lutheran College. Going to Minneapolis, Minnesota, as a youth of twenty years, he was first employed by the Imperial Elevator Company, and was later with the Goodrich-Call Lumber Company, and also established a lumber yard that he sold to the Basin Lumber Company. Coming to Montana in 1907, Mr. Johnson embarked in the lumber business at Lewistown, which he managed most satisfactorily for six years. Locating in Fairview in 1913, he established the Johnson Lumber Yard, one of the successful enterprises of the city, to which he largely devotes his time and attention. Judiciously investing his money in other ventures, Mr. Johnson erected in 1914 the Orpheum Theatre, which yields him a good income, all public entertainments being held therein, and there all traveling troupes put on their plays and shows. In 1918 Mr. Johnson established the Blue Rock Products Company, which was incorporated in the fall of 1919 with a capital of $25,000. This company, which manufactures soft drinks of all kinds, obtains its water supply from Blue Rock Spring at Fairview, a water which analysis shows to be almost chemically pure.

On January 1, 1906, at Minneapolis, Minnesota, Mr. Johnson was united in marriage with Kathryn McKee, who was born in Ottawa, Ontario, September 28, 1885, and completed her school life at St. Mary's Academy in Winnipeg, Manitoba. Three children have blessed their union, two daughters and a son. A stanch republican in politics, Mr. Johnson cast his first presidential vote for Col. Theodore Roosevelt in 1904.

Joseph Maudru. While it is undoubtedly true that the western states offer golden opportunities to the alert young men of the country, it is equally true that these openings have been created through the labors of men of the same calibre as are now attracted from the East, great industries in this part of the country having been built up and developed into national institutions. One of these corporations which is constantly branching out and controls an immense amount of business is the Great Western Sugar Company, with main plant and offices one mile south of Billings, Montana, of which Joseph Maudru is assistant general superintendent. He has been associated with this company for some years and has grown with it, although he has only resided at Billings since 1916.

Joseph Maudru comes of French extraction, his grandfather, for whom he is named, having founded the family in America, coming here from France and locating at Canton, Ohio, where he was interested in farming. He died at Canton before his grandson was born. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Seraphine Caty, was born in France in 1811, and she died at Canton, Ohio, in 1891. The birth of Joseph Maudru, whose name heads this review, occurred at Canton, Ohio, April 9, 1879, and his father, also Joseph Maudru, was born in Stark County, Ohio, in 1838, and he died at Canton, Ohio, in 1895, having spent his entire life in that section. For many years he was engaged in a mercantile business at Canton, and was prominent in local politics, having been elected on the democratic ticket treasurer of Stark County, and for some years he was director of the poor farm of that same county. The Roman Catholic Church had in him a firm believer and faithful member. His wife, who was Louise Vesseriat before her marriage, was born in Stark County in 1854, and she survives him and lives at Canton, Ohio. Their children were as follows: Joseph, who was the eldest born; Frank, who is a merchant of Canton, Ohio; and Viola, who married Marion Thurin, a merchant of Canton, Ohio.

Joseph Maudru, of this sketch, attended the public schools of Canton and was graduated from its high school in 1897, after which he became a student of the Case School of Applied Science at Cleveland, Ohio, from which he was graduated in 1901, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. He belongs to the Greek letter fraternity Phi Delta Theta.

After the completion of his educational training Mr. Maudru in 1901 became connected with the Massillon Iron and Steel Company of Massillon, Ohio, as chief chemist, remaining with it for two years and leaving in 1903 for a year's travel in Cuba, studying the sugar industry. Returning to the United States, he was associated with a Michigan sugar company for a year, and then in the fall of 1904 he entered the employ of his present company as chief chemist of the plant at Windsor, Colorado, holding that position for three years, when he was transferred to the company's plant at Fort Collins, Colorado, for a year, where he still acted as chief chemist. Another change took him to Brush, Colorado, to serve the company as superintendent until 1912, when he went to Longmont, Colorado, and acted as superintendent of the plant at that point until 1916, in which year he came to Billings as superintendent of the Billings plant. A year later he was again promoted, and since 1917 has been assistant general superintendent of this district, comprising plants at Billings and Missoula, Montana, and Lovell, Wyoming. Mr. Maudru is a man whose fruitful toil has resulted in successive advancements and he possesses a real capability for his present responsibilities, handling with tact and success a number of difficult problems.

In 1910 Mr. Maudru was married at Greeley, Colorado, to Miss Leota Powers, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Powers of Windsor, Colorado, owners of a large ranch. Mr. and Mrs. Maudru have one son,—Edward, who was born September 15, 1911. Politically Mr. Maudru is a republican. By birth and inclination he is a Roman Catholic. Longmont, Colorado, Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, holds his membership. Mr. Maudru owns the comfortable and tasteful modern residence of the family at 804 North Broadway.

THOMAS N. MARLOWE, a well known Missoula attorney, is a graduate in law from Yale University and has been a member of the Montana bar for over fifteen years.

He was born in Carroll County, Missoula, August 24, 1880, of English ancestry. The Marlowe family first settled in Maryland. His father, John T. Marlowe, was born in Covington, Kentucky, in 1843 and when a small boy his parents moved to Missouri. He grew up and was married in Carroll County, spent many years as a farmer there, and in 1904 removed to Ganado, Texas, where he was interested in Texas agriculture for five years. In 1909 he retired and removed to Missoula, where he died May 11, 1915. During the Civil war he served as a soldier on the Confederate side. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a democrat and a Mason. John T. Marlowe married Alice Roselle, who was born in Maryland in 1855 and died at Missoula November 30, 1918.

Thomas N. Marlowe spent his boyhood in Carroll County, Missouri, attending country schools and the high school at Norborne. He took his early law course in the University of Missouri at Columbia, where he graduated LL. B. in 1902. The following year he graduated from the law school of Yale University at New Haven, Connecticut. Mr. Marlowe was at one time a fellow student with Tom Stout of Lewistown.

October 23, 1903, he began practice at Missoula and his offices are in the First National Bank Building. For one term he was deputy county attorney and one term county attorney, and is now a member of the Fish and Game Commission of the State of Montana, having been appointed to that office by Governor Stewart. Mr. Marlowe is an enthusiastic sportsman, and as a hunter and fisher has explored nearly every good hunting ground in Western Montana. He was president of the Western Montana Fish and Game Association a number of years, and has taken a deep interest in proper regulated and legislative measures restricting and preserving the game resources of the state.

Mr. Marlowe is a democrat, is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Missoula, and is affiliated with Missoula Lodge No. 13, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hell Gate Lodge No. 383 of the Elks, Covenant Lodge No. 6 of the Odd Fellows, the Royal Highlanders and the Western Montana Bar Association.

His home is at 105 University Avenue. June 12, 1907, at Hamilton, Montana, he married Miss Nellie V. McMurray, a native of Missouri. They have two children: Thomas N. Jr., born July 23, 1910, and Eleanor Katherine, born July 17, 1912.

WILLIAM T. STODDEN was chosen mayor of the City of Butte in the spring of 1919 not on the basis of previous experience and activity in politics, but merely as a man of undoubted qualifications for the position, as an old resident of the city, and one of its sturdy and efficient workers in the great mining industry. His administration has realized all the most sanguine expectations entertained of it.

Mr. Stodden was born at Redruth, Cornwall, England, July 22, 1867, and as a native Cornish man represents mining as a family tradition. His father, Roger Stodden, spent all his life at Redruth, where he was born in 1832 and died in 1916, and during his active career was a steam engineer. He was a conservative in politics. For sixty years he held an active membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and every office open to lay members was given him. He married Catherine Eade, who was born at Redruth in 1831 and died there in 1917. A brief record of their children is as follows: John Henry, who died at Redruth at the age of twenty-one; Richard, a janitor in the public schools at Butte; Mary Catherine, of Plymouth, England, widow of William Williams, a miner; William Thomas; George, a miner who died at Redruth at the age of forty-three; Fred, also a miner, who died at Redruth aged forty-one.

William Thomas Stodden went to work in the mines of Southwestern England at the age of ten years. Up to that time he had attended a few terms of country school, and later advanced his education by work in some of the night schools. He was nineteen years of age when he came to the United States in 1886, and from that date has been a resident of Butte. Here by study in night school he specialized in steam engineering, and one of the factors in his success has been a constant effort to improve his individual abilities. During 1886-87 Mr. Stodden leased and operated a mine. In 1887 he went to work at the East Colusa Mine, now the Leonard Mine, and continuously for over thirty years was identified with that great landmark in the Butte mining district. He began as a common miner and gradually qualified himself for the post of steam and electrical engineer. Mr. Stodden resigned in May, 1919, to take up his new duties as mayor of Butte.

Mr. Stodden is a member of the Engineers' Union and the Rotary Club, is a republican, and is affiliated with Damon Pythias Lodge of Knights of Pythias, Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Butte Camp No. 1153 of the Woodmen of the World. He owns a modern home at 1819 Garrison Avenue.

In 1889, at Centerville, Montana, he married Annie Jenkin. She was born, reared and educated in England and came to this country in 1888. Mrs. Stodden died in 1915, the mother of nine children: W. T., Jr., an electrical engineer living at Meaderville, Montana; Flora, wife of Harold DeMain, an automobile mechanic living at 1820 Grand Avenue in Butte; Leslie, a steam engineer living at home; Percy, employed as a tax collector for the City of Butte; Montana, wife of John Werner, of 1915 Harrison Avenue, and an employe at the original mine of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company; Doris, wife of Lee Hankin, an employe of the Oregon Short Line Railway living at Kemmer, Wyoming; Cecil, a city employe of Butte; Winfield, a chauffeur; and Wilbur, who is still continuing his education in the public schools. Mr. Stodden is proud of the fact that several of his children were participants in the great war. Leslie enlisted in 1917, serving one year, and was connected with the Base Hospital of Camp Dodge. Percy enlisted at the beginning of the war, was sent to the Mexican border and saw twenty-two months of service, beginning as a private and finally promoted to sergeant. Mr. Stodden's son-in-law, Harold DeMain, enlisted shortly after his marriage, was sent to camp in Kentucky and was promoted to first sergeant. In April, 1918, Mr. Stodden married Mrs. Hattie (Smith) Bowden, a native of Minnesota.

J. Bruce Kremer, a prominent member of the Butte bar, was born at Louisville, Kentucky, September 26, 1878, a son of Charles Lawrence and Anne Lee (Hendricks) Kremer. He was liberally educated, attending the University of Virginia, and graduating in 1898 from the University of Louisville Law Department. He was admitted to the Kentucky bar the same year and has practiced at Butte since 1901. He is senior member of Kremer, Sanders & Kremer.

Mr. Kremer is looked upon as one of the coming men of influence and power in the democratic party, a position he already holds in Montana. In 1920 he presided at one of the two Jackson Day Banquet dinners following the meeting of the National Committee of the democratic party in Washington, and on that historic occasion he was described as "a gifted talker in a party of gifted talkers." He has been a member of the Democratic National Committee since 1908 and at one time was secretary. He was secretary of the Democratic National Convention in 1916 and also chairman of the Democratic Speakers Bureau in the western division in the national campaign of that year. He is at present vice chairman of the Democratic National Committee. Mr. Kremer is a member of the Silver Bow, Country, Montana, Silver Bow Democratic clubs and National Democratic Club of New York and Rocky Mountain Club of New York.

Mr. Speer was born in California Township, Branch County, near Coldwater, Michigan, October 25, 1888. He is a member of an old American family, his great-great-great-grandfather John Speer coming in 1789 with wife and two children and settling in North Carolina. Mr. Speer's grandfather, James Stewart Speer, was born in Pennsylvania in 1818, moved early in life to Ohio, and in 1863 settled on a farm in California Township, Branch County, Michigan. When he retired from his farm he moved over the Michigan line to Fremont, Indiana, where he died in 1905. He was a whig in early life but later a republican. David Speer, father of the Montana educator, was born in Ohio in 1858 and spent the greater part of his life in Branch County, Michigan, as a farmer. He died in California Township in February, 1916. Politically he was a prohibitionist and was an elder in the Reformed Presbyterian Church many years. He married Helen Rebecca Duguid, who was born in Branch County, Michigan, in 1861, and is now living at Missoula, Montana. James Beryl, the oldest of their children, is registrar of the State University of Minnesota; Ella died in infancy and Clinton at the age of ten years; the fourth of the family is Owen D.; Bruce died in infancy; Lillian is a graduate of the Michigan State Normal College at Ypsilanti, and is a teacher at Superior, Montana, while Lucile, the youngest, is also a graduate of the Ypsilanti Normal and is a teacher at Bonner, Montana.

Owen D. Speer spent his early life on his father's farm in Southern Michigan, attended a rural school there and graduated in 1907 from the high school at Fremont, Indiana. For two years he taught in his native county and in 1909 came to Missoula, enrolling as a student in the State University. He received his A. B. degree in 1915, but in the meantime had been superintendent of schools at Deer Lodge during the year 1912-13, and has had active charge of those schools for the past six years. The city schools of Deer Lodge number four, with a staff of eighteen teachers and 450 scholars.

Mr. Speer for three years served as a member of the Executive Board of the State Teachers' Association and is a member of the National Education Association. He is an independent in politics, is secretary of the Board of the Presbyterian Church, and a trustee, is a member of the Deer Lodge Chamber of Commerce and is affiliated with the Sigma Nu college fraternity.

Mr. Speer and family reside at 604 Missouri Avenue. He married at Deer Lodge in 1916 Miss Ruth Stetson, daughter of H. E. and Harriet (Smith) Stetson, residents of Deer Lodge. Her father is office manager of the Bonner Mercantile Company. Mrs. Speer is a graduate of the Library School of the University of Wisconsin, having a degree in Library Science. To their marriage were born two children, David O., born August 14, 1917; and Martha Haskell, born December 14, 1918.

William Othniel Bohart. The name of William Othniel Bohart, of Bozeman, does not need to be introduced to the readers of this work, for he has been intertwined with the history of Montana for a number of years. The splendid success which has come to him is directly traceable to the salient points in his character. With a mind capable of planning, he combined a will strong enough to execute his well-formulated purposes, and great energy, keen discrimination and perseverance have resulted in the accumulation of a handsome property, which places him among the substantial citizens of Gallatin County. He carries to successful completion whatever he undertakes, and his business methods have ever been in strict conformity with the ethics of advanced business codes, so that he has ever enjoyed the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

Othniel Bohart, as he is generally called, is descended from good old Holland stock, his progenitors having come from the land of dikes and tulips in the days of the colonies and settled in Pennsylvania. There the subject's grandfather, Peter Bohart, was born, and eventually he became a pioneer farmer in Indiana, locating near Otisco, where he died. Among his children was Peter H. Bohart, who was born in Indiana in 1843. In young manhood he moved to Missouri, being numbered among its pioneers, and there married. He lived in Ridgeley one year and then located near Graham, where he followed huckstering. In 1878 he went to Kansas and located on a farm near Leavenworth. Subsequently he came to Montana and located about 2½ miles north of Bozeman on a fine farm which he bought and which is now owned by the subject of this sketch. He also homesteaded 160 acres of land two miles east of the former tract. Unfortunately his health began to fail, and in the hope of restoring it he went to North Carolina. After a while he returned to Graham, Missouri, where he died in 1894. In politics he was a republican. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted in 1862 in an Indiana regiment of volunteer infantry, with which he served during the remainder of the struggle, being mustered out with the rank of captain. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which he gave earnest support.

Peter H. Bohart married Frances Olivia Libby, who was born in Maine in 1845, and who died in Bozeman in 1884. To these parents were born the following children: Pussie, who died in infancy; Robert H. is a farmer at Wardner, British Columbia; F. L. owns a second-hand store in Bozeman; R. F. is a farmer at Wilsall, Montana; S. E. is a trader at Bozeman; William O.; Ruby M. is a trained nurse and is now in a regular army hospital at Tacoma, Washington; Dove E. is the wife of Lee Wilson, a government veterinarian at Omaha, Nebraska.

Othniel Bohart was born at Rome, Missouri, on January 3, 1877. After completing his studies in the rural schools of Gallatin County, Montana, whither the family had moved, he attended the Montana State College, where he took a business course. Leaving school in 1897, he applied himself at first to such general work as he could find to do, but indecision was no part of his make-up, so he engaged with a butcher with the definite object of learning the business. He was employed in a meat market in Toledo, Ohio, for two years, at the end of which time he returned to Montana, and from 1900 to 1909 was engaged in that business on his own account, and meeting with splendid success. He then relinquished that line and gave his attention to the breeding, raising and buying of pure-bred cattle. In order to properly conduct this business, which had prospered from the beginning, Mr. Bohart bought from his brother the old farm which his father had owned, 2½ miles north of Bozeman, and which comprises 280 acres of fine irrigated land. Mr. Bohart makes a specialty of Brown Swiss and Guernsey cattle, and because of the quality of the animals which he has put on the market he has gained a reputation from Ohio to the Pacific coast. In 1918, at the National Dairy Show at Columbus, Ohio, Mr. Bohart exhibited a full herd of Brown Swiss cattle, which won three blue ribbons and many second and third prizes. In 1919, at the Chicago National Dairy Show, his cattle won all the blue and purple ribbons on bulls, this being the first and only dairy herd from Montana to win these prizes. Besides his investment in the stock farm, Mr. Bohart owns eighty acres of city lots in Bozeman and 105 acres of land 3½ miles southwest of Belgrade.

Politically Mr. Bohart is independent. Fraternally he is a member of Bozeman Aerie No. 326, Fraternal Order of Eagles; Eureka Homestead No. 415, Brotherhood of American Yeomen; and Bridger Camp No. 62, Woodmen of the World.

In October, 1904, at Graham, Missouri, William Othniel Bohart was married to Margaret E. Johnston, daughter of W. E. and Mary (Robinson) Johnston. The father, who was a prominent ranchman and farmer at Graham, Missouri, died there. Mrs. Bohart graduated from the high school at Graham and from the Chillicothe (Missouri) Normal College. Mr. and Mrs. Bohart have two children: William Peter, born May 15, 1906, and Katherine Olivia, born January 21, 1909. Mr. Bohart has, because of his fine personal qualities, his unassuming ways and his wonderful success, won not only the admiration of his fellow men, but their sincere esteem as well.

C. D. Scovill is known to thousands of automobile owners in Southern Montana and along the Yellowstone Valley. He has been in the garage business for a number of years, formerly at Red Lodge and now at Columbus.

Mr. Scovill was born at Dawson in Nemaha County, Nebraska, March 16, 1879, and is Scotch in the paternal line and German through his mother's ancestry. His father, Oscar F. Scovill, was born in Pennsylvania in 1846, and has spent his life in many localities, and many times yielded to the urge of adventure to seek new scenes. He grew up on the Nebraska frontier, was a pioneer liveryman in Nemaha County, and is now living retired at Potter, Nebraska. He is a republican and an Odd Fellow and for three years was with a Nebraska regiment of infantry during the Civil war. Scovill; Tuddie B. and Ted, twins, the former the wife of Harry Warner, a merchant at Potter, Nebraska, and the latter a mechanic employed in his brother's garage at Columbus.

C. D. Scovill attended rural schools in Nemaha County, Nebraska, and at the age of twelve became self-supporting. For two years he worked on a farm in Nemaha County and at the age of fourteen gained his first experience in business with a lumber and hardware house at Nemaha. He began as yard man,

Mr. Scovill came to Montana in 1905, and at Bozeman hired out for one season to a transportation company, spending most of his time in the Yellowstone National Park. For another season he was on construction work during the building of the short line railroad to Belfry. He then moved to Red Lodge, for nine months was employed by Olcott & Nutting in their retail lumber business, and then followed eight years of active connection with the harness and saddlery business. He sold out that business and built the Motor Inn at Red Lodge, the first garage in that town. He sold the garage in the fall of 1916 and then moved to Columbus, where he built the Scovill Garage. This is a thoroughly modern and complete plant, comprising a two-story building 50x140 feet, and with a perfect service as a garage. He also handles automobile accessories and is local distributor for the Dodge, Reo and Buick cars.

Mr. Scovill is a republican and a member of Yellowstone Lodge No. 85 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Columbus. He owns a modern home in the town. He married at Red Lodge in 1906 Miss Louise Kienitz, daughter of Michael and Wilhelmina Kienitz, who live on a farm near Avoca, Wisconsin. He was born in Kendall County, Illinois, June 5, 1859, son of William H. and Hattie (Haywood) Rothwell. His father was born at Manchester, England, in 1833, came to the United States in early manhood, was a farmer in Illinois, moved to the vicinity of Grafton, Nebraska, in 1878, and finally went to Booneville, Arkansas, where he lived for twelve years and where he died in 1911. He spent all his active career as a farmer. He was a republican and a member of the Baptist Church. His wife, who was born at Manchester, England, in 1843, is still living at Booneville, Arkansas. William H. Rothwell and wife came to America on the same ship and were married in Illinois.

Charles F. Rothwell attended rural schools in Kendall County, Illinois, and lived on his father's farm to the age of twenty-one. He was then in the locomotive works or shops of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway at Chicago for three years, and in 1883 he arrived in Montana, taking his first employment from the Northern Pacific Railway Company as a stationary engineer at Glendive. He was there two years, and then went on the range as a cowboy. He followed that interesting and arduous occupation for fifteen years, chiefly in Custer County. He was a merchant at Rosebud for two years until his store was burned, and in 1897 he identified himself with the Town of Columbus, where for ten years he was a general merchant, and then in the furniture and undertaking business until 1916, when he sold out and has since been associated with Mr. Claude D. He died before the birth of his grandson Doctor Alton. The father of the latter was Davis Alton, born at LeRoy, New York, in 1828. He was reared in his native town, was a graduate of Williams College at Williamstown, Massachusetts, and spent his active career as an attorney at law at Pittston, Pennsylvania, where he married. At the beginning of the Civil war in 1861 he enlisted with a Pennsylvania Regiment of Infantry, and it was the hardships and exposures of a soldier's life which shortened his career. He died at Sandusky, Ohio, in 1867, before he was forty years of age. He was a member of the Episcopal Church. Major Davis Alton married Helen Caroline Williams, who was born in Massachusetts in 1830. She had two sons, Jesse Williams and Robert D. With these sons soon after her husband's death she removed to Cleveland, Ohio, in order to give them better educational advantages. The older son, Jesse, died at Cleveland, where he was a manufacturer. The mother finally came to Livingston, Montana, and died in this city in 1887.

Doctor Alton graduated from the Cleveland High School in 1878, and completed his undergraduate studies in medicine at the Western Reserve University. He graduated in 1881, and spent the following year as an interne in St. Vincent's Hospital at Cleveland. Since then he has taken a number of post-graduate courses, attending the Chicago Polyclinic several times, and in 1899 took special work in diseases of the eye at London, England.

He came to Livingston in 1883. For a number of years he was local surgeon for the Northern Pacific Railway, finally resigning that position in order to devote all his time to his private practice. His offices are in the Miles-Krohni Building, and he also owns a modern home at 119 South Yellowstone Street. Doctor Alton is a Fellow of the American Medical Association, and is also identified with the County and State Medical Society. He served on the Livingston School Board three terms, is a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church, and affiliated with Livingston Lodge No. 32 of the Masonic Order. Doctor Alton owns 160 acres of farm land east of Livingston. He is a stockholder in the U. S. National Bank at Portland, Oregon.

In 1888, at Hutchinson, Kansas, he married Miss Anna Mintie, a daughter of F. L. and Eleanor (Russell) Mintie. Her parents are deceased. Her father came to Livingston in 1883 and was a pioneer lumber dealer in the city, but in 1886 removed to Hutchinson, Kansas, and was in the grain business there. Mrs. Alton is a graduate of St. Mary's Seminary at Fairibault, Minnesota. Doctor and Mrs. Alton have one son, Robert M., who is a graduate lawyer from the University of Michigan, and has his law practice at Portland, Oregon. He enlisted in May, 1917, and went overseas in October, 1918. During a considerable part of the war he was personnel adjutant with the Eighth Division and held the rank of major.

CHARLES S. TRUAX. To the ordinary man perhaps a very small portion of the adventures and activities that have been developing elements in the life of Charles S. Truax, now mayor of the City of Lima, Montana, would seem sufficient as experience. Thrown on his own resources when twelve years old, the seventh member in a large family where worldly goods were not abundant, he had no influential friends to advance him. He had, however, endowments of courage, persistence and faith in himself from his sturdy old Holland ancestry. These have carried him through to financial independence, personal esteem and political honors.

Charles S. Truax was born at Baraboo, Wisconsin, February 2, 1857. His parents were W. D. and Sarah (Gibbons) Truax, the former of whom was born in 1830, in Vermont, and died at Marblerock, Floyd County, Iowa, in 1897, and the latter, born in England, in 1837, died at Breckenridge, Minnesota, in 1912. The father of Mr. Truax came to Wisconsin when a young man, and at Waterford in that state was married to Sarah Gibbons, who had accompanied her parents from England in 1840. She was reared and educated well in Michigan. To this marriage the following children were born: Cynthia, who resides at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, married first Luke Knapp, and second a Mr. Miller, who is also deceased; John H., who lives in Iowa, is a blacksmith by trade; Sarah, who died young; W. E., who was a physician and surgeon, died at San Diego, California; May, who died in Iowa in 1894, was the wife of Reverend Baldwin, a Methodist minister, also deceased; Laura, who is the wife of Mr. Van Anthrop, a cabinetmaker at Williston, North Dakota; Charles S., who is the only member of the family in Montana; Emma, who is the wife of Wilson Pearsall, a rancher near Spokane, Washington; Clara, who is deceased; W. A., who is a ranchman in California; Bert, who died when young;

Nellie, who is the wife of Casper Thein, auditor of the Northern Pacific Railway, lives at St. Paul, Minnesota; and Maggie, who is deceased.

After marriage the parents of Mayor Truax settled at Baraboo, Wisconsin, where the father was the pioneer blacksmith. He had gone over the plains with ox teams in search of gold in California, but was taken sick and after a year of mining returned to Wisconsin by way of the Panama route, not having met with much success as a prospector. In 1864 he moved to Marblerock, Iowa, and there worked at his trade during the rest of his life. He was a democrat in politics and a member of the Masonic fraternity. He was always very proud of the fact that his was an old American family of Holland descent, his ancestors coming to New York with Peter Stuvesant.

Charles S. Truax's school days ended when he was twelve years old. He then left home and went to Sioux City, Iowa, where he hired out as a cabin boy on a steamboat called The Miner, which operated between Sioux City and Fort Benton. He worked through the season and then went into the Wisconsin woods and worked in lumber camps for three seasons. After coming West he drove a freight team at Omaha, Nebraska, for a season, then went back home for a visit. Finding no favorable business opening in the home village, he once more turned his face westward. He reached Kansas in the year following the grasshopper invasion and as the next season proved one of great drouth he decided after a trial of eighteen months at farming that he would turn his attention to something else.

In 1878 he drove a team from Beloit, Kansas, to Denver, Colorado, in which city he sold his team and went to Gunnison, during the gold excitement, did some prospecting there and found work in a sawmill making railroad ties. In the fall of 1879 he returned to Denver, went from there to Golden, Colorado, and at that place worked for eighteen months in the smelter, following which for a year he operated a dairy. Then began his connection with railroading, and he was a fireman on the Union Pacific until the fall of 1884, when he was transferred from Denver to Eagle Rock on the Utah Northern in Idaho, arriving there December 26, 1884. On January 1, 1885, he came into Montana, stopping at the division point called Spring Hill, now the City of Lima, of which he is the mayor and a prominent citizen. He continued to work for the railroad as a locomotive engineer until 1909. He then bought the Peat Hotel at Lima, which is the leading hotel in this section of Beaverhead County, and has continuously conducted it ever since with the exception of five years when he lived at Portland, Oregon, where he owns a fine modern residence. He also has a dwelling house at Lima and a valuable ranch located one and a half miles from the city.

On April 14, 1878, Mayor Truax was united in marriage to Miss Francelia Russell, at Marblerock, Iowa. Mrs. Truax died June 14, 1914, at Portland, Oregon. She was a daughter of William and Maria (Smith) Russell, the former of whom was an extensive farmer in Iowa and in Kansas and died near Beloit in Mitchell County, Kansas. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Truax, as follows: L. H., who is a graduate of the Montana Normal College at Dillon, Montana, is a resident of Lima and is proprietor of the leading garage in southern Beaverhead County; Daniel, who died at the age of eighteen months; Grace C., who is a graduate of the Montana Normal College, has been a stenographer in the assessor's office at Dillon since her return from Washington City, where she spent seven months working for the government during the World war; and Cora, who was educated in the Montana Normal College, died at Portland, Oregon, when aged but twenty-one years.

Always a democrat in politics, Mr. Truax has served his party faithfully. In April, 1918, he was elected mayor of Lima. He is very active in the order of Knights of Pythias, is past chancellor commander of Delta Lodge and is a member of the Grand Lodge of the order in Montana.

Patrick J. Brophy. An imposing list of achievements representing real success in business and citizenship might be compiled as an incident to Patrick J. Brophy's forty years of residence in Montana.

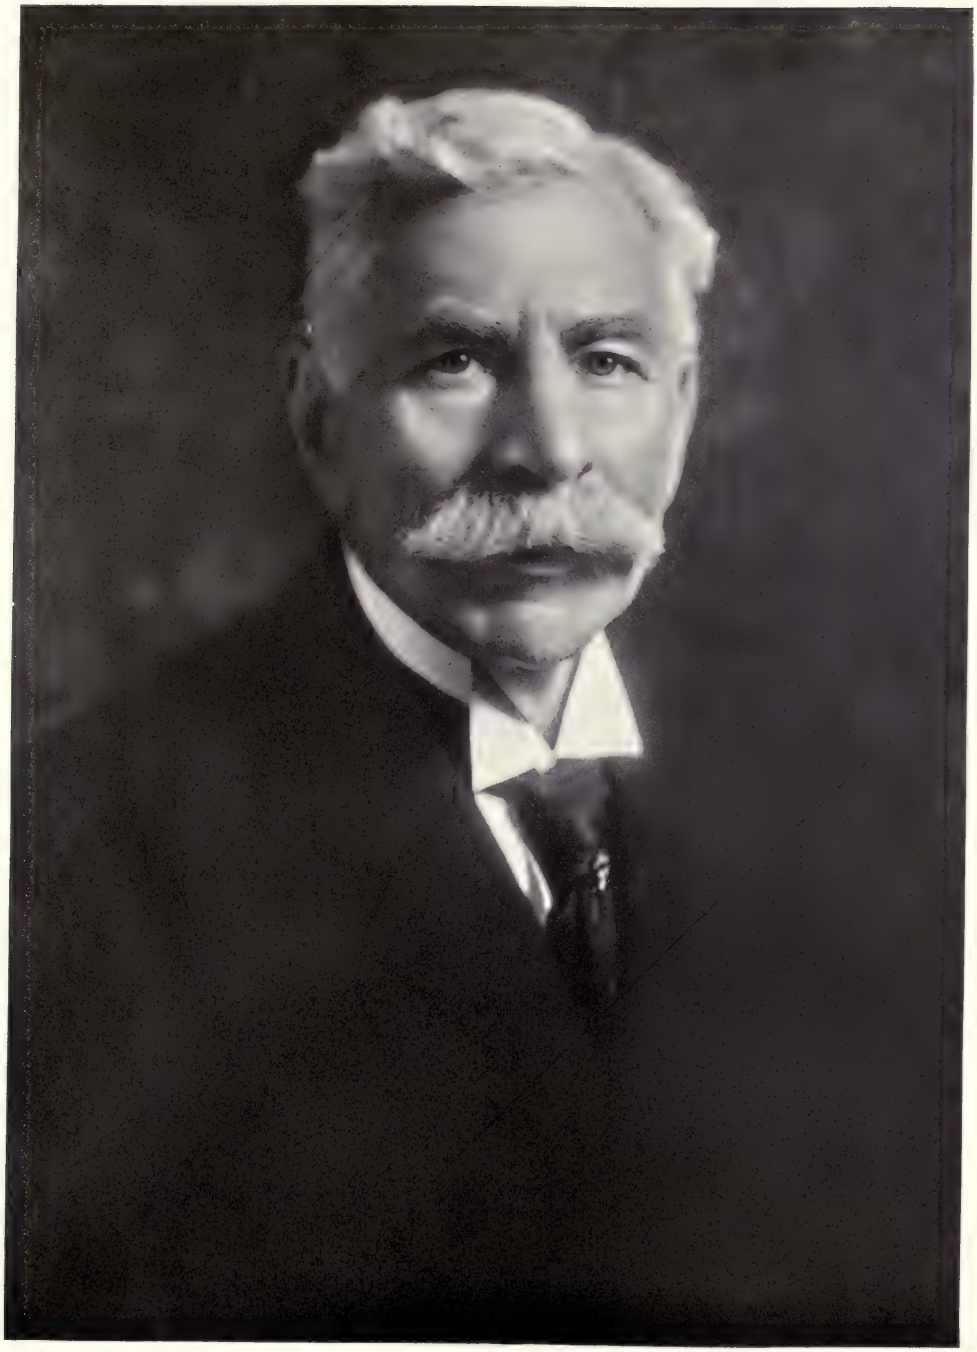
Mr. Brophy, who came to Montana territory in 1881, was born in County Carlow, Ireland, August 5, 1855, son of Thomas and Johanna (Walsh) Brophy. His father spent his long life as an Irish farmer. He was born in 1808 and died in 1879. His mother died in 1903, at the age of eighty-six.

One of nine children Patrick J. Brophy acquired a high school education and served a mercantile apprenticeship before leaving Ireland. At the age of twenty-one in 1876 he came to this country, and after a year in Chicago came to the Northwest and for three years worked in a store at Evanston, Wyoming. He arrived at Butte in February, 1881, and soon afterward formed a partnership with George H. Casey under the name Casey & Brophy. After Mr. Casey withdrew in 1888 the business was conducted as P. J. Brophy & Company until 1906, in which year incorporation papers were taken out, the capital stock being fixed at $50,000. Mr. Brophy remained as president of the corporation, but retired from the active management. During the long period of years when he was sole owner of the business the firm became well known all over Montana and adjacent states for its extensive business as wholesale and importing grocers. In Montana business history there is no name more closely associated with integrity, credit, substantial achievement and success than that of Brophy.

In later years Mr. Brophy has given much of his time and attention to placer mining in Lincoln County, Montana, where he has been one of the active executive officials of the Libby Placer Mining Company. During the past thirty odd years Mr. Brophy has frequently wielded an important influence in the affairs of the democratic party of his home state. He served as president of the Butte Business Men's Association in 1910-11, for eight years was a member of the Butte School Board, and is a member of the Silver Bow Club, Butte Country Club, Ancient Order of Hibernians and Knights of Columbus. He is a stanch Catholic and his family are of the same faith.

At Joliet, Illinois, in January, 1893, Mr. Brophy married Miss Margaret D'Arcy. She died at Butte in 1902, survived by three sons. Mr. Brophy married for his second wife Miss Mary E. Ryan, a native of Canada.

As a business man and citizen Mr. Brophy can rest content with his individual experiences and achievements, and he also has that added sense of satisfaction that comes from the knowledge that every one of his three sons did their part as patriots when the country was engaged in war. His oldest son, Thomas D'Arcy Brophy, who was born at Butte in October, 1893, finished the course at Gonzaga College in Spokane, Washington, and later took the architectural course at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, commonly known as the Boston "Tech," graduating therefrom with special honors in 1917. He is now Maj. Thomas D'Arcy Brophy of the Coast Artillery Reserve. John A. Brophy, the second son, was born at Butte



C. J. Brophy.

June 13, 1895, graduated with the A. B. degree in 1914 from Gonzaga College, entered the second officers' training camp in August, 1917, at the Presidio, California, was commissioned second lieutenant, and served with the Twenty-First Infantry at Camp Taliaferro and Kearney. He was promoted to first lieutenant in July, 1918, and after a service of two years resigned in August, 1919, and is now taking a course in agriculture at the University of Wisconsin. The third and youngest son, Patrick J., Jr., born in April, 1899, was only eighteen when the war with Germany broke out, and he was also with the colors. He is now a student in the Tome School at Port Deposit, Maryland.

FREDERICK WILLIAM CARRICK WHYTE, general manager of the coal department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, is a man of wide business experience and knowledge of his special line of endeavor. He was born at Biggar, Scotland, July 27, 1863, a son of Robert Whyte, who was born at Kinnesswood, Scotland, in 1829, and died at Buenos Ayres, South America, when his son Frederick W. C. Whyte was a baby. Growing up in Scotland, Robert Whyte became a wool merchant, and it was on a business trip to South America in 1863 that his death occurred. Like the majority of his countrymen, he was a rigid Presbyterian. The maiden name of his wife was Catharine Carrick, and she was born at Glasgow, Scotland, in 1831, and died at Petrograd, Russia, in 1909. Their children were as follows: Marion Dunn, who was born in Scotland, died there in 1898, never having been married; John Livingston, who was born in 1859, died at Great Falls, Montana, in 1908, is buried there, and during his life held clerical positions; Jane Elizabeth, who married Alexander Sokoloff, lives at Petrograd, Russia, although the family have lost track of her during the revolution in that country, in which conflict her husband, a Russian officer, was killed; and Frederick W. C. Whyte, whose name heads this review.

Growing up under his mother's care, Frederick W. C. Whyte attended the public schools of Bridge of Allan and at Stirling, Scotland, and was graduated from the high school of the latter city. At the age of fifteen years he was apprenticed to Johnstones & Rankine, civil and mining engineers in Glasgow, where he remained from 1878 until 1883, and then from 1883 to 1885 was assistant engineer to his former preceptors. For the subsequent year he was an engineer in the office of public works of Glasgow, Scotland, and then between 1886 and 1887 he was assistant engineer in the office of Johnstones & Rankine. In February, 1887, he severed his connections with his native land and set sail for the United States, and spent the time between March, when he landed, until June, 1887, in New Mexico, but in the latter month came to Montana, and, locating at Helena, engaged with the Great Northern Railroad Company as assistant engineer on the construction work then in progress, being thus occupied until July, 1892, except a short time with the Woolston Company, which had the contract for the construction of the Helena Water Works. In the meanwhile Mr. Whyte spent some months now and then in prospecting, learning much about the deposits of the state. From July, 1892, to June, 1894, he was chief engineer of the construction work of the Butte-Anaconda & Pacific Railroad, and then in order to gain a knowledge of the resources of Montana from a new angle he was on a sheep ranch from June, 1894, until July, 1895, in the Sweet Grass hills of Montana, of which he was part owner. Once more he returned to his profession, and from July, 1895, until 1896, was engineer in charge of the construction at the Belt Coal Mine of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and displayed such an intimate and practical knowledge of this line of work that in 1896 he was placed in charge of the coal department of the company, and has held that position ever since, having now six mines under his supervision, or all operated by the corporation, and 1,000 men. His offices are in the general office building of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company's reduction plant two miles east of Anaconda. He is an independent democrat, and is a member of the State Board of Examiners for state coal mine inspectors and has held this office for six years. He affiliates with the Episcopal Church of Anaconda, but was reared a Presbyterian. For the past twenty years he has been a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and he belongs to the American Institute of Mining & Metallurgical Engineers, the Montana Society of Engineers, and the Montana Coal Operators Association, of which he has been president for the past ten years. The pleasant, modern residence at No. 207 West Seventh Street, Anaconda, occupied by the Whyte family, is their property.

In March, 1892, Mr. Whyte was married to Miss Sarah Adeliza Crichton, a daughter of William and Adeliza (Hopkinson) Crichton, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Crichton was in the live stock business at Haddington, Scotland. Mr. and Mrs. Whyte have one son, Keith Carrick, who was born October 21, 1897. He is taking a course in electrical engineering at Cornell University, Ithaca, New York. Mr. Whyte is one of the solid men of Anaconda, where he has resided for so many years that he has been one of those responsible for its development. Sound in his judgments, his advice is sought and taken by his associates, and he is recognized as one of the most capable men of his great corporation.

JOHN W. SCHOFIELD was formerly connected with the United States Bureau of Fisheries at Bozeman, and resigned his position there to become local agent at Bozeman for the Henningsen Produce Company.

Mr. Schofield was born at Alexandria, Virginia, June 25, 1892, and passed his years until he came to Montana practically in sight of the national capital. His grandfather was born in Scotland in 1835, came to America when a young man, was manager of a large cotton mill near Baltimore, Maryland, and afterward had charge of a similar mill at Alexandria, Virginia, where he died in 1907. D. W. Schofield, father of the young Bozeman business man, was born in Maryland in 1858, grew up there, but since early manhood has lived at Alexandria, Virginia, where he is a wholesale grocer. He is a democrat and is senior deacon of the First Baptist Church of Alexandria and one of its chief members. He is a past grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. D. W. Schofield married Evelyn Franks, who was born at Alexandria in 1860. Of their four children John W. is the youngest. Mary Mercer, the oldest, is the wife of B. C. Watkins, proprietor of a large nursery business at Midlothian, Virginia. C. M. Schofield enlisted in June, 1917, was sent overseas with the Ambulance Corps in Section No. 584, and saw active duty at the front until as a result of shell shock he was sent home and placed in the hospital at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana. Lucy Virginia, the third of the family, is living with her parents at Alexandria.

John W. Schofield attended the public schools of Alexandria, and completed his junior year in a high school at Washington, D. C. Leaving school in 1910, he spent four years learning the trade of machinist at Alexandria, and worked as a journeyman for one year. He was then in a real estate business until February, 1917, when he came to Bozeman in the service of the United States Bureau of Fisheries. In February, 1919, he resigned and became local agent for the Henningsen Produce Company, which is one of the largest produce companies in the Northwest, with headquarters at Butte and branch houses in many towns and cities.

Mr. Schofield is a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church, is affiliated with Bozeman Lodge No. 463, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and with Seminole Wigwam No. 35, Improved Order of Red Men at Alexandria. He is unmarried and makes his home in the Y. M. C. A. Building at Bozeman.

JAMES M. NOYES. In so many instances the same spirit which brought the venturesome from the seaboard states along the Atlantic to the then wild lands of Ohio and Indiana, prompted their sons to journey a little further West, and their grandsons to take up the line of march toward the setting sun. A review of the lives of the majority of those who are making history for Montana and other of the Western states proves this, and also shows that other desirable characteristics of the pioneers of years ago have been inherited as well as that of the reaching forth into new territory. James M. Noyes, city treasurer of Billings, is a striking instance of this, for he not only comes of a pioneer father, but his grandfather came into Indiana at a very early day in its history from one of the Eastern states and became a tavern keeper at Manchester, Dearborn County, his old fashioned hostelry being located on an old road between Lawrenceburg and Indianapolis. Here he rounded out a long and useful life, dying a highly respected resident of Manchester.

James M. Noyes was born in Southern Indiana, in the woods seventeen miles south of Madison, July 22, 1858, a son of Israel Noyes. The latter was born in Pennsylvania in 1834, and there grew to manhood. He came to Ripley County, Indiana, at a time when pioneer conditions prevailed, and securing undeveloped land, cleared it off and made of it one of the best farms in his neighborhood, and here he is still residing. He is a republican, having lived through the birth and growth of that party. The Methodist Episcopal Church holds his membership, and receives his hearty support both of money and personal effort. After coming to Ripley County, Indiana, Mr. Noyes was united in marriage with Isabella Perdue, born in Ripley County in 1844, and she died on the homestead in 1874, having borne her husband the following children: James M., whose name heads this review; Leander, who died at the age of twelve years; Mattie, who married a Mr. Williams, a farmer and blacksmith, lives in Ripley County; Charles, who is an Illinois farmer; Cora, who died at the age of sixteen years; and Anna, who married a physician and moved to one of the Southern states. After the death of his first wife Israel Noyes was married second to Harriet Perdue, a sister of the first Mrs. Noyes, and she died shortly afterward, leaving no issue. As his third wife Israel Noyes married Bettie Hyatt, who was born in 1849 in Ripley County, Indiana, and they had children as follows: Emma, who married a Mr. Kenneth, a farmer, lives in Dearborn County, Indiana; Elmer, who resides on the homestead in Ripley County; and William, who is a farmer of Ripley County.

Until he was nineteen years old James M. Noyes remained at home alternating attendance at the local schools with farm work, but at that time he left the parental roof and spent a year in Missouri in farm labor. Returning to Ripley County, he was employed in a sawmill for a year, and then went West, going first to York County, Nebraska, where from 1881 to 1883 he was employed on a farm. For the subsequent six years he was engaged in a coal business at Geneva, Nebraska, but sold it to go into the hotel business in that city, in which he continued until 1893. In that year he became proprietor of the Ashland, Nebraska, Hotel, and conducted it until 1897, when he sold his interests and moved to Sheridan, Wyoming, and that city continued his home until 1901. From 1901 to 1904 Mr. Noyes was proprietor of the Wymore, Nebraska, Hotel, but sold it in the latter year, and going to Kansas City, Missouri, conducted a restaurant there for two years. During 1906 Mr. Noyes came to Montana, and locating at Marshall River, Yellowstone County, helped to build 106 miles of the Milwaukee Railroad, and continued his railroad construction work at New Ontario, in the extreme northern part of Canada, assisting in laying 150 miles of the government railroad, and remaining there from October, 1907, to April, 1908. In the latter year he came to Billings, which has since continued his home. Upon his arrival in this city he embarked in a cigar business under the name of the Billings Cigar Company, and conducted it until 1913, when he became associated with the United States Telephone Company, leaving it in 1915 to once more go into the cigar business, which he sold in 1917 to devote all his attention to the duties of the office of city treasurer of Billings, to which he had been elected on the republican ticket, his office now being in the City Hall. He had already had experience as a public official, as he had served as a member of the City Council of Gevena, Nebraska. In former years he was a member of the order of Elks, but no longer maintains his connection with that fraternity.

In 1880 Mr. Noyes was united in marriage with Miss Laura L. Lane, born at Madison, Indiana, where the wedding ceremony was performed. Mr. and Mrs. Noyes have the following children: Carrie, who is Mrs. Benjamin Reynolds, is a widow, her husband having been a railroad contractor, who died leaving her with the following children, Mary Louise, Caroline, Tyler and Benjamin; Anna, who married Lon Button, a music teacher, lives at Billings and has one child, Anna; Louise, who died in March, 1917, aged twenty-eight years, married Frank Allen, associated with the Thompson Lumber Company, and since her death he lives with Mr. Noyes, and has one daughter, Louise; James L., who is mentioned below; and Horace, who is also mentioned below. James L. Noyes enlisted for service during the Great war in the aviation branch, December 1, 1917, and was mustered out a sergeant at Hampton, Virginia, in February, 1919. Returning to Billings, Montana, he entered the employ of the Billings Hardware Company. Horace Noyes is another of the young men of Billings who enlisted at the call of their country during the Great war, on the same day as his brother, and he too was mustered out as a sergeant at Hampton, Virginia. Upon his return to Billings, his services were secured by the Stone, Ordean, Wells Company as city salesman.

During all of his changes in location and business Mr. Noyes has ever displayed the same enthusiasm for his work which made him successful at the beginning of his career, and at the same time he cultivated his talent for making and retaining friends. Always interested in civic matters, since coming to Billings he has paid special attention to local politics, and his election to his present office was a happy choice on the part of his constituents, and the record he is making indicates that other honors will probably be offered him, for he possesses those qualities which enable a man to give the public efficient service.

S. E. Dodge, general manager and a director of the Park Milling Company at Livingston, is an aggressive young business man with a veteran's experience in the flour milling and grain business, and acquired his active experience in the northwestern states of Minnesota and Montana.

Mr. Dodge was born in Waseca County, Minnesota, September 9, 1881. His paternal ancestors came originally from England and were early settlers in Pennsylvania. His father, D. J. Dodge, was born in New York State in 1846. When a boy he was taken to Waseca County, Minnesota, grew up there, and was a youthful soldier in the Civil war. He was a farmer and for many years engaged in the hardware business in Waseca County and since 1917 has lived retired at Minneapolis. At one time he represented Waseca County in the Legislature, for two terms was county treasurer, was clerk of court three terms, altogether twelve years, and, as these offices indicate was one of the most prominent men of affairs in that county. Politically he is a republican, is very much interested in the Episcopal Church, and is a Mason. D. J. Dodge married Flora E. Long, who was born in 1852. Their oldest child, Harley, died in infancy. Edith is a trained nurse with home in Milwaukee, and for two years during the World war was an army nurse in France. Ethel is the wife of D. C. Cordry, who is division sales manager at Minneapolis for Marshall Field & Company of Chicago. Myra lives with her parents and is cashier for the Thorpe Company of Minneapolis. The next in age is S. E. Dodge. Flora is unmarried and is assistant cashier of the Twenty-sixth Street State Bank at Minneapolis.

S. E. Dodge as a boy attended the rural schools of his native county and in 1898 graduated from the Janesville High School. The following three years he worked with the County State Bank at Janesville, but since that time his experience has been almost altogether in the flour milling industry. He spent nine years with the Winnebago Flour Mill of Winnebago, Minnesota, beginning as bookkeeper and being promoted to assistant manager. For three years he was sales manager of the Chippewa Milling Company at Montevidio, Minnesota, and then became sales manager of the Crescent Milling Company at Fairfax, Minnesota, remaining there three years.

Mr. Dodge came to Livingston in the fall of 1917. The Park Milling Company in which he is a stockholder and director, as well as manager of the mills, was organized in December, 1916, and operates on a capital of $50,000. The company has a modern equipped mill with a capacity for 200 barrels daily, also has a large elevator, and the industry serves to convert much of the hard wheat raised around Livingston into products ready for consumption. The head of the company is J. M. Darroch, president, a resident of Spokane, Washington. The vice president is H. B. Futter, a ranch owner in the Shields Valley. F. B. Holcomb, of Livingston, is secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Dodge is a republican, and is a vestryman in the Episcopal Church at Livingston. He is affiliated with the Lodge of Masons at Fairfax, Minnesota, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks at Willmar in that state, and is a member of the Rotary Club of Livingston, and the Livingston Chamber of Commerce. He resides at 319 North Main Street. In 1916 he married at Chicago Miss Anna Bradke, a daughter of August and Carolina (Schultz) Bradke. Her parents are retired farmers living at Maxwell, Iowa.

John William Brophy, M. D. A Butte physician and surgeon whose skill and attainments are readily recognized, Doctor Brophy is member of an old Irish family, several of whom are represented in Montana, and before taking up the study of medicine he was employed in a business capacity in Butte.

Doctor Brophy was born in County Carlow, Ireland, April 1, 1885. His grandfather, Thomas Brophy, was born in 1808 and died in 1879, spending his entire life as a farmer in Ireland. He married Johanna Walsh, a native of Wexford County, who died in 1903 at the age of eighty-six. They were the parents of nine children, one of whom is Patrick J. Brophy, a Montana business man for over thirty years.

James Brophy, father of Doctor Brophy, was born in County Carlow in 1850 and spent his life there in the quiet vocation of farming. He died in December, 1885. He was a member of the Nationalist party, the Catholic church, and the Land League. He married Elizabeth Nourse, who was born in County Carlow in 1845 and died there in 1910. Of their children Doctor Brophy was the youngest. Thomas, the oldest, is a farmer in County Carlow; James has long been a resident of Butte, connected with commission houses and in the automobile business; Patrick is a farmer in County Carlow; and Joanna is the wife of Sylvester Bourke, a farmer in County Wicklow, Ireland.

Doctor Brophy was educated in the country schools and the Christian Brothers School of County Carlow, and received the equivalent of a high school education in St. Mary's Seminary at Carlow. In 1909 he graduated with the A. B. degree from the Royal University of Ireland at Dublin, and very soon afterward came to the United States and located at Butte. For one year he was employed by the Hennessy Company, for another year taught Latin in the Mount St. Charles College at Helena, and then entered the Medical Department of Creighton University in Nebraska, where he took the regular course and graduated M. D. in 1915. This was followed by a period of intensive training in St. Joseph's Hospital at Denver, where he spent fifteen months as an interne. On returning to Butte he was for one year a member of the staff of St. James Hospital, and in July, 1917, accepted an appointment to the staff of the Montana State Hospital for the Insane at Warm Springs. Doctor Brophy returned to Butte and engaged in a general practice as a physician and surgeon in June, 1919. His offices are in the Phoenix Building. He is a member of the Silver Bow Medical Society, the State Medical Society, is a Fellow of the American Medical Association and a member of the American Medical Psychological Association.

Doctor Brophy, who is unmarried and resides in the Curtis Hotel at 21 West Park Street, is a democrat, a member of the Catholic Church, is a third degree Knight of Columbus, being affiliated with Helena Council No. 844, and is also a member of the Knights of the Maccabees of the World and the Fraternal Brotherhood.

Ira D. Franklin. Self-made men deserve more credit for what they accomplish in life than those whose prosperity is the result of inherited wealth or the outcome of technical knowledge supplied by collegiate training. One of the advantages of this country, and one that is emphasized in its Western states, is that no height is too high for the ambitious, hard-working lad to aim for, and to the credit of those who have their own way to make be it said that a very large percentage not only reach but pass the goal of their youthful hopes. One of these men who owes all he today owns and is to his personal sturdiness and faithful endeavors is Ira D. Franklin, proprietor of the "F-Bar-W" Ranch on the Little Powder River, who came to Montana as a runaway lad of twelve years, and has since made this state his home and the field of his operations.

Ira D. Franklin was born at Canton, Minnesota, September 17, 1874, a son of John Demster and Celia Maude (Stevens) Franklin. John D. Franklin was born in New York State, his father being a canal boatman on the Erie Canal, but left his native place for Minnesota and for a time was engaged in farming. He then went to Valley City, North Dakota, and engaged in a hotel business, and he also lived at Jamestown, North Dakota. His death occurred at Canton, Minnesota, but his widow survives him and is now Mrs. Oliver Brown of Puget Sound, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Franklin had two sons, namely: Ira D. and Walter, also of Little Powder River.

Until he ran away from home on account of disagreements with his step-father Ira D. Franklin attended the schools of Jamestown, North Dakota, and has supplemented the knowledge there gained by close observation and contact with men. He boarded a freight train at Jamestown and rode it to Miles City, beating his way, for the child had no money, and although thrown off it several times by overzealous trainmen, he managed to crawl back and reached his destination with a sound body. Upon reaching Miles City he secured employment in the restaurant of Reuben Riley, working for his board until he found a paying job driving a team for Charley Becker. All through the ensuing winter this little lad drove a team in all kinds of weather, receiving for the work $20 per month and board, and he earned every cent he received.

The following spring he went to work as sheepman and herder for W. E. Harris, and remained with him for five years, and then left, for he found he was making no headway, his sole assets after all his hard work being his horse, saddle, bed and $23 in money. Making his way to the Little Powder River, Mr. Franklin made some money during the subsequent winter in hunting and trapping, catching coyotes and wolves and killing deer and antelope. The next spring he engaged with the "YT" outfit as horse wrangler, and remained with it as long as the firm was in the cattle business. He next went with the Biddle Cattle Company on the Little Powder River, and also saw them wind up their affairs, for the closing of the open range was putting these old-time outfits out of the industry. While still engaged as a hand, Mr. Franklin had seen the approaching end and invested his savings in horses, and when he left the ranch of the Biddle Company he began speculating in horses.

Like all of the forehanded cowboys of that period, Mr. Franklin had taken up a claim, which was located on Horse Creek, and here he developed a ranch of 1½ sections of land, maintaining there his home until 1918. His pioneer home was a "hole in the bank," and he confesses that while living there alone his housekeeping arrangements resembled those of a coyote. However, he never lacked for plenty to eat, and could sit in the doorway of his dugout and shoot both deer and antelope.

In 1910 Mr. Franklin acquired the Matheney Ranch on the Little Powder River, and has improved it with a view of making it his permanent home. His residence is a modern ten-room bungalow, lighted by the Delco system, and supplied with hot and cold water and bath, with a full basement beneath, equipped with laundry conveniences, and a furnace for hot water heating of the house. His outlay on his house cost him $13,000. His other permanent buildings are his granary, with a capacity of 3,500 bushels on the first floor and 8,000 bushels on the second, with a driveway running through it, and a garage, blacksmith and tool shop for the care of his machinery, all of which he takes care of himself, having a natural attitude for the work. This ranch consists of 320 acres, and he is farming more than half of it, the land being under a water ditch of his own construction, his big reservoir impounding water for his irrigation supply. In addition to his ranching interests Mr. Franklin is a stockholder of the Powder National Bank of Broadus and the Broadus Independent Publishing Company, owners of the weekly newspaper issued at the county seat of Powder River County.

Mr. Franklin has been twice married, first at Belle Fourche, South Dakota, June 1, 1905, to Ina Crinklaw, a daughter of Angus Crinklaw, a Scotchman by birth and a ranchman by occupation. Mrs. Franklin was reared in South Dakota. She died in 1906, leaving a son, Gerald. Mr. Franklin was married secondly to Miss Myra Emigh, a daughter of Peter Emigh, who was born at Friend, Nebraska, in 1884. Mr. and Mrs. Franklin have five children, namely: Eva, Dale, Lela, Ernest and Annie. Since casting his first presidential vote for William McKinley in 1896, Mr. Franklin has given an earnest support to the republican party on national issues. He has served his district as trustee for six years, and during the great war subscribed the limit for baby bonds and very liberally for the other bond issues and auxiliary war work, having always hewed to the line as a true American for the advancement of his community and his country, never willing to shirk the duties before him or pass over what he felt ought to be carried on. Had there not been in the makeup of the lad who made his way into the state the essentials of true manhood and noble character, the man of today could not have been developed. At a period when the majority of children are tenderly cherished Ira D. Franklin had to depend entirely upon his own exertions to keep life in his body and clothing on it, and yet no one ever heard him whine then, or complain since, and out of those early hardships he has emerged a he-man, sound, reliable and dependable, a fine product of a fine state, and one of whom other residents of Montana have every reason to be very proud.

JOHN PARKER WATSON. Among the younger generation of business citizens who have come rapidly to the forefront in recent years as participants in the business life of Logan, few have made a more favorable impression upon their associates than has John Parker Watson, manager of the Copeland Lumber Company. His career has been one of steady and consistent advancement, for he began at the bottom of the ladder in the lumber business, and through his own ability has raised himself to a place where he is an active factor in the development of the industry in this section.

Mr. Watson was born at Somerset, Kentucky, November 6, 1894, a son of Andrew Jackson and Lola Ellen (Gragg) Watson. His grandfather, John H. Watson, was born in 1837, in Kentucky, where he was a farmer and sheriff of Pulaski County. In 1901 he came to near Belgrade, Montana, where he ranched for a time, subsequently resided at Belgrade for about two years, and about 1909 moved to his present ranch of 640 acres near Three Forks, where he continues in successful operations, being accounted one of the substantial men of his locality.

Andrew Jackson Watson was born in 1859, at Somerset, Kentucky, where he was reared and married, and while farming also served as deputy sheriff of Pulaski County under his father. In 1899 he became a pioneer farmer near Manhattan, Montana, where he also became a prominent and influential citizen, and was made county road supervisor, a position which he was holding at the time he was accidentally killed by a train at Central Park, Montana, in May, 1904. He was a democrat and a member of the Masonic fraternity, and was a man of excellent reputation and the strictest integrity. Mrs. Watson, who survives him and is a resident of Manhattan, Montana, was born in Pulaski County, Kentucky, in 1869. They were the parents of three children: John Parker, of this review; Susie Bobbitt, the wife of Frank Curtice, of Manhattan, deputy sheriff of Gallatin County; and Andrew Jackson, attending high school at Manhattan, where he resides with his mother.

John Parker Watson received his education in the graded schools of Manhattan and the Gallatin County High School, which he attended through the sophomore year, and when he left the latter institution in 1910, began work on a ranch near Manhattan, where he remained two years. In 1912 he received his introduction to the lumber business at Manhattan, starting at the bottom as yard man for the Flint-Lynn Lumber Company. He remained there until 1915 and then went to Anaconda, where he contributed one year to the carpenter trade, and after a sickness of one year's duration went to Amsterdam and began to work as yard man for the Copeland Lumber Company. There he won steady promotion until he was chosen as manager for the yard of this concern at Logan, the only one here, and assumed the duties of his new position in March, 1918. He has continued in the same capacity ever since, and has proven himself an energetic, progressive and thoroughly capable business man, fully competent to represent his concern's interests. The yards and offices are situated along the Northern Pacific Railway tracks, and the headquarters of the concern are located at Bozeman.

Mr. Watson is a democrat, but the duties of his position have demanded his attention to an extent that has precluded the idea of his entering actively into public affairs. He is unmarried.

SIG GOODFRIEND. Of recent years due appreciation has been shown to the genius and ability of the salesman, whether he sells his own goods in his own store or acts as a representative for others. Salesmanship is something which cannot be learned unless a person possesses that innate something which enables him to sense a demand, and then study out the best way to meet that demand.

One of the men of Montana who has risen to heights of prosperity through his salesmanship is Sig Goodfriend, the leading men's clothing and supply merchant in this part of the state, who is doing a rousing, big business at Anaconda.

Mr. Goodfriend was born at St. Louis, Missouri, March 3, 1864, a son of Simon Goodfriend, a native of Hamburg, Germany, where he was born in 1821. After his marriage Simon Goodfriend came to the United States from Hamburg and located at St. Louis, Missouri, where for some years he carried on a bakery. In 1870 he went to Collinsville, Illinois, but when he retired he returned to St. Louis and there he died in 1886. He married Theressa Heller, who was born at Hamburg, Germany, and died at St. Louis in 1881. Their children were as follows: Louis, who lives in California; Rose and Annie, both of whom are deceased; Bertha, who is also deceased; Sig, whose name heads this review; Samuel, who is deceased; Jacob, who is in Texas; and David, who is in California.

Sig Goodfriend attended the public schools of Collinsville, Illinois, until he was thirteen years old, and then left Illinois for the West, going first to Grand Island, Nebraska, where for twenty-one months he was cashier in a general merchandise store. Returning to St. Louis, he spent eleven months in that city as stock boy in a clothing store, and then for two years was at New Douglas, Illinois, working in a general store owned by his brother-in-law, Simon Epstein. During these years Mr. Goodfriend learned to gauge public needs and felt qualified to go into business for himself, which he did at Sidney, Nebraska, for twelve years conducting a mercantile establishment. On September 9, 1895, having looked the territory over, Mr. Goodfriend felt that here in Anaconda he would find an opening for a store he had had long in mind, and therefore opened it up, at first, until he could try out his plan, in a small way, gradually expanding until he now has the leading establishment of its kind in this part of Montana. Mr. Goodfriend carries a full and timely stock of men's and boys' clothing and wearing apparel in his store at Nos. 113 and 115 East Park Avenue. His trade is drawn from the careful dressers of Anaconda and Deer Lodge County, who appreciate the fact that they can secure from him everything worn by men and boys and be sure that each article is the best of its kind and entirely suitable for the purpose for which it is designed. Employment is given eight salespersons, and an unsurpassed service is rendered.

Mr. Goodfriend is a democrat, but his business cares have been too heavy for his entrance into politics. Fraternally he belongs to Anaconda Lodge No. 239, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Colfax Lodge No. 20, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is past grand; and Montana Lodge No. 13, Knights of Pythias, of which he is past chancellor. He is also a member of the Rotary Club, which he served as secretary for two years; the Anaconda Country Club and the Rocky Mountain Club. Mr. Goodfriend owns a business block at the corner of Chestnut Street and Park Avenue.

On February 23, 1897, Mr. Goodfriend was married at Seattle, Washington, to Miss Rose Deppe, born at Decatur, Illinois, in 1872, and who died at Hot Springs, Arkansas, April 2, 1919. Mr. and Mrs. Goodfriend had no children. Mr. Goodfriend has always recognized the fact that it was essential to possess high moral character as well as business ability, and has chosen his assistants with this idea in mind, so that he has been instrumental in developing among his force high types of citizenship and in this, as in other ways, furthering the advancement of the city in which he has been located for so many constructive years and of which he is recognized to be so potent a factor.

JAMES MCCLARTY, sheriff of Park County, has been identified with this section of Montana for many years, was an early homesteader, and while formerly owner of a fine ranch, he was also prominently engaged in business at Wilsall, and that community was his home until he came to Livingston to administer the responsibilities of his present office.

Mr. McClarty was born at Owen Sound, Ontario, Canada, in January, 1862. His grandfather, James McClarty, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, in 1779, and on coming to Canada established his home on a farm at Owen Sound. He was a prominent character in that locality in the early days. He was a skillful fifer, and it is said that he played on his fife the first tune of music ever heard in Owen Sound. He died there in 1869. William McClarty, his son, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, in 1829, and was nine years old when he accompanied his parents in 1838 to Ontario, Canada. He grew up at Owen Sound, was reared and married there, and spent his life as a farmer. In 1900 he sold his farm interests and lived retired at Owen Sound until his death in 1915. He was a conservative in politics, was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and was active in the English Episcopal Church. William McClarty married Catherine Morrissey, who was born in County Clare, Ireland, in 1837. She accompanied her parents in 1844 to one of the new farms of western Canada, and her death occurred at Owen Sound in 1911. Of their children, Jane, the oldest, died at the age of seven years, while Ellen, the second, has never married and is still living at Owen Sound. The third is James, while the fourth is William, a farmer in Ontario. Hugh and Melinda both died in early childhood. Albert Allen when nine years of age went to New York City, was educated there, and was a collector for Whitehall & Tatem, a wholesale drug house, until he died at the age of thirty. Esther lives at Owen Sound, but spent her married life on a farm in Saskatchewan, Canada. Dan is in the mining business at British Columbia. Frederick Charles is a farmer at Owen Sound. Ernest was a farmer at Swift Current in Saskatchewan, and died there in 1918. May is the wife of Isaac Glenn, a farmer at Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan.

James McClarty was educated in the public schools of Owen Sound, and lived on his father's farm until he was twenty-six years of age. It was in 1889 that he came to Livingston, Montana, and the first year was a farm hand on the Shields River. He then took up a homestead of 160 acres of railroad land, and finally bought the remainder of his section from the railroad company. He owned 640 acres, and had it well developed as a farm and ranch. He sold this in 1911, and afterward acquired 440 acres of ranch lands, and sold this property in 1919.

Meanwhile, in 1907, Mr. McClarty had engaged in the livery business at Livingston, and three and a half years later sold out and went to Wilsall, a new town on the Shields River branch. He was the source of much of the enterprise in that new community and engaged in the livery, feed, sales stables, draying and transfer business until the fall of 1918, and still owns the business, its active manager being his son-in-law, John R. Haley. Mr. McClarty also owns three dwelling houses at Wilsall, is a director of the Farmers Elevator there, and still keeps in touch with the affairs of that community.

Mr. McClarty was elected sheriff of Park County in November, 1918, and began his official duties for a term of two years January 7, 1919. For three and a half years previously he had served as deputy sheriff, but kept supervision over his business interests at the same time. While living on his farm Mr. McClarty served as postmaster five years at Lat. He is a republican, is a member of the Livingston Chamber of Commerce, and is affiliated with Wilsall Lodge No. 103, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Wilsall Lodge, Brotherhood of American Yeomen. He actively supports both the Presbyterian and Congregational churches.

November 29, 1890, he married Miss Margaret D. Mitchell, daughter of Alexander and Susan (Thompson) Mitchell. Her mother resides at Owen Sound, Ontario, where her father died. Her father spent all his life as a teacher. Mrs. McClarty died at Wilsall September 30, 1917, and was the mother of three children. Anna May, the oldest, is the wife of John R. Haley, mentioned above as a partner of Mr. McClarty in the business at Wilsall. Ellen Elsie is the wife of Virgil L. Sherwin, manager of the grocery department of the Wilsall Mercantile Company. Violet Mitchell married Arthur I. Poor, a grocery merchant at Bozeman, Montana. Mr. McClarty was married June 4, 1919, to Mrs. Eloise Helen Tuggle, widow of the late Archie B. Tuggle, of Shields, Montana. Mrs. McClarty has two children by her former husband, Beatrice Tuggle, aged twelve years, and Lawrence, aged ten years.

MERLE C. GROENE, deputy county attorney of Fergus County, and a member of the prominent law firm of McConochie, Groene & McKenna at Lewistown, has been prominently before the public in several capacities since his arrival in January, 1916. As a private practitioner and in the performance of his official duties he has evidenced the possession of a thorough knowledge of the principles, theories and practice of his calling, and as citizen and soldier has shown his public spiritedness and patriotism.

Mr. Groene was born at Atchison, Kansas, June 12, 1886, a son of John H. and Lucy A. (Hommer) Groene, natives respectively of Ohio and Indiana, and the parents of two children, of whom Merle C. is the elder. John H. Groene is now a prosperous real estate dealer of Kansas City, Kansas, and takes an interest in republican politics. Merle C. Groene attended the graded and high schools of Kansas City, Kansas, following which he enrolled as a student at the University of Kansas, Lawrence, graduating with his degree of Bachelor of Law in 1909. He was admitted to the bar of Kansas, but in the same year came to Kalispell, Montana, and in July, 1909, was granted permission to practice in this state. Subsequently he located at Whitefish, where he was appointed city attorney, and filled that office for four years in an entirely capable manner, handling many cases and protecting the city's interests in a masterly way. His work in this office gained him the appointment of public administrator of Flathead County, an office which he held for two years, and in which he also displayed his capacity for executive work, and in January, 1916, came to Lewistown, where he embarked in general practice. On January 1, 1917, Mr. Groene was appointed chief deputy county attorney for Fergus County, but resigned that office July 1, 1918, to enlist in the service of his country, and August 4, 1918, arrived at Camp Johnston, Florida. He received his commission as second lieutenant, and was assigned as an instructor in the officers' training school of that camp. The signing of the armistice, which terminated hostilities, made the need of further service unnecessary, and Lieutenant Groene received his honorable discharge December 4, 1918. Returning to Lewistown, he resumed his duties as chief deputy county attorney, and again engaged in practice as a member of the firm of McConochie, Groene & McKenna. This firm is accounted one of the strong legal combinations of the county and has taken part in much important litigation, in which Mr. Groene has exemplified his legal acumen and soundness of knowledge. He belongs to the county, state and national bodies of his profession, and has an excellent reputation among his fellow practitioners, who have found him a valued associate and a worthy and honorable opponent. Mr. Groene's fraternal affiliations are with Whitefish Lodge No. 64, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, the Loyal Order of Moose, Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Phi Alpha Delta college fraternity, and he and Mrs. Groene belong to Marie Chapter No. 36, Order of the Eastern Star. His political views make him a democrat.

J. A. Thaler

On July 19, 1911, Mr. Groene was married to Miss Leah G. Stephenson, who was born at Bozeman, Montana, the second of the three children of John E. and Edith (Tipton) Stephenson, residents of Westphalia, Kansas, where Mr. Stephenson is engaged in the banking business.

JOSEPH A. THALER. It is a pleasure to investigate the career of a successful, self-made man. Peculiar honor attaches to that individual who, beginning the great struggle of life alone and unaided, gradually overcomes unfavorable environment, removes one by one the obstacles from the pathway of success and by the master strokes of his own force and vitality succeeds in forging his way to the front and winning for himself a position of esteem and influence among his fellow men. Such is the record of the popular member of the faculty of the Montana State College, to a brief synopsis of whose life and character the following paragraphs are devoted.

Joseph A. Thaler, professor of electrical engineering in the Montana State College at Bozeman, was born at Koessen, Austria, and is the son of Michael A. and Anna Thaler. Michael A. Thaler was born in 1849 at Koessen, and his entire life was spent there, his death occurring in 1909. He was a scythe manufacturer and filled a place of importance in the community. His wife was born at Koessen in 1851, and died there in 1882. To them was born the following children: Michael is a lithographer by trade and is employed by the Morgan Lithographic Company at Cleveland, Ohio; Joseph A. is the next in the order of birth; Jacob and Anna remain in Austria; Elizabeth is the wife of Simon Zimmerman, a retired scythe manufacturer of Kitzbuhel, Austria.

Joseph A. Thaler received his educational training in the public schools of his native town, but at the age of twelve years he left his studies and was apprenticed to a locksmith for four years, as was the custom in that country at that time. After completing his apprenticeship Mr. Thaler worked as a journeyman locksmith until 1883, when he decided to come to the United States in the hope of finding opportunities of bettering himself. Upon reaching this country he continued westward as far as Salt Lake City, stopping on the way at Kansas City, Missouri, Colorado and other states en route. Shortly afterward he enlisted in the United States Army, being assigned to the Sixth Regiment of United States Infantry, with which he served five years. He served as clerk in the commissary department and also acted as commissary sergeant. In 1889 Mr. Thaler went to St. Paul, Minnesota, and for a year was employed as a hotel clerk. He then entered the employ of the street car company of that city as a conductor, but was later made a night foreman, and still later day foreman, in which capacity he served until 1894. He then entered the University of Minnesota, at Minneapolis, where he was graduated in 1900 from the department of electrical engineering. This important event in Mr. Thaler's life was but the culmination of previous efforts he had been making, as opportunity offered to secure a technical education. While in the army he had attended the schools provided by the army and Young Men's Christian Association. When admitted to the university he was at first only admitted as a special student, as it was not thought that he was qualified for university work, but he showed such aptitude for study and such progress that he was admitted as a regular student. While at college he became a member of the Greek-letter fraternity Sigma Xi. During his senior year he was an instructor in mathematics in the university, and in 1900 he was appointed instructor in engineering and mathematics for half the time, the remainder of his time being spent in the engineering department of the street railway. During this same period Mr. Thaler also taught in the night schools of the Young Men's Christian Association, so it can be seen that he did not have much leisure time. In 1902 Mr. Thaler received an appointment as assistant professor of mechanical engineering in the Montana State College at Bozeman. In 1903 he became an instructor in mathematics in Purdue University, at Lafayette, Indiana, but a year later he returned to the Montana State College as professor of electrical engineering, which chair he is still filling. His offices are in the Engineering Building. Professor Thaler is one of the most popular members of the faculty, not only because of his genial and approachable disposition, but also because of his splendid ability as an instructor, for he thoroughly understands his subject and possesses an unusual capacity for imparting his knowledge to others.

Professor Thaler owns a comfortable and attractive home on Third Avenue, South, which he built in 1910, and also owns a splendid ranch of 640 acres, located about thirty miles northwest of Bozeman.

Politically Professor Thaler is independent of party lines, preferring to support the candidates and policies which meet his approval. Religiously he is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and his fraternal relations are with Western Star Lodge No. 4, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a fellow of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, and also belongs to the Montana Engineers Society, the Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education, and the National Educational Association.

In 1910 Professor Thaler was married to Mabel Thorpe, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Thorpe, of Bozeman, the father being a civil engineer and surveyor by profession. Mrs. Thaler graduated from the Montana State College with the degree of Bachelor of Science, and subsequently received the degree of Master of Science from Wooster University of Ohio. To Professor and Mrs. Thaler have been born the following children: Joseph Thorpe, born November 21, 1911, and Gretchen Adalaide, born August 31, 1913.

Personally Professor Thaler is affable and popular and stands ready at all times to encourage and aid all laudable measures and enterprises for the general good. By a life consistent in motive and because of his fine qualities of head and heart he has earned the sincere regard of a vast acquaintance, and his success in his chosen field of endeavor bespeaks for him the possession of superior attributes.

WILLIAM REECE PLEW, B. S. The career of William Reece Plew, of Bozeman, is an illustration of the possible control over limitations and the rewards to be acquired through the accepting of ordinary opportunities through the medium of determination and industry backed by unswerving ambition. Granted only a common school education in his youth, he found himself able to secure advanced instruction and training through his own efforts, and in this way has risen to a place of marked prestige among the educators of Montana, as professor of civil and architectural engineering in the Montana State College.

William R. Plew was born at Merom, Indiana, October 31, 1878, a son of James and Ellen (Salesbury) Plew, and a grandson of Simon Plew, who came from Pennsylvania as a pioneer to Indiana and passed his life as a shoemaker, his death occurring in Sullivan County, that state, prior to the birth of his grandson. James Plew was born in Sullivan County in 1828, and was there reared and married. When still a young man he went to Merom, Indiana, where he conducted a ferry on the Wabash River, but later removed to Hutsonville, Crawford County, Illinois, where he spent the remainder of his career as a farmer and died in 1883. He was an undeviating republican of the old school, and during the Civil war served the Union in the capacity of secret agent. Mr. Plew married Ellen Salesbury, who was born in 1845 in Crawford County, Illinois, and died at Hutsonville in 1890, and they became the parents of six children; namely Charles, a railroad man of Flat Rock, Illinois; Perry, who is engaged in business at Kellogg, Idaho; James U., a machinist of Rockport, Indiana; Miss Hester, of Hutsonville, Illinois; Mary, the wife of Adolphus Lawhead, of Kellogg, Idaho; and William Reece.

William Reece Plew was sent to the public schools of Hutsonville, Illinois, and in the spring of 1898 was graduated from the high school there. During that same year war was declared upon Spain by the United States, and Mr. Plew, who possessed some musical talent, enlisted December 20, 1898, in the band of the Fourth Illinois Infantry, with which he was sent to Savannah, Georgia, and then to Havana, Cuba, where he saw several months of service. Returning to the United States when peace was declared, he was mustered out of the service May 2, 1899, and then returned to Hutsonville, where he secured employment in a drug store. After one year he removed to Palestine, Illinois, where he became the proprietor of a news and periodical stand, and so firmly established himself in the confidence of the people that he was elected town clerk and subsequently city clerk. By 1903 he was ready to continue his educational training, and at that time went to Terre Haute, Indiana, and enrolled as a student at Rose Polytechnic Institute. He was graduated therefrom with the class of 1907, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science in civil engineering, and in the fall of the same year was appointed instructor in civil engineering at the institute, a position which he filled during the regular winter terms, while in the summers he worked for the Paris Bridge Company of Paris, Illinois. In 1910 Mr. Plew resigned from his position at the Rose Polytechnic and came to Missoula, Montana, as instructor in civil engineering in the State University. He was made assistant professor there in 1911, and two years later was transferred to the School of Engineering in Bozeman as assistant professor in civil engineering. In 1914 he was advanced to professor of structural engineering, and in 1916 was elevated to professor of civil and architectural engineering, positions which he holds at this time. His offices are in the engineering building of the State College, while he maintains his home in the Evergreen Apartments. Mr. Plew is widely and favorably known in his profession, and is a valued member of the Montana Engineering Society and of the American Society of Civil Engineers. As a voter he maintains an independent stand, and his religious faith is that of the Christian Church, while fraternally he is affiliated with Bozeman Lodge No. 18, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Terre Haute Camp, Modern Woodmen of America.

In September, 1900, Mr. Plew was married at Palestine, Illinois, to Miss Elizabeth Batey, daughter of Thomas and Margaret (Hulse) Batey, the latter of whom survives at Palestine, Illinois, where Mr. Batey, now deceased, was a farmer for many years. Mr. and Mrs. Plew have one daughter, Maurine Lucille, born December 19, 1901, and a graduate of the Gallatin County High School. Miss Plew is eligible to membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Col. Francis M. Malone, of Miles City, one of the advisory editors of this publication, has been a prominent factor in Montana's life and affairs for over thirty-five years.

He located at Miles City in 1883 as representative of the livestock department of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, which he had previously served as traveling freight agent, with headquarters at Indianapolis. For many years Colonel Malone was general agent for the road over the territory of the Northwest, with headquarters at Helena. In March, 1907, he was retired on half pay and the following year severed his connection with the railway company and has since been active in looking after his varied interests in Montana.

Colonel Malone was born at Toronto in Vermilion County, Indiana, July 31, 1838, son of William L. and Nancy (Winn) Malone. His father was born in Pennsylvania in 1803 and was a pioneer settler on Government land in Vermilion County, Indiana. He spent his life as a farmer and died there in May, 1878. His wife was born in Ohio and died at the age of thirty-five.

Colonel Malone grew up in western Indiana, had a district school education and much training and discipline on the home farm. At eighteen he was working as a farm hand in Shelby County, Illinois. He left the farm and on August 12, 1861, enlisted in a local company, and not finding any assignment with an Illinois regiment he was mustered in at Quincy, Illinois, with other recruits for the First Kansas Cavalry, which afterward became the Seventh Kansas, known as the John Brown, Jr. Regiment. At Fort Leavenworth the regiment was organized as the First Kansas Cavalry, and Colonel Malone became captain of Company F on September 14, 1861. His early duties were along the border, but early in 1862 the regiment was ordered to Shiloh, and became part of a brigade commanded by Col. Philip Sheridan, in the Sixteenth Army Corps, commanded by Gen. A. J. Smith. Mr. Malone and his comrades reenlisted as veterans on November 19, 1864. Captain Malone was promoted to major August 12, 1863, was made lieutenant-colonel November 17, 1864, and was commissioned colonel of the regiment by Governor Crawford of Kansas, though never mustered in with that rank by reason of the regiment not attaining the required numerical strength. After the Civil war Colonel Malone participated in some of the Indian campaigns in the West, and for a time was post commander at Fort Kearney, Nebraska. He was mustered out at Fort Leavenworth with his regiment September 29, 1865. His army record shows that he was in the thick of the fighting and frequently courting responsibilities and dangers beyond the ordinary range of duty. Some of the high lights in his military record are the battles of Shiloh, Corinth, Tupelo, Holly Springs, and many of the engagements making up the history of the progress of the Union armies through Mississippi, Alabama, Tennessee and Missouri.

After the war Colonel Malone engaged in railroad contracting in Illinois, also became interested in lead mining in Kansas and near Joplin, Missouri, and in 1878-79 was in the gold and silver fields of Leadville, Colorado. From there he returned to Indiana and engaged in the livestock commission business at Indianapolis, subsequently taking up his duties with the railroad as above noted. For a number of years he was extensively engaged in the sheep business in Montana.

Colonel Malone has always distinguished himself by real patriotism, and as an old soldier of the Civil war he volunteered his services to the Government at the beginning of the Spanish-American war. He has been an active figure in the republican party for over half a century. While living in Illinois he was a state commissioner during the erection of the State Insane Asylum at Anna, Illinois, and the State Normal School at Carbondale. He was a presidential elector from Montana in 1892 and was a delegate to the national convention of the party in 1908. He is a member of the military order of the Loyal Legion, and is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason, a member of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, and Miles City Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

March 8, 1860, Colonel Malone married Miss Elizabeth Casey. She was born in Shelby County, Illinois, a daughter of Levi and Sarah Casey. Her father was the first white child born in Bond County, Illinois, and spent the greater part of his life as an Illinois farmer. Mrs. Malone was with her husband during the greater part of the war and spent her time nursing sick and wounded soldiers. March 8, 1910, Colonel and Mrs. Malone celebrated their golden wedding with a public reception at Miles City.

B. A. LEONARD. Throughout the country progressive educationalists are demanding of our public schools a wider and deeper service. Intelligent public opinion is dissatisfied with anything but the best methods of popular education, and many grave phenomena of our political, economic and social life have to be considered in the schoolroom. We are realizing more intelligently and keenly that not only is education the foundation of our national hope and the life blood of our progress, but also that the purely literary education of the American traditional method is too narrow to meet the needs of this generation. Vocational education and citizenship training must be developed in the public schools. Besides these broad considerations are new problems of health regulations and the care of backward children, the problem of vacation and continuation schools, the development of schools as civic and social centers, physical and pedagogical and social problems of the most practical kind. With such a situation before the people of America the responsibility of selecting the proper educators becomes heavier with each year, and to the credit of those entrusted with the matter be it said that never before in the history of the public schools have there been so many men and women of rare character and scholarly attainments in the profession, whose broad-minded and alert actions and quickness of appreciation of the needs of their pupils mark them as forceful factors in their field.

One of these educators who belong to the above mentioned class is B. A. Leonard, principal of the Granite County High School, who is an educator in the highest sense, a teacher of principles, a leader of the spirit as well as of the mind—creating an atmosphere of high ideals and self-respect among all classes, so that his occupancy of his position is a matter for civic pride and recognition. Mr. Leonard was born at Wallingford, Vermont, April 22, 1888, a son of Byron H. Leonard, and grandson of Nathan Leonard, born in Vermont in 1832, and who died in that same state in 1912, having been engaged in farming during all of his active years. He married Emily Johnson, who died at Hartford, New York. The Leonards came to the American colonies from England in 1638, locating in Massachusetts, and one of that name was the first foundryman in the New World.

Byron H. Leonard was born in Vermont in 1859, and after his marriage at Danby, Vermont, he moved to Wallingford, Vermont, where he still resides, being a carpenter by trade, and a contractor and builder by occupation. Since casting his first vote he has been a republican. The Congregational Church holds his membership. Byron H. Leonard married Elizabeth Quintal, born in Massachusetts in 1870, who died at Wallingford, Vermont, in 1915, and their only child was Professor Leonard.

After being graduated from the Wallingford High School, B. A. Leonard became a student of the Vermont Academy at Saxon's River, from which he was graduated in 1909. He then entered Middleburg College at Middleburg, Vermont, and after taking the regular course was graduated therefrom in 1913, with the degree of Bachelor of Science, and as a member of the Greek letter college fraternity Kappa Delta Rho.

Following his graduation in 1913 Professor Leonard came west to Chehalis, Washington, and was instructor in science and athletics in the Chehalis High School for two years, and then for three years taught the same branches in the Aberdeen, Washington, High School. For the subsequent year he was principal of the Sand Point, Idaho, High School, and then in June, 1919, came to Philipsburg to assume the duties pertaining to the principalship of the Granite County High School. He has eight teachers and 106 pupils under his supervision. Politically he is a republican. The Baptist Church furnishes him a medium for the expression of his religious beliefs.

In 1913 Professor Leonard was married at Wallingford, Vermont, to Miss Elizabeth Smith, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Smith, of Clinton, Massachusetts, the former of whom is now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Leonard have two children, namely: Gladys Delta, who was born October 8, 1914; and Elizabeth Vera, who was born April 22, 1917.

There is no more urgent problem before the country today than that of educational development, and no man of his profession is more keenly aware of this than Professor Leonard. He brings to his work not only a trained intellect and broad experience, but a love of his calling, an appreciation of the rights of his pupils and a winning personality which enables him to gain the confidence and affection of his pupils and stimulate them to put forth their best efforts.

MICHAEL J. O'CONNELL is proprietor and president of the Gallatin Laundry Company at Bozeman. He first saw the district comprising Bozeman when a boy of four years, and has had experience as a cowboy and in other lines, but for over twenty years has been a laundryman. He has been the means of making the Gallatin Laundry Company the largest enterprise of its kind in volume of business and excellence in mechanical equipment and service in Southern Montana.

Mr. O'Connell was born at Boston, Massachusetts, November 23, 1874. His father, John O'Connell, was born in County Cork, Ireland, in 1842, and in 1870 came to America and settled at Boston, where he married and where for several years he worked as a teamster. In 1878 he arrived in Yellowstone County on the site of the present City of Billings, homesteading a claim, and when he reached there only six other white families were in the valley. In the spring of 1879 he moved to Bozeman and continued as a farmer, rancher and stock man until his death in 1884. He was a democrat and a Catholic. John O'Connell married Catherine Lyon, who was born in County Cork in 1850 and is still living at Bozeman. She is the mother of four children: James, a farmer and manager of the Washoe Shoe Store at Belt, Montana; Michael J.; John, a railroad man who died at Dillon, Montana, in May, 1911; and Minnie, wife of H. J. Nelson, of Bozeman, Mr. Nelson being a railroad man of long experience, but is at present auditor for the Copeland Lumber Company.

Michael J. O'Connell received his early education in the public schools of Bozeman, leaving school at the age of fifteen. Later he took a business course through the International Correspondence School at Scranton, Pennsylvania. For six years he was in the employ of various cattle outfits as a cowboy and range rider. For 2½ years he was a messenger with the Northern Pacific Express Company, and then for three years engaged in the wood, coal and drayage business at Bozeman.

The Bozeman Steam Laundry was established in 1898. Mr. O'Connell drove one of its first wagons for the collection and delivery of laundry and was a wagon driver two years. He then acquired an eighth interest in the plant but a year later made it a quarter interest. In 1905 he and John Hagen bought out the business and in 1908 Mr. O'Connell sold his interest to his partner and gave his undivided time to his candidacy for the office of sheriff. He was not successful in the election and in the spring of 1909 he again acquired the laundry plant, his financial backer and partner being T. B. Story, whose interests he has since acquired. The Gallatin Laundry Company was incorporated in 1911, and Mr. O'Connell is president and proprietor, his wife, Mrs. O'Connell, being vice president, and Justin Smith, secretary and treasurer. The laundry plant was destroyed by fire in the fall of 1918 and it has been replaced by a modern building and plant with every mechanical appliance and facility for prompt and high class work. The plant is at the corner of Babcock Street and Bozeman Avenue, on a site formerly occupied by the old Ed Fridley stage barn, one of the interesting historic landmarks of Gallatin County. The Gallatin Laundry's services are by no means confined to Bozeman. It supplies a territory to Whitehall on the west, to White Sulphur Springs on the north and Columbus on the east, the business service, therefore, covering Gallatin, Sweetgrass, Park, Broadwater, Madison, Jefferson and Meagher counties.

Mr. O'Connell takes an active part in public affairs at Bozeman. For the past four years he has been a member of the City Council, and is president of the council. He has charge of the Bozeman City Waterworks and in 1908 was chief of the fire department. He is a democrat in politics, a member of the Catholic Church, is a third degree Knight of Columbus, being affiliated with Council No. 1413, and is a member of Bozeman Lodge No. 463, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is active in the Chamber of Commerce and is president of its Employers Association.

W. J. O'Donnell

Mr. O'Connell and family reside at 22 West Story Street, where he owns a modern home. He married at Bozeman in November, 1898, Miss Ada Hagan, daughter of Joseph and Mary F. (Kopp) Hagan. Her father was a brewer and died at Astoria, Oregon, while her mother died at Missoula, Montana, in May, 1918. Mr. and Mrs. O'Connell have four children: Clarence, born September 6, 1902, a graduate of the Gallatin County High School, and a student for two years in the high school at Seattle, Washington, now employed in his father's laundry; Kathryn born August 13, 1904, a sophomore in the Gallatin County High School; Martin, born August 21, 1907, and Emmett, born March 4, 1910, both students in the public schools at Bozeman.

EDWARD A. CRALLE. An enumeration of the officials of Deer Lodge County shows that some of the most substantial men of the state have been elected to office in this region, and their records are of such a character as to merit preservation in a work of this high class. One of the men representative of the best class of residents of Anaconda is Edward A. Cralle, county surveyor, who aside from his work in the office has been largely instrumental in developing this section, and is deserving of all the confidence reposed in him by his fellow citizens. He was born in Greenbrier County, Virginia, now included in West Virginia, June 4, 1854, a son of Richard K. Cralle, and a member of one of the old American faimlies, representatives of the Cralles having come to this country during its colonial epoch from France and located in Virginia. On his mother's side of the house Edward A. Cralle comes of English stock, and this family also dates back to pre-Revolutionary times. One of Mr. Cralle's ancestors, Robert Morris, was a signer of the Declaration of Independence.

Richard K. Cralle was born in Lunenburg County, Virginia, in 1799, and died at East Virginia in 1865, having been reared in Lunenburg County. During the time that John C. Calhoun was in Washington, Mr. Cralle was his secretary, and continued his lifelong friend. It was his pleasure to write the biography of Mr. Calhoun, and its many volumes have come down to posterity as an evidence of one man's appreciation of another, and as a document of literary style. Mr. Cralle owned property in Greenbrier County, and lived there from the early '40s until the outbreak of the Civil war. He also owned property at Lynchburg, Virginia, including what was called Cralle's Castle, which still stands and is used for college purposes. Politically he was a whig, and his fraternal connections were with the Masonic order. Richard K. Cralle was married to Judith Cabell, born at Lynchburg, Virginia, and they had two children, namely: Mary, who died in 1894; and Kenna, who was employed in the customs department at Washington, District of Columbia. After the death of his first wife Richard K. Cralle was married to Elizabeth Morris, born in Hanover County, Virginia, in 1817, who died in Boulder, Jefferson County, Montana, in 1896. Their children were as follows: Alice, who married Rev. Thomas Ward, a Presbyterian clergyman, is deceased, as is her husband; Richard M., who was a surveyor, came to Montana in 1881 as a civil engineer in the employe of the Northern Pacific Railroad, died at Boulder, Montana, in September, 1918; Floride, who married John McKay, a contractor and general business man, now deceased, resides at Minneapolis, Minnesota; Louise, who married Frank Showers, former district judge of Jefferson County, is now engaged in mining in Madison County, Montana; Betty Elizabeth, who married William G. Williamson, a civil engineer, now deceased, lives at Richmond, Virginia; Edward A., whose name heads this review; and Charles K., who is an attorney living in Omaha, Nebraska.

Edward A. Cralle was educated in the private school conducted in Hanover County, Virginia, by his uncle, Charles Morris, remaining there until seventeen years of age, when he entered the employ of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, which runs through West Virginia, and was later employed in laying out the city of Huntington, West Virginia, during 1871 and 1872, doing the surveying for that work. Following the completion of that contract Mr. Cralle went to Chattanooga, Tennessee, and was there engaged in the governmental survey of the Tennessee River until 1880, for four years of that period being engaged on the Mussell Shoals Canal. In 1880 he came west to Omaha, Nebraska, and for a brief period was occupied in survey work for the Short Line Railroad in Idaho, but in the winter of 1881 returned to Omaha. After being in the office of the Missouri Pacific Railroad for a time he was engaged in making surveys to Lincoln and other points in Nebraska and in Government work on the Missouri River. In the fall of 1882 Mr. Cralle went with the Northern Pacific Railroad to Montana, and made surveys for it as far as Billings, continuing with the road until 1885, when he went into the United States survey office at Helena, Montana, for a few months. Once more he engaged with the Northern Pacific Railroad, and was connected with it until 1888. In the meanwhile his work had brought him in 1887 to Philipsburg, Montana, where he resided from 1888 to 1907, and was engaged in a general mining and civil engineering business. In the latter year he came to Anaconda, continuing here in the same line of business. He is a democrat, and was elected county surveyor of Granite County, Montana, several times, and was elected county surveyor of Deer Lodge County in 1910, and has since held that position. During 1907 and 1908 he was city engineer of Anaconda. For many years he has been a member of the Episcopal Church. He resides at No. 319 East Front Street, Anaconda. Mr. Cralle is not married. A man experienced in his profession, Mr. Cralle naturally commands confidence, and his business has assumed large proportions, and extends over a wide area.

JAMES R. GOSS is one of the oldest members of the village bar, a Montana lawyer whose participation in his profession and in civic affairs covers a period of nearly forty years.

He was born near New York City April 17, 1848, but grew up in Lorain County, Ohio, where he was primarily educated. He attended Oberlin College and began the study of law in 1873. He graduated from the law department of the University of Michigan in 1876, and for five years practiced in Jackson County, Michigan. In 1881 he removed to Bismarck in Dakota Territory, and in 1882 came to Montana Territory, locating at Billings. As a lawyer he has been faithful to the most exalted ideals of the profession, and his name and reputation are matters of wide appreciation over the entire state. He is a former county attorney and probate judge of Yellowstone County, and was the first president of the Yellowstone Bar Association. In 1911 he served as president of the Eastern Montana Pioneer Association. Membership in that association was restricted to residents of Montana prior to 1884.

Judge Goss has been the man looked to for leadership in many important movements at Billings. He was a leader in the establishment and upbuilding of the Billings Polytechnic Institute, and has been a member of the board of directors of that institution from the beginning. He also served as president of the school board and a member of the building committee, and was one of the first trustees of the Parmly Billings Memorial Library, which was erected in 1901. Judge Goss has taken an active and influential part in many republican campaigns in his home county and state. He is a veteran of the Masonic fraternity. Judge Goss married in Michigan Miss Florence E. Lord, a native of that state. They have one child, Marion, who is a graduate of Oberlin College.

JOHN F. PRESTON was born at Higginsville, Missouri, on February 26, 1883, and is the son of William Wallace and Virginia (Fulkerson) Preston. The Prestons were established in this country in an early day, the family having been identified with the history of the Virginia colony during the days prior to American independence. The subject's grandfather, John Preston, was a native of Kentucky, where he was reared. Later he moved to Missouri, and at Dover, that state, he became a farmer, being numbered among the pioneers of that locality. His death occurred there sometime prior to the birth of John F. Preston. William Wallace Preston was born in 1836 at Booneville, Missouri, and died at Higginsville, Missouri, in 1892. He was reared at Dover, that state, and spent practically his entire life in that vicinity, his last years being spent at Higginsville. He was for many years a dealer in hardware, and stood high in the esteem of his fellow citizens. He was a democrat in his political views, was a member of the Baptist Church and of the Masonic fraternity. During the Civil war he was a soldier on the side of the Confederacy and was present at the surrender of Vicksburg.

William W. Preston was married to Virginia Fulkerson, who was born in 1854 in Virginia, now West Virginia, and to them have been born the following children: Lourana, who is the wife of C. R. Benton, of Kansas City, Missouri, where he is passenger agent for the Chicago & Alton Railroad; William F. is in the insurance, loan and real estate business at Great Falls, Montana; John F. is the immediate subject of this review; Philip is a farmer near Glasgow, Montana; Kittie died at the age of two years.

John F. Preston was educated in the public schools of Higginsville, Missouri, where he was graduated from the high school in 1901. His first employment was on farms in that vicinity, and for about a year he was employed in the postoffice at Higginsville. He then entered the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he studied for five years. He first pursued a general college course, and then two years in forestry, which science he had decided to make his life work. He was graduated in 1907, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and in 1915 he received from his alma mater the degree of Master of Science in Forestry. While in college he became a member of the honorary scientific research Greek letter society Sigma Psi. In 1907, immediately after the completion of his studies, Mr. Preston entered the Forestry Service of the United States Government, in the capacity of forest assistant. He was first sent to the Pacific Coast, where, in the Cascade Mountains in the state of Washington, he spent two months in the study of red cedars. From there he was sent to Neihart, Montana, where as administrator of timber sales he remained until the spring of 1908, being sent from there to Newport, Washington, where he was assigned to the same work for three months. He then became traveling representative of the Washington office, in which capacity he made many long trips, jumping from Great Falls, Montana, to Washington, D. C., back to Missoula, Montana, thence to various other places in Montana until the spring of 1909, when he was made deputy forest supervisor of the Bitter Root National Forest, with headquarters at Missoula. On July 1, 1909, he went to Red Lodge, Montana, as forest supervisor of the Bear Tooth National Forest, where he remained until November 1, 1910, whence he went to Kalispell as forest supervisor of the Blackfeet National Forest, retaining that position until July 1, 1911, when he returned to Missoula, this time as assistant district forester in the office of Operation. On July 1, 1915, he became assistant district forester in Silviculture at Missoula, and has been retained in that office to the present time. In this capacity Mr. Preston has general supervision of timber sales and planting forest products and silvicultural research. His office is in the Federal Building, Missoula, where he has supervision over an office force of twelve men.

Mr. Preston is nominally a republican, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church and the Missoula Chamber of Commerce.

On June 17, 1908, at Sedalia, Missouri, Mr. Preston was married to Maud Hunicke, the daughter of Al. and Louise Hunicke, of Los Angeles, California. For many years Mr. Hunicke was a master painter for a railroad company at Sedalia, Missouri, but is now retired. To Mr. and Mrs. Preston have been born two children, Louise, born February 9, 1911, and John F., Jr., born June 18, 1917.

DAVID DUDLEY RICHARDS. There is no positive rule for achieving success, and yet in the life of the successful man there are always lessons which might well be followed. The man who gains prosperity is he who can see and utilize the opportunity that came in his path. The essential conditions of human life are ever the same, the surroundings of individuals differing but slightly, and when one man passes another on the highway of life to reach the goal of success before others who perhaps started out before him, it is because he has the power to use advantages which probably encompass the whole human race. Today among the prominent citizens and successful men of Montana stands David Dudley Richards, until March 1, 1920, the efficient and popular secretary of the Missoula Chamber of Commerce, and now connected with H. O. Bell & Company, Ford agents in Missoula. The qualities of keen discrimination, sound judgment and executive ability enter very largely into his make-up, and have been contributing elements to the success which has attended his efforts.

David Dudley Richards is the scion of sterling old Welsh stock, he being of the first generation of his family native to this country. His paternal grandfather, John Richards, was a native of Wales who in 1860 brought his family to this country and settled in Pennsylvania. In 1863 he moved to Bevier, Missouri, where he homesteaded 160 acres of land, to the improvement and cultivation of which he devoted himself during the remaining years of his life. He was a pioneer of that locality and was successful in his business affairs, eventually becoming the owner of 740 acres of land, practically all of which was either in cultivation or pasture. He gave considerable attention to the raising of cattle, and also raised many mules especially for the coal mines. He was a republican in his political views, and was active in his religious life, being a member of the Welsh Congregational Church. Fraternally he was a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His third wife, Elizabeth, was a native of Wales and died in 1908. Among their children was Thomas Richards, who was born in 1848 in Landsdowne, Wales, and who died on October 21, 1914, at Missoula, Montana. When he was twelve years of age he accompanied the family on their immigration to the United States. He was reared on the paternal farmstead at Bevier, Missouri, and received his educational training in the rural schools of Macon County, Missouri. He engaged in farming and was also in the mercantile business at Bevier until 1883, when he moved to Kansas City, Missouri, and there engaged in the coal business. On June 13, 1885, he came to Butte, Montana, where he lived until April, 1914. He was a man of more than ordinary ability, and his excellent qualities received substantial recognition by his fellow citizens of Butte, who repeatedly elected him to public office. During the late eighties he served two terms as deputy sheriff under Sheriff John E. Lloyd, and he also served four years as deputy county clerk and recorder. For the long period of seventeen years he rendered efficient service as secretary of the Butte School Board, and during that period practically every large school building in that city was erected. He resigned this position in April, 1914, and came to Missoula to make his home, having retired from active life, and there his death occurred in the following October. Politically he was a staunch supporter of the republican party, and was an active member of the Welsh Congregational Church. Fraternally he was a member of the Masonic Lodge at Bevier, Missouri, of which he was a past master, and of the Bevier lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having joined both of these time-honored orders at the time he attained his majority.

Thomas Richards was married at Bevier, Missouri, to Jennie Clauss Jones, who was born at Rutland, Vermont, in 1854, and whose death occurred at Missoula, Montana, in 1909. To this worthy couple were born four children, namely: Annie E., who is the wife of J. P. Rowe, professor in the Montana State University at Missoula; Ralph G., who is a rancher at Wise River, Montana; John W., who is connected with the Times Publishing Company, at Los Angeles, California; David D.

David D. Richards was born at Butte, Montana, on the 16th day of August, 1889, and was reared there. He secured his elementary education in the public schools of Butte, graduating from the high school there in 1908. He then entered the State University at Missoula, where he was graduated with the class of 1912, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. While at the university he had not spent his vacations and odd hours in idleness, but had been employed by the Hennessey Company and the Butte Street Railway Company. After his graduation in 1912 Mr. Richards entered the employ of the Missoulian Publishing Company as reporter on the Missoulian and the Sentinel, maintaining this relation until 1915. In that year he went to Great Falls, where until April of the following year he served as telegraph editor of the Great Falls Leader. Then for about four months he was manager of publicity and assistant secretary of the Great Falls Commercial Club. On August 1, 1916, Mr. Richards came to Missoula as secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, in which capacity he served until March 1, 1920. The officers of the Missoula Chamber of Commerce were then as follows: President, H. O. Bell; first vice president, F. A. Schlick; second vice-president, E. S. Holmes; treasurer, Newell Gough; secretary, D. D. Richards. Mr. Richards is regarded as a good business man, an excellent manager, a man who possesses sound judgment and keen foresight, and who believes in pressing forward, keeping the wheels of the car of civilization ever moving up the steeps. He enjoys the respect and esteem of all who know him for his friendly manner, business ability, his interest in public affairs and upright living, and is regarded as one of the worthy citizens of Missoula.

Politically Mr. Richards is nominally a republican, though he is decidedly independent when it comes to selecting his candidates, for he firmly believes that a man's fitness for office should supersede his party affiliation. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Butte. Fraternally he is a member of Harmony Lodge No. 49, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Western Sun Chapter No. 11, Royal Arch Masons; Covenant Lodge No. 6, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Hell Gate Lodge No. 383, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is also secretary of the Missoula Rotary Club; secretary of Missoula Post No. 27, American Legion; he has served as a director and secretary of the Missoula Amusement Company; is a member of the Greek letter college fraternities Sigma Chi and Theta Nu Epsilon, and is president of the Alumni Chapter of the former society at Missoula. Mr. Richards rendered effective service during the early days of the World War as district manager of the food conservation campaign up to the time of his enlistment, and previous to that time he had also acted as recruiting officer of the British recruiting office at Missoula. He is a member of the executive committee of the Montana Association of Commercial Club Secretaries and was secretary of this association up to the time of his enlistment. In 1913 and 1915 he was manager of the Missoulian Bureau during the legislative sessions and did good service.

Not the least interesting experience of Mr. Richards' life was his brief military career. On May 13, 1918, he enlisted in the United States service and was sent to Camp Hancock at Augusta, Georgia, where for five months he was in active training. He was then in the Field Artillery Officers' Training Camp at Camp Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky, where as a private he finally received an honorable discharge.

Personally Mr. Richards is a man of pleasing and attractive manner, courteous in his dealings with all classes, and he has, quietly and unobtrusively, won for himself a warm place in the hearts of those who have been associated with him, while all who know of him and his work are loud in their praise of him.

PETER J. KELLY is the present county assessor at Butte. Mr. Kelly is thoroughly a man of the people and as a boy worked in the mines around Butte, and has made good in every place of responsibility and service.

He was born at Marysville, Montana, June 26, 1883. His grandfather, Jeremiah Kelly, spent practically all his life on a farm in County Cork, Ireland. However, he came to the United States while this country was engaged in the Civil war, and enlisted as a Union soldier, serving during the last year of the struggle. Soon afterward he returned to Ireland. Jeremiah Kelly, father of Peter J. Kelly, is an honored resident of Butte. He was born in County Cork, Ireland, in 1855, and was fifteen years of age when he came to this country. He had some experience in the mines of Michigan, was at Leadville, Colorado, during the high tide of the gold diggings there, and in 1880, left Leadville and the following year settled at Marysville, Montana. He was a miner there until 1884, and has since lived at Butte. For a time he was an employe of the Butte & Boston Mining Company and is now a veteran in the service of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, being retained on the pay rolls of that great corporation as a watchman. He is a democrat and a member of the Catholic Church. Jeremiah Kelly married Annie Sullivan, who was born in County Cork, Ireland, in 1856. Peter J. is the oldest of their children. Bryan's general mercantile establishment at Walkerville. After that he served four years as deputy county treasurer under C. E. Meagher, and was a timekeeper with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company until 1916, when he was elected for his first term as county assessor. Mr. Kelly is now in office as a result of his re-election in 1918.

In a business way he is a co-partner with Al McMillan in the Velie Sales Company automobile agency. He is a fourth degree Knight of Columbus, being affiliated with Butte Council No. 668, and is also a member of Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Butte Aerie No. 11, Fraternal Order of Eagles. On February 20, 1919, Mr. Kelly married Miss Julia Lahiff, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Lahiff, of 620 West Quartz Street. Mr. Lahiff is a miner.

ARTHUR C. RICHIE, head of the statistical department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Anaconda, is recognized as a man well fitted for the duties of his position through inclination and ability. He was born at New Paris, Ohio, June 1, 1879, a son of John S. Richie, and grandson of Samuel S. Richie, who was born near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and died at New Paris, Ohio, in 1888, when over eighty years of age. He was one of the pioneers of Ohio, and developed into a farmer upon an extensive scale near New Paris.

John S. Richie is now a resident of Scott's Mills, Oregon, but he was born at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1840. Until about 1857, he lived in Philadelphia, and then moved to New Paris, Ohio, and engaged in farming, remaining in that location until 1882, when he came West to Ellendale, North Dakota, there continuing his farming operations until 1893, when he came to his present location and is now practically retired. A republican by conviction, he has been active in his party, and had the honor of being a member of the Lower House of the North Dakota Assembly at its first session, and was also elected in 1904 to the Oregon Assembly, in both instances being on important committees. Born and reared a member of the Friends Society, he has been steadfast in his support of Quaker doctrines. The maiden name of his wife was Mary Brown, and she was born in 1841. Their children were as follows: Anna R., who married Charles A. White, lives at Scott's Mills, Oregon, where her husband died, having been a farmer and saw-mill operator; Edward Russell, who died at Ellendale in 1891; and Arthur C., whose name heads this review.

Arthur C. Richie was reared in Dickey County, North Dakota, and attended its schools, those of Scott's Mills, Oregon, and the Pacific College at Newburg, Oregon, being graduated from its academic course in 1894. In 1896 Mr. Richie came to Montana, and was scale man for the Boston-Montana Company at Butte, from which position he rose through various clerical positions to one of much more importance, and remained with that concern until April 1, 1902, when he came to Anaconda to enter the employ of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company as statistical clerk. In September of that year he was promoted to be assistant statistician, and August 12, 1916, became head of the statistical department, which position he still holds, and has under him ten employes. This department accounts for all ore receipts in the plants and the intermediate products of all processes, keeping track of all losses accruing in materials from the mines to the finished product. His offices are in the Anaconda Reduction Department two miles east of Anaconda. Mr. Richie is independent in his political views. Fraternally he belongs to Anaconda Camp No. 154, Woodmen of the World. He owns a modern residence at No. 700 Oak Street.

On September 2, 1903, Mr. Richie was married at Anaconda to Miss Edith P. Smith, a daughter of Carroll and Samantha (Haining) Smith. Mr. Smith is employed in Mr. Richie's department. Mr. and Mrs. Richie have one daughter, Marjorie, who was born October 13, 1909. Having risen to his present responsible position through his own efforts, Mr. Richie has every reason to be proud of what he has accomplished, and is held in high esteem by his superiors and is recognized as fair in his judgments by those under him.

DAVID J. HAVILAND has given thirty-five years of his life to work in mercantile lines. His proficiency and industry have been valued assets by concerns in both the Middle West and Northwest. Mr. Haviland is department manager of the Missoula Mercantile Company and is one of the successful business men of that city. He is of English ancestry, the Havilands having come from England and settled at Flushing, Long Island, as early as 1647. His father, David J. Haviland, Sr., was born in New York State in 1819, and spent his active career as a farmer at Glens Falls, New York, where he died in August, 1868. He was a Quaker in religious faith and voted first as a whig and later as a republican. His wife was Phoebe Brown, who was born in Warren County, New York, in 1838 and died at South Charleston, Ohio, in 1914.

David J. Haviland was the only son of his parents and was reared by his widowed mother. He spent a number of years as a child and young man at Battle Creek, Michigan. He attended public school there and also the Kreuse Business College. Leaving school at the age of seventeen, he worked as clerk in a general store at Battle Creek. During the next ten years he applied himself to the work in hand, and not only earned his salary but laid the foundation of his substantial business career

After leaving Michigan he was in a department store at Boulder, Colorado, twelve years, eventually becoming head of the department and with a financial interest in the business. On leaving Colorado Mr. Haviland came to Missoula, where he arrived in May, 1909, and since then has been manager of the house furnishings department of the Missoula Mercantile Company. The Missoula Mercantile Company is one of the largest and most complete organizations of the kind in Montana, and the house furnishings department has the reputation of carrying the most complete stock of house furnishing goods in the state.

Mr. Haviland regards Missoula as his permanent home and he owns a modern residence at the corner of University and Gerald avenues. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, is a republican and a member of the Episcopal Church. He is prominent fraternally, being a life member of Hell Gate Lodge No. 383 of the Elks, is a member of Missoula Lodge No. 13, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Western Sun Chapter No. 11, Royal Arch Masons, is past commander of St. Omar Commandery Knights Templar, at Missoula, a member of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, and is a past chancellor commander of the Knights of Pythias, an order which he first joined in Michigan.

October 4, 1899, at Boulder, Colorado, Mr. Haviland married Miss Leta B. Wells, daughter of William B. and Delphine (Burton) Wells. Her parents are now deceased. Her father for many years was superintendent of the Water Works at Boulder. Mrs. Haviland finished her education in the University of Colorado at Boulder. They have three children: Doris, born in August, 1900, now in the first year of the State University of Montana at Missoula; Jean, born February 15, 1904, a junior in the Missoula County High School; and Leta Clair, born February 10, 1911.

Frank M. Pearson. During the ten years he has lived in Missoula Frank M. Pearson has handled as large a volume of real estate and insurance as any other individual in Western Montana. He possesses special qualifications for successful work in this line.

Mr. Pearson was born on a farm four miles from Ottawa, Kansas, July 24, 1878, but most of his life before coming to Montana was spent in Ohio. His great-grandfather came from England. His grandfather was born at Moundsville, West Virginia, and was a millwright by trade and died at Woodsfield in Eastern Ohio. Albert J. Pearson, father of the Missoula business man, was born at Bealsville, Ohio, in 1849. He spent most of his life in his native state, and was prominent as an attorney and in public affairs, practicing law at Woodsfield for many years. As a democrat he was a leader in his party, served two terms as county attorney of Monroe County, and also two terms as probate judge. He was a member of the State Senate of Ohio one term and was twice elected to represent his Ohio district in Congress. While in Congress he was chairman of the committee on enrolled bills. At that time W. J. Bryan was in Congress, and a resolution introduced by Mr. Bryan and adopted by the House conferred special thanks upon Mr. Pearson for his painstaking and accurate work as chairman of the committee.. This was a very unusual honor. Albert J. Pearson was an active Methodist, a Royal Arch Mason and Odd Fellow. At the age of sixteen he enlisted in the Union army and served during the last eight months of the war. For many years he was affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic. He married Elizabeth A. Alford, who was born in Ohio in 1850 and died at Woodsfield in 1903. They were the parents of six children: Charles A. L., who was an examiner in the pension department of the Federal Government at Washington, where he died at the age of thirty-six; William, a tailor at Columbus, Ohio; Alvin J., judge of the Common Pleas Court at Cleveland; Frank M.; Eloise M., who is the wife of a farmer in Alberta, Canada; and Lorena, who died at the age of seventeen.

Frank M. Pearson attended public schools at Woodsfield, Ohio, graduating from high school in 1899. The following three years he spent in a local insurance and real estate office, and for two years was cashier of the branch office of the Travelers Insurance Company at Columbus and held a similar position at Cleveland for one year. Then for a short time he was special agent for that company, following which until 1909 he was manager of the O. M. Stafford & Goss Company, general insurance agents, at Cleveland.

Thus when he came to Missoula in June, 1909, Mr. Pearson was an expert in the insurance field. For six months he was in the employ of the general insurance and real estate firm of Stoddard & Price, and then formed a partnership with C. L. Taylor under the name Taylor & Pearson. On the death of Mr. Taylor December 31, 1914, Mr. Pearson continued the business alone until 1916. In the meantime his interests acquired such a large scope that he was obliged to take in another partner. With Dennis Lee he formed the firm Pearson & Lee Company, but in 1918 bought out Mr. Lee and has since been at the head of one of the leading establishments of its kind in Western Montana. He handles city property and ranches all over the western part of the state. His offices are at 116 West Cedar Street.

Mr. Pearson is a democrat, is a Methodist, a charter member of Harmony Lodge No. 49, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and a member of the Chamber of Commerce. He resides in the Rozale Apartments on South Sixth Street, West. On January 9, 1906, at Woodsfield, Ohio, he married Miss Maude E. Winchell, a daughter of E. L. and Dorothy (Lightner) Winchell, the latter now deceased. Her father is a contractor and builder living at Mountain Lake Park in Maryland. Mrs. Pearson was born at Zanesville, Ohio, and attended Hiram College in her native state and Kee Mar College at Hagerstown, Maryland. Mr. and Mrs. Pearson have one son, Winchell E., born August 5, 1908.

John L. Campbell is a law graduate of the University of Minnesota, and during the eight years he has lived at Missoula made rapid progress in establishing a sound reputation as a lawyer and is now serving his second term as city attorney.

Mr. Campbell was born at Wabasha, Minnesota, December 18, 1890. In the paternal line he represents an old and prominent Southern family of Scotch ancestry. His grandfather was for many years a successful planter and slave holder in Mississippi, and was at one time lieutenant governor of that state. He died in Mississippi. W. H. Campbell, father of the Missoula lawyer, was born on a plantation in Mississippi in 1836 and as a young man joined the Confederate army at the outbreak of the war between the states. He was in active service until the battle of Antietam in 1862. In that battle he was shot through the ankle and was incapacitated for further military duty. Not long after the war he sought a new home on the prairies of Minnesota, became a merchant at Wabasha and for fourteen years served as county auditor of Wabasha County. He had become a republican in Minnesota. He was a member of the Episcopal Church and was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. W. H. Campbell, who died at Wabasha in 1894, married in Minnesota Miss Alma A. Downer, and she is still a resident of Wabasha. She was born at Upper Jay, New York, in 1851. She is the mother of three children: Susie C., of Wabasha, widow of C. H. Robinson, who was a dentist; W. D. Campbell, a dentist at Lethbridge, Alberta, Canada; and John L.

John L. Campbell received his early education in the public schools of Wabasha, and graduated from high school there in 1908. Soon afterward he entered the University of Minnesota Law School at Minneapolis, and received his LL. B. degree in 1911. He is a member of the Delta Chi law fraternity. For several months after graduation he remained at Wabasha, and in December, 1911, came to Missoula, and here for a year or so he was in the law office of A. L. Duncan, a prominent lawyer. When Mr. Duncan went on the bench January 1, 1913, as judge of Department No. 1 of the Fourth Judicial District, Mr. Campbell opened a law office of his own in the Duncan-Peterson Block, and in the past five years has handled a large civil and criminal practice. He was first appointed city attorney May 1, 1916, and was reappointed to that office in 1918. He is a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church, and affiliated with Missoula Lodge No. 13, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Western Sun Chapter No. 11, Royal Arch Masons, and Covenant Lodge No. 6 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He also belongs to the County and State Bar Associations and the Missoula Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Campbell and family reside in a good modern home at 820 South Fifth Street, West. He married at Winona, Minnesota, April 23, 1913, Miss Mary R. Tower. Her mother, Mrs. Laura R. Tower, lives at Winona, where Mrs. Campbell was born. She is a graduate of the Winona High School, and for two years before her marriage was a kindergarten teacher in Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell have one son, John T., born January 28, 1918.

Mrs. Nellie Cronin Sullivan. One of the most competent county officials Butte has ever had is Mrs. Nellie Cronin Sullivan, incumbent of the office of county auditor.

Mrs. Sullivan was born at Jackson, Michigan, and has spent most of her life in the Northwest. She attended public school at Tacoma, Washington, and at Butte, being a young girl when her parents came to Butte. She is a member of the Knights and Ladies of Security and resides at 4 South Montana Street.

Her father, Daniel Cronin, was born at Queenstown, County Cork, Ireland, in 1852. His father was a coast guardsman at Queenstown, and late in life he and his wife came to the United States and both died at Jackson, Michigan. Daniel Cronin ran away from home at the age of ten years and as a stowaway crossed the Atlantic Ocean to New York City. Though he became dependent upon his own efforts he acquired a really excellent education in New York, was married in that city, and from there moved to Jackson, Michigan, where he followed his trade as a steam and gas fitter. In 1888 he located at Tacoma, Washington, and about 1894 settled at Butte. He was one of the early men at his trade in this city, and followed his profession until his death in 1896. He was a democrat. Daniel Cronin married Mary A. McMahon, who was born at Newry in County Armagh, Ireland, and was a small child when her father died. She is still living, a resident of Butte. She was educated in Glasgow, Scotland, and came to New York City with her brother Frank McMahon, living in the East until after her marriage. She had three children, Mrs. Sullivan being second in age. Frank, the oldest, an employe of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, finished his education in Butte, and resides at 413 North Main Street. Mr. Orvis, who has been a resident of Montana for over twenty years, was born in Kenosha county, Wisconsin, January 5, 1858. His paternal ancestors were Welsh and settled in the New England colonies in 1642. He therefore can claim an ancestry of more than two centuries of sterling Americans. His grandfather, John M. Orvis, was born in Vermont in 1791, for many years had a blacksmith's shop at Brattleboro, Vermont, and on coming west spent some time in Cleveland and in 1844 settled in Kenosha county in what was then Wisconsin territory. Charles W. Orvis, father of the Missoula merchant, was born at Brattleboro, Vermont, in 1816 and went to Wisconsin the same year as his father, in 1844. He was also a blacksmith by trade, and he and his father conducted one of the first shops in Kenosha county. The greater part of his life, however, he spent as a farmer. Charles W. Orvis went to California in 1850, and spent four years among the placer mines, with a fair degree of profit. The records of Salem township in Kenosha county, Wisconsin, make note of his name as one of the California gold seekers of 1850. He died in Kenosha county in 1882. JOHN K. O'ROURKE enjoys a distinctive position among the public officials of Silver Bow County. He is now serving in his fourth term as sheriff of the county, and is the only sheriff who has enjoyed more than two terms from the people of that county

Mr. O'Rourke has been a resident of Montana more than a quarter of a century, and for a number of years was connected with the mining interests around Butte. He comes of a prominent Irish family of County Limerick, where he was born March 31, 1867. His father, Michael O'Rourke, was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, in 1819, and spent all his life in that country. He died in County Limerick in 1904. He was liberally educated, attending the noted college at Thuries, County Tipperary, and was a class mate of the late Michael Cudahy, founder of the Cudahy Packing Company in this country. Michael O'Rourke was a farmer and an auctioneer in County Limerick, also served as clerk of court, and enjoyed a place of great influence and prominence in the affairs of Southern Ireland. His influence in politics was due to his substantial business character and his genial personality. He had a liberal education and in his younger life was prominent as an athlete, being the champion broad jumper of County Limerick. He married Catherine Kennedy, who was born in County Limerick in 1824 and died there in 1894. They had a large family of children, most of whom came to America: Thomas, for many years an employe of the Street Railways of Chicago, died in that city in 1899; Elizabeth, who died in Chicago in 1901, leaving nine children, was the wife of John Collopy, a retired resident of that city, but for many years boss of the longshoremen on the Chicago waterfront; Mary and Margaret, both living at Chicago; Bridget, deceased; Hannah, a Dominican Sister at Evanston, Illinois; John K., who is seventh in the family; Annie, a Dominican Sister teaching at Anaconda, Montana; Josephine and Michael, deceased; Kathleen, unmarried, and living at Chicago; and Edward, who was an engineer at the smelters at Butte and died of influenza in 1918.

John K. O'Rourke acquired his early education in the National schools of County Limerick. He was twenty-one years of age when he came to the United States in 1888, and at once moved to Chicago. In 1889 he went south to Louisiana, and conducted a stock farm for thirteen months at Ponchatoula. That was a profitable enterprise, but he was afflicted with the fever and ague prevalent in those low countries, and in 1891 had to return north. For a time he worked as baggageman with the Chicago & Western Indiana Railway, and was promoted to storage clerk. Then for several years in Chicago he was employed in the O. B. Green ship yard, and in 1895 came to Montana. Mr. O'Rourke worked at loading copper at the old upper works of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, was promoted to timekeeper in 1897, and in 1899 began seven years of service as timekeeper for the Mountain Consolidated mine at Butte. He left the mines to become proprietor of the Mullins House at Centerville, and remained there for two years, until he was elected for his first term as sheriff in the fall of 1909. Mr. O'Rourke served as sheriff of Silver Bow County from 1909 to 1913, being re-elected in 1910. On retiring from office he resumed the hotel business as proprietor of the Northern Hotel on Front Street. In the fall of 1916 the people again called him to the office of sheriff, paying thereby a special tribute to the efficiency of his administration. He was re-elected in the fall of 1918.

Mr. O'Rourke has been a leader in the democratic party in Silver Bow County for a number of years. He is a life member of Butte Lodge No. 40, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, is a third degree Knight of Columbus, affiliated with Butte Council No. 668, is a member of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, the R. E. L. A., Butte Aerie No. 11, Fraternal Order of Eagles, and is a member of the Catholic Order of Foresters. Sheriff O'Rourke has his home and offices at the courthouse. He married at Anaconda in 1899 Catherine O'Rourke, a distant relative. Her parents were Mr. and Mrs. Patrick O'Rourke. Her father was a Union soldier during the Civil war and afterwards as a member of the regular army fought against the Indians in the West under Gen. Thomas F. Meagher. For a number of years he was a dry goods merchant at Denver where he died.

GEORGE D. LYON. Efficiency is the watchword of the hour. In industry and business, in work and play, in the administration of public and private affairs, in education and training, in philanthropy and religion, no trait is so important in these strenuous days as efficiency. This is demanded of the individual who would succeed. It is borne in upon the boy or girl at school, who is thereby incited to make schooling a direct preparation for success in the occupation to which he or she aspires. It tests the apprentice in entering and completing apprenticeship. It is more and more the condition of getting and keeping a job. Both in the skilled trades and the learned professions, good general qualifications must be supplemented by technical expertness. Even in philanthropy and religion, where the test of efficiency has been applied last and least, it is coming to be seen to be good is not enough to fit one to do well. We must be better than good to do good. In business circles the need for efficiency is so paramount that without this qualification no man today can hope for promotion, and the fact that he has risen above his associates is proof positive that he has learned how to make every action, each thought even, work out to produce the most effective results. George D. Lyon, manager of the Clifton, Applegate & Toole Company, is one of the live young men of Anaconda who is recognized as a living exponent of efficiency raised to the highest degree.

George D. Lyon is a native son of Montana, having been born at Drummond, this state, January 9, 1883, a son of George D. Lyon, and member of one of the old colonial families of New England, whose roots strike back into the soil of old England. The elder George D. Lyon was born at Greenwich, Connecticut, and died at Drummond, Montana, in 1885. Coming west in young manhood, he spent some time at Corinne, Utah, and then in 1872 became a pioneer rancher of Drummond, Montana, his ranch still being in the family and owned by his widow and son William, it comprising 3,000 acres of land, on which they carry on cattle raising upon an extensive scale. In politics George D. Lyon, Sr., was a republican, and his namesake son inherits his views in this respect. His widow, who bore the maiden name of Ella F. Smith, was born at North Scituate, Rhode Island, in 1854. Their children were as follows: William, who is living on the homestead ranch; Arthur R., who is an employe of the Continental Oil Company of Missoula, Montana; and George D., who is the youngest.

Growing up in Granite County, Montana, George D. Lyon attended its schools and the Phillipsburg High School, and then took a three-years' course at the State University at Missoula, Montana, and was graduated from the Northern Indiana Commercial College of Valparaiso, Indiana, in 1902. For the subsequent two years he was in the employ of the W. B. Conkey Company of Hammond, Indiana, as a clerk, following which he was car clerk for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company at Trout Creek, Montana, for a year. For six months he served as brakeman on this same railroad, working out of Missoula, and for another six months was in the mines of the Coeur d'Alene district at Mace, Idaho. His next employment was with Winston Brothers, who had a contract on the construction work of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, with headquarters at Missoula, and he remained with this firm for two and one-half years on this contract, and then for six months more was with them at Chehalis, Washington. In 1910 he engaged with the Clifton, Applegate & Toole Company at Bonner, Montana, as bookkeeper, and remained there until 1012 occupied with the construction of the Big Blackfoot Railroad. In that year the company, one of the biggest railroad construction firms in the West, came to Anaconda, and Mr. Lyon came with them and assisted in building the Georgetown extension of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad, being the office manager of the company since that date. The offices of this company are on North Cedar Street, Anaconda. Mr. Lyon lives at No. 115 West Seventh Street.

In 1908 Mr. Lyon was married at Missoula to Miss Ethel V. Perro, a daughter of John and Akkie (Hoffman) Perro. Mr. Perro was a carpenter who died at Drummond, Montana. Mrs. Perro survives and makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Lyon. The one child in the Lyon family is Kathryn, who was born October 16, 1911. Mr. Lyon has brought to his position deep knowledge of railroad construction, wide practical experience in railroad work, and a sound, personal judgment which, combined with his efficient methods, have enabled him to so conduct the affairs of his office as to make him a model after which others are urged to pattern.

Albert Newlon Whitlock came to Montana from the East, after graduating from Harvard University Law School, to accept a post in the newly organized law school of the University of Montana. He is still a professor in the law school, until recently was dean of the school, and at the same time has built up and maintained a busy general practice, and is widely known among the lawyers of the state.

He was one of the first instructors in the Law Department, and in 1012 was chosen professor of law and still fills that chair, being the senior professor of the Law School. From 1913 until June, 1919, he was also dean of the Law School, but resigned at the latter date. In private practice he formed a partnership in 1912 with Charles H. Hall, and their relationship was continued until 1917. Since then Mr. Whitlock has been a member of the law firm of Murphy & Whitlock, with offices in the Montana Building. The senior member of the firm is W. L. Murphy.

Mr. Whitlock is also a member of the State Board of Law Examiners, an office he has held since the board was created by the Legislature in 1917. Politically he is a democrat, is a member of the Christian Church, belongs to the Missoula Chamber of Commerce and is a stockholder in the Missoula Trust and Savings Bank. His home is at 415 Connell Avenue.

ton, daughter of J. M. and Nellie F. (Reed) Thurston. Her mother still lives at Cambridge and her father, who died there, was a banker.

CHARLES H. MARSH is a Montanan of thirty-five years' experience and residence. He brought no capital with him to the territory. However, he knew how to work and as a ranch hand and teamster he earned his first money in Montana. For a number of years he was a locomotive engineer and for over twenty years has been a business man of Missoula, where he has developed the largest undertaking establishment in the county.

He was born in Gallatin County, Kentucky, February 27, 1861, son of William B. and Maria (Hilton) Marsh. His paternal grandparents were pioneers in Kentucky from the State of Virginia. William Marsh married in his native state Maria Hilton, who was born at Litchfield, Illinois, and when a small child was taken to St. Louis, where her parents died of cholera and she was reared by an uncle in Kentucky. William Marsh and wife enjoyed an ideal companionship and were well fitted for the strenuous experiences of pioneering. In 1872 they moved to Independence in Western Missouri, where they spent the rest of their lives as farmers. William Marsh died at the ripe age of eighty-two and his wife at the same age in 1908, having survived her husband six years.

Charles H. Marsh was eleven years of age when his parents moved to Western Missouri. He finished his education in local schools and also attended the Kansas City Commercial College. In 1884, at the age of twenty-three, he came to Helena, Montana, and soon afterwards went to work on a ranch in the Prickly Pear Valley. His next experience was in the placer mines of Jefferson County, where he drove a four-horse team hauling charcoal. Later in the same year he was given work in the engine shops of the Northern Pacific Railway, and remained with that corporation fifteen years. He became a fireman, and for twelve years was locomotive engineer. Even yet he retains his card of membership in the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Having married and established a home and with several children growing up, Mr. Marsh left railroading and in 1899 bought a half interest in the livery and undertaking business of Hays & Haverfield at Missoula. In 1901 he became sole proprietor and soon afterward took in his brother Walton Marsh as a partner. In 1903 he again became sole proprietor and in 1908 sold the livery business and has since concentrated his time upon the undertaking department. She was Miss May Douglas, daughter of James Douglas, a prominent citizen of Buckner, Missouri, and a Confederate veteran. James Douglas was a California forty-niner, and after returning from the coast married Henrietta Dixon, of Virginia. For nearly thirty years Mr. and Mrs. Marsh have had their home in Missoula. Their first child, Hilda Frances, was born in November, 1891, and their son Walton was born in 1893. Their youngest child was Douglas G., who was born January 10, 1894. He enlisted in the United States Marine Corps in Washington, District of Columbia, November, 1917, and received his training at Paris Island and Quantico and sailed for France March 12, 1918. On the morning of June 10th he was killed in action at Chateau Thierry in Belleau Woods. He fell when within a few yards of the first line trenches. He is buried in France.

WILLIAM B. DALY has had a phenomenal rise to prominence in mining circles in Montana. About twenty years ago he abandoned a promising law practice to come to Butte and learn mining. He worked as a common laborer for a time, and neglected no opportunity to acquire a fundamental and practical knowledge of mining in every detail. O'Neil, then to chief time keeper for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and in March, 1907, became foreman of the East Gray Rock Mine. Later he was also foreman of the West Gray Rock Mine, the Bell, the Diamond and the East Gray Rock mines. From September, 1912, to December, 1913, Mr. Daly served as superintendent of the employment department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. EDWARD FRANCIS CONYNGHAM, M. D. The active life of Dr. Edward Francis Conyngham has been connected with the most important period in the development of Missoula County, Montana, and is linked with the developments which have stimulated the advancement and progress of the profession of medicine and surgery in the state. He was born at Westport, Missouri, May 8, 1865, a son of Edward J. and Katherine Marie (Andrews) Conynham, and on the paternal side comes of an old Anglo-Saxon family, which originated in Sussex (South Saxon), England, the name then being spelled and pronounced Koenigheim. On the Norman invasion (1066) the family was driven north, where Doctor Conyngham's branch of the family became identified with the Clan Douglas. During the Crusades, Kenneth Conyngham saved the life of Edward of England from an assassin, and for this a serpent was added to the family crest. Later, Edward, or Eamon, saved the Bruce from his pursuers by hiding him in a hayfield, hence the family coat-of-arms and motto. During the Commonwealth, and even after 1745, the Conynghams were adherents of the Stuarts, and almost all their Christian names are of Stuart origin. It was a Conyngham who brought to Queen Victoria the news of her accession to the throne of England.

Edward J. Conyngham was born at Annandale, Scotland, December 25, 1833, and early became a captain of Fusileers, B. E. I., but resigned his commission in 1860. Coming to the United States, he first settled in Georgia, and during the Civil war was a captain of infantry in the Confederate army. His death occurred at Salt Lake City, Utah, December 17, 1899. His wife, who was born at Castle Andrews, County Kildare, Ireland, April 16, 1845, died at Minneapolis, Minnesota, February 17, 1889.

Edward Francis Conyngham received his early education in England and Ireland, and was graduated from Trinity College with the class of 1882, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He took his medical degree at the Minneapolis College of Physicians and Surgeons, in 1886, and was graduated from the University of Minnesota in the following year, after which he did post-graduate work at Edinburgh, Berlin, Leipsic and Vienna, during 1893 and 1894. Since locating at Missoula he has built up a large and representative practice and is not only known for his skill and ability in his profession, but because of the invention of several ingenious and valuable surgical instruments. Doctor Conyngham has had varied military experience, having been a volunteer in No. 2 (Students) Battery, First Edinburgh City Artillery, during his student days, and a surgeon in the "Army of Liberty," Mexico, in 1910. An expert shot, he has been president of the Missoula Rifle Association (N. R. A.) since 1916. Formerly Doctor Conyngham was United States pension examining surgeon, but resigned in 1903. In 1917 he was named as a draft physician and continued to contribute his services in that capacity during the greater period of the great World war. His political tendencies make him a republican, and his religious faith is that of the Episcopal Church. As a fraternalist he is past master of Ruby Lodge No. 36, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and a member of Harmony Lodge No. 49, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Western Sun Chapter No. 11, Royal Arch Masons, both of Montana.

On April 16, 1905, Doctor Conyngham was united in marriage at Lewiston, Idaho, with Harriet Sylvia Berkley, daughter of Hugh Berkley, a veteran of the Civil war and the first settler at what is now Pomeroy, Washington. To this union there have come two children: Edward Francis, born December 14, 1906; and Katherine Stuart, born July 26, 1915.

GEORGE MICHAEL JENNINGS, M. D. It is not always easy to discover and define the hidden forces that move a life of ceaseless activity and large professional success; little more can be done than to note their manifestation in the career of the individual under consideration. Doctor Jennings has long held distinctive prestige in a calling which requires for its basis sound mentality and rigid professional training and thorough mastery of technical knowledge with the skill to apply the same, without which one cannot hope to rise above the mediocre in administering to human ills.

George Michael Jennings was born in Pembina, North Dakota, on August 13, 1880, and is a son of Patrick F. and Bridget (Glynn) Jennings. Patrick F. Jennings was born in County Cork, Ireland, in 1852, and was reared and educated. In 1870 when about eighteen years of age, he came to the United States and made permanent location in Ohio. In 1878 he moved to Pembina, North Dakota, where he followed his trade, that of a plasterer, and also did considerable contracting. In 1891 he went to Cavalier, North Dakota, where he became the owner of a hotel, to the operation of which he devoted himself until his death, which occurred in 1915. Politically Mr. Jennings was a democrat, and he was a faithful member of the Roman Catholic Church.

Patrick F. Jennings was married to Bridget Glynn, who was born in 1851 in County Mayo, Ireland, and who died at Cavalier, North Dakota, in 1903. To this worthy couple were born the following children: Agnes, who is the wife of Fred I. Harris, a miller at Cavalier, North Dakota; Elizabeth, who is the wife of Frank T. Hall, who is in railroad work at Los Molinos, California; George M., the immediate subject of this review; James G., who is a druggist at Upham, North Dakota; Ethel G., the wife of Paul A. Remington, chief surgeon at the Tacoma Hospital, Tacoma, Washington.

George M. Jennings received his elementary education in the public schools at Cavalier, North Dakota, including the high school. He then pursued preparatory studies in the University of North Dakota, graduating from that institution in 1903, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Having determined to make the practice of medicine his life work, he then matriculated in the medical department of the University of Minnesota, at Minneapolis, where he was graduated with the class of 1907, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine. While in medical school he was a member of the Greek-letter fraternity Alpha Kappa Kappa. In 1907 Doctor Jennings came to Missoula as interne for the Northern Pacific Beneficial Association Hospital, in which capacity he served for one year, at the end of that time being appointed assistant surgeon. Doctor Jennings early demonstrated his ability as a physician and his possession of unusual skill as an operating surgeon, so that by 1912 he has richly earned the appointment which came to him as chief surgeon of the hospital, in which responsible position he is still serving. The hospital is a large modern brick structure, conveniently arranged and eligibly situated, being remarkably well adapted to the requirements of hospital uses. It has accommodations for ninety patients and there are thirty-five employes under Doctor Jennings' supervision. Doctor Jennings possesses a mind well disciplined by severe professional training, which together with a natural aptitude for investigation and research, have peculiarly fitted him for the noble calling in which he is engaged. He is a careful reader of the best professional literature and keeps himself in touch with the age in the latest discoveries pertaining to the healing art.

Politically Doctor Jennings gives his support to the republican party, and is a member of the Roman Catholic Church. He is a member of Missoula Council No. 1021, Knights of Columbus, and is also identified with the Missoula Rotary Club and the Chamber of Commerce. He is a member of the Missoula County Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, as well as the American College of Surgeons.

In 1910, at Minneapolis, Minnesota, Doctor Jennings was married to Sabra Swenson, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Swenson, the former of whom is a merchant at New London, Minnesota. The mother is deceased. Mrs. Jennings possesses a splendid education, having completed her elementary studies in the East Side High School at Minneapolis, and then attending and graduating at the University of Minnesota with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. To Doctor and Mrs. Jennings have been born the following children: Eileen, born in 1911; Donald, in 1913; Katherine in 1915; and George Carroll, born on December 19, 1918.

Personally Doctor Jennings is a man of generous nature and kindly impulses, who has won a host of warm and loyal friends since coming to Montana. Widely recognized as a leader in his profession, he is also appreciated because of his suport of all movements looking to the advancement of the community along all legitimate lines.

Warrington Richards is the president and active head of Joseph Richards, Incorporated, the oldest and largest undertaking business at Butte. He was born at Goldsithney, England, October 4, 1878. His grandfather, Joseph Richards, spent all his life in England, was a carpenter and wheelwright and died at Goldsithney in 1882. The father of Warrington Richards also bears the name Joseph. He was born in England in 1838, acquired his father's trade of carpenter and wheelwright, and for a number of years lived in America. He is remembered as one of the prominent business men of Butte, and at one time was president of the Mountain View Cemetery Association. JACOB OSENBRUG, president of the Home Baking Company of Butte, is one of the efficient business men of this region, who, having come to the United States from foreign shores, has made a success of his undertakings and at the same time established himself in the confidence of the public. He was born in the City of Stade, near Hamburg, Germany, on January 28, 1860, a son of Clause Osenbrug, whose birth took place in the vicinity of Hamburg, Germany, in 1805, and his death at Stade, Germany, in 1877. During his younger days he was a shoemaker, but after his marriage became a general merchant, and he spent all of his life in and about Stade. All of his mature years he was a consistent member of the Lutheran Church. Elizabeth Stockmann, born in the vicinity of Hamburg, Germany, in 1815, became his second wife, and she, too, died at Stade, in the same year as her husband. Their children were as follows: Annie, who married Fred Klusmann, an employe of the Washoe Reduction Works of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Anaconda, Montana; Jacob, whose name heads this review; and John, who is a carpenter and builder, lives at Kansas City, Missouri.

Growing up in his native place, Jacob Osenbrug attended both public and private schools and received the equivalent of our high school course, although but fourteen years of age when he left school to begin learning the trade of a baker. He followed his trade in Germany until 1877, when he went to London, England, and spent six months in a bakery there, and then, in the spring of 1878, came to the United States. For the first few months after reaching this country Mr. Osenbrug was engaged in farm work in Lafayette County, Missouri, but being stricken down with malaria he went to St. Louis, Missouri, and there found work at his trade, continuing to make that city his home until June, 1879, when he came to Butte, Montana.

Upon his arrival at Butte Mr. Osenbrug found it necessary at first to do whatever came to hand, including work in the woods, operating a threshing machine in the Deerlodge Valley and other pioneer jobs, but in 1880 was able to carry out his plans and establish a bakery which lasted through the winter, and in the spring he resumed his varied occupations. During the winter of 1881, however, he was able to establish himself permanently in a bakery business in a small way, building his own oven and making his own tools. From these primitive beginnings Mr. Osenbrug has had the satisfaction of developing his present fine establishment, which is the largest in Montana, he now operating under the caption of the Home Baking Company. His bakery, offices and warehouse are at No. 1904 Olympia Street. The selling territory comprises Butte and the outlying districts for a radius of 100 miles, and heavy shipments are made into Idaho. In 1904 the company was incorporated, with Mr. Osenbrug as president; Rudolph Osenbrug as vice president and secretary; and Edwin Thomas as treasurer. The plant today is one of the best equipped in the country, and is supplied with every modern appliance and all kinds of machinery to facilitate the production of bakery goods in the most sanitary manner. The equipment includes four continuous patented baking ovens and modern electric motors for operating the machinery. The doughs and flour are never touched by hand, and every process is conducted with the greatest care for cleanliness. Visitors from all over the country are impressed with this bakery and the people of Butte are naturally proud of it and the enterprise which has brought it into existence and maintained it. The company operates five large auto trucks for delivery purposes, all of the business being strictly wholesale, this being the only concern in the state which does no retail business. The leading brands of bread produced by this company are known all over Western Montana and into Idaho, they being the "Holsum" and "Betsey Ross."

Mr. Osenbrug is a republican. He affiliated with the Christian Science Church. A Mason, he belongs to Butte Lodge No. 22, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Deerlodge Chapter No. 3, Royal Arch Masons. He is also a member of Butte Lodge, Knights of the Maccabees. Mr. Osenbrug owns his modern residence at No. 825 West Broadway and a business block at Nos. 15-17 East Granite Street. The company owns the bakery, offices and warehouse.

The first marriage of Mr. Osenbrug took place at Butte, Montana, in 1883, when he was united with Miss Mary M. In 1901 Mr. Osenbrug was married second at New York City, New York, to Mrs. Annie (Heinbockel) Kroeger, his sister-in-law, and she died in 1913 at Los Angeles, California. By her first marriage she had a son, William P. Kroeger, who was graduated from the Penn College of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and he is now a physician and surgeon. Mr. Osenbrug was married in 1914 to Mrs. Katrina

Miller, a native of Ohio, no issue. Mrs. Osenbrug had two children by her first marriage, namely: Charles Miller, who is an employe of the Montana Power Company, is a resident of Butte; and Harry, who is in the automobile business, lives in the State of Washington.

The sons of Mr. Osenbrug who served in the World war are Edward P., Albert M., William P. and Charles P. Edward P. enlisted but a short time prior to the signing of the armistice so had no opportunity of seeing active service.

Albert M. Osenbrug enlisted in 1918 and served for eighteen months at Camp Omaha in the balloon battalion, and owing to his knowledge of this branch of the service was kept on this side as an instructor to drill new recruits.

Charles P. Miller, another stepson, enlisted in 1918 and was overseas in France for eighteen months, participating in the first battle of Soissons, in which he received seven machine gun bullets in the groin which incapacitated him for further service. He was in a machine gun battalion.

GLEN ALBERT SMITH received his early business training in the employ of some of Montana's lumber firms, and the knowledge he acquired of lumbering, supplemented by an ardent interest in the timber resources of the country, led him into the service of the Government in the forestry department, with which he has been identified for the past twelve or fifteen years.

Mr. Smith who is now assistant district forester at Missoula, was born in Bates County, Missouri, September 15, 1879, son of Albert M. and Lucinda (Pepper) Smith. Albert M. Smith was born at Frederick in Schuyler County, Illinois, in 1842, and died at Columbia Falls, Montana, April 20, 1918. As a young man he served in Company K of the Thirty-Seventh Illinois Infantry from the beginning of the Civil war. In 1876 he moved from Illinois to Bates County, Missouri, and was a farmer there until 1903, when he came to Montana and located at Kalispell. He was a republican and a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. His wife, Lucinda Pepper, was born in Ohio in 1842 and died at Rich Hill, Missouri, May 20, 1898. They have the following children: H. K., who was a store keeper for the Pacific Bell Telephone Company, and died at Portland, Oregan, in November, 1917; Lou, wife of E. G. Swarans, a farmer at Rich Hill, Missouri; Helen, wife of R. N. Erwin, of Yakima, Washington, Mr. Erwin being a lumberman; Glen A.; and Garfield who is in the postal service at Seattle.

Glen Albert Smith acquired a public school education in Missouri, and after completing a course in the Kalispell Business College went to work for the O'Neil Lumber Company, acquiring a thorough knowledge of the Company's business both in the office and in the yards. For a time he was also superintendent of the outside interests and sales manager for the Northwestern Lumber Company of Kalispell.

January 1, 1907, Mr. Smith entered the Forestry Bureau at Libby, Montana, and in November, 1908, was transferred to the Custer National Forest at Ashland as forest superivisor. In December, 1910, he was sent to Billings as forest supervisor of the Bear Tooth Forest. In 1914 he became supervisor of the Kootenai Forest, with headquarters at Libby, remaining at that post of duty until July, 1918, when he came to Missoula as assistant district forester in charge of the branch of operation. Mr. Smith is regarded as one of the most resourceful men in the employ of the Government Forestry Bureau. His responsibility were especially exacting during the well remembered summer of 1919, which surpassed all other seasons for drought in Montana. He was in charge of the biggest campaign ever waged against forest fires in the history of the service. When the situation was at the crisis some 6,000 men were employed as fire fighters in the district supervised by Mr. Smith. At one time there were 1,700 fires in progress in the forest.

Mr. Smith is affiliated with Libby Lodge No. 85, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. November 16, 1904, at Fort Benton, he married Miss Cressie R. Rowe, daughter of James and Catherine (Ivey) Rowe. Her mother is still living at Libby. Her father, who died at Fort Benton in 1899, was an early settlers in Montana, locating near Fort Benton in 1877. He was a successful rancher and stock raiser and at one time was assessor of Choteau County, when that county contained the area now divided among half a dozen counties. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have three children: Ivey L., born December 28, 1907; Glenna, born March 20, 1912; and Charlotte, born July 18, 1913.

Her mother is Mrs. M. Mason, of Missoula. Mr. and Mrs. Arnold have one daughter, Marjorie Ruth, born January 12, 1919.

H. T. Forbis. The subject of this sketch has spent the major portion of his life within the borders of Missoula County, where he still resides in the city of that name, and his persistent and commendable efforts have benefitted alike himself and the community, for he has always had deeply at heart the well being and improvement of the county, using his influence whenever possible for the promotion of enterprises calculated to be of lasting benefit to his fellow men, besides taking a leading part in all movements for the advancement of the community along social, intellectual and moral lines. He is the scion of an excellent old Montana family and possesses a justifiable pride in the old Treasure state, with which his life history is identified.

H. T. Forbis was born at Butte, Montana, on January 19, 1886, and is the son of William P. and Lenora B. (Jenks) Forbis. William P. Forbis was born in the State of Missouri in 1852, and his death occurred in 1898 at Missoula, Montana. He was numbered among the real pioneers of the Treasure State, having come here in the early '60s, during the progress of the great war between the states. He first located in Virginia City, where he gave his attention to prospecting and mining, later following the same pursuits at Helena and Butte, reaching the latter place in 1868. He worked entirely on his own account and was successful in his efforts. He made his permanent home in Butte, where he attained to considerable local prominence, standing high in the esteem of the people of the community. He was a democrat in politics, and served one term as collector of internal revenue. He was a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church. He was married to Leonora B. Jenks, who was born in 1860 in Iowa, but who now resides in Missouri. To this worthy couple were born the following children: H. T., the immediate subject of this sketch; C. J., the well-known architect of Missoula, who is specifically mentioned elsewhere in this work; Leona Belle is the wife of A. E. Drew, of Missoula, secretary of the Forbis-Toole Company and in charge of the corporation insurance.

H. T. Forbis secured his elementary education in the public schools of Butte and Missoula, graduating from the high school in the latter city in 1905. He then attended the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, for one year, after which he was a student in the State University of Montana, at Missoula, where he was graduated in 1911. He then entered the Western Montana Bank at Missoula, starting in a minor capacity, but was soon promoted to the position of bookeeper. He remained with this bank for four years, at the end of which time he organized the Forbis-Toole Company, a partnership between H. T. Forbis, J. H. Toole and A. E. Drew. The business was prosperous from the beginning and in 1919 was incorporated, its present title being the Forbis-Toole Company, Incorporated. The official personnel of the company is as follows: President, H. T. Forbis; vice president, J. H. Toole; secretary and treasurer, A. E. Drew. The Forbis-Toole Company is the largest company of its kind in Missoula County, and is mainly an investment company, handling farm loan, mortgages, district irrigation bonds, city bonds, improvement district bonds, in connection with which they also have a department for the handling of loans, real estate and insurance. During the period of four years since this company was organized it has handled a large amount of this investment paper and has also handled some of the largest real estate transfers in this county. They have earned a wide reputation because of their reliability, promptness and care in every transaction directed by them, and the company is rated high among similar concerns in Montana. A large part of the success of the Forbis-Toole Company is directly attributable to Mr. Forbis, whose personality has been in evidence in the entire history of the company.

In addition to his other interests, Mr. Forbis is secretary and treasurer of the Forbis Brothers Poultry Ranch Company, the plant of which is located four miles southwest of Missoula. They are extensive breeders of white leghorn chickens, having at the present time about 2,000 laying hens, and the firm has gained more than a state-wide reputation because of the high grade of the stock which they have put on the market.

In matters political Mr. Forbis is not bound by party lines, preferring to give his support to those men and measures which most nearly meet his approval. He has no aspiration for public office, preferring as a private citizen to do his humble share in directing public affairs from the ballot box. Religiously he is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally he is a member of Harmony Lodge No. 49, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He is also a member of the Rotary Club and of the Chamber of Commerce, and president and a director of the Missoula Amusement Company.

In 1912, at Missoula, Mr. Forbis was married to Hazel N. Tietjen, the daughter of Mrs. A. P. Tietjen, of Missoula. Mrs. Forbis is a skilled musician in both vocal and instrumental, being a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music, at Boston, Massachusetts. To Mr. and Mrs. Forbis have been born two children, Bettie Lee, born December 9, 1915, and Berthene, born in May, 1919.

In every avenue of life's activities in which he has engaged, Mr. Forbis has been true to every trust, and as a result of his fine personal qualities of character he enjoys to an eminent degree of the confidence and regard of the people.

Alonzo F. Rice. In the educational circles of Silver Bow County no name shines with more brilliant lustre than that of Alonzo F. Rice, who is as well fitted by natural gifts and temperament as by mental training and untiring industry for the prominent position he holds as president of the Butte Business College, the most important institution of the kind in the entire Northwest, and, according to Government reports, the seventh largest private school in the United States. A son of the late Frank Rice, he was born July 30, 1867, at Chilhowee, Missouri, of Irish descent, that branch of the Rice family to which he belongs having originated in Ireland, from whence the immigrant ancestor came to this country in colonial times locating in Virginia.

Born in Nashville, Tennessee, in 1838, Frank Rice was there reared and married. He served as a Union soldier throughout the Civil war, taking an active part in many of its battles. Moving to Chilhowee, Missouri, soon after his marriage, he was there successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death in 1879. He was a republican in politics, and a devout member of the Baptist Church. He married Mary Sanders, who was born in Nashville, Tennessee, in 1841, and died on the home farm in Chilhowee, Missouri, in 1887. Ten children were born of their union, as follows: Henry, an employe of the Butte Electric Railway Company, died in Butte in 1913; John died at the age of twenty-one years; Marshall died when but nineteen years old; Thomas Benton, in charge of a Presbyterian Church at Marshall, Missouri, was graduated from a university at Nashville, Tennessee, with the degree of Doctor of Laws; Tennie married William Brown, a farmer, and neither of them are now living; Alonzo F., with whom this sketch is principally concerned; George, who died in Butte in 1909, was connected with the Hecla Mine; J. Lee, secretary and treasurer of the Butte Business College, was graduated from both the Kansas City, Missouri, High School, and the Gem City Business College, of Quincy, Illinois, and has received the degree of C. P. A. from the State University of Montana, at Missoula, and from the American Institute of Accountants in New York City; Elizabeth lived but seventeen years; and Robert died in infancy.

Acquiring the rudiments of his education in Chilhowee, Missouri, Alonzo F. Rice was graduated from its high school, after which he attended the Missouri State Normal School at Warrensburg a year. In 1889 he was graduated from the Sedalia Business College in Sedalia, Missouri, and immediately after located at Hecla, Montana, where for six months he was bookkeeper for the Hecla Mining Company, and also superintended a night school, teaching penmanship and bookkeeping. In September, 1890, Mr. Rice established the Butte Business College, opening it with but six students, a number that has increased from term to term, there being now, in 1920, 700 earnest students. This live, wide-awake school, under the able supervision of Mr. Rice, has graded departments, an accredited high school department, and in addition to the regular business courses gives special instruction in steam engineering and mechanical drawing. The college occupies the entire fifth floor of the Owsley Building, its floor space of 14,000 feet being crowded to the limit. It is located in the heart of the business district of the city, at the corner of Park and Main streets, the busiest point of the busiest city in the great Northwest. Teaching what is useful, practical and most profitable along the lines of progressive business, the students enrolled in this college may advance as rapidly as ability and application will allow, the methods used in teaching the various branches required in a business education being nowhere excelled.

Mr. Rice is a stanch republican in his political views. He is a prominent member of the State Teachers' Association; of the Commercial Teachers' Association of the United States; of the Butte Country Club; and of the Silver Bow Club of Butte. Fraternally he belongs to Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is likewise a member of the Butte Chamber of Commerce, and owns an attractive home at 814 West Park Street.

Mr. Rice married in 1909, in Butte, Miss Mollie O'Leary, a daughter of John C. and Alice (Vernon) O'Leary, residents of Big Timber, Montana. Her father, now a venerable and respected man of eighty-six years, came to Montana in pioneer days, and owns a ranch just outside of Billings. Mr. and Mrs. Rice have two children, namely: Frank Vernon, born December 23, 1911; and John Robert, born July 14, 1914.

ERNEST SAMUEL HOLMES. By a life consistent in motive and action and because of his many commendable personal qualities, Ernest S. Holmes, of Missoula, has earned the sincere regard of all who know him. He came from an ancestry that distinguished itself in the pioneer days of this state, having in them that Anglo-Saxon unrest that drives the race ever Westward on its great adventure. He is what he is from natural endowment and self-culture, having attained his present standing solely through the impelling force of his own nature, and because of his consistent efforts to assist in the advancement of the community's best interests he is deserving of the present enviable standing which he enjoys.

Ernest Samuel Holmes was born in Minneapolis, Minnesota, on November 2, 1885, and is the son of E. and Catherine (Grady) Holmes. E. Holmes was a native of England, born in 1846, and his death occurred in Wendover, Wyoming, in 1888. He was reared and educated in England, and there he learned the trade of a baker. In London he owned and operated a large bakery for some time, but in 1866 he came to the United States. Soon after arriving in this country he made the trip to Montana, of which he became one of the real pioneers, and he played an important part in the arduous work incident to the lives of the early residents of this section. When the Northern Pacific Railroad was being constructed through this locality he had charge of the boarding cars for the company. He afterward located at Wendover, Wyoming, where he engaged in the mercantile business and also became proprietor of the hotel of that place. He was appointed postmaster of Wendover and in various ways became a man of importance to the community. He was a republican in his political views, and was a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Soon after coming to this state Mr. Holmes met Catherine Eugene Grady near Helena, and they were married there. She was born in 1856 in Green Isle, Minnesota, and to this union the following children were born: Ernest S., the immediate subject of this sketch; Dolores Martha, who remains unmarried and now lives with her mother, is a trained nurse and during the World war she enlisted as a nurse in the service of the Red Cross, and was sent to a base hospital in France, where she remained one year. Sometime after the death of her first husband Catherine Holmes became the wife of Allen Laughlin, who owns a ranch at Glendo, Wyoming, and to them have been born the following children: Ora M., who remains unmarried, is chief clerk in the state charity office at Cheyenne, Wyoming. Eda, who was the wife of John Peryman, died of influenza at Denver, Colorado, in December, 1918. Mr. Peryman, who now resides in California, was in service in France as a member of the United States Engineers, being recently mustered out. Eda was a student in the Montana State University for one year and then attended and graduated from the University of Wyoming. Roy is a printer by trade and resides at Cheyenne, Wyoming. Allen, Jr., who is now a truck driver for the Government at Sheridan, Wyoming, enlisted in the United States army and was sent to France, where he had an active part in some of the famous drives that very materially helped to win the war.

Ernest S. Holmes received but limited school education in his youth, for at the early age of twelve years he left home and went to work on a ranch in Wyoming, where he remained three years, and also worked at other labor which he could find to do. In the meantime he attended, as far as was possible, the winter terms of school and also embraced every opportunity to improve himself by private study. At the age of fifteen years he learned telegraphy at Orion Junction, Wyoming, and then was hired as operator by the Northwestern Railroad at Central City, South Dakota, where he remained about one and a half years. He then became operator at Horse Creek, Wyoming, for the Colorado Southern Railroad, with whom he remained for six months, going at the end of that time to Sunrise, Wyoming, where for two and a half years he was in the employ of the Colorado & Wyoming Railroad. He then found himself in a position to carry out a plan which had long before been formulated in his mind, and he entered Notre Dame University, at Notre Dame, Indiana, where he pursued the commercial course. Upon completing his studies in the university Mr. Holmes went to Mancos, Colorado, where for nine months he served as agent for the Rio Grande Southern Railroad. He then went to Spokane, Washington, where he remained for a short time, but in September, 1907, he came to Missoula, Montana. For one year he served as cashier of the Northern Express Company, and then entered the employ of John R. Daily as cashier and bookkeeper. In 1910 the business was incorparated as the John R. Daily Company and Mr. Holmes was selected as secretary and treasurer of the new organization. He still retains these official positions, and is one of the most active and efficient members of the official personnel of that company.

Politically Mr. Holmes gives his support to the republican party, and his religious membership is with the Roman Catholic Church. Fraternally, he is a member of Missoula Council No. 1023, Knights of Columbus, and is a life member of Hell Gate Lodge No. 383, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is also a member of the Rotary Club and the Chamber of Commerce of Missoula.

On October 6, 1909, at Hamilton, Montana, Mr. Holmes was married to Kathryn Jenkins, the daughter of C. P. and Celeste (Byrne) Jenkins. The father, who was a retired rancher, died in 1919 at Missoula, and his widow now resides in that city. To Mr. and Mrs. Holmes have been born three children, namely: William Cornelius, born July 28, 1910; Ernest Samuel, Jr., born June 18, 1912, and Kathleen Dolores, born November 9, 1916.

Mr. Holmes' record demonstrates that where there is a will there is a way and that obstacles to success may be overcome by courage and self-reliance. His life has been very intimately associated with the growth and prosperity of this locality during the years that he has lived here, and he has always been found on the right side of questions looking to the development of the community in any way. Genial and unassuming, he has won a host of warm friends, who esteem him for his genuine worth.

DALE HODSON. It is by no means an easy task to describe within the limits of this review a man who has led an active life and by his own exertions reached a position of honor and respect in the line of work with which his interests are allied. But biography finds justification, nevertheless, in tracing and recording such a life history, as the public claims certain property interest in the career of every individual and the time invariably arrives when it becomes advisable to give the right publicity. It is then with a certain degree of satisfaction that the chronicler essays the task of touching briefly upon such a record as has been that of Mr. Hodson, a business man of influence and high standing in Missoula County, who ranks with the leading men in his special line of work in Western Montana.

Dale Hodson was born at Sterling, Kansas, on May 21, 1882, and is the son of Harvey and Ella (Durham) Hodson. Harvey H. Hodson was born in the State of Indiana in 1851, and his death occurred in Bozeman, Montana, in 1905. He was reared and educated in Indiana, Iowa, and in young manhood went to Kansas, where he settled as a pioneer. He established a marble yard at Sterling, which he maintained there for a number of years, and in 1884 he came to Bozeman, Montana, of which also he was a pioneer, and there also he established a marble yard, which he operated until 1899, when he sold out, and then lived retired until his death, which occurred about six years later. In his political views Mr. Hodson was a republican and became a prominent citizen of Bozeman, serving a number of years as alderman. He was a member of the Knights of Pythias. He was married to Ella Durham, who was born in Kansas in 1860, and who now resides in Missoula. To Mr. and Mrs. Hodson were born three children, namely: Dale, the immediate subject of this review; Paul, who lives with his mother, is a salesman for the Missoula Tombstone Company; and Lysle, who also lives with his mother, is a student in the Montana State University at Missoula.

Dale Hodson received his educational training in the public schools of Bozeman, graduating from the high school there in 1900. He learned the trade of a marble and granite cutter, completing his apprenticeship in Butte in 1903. He then worked at his trade in Livingston, Billings, Bozeman and Butte, until 1907, when he came to Missoula as a stockholder and representative of the Butte Tombstone Company, and here established the Missoula Tombstone Company. The business was very flattering from the beginning, and a short time after it was established Mr. Hodson and his brother Paul bought the plant and are still the sole owners of it. It is now the largest marble cutting plant in Western Montana, aside from Butte, and many fine and expensive pieces of work have been produced at this shop. Mr. Hodson has thorough technical knowledge of the business, being one of the best marble and granite cutters in the state, and with this he combines a highly developed artistic sense, qualities which have enabled him to please the most exacting demands of his patrons.

In his political views Mr. Hodson is a socialist and keeps in close touch with the general trend of public events. He served one term as police commissioner of Missoula. Fraternally he is a member of Missoula Lodge No. 13, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Western Sun Chapter No. 11, Royal Arch Masons; Livingston Consistory, Scottish Rite (thirty-second degree), and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Helena, the Woodmen of the World, and Covenant Lodge No. 6, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1912, at Bozeman, Montana, Mr. Hodson was married to May Busch, the daughter of A. J. and Louise Busch, of Bozeman. Mr. Busch is superintendent of the Gallatin Valley Railroad. Mrs. Hodson is a graduate of the State Normal School at Dillon, Montana, and was a teacher in the public school of Bozeman for four years prior to her marriage. To Mr. and Mrs. Hodson have been born two children, Edna, born August 31, 1913, and Ella, born on July 16, 1918. Mr. Hodson is a man of fine personal qualities, and has so ordered his life that he has won and retains the universal confidence and good will of the people generally.

Dwight N. Mason. A busy lawyer, Dwight N. Mason has been called to many important public services since locating in Montana. He is present county attorney of Missoula County, is a former member of the Legislature, and being a young man his friends regard his career as only fairly started, with a prospect for the best honors and rewards of an able lawyer and leader in public affairs.

Mr. Mason was born at Cannelton, Indiana, March 24, 1884. The Masons are of English ancestry and were colonial settlers in Virginia. One member of the family in an earlier generation was Jeremiah Mason, a law partner of Daniel Webster. Mr. Mason's grandfather, John E. Mason, was a native of Kentucky, and was in the coal mining business for a number of years in that state. He lived at Owensboro, Kentucky, and afterward moved to Cannelton, Indiana, where he spent his last days. Floyd Mason, father of the Missoula lawyer, was born in Kentucky in 1829, and as a young man settled at Cannelton, Indiana, where he married and where he followed farming for many years. He died at Cannelton in 1903. He exercised a great deal of influence in poltics and civic affairs in his home locality of Indiana, was a democrat, and served a term as county treasurer. He was a Methodist, was a past master of his Masonic lodge, and his long life brought him the constant esteem of all who knew him. He married Kate A. Culley, who was born at Brandenberg, Kentucky, in 1854. She died at Omaha, Nebraska, in 1912. Her children were: William, a banker in Loup City, Nebraska; Oliver, a hardware merchant at Loup City; Lydia, wife of Lawrence A. McTurnon, a teacher in the public schools of Los Angeles; Dwight N.; Ada, wife of Harry Dill, owner and publisher of the Indiana Sentinel at Indiana Harbor, Indiana; Kathryn, wife of Cyrus Whitehead, clerk in a wholesale house at Louisville, Kentucky; and Laura, wife of Clyde Buttorf, a railway employe at New Albany, Indiana.

Dwight N. Mason attended the public schools of Cannelton, and in 1903 graduated from the Central Normal College at Danville, Indiana. He took his law course in the Indiana State University at Bloomington. As soon as he had his law diploma Mr. Mason sought a new home in the Northwest, and was engaged in the practice of law at Spokane, Washington, until the spring of 1910. After that he had his home and office at Ronan, Montana, until March, 1917. He moved to Missoula to accept appointment as deputy county attorney under Fred R. Angevine. In the fall of 1918 he was elected county attorney, and is now enjoying the honors and responsibilities of that office for a term of two years.

He was elected a member of the Legislature in the fall of 1914, representing Missoula County. He was in the fourteenth session and was re-elected in 1916 for the fifteenth session and also served in the extra session of the spring of 1918. During the fifteenth session he was chairman of the judiciary committee. He was also a member of the banking, rules, special committee on elections and other committees. Mr. Mason is credited with one of the most progressive pieces of legislation enacted by Montana in recent years, the "Mothers Pension Bill," which he drew up and introduced, and successfully guided through the House.

Mr. Mason is a loyal democrat in politics. He is a Methodist, and is affiliated with Danville Lodge of Masons in his native state, and also belongs to the Royal Arch Chapter at Danville. At Missoula he is a member of the Loyal Order of Moose.

Dwight N. Mason

In December, 1908, at Spokane, Washington, Mr. Mason married Miss Lillian R. Metz, daughter of C. H. and Lillian (Logan) Metz. Her parents reside at Spokane, where her father is manager of the branch house of the G. I. Case & Company, implement and agricultural machinery manufacturers. Mrs. Mason was educated in the Spokane High School, and attended the State Normal College of Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Mason are the parents of six children: Kathryn and June, twins, born August 6, 1912; Mary Lou, born July 6, 1914; Dwight N., Jr.; born February 2, 1916; Charles, born July 2, 1917; and Dorothy, born February 26, 1919.

Hugh Kelly, who grew up in Montana and absorbed the atmosphere and the typical characteristics of the West, is well known in the state, but his chief distinction is due to his founding the Kelly Auto Stage Line between Missoula and Polson.

This line, established by Mr. Kelly in 1919, has become the really popular route and means of transportation between Missoula and the National Glacier Park. Its facilities comprise two White passenger cars, each carrying twelve passengers, and in the past two years the service has the distinction of never having missed a trip a single day nor failed to connect on time with trains at Missoula and the Klondike steamer on Flathead Lake. Travelers from far and near have given a great deal of praise to this service, and credit for all is due Mr. Kelly, who as proprietor gives his personal supervision to every detail.

Hugo Kelly was born at Providence, Rhode Island, but was only eight years of age when his parents, Patrick H. Kelly and wife, came to Montana. He lived in their home in Missoula, but at the age of thirteen ran away and has since taken life on his own responsibility. For nineteen years he was employed on different stock ranches in Granite County. For four years he served as deputy sheriff of Missoula County. While in that office he had some exciting experiences. One time he took a prisoner to Salem, Oregon. After performing his duties he spent a day looking about the city of Seattle. While thus engaged a deputy sheriff arrested him as a suspicious character. Mr. Kelly made no effort to explain his identity, but in order to see the thing through properly he resisted arrest, and was given the usual rough handling. He was carried to the police station in a patrol wagon, and when searched his deputy's star was discovered on his suspenders. The officer who arrested Kelly asked, "why didn't you tell me you were an officer?" Kelly replied, "You didn't give me time. You assumed too much, and that is why the bodies of such fellows as you decorate the back alleys." A general laugh followed and his superior officer ordered his crestfallen subordinate to order a car and show Kelly the courtesies of the city, and after that nothing was too good for Kelly.

Mr. Kelly supports the democratic party and has been quite active in local politics. He and his wife are members of the Catholic Church. Like typical westerners, Mr. Kelly is thoroughly public spirited and a man generous to the core.

He married Miss Lilly M. Dooley, a native of Granite County, Montana, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Dooley. Mr. and Mrs. Kelly have two sons, who do them credit, Thomas and James, both of whom were educated in the Missoula High School. Thomas enlisted in the Marines at the age of eighteen, and for fourteen months was in the service of his country in France. He was one of the first Marines to return from overseas to this country. The son James is an expert automobile mechanic.

George Nels Olson. The study of the life and accomplishments of a successful man is full of educational value, especially when such a man has achieved tangible and practical results, and has raised the standard and set the example which go to form the real bulwarks of Americanism. A comprehensive knowledge of such a man brings an appreciation of him and of his motives; and when his efforts have resulted in the organization and maintenance of a sound financial institution all of the above gains added force, for upon the bankers of any community depends the stability of all business. One of the dependable men of Meagher County who most assuredly belongs to this class is George Nels Olson, cashier of the Martinsdale State Bank and vice president of the Ringling State Bank.

George Nels Olson was born in Atwater, Minnesota, June 22, 1884, a son of Martin Olson and grandson of Ole Myhren, surnames changing in Norway. The latter was a native of Norway, and he died on a ranch near Irving, Minnesota, where he had been a pioneer rancher. Upon coming to Minnesota he homesteaded 160 acres of land, proved it up, and kept on adding to his acreage until he was one of the most extensive land owners in his part of the state.

Martin Olson, father of George Nels Olson, is a native of Norway, where he was born in 1849, and where he lived until he was seventeen years old. In 1866 he came to the United States and located at Atwater, Minnesota, his present place of residence, where ever since his advent he has been the city's leading merchant. Going to that district in its pioneer days, he has been closely associated with its growth and development, and that of the surrounding country. A strong republican, he has been a leader in his party and a prime mover in civic affairs. The Norwegian Lutheran Church of Atwater holds his membership. He is a Mason.

Martin Olson was united in marriage with Gunnild Sivertson, born in Norway in 1858, and they became acquainted on board the boat which brought them to the United States. Their children are as follows: Ruby, who is unmarried, lives at Leper, Michigan, has been an instructor in music and drawing and is now an employe of the state institution at Leper; Marcus M., who is a merchant of Medicine Lake, Montana; George Nels, whose name heads this review; Newell R., who is vice president of the State Bank of Martinsdale; Darwin S., who is cashier of the Ringling State Bank; and Ruth Margaret, who is now Mrs. Harry Himmelman and lives with her husband, who is a merchant, at Mankato, Minnesota. They were married August 19, 1920.

George Nels Olson attended the public schools of Atwater, Minnesota, and was graduated from its high school course in 1901, following which he matriculated at the University of Minnesota, and studied law at night for nine months, following which he attended the Minnesota Business College and was graduated in the complete business course in 1903. In September, 1903, Mr. Olson entered the State Bank of Atwater as bookkeeper and rose through various positions to be assistant cashier of that institution, leaving it on September 10, 1907, to come West to Bismarck, North Dakota, to take the position of deputy insurance commissioner for the State of North Dakota, and held that responsible office until October, 1909. He then went to York, North Dakota, and was cashier of the State Bank of York from October, 1909, until November 1, 1910. On that date he went to Portland, Oregon, and became bookkeeper for the United States National Bank of that city, and held that position until June, 1911, when he returned to Atwater, Minnesota, for a few months' visit with his family. He then accepted a position with the Northern Rock Island Machine Company, with headquarters at Lewistown, Montana, and held it from the latter part of August, 1911, until June, 1912, when he entered the employ of H. E. Marshall, a merchant of Harlowtown. In the fall of 1913 Mr. Olson bought this business and incorporated the Marshall Busy Store, of which he still continues to be president. After he had placed this enterprise on a firm foundation he turned his attention in another direction, coming to Martinsdale on September 1, 1915, as cashier of the Martinsdale State Bank, which had been established on August 9, 1909. The present officials of this bank are G. K. Robertson, president; N. R. Olson, vice president; Andrew Hoyem, of Lennep, Montana, vice president; and George N. Olson, cashier. This bank was organized with a capital of $20,000 and a surplus of $4,000. Today it has a capital of $20,000, a surplus of $20,000, and deposits of $200,000. The bank is located on Main Street, and the modern bank building occupied by this bank was erected by the stockholders at a cost of $15,000. Each year dividends ranging from 10 to 30 per cent have been paid the stockholders in addition to the accumulation of the surplus of $20,000.

Mr. Olson bought the Ringling State Bank, of which he is vice president, and he and his brothers, N. R. Olson and D. S. Olson, control the two banks. He also owns a modern residence on Grand Avenue, Martinsdale; a ranch of 930 acres near Copper, Montana, on which he is raising 170 head of cattle, principally of the Hereford strain; and in addition to this is a member of a company owning 1,000 acres of land in the vicinity.

In 1915 Mr. Olson was married at Wabasha, Minnesota, to Miss Maude Elizabeth Hurd, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hurd, residents of Wabasha, where Mr. Hurd is engaged in mercantile pursuits. Mrs. Olson is a graduate of the Wabasha High School and of the Saint Cloud Normal School of Saint Cloud, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Olson have two children, namely: George Hurd, who was born on October 21, 1917; and Philip Bloise, who was born on January 2, 1919. Mr. Olson is a republican, but has never been an office seeker. A Mason, he belongs to Musselshell Lodge No. 69, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and formerly belonged to the lodge at Atwater, Minnesota, where he was made a Master Mason when only twenty-one years of age. He also belongs to Leads Chapter No. 20, Royal Arch Masons, at Leads, North Dakota, to Harlowton Commandery, and to Algeria Temple, at Helena, Montana.

It is not difficult to get at the source of Mr. Olson's success, for it lies within himself, in his earnestness, sincerity and ability. Steadily he has risen, faithfully discharging the duties of each position and reaching out to learn those of the one above him, so that when a promotion was given him he was ready for it. In his civic life he is equally dependable, and is always found on the side of law and order, and favoring those improvements which have for their object the securing of permanent development and not the extravagant expenditure of the money of the taxpayers.

WALLACE P. SMITH is widely known over the State of Montana, not only as a lawyer but chiefly through his long tenure of the office of United States Commissioner at Missoula.

Judge Smith was born in Marshall County, Iowa, February 10, 1862, son of Platt A. and Lovira P. (Carpenter) Smith. His parents were natives of New York, lived for several years in Michigan, and in 1853 moved to Iowa, where they took up government land and improved a farm. Their last years were spent in the State of Washington. Platt Smith served 3½ years as a member of the Second Iowa Cavalry during the Civil war. Of their two sons one is still living in Iowa.

Wallace P. Smith was well educated in his native state, and in 1890 came to Montana and located in Missoula, where after reading law he was admitted to the bar in 1891. While he has practiced law many years, he was appointed a United States commissioner in 1894, and has been repeatedly chosen for that office. He is a lifelong republican in politics. January 24, 1893, he married Loretta M. Bellew. They are the parents of two sons, Wallace B., who was a member of the Expeditionary Forces to France and died there of pneumonia on October 12, 1918, and George R., who resides at home. Mr. Smith is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Baptist Church.

CHARLES H. HALL has been engaged in the general practice of law at Missoula nearly a quarter of a century, and is a grandson of the late distinguished Montana jurist, Judge Charles S. Marshall of Missoula.

Mr. Hall was born in Ballard County, Kentucky, August 12, 1869, son of A. P. and Susan A. (Marshall) Hall. His mother spent her last years in Montana. His father, who died in Florida, served as a captain in the Confederate army under General Forrest, and for many years was a Kentucky merchant.

Charles H. Hall was reared in Kentucky, attended the public schools and Clinton College there, and in 1886, at the age of seventeen, came to Montana and joined his grandfather, Judge Marshall. Judge Marshall later became the first judge of the District Bench of Missoula, and Mr. Hall was made deputy clerk of court. He pursued the active study of law under his grandfather in 1892, and in 1895 was admitted to the bar and began practice the following year. He left his practice in 1898 to go as a volunteer for the Spanish-American war, serving as second lieutenant in the Third United States Cavalry. After five months he was mustered out and resumed his law business. Mr. Hall was elected county attorney in 1900, serving two terms or four years. In 1910 he became a member of the State Board of Education in Montana, and filled that post a number of years.

In 1899 he married Harriet W. Moore, of Kentucky. They are the parents of three daughters.

RIGHT REVEREND JOHN PATRICK CARROLL, D. D., second Bishop of Helena, was born at Dubuque, Iowa, February 22, 1864, of Martin Carroll and Catherine O'Farrell. His primary education was received at St. Raphael's parochial school of his native town. At the age of thirteen he entered St. Joseph's College, Dubuque, where he remained until 1883, when he was graduated from the classical department with the highest honors of his class. The one ambition of this gifted young man was to consecrate himself to the service of God in the priesthood. With a view to preparing himself for his lifework, he entered the Grand Seminary of Montreal, Canada. And there, during six years, he pursued the courses of philosophy and theology, graduating in June, 1889, with the degree of Doctor of Divinity. On July 7th of the same year he was ordained to the priesthood, and immediately appointed to the chair of mental philosophy in his alma mater, St. Joseph's College, Dubuque. He entered upon his new duties September 12, 1889, and for five years devoted himself with untiring energy to the cause of Christian education and the upbuilding of the College. So successful were his efforts that the Archbishop of Dubuque, the Most Reverend John Hennessy, resolved to place the College under his control, and on September 12, 1894, he was proclaimed president of St. Joseph's—a position he continued to hold during the next decade of years. His presidency was eminently successful. The number of students increased with surprising rapidity from year to year. An earnest student himself, Dr. Carroll strove to gather around himself a faculty of scholarly professors. In this, too, he was successful, and to such an extent that the fame of St. Joseph's College spread throughout the middle western states. The present status of the College gives ample proof of Dr. Carroll's foresight in planning and his remarkable force of character in overcoming every obstacle to the execution of his designs.

In 1903 the See of Helena was left vacant by the death of Right Reverend John B. Brondel. Rome cast about for a "strong man" to take charge of this important See. It chose, September 12, 1904, the Very Reverend Dr. Carroll. And the wisdom of its choice has been abundantly approved by all the subsequent history of the Diocese of Helena. The newly appointed bishop was consecrated in St. Raphael's Cathedral, Dubuque, December 21, 1904, and installed as second Bishop of Helena at the Sacred Heart Cathedral, January 31, 1905.

Bishop Carroll came to Helena well equipped for his diocesan work. As president of St. Joseph's College he had come into personal contact with all the priests of the Diocese of Dubuque. This acquaintance gave him an insight into the needs of a diocese as no other position could have given him. As a member of the board of diocesan consultors during a period extending over eight years he had become familiar with matters and methods of diocesan administration. Last, but not least, his position as president of the highest educational institution of the Dubuque Archdiocese had fitted him admirably to preside over the destinies of an ambitious young diocese now looking for someone to lead it onward and upward in its educational work. It is needless to add that Bishop Carroll's appointment was highly appreciated throughout the diocese of Helena, and that he was enthusiastically received by the priests, the religious communities and the people of western Montana.

In an age afflicted with an insatiable thirst for rights, he came to his people with the inspired words, "In Sanctitate et Justitia," as his motto, to teach them that man has not only rights to demand, but also duties to fulfill—duties towards God, "In Sanctitate," and duties toward his neighbor, "In Justitia." For this reason he was doubly welcome. His motto became the text of his inaugural address at the High Mass on the Sunday following his installation, and has been the inspiration of all his work since his advent to Helena.

Like the industrious Montana husbandman, he believes in the intensive cultivation of the Lord's vineyard. Beginning with his clergy—the laborers in the vineyard, he said to them and kept saying, "Let him that is holy become holier still," and "If you wish to sanctify others, first sanctify yourselves." Realizing the necessity of sanctity of life among the clergy, he decreed that retreats for them should be given every year instead of every two years, as had been the case. And he required that all priests laboring in the diocese should attend them. To make these retreats at once efficient and attractive, he invited to preach to them the most prominent speakers among the bishops and priests of the country. Each of these retreats he has attended in person, and has given conferences at all of them. In 1909 he conducted all the exercises of the retreat himself, urging his clergy with accents of deepest conviction to give themselves without reserve to the work of the Master.

One of the first things to attract Bishop Carroll's attention upon taking up his work in Montana was the fact that the number of clergy was wholly inadequate to meet the spiritual needs of the rapidly growing Catholic population. He found but twenty-four priests in his vast diocese. He was not long in remedying this condition, and now his clergy number ninety-three.

His pastoral solicitude was next given to the religious communities of Sisters. These he has guided in their work at all times, advising them in their doubts, encouraging them in their difficulties, and urging them on whenever prudence would permit it to undertake new works or to put forth more strenuous efforts. Since his advent to Montana five more Sisterhoods have entered the diocese, the Sisters of Charity, B. V. M., the Sisters of St. Dominic, the Sisters of Mercy, the Hospital Sisters of St. Joseph and the Sisters of St. Francis.

With his people his voice has been but the echo of the voice of Pius X, whose motto was "to restore all things in Christ." In conformity with the decrees of the Holy Father, he has insisted that the priests should give to the people regularly plain and solid instructions on Christian doctrine, and should urge upon them a return to the practice of frequent and even daily communion. Firmly believing that, in the religious world, the twentieth century is destined to be the "century of the layman," he has joyfully lent his aid to the promotion of religious and fraternal organizations of Catholic laymen. For the young men of his episcopal city he has provided a club fully equipped with all that could be desired for social and athletic entertainment. He has been for years an enthusiastic member of the Knights of Columbus. In the national convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians held in Portland, Oregon, July, 1910, he was unanimously requested to accept the office of national chaplain, and the Chicago national convention of the Order held in July, 1912, insisted that he continue to be their spiritual guide. In all his addresses to Catholic laymen he has urged upon them the grandeur of their mission and the absolute necessity, if they would accomplish this mission, of living lives that square with the spirit and practices of their Catholic faith. To aid them in the work of their personal sanctification he inaugurated in his diocese the practice of laymen's retreats, he himself preaching the first of these retreats, held at Mount St. Charles College, June, 1912.

With Bishop Carroll education ranks next to religion—the school must follow in the wake of the church. To increase the efficiency of the Catholic educational system of his diocese he directed that a strong campaign be undertaken by parish priests and teachers to secure the attendance of all Catholic children at parochial schools; he ordered improvements and additions for the schools already built; and in several parishes had new schools erected. He has even succeeded in establishing high schools in the larger cities of his diocese. This is but what could be expected of him, who, whilst president of St. Joseph's College, had, in the yearly college conferences held in the east, led the fight for the extension of our Catholic high school system. To advance and unify his diocesan school system and render it more efficient, he directed that the practice of holding summer schools be made general among the sisterhoods of the diocese, and he supplemented the work of the summer school by the annual teachers' institute, which the parish priests and teachers must attend.

Bishop Carroll's zeal for the cause of Catholic education will best be understood when one considers that before undertaking any other work of importance he set about building the St. Helena parochial school, which is now generally conceded to be the most perfect school building in the United States, not only from an architectural point of view, but from a pedagogical and hygienic point of view as well. Besides the ordinary school accommodations, it has thoroughly modern club rooms for the young men of the city. That the educational policy of the Right Reverend Bishop has already borne abundant fruit is evident from the enviable record that the Catholic school children have made in the state examinations. To complete his diocesan educational system Bishop Carroll has built Mount St. Charles College, a boarding and day college for young men. The building occupies a conspicuous height known for over a quarter of a century in Helena as Capitol Hill. The course of studies he has outlined for the College has received the warmest encomiums from the press. Its staff of professors would do credit to older institutions of learning. The College is incorporated under the laws of the state of Montana with power to grant degrees. The high school department was admitted to the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools March 21, 1919, and it is expected that the college department will be admitted very shortly. In the year 1918 a new gymnasium was added to the group of college buildings. It is conceded to be the finest structure of its kind in the northwest. At the same time a science hall was built, containing laboratories with the most up to date equipment for the study of chemistry, physics, biology and botany. The growth of the College has made it imperative to provide more extensive accommodations. A new wing, fully as large as the main building, is being erected to receive the increasing number of students of high school and collegiate grades, whilst a separate building, also under construction, will serve as a preparatory college for the younger students. With these new buildings the College will be able to accommodate five hundred students. Bishop Carroll co-operated with the government in establishing a unit of the Students Army Training Corps in the fall of 1918 and placed the facilities of the College at its disposal. He established a Central High School in 1908 for the boys and girls of Butte, and is now preparing to erect a second high school, an institution exclusively for boys, in the same city.

But Bishop Carroll has not confined his activities to religion and education. He has identified himself with the great civic movements of the day. The diocese of Helena knows his devotion to the cause of temperance. In his confirmation tours he never fails to point out the dangers of alcoholism, and to invite boys and girls to pledge themselves to total abstinence from intoxicating drinks until the age of twenty-five, or for life. This practice is without doubt the most efficient factor presently working in the state for the cause of temperance. When the midnight closing movement was being agitated in Helena, Bishop Carroll was instrumental in having a citizens' meeting held at the Auditorium. It was his soul-stirring address on this occasion that moulded public opinion and compelled the unwilling aldermen to vote a midnight closing ordinance. And it is a matter of history how the midnight closing idea spread from Helena to other parts of the state. Through his addresses and written articles the Bishop exerted a great influence in securing the passage of the state prohibition law.

A true friend of the laboring man, Bishop Carroll has fearlessly warned him in public addresses against the fallacies and dangers of Socialism, a movement that is injurious not only to the workingmen themselves, but to church and to state at large. The Socialistic press has fiercely attacked him for these discourses. But the editors of saner journalism throughout the country have praised their depth and wisdom. It may be noted here that Bishop Carroll was probably the first Catholic bishop in the United States to establish special Labor Day services in the churches of his diocese and the first to address a national convention of the American Federation of Labor, which he did in Seattle, Washington, November 12, 1913. In that address he declared that the Church endorses the essentials of Unionism and he asked that the Unions demand Sunday rest.

A third movement that has actively enlisted the co-operation of the Bishop is the colonization of Montana. His keen eye saw from the beginning the agricultural possibilities of this state and his patriotic sentiments induced him to take a hand in the promising work. In proof of this it may be said that he had not spent six months in his diocese when he asked Pope Piux X to bless his colonization work in Montana. Soon his ideas took definite shape. Three of his priests have been actively engaged in colonizing work with a view to bringing colonists to the Belgian Colony on the Valier Irrigation Project, to St. Charles in the Smith River Valley, to the vicinity of Deer Lodge, and to the Helena Valley.

The fame of the Right Reverend Bishop soon passed over the borders of Montana, as is evident from the fact that he has been much in demand as a speaker at civic, as well as at ecclesiastical, celebrations both east and west. To give but a few instances: He was asked to deliver the chief address at the Washington celebration in Portland; at the dedication of the cathedrals of Seattle and of Cheyenne; and at that of the Church of Our Lady of Lourdes, Spokane; at the national convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in Portland and Chicago; at the Catholic Day of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition in Seattle; and the entire Lenten course of 1911 at St. Patrick's Church, Montreal, was confided to him; on September 21, 1919, he preached the sermon at the pontificial high Mass in the Cathedral of Baltimore, in which Cardinal Mercier and Cardinal Gibbons participated. His public addresses ring true with love for America, her laws, her constitution, and her institutions. He is a fervent advocate of civil liberty and religious tolerance, just as he is the uncompromising foe of oppression and persecution. In mass meetings held in Helena and Butte he fearlessly attacked the infamous policy of spoliation and confiscation practiced by the French government. The weight of his influence in public discussion induced the Hon. Edwin L. Norris, governor of Montana, to appoint him to represent the state at the peace conference held in Washington for the purpose of advancing the cause of international arbitration. The high regard in which Bishop Carroll is held by his colleagues in the hierarchy is plainly shown by the fact that he has been asked by His Eminence, Cardinal Gibbons, by various archbishops and bishops throughout the Union to preach retreats to their clergy. Further manifestations of this esteem are seen in the fact that he has been solicited for the offices of co-adjutor of the Archbishop of San Francisco, rector of the Catholic University at Washington, D. C., and Archbishop of Dubuque, Iowa. Nothing but his own conception and presentation of the importance of the work he had undertaken in Montana has prevented his appointment to one or other of these high positions.

This sketch would be incomplete if mention were not made of the St. Helena Cathedral, now in course of erection at Helena. This sacred edifice is modeled after the Votive Church in Vienna, Austria, the most perfect structure of Gothic architecture extant. The width of the new cathedral is seventy-two in the nave and aisles and one hundred and twenty feet in the transepts; its length is two hundred feet; its ceiling is sixty-five feet high, and its roof rises one hundred feet; while above the entire mass of building rise the twin spires to the height of two hundred and thirty feet. It is indeed a magnificent temple in the purest of the fourteenth century Gothic. It is graceful in all its lines and, like its type—the Votive Church of Vienna, is considered perfect in its proportions. But its proudest boast is that it is the church of all the people of Helena, because the citizens of Helena, irrespective of creed or nationality, have contributed to its erection. On the occasion of the laying of the cornerstone of the cathedral, Bishop Carroll told the people of Helena assembled at the Auditorium that he regarded them as his sheep and asked them to regard his cathedral as their church.

Judge Frederick C. Webster, who for a dozen years was a judge of the District Court at Missoula, is one of the oldest members of the Montana bar still in active service. He handled his first cases at Butte some five years before Montana was admitted to the Union.

Judge Webster is of an old New England family and was born at Litchfield, Connecticut. He is a graduate with the class of 1873 from Yale University, and studied law under Judge Seymour of Litchfield. He was admitted to the Connecticut bar in 1874, and after a period of private practice moved to Minneapolis, where he was a partner with Judge Atwater in the firm of Atwater and Webster. Judge Webster lived for a time in Colorado and from there came to Montana in 1884. His first home was at Butte, but since 1887 he has lived in Missoula and practiced law. He was associated with Judge Woody for some years, was elected and served as county attorney four years, was mayor four years, and in 1900 succeeded Judge Woody on the bench of the District Court. By re-election he remained on the bench, giving his duties the benefit of all his wide experience and learning for twelve years. After retiring he again served as county attorney for two years, and in 1917 was appointed receiver of the Bitter Root Valley Irrigation Company. Judge Webster has been a life-long republican, and is a past grand master of the Masonic Order of Montana.

June 1, 1889, at Missoula, he married Miss Anna C. Bye, a native of Iowa. They have three children. One son, Charles Norman, early in the war joined the Ninth Artillery Regiment and was trained at Fort Sill, Oklahoma. The son Fred B. is a young lawyer and associated with his father in practice.

Judge Theodore Lentz, who in 1914 was elected judge of the District Court at Missoula, has been a Montana lawyer for fifteen years, and his work and character have gained him a broad appreciation and the esteem due his learning, his industry and his unqualified integrity.

Judge Lentz was born in Williamson County, Illinois, October 28, 1874, son of Eli and Lydia J. (Hare) Lentz. His parents were Southerners, the father a native of North Carolina and his mother of Tennessee. They spent their active lives in Illinois. Eli Lentz for four years was a Union soldier in Company H of the One Hundred and Ninth Illinois Infantry. In all that service he never lost a day from sickness or wounds, and fought in some of the greatest battles of the war.

Judge Lentz was reared and educated in Illinois, and graduated from Valparaiso University in Indiana in 1895. In 1899 he entered the law department of the University of Michigan, and later resumed his studies there during 1903-04. Judge Lentz came to Montana in 1904, practiced law at Glendive, and served one term as county attorney. His home has been at Missoula since 1909, and a large general practice absorbed his time and talents until he was elected to succeed Judge Patterson in 1914 and re-elected to the bench in 1916.

Judge Lentz is a leading republican and a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason. He married at Glendive Ruth Hunter, of Watertown, South Dakota. They have three children, one son and two daughters.

Hon. John W. Tattan. Standing out distinctly as one of the central figures of the judiciary of the great Treasure State is the name of the Hon. John W. Tattan, the able and popular judge of the Twelfth Judicial District. Prominent in legal circles and equally so in public matters beyond the confines of his own jurisdiction, with a reputation in one of the most exacting of professions that has won him a name for distinguished service second to none of his contemporaries, there is today no more prominent or influential man in the district which he has long honored by his citizenship. Wearing the judicial ermine with becoming dignity and bringing to every case submitted to him a clearness of perception and ready power of analysis characteristic of the learned jurist, his name and work for years has earned him recognition as one of the distinguished citizens of his locality.

John W. Tattan was born in Midleton, County Cork, Ireland, on May 27, 1847, and was the second child in order of birth of the five children born to John and Mary (Walsh) Tattan, both of whom were natives of the Emerald Isle. They are both now deceased, the father passing away in 1889, when seventy-eight years of age, and the mother in 1888, at the age of seventy years. John Tattan, the father, was a mail contractor for over twenty years, being engaged in the transportation of Government mail, and he was also a hotel keeper for many years.

John W. Tattan received a good education in his native land, his studies including a thorough course in civil engineering. When eighteen years of age, desiring larger opportunities for the exercise of the energies and talents which were his, the lad immigrated to the United States, taking passage on the old steamship the City of Paris, which landed him at New York City on April 16, 1865. He at once came west, locating in the iron mining country in Minnesota, where he followed his profession as a civil engineer up to 1870. On June 5th of that year Mr. Tattan went to Chicago and enlisted in the United States army. In July he was attached to the Seventh Regiment, United States Infantry, at Fort Shaw, Montana Territory. He came to Fort Benton in January, 1872, remaining there until June 5, 1875, when he received his honorable discharge from the service, with the rank of sergeant.

Remaining in Fort Benton, Mr. Tattan was in August, 1875, elected to the office of probate judge of Chouteau County. So satisfactory was his discharge of the duties of that office that he was several times elected to succeed himself, holding the office continuously, with the exception of a period of two years, up to 1889. Mr. Tattan had applied himself closely to the study of law and took the examination for admission to the bar in 1877. In 1889 he was elected county attorney for Chouteau County, serving for three years. He was then employed as attorney for the Northern Roundup Association, and it is noteworthy that during his connection with that organization they were successful in ridding Northern Montana of practically all of its "bad men." In 1900 Mr. Tattan was appointed judge of the Tenth Judicial District, and in 1901 he was appointed judge of the Twelfth Judicial District. He has been continuously elected to succeed himself in this office and is the present incumbent of the district bench.

Judge Tattan's qualifications for the office of judge are unquestionable. First of all, he has integrity of character. He possesses the natural ability and the essential requirements, the acumen of the judicial temperament. He is able to divest himself of prejudice or favoritism and consider only the legal aspects of a question submitted. No labor is too great, however onerous; no application too exacting, however severe, if necessary to the complete understanding and correct determination of a question. These are, indeed, words of high praise, but the encomium is justified in every particular, for the judge has proved himself a distinct man, in all the term implies, and its implication is wide.

Politically Judge Tattan gives his support to the democratic party. In the November, 1920 primaries, although Judge Tattan failed to receive the democratic nomination for the first time because of the non-partisans and radical laborites, over 400 republicans wrote his name on their ticket and he thus became the republican nominee after being a democrat over fifty years. He was re-elected, leading the nominee for governor by several hundred. Judge Tattan's term will expire in 1925. He takes a live interest in everything affecting the general interests of the community, giving his active support to all worthy movements. In 1867 J. M. Arnoux built a log house in Fort Benton and, partly from a sentimental viewpoint, Judge Tattan bought the old cabin and it has been incorporated into his present home, it being the present sitting room.

On April 11, 1876, Judge Tattan was married to Alice Seifred, a native of the State of Iowa, and to them have been born two children. John J., the eldest, married Carrie E. Arenberg, and they have four children, their home being in Glasgow, Montana. Mary E. Tattan became the wife of C. W. Morrison, a merchant in Fort Benton, and they have two children.

ALBERT JOHN FOSS is manager of the Beaverhead Milling and Elevator Company at Dillon, the only grain elevator in Beaverhead County, and has been in the grain business as a buyer and dealer the greater part of his life. He was born in the Pine Tree State, in the extreme northeastern part of the United States, but has lived his life chiefly in Minnesota, the Dakotas and Montana.

He was born at Bangor, Maine, August 4, 1862. His great-grandfather Foss brought the family from England in pioneer times. Through his mother one of his great-grandfathers was also named Foss. This is a family that has long been prominent in New England, and one line includes ex-Governor and Senator Foss of Massachusetts. Samuel Foss, father of the Dillon grain merchant, was born in Maine in 1828, and spent many years there as a lumberman in Aroostook and other counties. In 1867, as a lumberman, he went to Wisconsin, and was foreman of a firm that operated four or five mills in the heaviest forests of that state. He was a prominent man in his time in Wisconsin, and had the supervision of the work by which the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Canal was lowered to water level. In 1874 Samuel Foss moved to Minnesota, and as a farmer, blacksmith and cooper was a leading man in the citizenship and financial life of New Auburn. In 1882 he went to Frederick, South Dakota, and was engaged in farming there the rest of his life. He died in 1899. He held some town office almost continuously, was an active republican in politics, and a member of the Masonic fraternity. Samuel Foss married Esther Johnston, who was born in Maine in 1834 and is now living with her daughter, Mrs. Carrie Armstrong in the Province of Alberta, Canada. Their children were as follows: A. G., a land agent at St. Paul, Minnesota; Emily, wife of Edward Chilton, died in 1891; Bertha, living at Hudson, Wisconsin, widow of H. Strickland, who died in 1919 and was a grain buyer; Albert John; May, wife of O. H. Poppleton, a farmer and carpenter living near Baker, Montana; Edith, widow of Doctor Pettingill of Frederick, South Dakota; Charles is a farmer and contractor at Didsbury in Alberta, Canada; D. H. is a rancher near Baker, Montana; and Carrie is the wife of Alfred Armstrong, a banker in Saskatchewan, Canada.

Albert John Foss was five years of age when his father moved to Wisconsin. He attended schools in that state, also at New Auburn, Minnesota, and Brownton, Minnesota, graduating from the high school of the latter place. At the age of seventeen he became a telegraph operator with the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, and after working for some time in Minnesota he became a grain buyer at Barnesville in that state. Beginning in 1884, he was at Barnesville three years, then spent three years as a grain buyer at Winthrop, Minnesota, and in 1890 returned to Brownton and continued in the grain buying business until 1901. Following that he spent about a year at Bath, South Dakota, three years at Litchfield, Minnesota, one year at Pipestone, and after that gave up the grain business to become manager of the Foss-Armstrong Hardware Company in their branch store at Hudson, Wisconsin. He remained there four years, moved his home to Eau Claire, Wisconsin, and was traveling representative for the Foss-Armstrong Hardware Company. For three years his travels covered the greater part of the state. He then resumed the management of the branch store at Hudson.

On August 14, 1912, Mr. Foss came to Montana and located at Wibaux, where he resumed his former business as a grain buyer. On January 1, 1919, he took the management of the Beaverhead Mill and Elevator Company at Dillon. Through this elevator is marketed practically all the grain raised in Beaverhead County. The mill and elevator are located along the tracks of the Oregon Short Line Railroad. The mills have a capacity of 100 barrels of flour per day, while the elevator's capacity is 40,000 bushels. Mr. Foss is a stockholder in this important local business of Dillon.

He owns a residence at Wibaux and makes his home in Dillon, at 335 South Idaho Street. During his residence at Brownton, Minnesota, he served as an alderman. He is a republican, is affiliated with Wibaux Lodge No. 81, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, being master of the Lodge for 1919, is affiliated with Glendive Chapter No. 5, Royal Arch Masons, and is a Scottish Rite Mason and Odd Fellow.

In 1886, at Crookston, Minnesota, Mr. Foss married Miss Nina E. Smith, a daughter of Parker and Marie (Howland) Smith, the latter a resident of Los Angeles. Her father, who died in Minneapolis, was a grain merchant. Mrs. Foss is a graduate of the high school of Green Bay, Wisconsin. To their marriage have been born three children. Floyd S. P. is a graduate of the Law School of the University of Southern California with the LL. B. degree and is now practicing at Glendive, Montana. Fern, at home, is a graduate of the high school at Eau Claire, Wisconsin, the Valley City Normal College in North Dakota, the Superior Normal in Wisconsin, and for four years was a successful teacher in Wibaux, Montana. Nina Alberta is now a student in the Beaverhead County High School at Dillon.

George Melville Crabb, M. D. District surgeon for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway at Deer Lodge, Doctor Crabb has earned a place of genuine distinction in the medical profession at Montana.

His Scotch ancestors settled in Pennsylvania in colonial times. His grandfather was a native of that state, was a minister of the Presbyterian Church, and died at Bryan, Ohio, at the age of fifty-five. John M. Crabb, father of Doctor Crabb, was born at Bryan, Ohio, in 1842, and from that community as a youth of nineteen he enlisted in the Thirty-third Ohio Regiment, and for four years was a soldier of the Union. He rose to the rank of first lieutenant. He was with Sherman on the march to the sea, and at one time during the war was stationed at Galveston, Texas. He married in Ohio, lived on a farm near Bryan for several years, and then moved to Greenfield, Iowa, where he was a farmer until he retired in 1904. His last years were spent at Parsons, Kansas, where he died in 1910. Though a Union soldier, he was a democrat in politics. He was an elder of the Presbyterian Church, belonged to the Grand Army of the Republic and affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. John M. Crabb married Rachel Craver, born near Bryan, Ohio, in 1842, and died at Parsons, Kansas, in 1910, the same year as her husband. Of their five children Dr. George M. is the youngest. C. E. Crabb, the oldest, is manager of the Willard-Crabb Farms Company at Deer Lodge. James M. was a graduate of Rush Medical College at Chicago, and practiced medicine in that city until his death in 1905. He served with that institution a year and a half, and thus equipped and trained he came to Montana and settled at Deer Lodge in 1912. He became associated with Dr. H. G. Willard, then district surgeon of the Milwaukee Railway, and in 1915 succeeded Doctor Willard in that office. In addition he also looks after a large general medical and surgical practice. Their land has complete water rights, and the ranch is noted for its wheat crops and for its fine herd of Shorthorn cattle.

Doctor Crabb and family reside at 812 Missouri Avenue. He married at Marshalltown, Iowa, in 1911, Miss Pauline Andrews, daughter of George L. and Clara (Arnold) Andrews, residents of Marshalltown. She is also a Phi Beta Kappa, the honorary scholarship fraternity. Doctor and Mrs. Crabb have three children: Ruth, born September 3, 1912; Doris, born April 3, 1914; and John, born December 8, 1917.

Gilbert Arnold Ketcham. Western Montana numbers among its citizens many skillful physicians, lawyers of state repute, well-known manufacturers and business men of more than local reputation and, while proud of them, she is not lacking in others who have achieved distinction in callings requiring intellectual abilities of a high order. Among the latter, Mr. Gilbert A. Ketcham, the popular and efficient principal of the Missoula County High School, occupies a deservedly conspicuous place. No one is more entitled to the thoughtful consideration of a free and enlightened people than he who shapes and directs the minds of the young, adds to the value of their intellectual treasures and moulds their characters. This is pre-eminently the mission of the faithful and conscientious educator, and to such noble work is the life of the subject of this sketch devoted.

Gilbert Arnold Ketcham is descended from sterling old Scotch-Irish ancestry, his emigrant ancestors having come to this country from the north of Ireland about the middle of the eighteenth century and settled on Long Island. The subject's father, R. G. Ketcham, was born in 1829 at Patchog, Long Island, and died at Geneva, Ohio, in 1902. He was reared and educated in his native town. In 1843 he accompanied his parents on their removal to Minnesota, locating on farming land near where Chatfield now stands. On attaining mature years he engaged in the hardware business at Chatfield, but in 1879 he went to Ohio, making his home at Geneva, from which place he went out as a traveling salesman over Ohio. He died at Geneva in 1902. Originally a republican in his political views, he later became a supporter of the prohibition party and was active in its behalf. He was a very active and devoted member of the Congregational Church. In 1874, at Rome, Ohio, Mr. Ketcham was married to Laura Arnold, who was born there in 1847 and whose death occurred there in 1879. Gilbert A. is the only child born to this union.

Gilbert A. Ketcham was born at Chatfield, Minnesota, on September 27, 1875, but was reared and attended the public schools at Geneva, Ohio, whither his father had removed when he was about eight years of age. He graduated from the Geneva High School in 1894, and during the following year he taught school at Rome, Ohio. He then entered Oberlin College, at Oberlin, Ohio, where he was graduated in 1899, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He was then engaged as principal of the high school at Geneseo, Illinois, where he remained for two years, and the following year he served as principal of the high school at St. Cloud, Minnesota. Mr. Ketcham came to Montana in 1902, and from that year until 1911 he rendered efficient service as principal of the Flathead County High School at Kalispell, resigning that position to accept that of deputy superintendent of public instruction of the State of Montana, in which position he served one year. In the fall of 1912 he came to Missoula as principal of the Missoula County High School, of which position he is still the incumbent. Under his supervision there are twenty-eight teachers and 650 pupils. The building is a splendid type of the most approved style of modern school buildings, having every facility required to promote the efficiency of the work done there. Under his direction the school has made remarkable progress and stands today among the leaders of the high schools of the state. Mr. Ketcham is a man of scholarly tastes and studious habits, keeps abreast of the times in advanced educational methods, and his general knowledge is broad and comprehensive. Years of conscientious work have brought with them not only an increase in reputation, but also that growth in educational ability the possession of which constitutes marked excellence in the profession.

On December 26, 1901, at Geneseo, Illinois, Mr. Ketcham was married to Priscilla Schnabele, the daughter of P. S. and Amalia Schnabele, of Geneseo, where the former is a successful banker.

Politically Mr. Ketcham gives his support to the republican party, while his religious affiliation is with the Presbyterian Church, in which he is an elder. He is a member of the Rotary Club and of the Chamber of Commerce, both at Missoula. He is deservedly popular in the community, and his friends are in number as his acquaintances. His life affords a splendid example of what an American youth, plentifully endowed with good common sense, energy and determination, may accomplish when directed and controlled by earnest moral principles.

Herbert T. Wilkinson has been a resident of Missoula, Montana, since 1889, the year of statehood, and has long been prominent in the affairs of his home city, serving as mayor and in other official capacities.

He was born in London, England, May 15, 1864, son of Charles R. and Jane E. Wilkinson. His father died in England and his mother is living at the advanced age of eighty-eight in Missoula. Mr. Wilkinson was reared in England, had a common school education, and after coming to the United States spent several years in Wyoming before locating at Missoula in August, 1889.

For the first three years, from August, 1889, to December, 1892, he was chief clerk to the superintendent of the Northern Pacific Railway Company. From January, 1893, to December, 1898, he was deputy county clerk and treasurer and from January, 1899, to December, 1902, county clerk and recorder. After leaving office he took up the real estate and mining business and was successfully engaged therein from January, 1903, to April, 1916.

Mr. Wilkinson is the present mayor of Missoula, having been elected in May, 1916, under the commission form of government, and devotes practically all his time to the administration of municipal affairs. He is a director of the Missoula Building and Loan Association, vice president of the Rotary Club, has served on the executive committee of the Red Cross, and is a member of the Elks and Woodmen of the World. Politically he is a democrat and is a member of the Episcopal Church.

Mr. Wilkinson has three daughters and one son: Ethel, born in 1899, now Mrs. A. E. Leech, of Valier, Montana; Holroyd, born in 1893; Dorothy, born in 1897; and Marjorie, born in 1903.

Judge John E. Patterson, former judge of the District Court at Missoula, has been an able member of his profession a quarter of a century, and came to Missoula from Chicago, where he had practiced law several years.

Judge Patterson was born in Floyd County, Iowa, at Charles City, in 1866, son of John G. and Hester (Quiggle) Patterson. His parents were natives of Pennsylvania and went to Iowa from Ohio. Judge Patterson grew up in Iowa, had a public school education there, and graduated from the Iowa State University with the class of 1889. In 1891 he entered the Chicago College of Law, where he spent two years. He was admitted to the Illinois bar, and practiced in Chicago until 1900, when he came to Missoula and became associated with Charles Hall. Judge Patterson was called from his large general practice to the office of district judge in 1912, and since leaving the bench has again taken his place among the lawyers of Missoula. In 1916 Judge Patterson was nominated by the democratic party for chief justice of the Supreme Court of Montana, but failed of election by a small majority. Mr. Patterson is a democrat in politics.

At Chicago in 1894 he married Carolina S. Paxton, also a native of Iowa. They have three sons and one daughter. The son John left the University of Montana during his senior year to enlist in the National army, and became a member of the Twentieth Regiment of Engineers and saw active service for thirteen months in France.

Fred W. Handel is senior member of Handel Brothers, the oldest and largest business firm of

Fred W. Handel

Musselshell. The brothers have been in business there for over thirty years, and their interests touch every phase of local life and affairs. They are general merchants, grain dealers, and have thousands of acres devoted to live stock and farming.

Fred W. Handel was born at Meriden, Connecticut, September 26, 1862. His grandfather, Philip Handel, was born in Wuertemberg, Germany, and about 1860 brought his family to the United States and settled on a farm at Hartford, Connecticut. Jacob Handel, father of the Handel brothers, was born in Wuertemberg in 1840 and was about 20 years of age when he accompanied other members of the family to the United States. At Glastonbury, Connecticut, he was employed in a factory a short time and then removed to Meriden, where he was connected with the Charles Parker Company, hardware manufacturers. He was killed accidentally while visiting his father at East Hartford in the fall of 1875. Jacob Handel was a democratic voter a member of the Lutheran Church. He married Catherine Wuterich, who was born in Wuertemberg in 1842 and is now living at Webster City, Iowa. Fred W. is the oldest of her children. Philip J. was a manufacturer and died at Meriden, Connecticut, in 1914. George W., junior member of Handel Brothers, lives at Musselshell and was born in Connecticut in 1868. Emma H., the youngest of the family, is the wife of Dr. Franklin J. Drake, a physician and surgeon at Webster City, Iowa.

Fred W. Handel acquired a public school education at Meriden, but at the early age of fourteen accepted an opportunity for regular employment as clerk in a grocery store at Meriden. He remained for six years in one store and acquired a thorough business training while there. Then, associated with George W. Ives, he established a grocery store at Meriden, and they conducted it until February 15, 1885. Selling out, the partners came to Montana, acquired some land and in April, 1885, went into business at Musselshell Crossing under the name Ives & Handel. Mr. Ives was active in the firm until he met with an accident in the fall of 1886 and was taken back to Meriden, Connecticut, where he died three years later. The Ives interests were then acquired by George W. Handel, who came to Montana at the time, and this gave origin to the firm of Handel Brothers in 1889.

The history of this business is therefore coincident with the history of the State of Montana. Thirty years ago they had a small store, while now they conduct the largest mercantile business in Musselshell County. The small store has grown to a large department store, with distinct departments for shoes, dry goods, groceries, hardware and drugs, also furniture and undertaking, and they do a large business in lumber and grain. They have a branch store at Carpenter Creek. The mercantile stores are on Main Street, the lumber yard is at First Street east of Main, and the elevator is along the tracks of the Milwaukee Railway. They also own an elevator at Delphia, Montana.

Besides these extensive commercial holdings at Musselshell the brothers own more than 10,000 acres of ranch land in Musselshell County. Their ranches are the home of some particularly fine stock, blooded cattle, pure bred sheep and horses, and they are among the leading producers of good livestock in this section of the state.

Fred W. Handel is also president of the Bankers Loan and Mortgage Company at Billings. He served fourteen years as postmaster of Musselshell, and in 1902 became United States commissioner for his section of the state. A man of undoubted probity and of the best business judgment, he has frequently been called upon to adjust and administer private estates. Mr. Handel is a republican, an active member of the Congregational Church, is secretary of Victory Lodge No. 124, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Musselshell, is affiliated with Livingston Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine, also with Peace Chapter of the Eastern Star at Musselshell, Musselshell Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, and Musselshell Commercial Club.

The Handel brothers married sisters, the wife of Fred being Miss Mae Stockwell, who was born in Illinois and is a graduate of the Davenport Business College. They were married at Davenport March 14, 1893. Mr. and Mrs. Handel have one son, Fred W., Jr., born October 26, 1906, and now attending high school at Musselshell.

George W. Handel married Miss Daisy I. Stockwell, and they have two children, George W., Jr., who served in the late war and reached France just before the signing of the armistice, and Philip, now attending high school.

William L. Murphy has been prominent among the lawyers of Missoula for twenty years, and with the exception of a term as assistant attorney general has devoted himself with singular energies and unequivocal success to general practice.

Mr. Murphy was born at Phillipsburg, Montana, January 4, 1877, a son of Cornelius and Mary (Quaile) Murphy. His father was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, and his mother in St. Louis, Missouri. Cornelius Murphy was prominent in the early annals of Montana. He became identified with the Alder Gulch community near Virginia City, in 1863, and was at different times in nearly all the placer diggings, including Cedar Creek. He finally located at Butte, and died October 14, 1887, his wife having passed away in 1883.

William L. Murphy was reared in Missoula, attended the public schools, graduated from the University of Montana in 1897, and then entered the law department of Columbia University of New York, graduating in 1900. He has been admitted to the bars of New York and Montana, and began his professional career at Missoula as a member of the firm Dixon and Murphy. He is now a member of the firm Murphy and Whitlock. Early in his practice he was appointed city attorney and clerk, and for three years served as assistant attorney general under Albert Galen. Mr. Murphy is a republican, carrying a large weight of influence in his party. He is affiliated with the Elks and in religious faith is a Catholic. In 1909 he married Edith Bickford, daughter of the distinguished Judge Bickford, formerly of Missoula and later of Butte.

George C. Rice. Perhaps no one agency in all the world has done so much for public progress as the press, and an enterprising, well-edited journal is a most important factor in promoting the welfare and prosperity of any community. It adds to the intelligence of the people through its transmission of foreign and domestic news and through its discussion of the leading questions and issues of the day. More than that, it makes the town or city which it represents known outside of the immediate locality, as it is sent into other districts, carrying with it an account of the advancement and progress there being made and the advantages which it offers to its residents along moral, educational, commercial and social lines. Western Montana is certainly indebted to its wide-awake journals in no small degree, and one of the men who are doing a commendable work in the local newspaper field is George C. Rice, president of the Missoualian Publishing Company, at Missoula. He has long been connected with journalistic work, and his power as a writer and editor, as well as a business man, is widely acknowledged among contemporary newspaper men and the public in general.

George C. Rice is descended from sterling old Welsh stock, his paternal grandfather, Roderick Rice, having been a native of that rock-ribbed little country. He came to the United States in 1846, and settled in Waukesha County, Wisconsin, of which locality he was a pioneer settler, and there he applied himself to farming during the remainder of his life, his death occurring there in 1882. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and was held in high esteem in the community. He was married to Mary Griffiths, who also was a native of Wales and whose death occurred in Waukesha County in 1892. Among their children was T. J. Rice, father of the subject of this review. He was born in Wales in 1833 and was brought by his parents to the United States in 1846. He was reared amid the pioneer conditions which surrounded their early home in Wisconsin, but was given every educational advantage possible. After attending the district schools he attended and graduated from Carroll College at Waukesha, and then became a minister of the Welsh Presbyterian Church, in which capacity he preached at many points, mainly in Wisconsin. He was a republican in politics. He married Anna Owen, who was born in Wales in 1832, and who died in Waukesha County, Wisconsin, in 1914. They became the parents of four children, namely: E. O., who is a rancher at Prosser, Washington; G. R., who is secretary and manager of the Milwaukee Milk and Cream Shippers Association at Milwaukee, Wisconsin; J. H., who is in the work of the Young Men's Christian Association and resides in Chicago; George C., the immediate subject of this sketch. The father of these children died in Portage, Wisconsin, in 1901.

George C. Rice was born in Waukesha County, Wisconsin, on November 23, 1870. He was reared at home and was given excellent educational opportunities. After completing the studies in the public schools of Portage, Columbia County, Wisconsin, including the high school, he attended the academy of Carroll College for one year, and then spent two years in Lake Forest Academy at Lake Forest, Illinois, followed by a similar period in Lake Forest College. Mr. Rice had a natural predilection for journalistic work, which found its expression during his college life as a correspondent for Chicago newspapers. Upon leaving college he followed the path thus opened up before him and threw himself with enthusiasm into newspaper work. And it was of a most strenuous type, for as a metropolitan reporter he found experience of the most varied sort and, at the same time, the most exacting. He first joined the staff of the Chicago News, with which he was connected for ten years, at the end of that period going to the Chicago Journal, where he remained eight years. He had devoted himself indefatigably to his work, which was of such character as to win him promotions, so that at the time he resigned from the Journal he was at the head of one of the editorial departments.

In 1917 Mr. Rice came to Missoula, Montana, and purchased the printing and newspaper plant owned by the Missoulian Publishing Company and which had formerly been the property of Senator Dixon. Mr. Rice is now president of the company, which was incorporated in 1917. The plant is a long established one, its publication having been one of the oldest republican newspapers in Montana. The newspapers published by this company are The Daily Missoulian, a morning paper, and The Sentinel, published every evening except Sunday. These papers are ably edited and are of unusual mechanical excellence, enjoying a wide circulation throughout Western Montana. The printing plant is thoroughly up-to-date in every respect and does commercial printing of a high order. Mr. Rice is throwing into this enterprise the fruits of his years of experience and his efforts are appreciated, as is evident by the large and constantly increasing circulation of the papers issued under his management and direction.

Politically Mr. Rice is a stanch supporter of the republican party, in the success of which he has shown an active interest, and he has efficiently held several local offices. Religiously he is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally he belongs to Edgewater Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, of Chicago; Western Sun Chapter No. 11, Royal Arch Masons, at Missoula; St. Omer Commandery, Knights Templar, Missoula, and Lake Forest Lodge, Knights of Pythias, at Lake Forest, Illinois. He is president of the Missoula Chamber of Commerce.

In 1904, at Platteville, Wisconsin, Mr. Rice was married to Sarah Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Williams of Argyle, New York, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Williams was a mining operator in Illinois. Mrs. Rice is a graduate of Lake Forest College and of the State Normal School at Albany, New York, and prior to her marriage had taught school at Polo, Illinois. Mr. Rice's life has become an essential part of the current history of this section and he has exerted a beneficial influnce in the city honored by his residence. His chief characteristics seem to be fidelity of purpose, keenness of perception, unswerving integrity and sound common sense, which have earned for him the confidence and esteem of the entire community.

H. W. Rutherford is connected with the construction department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company.

He is a native of the United States, having been born in Minneapolis of parents who were also born in the United States.

He is a citizen of good standing who places the Constitution of the United States above all creeds and societies.

Elmer E. Hershey came to Montana in 1886, and was admitted to the bar in 1891, though he had practiced in justice courts prior to that date.

He was born on his father's farm at Fremont, Ohio, in 1862. The Hersheys have been in America over two centuries, and his grandfather was a soldier in the War of 1812.

Elmer E. Hershey attended the public schools at Ada, Ohio, also the Ohio Normal School in that city, graduating in 1884. For two years he taught in his home state, and after coming to Montana taught in the Bitter Root Valley at Stevensville and Skalkaho. He had entered the office of Judge Bickford at Missoula in 1889, and remained with him until 1898. He served a term in the Montana Legislature in 1895-96, was a member of several important committees and helped formulate the codes of the state. In 1898 President McKinley appointed him register of the Land Office, and he served four years. Since then he has given his undivided time and attention to his law practice.

Merritt Flanagan

Mr. Hershey is a Mason, a republican, and with his family is active in the Christian Church, which he served a long period as an elder.

Mr. Hershey is a son-in-law of the late Maj. J. B. Catlin. He married in 1895 Belle C. Catlin, who was born in the Bitter Root Valley of Montana. Their two daughters are Elizabeth, born in the spring of 1896, and Alice born November 22, 1901.

MAJ. JOHN B. CATLIN, who died July 30, 1917, at the age of eighty years, was distinguished among the pioneers of Montana, coming here shortly after three years of service as a private soldier and officer of the Union army during the Civil war. He was a gallant Indian fighter, a miner, rancher, public official, and few men came in closer touch with the realities of Montana history than the late Major Catlin.

He was born at Cleveland, Ohio, June 21, 1837, son of Sprague and Mary (Babcock) Catlin, his father a native of New York and his mother of Vermont. Sprague Catlin moved to Ohio in 1834, and five years later settled at Laporte, Indiana, and died in Southern Michigan in 1870. He was survived by his widow many years.

John B. Catlin grew up on an Indiana farm, had a district school education, and left the farm to enlist on August 4, 1862, as a private in Company H of the Eighty-seventh Indiana Infantry. He remained on active duty as a soldier until July, 1865. He was in the Army of the Cumberland, participated in one of the early Kentucky campaigns, was in the battles of Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge, many of the battles of the Atlanta campaign, the march to the sea, and the movements of Sherman's army through the Carolinas. In the fall of 1862 he was made fourth sergeant, and after the battle of Missionary Ridge was made commissary sergeant, and at Atlanta was promoted to captain of his original company, the official post he retained during the remainder of his service.

Captain Catlin remained at home in Indiana but a short time, and in the spring of 1866 started for the Northwest, crossing the plains to Nebraska and making the trip by the Platte River and the Bozeman route. At Fort Reno after an encounter with the Sioux Indians his party joined John Nelson Story of Bozeman, and from the time they left Fort Kearney until they reached Virginia City, Montana, in December, 1866, almost every day was marked by some encounter with hostile foes. Major Catlin with several companions built his first cabin at the mouth of Divide Creek in Deer Lodge County and was successfully engaged in mining in Silver Bow County and elsewhere, and in June, 1868, located in Missoula County. After his early ventures in mining he gave most of his time to farming and stock growing in the Bitter Root Valley and for eight or nine years conducted a hotel and livery business at Stevensville, Ravalli County. In 1889 he was appointed Indian agent at the Blackfoot reservation, but resigned after eighteen months. In 1891 he became receiver of the Land Office at Missoula, which he held four years. In 1897 he was appointed United States land commissioner, and served two years. For many years Major Catlin was successively engaged in the real estate business at Missoula.

Major Catlin had a prominent part as leader of a volunteer company assisting the regulars under General Gibbons in the Nez Perce Indian uprising of 1877. This campaign culminated in the battle of Big Hole, the last important Indian fight on Montana soil, and Major Catlin's account of that battle has always been considered one of the most trustworthy and authoritative and has been frequently published.

Major Catlin was a republican, was affiliated with the Grand Army Post at Missoula, and was a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. At Waterloo, Iowa, December 6, 1871, he married Miss Elizabeth Taylor, a native of Indiana, and a daughter of William B. Taylor. Their only daughter is the wife of Elmer E. Hershey of Missoula. The late Major Catlin was a member of the Christian Church and the Western Montana Pioneer Society.

MERRITT FLANAGAN. There could be no more comprehensive history written of a city, or even of a state and its people, than that which deals with the life work of those who, by their own endeavor and indomitable energy, have placed themselves where they well deserve the title of "prominent and progressive," and in this sketch will be found the record of one who has by his personal force of character and his faithfulness in every position in which he has been placed earned the sincere regard and esteem of the people.

Merritt Flanagan was born on his father's farm in Carroll County, Missouri, on January 5, 1862, and is the son of Bryant and Phoeby (Ruth) Flanagan. Bryant Flanagan, who was a native of Kentucky, died in 1862, at the comparatively early age of thirty-three years. The subject's mother, who was born in Illinois, is still living at the age of seventy-nine years. In 1879 she became the wife of H. S. Jewell, and they now live in Missouri. The subject of this sketch was the youngest of the four children, all sons, born to his parents. Bryant Flanagan was taken from Kentucky to Missouri by his parents when he was a small child, and his education was secured in the schools of the latter state. Upon attaining mature years he engaged in farming on his own account in Carroll County, Missouri. At the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in the Union army, was severely wounded in battle and was taken to a hospital, where he died. Politically he gave his support to the republican party. He was a man of fine impulses and took a deep interest in religious matters, being a member of church, in which he did much preaching of the gospel.

Merritt Flanagan was but two years of age when brought by his mother to Montana, and in the schools of this state he secured his education. Their first location in this state was in Deer Lodge Valley, where besides their own immediate family William Flanagan, an uncle, was with them, it being the latter who brought them, by ox team, to this section of the country. In 1879 they came to Chestnut Valley, the mother returning to Missouri, where she again married, and is now residing in Unionville. At the age of fourteen years the subject became associated with his uncle in the cattle and horse business in Chestnut Valley, continuing the business there until 1889, when they removed to the Judith Basin in Meagher County, now Fergus County. In 1889 Mr. Flanagan removed to Chouteau County, locating in what is now Blaine County, where he continued in the cattle and horse business until 1908, when he moved to Fort Benton. In the meantime he had disposed of his interest in the cattle business, though he still continued the horse business. In 1892 Mr. Flanagan was appointed stock inspector by the Montana Stock Association, serving until 1896, when he was appointed a United States mounted inspector of customs, filling the position up to 1902. From 1904 to 1908 Mr. Flanagan served as under sheriff and from 1914 to 1918 was city marshal of Fort Benton.

In November, 1918, he was elected sheriff of Chouteau County, and is the present incumbent of that office. Mr. Flanagan has thus been placed in many important and responsible positions, and it is the consensus of opinion that in every position he has performed his duty faithfully and well, thus earning the confidence of the people, which he now enjoys.

On May 20, 1897, occurred the marriage of Mr. Flanagan to Ida M. Murray, who was a native of Michigan, and whose death occurred in 1908. They became the parents of two children, Katherine, who is the wife of Louis Miller, and Violet. Politically Mr. Flanagan is a stanch supporter of the republican party and has been an effective worker in the party ranks. Fraternally he is a member of the Loyal Order of Moose. Genial and generous in his personal makeup, Mr. Flanagan has long enjoyed a large acquaintance throughout this section of the state, and those who know him best are his warmest friends and admirers.

JOHN R. DAILY, who has been a resident of Montana over thirty years, at the inception of his career as a Missoula business man bought a retail meat market. With that as a beginning he has developed a large and perfect organization for the killing, refrigeration, packing and distribution of meats and meat products throughout the trade district of Missoula.

Mr. Daily was born at Madison, Indiana, in 1867, son of Martin H. and Julia A. (Nichols) Daily. His parents were early settlers in Indiana and spent the rest of their lives there. His father served as a first lieutenant in an Indiana regiment in the Civil war. John R. Daily grew to manhood in his native state, and left there with a fair education and with a determination to win his way in the Far West.

On coming to Montana in 1889 he worked as a ranch hand, but in the fall of 1890 bought an interest in the old Union Market in Missoula. Thirty years have brought a remarkable development to that modest business. He now operates four markets in Missoula, and a few years ago established the finest market in the entire West, conducted as a model in system, equipment, and sanitary convenience. In addition he operates a large cold storage plant, and does a wholesale business with small stores and outlying mines and mining camps. The business was incorporated in 1910, with Mr. Daily as president. In late years the average kill has been between 1,500 and 2,000 cattle, 3,000 hogs and about 1,500 sheep.

Mr. Daily is also a director of the Missoula Trust and Savings Bank. He is widely known over the West as a fancier and breeder of fine horses for the track, principally pacers and trotters. For several years he has had charge of the racing program of the Missoula County Fair, of which he is one of the officers and directors. He is an Elk and Knight of Pythias.

In 1892 Mr. Daily married Caroline Jameson, a daughter of J. C. Jameson, of Missoula. Mrs Daily died in 1911, and in 1912 Mr. Daily married Alice Brewer, a daughter of W. L. Brewer, of Missoula.

EDWARD C. MULRONEY took his place among the practicing lawyers of Missoula twenty years ago, and is now senior partner of the law firm of Mulroney and Mulroney, and with a reputation as a lawyer that has extended to most of the counties of the state.

Mr. Mulroney was born in Webster County, Iowa, July 18, 1877, son of an Iowa merchant. He was reared in Iowa, where he attended high school, spent some time in Wabash College in Indiana, and in 1896 entered the University of Michigan. He took both the literary and law courses at Michigan University, graduating in 1900 and was admitted to the Michigan bar and to that of Montana the same year. He began practice at Missoula with Mr. Joyce, and in 1905 was elected a member of the Lower House of the Legislature. In 1909 he was elected county attorney, and filled that office four years.

He was joined in practice in 1914 by his brother, Robert E. Mulroney, who had completed his education in the University at Georgetown, D. C. Early in the World war Robert Mulroney left his practice and entered the Great Lakes Naval Training School at Chicago. In 1898 Edward C. Mulroney enlisted in Company G of the Fifty-second Iowa Regiment during the Spanish-American war, and served until the end of the war.

On April 28, 1910, Mr. Mulroney married Mary C. O'Leary, a daughter of D. J. O'Leary, of Des Moines, Iowa. They are the parents of one son, Thomas, born January 5, 1914. Mr. Mulroney is a member of Hell Gate Lodge of Missoula, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, Knights of Columbus and the Spanish-American War Veterans.

G. W. DAY. As education along certain lines is essential to industry, to efficiency, to comfort, to tolerable existence, the modern world cannot produce, distribute or exchange without schools. The best cure for misery is abundance, and abundance means skill and science in production and distribution. Economic problems have their social and political aspects, and we cannot make men efficient in industry without teaching them something additional. The mechanical progress of humanity is the result of education. But to train the mind and hand is not necessarily to train the whole man, to educate him morally and emotionally. This was perceived long ago, and true philosophers have emphasized the necessity of building character, of making good citizens and good neighbors by means of education. What ails the world is insufficient education of the right kind. Education is power, independence, penetration and ability, and the lack of it naturally brings about a reverse condition. With all of these arguments in favor of better and higher education in mind it is not difficult to comprehend why such stress is laid upon the proper selection of educators, for it is through them that the rising generation gains its bias, and receives its instruction. The United States has the best public schools in the world, and this much to be desired condition is largely the legitimate outgrowth of the faithful and intelligent work of the men and women placed in charge of them. One of these educators who is enjoying a wide-spread popularity, which he has certainly earned, is G. W. Day, superintendent of the city schools of Philipsburg.

G. W. Day was born at Gaithersburg, Maryland, September 25, 1883, a son of George W. Day, and grandson of Jacob Day, born at Gaithersburg, Maryland, in 1816, his father having come to the United States from Ireland to Maryland at an early day. Jacob Day was a contractor and builder who passed his life in his native city, where he died in 1893.

George W. Day was also born at Gaithersburg, Maryland, in 1849, and he is still a resident of that city, having spent his entire life in that neighborhood. A man of action, he owns extensive farming interests in the vicinity, and is possessed of considerable means. In politics he is a democrat, and in religious faith a Methodist. He married Johanna Reid, who was born at Gaithersburg in 1859. Their children are as follows: Walter, who is a merchant of Washington, D. C.; G. W., whose name heads this review; William, who is a wholesale merchant of New York City, New York; Charles, who served in France and Germany during the Great war, was recently mustered out of the army; Ernest, who is also a veteran of this war, served overseas in the Eighty-second Division as corporal, was wounded and gassed and received a shell shock, but is now convalescing, having been recently mustered out of the army; Myrtle, who is the widow of William Hammond, has lived with her parents since Mr. Hammond's death in 1918; Elbert, who is in the railroad business, lives at Washington, D. C., where he is serving as baggagemaster at the Union Station; Elsie, who is the twin sister of Elbert, married a Mr. Mosberg, a merchant of Washington, D. C.; Lillian, who married William Mills, a contractor and builder of Gaithersburg, Maryland; and Jesse, who is attending the Gaithersburg High School, lives with his parents.

Professor Day attended the public schools of Gaithersburg, Maryland, and was graduated from the Montgomery County High School at Rockville, Maryland, in 1905, following which he took a one year's course at Tanner's Business College at Washington, D. C. In the fall of 1906 he entered the Randolph-Macon College at Ashland, Virginia, from which he was graduated in 1910 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. For the subsequent year he was coach and instructor in history and science in the Grand River Institute at Austinburg, Ohio, when he was made principal of the Calleo, Virginia, High School, and held that position for two years, and for the next three years he was superintendent of schools of Belfield, North Dakota. In 1917 he came to Montana as principal of the Joliet schools, and a year later returned to North Dakota and was principal of the school at Bottineau, one of the largest of its kind in the state. In 1919 the school board of Philipsburg succeeded in securing his services as superintendent of the city schools, and he is already proving that their choice was a wise one. He has twelve teachers and 320 pupils under his charge, and is giving a personal attention to details which is proving very effective. In 1914 Professor Day homesteaded 320 acres of land between Red Lodge and Billings at Shane Ridge. He is independent in politics. The Methodist Episcopal Church holds his membership.

In 1912 Professor Day was married at Canton, Ohio, to Miss Ruth Spangler, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Spangler, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Spangler was a merchant of Canton, Ohio. Professor and Mrs. Day have no children. They are very popular and are gathering about them a delightful social circle, as they have in other communities in which they have resided. Although in the very prime of life, Professor Day has attained to considerable prominence in his profession, and as he is a close student, is continually adding to his store of knowledge, while his various experiences are proving of value to him in his work. Of a pleasant personality, Professor Day possesses the ability to impart knowledge easily, and to win the confidence and respect of his pupils, being their friend as well as instructor. While he places a proper value on scholarship, he is not satisfied to rest content with merely teaching the words of the text, but opens up new fields of study in awakening the interest of his charges so that they of their own accord are anxious to read and study to a much further extent. Such men as Professor Day render a great service to their communities, and cannot be over-praised for their self-sacrifice and earnest efforts.

JOHN M. KEITH has been identified with Missoula nearly forty years, and nearly all of that time in the capacity of a bank executive. Mr. Keith, who is president of the Missoula Trust and Savings Bank, was born in New Brunswick, Canada, June 5, 1859, son of Lewis and Rebecca (Blakely) Keith. His parents spent all their lives in New Brunswick.

John M. Keith grew up on his father's farm and acquired an education sufficient for each day's recurring responsibilities. He had some mercantile training in his home town, and with that as his chief recommendation came to Missoula in 1881. Missoula was then one of the pioneer centers of trade and commerce in the territory of Montana. Its chief firm was the Eddy-Hammond Company, the predecessor of the Missoula Mercantile Company. Mr. Keith remained with the Eddy-Hammond Company as clerk and later as office manager, and left the concern in 1888 to become cashier of the Missoula National Bank. He was with that institution over twenty years, and when it was reorganized as the First National Bank he became its vice president and the chief executive in charge of its affairs. In February, 1910, Mr. Keith became the first president of the reorganized institution now known as the Missoula Trust & Savings Bank, and the wisdom and discretion with which he has guided that institution is well indicated in its magnificent assets and the great influence it wields in the commerce of Eastern Montana. Mr. Keith is also president of the First National Bank at Plains, has some business interests at Spokane, and is a member of the Hammond Lumber Company of San Francisco.

As a successful business man and banker his tastes have never run in political channels, and his public service has been rendered as a matter of conscientious duty. He served three terms as mayor of Missoula, being elected without opposition on a citizens ticket and giving an administration completely free from partisan bias. He has also been a member of the school board and library board. Fraternally he is a member of the Masons, Knights of Pythias and the Elks. In 1890 Mr. Keith married Miss Harriet Beckwith, also a native of New Brunswick, and daughter of Charles and Sarah Beckwith. Mrs. Keith is now deceased, and her only daughter, Jennie, died at the age of four years.

CHARLES H. MCLEOD. One of the oldest and largest mercantile enterprises in Montana is the Missoula Mercantile Company, which has not only enjoyed many years of prosperous business, but has represented an imposing aggregate of personal abilities and resources in the men who were its founders and have been its chief officials. One of these is Charles H. McLeod, who became identified with the business at its organization forty years ago. Mr. McLeod has in recent years turned over many of his active responsibilities to his son Walter H. McLeod, as noted on other pages.

Charles H. McLeod was born in New Brunswick, Canada, February 14, 1859, and is of Scotch ancestry. His father was a farmer and blacksmith who died in 1871.

C. H. McLeod attended public school to the age of fourteen, and spent his early life on a farm. He learned business by working as clerk and in other capacities in small stores. He came to Montana in 1880, and from that time to the present has been identified with the business fortunes of Missoula. He was a clerk with the old firm of Hammond and Eddy. This firm was the outgrowth of a pioneer store conducted by Bonner and Welsh. The partnership was also designated as Eddy, Hammond and Bonner, and from 1875 to 1885 as Eddy, Hammond and Company. In 1885 A. B. Hammond, R. A. Eddy and E. L. Bonner, were the chief partners in organizing the Missoula Mercantile Company. The business was capitalized at $300,000. Mr. Hammond being the first president and Mr. McLeod vice president and general manager.

Mr. McLeod has also been interested in the Missoula Water Company, the Missoula Light and Power Company, and the First National Bank of Missoula. In 1886 he married Miss Clara L. Beckwith, a native of New Brunswick. Their two children are Walter H. and Helen B.

THOMAS HILL PRIDHAM. Since establishing his home at Chouteau in 1912 Mr. Pridham has been quietly and busily engaged in reaping the fruits of a large professional business as a lawyer. His professional success has been well earned. For a number of years he had a varied and eventful experience, and by personal ability earned every step of his promotion.

Mr. Pridham was born in Essex County, England, January 24, 1871, and as a boy elected to make his own way in the world. His parents were George and Elizabeth Frances (Harvey) Pridham, both now deceased. He was the seventh in a family of eight children who reached mature years and six of whom are still living. George Pridham was a noted missionary and educator. He began his career as a missionary in 1850. From 1855 to 1868 he was head master of St. Paul's College at Calcutta, India. From 1868 to 1871 he was vicar of East Tilbury, Essex, England, and then entered upon his duties as vicar of West Harptree, a post of responsibility he held for thirty-one years, from 1871 to 1902. He died September 23, 1902.

Thomas Hill Pridham was educated in local English schools and at the age of 14 left home and came to America. His first experiences were in Manitoba. During 1885 he worked on a farm near St. Charles, Minnesota, and attended school in winter. For several years he worked for his board and clothing while getting his education. For a time he was an employe of Governor Job A. Cooper in Colorado. In 1888 he returned to St. Charles, Minnesota, and resumed his work in the high school there, from which he graduated. Later he completed the course of the Minneapolis High School, working for his living as a bookkeeper while in school. He also was employed as a street car conductor for one or two summers, and was with the civil engineering staff which built the first interurban lines between St. Paul and Minneapolis. He was also a freight brakeman with the Great Northern Railway. During this time he was making progress in his law studies in the University of Minnesota, attending night school. Later he entered the railway mail service, working in the office of the superintendent at St. Paul, while attending night law college. Mr. Pridham graduated from the law department of the University of Minnesota in 1897, and in the same year was admitted to the Minnesota bar. He continued in the mail service until 1899. In that year he was delegated by the United States Government to go to Alaska and establish mail service in the mining districts. His official title was chief clerk at large. On the beach at Nome there were only seven tents when he first arrived there, and his headquarters were at Circle City on the Yukon River.

Having completed his work in the far North Mr. Pridham returned in July, 1900, to St. Paul, and after his marriage opened a law office at Austin, Minnesota, where he remained until 1910. In that year he was appointed by James A. Tawney of Minnesota as special agent in Montana. He remained in this work at Helena from July, 1910, until November, 1912, when he moved to Choteau and engaged in the general practice which now comprises the bulk of his activities and interests.

In October, 1900, Mr. Pridham married Miss Frances M. Cosgrove, a native of Cork, Ireland. They had six children: Dorothy, Jane Marion, Phyllis and Daniel, twins, Frances Lois and Kathleen Janice.

JOHN ELLIOTT, while a native of Pennsylvania has spent most of his life in Montana, and his connections are with the pioneer stock in this state. Of a family of miners, he has had considerable mining experience on his own account, but for the past several years has attended to a growing and large practice as a lawyer in the City of Butte.

Mr. Elliott was born in Freeland, Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, August 9, 1883. His people came from the Province of Ulster, Ireland, and were Protestants. His grandfather David Elliott, was born in Ulster, was an Irish farmer, and came to the United States about 1873, living the rest of his life retired at Freeland, Pennsylvania. He married Margaret Lawn, also a native of Ulster, who died at Freeland. Hugh Elliott, father of John Elliott, was born in Ulster in 1853, and lived there to the age of eighteen. On coming to the United States he found employment in the mines at Freeland, Pennsylvania, and also conducted a meat market and was proprietor of an old-fashioned inn. In 1888 he came to Montana, was one of the early settlers at Butte, and after one year of employment as a painter and paper hanger went to Cokedale and worked in the coal mines six months. He was a miner at Granite for seven years, following which he located and developed a coal mine at Drummond. In 1897 he removed to Norris, Montana, where for five years he was an employe of the Revenue Mine, and two years of that time was mine foreman. In 1901 he located and developed a gold mining claim at Washington Bar, and has given most of his attention to that property since. His mining operations have been attended with considerable success. He is a member of the Episcopal Church, a republican, and is an active Mason, being affiliated with Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Butte. Hugh Elliott married Catherine Jones, who was born in Wales in 1859. They are the parents of nine children: Thomas, a partner with his father in the gold mine and a resident of Norris; John; Anna, who died at Davenport, Iowa, in November, 1919, the wife of J. S. West, a blacksmith living at Norris; Alexander, associated with his father in business at Norris; Joseph Orr, a miner at Butte; Hugh, Jr., at home; David, a miner living in the State of Washington; Jenkin and Charles, still at home.

John Elliott acquired his education in the public schools at Granite, Montana, but left school at the age of fourteen and for several years earned a living in the mines at Norris and Drummond. During 1908-09 he attended the Detroit College of Law in Michigan, graduating with the LL. B. degree in 1909. On returning to Norris in 1909 instead of engaging in practice he took charge of the mine and handled its operations until October, 1913. He then came to Butte, and after reviewing his law studies with I. G. Denny was admitted to the bar in June, 1914, and since that date has been in active general practice. For four years he was associated with James E. Murray but since 1918 has been in an office of his own in the Phoenix Building.

Mr. Elliott is a member of the Silver Bow Bar Association, is a republican, is affiliated with the Episcopal Church, and is a member of Virginia City Lodge No. 390, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and Butte Aerie No. 11 of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. His home is at 305 South Washington Street. In June, 1910, at Butte, he married Emma Margaret McCall, daughter of David and Nettie (Foster) McCall, who reside in Jefferson Valley, Montana. Mrs. Elliott is a member of a very interesting pioneer family of Montana. Her mother, Nettie Foster, was the first white girl born in the state, being a daughter of Z. D. Foster, who settled on a ranch in Jefferson Valley in the early sixties, and is still living, a resident of Whitehall. Mrs. Elliott is a graduate of the parochial high school at Butte. They have one child, Genevieve, born in 1914.

DAN T. MALLOY. In the six years since he began his practice at Butte Mr. Malloy has gained a good business as a lawyer and has commendably identified himself with the best interests of the community. He was in an officers training camp during the World war, and for a time was deputy county attorney.

A native of Montana, he was born in the City of Helena July 7, 1890. His father is P. F. Malloy, who was born in County Donegal, Ireland, in 1845. He is a real pioneer of the Northwest. Coming to the United States about 1861, he located at St. Paul, Minnesota, and was connected with some of the pioneer freighting outfits from St. Paul westward. He made his first acquaintance with Montana in 1869. He was connected with a surveying party engaged in the preliminary survey of the route for the Northern Pacific Railway. These surveyors were under the protection of United States troops commanded by the lamented General Custer. Not long afterward P. F. Malloy settled at Bismarck, North Dakota, and became prominently connected with business affairs in that city, being in the freighting and general transportation business, a hotel proprietor and grain buyer and shipper. In 1887 he located at Helena, Montana, and was in the service of the Northern Pacific Railway there and after 1897 lived at Butte. He retired from railroading and since 1914 has lived on his ranch at Hesper, Montana. He is a democrat and a Catholic. His wife was Mary Catherine Taggart, who was born in Wisconsin in 1855. Of their four children Dan is the youngest. Minnie, the oldest, is the widow of B. E. Predmore, who was a jeweler at San Diego, California. James P. was a shoe merchant at Butte, where he died at the age of thirty-five in 1918, a victim of the influenza epidemic. Emmett E. is a civil and mining engineer at Butte.

Dan T. Malloy graduated from the Butte High School in 1908. The following year he earned his own living, and in 1909 entered the University of Michigan Law School. He remained there until graduating with the LL. B. degree in 1913. He is a member of the college fraternity Kappa Beta Psi. Mr. Malloy began practice at Butte in 1913, and for a year and a half was associated with H. A. Frank. From 1915 to 1917 he served as deputy county attorney, and since then has conducted a general civil and criminal practice with offices in the Hennessy Building. He also has some mining interests, is interested in the home ranch at Hesper, and has some valuable real estate, including several dwellings in Butte and a modern home of his own at 636 West Silver Street.

In August, 1918, he entered the service of his country and was in the training camp at Boulder, Colorado, for a time and afterward was in the officers training camp in the artillery branch at Louisville, Kentucky. He was mustered out December 16, 1918.

Mr. Malloy is unmarried, is a democrat, member of the Catholic Church, is a fourth degree Knight of Columbus, being affiliated with Council No. 668 at Butte, and is a member of Butte Lodge No. 240 of the Elks. He belongs to the County and State Bar associations and is a member of Silver Bow Club at Butte.

JOHN H. DURSTON, manager of the Butte Daily Post, has been actively identified with Montana journalism for over thirty years. He is well known in Montana, and his reputation is based upon a career as a practical newspaper man, teacher and scholar, with attendance in universities both at home and abroad and with many honors as teacher and student.

He was born at Syracuse, New York, February 19, 1848. His father, John Durston, was a native of Bristol, England, and came to this country a young man. He was a shipwright and built many boats for operation on the Erie Canal. He died at Syracuse in 1863. He was a republican and an active member and supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife, Sarah Hurst, was born near Dublin, Ireland, and died at Syracuse in 1901. Her father, Thomas Hurst, also a native of Ireland, came to the United States about 1830 and settled at Syracuse, where he was a building contractor. He died at Syracuse in 1857, when over seventy years of age. Thomas Hurst married Margaret Morris, a native of Ireland, who also died at Syracuse. John Durston and wife had four children: J. F., a business man of Syracuse; Thomas W., who lives at Newark, New Jersey, and is a retired merchant; John H.; and George W., who was a Syracuse merchant and died at the age of sixty.

John H. Durston after graduating from high school attended Yale University until his junior year in the class of 1869. He is a member of the Delta Kappa Epsilon Greek letter fraternity. After leaving Yale he continued his studies abroad at Heidelberg University in Germany and received on examination, the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from that institution in 1870. On returning to this country he became a member of the faculty of the Syracuse University and enjoyed the dignities of a college professor until 1880. In the meantime he had spent one year in Paris, studying and specializing in civics.

Mr. Durston has been a newspaper editor since 1880, when he became editor of the Syracuse Standard. In 1887 he came to Montana, and in 1889 established the Anaconda Standard and was editor of that paper until 1912. In 1913 he established the Butte Daily Post as the successor of the Butte Inter Mountain. Mr. Durston is a republican in politics, a member of the Episcopal Church and of the Anaconda and Silver Bow clubs. He has his home on a farm near Bozeman.

In 1871, at Syracuse, he married Miss Mary Harwood, daughter of George W. and Martha (Watson) Harwood, both of whom are now deceased. Her father was a Syracuse business man. Mrs. Durston was a graduate of the Syracuse High School. They are the parents of two children: Martha H. D. is the wife of F. W. Peckover, in the real estate and coal business at Anaconda; and Laura, wife of John Maxey, a coal dealer with home at Bozeman.

ARTHUR W. MERKLE is one of the most prominent insurance men in Montana, and his work in that line has well earned him the responsibilities as state manager for Montana of the Prudential Insurance Company.

Mr. Merkle has lived practically all his life within sight of the Rocky Mountains, and is a member of a pioneer western family. He was born at Virginia City, Nevada, December 23, 1882. His father, Thomas Merkle, was born in Kentucky in 1831, and was a California forty-niner. A butcher by trade, he was employed by several of the California notables of the early days, including J. A. Mackey, James Fair and Mr. O'Brien. He followed his trade at Virginia City, Nevada, where he married and lived until he removed to Butte, Montana. In that city he was one of the early butchers, and was actively engaged in business until he retired in 1918. He is still living at Butte, an honored pioneer. He is a stanch republican, a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and while a resident of Virginia City was chief of the volunteer fire department. Thomas Merkle married Mary Dempsey, who was born in Ireland in 1840 and died at Butte in 1913. They had a large family of children. Nellie, the oldest, is the wife of W. W. Blood, a business man and property owner at San Francisco; Louise is the wife of Judge F. P. Langan, of Virginia City, Nevada, who as a district judge has presided over several trials of national prominence. Katy is unmarried and a trained nurse at Butte. Thomas P. is assistant foreman for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Butte. George W. is a prominent citizen of Belt, Montana, where he owns coal mines and is proprietor of a general store. Susie died at Butte in 1907, unmarried. Horace J. is state manager of the Prudential Insurance Company for Colorado and Wyoming. Arthur W. is next in age, while the youngest is Christine, living with her father.

Arthur W. Merkle was educated in the public schools of Virginia City, Nevada, and graduated from the Butte Business College in 1905. Not so much in schools as in business life he has acquired a thorough education. In 1905 he went to work for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Butte as a clerk. Besides his other work he also had charge of the athletic department of the corporation and developed a championship team in baseball for three years and also a championship bowling team. The bowling team became known all over the United States, entering some of the biggest bowling meets in the country. In 1913 Mr. Merkle was called to the management of the Butte baseball team in the Union Association, and during that year this team finished third in the first division.

Mr. Merkle left the Anaconda Copper Mining Company in the fall of 1915 to become district manager of the Prudential Insurance Company. On January 1, 1919, he and his brother H. J. Merkle formed the firm of Merkle Brothers, state managers for Montana. During 1918, realizing the importance of the business he represented, Mr. Merkle conceived and carried out the plan of forming the insurance federation of Montana, which has already justified its organization and has accomplished benefits beyond the sanguine expectations of its promoters. Mr. Merkle is president of the local division of the Federation. His business offices are in the Hennessy Building.

Mr. Merkle, like other insurance men, gave much of his time and his special abilities to the success of the various Liberty Loan and other war campaigns and also took an active part in converting government insurance for the returned soldiers. He is an independent democrat in politics, and is a devout believer in the universal brotherhood of mankind. He is a member of the Silver Bow Club. He resides in the Mueller Apartments on West Granite Street.

September 8, 1909, at Butte, Mr. Merkle married Miss Grace Noyes, daughter of William F. and Sarah Noyes, residents of Butte. Her father is secretary of the Masonic fraternity at Butte. Mrs. Merkle is widely known and admired for her great personal beauty and her accomplishments as a finished musician. She is a graduate of the Boston Conservatory of Music, both in vocal and instrumental, and for a number of years has been regarded as indispensable to the success of many musical programs in churches and at other occasions in Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Merkle have one daughter, Grace Evelyn, born September 17, 1910.

JAMES GIBSON, who died at his home in Choteau December 23, 1918, was appropriately described as a pioneer, frontiersman, pathfinder, scout, soldier, cattleman and loyal citizen of Montana. History regards him as the first permanent white settler in what is now Teton County. He fought for three years as a Union soldier during the Civil war, and immediately after the close of that great conflict started for Montana.

He was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, June 9, 1846, son of John and Sarah Gibson. His father was a native of Ireland and his mother of Philadelphia. John Gibson came to this country when a young man, and for a number of years was a Philadelphia grocer. He died there in 1874.

The late James Gibson accepted only meager privileges in the Philadelphia public schools. At the age of ten he was making his living as a canal boat workman. He also did some farming. He was not yet fifteen when the Civil war broke out, and the following year became one of the youngest volunteers in the One Hundred and Sixty-Second Pennsylvania Infantry. During the next two years there was no braver soldier than young Gibson. He was under the command of General Banks, and followed Sheridan in the most brilliant operations in the Shenandoah Valley.

He was only nineteen when discharged as a veteran soldier. His search for adventure not yet quenched, he went to Atchison, Kansas, and there joined a party of 200 emigrants, mostly discharged soldiers, bound for the most remote sections of the far West. For six months they were on the way, almost daily confronted by hostile Indians and the dangers of the wilderness. They were the first party to make the trip over the Big Horn route, and autumn had come before they reached Virginia City, Montana. James Gibson made some efforts at mining, and early in 1867 went to Helena, where he worked in the mines and also clerked in a local department store. He was a resident of Helena for six years. He then extended his travels and explorations north into the Blackfoot Indian Reservation, which then extended from the Sun River to British Columbia. James Gibson was an employe of some of the large cattle outfits then operating in that section.

In 1873 he filed a homestead along the Teton River just north of the present site of Choteau. He was the first white man to make good a claim in that country and develop it and live on it. In the early days his home was isolated, and exposed to Indian attack on every side. He had many adventures with the Indians, and one time it is said that only through the interference of a chief was his life spared. He established the nucleus of a herd of cattle, and developed and made famous the Flying U brand. At one time his cattle ranged all the way from the Sun River to the Canadian border, and among the old time ranchers still living who operated in that section of Montana the name and achievements of James Gibson stand out conspicuously. He lived in Teton County for forty-five years, and he witnessed the breaking up of the original unlimited cattle domain, the growth and settlement, and the creation of a number of counties from the original Chouteau County. He gave the name to many streams and coulees and buttes within the vast region, and some of them bear his name. Like the scouts of old he endured the privations that belonged to the frontiersman that he might help to settle a wild territory and make it safe for white men to live in peace and happiness.

In the words of the editor of the Choteau Acantha: "In the death of James Gibson, Montana loses a pioneer, an early settler who helped to blaze the way for civilization and progress. He served the county in the capacity of clerk of the district court for eight years, and during the long trial of war took keen interest in the doings of his country. When he could no longer read the paper on account of his failing eyesight his wife would read the news to him. He was a life-long member of the republican party, and never missed an opportunity to cast his ballot on election day. The state, the county, the great Northwest owes a lasting debt of gratitude to this brave, stout heart, who had the distinction of having been the first white settler in the region embraced within the area that lies north of Sun River crossing, extending toward the Canadian border."

In his twenty-first year Mr. Gibson became a member of the Masonic Order, and for many years was affiliated with Royal Arch Chapter No. 2, and Sheridan Post No. 18 of the Grand Army at Great Falls. He was also a member of the Pioneer Society of Montana and the Old Timers' Society of Choteau.

On May 3, 1885, he married Miss Jennie Fleetwood. Mrs. Gibson, who resides at Choteau, is a native of Illinois and was the only child of James Wesley and Lucy Ellen (March) Fleetwood. Her father was a native of Indiana and her mother of Iowa. Her father was a farmer and spent his last days in Oregon, whence he came in 1864. He was killed by accident.

Mrs. Fleetwood married for her second husband Alvin Stocker of Iowa, they coming to Montana and settling in Cascade, later going to Idaho, where both passed away. Eight children were born to this union, five of whom are living, Edward Wallace, Julia Margaret, who married Samuel Kelly; Ernest Joel Fanton, Joseph Henry and Lillian Eldora, who married Henry Hartley. All are living in Oregon with the exception of Mrs. Kelly.

ARCHIE MCTAGGART. Possessing in a large measure those qualities that inevitably bring success in any line of endeavor, Archie McTaggart, of Butte, owes but little to what is termed good fortune, every advancing step of his active career having been the result of his industry, energy and wise management. A native of New England, he was born, February 21, 1884, in Fitchburg, Massachusetts, a son of Robert McTaggart. His grandfather McTaggart was born in Scotland in 1820, and died in Springfield, Massachusetts, in 1899.

Robert McTaggart was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1854, and during the following year was brought by his parents to the United States, and was reared and educated in Massachusetts. In 1870, during the excitement following the discovery of rich mines in Nevada, he followed the pioneer's trail to Virginia City, where, instead of mining, he engaged in ranching on the near-by Truckey Meadows. In 1882, having previously taken unto himself a wife, he returned to Fitchburg, Massachusetts, and there embarked in the dairy business. Going with his family to Pennsylvania in 1890, he worked six years for Stoddard & Company, wholesale grocers of Wilkes-Barre. Coming to Montana in 1897, he was a pioneer settler of Anaconda, where he ran a milk route for two years. Locating in Missoula, Montana, in 1899, he carried on an extensive and successful teaming business for eighteen years, and then, in 1917, settled in Butte, where he has since been employed as a carpenter at the Never Sweat Mine, one of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company's properties, his home being at No. 616 West Broadway. Politically he is a stanch republican.

Robert McTaggart married in Virginia City, Nevada, Amelia Baker, who was born in Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, a daughter of Frank Baker. Being left an orphan in childhood, she and her sister, Mrs. S. Kent, now residing in Los Angeles, California, came with an uncle to Montana in the fall of 1863, being, it is thought, the second and third white women to locate in the state. She died in Missoula, of spotted fever, in 1907, leaving four children, as follows: Archie, the special subject of this brief sketch; Florence, wife of C. T. Siefert, of Tacoma, Washington, a walking delegate for the Clerk's Union; Mabel, wife of H. Baker, proprietor of a barber's shop at Edmonton, Alberta, Canada; and Olive, the oldest child, wife of J. W. Kelley, a well-known oculist of Missoula, Montana.

Having obtained a practical education in the public schools of Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, Archie McTaggart began his career as a wage earner at the age of thirteen years, working as a silk weaver several months in Wilkes-Barre. Entering then the employ of the Northern Pacific Railway Company as surveyor, he came to Montana in 1897, and continued thus employed until 1900, having his headquarters in Missoula. The following two years Mr. McTaggart was employed as a teamster in the logging camps of Missoula County. Changing his occupation, he became a grocery clerk in Missoula, working first for Walker & Alby, and then for that firm's successors, Hathaway & Buford, who promoted him to salesman.

In 1905 Mr. McTaggart was elected deputy clerk and recorder of Missoula County, and at the same time served as secretary of the Democratic Central Committee of that county, filling those positions two years. Locating in Butte in 1907, he was with the Hennessy Mercantile Company one year, and the ensuing two years had charge of the shipping and wholesale department of the Brophy Grocery Company. He was subsequently for two years city employment agent of Butte, serving in that capacity under Mayor Charles P. Nevin, and was afterward with Swift & Company as salesman for two years. In 1914 Mr. McTaggart organized and established the McTaggart & White Company, which carried on a wholesale business as dealers in meats, flour and produce until October 15, 1919, when the firm disbanded. Since that date Mr. McTaggart has been the active manager for the State of Montana of the Ogden Packing and Provision Company, whose offices and branch house are located at 700 Utah Avenue, and he is filling the responsible position ably and to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned.

Mr. McTaggart married, in 1917, in Missoula, Grace Perkins, a daughter of one of the early settlers of Dillon, Montana, and later pioneers of Rochester, Montana, where her father opened the first mercantile establishment. In his political affiliations Mr. McTaggart is a steadfast democrat. Fraternally he is a member of Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, his membership therein being for life. Successful in business affairs, he has acquired valuable real estate in Butte, and has a pleasant home at 402 South Dakota Street, where he and Mrs. McTaggart gladly welcome their many friends.

William Charles Austin has had his home for the past twenty years in Montana and has been chiefly interested in mining and business. For seventeen years he has been secretary of what is now the Butte Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Austin was born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, June 13, 1862, son of Thomas and Emily (Rogers) Austin. His father was born and reared in England and for twenty-one years was in the British army and for twenty-three years was connected with the British War Office. As an English officer he was ordered to Canada in 1861 and spent eight years in the Dominion. In his sixtieth year he retired from active service, and died in London four years later, in 1904. His wife was born at Dover, England, in 1834, and died at Charlton, Kent, England, in 1917. There were five children: Walter, a state agent living at Hale Hall in Liverpool, England; William Charles; Arthur, who for the past thirty years has been connected with the Goldsmiths and Silversmiths Company of London, and is bookkeeper for that noted firm; Clare, wife of R. H. Holder, a resident of Charlton, Kent, England; and Frank, who died in London in 1918.

When William Charles Austin was seven years of age he returned to England, and received a liberal education chiefly in military schools. He is a musician, both vocal and instrumental, and as a boy was a member of the famous Winchester Cathedral Choir. He studied law in the offices of Taylor & Gale at Winchester, and for seven years was in the offices of the old law firm of Meynell & Pemberton in London. In 1888 he returned to Canada and for twelve years was associated with a prominent law firm at Montreal. He came to the United States in 1900 and for several years was manager of the Red Bluff Gold Mining Company, a large Canadian corporation. He remained at Norris until 1904, when he became assistant secretary of the Merchants' Association of Butte, which in 1913 became the Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Austin is a republican in politics and is an active member of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He is intensely interested in out-of-door sports and has kept up that interest since coming to Montana. In Masonry Mr. Austin is member of Mount Moriah Lodge No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, being past master; is scribe of Deer Lodge Chapter No. 3, Royal Arch Masons; is senior warden of Montana Commandery No. 3, Knights Templar; is past illustrious master of Zabud Council No. 2, Royal and Select Masters, and is past grand master of the State of Montana. He is a charter member of Bagdad Temple and has been musical director of the Temple. He is a member of the Scottish Rite bodies of Masonry, including the fourteenth degree at Butte. He is a member of the Royal Arcanum, of the Silver Bow Club, and is secretary of the Rotary Club since November 12, 1914, the Club having been organized on the 7th of May. Mr. Austin has offices in the Butte Water Company Building and resides in the Napton Apartments. On August 28, 1886, he married at London, England, Miss Edith Hammond, daughter of Hamilton and Elizabeth (Ross) Hammond. Their only son, Claud Charles Austin, was born in London July 4, 1887, was liberally educated, spending two years in the State College at Bozeman, and later graduating in the International Correspondence School at Scranton. He received his mechanical training in the offices of the British Westinghouse Company and with the Ford Motor Company at Manchester, England. He is now a machinist at Butte. He married Miss Annie Burns of Manchester, England, and they have one child, Edith, born September 11, 1916.

William Norris Turnbull is general manager of the Montana Mattress & Furniture Company at Butte. This is the only manufacturing concern of its kind in the State of Montana, and its output of bedding and other household supplies goes all over Montana and adjoining states. Mr. Turnbull has had a long and thorough experience in this line of business, and has had an active commercial career since he was a boy.

He was born at Prairie City, Iowa, July 8, 1875. His father is Andrew J. Turnbull, now living at Nashua, Iowa. Born in Scotland in 1845, he came to the United States with his parents in 1852, and was reared and married at Galesburg, Illinois. During the Civil war he enlisted and served in the Union army, and for several years was a farmer. Later he studied law, was admitted to the Iowa bar, and for many years practiced law at Newton, Iowa. He was at one time closely affiliated with the greenback party, which had much of its strength in the State of Iowa. He is now a republican, and during the World war he was on duty with the Government for three years as a postal inspector, his duties requiring his presence in New York City during that time. Andrew J. Turnbull married Abbie M. Dodd, who was born in Illinois in 1847. Her father, Norris Dodd, was a native of Vermont and lost his life while a Union soldier in the Civil war. Norris Dodd married Nancy Darling, also of Vermont, and of early colonial ancestry. The oldest child of Andrew J. Turnbull is Melvin M., telegraph editor for the Minneapolis Tribune at Minneapolis. William N. is the second in age. Fred is a farmer at Charles City, Iowa. Louise is the wife of George Schlutz, a chemist and inventor living at Salt Lake City, Utah. Jennie is the wife of Harry W. Farr, a merchant at Waterloo, Iowa.

William N. Turnbull attended the public schools of Nashua, Iowa, for a few terms. He was only ten years of age when he earned his first wages as a farm hand. When he was sixteen he became clerk and general helper in a furniture store at Nashua, and from that time to the present there has been no interruption to his work and progress in commercial lines. In 1895 he removed to Superior, Wisconsin, clerked in a furniture store there, and in 1903 bought an interest in the business and continued to be identified with that enterprise until 1912. In that year he removed to Minneapolis, where for five years he was manager of the New England Furniture & Carpet Company, and on March 31, 1917, came to Butte as manager of the Montana Mattress & Furniture Company. The plant and offices of this business are at Harrison avenue and Front street. It is a strictly wholesale concern, and in its own plant manufactures the greater part of the mattresses, bedding and other furniture supplies

While he had little opportunity as a boy to get much schooling, Mr. Turnbull has always been a reader of good books and other literature and has picked up a substantial education in the course of his active career. He is much interested in educational matters, and while living in Superior served five years as a member of the Board of Education and the last year was president of the board, resigning that office when he went to Minneapolis. He was also an alderman by appointment and member of the Police and Fire Commission at Superior. Mr. Turnbull is a republican and is affiliated with Superior Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Superior Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, Superior Commandery, Knights Templar, Milwaukee Consistory of the Scottish Rite, Tripoli Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Milwaukee, and is also past exalted ruler of the Superior Lodge of Elks. In 1902, at Superior, Mr. Turnbull married Miss Alta M. Johnson, daughter of George H. and Carrie M. Johnson, now residents of Duluth. Her father is a stationary engineer. Mr. and Mrs. Turnbull have one child, William N., Jr., born October 2, 1913, at Minneapolis. The family reside in a modern home at 1747 Whitman Avenue.

James S. Kemp, Jr., is the chief official in the traffic department of the Northern Pacific Railway at Butte, being city freight and passenger agent. Mr. Kemp is one of the oldest men in the service of the Northern Pacific Railway in Montana, having begun work for that corporation as an office boy thirty-five years ago. He has made himself useful in various capacities, and his hard work, fidelity and efficiency have earned him much esteem from higher officials.

Mr. Kemp was born at Port Dalhousie, Ontario, Canada, January 5, 1867, but has lived in Montana since early youth. His grandfather, Robert H. Kemp, was born in England in 1820, and in 1855 took his family to Ontario. He was a miller by trade, and worked in that line in Ontario until his death at Beamsville in 1878. He married an English woman named Hart. Four of their children are still living: Edward A., owner of a plumbing and heating business at Edmonton, Alberta, Canada; Robert H., formerly a carriage builder but now a retired fruit farmer at Grimsby, Ontario; C. James S. Kemp, Sr., was born at West Thurrock, Suffolk County, England, in 1841, and was fourteen years of age when his parents settled at Beamsville, Ontario. He was reared there, was married at Lewiston, New York, and spent many years at or near Port Dalhousie, working at his trade as a miller. On account of ill health he came west and was a pioneer settler at Missoula in 1885. He homesteaded a ranch four miles from Missoula, and in later years became prominent in city politics, serving as city treasurer a number of years and at the time of his death, which occurred in November, 1909, was city clerk of Missoula. He was a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church, and was a past noble grand of Missoula Lodge of Odd Fellows, also past grand of the Montana State Lodge, and a member of the Rebekahs. Kemp, Sr., married Anna Florence Barrett, who was born at St. Catherines, Ontario, January 1, 1845, and died at Missoula September 28, 1919. They had a family of six children: Robert, who was grand secretary of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows for the State of Montana; James S., Jr.; Armenia Winifred, wife of George F. Likes, living on the old Kemp ranch four miles from Missoula; May Florence, unmarried and a resident of Missoula; Thomas E., an employe in the shipyards at Seattle, Washington; and F. C., owner of a farm near Challis, Idaho, and also connected with a mining company.

James S. Kemp, Jr., acquired his early education in the public schools of Ontario, receiving the equivalent of a high school training. He was eighteen years old when his parents settled at Missoula, and on December 9, 1885, he went to work in the offices of the Northern Pacific Railway as an office boy. Since that date his service with that company has been continuous. He was promoted through various grades of responsibility, eventually becoming agent at Missoula. In 1903 he was transferred to Helena as chief clerk to the general agent, and in 1905 came to Butte as chief clerk to the division freight and passenger agent. He is now city freight and passenger agent, and as such is the official highest in rank in the traffic department of the road at Butte. His offices are in the Mantle Block.

Mr. Kemp, who has never married, is a resident in the Kenwood Block. He is a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with Missoula Lodge No. 13, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, is past high priest of Western Sun Chapter No. 11, Royal Arch Masons, and is also a member of the Royal Arcanum.

William H. Webb, present county auditor of Teton County, first came to this section of Montana thirty years ago. He has been honored with several official posts, was in business for a number of years as a building contractor, and his business experience ranges from his native State of Illinois to the Pacific Coast.

He was born in Bureau County, Illinois, February 1, 1869, son of Stephen M. and Margaret (McFarlin) Webb. His father was born in New York State, and when a boy was taken to Illinois by his parents, Gilbert and Julia (Ingals) Webb. Stephen Webb was educated in New York and spent some of his early years in Marshalltown and Osage, Iowa. He was a wheelwright by trade. He enlisted as a Union soldier in the Fourth Iowa Cavalry and served a little less than a year. He then located at the Village of Dover in Bureau County, Illinois, and lived there the rest of his life. He died in 1904, at the age of sixty-three. His wife was a native of Ohio and died in 1910, aged sixty-two. They were married at Osage, Iowa. Their eleven children consisted of six sons and five daughters, and three sons and four daughters are still living, William H. being the fourth child. His father was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and a republican voter.

William H. Webb acquired his education in the public schools of Dover, Illinois. He learned the wheelwright trade from his father, and in 1890 came to Montana and at Choteau found work as a draftsman for a civil engineer. After about two years he was appointed first deputy county treasurer of Teton County in 1892, and held that post three years. For one year he worked in the Post Traders Store on the Blackfoot Reservation, and for about six years followed various occupations in Spokane and other sections of Washington. Returning to Choteau, he was bookkeeper for a local firm, and at the death of his father went back to Illinois and lived there six years, working as a carpenter. In 1911 he returned to Choteau, Montana, and engaged in building contracting. In April, 1917, Mr. Webb was appointed deputy county auditor and in 1918 was elected as chief of that office, beginning with his official term in 1919.

He is a republican in politics, a member of the Methodist Church, and is affiliated with Choteau Lodge No. 44, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and the Knights of Pythias.

March 2, 1910, he married Miss Permelia Stewart. She was born at Kasbeer, Illinois, and died November 30, 1913. She left two children, Marion and Stephen E.

Lester Ralph Polglase, a native of Butte and son of a Montana pioneer, in a comparatively brief career has made himself useful and influential in his native community. Mr. Polglase is deputy clerk of the United States Court at Butte.

He was born at Butte March 10, 1894. His father, Emanuel Polglase, was born in Cornwall, England, in 1843, was reared and educated there, and on coming to the United States about 1868 sought his fortune in the mining district of the West. He lived for several years at Ruby Hill, Nevada, where he married and where he followed mining. He was also connected with the mines of Grass Valley, California, and in 1884 settled at Butte. The rest of his active life he spent with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, first as a miner and finally as a watchman. He died in their service at Butte in March, 1915. Politically he was a standpat republican, and was an active member and supporter of the Episcopal Church. He was affiliated with Fidelity Lodge No. 8, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and also with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He married Annie Bauer. She was born near Frankfort, Germany, in 1852, and is still living at Butte. She was reared and educated in her native land and at the age of twenty, with two sisters, came to the United States. Both sisters are now deceased. One of them, Elizabeth, died in San Francisco. Annie Bauer lived for some time at San Francisco and afterward went to Ruby Hill, Nevada, where she married. Emanuel Polglase and wife had six children: Harry, a bookkeeper at Richmond, California; William, an iron molder at McGill, Nevada; Edward, an iron molder at Redondo, California; John, who died at the age of four years; Roy, who died at the age of eighteen months; and Lester R., the youngest.

Lester R. Polglase received a public school education at Butte and graduated from the Butte Business College in 1911, having specialized in bookkeeping. A year later he went with the Finlen Hotel, the leading hotel of Butte, and was in its service as a clerk for five years. He then took up his present duties as deputy clerk of the United States Court, his offices being in Room 252 of the Federal Building.

Mr. Polglase is an independent republican and is affiliated with the Episcopal Church. July 14, 1916, at Butte, he married Catherine Madigan, a native of California. They have one daughter, Elizabeth Mary, born July 11, 1918.

Edgar M. Andrieux is manager and proprietor of the Home Independent Messenger Company of Butte. This is a business that has been developed along original lines largely by Mr. Andrieux, and represents a system that is deserving of much wider application than it has received so far as a means of solving the extensive problem of local delivery and transportation in towns and cities.

Mr. Andrieux came to this business after several years of experience in public offices in Butte, where he and his family have long been favorably known. He was born in Chicago, Illinois, September 7, 1882, but has spent most of his life in Butte.

His father was Charles J. Andrieux, at one time a trusted associate and friend of such prominent leaders in Butte as Gen. Charles S. Warren, W. A. Clark, Marcus Daly, Jim Murray and other old timers who laid the foundation of the city. Charles J. Andrieux was a native of Paris, France, descended from a prominent French family, and had attained the rank of colonel in the French army before coming to America. In this country he located at Chicago, where he married, and where for several years he was actively interested in democratic politics. He made his first trip to Butte about 1879, and for several years was associated in the real estate business with John H. Curtis. Their office was in a log cabin where the Curtis Block now stands on West Park Street. He was employed to look after mining interests and other properties for some of the men noted above, and about 1885 he left Butte on a business mission of this kind, going east, and there his record abruptly ends. His family and friends have always believed that he was a victim of foul play. He was a democrat in politics and a member of the Catholic Church. Charles J. Andrieux married Celia De Mers, who was born in Montreal, Canada, in 1850 and is still living at Butte. There were five children, Edgar M. being the youngest. Celia, the oldest, is the wife of T. J. Collins, an engineer with the W. J. Clark interests and a resident of Butte; Charles J., who lives with his mother and is an abstractor for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company; Louis, who died at Butte at the age of forty in 1918, was manager of the Home Messenger Company; Oscar E. was manager of the Brown & Flannigan Company of Butte and died at Silver City, New Mexico, in 1913.

Edgar M. Andrieux attended the parochial schools of Butte, graduating in 1899, and from 1905 to 1909 served as deputy county treasurer for two terms and for one year was deputy county assessor. For four years he was cashier of the M. J. Medin Company of Butte, and in 1914 became associated with the Home Independent Messenger Company, of which he is manager and owner. This is one of the best developed organizations of its kind in the country, supplying a general delivery service throughout Silver Bow County and particularly in Butte. The offices are at 1 East Broadway.

Mr. Andrieux, like his father, takes an active interest in democratic politics and for the past eight years has been treasurer of the County Democratic Central Committee. He is a Catholic, a former member of the Knights of Columbus and is affiliated with Butte Aerie No. 11, Fraternal Order of Eagles. He and his family reside in a modern home at 123 West Aluminum Street. He married at St. Paul, Minnesota, in 1913, Miss Mary La Riviere. Mrs. Andrieux was born at Mason City, Iowa.

J. D. Wallace. Inheriting in no small measure the sagacity, forethought and the habits of industry and thrift characteristic of his honored Scotch ancestors, J. D. Wallace, of Butte, is prominently associated with the transportation interests of the city as general agent of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railway, a position for which he is amply qualified by knowledge and experience, and which he is ably filling. A son of William Wallace, he was born in Newberry, South Carolina, October 16, 1876, and educated in Florida. He comes of distinguished ancestry on both sides of the house, his great-grandfather, Andrew Wallace, the immigrant, having been of Scotch birth, while his great-grandfather on his mother's side was a cousin of Francis Scott Key, author of our national song, "The Star Spangled Banner."

Born in Edinburgh, Scotland, Andrew Wallace immigrated as a young man to the United States, locating in Virginia, where he married an attractive Southern girl, a Miss Patrick. Moving to Charleston, South Carolina, he embarked in mercantile pursuits, and through good management, thrift, and wise investments amassed a large fortune, owning aside from his mercantile property several valuable South Carolina plantations. His son William Wallace, Sr., was the next in line of descent.

William Wallace, Sr., was born in Columbia, South Carolina, in 1825, and died in that city in 1905. He was an attorney-at-law by profession, and quite successful. A veteran of the Confederacy, he served throughout the war, attaining the rank of colonel, and after he returned to Columbia, during the first administration of Grover Cleveland as President, he served as postmaster.

William Wallace, Jr., was born in 1854, in Columbia, South Carolina, where he lived until after his marriage, being engaged in the saw mill business. Moving from there to Newberry, South Carolina, he owned and operated a cotton plantation until 1878, when he removed with his family to Jacksonville, Florida. There as owner and manager of a saw mill, he accumulated a large property, and since 1904 has been living retired from business cares. He married Mrs. Lena (Murdock) Adams, who was born in Columbia, South Carolina, in 1849. Her first husband, William Adams, of Jacksonville, Florida, was killed in a train wreck, leaving her with two children, William Adams, of Jacksonville, an employe of the Florida East Coast Railway, and Emma, wife of James P. Dodge of Saint Augustine, Florida, a jeweler. Mr. and Mrs. William Wallace have four children, J. D., the subject of this sketch; Elise and Madge, teachers in the Jacksonville public schools and who live with their parents; and Helen, wife of W. W. Ware, of Washington, District of Columbia, a railroad employe.

Educated in the public schools of Florida, J. D. Wallace was graduated from the New Smyrna High School in 1894, and soon after entered the employ of the Florida East Coast Railroad Company, beginning as station baggage master, and after learning telegraphy was promoted in 1895 to station agent. From 1900 until 1903 he worked for the Jacksonville Terminal Company as train despatcher. Going then to Palmer Lake, Colorado, Mr. Wallace was telegraph operator for the Denver & Rio Grande Railway Company until the big coal strike, when one-half of the operators were laid off, he being one of them. Going directly to Salt Lake City, he was employed at the Lucin Cut-off of the Southern Pacific Railroad until May, 1904. Locating in Butte on the first day of June, 1904, Mr. Wallace secured a position as telegrapher and clerk for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and was afterward promoted to rate clerk. In March, 1908, he was offered a more remunerative position as rate clerk in Anaconda for the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railway, and was subsequently made chief clerk and later promoted to the cashiership. In 1911 Mr. Wallace was advanced in position, the company transferring him to Butte, in March of that year, and making him cashier. In November, 1911, he was again promoted, being appointed general agent of the road, succeeding the late J. W. Naugle. Mr. Wallace, who is the only official representative of the company in Butte, has his offices in the freight depot of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad, on Utah Avenue, and under his supervision has twenty employes.

Mr. Wallace married, in 1907, in Butte, Miss Lottie Williams, a finely educated young woman, who was graduated from the Butte High School and from the Butte Business College. Her father, for many years engaged in mining in Nevada, died in Butte, and her mother, whose name before marriage was Bessie Argall, is living in Butte, at 833 South Main Street. Mr. and Mrs. Wallace have one child, Bessie, born June 8, 1908. Mr. and Mrs. Wallace are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally Mr. Wallace is a member of Summit Valley Lodge No. 123, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, and of Deer Lodge Chapter No. 3, Royal Arch Masons. He and his family reside in a modernly built house at 909 South Main Street.

Frederick Stokes Decker, Jr., president and manager of Decker Brothers, general merchandise brokers of Butte, is one of the most aggressive and capable business men of the city, and through his efficiency his house has been developed into one of the leading ones of its kind in the Northwest. He was born at New Orleans, Louisiana, on December 26, 1875, a son of Frederick Stokes Decker and grandson of Allen M. Decker, born in North Carolina, where the Deckers settled upon coming to the American colonies prior to the Revolution. Allen M. Decker moved to New Orleans at a very early day and had there large steamboat interests. He died in that city prior to the birth of his grandson.

Frederick Stokes Decker was born at New Orleans on June 13, 1851, and he died in that city on March 22, 1915, having spent his life in and about that city, where during his mature years he was associated with the railroad development, and for a number of years served as general passenger agent of the Southern Pacific Railroad. In politics he was a democrat, and in religious belief, an Episcopalian. He married Mary Grace Harris, born on March 22, 1851, and she survives him and makes her home at New Orleans. Their children, all of whom were born in New Orleans, were as follows: Frederick Stokes, whose name heads this review; Grace, who was born on July 14, 1877, was married on April 12, 1916, to Norman Smith, a naval stores operator, and they live at Tampa, Florida; Allen M., who was born on January 31, 1879, is a merchant of Billings, Montana; Ethel, who was born November 26, 1880, was married on September 15, 1919, to Griff C. Rogan, a real estate operator of Lakeland, Florida; Beverly H., who was born December 25, 1882, is a broker of New Orleans; Alice E., who was born September 10, 1884, is living with her mother; Alma, who was born April 5, 1886, died on September 2, 1897; Hazel, who was born January 3, 1888, lives with her mother; Walton, who was born October 19, 1891, is a broker of Great Falls, Montana.

Frederick Stokes Decker, Jr., was educated in the public schools of New Orleans, and was graduated from one of its high schools in 1892. He then entered the employ of the Illinois Central Railroad at New Orleans as a messenger boy, and was promoted and then went with the Southern Pacific Railroad as bill of lading clerk. Still later this road transferred him to Algiers, Louisiana, as assistant cashier of their office at that point, and he remained there from 1896 until 1898.

With the outbreak of the Spanish-American war Mr. Decker enlisted in the Fourth Louisiana Battalion and went to Mobile, Alabama, and from there to Miami, Florida, and still later to Jacksonville, Florida. He was stricken down with typhoid fever and was incapacitated from further service, and was mustered out in August, 1899, having been a quartermaster sergeant during the period of his service.

Returning to the Southern Pacific Railroad, Mr. Decker was made a purser on their passenger steamers plying between New Orleans and Havana, and held that position for three years, leaving it to go into the freight forwarding business with Alfred H. Clement as a partner at New Orleans. He maintained his interests in this concern until he came to Montana in June, 1912, joining his brother, B. H. Decker at Butte, to which city he had come in July, 1908, and established the Northwestern Brokerage Company, to which business Frederick S. Decker, Jr., succeeded in 1916. At that time the name was still the original one, but on January 1, 1917, it was changed to the present one of Decker Brothers, of which Mr. Decker is president and manager; Allen M. Decker is vice president; and Walton Decker is secretary and treasurer. This business has been incorporated since July 3, 1908. The company carries on a general merchandise brokerage business, acting as agent for manufacturers and shippers of food supplies. The territory embraces the entire State of Montana, and this is one of the leading concerns of its kind in the Northwest, headquarters being maintained at Butte, with offices at No. 602 Utah Avenue, and branch offices at Great Falls and Billings, Montana.

Mr. Decker is a democrat. He is a Mason and belongs to Mount Moriah Lodge No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Deer Lodge Chapter No. 3, Royal Arch Masons. The Silver Bow Club of Butte holds his membership and interest. Mr. Decker is unmarried, and resides at No. 602 Utah Avenue, Butte.

George W. Magee, of Choteau, has well earned a high place among Montana's lawyers. He was trained to the law back East before coming to Montana. For a number of years few except his intimate friends knew that he was qualified for law practice. His time and energies were taken up with ranching and the newspaper business for many years.

Mr. Magee was born at East Douglas in Worcester County, Massachusetts, December 2, 1858, son of Thomas Nathaniel and Mary A. (Buffum) Magee. His mother was born in Massachusetts and died in 1863, at the age of thirty-one. Thomas N. Magee was a native of Vermont, and at the outbreak of the Civil war enlisted in the Third Rhode Island Cavalry. He served part of the time under General Burnside, until severely wounded by a grape shot, which passed through his body. On recovering he was granted a furlough and then reenlisted, serving part of the time as recruiting officer. While on his way to Washington to be mustered out in December, 1864, he was one of those who lost their lives on the North America, a Federal transport, off Roanoke, Virginia. He and several hundred of his companions went down to a watery grave. Of his seven children five reached mature years, four sons and one daughter.

George W. Magee, fourth among his parents' children, was a small boy when he was orphaned, and he early learned the lessons of independence and self reliance. He acquired his education in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, and studied law in Worcester, Massachusetts, with the firm Bacon, Hopkins & Bacon. The money necessary to complete his legal education he earned by teaching school. He taught his first term in Massachusetts at the age of sixteen. In 1880 Mr. Magee moved to Iowa and in 1881 came up the Missouri River on the steamer Helena to Fort Benton. Some five or six years he spent in the freighting business, and then went on a cattle and horse ranch on Birch Creek. That was the scene of his operations as a rancher until the spring of 1899. Mr. Magee bought the Dupuyer Acantha, a weekly newspaper published at Dupuyer. He published that journal and did much to improve and promote its influence for about five years. In the meantime, in October, 1899, he was appointed United States Commissioner and held that office for eight years. He sold his paper in 1904 and bought 500 acres of land adjoining the Town of Dupuyer. This land is well supplied with water from an irrigation canal, and is a highly valuable and productive property. Mr. Magee rents it, and for the past fifteen years has given much of his time to his profession as a lawyer. He has served as justice of the peace and in the fall of 1898 was elected a member of the State Legislature, serving one term. In December, 1917, he was appointed county attorney of Teton County, succeeding Capt. Walter Verge. In November, 1918, he was regularly elected to that office. He is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World and in politics is a republican.

In 1900 Mr. Magee married Catherine Laudin. He has two sons and one daughter, Harold, George and Marion. In December, 1915, Mr. Magee married Emma Longfellow, of Indiana.

Paul C. Gaethke, proprietor of the Rocky Mountain Coal Company, is one of the substantial men and representative citizens of Butte, where he has been located since 1900. He was born at Stavenhagen, Germany, on September 1, 1862, and that city was also the birthplace of his father, Frederick Gaethke, and his grandfather, also Frederick Gaethke, a schoolteacher and a very learned man who died in the vicinity of Stavenhagen many years ago. The younger Frederick Gaethke was born in 1830 and died near the place of his birth in 1916, having spent his entire life in that vicinity. Like his father he was a very well educated man, having fitted himself for the same calling, but did not follow it, as he was made manager of the estate of Count von Plessen, which position he held until his death. He served in the German army during the rebellion of 1848. A Mason and a Lutheran, he lived up to the highest ideals of both organizations and was a most excellent man, and one who commanded universal respect. He married Emma Stoerzer, born in Denmark and died at Stavenhagen, Germany, in 1918. Their children were as follows: Helena, who married Francis Pistorius, a colonel in the German army during the Great war and a customs official, who died in 1918, his widow now making her home at Berlin; Paul C., whose name heads this review; Ulrich, who is a professor in the University of Tuebinzan, Germany; and Gustav, who was a merchant, died at Berlin in 1915.

Paul C. Gaethke attended the University of Berlin for two years and the University of Goettingen for one year. He then became a student of the University of Zurich, Switzerland, from which he was graduated in 1884 with the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. Mr. Gaethke then came to the United States and located at Bathgate, North Dakota, was engaged in an ice business there until 1900, and then came to Butte and established the Rocky Mountain Coal Company, of which he is the sole proprietor, and which he has built up until it is one of the leading ones of its kind in Butte. The offices of the company are at No. 745 South Arizona Street, and he has yards adjacent to the offices and also along the Northern Pacific tracks. Mr. Gaethke owns a modern residence at No. 1035 South Arizona Street, as well as his office property and real estate at Seattle, Washington. In politics he is an independent. He belongs to the Mystic Toilers of Des Moines, Iowa, and the Sons of Hermann.

In 1891 Mr. Gaethke was married at Pierz, Minnesota, to Miss Mary Schommer, a daughter of Peter and Kathryn Schommer. Mr. Schommer was a pioneer farmer of Rich Prairie, Minnesota, and was killed when a tree he was cutting down fell on him. His widow survives him and makes her home at Rich Prairie. Mr. and Mrs. Gaethke became the parents of the following children: Frederick, who was born in 1893, graduated from the School of Mines at Butte, Montana, with the degree of Mining Engineer and is efficiency engineer for the East Colusa Mine of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company; Annie, who was born in 1896 at Pierz, Minnesota, was graduated from the Butte High School, and is now the wife of John B. McNulty, who is in the automobile business in San Francisco, California, where they now reside; Frank, who was born in 1897, is a junior in the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, Michigan; and George, who was born in 1899, is a sophomore in the medical department of the State University at Seattle, Washington. Mr. Gaethke is one of the best business men of Butte, and is a very highly educated man, who takes a pride in keeping well informed upon all matters of interest.

Robert E. Pond, manager of the Butte branch of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, is one of the reliable young business men of Silver Bow County. He was born at Granville, Ohio, on July 26, 1884, a son of Warner J. Pond, born at the same place as his son in 1838. He spent his life at Granville, and died there on October 2, 1914. In young manhood Warner J. Pond learned the coopering trade, but later went into a hardware business and so expanded his operations as to include a general line of merchandise and developed into one of the leading merchants of Granville, but retired from active pursuits about 1909. He was a stanch republican and served as mayor of Granville, was treasurer of the city, a member of the city council, and always took a very active part in local politics. In addition to his other interests Mr. Pond was a director of the Farmers Bank of Granville and president of the Granville Building & Loan Association. The Presbyterian Church had in him a conscientious member and active and generous supporter, and he was equally faithful in living up to the highest conceptions of Masonry and of the order of Odd Fellows. Warner J. Pond was married to Anna Eager, born at Alexandria, Ohio, in 1848, who survives him and makes her home at Santa Barbara, California. Their children were as follows: Henry W., who is a druggist of Chicago, Illinois; Robert E., who was the second in order of birth.

The paternal grandfather of Robert E. Pond was Aaron Pond, who was also born at Granville, Ohio, and died there before the birth of his grandson, having been a merchant all of his mature years. The Pond family is of Scotch-English descent, representatives of it coming to the Massachusetts Colony long before the American Revolution, and helping in the establishment of Granville, Massachusetts. When some of them went to Ohio, they named their new place of settlement Granville, in honor of their old home.

Robert E. Pond was reared and educated in the public schools of Granville, and was graduated from its high school in 1901, following which he attended Denison University at Granville until he completed the sophomore year. He then took a two years' course in the Ohio State University at Columbus, Ohio, from which he was graduated with the class of 1906, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. Mr. Pond is a member of the Greek Letter College Fraternity Phi Gamma Delta.

In 1906 Mr. Pond engaged as a civil engineer with the Pennsylvania Railroad at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and held that position until 1910, when he went to Chicago, Illinois, and was in the advertising business until 1915. During the latter year his services were secured by the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company as a salesman for their Chicago branch, and he was connected with that branch for two years, when he was transferred to the factory at Akron, Ohio, as a staff man to the department manager on truck tires. After two years Mr. Pond received further promotion and was sent on June 1, 1919, to Denver, Colorado, to take charge of the service department of his company in that city, and on November 1, 1919, came to Butte as manager of the local branch of the company. This branch is located on the corner of Iron Street and Nevada Avenue. Mr. Pond has under his supervision thirty-three employes. He is an independent republican. In his religious faith he is a Presbyterian. His social connections are those he maintains as a member of the Rotary Club, the Silver Bow Club and the Butte Country Club. He maintains his residence in the Goldberg Apartments.

On January 9, 1913, Mr. Pond was married at Chicago, Illinois, to Miss Josephine L. Dolman, a daughter of William L. and Armildia (Dunkle) Dolman, residents of Pasadena, California. Mr. Dolman is a retired banker. Mrs. Pond was graduated from the Loring School for Girls at Chicago, and from the Hillside School for Girls at Madison, Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Pond have two daughters, namely: Jane Elizabeth, who was born on April 13, 1915; and Barbara Dolman, who was born on October 20, 1917.

Mr. Pond is a young man of great initiative and executive ability, and understands how to handle men. His long connection with his present company has resulted in his promotion to increasing responsibilities and added prestige, and although he has not long been a resident of Butte, he has already made himself felt in the life of the city, and is recognized as a valuable addition to the community.

William E. Curry. It is not given to every man to develop not only keen business instincts and put them to practical use, but also to turn to remunerative uses inventive talents, and yet that is just what William E. Curry, vice president and manager of the Mountaineer Welders Supply Company of Butte, Montana, is doing. He has invented, patented, and his company is using generating cells that produce both oxygen and hydrogen gasses of unusual purity, and he is also conducting the affairs of the concern of which he is vice president in so efficient a manner as to make it one of the sound financial institutions of this part of the state, and one of the leaders in its line of industry.

William E. Curry was born at Chippewa Falls,

Wisconsin, on March 16, 1886, a son of William Curry. The Curry family is of Scotch-Irish descent, the founders of it in the American colonies locating first in New England, from whence they later migrated into Canada, and it was in that dominion, Province of Ontario, City of Pembroke, that William Curry was born in the year 1841. He grew up at Pembroke and became a very highly educated man, going through a number of well known seminaries, but at the same time he was of a practical turn of mind and learned the carpenter trade, not caring to depend wholly upon his educational attainments for support. However, it was through the exercise of his mental faculties rather than by physical labor that he justified his existence and made a name for himself as an earnest, self-sacrificing Christian. Mr. Curry went into Northern Michigan as a missionary of the Congregational Church to the Indians, and remained there until 1878, laboring among them, not only teaching them the gospel, but endeavoring to awaken in them a desire to be useful members of their tribe. In 1878 he was transferred to Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, and while living there acquired ownership to a farm, which he operated. Still later his services were sought as agent by a railway company, and he was stationed at Spring Valley, Wisconsin, until 1904, when he returned to Chippewa Falls to look after his agricultural interests in its vicinity. It was while living there that this excellent man was stricken down with paralysis in 1908, which necessitated his abandonment of any kind of strenuous life, and in 1913 he came to Butte to make his home with his son, and died in this city during 1917. In politics he was an independent republican and was chosen as a justice of the peace for two terms while he was a resident of Spring Valley, Wisconsin. A very earnest member of the Congregational Church, he organized the society at Spring Valley, to which he oftentimes ministered as a lay preacher. His wife bore the maiden name of Delana Aiken Curry, but as far as the family history could be traced no relationship could be discovered between the two families. She was born in the Province of Ontario, Canada, in 1841, and died at Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, in February, 1918. Their children were as follows: James, who is a farmer of Duluth, Minnesota; Bertha married Samuel Mars, a farmer of the neighborhood of Elk Mound, Wisconsin, and she died in 1900, at Spring Valley, Wisconsin; Frank, who is a barber by trade, has charge of the government-owned elevator at Duluth, Minnesota; Wilhelmina, who married Lawrence McKay, foreman of the stamp mill of Anyox, British Columbia, Canada; Duncan Ellsworth Howard, who is a mining engineer of Duquesne, Arizona; William E., whose name heads this review; Walter H., who is employed in the Timber Butte Mills as assistant superintendent, is a resident of Butte, Montana; and Margaret Eloise, who is unmarried, is a teacher of domestic economy in a select school at Astoria, Oregon.

William E. Curry was reared and educated in the public schools at Spring Valley, later attending the Chippewa Falls High School, from which he was graduated in 1906. During the summer subsequent to his graduation he was employed in a grocery store at Chippewa Falls, and in the late fall of that year came to Butte, Montana, his arrival here dating from November 9, 1906. For the next five years he was employed by the Brophy Grocery Company, which started him as a clerk in the order department, and then promoted him until he became foreman of his department.

In 1910 he returned to Wisconsin to visit his parents, and while there learned about the oxy-acetylene welding and steel cutting business which was at that time practically in its infancy. The possibilities of this business so attracted him that he went to Minneapolis, Minnesota, and learned its details, and returning to Butte that same year was successful in interesting A. H. Schaal in his ideas. Having secured some capital, Mr. Curry returned to Minneapolis to go into the matter more extensively, and when he felt he had mastered the business he came back to Butte, and on February 16, 1911, opened a little shop and began what was then really an experiment. In 1917 Mr. Curry bought his partner's interest, the business in the meanwhile having, during 1914, been incorporated as the Mountaineer Welders Supply Company. At that time an electrolytic oxygen and hydrogen gas manufacturing plant was added. The generating cells used in this plant are of Mr. Curry's own design, and produce both oxygen and hydrogen gas, ranging from 99.6 per cent to 99.8 per cent pure. This gas is stored in cylinders and shipped all over Montana and neighboring states. It is placed in the cylinders at a pressure of 1,800 pounds to the square inch. When the welding plant was established in 1911 it was the only one of its kind in the whole state, but since then of course many others have sprung into existence, especially after Mr. Curry had passed through the experimental period and demonstrated the practicality and efficiency of this method. As the other feature of manufacturing oxygen and hydrogen was developed the original plant was sold, and the company now devotes itself to the production of the gasses, in this being the original and only plant of its kind in the state, and in the handling of oxy-acteylene welding and all welders' supplies being the supply station for the welding plants of Butte and its vicinity. The plant and offices are located at No. 408 South Main Street, Butte. The officers of the company are as follows: James H. Brown, president; William E. Curry, vice president and manager; and H. L. Winchester, secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Curry organized the original company with a capital stock of $4,500, and now the costly equipment of the plant alone represents an investment of $33,000, and this expansion has come very largely through Mr. Curry's own efforts and his convincing faith in the future of his undertaking, which won confidence and secured capital at a time when another man might not have been able to get financial backing for his enterprise no matter what its ultimate prospects might have been.

Mr. Curry was married at Prairie Farm, Wisconsin, in 1913 to Miss Anna Marie Teigen, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Teigen, now residents of Minneapolis, Minnesota, where Mr. Teigen is engaged in harnessmaking. Mrs. Curry was graduated from the Superior Normal School at Superior, Wisconsin, and was engaged in teaching school at Prairie Farm at the time of her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Curry have one son, Hugh Donald, who was born November 17, 1916.

Preferring to cast his vote according to his personal estimate of the candidates, Mr. Curry has continued to be independent in politics. The Methodist Episcopal Church holds his membership. He owns a comfortable modern residence at No. 1143 West Platinum Street, Butte, where he maintains his home. A man of broad vision, Mr. Curry has justified every confidence placed in him and his undertaking and now ranks among the truly successful men of his state and generation.

ALBERT CHARLES WILHELM, one of the leading florists of Butte, and a man of high business standards and good citizenship, was born at Cleveland, Ohio, on June 13, 1882, a son of Charles Wilhelm and grandson of Charles Wilhelm. The Wilhelm family came from Germany to the United States at a very early day, becoming pioneers of Cleveland, Ohio. It was in this city that Charles Wilhelm was born, and he died there in 1885, having been the first cooper of the city. During the war between the states he served as a soldier in the Union army.

Charles Wilhelm, the younger, was also born at Cleveland, Ohio, in 1848, and he is a resident of that city today. There he was reared, educated and married, and became one of the early mechanical engineers of Cleveland, but is now retired. In his political faith he is a strong republican, and fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias. His wife bore the maiden name of Mary Hackwit, born at Berlin, Germany, in 1851, a daughter of Albert Hackwit, born in Germany about 1825. He came to Cleveland in 1866, but had been a resident of the United States from 1853. His death occurred at Cleveland, Ohio, in 1900. For many years he was engaged in the manufacture of paper. Like the elder Charles Wilhelm, he served in the Union army during the war between the states. Mrs. Charles Wilhelm was reared and educated in Cleveland. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wilhelm were as follows: May, who is unmarried, is a florist and resides with her parents; Albert Charles, who is the second in order of birth; George, who is assistant city engineer, lives at Cleveland, Ohio; Gertrude, who is married, lives at Cleveland; Anna, who is also married, is a resident of Cleveland; Lillian, who is married, is also a resident of Cleveland; Harold, who is a resident of Cleveland, served in the United States Navy during the World war as a mechanic on the "West Virginia," and has been in the service for the past ten years; Oliver, who died at Cleveland in 1918, was a mechanic; Melville, who is attending a Cleveland high school; and an unnamed daughter who died in infancy.

Albert Charles Wilhelm grew up at Cleveland and was there graduated from the high school course in 1900. He began work as a florist with the J. M. Gasser Company of Cleveland, and learned his trade in their employ. In 1901 he came to Butte, and for seventeen years was connected with the Butte Floral Company, leaving it as manager. Mr. Wilhelm then, in 1918, opened his own establishment at No. 47 West Broadway, operating under the name of the Columbia Floral Company, which is incorporated and has the following officers: A. C. Wilhelm, president and manager; C. R. Leonard, vice president; and N. F. Leonard, secretary and treasurer. Although this is a new company, Mr. Wilhelm has so expanded it that it is now one of the leaders in its line in Western Montana, and controls an immense trade. This company handles all of the output of the Columbia Gardens, the "beauty spot" of the state.

Mr. Wilhelm is a republican. He belongs to Putte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Butte Aerie No. 11, Fraternal Order of Eagles; Butte Lodge of Moose; the Silver Bow Club; the Silver Bow Country Club; the Butte Business Men's Club; the Butte Advertising Club; the Florists Telegraph Delivery Association, and the Society of American Florists, the last two named being national organizations.

In 1909 Mr. Wilhelm was married at Butte to Miss Viola Frost, a daughter of Mrs. Mary Frost, who is now a resident of Seattle, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Wilhelm have no children. They reside in the Mueller Apartments on West Granite Street, Butte. Mr. Wilhelm not only thoroughly understands his trade, but is an excellent business man, and as a citizen he has won the respect of his associates by his interest in forwarding civic improvements and bringing about general reforms. His standing is unquestioned and he deserves the prosperity which he now enjoys, for it has come through his own, unaided efforts and untiring industry. He is one of the men who has centered upon one line of industry and not scattered his energies over a diversified territory. Having a love for flowers, he enjoys his work and is a recognized expert in growing and handling plants and blossoms.

William T. Sweet, Sr., was one of the very first settlers at Boulder, conducted its first store, and in many ways was a notable Montana pioneer.

He was born at Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1838, son of a Baptist minister, and of an ancestry that came originally from Wales and became established in America during the very early colonial period. William T. Sweet, Sr., was reared and educated in Southern Ohio, and May 28, 1862, enlisted as a private in Company B of the Eighty-Seventh Ohio Infantry. He was taken prisoner and paroled September 28, 1862. Afterwards he served eighteen months in the navy on the gunboat Gazelle and eventually enlisted in Company F of the One Hundred and Ninety-Second Ohio Regiment and remained with that command until the close of the war. He proved a brave and gallant soldier and was in the battle of Gettysburg and many other historic campaigns of the war.

As is usually the case after any great conflict he with so many others was not content with the restricted conditions of his former life and sought adventure in the then Far West. He started for Montana in 1866, coming by way of St. Louis and up the Missouri River, being six weeks making the trip from St. Louis to Fort Benton. For the first six months in Montana Territory he worked for Col. Charles Broadwater, driving a bull team from Fort Benton to Helena. In 1867 he opened a general store at the old Town of Boulder under the firm name of Sweet & Higley. He owned the land where the Town of Boulder now stands, and platted and laid out the original townsite. He kept a station for stages and trading outfits, and his was the leading business concern of the place for a number of years. Subsequently he embarked in the stock raising industry and became a rancher on an extensive scale. His various occupations made him a prominent figure and he was instrumental in organizing the Old Settlers' Club, of which he remained a member until his death. A democrat in politics, he was elected on his party ticket county treasurer, clerk of the District Court, and for a number of years was also a justice of the peace. He died in Boulder in 1917, having lived retired for several years. Both as a Mason and as a member of the Episcopal Church he lived up to high ideals and was a very fine man in every respect.

At Boulder, in 1868, he married Emily Iola Cook, who was born at Kalamazoo, Michigan, in 1840, and died at Boulder, Montana, in 1897. Her parents, Capt. and Mrs. Hiram Cook, were also pioneers who came to Montana after the close of the Civil War by way of St. Louis and the river route to Fort Benton.

Eight children were born to William T. Sweet and wife: Nellie, who married Frank Bernatz, a farmer and postmaster of Dixon, Montana, where she died in 1910; Chester W., who lives at Bozeman and is manager of the Montana Flour Mills Company and mayor of that city; Ralph W., who is a mining engineer at Tonopah, Nevada; Blanche E., who died at Boulder in 1905, the wife of B. F. Beckwith, now a salesman for the National Wholesale Grocery Company, living at Seattle, Washington; Mary, who married P. P. Roberts, a contractor and builder at Butte; William T., Jr., whose record follows; Shelby C., associated with his brother in the wholesale fruit and produce business at Butte; and Catherine, who married E. J. Finnerty, foreman of the Jones Fruit Company at Butte.

WILLIAM T. SWEET. Many of the business houses of Butte have extended the field of their operations until it spreads out over a goodly portion of the state, and one of these is the wholesale fruit and produce concern conducted under the name of Sweet & Lewis, of whom William T. Sweet of this notice is the senior member. Mr. Sweet belongs to one of the pioneer families of this region and is a man widely and favorably known all over Western Montana.

William T. Sweet was born at Boulder, Montana, on August 13, 1886, a son of William T. Sweet, Sr., whose story as a Montana pioneer is given above.

William T. Sweet, the younger, was educated in the public schools of Boulder, Montana, being graduated from its high school in 1903, following which event he began working for the Great Northern Railroad Company as stenographer at Havre, Montana, and held that position for a year, when he went to Great Falls, Montana, and held the same position with the same company for another year. In 1906 Mr. Sweet came to Butte and was employed by Ryan & Virden Company as cashier for ten years, rising to be secretary of the company. In 1916 Mr. Sweet went with the Jones Fruit Company as a salesman, and soon thereafter was advanced to be its manager, and held that position until January 1, 1919, when he assisted in organizing the firm of Sweet & Lewis. The warehouses and offices of the company are located at No. 726 South Arizona Street, and they do a wholesale business in fruits and produce, having already become the leading concern of their kind in Western Montana. The members of the firm are William T. Sweet, S. C. Sweet and F. C. Lewis.

Mr. Sweet is a democrat and an Episcopalian, like his estimable father, in whose footsteps he is proud to follow. He owns a ranch at Wilder, Montana, and maintains a summer residence there, his winter home being at No. 721½ Wyoming Street, Butte. One of the features of his ranch is its fine fish hatchery.

On September 19, 1909, Mr. Sweet was united in marriage at Boulder, Montana, to Miss Lula Thompson, a daughter of C. L. and Susan Thompson, the former of whom is deceased, having been in life a pioneer rancher and successful man of Boulder, Montana, where his widow still resides. Mrs. Sweet was graduated from the Jefferson County High School of Boulder. There are no children of this marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Sweet both belong to the Sons and Daughters of the Pioneers of Montana, and enjoy their association with this organization. Mr. Sweet is recognized as one of the alert, aggressive young business men of this region, and he and his associates in the firm of Sweet & Lewis are making commercial history in their conduct of this concern. All of them are experienced men in their line, and they have made no mistakes, but, being guided by their thorough knowledge of the possibilities and opportunities of their trade, have built up connections which are of the utmost value and which insure a continuance of the prosperity which has attended their efforts from the first. Not only is this success a personal gratification to the members of the firm, but it is a decided asset to the business life of Butte and a source of pride to its citizens.

J. F. LHOTKA, M. D. The great Galen boasted "I have done as much to medicine as Trajan did to the Roman Empire in making bridges and roads throughout Italy," thus emphasizing with the greatest then known marvels of accomplishment his own benefactions to humanity. And yet, in the light of modern medical science, how little Galen did and how radically incorrect, remarkable as they were, proved many of his conclusions. To the medical profession the early teachers will ever continue great, but a physician or surgeon of the present day whose professional knowledge is not vastly broader, higher and deeper, could not hope to compete with his fellow practitioners.

Dr. J. F. Lhotka, of Butte, holds prestige in the ranks of his profession by reason of superior natural ability, aided by a thorough training, wide experience, an acute comprehension of human nature and broad sympathy, and he is firmly established in the confidence of the people of his community. Although engaged in practice here only since 1914, Doctor Lhotka has shown himself such a thorough master of his calling that he has been able to build up an excellent professional business, while as a citizen he has shown himself ready to do more than his share in behalf of the public weal.

Doctor Lhotka was born in Lukavec, Bohemia, Europe, on May 20, 1884, a son of John Lhotka, born in Bohemia in 1834. John Lhotka was a victim of military oppression during the great war, and was a martyr to his convictions, being courtmartialed for being on the side of the Allies, and lost his life on November 20, 1917. He had had an honorable record as a soldier, having served as captain in the Austrian army during the war between Austria and Prussia in 1866, and also during the Franco-Prussian war in 1870-71. His life outside of his military service was spent in Bohemia, and he was in the employ of the Duke of Lichtenstein. His widow, who bore the maiden name of Barbara Jelinek, survives, and still makes her home in Lukavec, Bohemia, where she was born in 1839. She and her husband had the following children: Joseph, who is a priest of the Roman Catholic Church, stationed in South Africa; Rudolph, who died during the great war while in the service of the Allied armies; Karel, who also lost his life in the same service; Frank, who, serving in the Allied armies, also made the supreme sacrifice for what he believed was right; Doctor Lhotka; Mary and Annie, both of whom are residents of the United States; and Amelia, who is still in Bohemia.

Doctor Lhotka first attended the schools of his native city, following which he became a student of the Gymnasium at Tabor, Bohemia, and there completed his collegiate training. In 1902 he came to the United States and for the first two years he earned his living principally as a musician. He then returned to Bohemia and, entering the Bohemian University at Prague, took the regular medical course and was graduated therefrom in 1909 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. On account of his political opinions, which were contrary to those of the reigning house of Austria, he was compelled to flee, and chose the United States as a place of refuge. Upon his arrival in this country Doctor Lhotka made his way to Chicago, Illinois, and for a year was a teacher of Latin, Greek and other languages until 1910, when he matriculated in the medical department of the Valparaiso University at Valparaiso, Indiana, from which he was graduated in 1913. In the meanwhile, during 1912 and 1913, he was resident physician of Saint Margaret's Hospital at Hammond, Indiana. In 1913 he began the practice of medicine at Chicago, Illinois, and remained in that city a year, leaving there in 1914 for Butte, Montana, where he has since been engaged in a general medical and surgical practice. His offices are at Nos. 19 and 20 Owsley Block, and he maintains his residence in the same building.

Doctor Lhotka has never married. He is independent in his political views. High in Masonry, he belongs to Silver Bow Lodge No. 48, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Bagdad, Temple Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Butte; and Butte Consistory No. 2, in which he has been made a Thirty-second Degree Mason. He belongs to the Silver Bow Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society, the Cook County Illinois Neurological Society and the Society for the Study of Crime of Chicago, Illinois.

The success of Doctor Lhotka is not the result of any happy chance; luck has played no part in his advancement. At the beginning of his career he was compelled to meet and overcome obstacles few men meet with, but these, however, succumbed to his determination and indomitable persistence and the force of his ability well applied, and he may today take a pardonable degree of pride in the fact that he owes his present position and prosperity solely to his own industry and effort.

James Hugh Brown, president of the Mountaineer Welders Supply Company, is one of the aggressive young business men of Butte and a native son of the city, he having been born at No. 1011 South Wyoming Street on November 5, 1885. His father, James Brown, was one of the earliest settlers of Montana, and a man well known in the pioneer history of Butte. James Brown was born in Pennsylvania during 1837, and was reared in his native state, where he remained until he reached the age of eighteen years, but then went to Dubuque, Iowa, and for a time attended school in that city, completing the educational training he had begun in Pennsylvania.

After completing his schooldays, James Brown began working as a teamster for Hugh Kirkendall, a government supply contractor, during the war between the states, and Mr. Brown remained with him during this war. At the close of the war Mr. Brown went into Kansas and spent a year, but owing to a plague of grasshoppers was not successful in his farming operations which he had undertaken. In the meanwhile his former employer had come to Montana and was engaged in contracting and teaming, and he induced Mr. Brown to join him, and they did a big freighting business, running between Corinne, Utah, and Helena, Montana. Within two years Mr. Brown was taken into the business, the firm becoming Kirkendall & Brown, and it was maintained until 1893, with headquarters at Butte, Montana. Mr. Brown was also interested in handling grain, coal, fuel and wagons upon an extensive scale. He owned and operated one of the pioneer mercantile establishments at Butte, and assisted in building the Great Northern and Northern Pacific railroads, holding some very important contracts with them. His business interests kept on expanding and he included in his operations the freighting of ore from the various mines, among his routes being that from the Champion Mines to the mills located at Deer Lodge, Montana, and from the Clark properties out of Dillon, Montana. In short James Brown was one of the most effective and extensive builders of the prosperity of this part of Montana, and his firm controlled one of the largest freighting businesses in the whole northwest. As this part of the country became settled, however, Mr. Brown became dissatisfied, for he is essentially a pioneer, and so he went to Nome, Alaska, and is now largely interested in placer mining for gold. He is an independent republican, and was a candidate for sheriff of Silver Bow County during its early history.

James Brown was married to Ida Cooper, who is now living with her son, James Hugh Brown. She was born in Iowa in February, 1857, but was reared and educated in Missouri. Her father was born in Pennsylvania in 1822, and died at Memphis, Missouri, in 1890. He was a school teacher and went as a pioneer into Scotland County, Missouri, and was elected a judge of the District Court, serving for many years in that capacity, and at the same time he acquired extensive agricultural interests, becoming one of the most successful men of that region. He reared ten children, and among them were the following: O. G. Cooper, who died at Anaconda, Montana, in 1915, but was a resident of Great Falls, Montana, and had been one of the extensive sheep growers during the pioneer days of that industry in the state, and he also carried on a large teaming business between Fort Benton and Helena; Milton, who came to Montana with the second party who traversed the Bozeman trail into the state, settled at Choteau, and became an extensive sheep grower and freighter, but now resides at San Diego, California; Edward, who was also one of the pioneers of Montana, was associated with James Brown for a number of years as a solicitor of his many interests, and is now one of the prominent physicians and surgeons of Chicago, Illinois; Frank, who twenty years ago was one of the heaviest sheep growers in Montana, later lived at Glasgow, Montana, but is now retired and is a resident of San Diego, California; and Charles, who came as a pioneer into Montana and was associated with James Brown for a time, later going to Choteau, still later to Glasgow, having heavy sheep interests in the vicinity of both cities, but finally sold out and retired and is now making his home at Los Angeles, California. The Cooper family is credited with having a representative on the historic "Mayflower." The Browns, originally of Scotch-Irish stock, were founded in this country during Colonial days, settlement being first made in the New England Colonies.

James Brown and his wife had the following children born of their marriage; James Hugh, whose name heads this review; and Marie Hannah, who is an architect of unusual ability, and makes her home with her mother and brother.

After completing the courses of the common schools of Butte, James H. Brown entered its high school and remained until the close of the junior year, leaving school to serve an apprenticeship as a patternmaker at the Montana Iron Works of Butte, where he remained from 1903 until 1907. Following that Mr. Brown was occupied with carrying on a cement contracting business from 1907 until 1912, and during that period was in charge of the Chicago, Milwaukee & Saint Paul Railroad's cement work, and constructed the large culverts and the tunnel known as the Pipe Stone tunnel, twelve miles south of Butte. He was the first superintendent of the Montana Concrete Company at Logan, and also had charge of the cement construction work of the Three Forks Portland Cement Company's plant at Trident, Montana, for seven months. In 1912 Mr. Brown became assistant engineer at the plant of the Butte-Duluth Mining Company east of Butte, and was promoted to plant manager, remaining in that position until the mine went into the hands of a receiver on March 16, 1915, and he was then made custodian of the property, with Charles Everett as receiver, and Mr. Brown was occupied with these duties until in May, 1916, when he went to Alaska and was associated with his father during that summer. He returned to Butte in the spring of 1917 and bought the welding department of the Mountaineer Welding Company and organized the Butte Welding Company, which he sold in 1918, and in February of that year bought an interest in the Mountaineer Welders Supply Company, of which he is now president and manager of the sales department, his associates in the business being W. E. Curry, who is vice president and general manager, and H. L. Winchester, who is secretary and treasurer.

The plant and offices of this company are at No. 408 South Main Street, Butte. The company was incorporated in 1914, and its business is now confined to the manufacture of oxygen and hydrogen gasses, it being the only plant in Montana producing them, and the handling of oxy-acetylene welding and cutting apparatus and all welders' supplies, it being the supply station for the welders of Butte and its vicinity. This plant is thoroughly equipped with the modern machinery necessary for a successful conduct of the business, and represents an expenditure of $33,000. The gasses are forced into cylinders at a pressure of 1,800 pounds to the square inch, and these cylinders are shipped to all parts of Montana and into neighboring states.

Mr. Brown is not married, his mother and sister living with him in his modern residence at No. 1011 South Wyoming Street, Butte. In his political convictions he is a republican. He belongs to the Presbyterian Church. Although the son of a rich man, Mr. Brown has made his own way, and his prosperity is the result of individual efforts directed by a superior intelligence. He is a practical man who understands his business and attends to it personally. Too energetic to be willing to delegate his responsibilities to others, he so arranges his affairs as to be able to handle the problems presented to him promptly and efficiently, and, under his capable care, his department is showing very gratifying advances with each season. As a citizen Mr. Brown can always be depended upon to do his full duty by his community, which has a special claim upon him as it is also his birthplace, and he is living up to the standards of business achievement raised by his father and uncles, whose prosperity is recorded in the annals of pioneer Montana.

Leslie R. Margetts. The men who are prominent in promoting the industrial prosperity of Montana and in advancing the mining interests of Butte are invariably men of much ability and strength of character and in the front rank of that class stands Leslie R. Margetts, who is actively associated with the operations of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company as superintendent of the Washoe Sampler, a position which he is ably filling. A son of Philip Margetts, Jr., he was born October 31, 1881, in Salt Lake City, Utah, of English ancestry. His grandfather, Philip Margetts, Sr., was born and reared in England, and there married a Miss Bateman. Soon after that important event he immigrated to the United States, settling as a merchant in Salt Lake City, where both he and his wife spent their remaining days, his death occurring in 1913, at the age of four score years.

Philip Margetts, Jr., a native of Utah, has spent the greater part of his life in that state, although he is at the present writing a resident of Preston, Idaho. He married Henrietta Richards, a life-long resident of Salt Lake City, her birth occurring there in 1855, and her death in 1909. Four children were born of their marriage, as follows: Henry, who died at the age of nineteen years; May, wife of Harry Ostler, a candy manufacturer of Salt Lake City; Nelson E., a colonel in the United States Army; and Leslie R., of whom we write.

Colonel Nelson E. Margetts served in the World's war, having on account of his knowledge of the French language been appointed as an aid to General Pershing. For a year and a half he was with the French Army as military observer, and was afterward sent back to the United States to organize a regiment of field artillery, which he took to France and was on the way to the trenches when the armistice was signed. Colonel Margetts, who has seen service on the Mexican border as well as in France, is now in charge of the Army of Occupation at Coblentz on the Rhine.

Leslie R. Margetts was educated in Salt Lake City, attending the grade and high schools, and at the age of twenty-one years being graduated from its business college. Beginning work as a stenographer, he was in the employ of the Utah Consolidated Mining Company until 1903, when he came to Butte, Montana. Immediately accepting a position as clerk with Taylor & Brunton, a firm which was operating a sampler which has since been taken over by the Anaconda Copper Mining Company and is known as the Washoe Sampler, Mr. Margetts has continued with the company until the present time. Proving himself capable and highly efficient, he has received several well merited promotions, and is now superintendent of the plant, which, with its offices, is between the tracks of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad and the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad, a most favorable location, it being on South Montana Street. He has thirty-five employes under his supervision and is performing the duties of his responsible position with ability and fidelity.

Mr. Margetts married in 1912, in Butte, Miss Anne Boone, who was educated at a seminary for girls in Grand Rapids, Michigan. Her father, Charles Boone, a retired railroad man, lives in Grand Rapids, but her mother, whose maiden name was Jane Geaves, died at a comparatively early age. Mr. and Mrs. Margetts have no children. Politically Mr. Margetts is independent, voting for what he deems the best men and measures. He belongs to the Butte Chamber of Commerce, and is a member of the Silver Bow Club. His home, a modernly built residence at 1040 West Platinum Street, is a center of social activity.

Edward F. O'Flynn. Bringing to the practice of his profession great zeal, a well-trained mind, and the habits of industry characteristic of his Irish ancestors, Edward F. O'Flynn occupies a noteworthy position among the successful attorneys of Butte, where in partnership with his brother James, he has built up a substantial and lucrative patronage. He was born May 9, 1886, in Saratoga, New York, a son of P. H. O'Flynn.

Born in County Waterford, Ireland, in 1859, P. H. O'Flynn remained in his native country until after reaching man's estate. Coming to the United States in 1881, he spent a short time in New York City, from there going to Saratoga, New York, which was his home for a few years. Migrating with his family to Laramie, Wyoming, in 1886, he followed the trade of a blacksmith in that vicinity for eight years. Coming to Butte, Montana, in 1894, he has since been engaged in mining, being in the employ of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company.

JACOB SCHMIDT

MRS. MARGARET SCHMIDT

He is an uncompromising democrat in politics, and a faithful member of the Roman Catholic Church. He married in New York State, Mary Ellen Baldwin, a native of Tramore, County Waterford, Ireland, and into their household five children have been born, as follows: Edward F., the special subject of this brief personal narrative; James, of Butte, in partnership with his brother Edward; Mary, wife of E. B. McLaughlin, of Seattle, Washington, feature writer for the "Seattle Times"; Patricia, librarian at the Public Library of Seattle, Washington; and Margaret, a student in the Central High School of Butte.

Gleaning his preliminary knowledge of books in the parochial schools of Butte, Edward F. O'Flynn completed the course of study in the local high school, after which he worked for two years in a store of general merchandise. Entering then the University of Notre Dame, at Notre Dame, Indiana, he was graduated there in 1907 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. The following year he continued in the law department of the same university, after which he read law for a year in the office of Anderson, Parker & Crabill in South Bend, Indiana. Being admitted to the bar in 1909, Mr. O'Flynn opened an office in Butte, and has since here established a general civil and criminal law practice, and has gained by reason of his professional knowledge and skill a place of prominence in the legal world. He is attorney for the Montana Power Company, and in addition to also representing the Mueller estates has an extensive probate practice, his offices being on the third floor of the Hirbour Building.

An active and influential member of the democratic party, Mr. O'Flynn represented Silver Bow County in the twelfth session of the Montana Legislature, and served on various committees of importance, having been chairman of the insurance committee and a member of the judiciary and educational committees. He introduced the bill, which became a law, stabilizing the insurance business of the state of Montana, and was father of the bill regulating the rate of interest for Montana, thus preventing usury. Possessing unquestioned business ability and judgment, Mr. O'Flynn has acquired valuable mining interests, and owns not only a fine residence at 414 South Washington Street, Butte, but has title to a farm of 200 acres near Portland, Oregon. Religiously he is a member of the Roman Catholic Church and socially he belongs to the Silver Bow Club of Butte and to the Butte Country Club. Fraternally he is a member of Butte Council, No. 668, Knights of Columbus, being a third degree Knight.

At Indianapolis, Indiana, in 1910, Mr. O'Flynn was united in marriage with Miss Elsa Habing, a daughter of B. G. Habing, a prominent business man of Indianapolis, being associated with the mercantile agency of that city. His wife, Elizabeth (Brummall) Habing, died in 1911. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. O'Flynn four children have been born, namely: Mary Edna, born April 6, 1911; Elsie Marie, born January 16, 1915; Edward F., Jr., born March 6, 1917; and Patrick, born December 29, 1919.

JOHN W. KERR is one of the leading ranchers of Teton County and has been a resident of Montana and one of its progressive citizens over a quarter of a century.

He was born in New York State February 2, 1860, fifth among the twelve children, eight of whom are still living, born to H. W. and Mary (Willis) Kerr. His father was a native of Scotland and died in 1916, at the age of eighty-three. The widowed mother passed away at the age of eighty. H. W. Kerr was a carpenter by trade. From New York State he moved with his family to Owen Sound, Canada, and lived there the rest of his life.

John W. Kerr acquired his education in the public schools of Owen Sound and earned his first money there driving a butcher's cart. In 1884, at the age of fifteen, he went to Winnipeg, Manitoba, clerked in a grocery store about four years, and then found employment during the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Rat Portage in Western Canada. After some other experiences in the western provinces Mr. Kerr came to Montana in 1892. For several years he rode the range as a cowboy with the S. T. Cattle Company, when that business was owned by the firm of Sands & Taylor. Gradually he accumulated the capital necessary for ranching on his own account, and his progressive endeavors have given him a fine holding in Teton County near Farmington. He owns 1,280 acres, all of it irrigated land, with a fine home and every convenience and facility for modern stock raising. Mr. Kerr still has a large number of horses and has been breeding horses for a number of years. On account of the widespread drought in Montana during 1919 he sold in March of that year 600 head of promising cattle for $90 apiece.

Mr. Kerr is affiliated with Choteau Lodge No. 44, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Choteau Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, is a member of the Shrine, Algeria Temple of Helena, and he and his wife are both members of the Eastern Star. Politically he is a democrat.

April 19, 1897, Mr. Kerr married Miss Jennie Schmidt. She was born near Ford Creek, Montana, and is a daughter of the late Jacob Schmidt, whose career as a Montana pioneer is recounted in the following sketch.

JACOB SCHMIDT, who died in 1907, was one of the earliest of Montana pioneers and was intimately associated with many of the historic characters in the settlement of the territory and state.

He was born near Heidelberg, Germany, August 8, 1832, and acquired a limited education, attending a factory school in his home community for two hours a day. He served a four years' apprenticeship at the tailor's trade, and worked his way across the Atlantic, reaching New York City in 1853. A few weeks later he was at St. Louis, and there he embarked on a steamboat en route for Fort Benton, then one of the few scattered outposts in the great Northwest country, which as yet hardly had a name except the vague description of "the Oregon country." Neither the territory of Idaho nor of Montana had yet been created. He reached Fort Benton in the spring of 1854. He was probably the pioneer tailor in Montana, and was employed by James Dawson until 1863. In that year he located at Deer Lodge and in the spring of 1864 opened a grocery store at Silver City in Lewis and Clark County. The county seat of Lewis and Clark County had its official home in his store. This was due to the fact that the late Col. W. F. Sanders as the chief official of the county carried the county seat around with him, and deposited the few books of record in Mr. Schmidt's establishment. In 1865 Mr. Schmidt removed to Helena and increased his store by the addition of a bakery. A year later he built the Overland Hotel at Fort Benton, then returned to Silver City, and in 1867 was at Old Mission near the present location of the Ulm station on the Great Northern Railway. For two years he engaged in the stock business there, and from 1869 until 1874 he had his ranch at St. Peter's Mission, twelve miles from Cascade. His next home was at Haystack Butte upon the south fork of the Sun River. Jacob Schmidt laid the foundation of his prosperity as a merchant, but his larger accumulations were through his enterprise as a farmer and cattleman. He acquired extensive ranching and property interest at Choteau in Teton County, and with his patented lands and leases was for a number of years one of the dominant factors in that locality.

He was the esteemed friend of many prominent pioneers and made his own influence and example an element in the establishment of law and order in the early territory. He was a democrat in politics and affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and at one time was a member of the Grand Lodge of that order.

At Fort Benton on December 25, 1856, Jacob Schmidt and Miss Margaret Miller were married by Father Joseph. This was one of the earliest marriages recorded in the Montana country. Margaret Miller was a daughter of Jack Miller, a widely known pioneer of the West. Mrs. Margaret Schmidt died in 1917, and at that time was one of the oldest women pioneers of Montana. To their marriage were born twelve children, four of whom are still living: Julia, wife of Thomas Harris; Carroll, who married Clara Huntesberger; George, who married Rose Uphman; and Mrs. John W. Kerr.

Soren Nelson. Standing prominent among the representative citizens of Butte is Soren Nelson, president and general manager of the Motor & Tire Sales Company, Incorporated, who began life on his own account with less than two dollars in his pockets, and has since by persevering industry, keen foresight and wise investments accumulated a handsome property and gained a position of influence in the business life of the city. A native of Iowa, he was born, May 15, 1885, in Clinton, where the birth of his father, Thomas Christian Nelson, occurred in 1838.

When he was a boy of four years the parents of Thomas Christian Nelson went to Denmark, locating in Aalborg in 1843, where he grew to man's estate and was educated. Returning in 1861 to Clinton, Iowa, he married, and was afterward engaged in general farming for upwards of a quarter of a century. Going back to Denmark in 1887 he continued his residence in Aalborg until his death in 1910. Active and prominent in civic and political affairs, he served as sheriff of Clinton County, being elected to the office on the democratic ticket, which he invariably supported. He served as a soldier in the war between Denmark and Prussia. He was a member of the Danish Lutheran Church, and belonged to both the Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons and to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Thomas Christian Nelson married in Clinton, Iowa, Ingar Marie Matson, who was born at Colling, Denmark, in 1846, and now resides in Aalborg, that country. Ten children blessed their union, as follows: Ingar Marie, wife of Jens Christian Jensen, a contractor and builder in Nurre Sundby, Denmark; Nels Peter, a farmer in the same town; Nels Christian, also of Nurre Sundby, is a contractor and farmer; Jens, a general contractor of Seattle, Washington; Maran Johanna, living in Denmark; Soren, the special subject of this sketch; Christina, residing in Denmark; Afrad Cilius, of Denmark, a noted artist and musician; Nels, of Denmark, general manager of the large estate of Count Schimmelmen; and Arthur Henry, a very brilliant young man, living in Denmark, where he has the general management of the Government Experimental Agricultural Station.

Educated in Denmark, Soren Nelson was graduated from the Aalborg High School in 1902, and subsequently traveled with his father throughout Europe, more especially visiting the important cities of Germany, France and Italy, where his father sold high-bred, full-blooded stallions that he imported from England and Belgium. Coming to the United States in 1904, Mr. Nelson was engaged in tilling the soil in Clinton, Iowa, for a year, and having in that time become familiar with the English language studied for three years under private tutors, completing his early education. For two summers thereafter he traveled in the interests of the International Correspondence School of Scranton, Pennsylvania, through Iowa, Minnesota and North Dakota, during the winter seasons being associated with the wholesale drug trade. Mr. Nelson traveled all over South America and the Southern Pacific Islands, making his living by trading. Coming to Butte, Montana, in 1914, he became a clerk for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and after several promotions was made overseer of the top work at the mines.

On June 2, 1917, having previously resigned his position, Mr. Nelson enlisted as a private in the Montana Administration Corps, and was sent to Camp Dodge, Iowa. Proving himself faithful to the duties there imposed upon him, he was promoted through the different grades until made first lieutenant, and was recommended for captaincy, but the armistice was signed before he received his captain's commission. Mustered out of service December 9, 1918, he returned to Butte, and subsequently organized the Motor & Tire Sales Company, which was incorporated February 15, 1919. He served as secretary and treasurer of the company until August 15, 1919, when he was elected president and general manager of the concern. This company, with garage and offices at 123 South Montana Street, is carrying on a general garage business, specializing in the Goodyear tires, and has the state agency for the Kissel trucks and motoring cars. This enterprising firm, of which Soren Nelson, the subject of this sketch, is the president, general manager and controlling stockholder, with E. H. Nelson as vice president, secretary and treasurer, has already built up one of the foremost industries of the kind of western Montana, and in the tire end of the business the largest in the entire state.

A man of great business intelligence and capacity, Mr. Nelson is identified with various local enterprises. He leases the Stevens Block, at the corner of Park and Montana Streets, a large business block; the Dorothy Block, at the corner of Granite and Wyoming Streets, one of the largest apartment buildings in the city; and the Mueller Hotel, at 1002 South Montana Street, where he resides; and he owns all of the furnishings in these different buildings. In his political relations Mr. Nelson is a democrat, and religiously, true to the faith in which he reared, he is a member of the Danish Lutheran Church.

On November 26, 1917, Mr. Nelson married in Helena, Montana, Mrs. Elizabeth (Hilker) Paxson, daughter of Charles and Katherine (Swanson Hilker, and a graduate of the State Normal School at Racine, Wisconsin. Her father, a brick manufacturer, is dead, and her widowed mother resides in Butte. Mr. Nelson has a stepdaughter, Margaret Paxson, born in June, 1906, a freshman in the Butte High School and an especially brilliant scholar.

S. Nelson.

RICHARD P. HOENCK. Much has been said in these days of the necessity for backing in order that a man succeed along any line. It is claimed by some that unless a man has wealth or influence he cannot hope to climb far up the ladder of fortune, and yet many who have gained the topmost rung were those who from early childhood were forced to grapple unaided with life's problems, and mounted through sheer tenacity of purpose and native ability. To such men as these, commonly denominated self-made, much credit is due, for beginning at the bottom, each was but one in the throng crowding about the ascent, and their progress from the first had to be one of constant endeavor. Of course these men had to possess more than average ability, and the willingness to work and learn. Early discovering their real bent in life, they developed themselves to meet emergencies, and when the right opportunity came, proved to be men for the work. Decidedly belonging to this class is Richard P. Hoenck, exceedingly active in the furrier business of Butte.

Richard P. Hoenck was born at St. Paul, Minnesota, on October 27, 1885, a son of Edward Hoenck, born in Germany in 1845. After receiving a university education in Germany and Denmark, Edward Hoenck came to the United States in young manhood, and in the early '70s established himself as a civil engineer at St. Paul, Minnesota, where he spent the remainder of his life, although he died at San Francisco, California, in 1910, while on a visit. After he secured his citizenship papers he became a republican, and continued to vote the ticket of that party as long as he lived. Like other Germans, he gave the required period of service in the army and took part in the Franco-Prussian war, immediately after its close coming to the United States.

Richard P. Hoenck was reared at Saint Paul, where he attended the public schools until he completed the grammar grades, which was when he was fifteen years of age. He then began learning the fur trade and after serving his apprenticeship with a St. Paul furrier he went to Fargo, North Dakota, and became a designer for his brother, who was a member of the firm of Joseph & Hoenck, furriers. Leaving this concern in 1915, Mr. Hoenck came to Butte and worked for a Mr. Rauh, who owned the only furrier business at No. 206 North Main Street, and on January 8, 1917, Mr. Hoenck bought the business. This was the pioneer furrier establishment of Butte, and Mr. Hoenck is now the sole owner of it. It is also one of the oldest concerns of its kind in the state, but since taking charge of it Mr. Hoenck has so expanded its volume that it is now the largest in Montana. Mr. Hoenck specializes in the manufacture of fur garments, robes, neckwear, mitts, men's beaver coats, fur rugs and in fact everything that is made from fur. Some idea of the expansion of the business may be had from the fact that when Mr. Hoenck bought it only two to three men were employed as assistants, while now at least fifteen are required during the busy season. In the near future Mr. Hoenck expects to cover not only Montana with his salesmen, as he is now doing, but also Wyoming and Idaho. Some of his trade comes from Alaska, his fame as a furrier having reached out that and people desiring expert work on their furs send to him.

Mr. Hoenck is married. He resides in the Goldberg Block at the corner of North Dakota and West Park streets. Fraternally he belongs to Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and socially he is a member of the Rotary Club. His inclinations have not led him into public life, in fact he has no liking for publicity of any kind, but in his energetic, business way, has accomplished more than many whose names are brought into notice. He is generous in his support of worthy movements and causes, and ready to lend aid to advance the welfare and promote the prosperity of his city and state.

JOHN K. CLAXTON has successfully established himself in the practice of law at Butte, coming to this city and state from Kentucky, where his family has lived for several generations and where he earned his first honors as a lawyer.

Mr. Claxton was born at Louisville June 25, 1888. His paternal ancestors were English and colonial settlers in Virginia. His grandfather, David Harrison Claxton, was born at Carrollton, Kentucky, in 1821, and spent most of his life at Louisville, where he died in 1904. For many years he operated a fleet of boats towing and transporting lumber and ties from the upper waters of the Ohio Valley to Louisville and Memphis. He served as a Confederate in the Civil War. He married Bettie Roar, who was born at Covington, Kentucky, in 1836, and died at Louisville in 1910. All of their children are now deceased.

The father of the Butte lawyer was John Nicholas Claxton, who was born in 1859 and died in 1906, spending all his life in Louisville. He was for some years extensively engaged in business as a railroad tie contractor. He was a democrat, an active supporter of the Methodist Church, and a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason and Shriner. He married Lydia Claxton, of the same family name but not related. She was born at Bethlehem, Kentucky, in 1866, and is now living at Pleasureville, a suburb of Louisville.

John K. Claxton, the only child of his parents, was educated in the Louisville public schools, graduating from high school in 1905. He then spent four years in the old State College at Lexington, graduating with the A. B. degree in 1909. He is a member of the Tau Theta Kappa college fraternity. With his literary studies he also combined a course in law and was admitted to the Kentucky bar November 15, 1910. After that he practiced steadily at Louisville until 1917, and in January, 1918, began his professional career at Butte, where he has offices in the Hennessy Building and has a large general and criminal practice. Mr. Claxton is secretary and general counsel for the Butte-Louisiana Oil Company and is treasurer of the Butte Copper Czar Mining Company.

He is a member of the Montana State Bar Association, the Silver Bow Club, Butte Country Club, is a democrat, a Methodist, and affiliated with Lodge No. 410, Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, at Pleasureville, Kentucky, and Lodge No. 240 of the Elks. He resides in the Mueller Apartments at 501 Granite Street.

September 9, 1919, at Seattle, Mr. Claxton married Miss Margaret Driscoll, daughter of Dennis and Mary (Taft) Driscoll. Her mother resides at 1118 Fifteenth Avenue, North, in Seattle. Her father, who died at Butte, was one of the early pioneers of Montana, locating in the vicinity of Butte about 1865. He was a mine operator, and also established the first store at Walkerville, a suburb of Butte. Mrs. Claxton is a highly educated woman, being a graduate of Georgetown College at Washington, District of Columbia, with the A. B. degree. She is a member of the Sons and Daughters of the Montana Pioneers Association.

CLAUDE CHARLES HUYCK. Energetic, enterprising and progressive, Claude Charles Huyck, of Butte, has won a noteworthy position among the substantial business men of his community, being one of the leading automobile dealers of western Montana. A son of Charles Edward Huyck, he was born December 13, 1886, in Santa Cruz, California, and is of honored Dutch descent, the founder of the Huyck family of America having immigrated from Holland to the United States in early colonial days, settling in New York State. His grandfather, John Huyck, born in 1830, was engaged in agricultural pursuits during his active career. As a young man he lived in New Jersey, and was there married. Subsequently moving to Alabama, he bought a large plantation, which he managed successfully many years. Retiring from active labor, he lived with his son Charles in both Florida and New York, spending his last years, however, with a daughter in Kansas.

Born in 1857, in Elizabeth, New Jersey, Charles Edward Huyck was there bred and educated. On attaining his majority he joined in the pioneer rush to the newly opened mines of Leadville, Colorado, where he was soon employed as pumpman at the Silver Star Mine. While there he married, and about 1883 removed to Santa Cruz, California, where he became a builder and contractor. Going from there to Mobile, Alabama, he continued there in the same business for eighteen months, and was afterward similarly employed for another eighteen months in Sanford, Florida. Continuing his residence in that state, he resided a short time in Saint Petersburg, and then went to Jacksonville, arriving in that city the very day it was destroyed by fire, a calamity that furnished him with plenty of work, as he took an active part in its upbuilding. Going to New York State in 1901, he followed his trade at Sea Cliff, Long Island, and was also hotel proprietor until the fall of 1916, when he went to Washington, District of Columbia, to put up buildings for the United States government. In January, 1919, he returned to California, locating at Long Beach, where he is still actively working at his trade of a contractor and builder, his services being in great demand.

Charles E. Huyck married in Leadville, Colorado, Lelia Youngs, who was born in New Jersey in 1859, and they have two children, Claude Charles, the special subject of this sketch, and Orpha, wife of Harry Hall, who is with the Standard Oil Company at Long Beach, California. Politically the father is a stanch republican, and religiously he and his wife are active members of the Baptist Church.

Obtaining the rudiments of his education in the public schools of Santa Cruz, California, Claude C. Huyck continued his studies in the schools of Alabama, Florida and New York, completing his early education at Sea Cliff, Long Island. Leaving school at the age of eighteen years, he worked at the trade of a carpenter with his father, and also learned cabinet making, making excellent use of his native mechanical talent and genius. Mr. Huyck devoted much of his time for awhile in working on gasoline boats, but turned his attention to automobiles when they made their advent, and in 1907 owned his first car, a one-cylinder Cadillac. He subsequently spent two years in Florida, and in the spring of 1910 came to Butte, Montana, where he followed his trade of a carpenter until June, 1917, when he became an automobile salesman, working first for the Silver Bow Motor Company, and later for the Butte Automobile Company.

On September 20, 1918, Mr. Huyck organized the Butte Second Hand Automobile Company, which he has handled most successfully, and on January 1, 1920, organized the Cleveland Motor Cars Company, himself and wife constituting the company. This wide-awake firm, with offices, display rooms and service station at Nos. 43-45 East Galena Street, handles both the Cleveland and Chandler automobiles, and is doing a lively business. Mrs. Huyck, who is a high school graduate, and has received a thorough commercial education, is accountant for the firm, and attends to the advertising and bookkeeping and all inside work, while Mr. Huyck does all of the buying and selling, his territory covering Silver Bow, Beaverhead, Madison and Jefferson counties.

Mr. Huyck married in August, 1911, at Dillon, Montana, Miss Mabel Laura Caldwell, a daughter of Frank and Hannah (Thomas) Caldwell, of Dillon, her father, a retired farmer, being owner of a large farm in Post Oak, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Huyck have two children, Mabel Scotta and Claud Caldwell. Mr. Huyck is a straightforward republican in politics, but has never been an office seeker. He owns an attractive, modernly-built resident at 1232 West Granite Street, and within its hospitable walls he and his wife gladly welcome their many friends.

C. C. Covington. Both the Town of Augusta and Lewis and Clark County owe C. C. Covington a heavy debt because of his efforts in their behalf, and it is safe to say that in all future movements looking to a betterment of existing conditions he will be found in the front of the effective workers. By profession he is a civil engineer, and he has used his skill and ability in behalf of this region, as well as his intelligence and public spirit. Mr. Covington comes of two old American families. On the paternal side his family came from England to Georgia in Colonial times, while on the maternal side there was a representative on the historic Mayflower.

C. C. Covington was born at Beaver City, Utah, on February 23, 1869, a son of C. C. Covington, Sr., who was born at Rockingham, North Carolina, in 1832, and died at Farmington, Utah, in 1914. Reared at Rockingham, he naturally espoused the cause of the South in the war between the two sections, and enlisted in the Confederate army in 1861 and served under General Price. With the close of the war he, like so many others of southern sympathies, felt that things were in too chaotic a condition for him to settle down in his old home and so in 1865 he went west to California and from there to Southern Utah, where he was married, and located at Beaver City. From then until 1880 he was actively engaged in ranching and handling cattle. In the latter year he went to Stewartville, DeKalb County, Missouri, where with the assistance of his namesake son he was engaged in farming, but sold his property after a few years and returned to Utah and lived in retirement at Farmington until his death. In politics he was a democrat.

The maiden name of the wife of C. C. Covington, Sr., was Ellen Perkins, and she survives her husband, making her home at Stewartville, Missouri. Their children were as follows: Sarah, who married Richard Morton, now deceased; C. C., Jr., whose name heads this review; Thomas A., who is a contractor and builder of Oakland, California; Caroline A., who married C. B. Christian, lives at Augusta, Montana; Laurer, who served in the railroad corps during the World war, was overseas for eighteen months, and in the front line trenches, but, having returned home, is now engaged in railroading at Oakland, California; and George Edmund, residing at Augusta, Montana.

C. C. Covington, Jr., attended the private schools of Beaver City, Utah, and the Beaver City Academy, the public schools of DeKalb County, and completed his educational training in the University of Missouri at Columbia, Missouri. Until he was twenty years old Mr. Covington assisted his father in agricultural labor, and he was engaged in teaching school in DeKalb County for a period of six years. In 1896 he came to Montana to locate permanently, although he had spent the summer of 1891 in the state and then returned to DeKalb County for the ensuing five years. Upon locating at Augusta Mr. Covington was the first educator of the place, and was here engaged in teaching for five years, and during all of this period was becoming acquainted with the people and conditions. In 1898 he was appointed United States commissioner, and as the duties of that office increased, in 1901 he eft the schoolroom and embarked in a real-estate usiness, and was elected a justice of the peace. He lso became a notary public and was the only one f Augusta. In 1912 he resigned his office of United States commissioner, as in the meanwhile, in 1910, h had become elected commissioner of Lewis and Clark County, taking office in January, 1911, and holding it for six years. During the last four years in this office Mr. Covington was chairman of the board. While he was on the board he inaugurated and saw carried out some of the most far-sighted policies with reference to obtaining for this region suitable good roads, with the result that the county has s good highways as any similar section in the state and the people of Lewis and Clark have him to thank for them.

In 917 Mr. Covington went on his ranch eight miles outh of Augusta, which he still owns and on which e raises hay, grain and stock. Mr. Covington also ons a residence on Main Street, in which he has his offices. For some years he has devoted himself to working at his profession of civil engineering, hiring his ranching done by others. The greater part of he construction work in this part of the county has been done by him. In politics Mr. Covington is a democrat. He belongs to Augusta Lodge No. 54, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is past master; to Dearborn Lodge No. 21, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is past grand; Augusta Camp No. 221, Woodmen of the World; and Augusta Camp No. 6136, Modern Woodmen of America.

On April 6, 1900, Mr. Covington was married at Choteau, Montana, to Miss Minerva Carter, and they became the parents of two children, namely: Marian, who was born July 26, 1901, was graduated from the Augusta High School as a member of the first graduating class, and she is now teaching in District No. which is a large consolidated district; and Cl who was born on November 29, 1910.

Mr. Covington has been chairman of the school board of Augusta since 1901 and has been instrumental in building up the school system from a little one-room school house to a large consolidated district containing fteen schools and a four-year course high school. A $50,000 high school building is soon to be constructed at Augusta, and in this project, as in all the other work of this class at Augusta and the unty, Mr. Covington has been the prime mover.

During the War war he and Mrs. Covington took a very effective part in all of the local drives and in Red Cross w , exerting themselves to the limit to aid the administration in carrying out its policies.

Mrs. Covington's f r, Edwin Carter, is now a resident of Letcher, th Dakota. He was born in the State of New rk in 1835, a son of Asa Carter, also a native of New York, who died near Streator, Illinois. Asa Carter was a farmer in his native state, but in 1853 he located in Illinois and became a pioneer farmer near Streator. He married Hannah Bramer, whose mother's maiden name was Paris, and both were born in New York State. Mrs. Hannah Carter died near Streator, Illinois.

Edwin Carter was reared on his father's farm near Streator, Illinois, and was quite extensively engaged there in farming, remaining in that vicinity until 1874, when he moved to Iowa County, Iowa, where he continued farming. In 1901 he went to Sanborn County, South Dakota, and bought a farm in the vicinity of Mitchell. Although he has retired from his farm, he continues to live in Sanborn County, as Letcher is located within its confines. Although a strong republican, Mr. Carter voted for Woodrow Wilson for the presidency. He is a member of the Christian Church.

The first wife of Edwin Carter was Sarah Frances Turner, whom he married while living near Streator, Illinois, and she died there, having borne him the following children: Milton, now deceased; Adelaide, who married Benjamin F. Norris, a retired minister of the Christian denomination, and they live near Arlington, South Dakota; Esther Maria, who married Wallace W. Moore, a farmer of North English, Iowa; Hannah Theressa, who married Edgar B. Sears, a successful farmer and stockman, formerly a pioneer of Montana, but now living at Garden City, Kansas; Asa Joseph, who is a farmer of North English, Iowa; and Cynthia, who is deceased.

As his second wife Edwin Carter was married to Elizabeth Abigail Norris, who was born in December, 1853, in Canada, and educated in Michigan, her parents having moved to that state in 1862. By his second marriage Mr. Carter had the following children: Mrs. Covington, who was the eldest born; Bertha, who married Tillman Hathaway, a farmer of Letcher, South Dakota; Jerome, who lives at Omaha, Nebraska, is a violin maker; Grace, who married Arthur Wertz, a farmer, resides at Bancroft, South Dakota; Edwin, who is a farmer of Letcher, South Dakota; Fred, who is also a farmer of Letcher, South Dakota; Frank, who is a veteran of the World war, served overseas as a member of the aviation branch of the service for eighteen months, is now engaged in farming at Letcher, South Dakota; and Mark, also a farmer near Letcher, South Dakota.

Mrs. Covington was born in Iowa County, Iowa, and was educated in its public schools and the Iowa City Academy, from which she was graduated in 1895. For the subsequent two years she taught school in Iowa, and then in 1897 she came to Montana, and for two years was a teacher in the Augusta school, and for one year at Cascade, Montana, when she was married.

In politics Mrs. Covington is a democrat, and recognition of her services to the region was shown in her appointment on March 18, 1912, as United States commissioner, which office she still holds. Both Mr. and Mrs. Covington are rightly numbered among the most worthy and representative people of the county. They have made their value felt in many instances, and can always be depended upon to contribute freely to all of the practical civic undertakings of their community, but are not apt to be carried away by those which will not guarantee excellent returns to the taxpayers, and permanent improvements of this locality.

CHARLES D. McABOY. While his youth was spent largely on his father's extensive stock ranch in the State of Washington, Charles D. McAboy was not inclined toward agriculture or livestock husbandry, and as a youth began an apprenticeship at the plumbing trade. His experience and thirst for knowledge in his special line have since carried him to practically every state in the Union. For the past eight years he has been a resident of Butte, and is now proprietor of a plumbing and heating business of large and prosperous proportions.

Mr. McAboy was born at Alexandria, Minnesota, August 29, 1885. His paternal ancestors were Scotch and were colonial settlers in Virginia. His grandfather, William McAboy, was born in West Virginia and spent many years as a merchant in Ohio, and finally moved out to Alexandria, Minnesota, where he died before the birth of his grandson Charles. The father, Edgar McAboy, was born in Ohio in 1843, was reared in that state, and about 1867 moved to Alexandria, Minnesota. He was one of the very early settlers in that section of Minnesota, and after his marriage he developed a large tract of land as a farm. In 1897 he left Minnesota and went to Seattle, Washington, buying a stock ranch forty miles from that city. He gave his personal supervision to his stock interests there for twenty years, but since 1917 has lived retired in the city of Seattle. Since early youth Edgar McAboy has been a very devout Presbyterian and regular worker in that church. He is independent in politics. His wife was Lucinda Strang, who was born in the territory of Minnesota in 1854, her people having pioneered in the northwest. To this marriage were born six children: William E., born in 1877, a rancher at Medford, Oregon; Jessie, born in 1879, is the wife of Henry Schaefer, who has a brick manufacturing business at Seattle but lives at Snohomish in that state; Frank, born in 1883, was an auditor and accountant and died at Missoula, Montana, in 1915, at the age of thirty-two; Charles D. is the fourth in the family; Robert, born in 1890, was a plumber and died at Butte at the age of twenty-six; Paul, born in 1895, is a stationary engineer living at Snohomish, Washington.

Charles D. McAboy attended the district schools of King County, Washington, and remained on his father's ranch to the age of thirteen. After that he spent several years as an apprentice plumber in Seattle, and remained there as a journeyman until 1903. Partly to satisfy his desire for travel, but more particularly to gain a complete knowledge of all the systems and customs of the plumbing business in different sections, he worked as a journeyman in every state of the Union, and during that time assisted in the installation of many large and important contracts. After this varied and interesting program Mr. McAboy came to Montana in 1912, locating in Butte, and continued work as a journeyman until May 1, 1918. At that date he acquired from William Killeen the Plumbing Union Plumbing and Heating Shop, and is now sole owner of that establishment, located at 117 East Broadway. An expert himself, Mr. McAboy has surrounded himself with men of skill and experience, and has all the facilities for handling the largest class of contracts in plumbing and heating.

Her father is proprietor of a grain elevator there. Mrs. McAboy is a graduate of the high school at Minneapolis, Minnesota. They had two children, Charles William, who died in infancy, and Louise Jessie, born November 5, 1915.

ARTHUR TOLLE, who learned telegraphy in the office of the Northern Pacific Railway at Forsyth, Montana, has for the past nine years been with the Western Union Telegraph Company, and his skill and ability have been rewarded by several important posts, including his present office as manager for the company at Butte.

Mr. Tolle was born at Bernon in Marion County, Illinois, May 17, 1878. The Tolle family is of English extraction, and were early settlers in Virginia. Mr. Tolle's grandfather served as a soldier in the Revolutionary War. His father was the late Rev. C. J. T. Tolle, who gave the greater part of a long life to the service of the Methodist ministry. He was born near Lexington, Kentucky, in 1815, and as a young man went to Illinois, where he was married. He spent over fifteen years in the Methodist ministry. He filled pulpits at Vernon, Champaign, Olney, Salem and other points in Illinois, and was also a builder and organizer of churches as a circuit rider. During the Civil War he was a volunteer religious worker, preaching and performing other services in army camps. He died at Vernon, Illinois, in 1890. He was a republican and a member of the Masonic fraternity. He was three times married. The only child of his first wife George W. Arthur Tolle received his first educational advantages in the public schools of Vernon, Illinois, and attended the high school at Patoka in that state through his junior year. On leaving school at the age of eighteen he worked on the home farm two and a half years, and for a similar period was an apprentice in the carpenter and repair shops of the Illinois Steel Works in Chicago. His experience in the northwest began in 1901 when he spent several months on a ranch at Fargo, North Dakota. After that he was employed in a restaurant at Fargo until March 1, 1901, which was the date he located at Forsyth, Montana, and became a call boy for the Northern Pacific Railway. While performing those duties he learned telegraphy, and after a year and a half was made operator at Forsyth. He remained there until 1905, and then became operator with the Oregon Short Line Railway at Montpelier, Idaho, and two and one half years later was promoted to ticket agent for the same road at Boise, Idaho.

A son of Henry McDole, he was born July 23, 1888, in Jefferson City, Missouri, but was brought up and educated in Butte.

Coming with his family to Butte in 1895, he established the first smithy in the place, locating here where blacksmithing was in great demand, and during the next few years built up a substantial patronage. ABRAM LINCOLN BRADLEY. The Gilman State Bank has as its presiding official one of the most constructive citizens of the Sun River Valley, Abram Lincoln Bradley, a man to whose efficient efforts is due practically all of the development of this region. He has participated, usually as a leader, in every movement inaugurated for the purpose of bringing about much-needed improvements, and his name is known all over this part of Montana.

The birth of Abram Lincoln Bradley took place on a farm in the Province of Ontario, Canada, on May 15, 1865, and he is a son of Thomas and Permelia Bradley, and grandson of Thomas Bradley, the latter of whom was born in England, and there died before his grandson was born, having spent his life in his native land. The Bradley family is one of the old ones of England, and on his mother's side Abram Lincoln Bradley also came of good, old English stock.

Thomas Bradley, father of Abram Lincoln Bradley, was born near Sheffield, England, in 1811, and he died in the Province of Canada in 1869. About 1831, being then of age, Thomas Bradley left his native land for Canada, locating on a farm in the Province of Ontario, where he spent the remainder of his life. He was very active in his support of the Methodist Episcopal Church of his neighborhood, to which he belonged. Thomas Bradley married Permelia Halsted, born in Ontario in 1815, where her life was spent, and where she died in 1900. Her parents came to Ontario at an early day. Thomas Bradley and his wife had thirteen children, of whom Abram Lincoln was the youngest born.

Abram Lincoln Bradley was reared in the Province of Ontario, attended its schools, and was graduated from the high school of Bowmanville, Ontario, Canada, in 1882. His business career was begun as a messenger boy in the Merchants Bank of Saint Thomas, Ontario, Canada, and he was promoted through several grades during the two and one-half years he remained with this institution. Mr. Bradley then came to the United States and took up a homestead in the vicinity of Langdon, North Dakota, and lived on his claim until 1894, when he went into Langdon and for six years was connected as bookkeeper with a large implement house of that city, and for ten years was in the same capacity at Cando, North Dakota.

In 1910 Mr. Bradley came to Montana and established the Augusta State Bank, of which he was president. In 1913, when the railroad was built through this section, it was terminated two miles from Augusta, and a station was built and named Gilman. With the consequent moving to Gilman of many of the residents of Augusta, and the transferal of business to the new community, it was deemed expedient to move the bank to Gilman, and the name was changed to the Gilman State Bank, Mr. Bradley continuing, however, as its president. Mr. Bradley's associates in the bank are E. B. Boone, vice president, and C. W. Terwell, cashier. This bank has a capital of $25,000, a surplus of $8,000, and its deposits are about $250,000. The bank is conveniently located on Main Street.

Well known as a Mason, Mr. Bradley belongs to Cascade Lodge No. 34, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Great Falls, Montana; Helena Consistory, Scottish Rite No. 3, in which he has been made a Thirty-second Degree Mason, and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine of Helena, Montana. He is also a member of the State Bankers Association and the American Bankers' Association. The Bradley residence is located on Montana Street, and is owned by Mr. Bradley, and he owns other realty at Gilman and ranches in North Dakota and Montana.

In December, 1913, Mr. Bradley was married at Great Falls, Montana, to Mrs. Allie L. (Treadwell) Dawson, a daughter of William and Lucinda A. Treadwell, an old English family. Mrs. Bradley is the mother of Elmer E. Dawson, auditor at the Commercial National Bank, Great Falls, Montana. Mrs. Bradley is a graduate of the normal college at Ann Arbor, Michigan. Mr. and Mrs. Bradley have no children.

As president of the Gilman State Bank Mr. Bradley has been largely instrumental in developing the Sun River Valley and has interested outside capital in several of the projects. During the World war Mr. Bradley was very active, serving as chairman of the Liberty Loan drives of his district, putting all of them over the top, and received two Honor Flags which he generously declares belong to the community. In addition to the above work Mr. Bradley assisted the Red Cross and other organizations in their various drives, and in every way did all in his power to aid the administration in carrying out its policies.

JOHN E. HAMPLE. While gold and silver brought the first wave of settlement to Montana in the early sixties, from a much earlier time the mountains and valleys and the wilderness had been supplying some considerable quantity of commercial product in the form of furs and skins. The earliest emissaries of trade to visit Montana were representatives of the great fur companies doing business in the Rocky Mountain region. About the time the buffalo and other fur-bearing animals were beginning to disappear, the vacant ranges were being filled up with sheep, until in time Montana became the banner sheep and wool state of the Union.

These facts are briefly noted to indicate the interesting historical connection John E. Hample, of Butte, has with the commerce and industry of Montana. In the early stages of wool production in Montana there was little commercial organization in collecting and marketing the clip. Mr. Hample was probably the first outright wool buyer representing an eastern house to come personally to Montana and deal directly with the producers and local wool merchants and market exchanges. In those years he bought hides and furs as well as wool, and for nearly forty years has been operating over this northwest country, and for the greater part of that time has been in active business in Montana.

Mr. Hample was born near Gothenburg, Sweden, October 13, 1854. His grandfather was a native of Germany, and was a soldier through the Napoleonic wars. Later he moved to Sweden, where he died. The father, Carl August Hample, was born at Dresden, Saxony, Germany, in 1829, and from the age of eighteen lived near Gothenburg, Sweden, where he became extensively interested in cattle and sheep raising. In 1882 he came to the United States and continued his business as a rancher and stock man in the locality where the town of Oaks, North Dakota, has since grown up. He died at Oaks in 1909. He was then eighty years of age. After coming to America he voted as a republican, and was a member of the Lutheran Church. He married Christina Jennings, who was born in Sweden and died in 1905, at the age of eighty. Of their children Louise lives at Stockholm, Sweden; John E. is the second; Gustavus is a farmer at Oaks, North Dakota; and Hannah is unmarried, lives at Minneapolis, and owns the old homestead in North Dakota.

John E. Hample was reared in Sweden, attended a military school until his fifteenth year, and then in 1869 came to the United States. For several years his home was at Rockford, Illinois, where he acquired his English education, graduating from the high school of that city. While there he also gained his first knowledge of the hide and wool business, and in 1875 he entered the service of Oberne & Hosick, an extensive hide and wool house of Chicago, and remained in their service ten years, acquiring a thorough knowledge of the business and by 1879 was traveling on the road as their representative for the buying of hides, furs, robes and similar goods. In this capacity he made his first visit to Montana in 1879, his headquarters being at Miles City. At that time there were still great quantities of buffalo hides on the market, and he bought these furs as well as wool. From Miles City he traveled all over the territory, and came in close touch with the sheep men, Indian traders and trappers of that time. In 1881 he opened a branch house for Oberne & Hosick at Fargo, North Dakota, and a similar house at Winnipeg, Canada. Mr. Hample returned to Montana in 1884 and established his headquarters at Helena.

On leaving the house of Oberne & Hosick in 1886, Mr. Hample formed a partnership with A. J. Davidson, and for ten years they conducted an independent business as buyers and dealers in hides and wool at Helena. On retiring from this firm in 1896 Mr. Hample came to Butte, and this city has since been his home and business headquarters. As an individual dealer he has the largest business of its kind in the State of Montana. His offices are at the Butte Hotel, 13 East Broadway, and he owns extensive warehouses in South Butte. A few years ago it was stated that Mr. Hample handled fully three-fourths of the hides and pelts sent out of Montana, and for a long period of years supplied the Jeremiah Williams Company of Boston with a large part of the wool they received from Montana. A year's business frequently averaged fifty thousand hides and several million pounds of wool.

Mr. Hample bought and shipped wool out of Billings by rail in 1882, and soon afterward sent a shipment from Big Timber. He was the first to market any quantity of wool and hides from those two cities. For a number of years he was also producing sheep and wool on a large scale as owner and operator of a sheep ranch at Twin Bridges and Melrose. He is president of the Montana Butchering Company, which has a plant three and a half miles south of Butte, and at one time was financially interested in a large packing house at Spokane.

Mr. Hample is also a banker, having founded and since the opening of the bank on September 1, 1918, has been president of the South Side Bank. This bank is at Harrison Avenue and George Street, and has a capital of $50,000 and surplus and profits of $15,000. The other officers are Albert Rochester, vice president; Mr. Poindexter, cashier; and his son, John M. Hample, assistant cashier.

Mr. Hample maintains a branch hide and wool house at Helena, with H. E. Bower as manager. He owns a modern home at 211 South Jackson Street in Butte, and for many years has been regarded as one of the most substantial business men and civic leaders of this city. He is a democrat and a Presbyterian, and is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World.

July 4, 1890, at Portland, Oregon, he married Miss Minnie La Mott, a native of Iowa. Three children were born to their marriage, but the only daughter, Louise, died when about five years of age. Both sons were soldiers in the World war. Edwin Porter, born at Helena June 16, 1894, was educated in a Philadelphia preparatory school and finished his sophomore year in the University of New York, and in May, 1917, enlisted in the army. He was sent to Honolulu and served as a private until mustered out in September, 1919. John Milton, the younger son, born January 30, 1896, was educated in the Butte High School and enlisted in August, 1917, while attending the University of California at Berkeley. He was a private in an infantry regiment sent across the Pacific to Tientsin, China. He was mustered out in August, 1919, and is now at home and assistant cashier of the South Side Bank.

HARRY J. SKINNER, a well known Montana banker, has been a resident of the state over thirty years, and from the time he came here until recently had extensive banking interests at Great Falls.

Mr. Skinner was born at Grand Rapids, Michigan, April 4, 1866, second of the three children of Adolphus and Lucinda A. (Provin) Skinner, the former a native of New York State and the latter of Michigan. His father, who died in 1895, was in the real estate and loan business for many years at Grand Rapids. For several terms he was register of deeds of Kent County, Michigan, was a democrat in politics and a member of the Masonic fraternity.

Harry J. Skinner grew up and received his education at Grand Rapids, and was twenty-one years of age when he came to Great Falls in 1887. He went to work for the First National Bank, was with that institution many years, and has a broad and fundamental knowledge of financial affairs in the state. In 1907 he and his brother Mark organized the Commercial National Bank of Great Falls. Mr. Harry J. Skinner was president of this institution until 1916, when he and his brother sold their interests. Since then he has been primarily engaged in the cattle, land and ranch business, with headquarters at Great Falls. His offices are in the Ford Building. He is also president of the State Bank at Belt and of the State Bank at Stockitt, Montana. Mr. Skinner is a democrat in politics.

In 1891 he married Miss Estella E. Welch. Mrs. Skinner died November 10, 1918, the mother of four children: Mark G., Gertrude, Olive and Ruth.

RICHARD C. HOWELL, who is agent for the New York Realty Company and manager for the Phoenix Building at Butte, first came to this Montana city nearly thirty years ago, but his active career covers four decades, and has brought him much varied experience in the life and affairs of the west, as a railroad man, mining prospector and in other lines of business.

Mr. Howell was born at Port Hope, Ontario, Canada, October 15, 1858. His grandfather Howell was a native of Wales, moved with his family from that country to the north of Ireland, and about 1830 settled at Port Hope, Canada. Robert Howell, father of Richard C., was born in Wales in 1830, and from early manhood lived in Canada, marrying in Ontario. For over a quarter of a century he was a merchant at Port Hope, and for a number of years was a member of the City Council. He was also a pillar in the Methodist Episcopal Church, holding all the lay offices, and was chairman of the building committee when a new church edifice was erected. He was a liberal in politics. Robert Howell died at Port Hope in 1877. He married Mary Jane Cottingham, of English descent, who was born in 1832 and died at Port Hope in 1913. Richard was the oldest of their children. H. S. Howell is a business man at Berkeley, California; W. S., a resident of Chicago, was assistant general freight agent of the Milwaukee Railway until the roads were taken over by the government; H. W. Howell is a property owner at Omaha, Nebraska, and until the war was traveling freight and passenger agent for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, with headquarters at Salt Lake City; Ida is married; Hattie is unmarried and lives at the old homestead at Port Hope.

Richard C. Howell finished the high school course at Port Hope, and attended Trinity College in that city through his sophomore year. He left school in 1876, at the age of eighteen, and when his father died the next year he took charge of the business and continued it until the fall of 1878. After he left home he spent six months clerking in a grocery store in Chicago, for a short time was a hotel clerk at Denver, and then joined a number of men prospecting for silver along the Blue River in Colorado. In 1881 he returned to Omaha, and was an employe of the Union Pacific Railway until 1888. He started in the car department and eventually was made chief billing clerk for west bound traffic. For about four years, until 1892, he was bill clerk with the Pacific Express Company, and in 1892 came to Butte and in August of that year was made cashier of the Pacific Express Company. He left the express business in 1894 and engaged in the bicycle business, the bicycle then being at the high tide of its popularity. Selling out in 1897, Mr. Howell was one of the enterprising men attracted to the cool regions of the Klondike. He led an expedition by way of Edmonton and the Athabasca River to the Grand Rapids of that watercourse. There winter overtook them, and for several months they endured many hardships, including an attack of scurvy. With the opening of navigation the next spring the party was compelled to return. Mr. Howell reached Butte in June, 1898, and for over ten years was employed in the auditing department of the Montana Power Company. Since 1909 he has been agent for the New York Realty Company, handling its varied investments property in Montana and is also manager of the Phoenix Building, one of the largest office structures in the state, a six-story building with the ground floor occupied by the Symon's Dry Goods Company. Mr. Howell has his office and resides in the Phoenix Building.

He is a republican in politics. March 15, 1919, at Deer Lodge, he married Miss Florence Greenman, a native of Illinois.

Frederick H. Sarles has spent nearly all his active lifetime of forty years in the western states of Colorado, Utah and Montana. For the past fourteen years he has been a resident of Butte, and in this city has built up one of the leading real estate and insurance agencies.

Mr. Sarles represents an old English family which was established in New York City in 1715, more than two centuries ago. His grandfather, William Sarles, spent all his life at Mount Kisco in Westchester County, New York, being a farmer there, before his death dividing his estate among his children. His son Alexander Hamilton Sarles was born at Mount Kisco in 1826, and died there in 1869. In early life he was a school teacher and later a successful farmer and also had some business in New York City. He was a republican and was affiliated with the Presbyterian Church. His wife was Esther Williams, who was born at New Preston, Connecticut, in 1826 and died at Aspen, Colorado, in 1915, when nearly ninety years of age. She was the mother of six children. Stanley W., the oldest, who died at Mount Kisco at the age of twenty-two, had acquired a liberal education and just before his death was preparing to become the principal of a large public school in New York City. Joseph O. died in Oxford, Connecticut, at the age of thirty-six, and was the owner of a meat market. William A. was a farmer and died at Kent, Connecticut, aged thirty-eight. Frederick H. is the fourth in the family. Eudora M. is the wife of William S. Platt, a merchant at Aspen, Colorado. Hamilton Victor is in the retail meat business at Bristol, Connecticut.

Frederick H. Sarles was born at Mount Kisco, Westchester County, New York, February 22, 1860, and was nine years of age when his father died. He grew up in the home of his uncle, Stanley Williams, and was educated in the public schools of New Preston, Connecticut, attending the Upson Seminary there until graduating in 1880. He had taught a term of school at the age of sixteen, and during 1880-81 taught in New Preston. In the latter year he came west, spending two years in the sheep business in Colorado Springs, and then took up mining and prospecting at Aspen, Colorado. He operated a mining claim there for ten years. During 1892 for a few months he lived in Salt Lake City. When Davis H. Waite was elected governor of Colorado Mr. Sarles received appointment as a commissioner under his administration, an office he filled for two years. Mr. Sarles in 1894 took up a homestead at Rockwood, Colorado, a quarter section, and while proving up his homestead, which he later sold, he was appointed postmaster under President Cleveland, an office he held for four years. Mr. Sarles moved to Salt Lake City in 1901, and remained there as clerk in a book store for five years. Returning to Butte in 1906, he was for four years connected with the John G. Evans' bookstore, and then engaged in the real estate business, representing the Hubbard Investment Company of Salt Lake City. He has been in the real estate business since that time, and today his organization handles not only real estate, but bonds, loans and insurance, and has one of the leading enterprises of its kind in Silverbow County. The offices are in the Phoenix Building.

For many years Mr. Sarles has been a prominent temperance worker as a member of the Independent Order of Good Templars. He is now grand chief templar of the state, being elected in August, 1919, at the Grand Lodge, and filled the same office in 1914-15. He served as health inspector at Butte in 1914, and is a prominent church worker, being member and elder of Emanuel Presbyterian Church of Butte and for eight years superintendent of the Sunday School. Politically he is an independent republican. Mr. Sarles was vice chancellor and at present is chancellor commander of Oswego Lodge No. 9, Knights of Pythias, at Butte.

Mr. Sarles is father of a very interesting family of children. At Aspen, Colorado, June 9, 1888, he married Miss Eva Smith, who was born in Missouri but reared and educated in New York state. She was descended from James Wilson, a Pennsylvanian whose name appears as a signer to the Declaration of Independence and who subsequently was an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Mrs. Sarles died at Salt Lake City April 15, 1905. There were four children, Frederick William, Eudora M., Beatrice Esther and Henry Upson. The daughter Eudora was born June 2, 1896, attended the high school at Aspen, Colorado, and is still living in that city. Beatrice Esther was born July 29, 1898, is a graduate of the Salt Lake City High School, and is the wife of James C. Johnson, living at 1012 West Quartz Street in Butte. Mr. Johnson is an employe of the Montana Power Company. The son, Henry Upson, who was born August 2, 1900, at Rockwood, Colorado, was educated in the public schools of Salt Lake City, graduated from the Butte High School in 1918, and represented his class and was captain of the State Debating Team of the Butte High School in 1918. He is also senior editor of the Mountaineer, a monthly publication by the Butte High School. His friends recognize in him a young poet of exceptional ability. After leaving high school and while a student in the Montana State School of Mines he was a member of the Students Army Training Corps. He is now stenographer and bookkeeper for Sarles & Company.

The oldest son, Frederick William, was born March 26, 1895, and is a graduate of the high school of Aspen, Colorado. September 13, 1917, he enlisted, receiving his first training at Camp Lewis, later at Camp Cody, Deming, New Mexico, with the Medical Corps, and finally at Washington directly under the Surgeon General. He was promoted from private to first class private, then sergeant, then to first class sergeant, and finally to hospital sergeant, first class, equivalent to the rank of regimental sergeant major. While at Washington he was assigned as advertising manager of the Walter E. Reid Base Hospital paper called "The Come Back." He was mustered out September 11, 1919, and has since located at New York City, where his talents are employed as assistant editor for the American Agency Bulletin. He married in August, 1919, Miss Marguerite Morris of Butte. Sergeant Sarles is a gifted writer, and it is not out of place to quote the stanzas of a solemn poem which he wrote while at Camp Cody. The two central stanzas are:

"When it's moonlight on the prairie,
When the night winds softly blow,
And the sweet strains of the bugle,
From afar come soft and low,
Then our fancies swiftly wander,
Back to home, to hearth, and friends,
And we try to pierce the future,
To see where our journey ends.

In the whirling of Fate's spindle,
Our short lives are swiftly spun,
And at times the thread is cut off
Ere the web is scarce begun.
So as soldiers in our manhood,
We live each day for that day,
Worry not about what's coming
Feeling sure we'll find the way."

While the chorus runs:

"It seems, while our dreams
Take us back to the scenes
Of our past, that our future untold,
Like a scroll will unroll,
And show us our goal,
Friends we left in the dear days of old."

CHARLES MATTHEW LAUER, whose progressive business career has led him stage by stage from Massachusetts west to Montana and the Pacific Coast, is manager of the Butte business of Hemenway & Moser Company, wholesale dealers in cigars, controlling the largest volume of business in that line in Montana.

Mr. Lauer was born at Rochester, New York, October 11, 1874. His father, Matthew Lauer, was born at Frankfort-on-the-Rhine, Germany, in 1848 and was a child when his parents came to this country in 1842 and settled at Rochester. He was reared and educated in that city, and spent the rest of his life there. He became a skilled cabinet maker, and was in the employ of several large wood working concerns. He died at Rochester in 1884. He was a democrat and a member of the Catholic Church. Matthew Lauer married Mary Stupp, who was also born at Frankfort-on-the-Rhine, in 1846, and is still a resident of Rochester. Charles M. Lauer attended the parochial schools of Rochester, and has been dependent upon his own exertions to earn his living and create his useful position in the world since he was thirteen. At that time he began working as cash boy in a wholesale and retail dry goods store at Rochester. Eventually he was promoted to bookkeeper of its wholesale department. In 1895 he left that firm and became bookkeeper for Michael, Doyle & Company of Rochester, and in 1900 went to Boston as their representative, remaining there three years. RAYMOND LESTER RUHLE. In writing of the energetic and progressive men who have taken a prominent and influential part in developing and promoting the highest interests of Butte, special mention should be made of Raymond Lester Ruhle, a live, wide-awake business man, known far and wide as vice president and general manager of the James A. McKee Printing Company, the largest firm of the kind in the State of Montana. A son of the late L. T. Ruhle, he was born September 7, 1881, in Leadville, Colorado, of German lineage.

Born in Germany in 1853, L. T. Ruhle came to the United States in 1865, and at the home of his brother, Robert Ruhle, in New York City completed his early education. Rumors of the vast mineral wealth of Nevada reaching the east, he joined the tide of migration surging westward, and was engaged in mining in Nevada for some time. Coming from there to Montana, he continued as a miner in Butte until he had accumulated quite a sum of money, and then, in partnership with Henry Nickel, established the first meat market in Butte, operating it for fifteen years, in the meantime meeting with very satisfactory results. He subsequently traveled extensively throughout the United States, visiting all the principal cities and points of interest. Being appointed inspector of meats in Butte in 1913, he held the position until his death in the spring of 1919. He was a republican in politics, and a highly esteemed citizen. His wife, whose maiden name was Carrie Mensenger, was born in Kansas City, Missouri, and is now a resident of Butte. They were the parents of two children, as follows: Raymond Lester, the subject of this sketch, and Hazel, who resides with her mother.

Mr. Ruhle has acquired much valuable property, having large mining interests in Butte and other parts of the state, and owning a modernly constructed residence at 125 North Excelsior Street.

Mr. Ruhle married in 1911, at Butte, Miss Jessie Budd, who was graduated from a girls' seminary in Chicago, Illinois. She is a daughter of H. CAPT. THOMAS COUCH. The time to have celebrated the achievements of Capt. Thomas Couch was during his life, when he could appreciate it, but it is a satisfaction to know that so many of his dreams came true, so many plans were carried out and with such benefits conferred upon all even remotely connected with them that he must have been contented with what he had done and felt in some measure at least the appreciation of his fellow citizens. Those who knew and understood him and his work have not failed to credit him with having been one of the greatest constructive factors not only in the development of Montana but the entire West.

An Englishman by birth, Captain Couch seemed always most typically American in mind, heart and manner. He was born December 29, 1843, at Braiz-Camborne, Cornwall. After a life filled with adventure, crowded with discovery and invention and paved with good deeds, he passed away February 5, 1902. He died in Lane Hospital at San Francisco, having gone to that state in search of the one asset that his own great efforts could not bring him—abounding health. The quest was in vain. His body was carried back to Montana, the state nearest his heart, where every citizen knew his name and many had reaped the benefits of more intimate knowledge of the man himself. His body rests in Highland Cemetery, Great Falls, the town that he finally chose for his home.

Even in his boyhood the mysteries of the earth held for him a great fascination. When twenty years of age he left England for America, attracted here by rumor of the wonderful treasure beneath our soil. On landing he went at once to the Lake Superior or copper district. The great finds in California, however, soon lured him to the coast. His first trip was made by way of the Isthmus of Panama to San Francisco. For five years he worked in the gold fields of California, spending most of his time at the Grass Valley mines and on the properties near New Almaden. In 1868 he pushed on into Nevada, two years later assuming the control of the Hidden Treasure mine at White Pine, the most important find of that vicinity, and 1871 found him temporarily in Camp Floyd, Utah. From there he went to Tintic to become the manager of the Mammoth Copperpolis, a gold and silver mine of national reputation. Bingham next claimed his attention. Here he operated successfully the Neptune and Jordan silver and lead mines, leaving Bingham to become superintendent of the Hidden Treasurer of Dry Canyon, an exceedingly rich find that was soon exhausted. The last property with which he was connected in Utah was the Horn Silver at Frisco.

Through study and experience he had now become a scientist, versed in the difficult branches of mineralogy, geology and metallurgy, as well as a practical mine operator. In the interests of eastern capital he traveled through the entire western portion of the United States and Canada, examining a mine here and opening one there as the case might be.

Immediately upon arriving in Montana Captain Couch had been employed as a mining expert by Col. C. A. Broadwater. Almost his first work in the state was the examination of the Broadwater properties at Neihart. Almost a year was devoted to the examination of other mines in which Colonel Broadwater was interested. It was under his direction that the important mines at Castle were developed.

On reaching Montana in 1883 Captain Couch located in Butte. No mining expert of his day commanded greater confidence and was entrusted with greater interests. Within a very short time he reported on properties in Deer Lodge, Lewis and Clark and Meagher counties. He was instrumental in developing and managing some of the greatest mines of the state. With Capt. John Daniels of Michigan he examined and reported upon a group of mines embracing the Mountain View, Colusa, Liquidator and West Colusa. These were owned by Mr. C. A. Larabie and the Montana Copper Company. His favorable report resulted in the purchase of these properties, their consolidation and the formation of the Boston & Montana Copper and Silver Mining Company, of which he was made general manager. One of the greatest mining corporations in the wold, it was the skillful management of Captain Couch that in no small degree contributed to the magnitude of the enterprise and the enormous dividends paid to its fortunate stockholders. The smallest detail in connection with the development of this huge property failed to escape his notice. He personally supervised the opening of each mine, the working of the smelters and concentrators and the control of the men employed above and below ground.

Largely upon his advice the company decided in 1889 to erect the huge smelters at Great Falls. Mining men generally had no confidence in the plan, but the work was rushed to completion. Within two years after the smelters were completed the company began to pay dividends. From that time so long as Captain Couch remained in control dividends, output and employes all increased to gether. In 1896 a new feature in the company's affairs so displeased the captain that he handed in his resignation.

At this time he undertook a tremendously big scheme for the development of a low grade quartz property on the mother lode of California at Coultersville. Considerable capital was expended in exploration work, but the first mill tests were disappointing in values, and, although the property was worked on a smaller scale, the original project was abandoned. This was one of the greatest disappointments of his life, although in later years he was requested by men who were interested in the property to return and carry out his original scheme, and he was considering the matter seriously when ill health intervened and stopped his career of development.

The low lying gravel beds on the Feather River near Oroville claimed his attention in 1898. These gravel beds had been known to carry gold in small quantities since the days of "49" and all sorts of schemes had been tried for reclaiming it, but without success. Captain Couch interested the necessary capital to construct a gold dredge, after a plan that had originated in New Zealand. This was the beginning of the development of gold dredging, the first successful boat for dredging placer gold being built at the mandate of Captain Couch. The enterprise proved a success from the first turn of the wheels and developed into one of the big enterprises of California and has extended to all parts of the world where placer mining is possible.

While the mines were incidental to his bigger work as a mine operator, the ranching activities of Captain Couch were in the nature of a public service to the cause of agriculture and livestock husbandry. He developed a model ranch, and invested thousands of dollars in blooded cattle and horses, and many farm owners in Montana today take pride in the fact that some of their stock came from the original Couch herds.

For several years Captain Couch was recognized as the leader of the republican party in Montana. He had but to reach out his hand to grasp the highest office it was in her power to bestow. In 1892 he was urged to accept the nomination for governor, but declined the honor with decisive kindness. His iron will and great personal magnetism, combined with his love of the human race, made him always a leader of men whether in a political campaign or a mining community. Although his political satellites were willing to obey the slightest beck of his hand, he never used his power for his own aggrandizement nor for that of his personal friends. After 1894 he gave little time to politics, although in 1896 he was a strong advocate of the free and unlimited coinage of silver. It was a great disappointment to him that the party to which he had given such loyal service could not embrace this principle to which the local conditions of Montana lent such importance. Even so, the captain was never anything but a stalwart republican.

Captain Couch earned some of the finest rewards of good fortune, measured not at all by wealth, but by the possession of an ideal home and family, many stanch and tried friends, and a great consuming desire to do justice and make his life worthy of the good fortune which attended it. Perhaps the best summing up of his personal life is found in the words of the address delivered at his funeral:

"Captain Couch was not an ambitious man in the usual sense. He set a high standard of action and attainment for himself, but worldly ambition was not his aim. He was a power in the political field of Montana, but that power was never wielded for his personal benefit. He served the cause of many a friend though. Rather than politics he chose the home, and here it was that the charm of his character was felt. He was ideal in the home circle. The hero of his half dozen boys—and hero worship was no sin here—it was the expression of a filial love and obedience to one who proved himself loveable.

"Captain Couch was a man of large financial and executive ability. To his genius is due the development of mining properties which run into the millions. He was among a half dozen best mining men in Montana. In our own city there stands a monument to his genius and toil, the great interests of the B. & M. Smelting Company, and many public enterprises have received substantial aids from his brain and liberal hand. While not a man of learning he was a man of culture. He was broad and liberal minded, having a knowledge of men and measures that fitted him for the responsible positions held. Always cool and level-headed yet not slow to decide and quick to execute. Few men in the state had a better knowledge of its affairs, political and financial, and he was always among the inner circle of counsellors."

December 28, 1873, Captain Couch married Miss Rachel Webber, daughter of John Webber, of Goshen, Utah. She was a native of Wales and her father was a pioneer miner in Utah and Nevada. Captain Couch's family joined him in Butte about the time he became manager of the Boston and Montana Company. Mrs. Couch is still living, and six of her seven children survive. The names of these children were Thomas, Jr., Edward G., Frederick M., Rachel Mary, wife of Lee M. Ford; Albert C., John D., and William. The second generation have not been lacking in the stanch qualities that dominated Captain Couch. Three of the sons, Albert, John and William, were participants in the World war. Albert C. was with the Three Hundred and Sixty-Fourth Infantry, Ninety-First Division, was in the battle of the Argonne, and was severely wounded in Flanders on the 4th of November, 1918. John served as a lieutenant with the Twelfth Infantry and was also in France. William finished his training as an aviator at Miami, Florida, and sailed with the Fourth Flying Squadron of the Marine Corps, but died on board the transport Lapland September 28, 1918.

Thomas Couch, Jr., son of the late Capt. Thomas Couch, is a resident of Great Falls, though his business interests have a wide range over the state.

A resident of Montana since he was five years of age, he was born at Goshen, Utah, June 14, 1878. He was educated in the public schools of this state and early became associated with his father in business. He assumed the management of the ranch interests in 1898, and enlarged the land and livestock holdings. Shortly after his father's death he organized the family into a corporation and placed the entire capital of the estate into land and real estate. The land holdings have been increased to 25,000 acres of the choice lands of Cascade and Teton counties.

The son of a man of unsurpassed initiative and constructive genius, Mr. Couch has identified himself with a number of the progressive enterprises of his city and state. He was one of the organizers and president of the Great Falls Automatic Telephone Company, and has thus been instrumental in building up the splendid exchange and automatic telephone system at Great Falls. He was active in the organization of the Montana Life Insurance Company and is still on its board of directors.

He was an organizer and is president of the Northern Flax Fiber Company. While this industry is in its infancy in the West, and this is the first company undertaking the production of fiber in all the western states, the fact that Montana is rapidly taking the lead among the flax growing states of the Union opens wonderful opportunities for the growth and development of the company to a position among Montana's leading industries.

Thomas Couch, Jr., married Miss Gwendolyn Black, daughter of H. N. Black, a prominent Montana architect. They have one daughter, Gwendolyn.

Davis E. Wilder, who is agent of the Consolidated Ticket Offices of the various railroads centering at Butte, has had a long and active experience in railroad work and has been a resident of Montana for the past ten years.

He was born at Austin, Minnesota, June 6, 1880. His Wilder ancestors were English and colonial settlers in New York. His grandfather, a native of New York State, became a pioneer farmer in Wisconsin and died at Sun Prairie, that state, in 1898. E. W. Wilder, father of Davis E., was born at Sun Prairie in 1852, was reared and married there, and in 1879 moved to Austin, Minnesota. He was one of the early settlers in that locality and spent his active life as a farmer. His affairs were prospered, and since 1902 he was lived retired. In October, 1919, he took up his residence at Long Beach, California. He held several offices of trust and responsibility in Austin and wielded a considerable influence in the civic life of that community. He is a republican in politics, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. E. W. Wilder married Katherine Davis, who was born at Sun Prairie, Wisconsin, in 1854, and died at Austin, Minnesota, November 14, 1911. Ruth, the oldest of their children, resides with her father; Davis E. is the second; Nellie is the wife of John Armstead, a farmer at Sioux Rapids, Iowa; Frost is in the hardware business at Fairview, Montana; and Katherine is the wife of Custer Armstead, a brother of John Armstead, and they live on a farm at Medelia, Minnesota.

Davis E. Wilder's early environment was a farm in Mower County, Minnesota. From the farm he attended the neighboring district schools and also spent four years in the University of Minnesota Agricultural Department, graduating with the class of 1904. While in University he was affiliated with the Alpha Sigma college fraternity. After leaving university and preliminary to his railroad career Mr. Wilder spent about two years learning the undertaking business at Austin, and in 1906 came to Sidney, Montana, where for two months he was in the employ of the Yellowstone Mercantile Company. He entered the service of the Great Northern Railway at Williston, North Dakota, beginning as night ticket agent, was promoted to ticket agent, and in February, 1910, was transferred to Great Falls, Montana, as ticket clerk for the Great Northern and with an increase in salary. In November, 1911, he became city passenger agent for the Great Northern at Helena, and in 1913 was appointed city passenger agent at Butte. After the government took over the administration of the railroads, and when the various ticket agencies were consolidated, Mr. Wilder on July 1, 1918, was appointed agent for the Consolidated Ticket Offices at Butte, his offices being at Main and East Park streets.

Mr. Wilder has acquired real estate interests at Williston, North Dakota, and at Butte, where he owns a modern home at 1120 Steel Street. He is a member of the Episcopal Church, affiliated with Austin Lodge of Odd Fellows, Helena Lodge No. 193 of the Elks, and is a former member of the Knights of Pythias at Williston and of the Silver Bow Club of Butte.

November 14, 1914, at Butte, he married Mrs. Jane (Williams) Lynch, daughter of Daniel and Ann Williams. Her mother is living at 702 Colorado Street in Butte. Her father, who died at Butte in 1912, was a miner, and began working in the mining district of Butte in 1883.

GEORGE E. SMILEY. It has long been a recognized fact that the great corporations of the country are on the outlook for men of ability for they realize that with such men in charge of the various affairs of the business efficiency is secured and the number of serious mistakes brought to a minimum. Because of this tendency another fact has come to light, that there are very few men connected with these organizations who have not already proven their fitness for the work under their supervision, and that employment in these concerns is the mark of real capability. One of those who is worthy of the consideration of his company and fellow citizens in every way is George E. Smiley of Butte, Montana, assistant division manager of the Continental Oil Company, who has risen to his present position through individual merit.

George E. Smiley was born in Clarke County, Mississippi, on December 31, 1885, a son of E. M. Smiley. The Smiley family was founded in the United States by the great-grandfather of George E. Smiley, an Englishman who came to this country at an early day. E. M. Smiley was born in 1860, in Clarke County, Mississippi, where his father had located, and there he was reared, educated and married, and there he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1905, when he moved to Heidelberg, Mississippi, and since then has been engaged in conducting a mercantile establishment. He is a democrat. The Baptist Church holds his membership, and he is active in its work. For years he has been a Mason, and he also belongs to the Woodmen of the World. E. M. Smiley was united in marriage with Maggie L. Goodwin, born at Meridian, Mississippi, in 1864, and their children were as follows: George, who is the eldest; Eunice, who married William Campbell, a carpenter and builder of Heidelberg, Mississippi; Estelle, who married Harry L. Brashier, of Meridian, Mississippi, a traveling salesman; Willie Ray, who married John Arledge, a farmer of Vossburg, Mississippi; and Bessie, who is attending the Heidelberg High School, resides with her parents.

George E. Smiley attended the rural schools of Clarke County, Mississippi, and the Meridian High School, from which he was graduated in 1904. Immediately thereafter he began working for the R. G. McCants Cotton Company, cotton brokers at Meridian, Mississippi, and continued with that company for two years, leaving it to form connections with his present company at Denver, Colorado. He started with the Continental Oil Company as a general clerk and with the determination to master the details of the business in such a manner that when an opening occurred above him he would be ready for it, and his subsequent career proves that he has lived up to that determination in a remarkable degree. His first rise made him order clerk, his next, price clerk, and then, having by that time proved his aptness, he was transferred to Havre, Montana, to assume the responsibilities connected with the position of district superintendent, taking charge of that district in June, 1915. In 1917 he was transferred to Butte, Montana, as assistant to the division manager, and then, on January 1, 1920, was made assistant division manager under J. J. O'Neil, division manager. The offices and plant are located on Kaw Avenue.

Since coming to Butte Mr. Smiley has invested in city realty and owns his home at No. 1015 Dakota Street, a comfortable modern residence. Like his father, he is a supporter of the democratic party. For some years he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Smiley maintains fraternal connections with Denver Camp No. 13, Woodmen of the World, and the Railroad Council of the Royal Arcanum at Denver, Colorado. He also is a member of the Iowa State Traveling Men's Association.

On September 10, 1910, Mr. Smiley was united in marriage with Miss Hattie D. Hardin, at Lincoln, Nebraska. She is a daughter of Charles and Mary (Beer) Hardin, the former of whom is now deceased, after having been a pioneer farmer of Nebraska. The latter survives her husband and is now residing at Blue Springs, Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. Smiley have one son, George Wayne, who was born August 31, 1917.

The grandfather of George E. Smiley was John M. Smiley, born in 1830 in North Carolina, where his father had settled upon coming to the United States. John M. Smiley went to Clarke County, Mississippi, in young manhood, and was engaged there in farming all of his active life, but is now living in retirement in Clarke County. During the war between the states he espoused the cause of the South and was a brave and gallant soldier in defense of the "Lost Cause." The democratic party has always had his earnest support. Like his son E. M. Smiley, he has been a member of the Baptist Church all of his mature years.

John M. Smiley was united in marriage with Martha Smith, born in Clarke County, Mississippi, in 1835, and she died in the same county of her birth during 1915. They became the parents of the following children: E. M., father of George E. Smiley, who was the eldest; John, who is a resident of Laural, Mississippi, is a member of the police force of that city; James, who is a farmer of Clarke County, Mississippi; Clarence, Guy and Andrew, all of whom are also engaged in farming in Clarke County, Mississippi; Cora, who married Nicholas Slayton, a farmer of Clarke County, Mississippi; and Emma, who married John Thomas, a farmer of Clarke County, Mississippi.

George E. Smiley is in the very prime of vigorous young manhood and yet has reached a position of importance at a time when some men have barely made a start in life. He is of the type that will go far and attain much, for he possesses the staying quality. He is a nature which does not shrink from responsibility, but rather courts it, and having gained the added duties, skillfully proceeds to discharge them efficiently and rapidly. His knowledge of the business and of men enables him to handle many problems which a less experienced and practical man might find difficult, and it is safe to say that it would not be easy to find another man so well fitted for the position now so expertly filled by George E. Smiley.

Michael J. Loughran is a mining engineer, a graduate of the Montana State School of Mines, and for a number of years was associated in a professional capacity with some of the great mining corporations of Montana. Since 1919 he has filled the responsible office of county surveyor of Silver Bow County.

Mr. Loughran is a native of the great mining district of the far west, born in Virginia City, Nevada, September 9, 1887. His father, M. J. Loughran, was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1852, and was a boy when he came to this country in 1867 and for several years lived at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where he worked in the steel mills. About 1882 M. J. Loughran removed to Virginia City, Nevada, and became interested in mining. In 1892 he was sent to Chicago in charge of Nevada's mineral exhibits for the World's Columbian Exposition, and after the close of that Fair remained in Chicago for a time as a merchant. In 1894 he located at Butte, where he resumed his occupation as a miner and continued so until his death in 1917. He was a democrat and a member of the Catholic Church. M. J. Loughran married Elizabeth Skinner, a resident of Butte, who was born in Lisbon, Illinois, in 1861. She is the mother of seven children: Ann, wife of O. F. Brinton, manager of the Jib Mining Company at Basin, Montana; Michael J.; Florence, a graduate nurse from St. James Hospital of Butte, now the wife of Lewis Downing, a druggist at Hamilton, Montana; Katherine, also a graduate nurse of St. James Hospital, is employed in her professional capacity at the Gold Hill Mining Company at Gold Hill, Utah. David, a graduate mining engineer from the Montana State School of Mines, now foreman at the Goldsmith Mine and a resident of Butte; Genevieve, wife of Chester Coombs, a butcher at Butte; and Consulo, who is finishing her education in the Butte Business College.

Michael J. Loughran has lived in Butte since he was seven years of age. He acquired his education in the public schools, and was in high school until his senior year. He graduated with the degree E. M. from the Montana State School of Mines in 1909, and his first technical service in his profession was one year in the testing department at Washoe Smelter. After that his services were employed as a surveyor chiefly at the Diamond Mine of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company and at other properties of that corporation until January, 1919. In November, 1918, he was elected county surveyor for Silver Bow County, and to the duties of that office now gives all his time.

Mr. Loughran is a member of the American Association of Engineers, a democrat, a Catholic, a third degree Knight of Columbus, being affiliated with Butte Council No. 668, and is also a member of Butte Lodge No. 240 of the Elks.

Mr. Loughran and family have a modern home at 828 West Quartz Street. He married at Butte in 1912 Miss Minnie Nickel, daughter of Gus and Mary (Reihl) Nickel, whose home is at 217 North Alabama Street in Butte. Her father is a retired business man. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Loughran are James, born December 26, 1914, and Celia, born July 15, 1918.

George N. Short. The business service rendered by Mr. Short since coming to Montana has been in selling and helping distribute the products of two local cement plants. He has his home and offices at Butte, and is sales manager for the Montana territory of the Three Forks Portland Cement Company.

Mr. Short was born at Bellefontaine, Ohio, August 30, 1883. His grandfather, Hamilton Short, was a native of Wilmington, Delaware, and was an early day railway contractor. He went to Bellefontaine, Ohio, to superintend the construction of a railroad that is now part of the Big Four system. He died at Bellefontaine in 1859. He married Elizabeth Shively, a native of Philadelphia. E. J. Short, father of the Butte business man, was born at Bellefontaine in April, 1850, and spent practically all his life there. He was a successful general merchant and died at Bellefontaine in April, 1909. For several years before his death he had lived at Colorado Springs, Colorado. He was a republican, served as a member of the City Council at Bellefontaine a number of years, and was secretary of the Municipal Water Company there. He was an active supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church and was a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason. E. J. Short married Mary R. Magruder, who was born at Marion, Ohio, November 18, 1855, and is now living at Butte. There were only two children, Grace and George N. The former was born in 1881, and died at Bellefontaine in 1902.

George N. Short graduated from the Bellefontaine High School in 1901, and soon afterward entered the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio. He completed the regular course and graduated with the B. L. degree in 1905. He is a member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon college fraternity. Mr. Short has made every year of the fifteen since he left college count definitely in his business advancement. From September, 1905, until April of the following year he worked for the Bellefontaine Foundry and Machinery Company, a firm manufacturing steam dredges. For more than a year he was connected with the welfare and advertising departments of the National Cash Register Company at Dayton, Ohio, and in December, 1907, went to Colorado Springs to visit his parents. In February, 1908, he entered the cement business as traveling representative of the Colorado Portland Cement Company of Denver. His territory was Colorado, Wyoming, the Black Hills of South Dakota, Nebraska and parts of Kansas. He kept the plant busy with the orders turned in from that territory, and continued in the service of the Colorado Company for seven or eight years. In June, 1915, he came to Butte as sales manager of the Three Forks Portland Cement Company. On the first of July of that year the offices of the company were moved from Trident to Butte. Mr. Short has charge of the sales for the plants at Trident and Hanover, his sales offices being in the Lewisohn Building. He has two salesmen who cover Montana and the western part of North Dakota and northwestern Wyoming.

J. W. Luce

Sarah A. Luce

THOMPSON W. LUCE. It will always be a badge of honor in this country to have it known that a person's father, or even his uncle, enlisted in the service of the country when the great rebellion broke out, to assist in saving the Union and to eradicate slavery from our soil. Just as to this day we boast that our grandfather or other ancestor fought in the Revolutionary war to gain independence, or in the War of 1812 to protect our rights on the ocean, so the descendants of the gallant soldiers who in the early '60s defended the Stars and Stripes through the coming years will refer with pride to the bravery and self-sacrifice of their fathers and other relatives. Peculiar interest attaches to the record of the Luce family, as outlined in the following paragraphs from the fact that specific mention is made of the splendid military record of the subject of this sketch.

Thompson W. Luce, of Pondera County, is a native son of the old Buckeye State, having been born on his father's farm in Warren County, Ohio, on January 18, 1847. He is the son of William and Mary (Cline) Luce, the latter of whom was born in New Jersey and who died in 1863, in the forty-sixth year of her age. William Luce, who was a native of Pennsylvania, died in his eightieth year. He was married three times and was the father of twenty-three children. To his first marriage were born six children, three sons and three daughters. Mary (Cline) Luce, his second wife and the mother of the subject of this review, bore him fourteen children, of whom the subject was the fourth in order of birth, and of which number three sons and two daughters are still living. For his third wife William Luce married Mrs. Martha Seaman, and to that union were born three daughters.

William Luce accompanied his parents on their removal to Ohio in 1799, they being among the very earliest settlers in Warren County. The elder Luce took an active part in the development and activities of the new country and was one of the first to conduct a freight line between Sun Fish Hills and Cincinnati. He also did a large mercantile business with the settlers along the route, gathering up the produce grown by the latter which he carried into Cincinnati and there exchanging it for merchandise, which he took out with him and sold to the settlers. He also was successful as a farmer and created a comfortable home in this new western country. He was a democrat in politics and held several county and local offices, including that of justice of the peace.

Thompson W. Luce remained at home, assisting with the farm work and attending the local schools, until sixteen years of age. Then, in the spring of 1864, he enlisted in Company K, One Hundred and Forty-Sixth Regiment, Ohio National Guards, for the 100 days' service. At the expiration of this period he re-enlisted, this time for one year, or during the war, and was assigned to Company G, One Hundred and Eighty-Third Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry. They became a part of the Twenty-Third Corps of the Army of Ohio, and were, at different times under the command of Generals Thomas and J. M. Schofield. He received his discharge in October, 1865, having taken part in many battles and skirmishes, among the more important of which were Spring Hill, Franklin, Nashville, Wilmington, Fayetteville and Kingston.

For about two years after his return from the army Thompson W. Luce worked on his father's farm, and then for about seven years he was engaged as a carpenter and bridge builder, followed by farming operations on his own account for a couple of years. He then returned to his former vocation as carpenter and bridge builder, being employed by several railroad companies up to 1891. In that year he came to Montana, locating at Old Pondera in Teton County, and entered the employ of the Letheridge & Gault Railway, a narrow gauge road, on construction work, subsequently becoming a section foreman. He then engaged in the sheep business, being a large land owner, but in 1916 disposed of his sheep and in the following year he built the Luce Hotel, a brick building of thirty rooms and comprising the best hotel in Teton County.

Mr. Luce is a republican in his political views, though he has never been an aspirant for public office. On September 18, 1872, Mr. Luce married Sarah A. Seaman, a native of Ohio, and to them have been born three children, namely: Raymond, who married Ida Carson, and they are the parents of six children; Blanche is the wife of E. D. Jones and the mother of two children; and Harry J.

The Luce family has long occupied a high place in the esteem of the people of Teton County, because of their progressive spirit and their interest in all movements for the advancement and upbuilding of the community.

WILLIAM BROWNFIELD. Among Montana merchants few have had a longer and more successful experience in the territory and state than William Brownfield, of the Brownfield-Canty Carpet Company of Butte. Mr. Brownfield was connected with some of the large mercantile concerns of the territory during the eighties, and for over a quarter of a century has been one of the active men in his present business at Butte.

He is a Kentuckian by birth and member of one of the oldest families in that state. The Brownfields were English and were colonial settlers in America. His grandfather, Calvin Brownfield, was born in LaRue County, Kentucky, in 1810, spent his life as a farmer in Hardin County, and died there in 1886. George Brownfield, father of the Montana merchant, was born in Hardin County in 1833, and expended the efforts of a long lifetime in farming and stock raising. He died in Hardin County in 1901. Politically he was a democrat. His wife was Elizabeth Perry, who was born in Hardin County in 1835 and died there in 1866. Of her children William was the oldest. Mattie, now the widow of a farmer in LaRue County, Kentucky, married for her first husband Thomas Creal, a merchant of Buffalo, LaRue County. Nannie is the wife of Dr. J. C. Jones, a physician at Buffalo, Kentucky. Richard is agent and train dispatcher for the Santa Fe Railway at San Marcial, New Mexico. For his second wife George Brownfield married Martha Durrett, of a prominent family of Taylor County, Kentucky. She died in Hardin County, and her four children are still living: Sallie and May both married and residents of LaRue County; Wade, a railroad man at Atlanta, Georgia, and Joseph, a broker at El Paso, Texas.

Mr. William Brownfield spent the first eighteen years of his life on his father's Kentucky farm.

He attended the rural schools of Hardin County, graduated from the high school at Elizabethtown, the county seat, and also attended Hamilton College at Elizabethtown. On leaving the farm he served an apprenticeship as clerk in a general dry goods store at Elizabethtown for seven years. That was his training and his chief equipment when he came to Butte in 1883. Mr. Brownfield for one year was connected with the Bonner Mercantile Company, after which for eight years he had charge of the carpet department of Sands & Boyce, later J. R. Boyce & Company. He then spent a year in Helena in charge of the carpet department of A. P. Curtin, and in 1892 returned to Butte and was one of the principals in the establishment and incorporation of the Brownfield-Canty Carpet Company, which began business September 5, 1892. From the beginning to the present time Mr. Brownfield has been active in its management with the office of secretary and treasurer. The other officers are James A. Canty, president, and J. W. Kemper, vice president. There is no other business of the kind in the state of Montana which carries a larger stock and sells its goods over a wider area. The trade is by no means confined to Butte and Silver Bow counties. The large modern store at 48-54 West Park Street is stocked with furniture, carpets, stoves, ranges and general household furnishings.

In politics Mr. Brownfield is an independent and is a member of the Baptist Church and the Rotary Club. He owns a modern home at 1035 West Platinum Street. In 1883, at Elizabethtown, Kentucky, he married Miss Virginia C. McMurtry. Mrs. Brownfield is a native of California, where her father was at one time a judge of the District Court. Mr. Brownfield's only child, William Clement, died at the age of four years.

JOHN SCOVIL, president and manager of the C. O. D. Laundry of Butte, is one of the enterprising men of the city, who has known how to advance his own interests and at the same time build up the prestige of his community. He was born at Provo City, Utah, on January 30, 1863, a son of L. N. Scovil, who was born at Middletown, Connecticut, in 1809, and died at Springville, Utah, in 1890.

Going to Ohio in young manhood, L. N. Scovil lived in that state, working as a court stenographer until 1856, when he went west to Provo, Utah, and served there as court stenographer and also as postmaster until 1865, when he went to Springville of the same state, and was a farmer in that vicinity until his death. With the organization of the republican party he found an expression of his political faith, and in the creed of the Mormons that of his religious belief. In young manhood he was made a Mason, and belonged to the local lodge of his fraternity at the time of his demise. Too old for active service during the war between the states, he went to London, England, and was a reporter on the London Times. A very highly educated man, he was always a leader among his associates. John Scovil is a child of his father's second marriage, the maiden name of his mother having been Hannah Marsden, and she was born near Liverpool, England, in 1839, and died at Springville, Utah, in July, 1907. Her parents came to the United States in 1840 and settled at Burlington, Iowa. Her father was William Marsden, born in England, and died at Parawan, Utah, in 1887, to which place he had come from Burlington, Iowa, at an early day, crossing the plains in pioneer fashion. Both as a merchant and extensive farmer he achieved success, and was one of the prominent men of his neighborhood and day. He, too, became a republican. The brothers and sisters of John Scovil, who was the eldest, were as follows: S. S., who is a civil engineer of Salt Lake City, Utah; Sylvia, who married John Roylance, who died in 1917 at Springville, Utah, where for thirty years he had been a clerk in the grocery store conducted under the name of Packard, and where his widow still lives; Mina, who married E. J. Wignal, manager of the Model Laundry of Salt Lake City, with which he has been connected for thirteen years; Clara, who married Eugene W. Raymond, conductor for the Rio Grande Railroad at Salt Lake City, Utah; and Jennie, who married Walter R. Dusenberry, an employe of the Model Laundry of Salt Lake City, having charge of the automobile department of it.

John Scovil attended the public schools of Springville, Utah, and when only thirteen years old left school and went to work to help his father, and until 1884 was employed in teaming. In the fall of that year he came to Montana and entered the employ of the Upper Works at Anaconda as watchman and later as timekeeper, remaining there for five years. He was then manager of the milk ranch at Anaconda for a year, when he became driver for the Anaconda Laundry Company and held that position for a time. In 1894 he established the Montana Laundry at Anaconda, conducting it successfully until 1899, when he disposed of it to another party and came to Butte. Here he bought the old Union Laundry near the corner of Mercury and Colorado streets from Keisser & Zundell, which was one of the pioneer laundries of the city, and conducted it for thirteen years, changing the name to the Montana Laundry.

In 1905 Mr. Scovil and George H. Casey bought all the other laundries of Butte, namely, the C. O. D. Laundry, the Troy Laundry and the Palace Laundry, each owning a half interest, and Mr. Scovil retained his ownership of the Montana Laundry. T. J. Casey was made manager of the C. O. D. Laundry. In the meanwhile a new laundry, the Taylor Laundry, was started on East Broadway, and Mr. Scovil took over the leading interest in it, which he still owns, having placed Joe Byrne in it as assistant manager. Today Mr. Scovil is the heaviest stockholder in the C. O. D. Laundry, which is incorporated for $200,000, is its president and manager, and he has Karl Niessler as his assistant manager. Mr. Scovil is also president and manager of the Taylor Laundry.

In 1911 Mr. Scovil consolidated the Taylor and Montana laundries and incorporated them for $150,000, taking the controlling stock, which he still holds. The C. O. D. Laundry is the largest in Montana and employment is given to 100 persons, while at the Taylor Laundry seventy-five persons are employed. Therefore, taking into consideration all of Mr. Scovil's laundry interests, he may truthfully be said to be the largest laundryman in Montana. The C. O. D. Laundry is at No. 400 East Park Street, and the company owns it, also the garage, barn and sheds, extending from East Park Street to Galena Street, and also a lodging house of forty-one rooms over the laundry. Mr. Scovil also owns a modern residence at No. 201 North Excelsior Avenue, which he built in 1917; an apartment house at Nos. 205-207 North Excelsior Avenue, which he built in 1917; the Lennox Hotel on West Granite Street; two brick blocks at the corner of Mercury and Colorado streets; two brick blocks on Main Street; the building housing the Unique Cleaning and Tailoring Company; three lots on Mercury and Main streets on which are located the Speedway Stables; a barn at No. 345 South Main Street; and twelve other dwellings in Butte.

In politics Mr. Scovil is a republican. He belongs to the Masons, the Elks, having joined Butte Lodge of that order eighteen years ago, and the Knights of Pythias, which he joined thirty years ago. He is also a member of the Rotary Club, the Butte Chamber of Commerce, the Silver Bow Club, the Country Club, in which he is a stockholder, and he is president of the Wardrobe Cleaning and Tailoring Company of Great Falls, Montana, owning one-third of the stock of that concern, which is incorporated, and owns the building in which it is located. Mr. Scovil has other interests outside Butte in addition to that in the cleaning and tailoring company just mentioned, for he owns an apartment house of fourteen apartments at No. 341 East Second, South, Salt Lake City, Utah; a business block at No. 451 South Main Street, and a modern brick dwelling at No. 207 Belmont Avenue, both of Salt Lake City, and a dwelling at Springville, Utah. He is president of the Scovil Realty Company, Incorporated, of Butte, which he also manages; and is president of the Unique Cleaning and Tailoring Company of Butte.

In 1891 Mr. Scovil was married at Anaconda, Montana, to Miss Mary J. Keith, a daughter of Mrs. Jane Keith, who died at Anaconda in 1901. Mrs. Scovil was born at Corinne, Utah, in 1873, and died at Anaconda on May 30, 1900, leaving one son, John Ralph who was born on November 15, 1892, and a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work. He attended Shattuck Military Academy at Faribault Minnesota, for three years, a preparatory school at Princeton, New Jersey, for a year, and then took a two years' course in the University of Pennsylvania. He is now secretary, treasurer and manager of the Unique Cleaning and Tailoring Company of Butte. On June 12, 1901, Mr. Scovil was married at Butte to Miss Lalia G. Walton, a daughter of John and Henrietta (Smith) Walton, of Butte. There are no children of this second marriage.

Mr. Scovil traces his family back to England, from whence its representatives came to the American colonies and became prosperous in the New England settlements. The story of Mr. Scovil's rise reads like fiction, and yet it is the simple truth. He is a man with an overpowering faculty for making money and for investing it wisely and profitably. Possessed of executive ability of the highest order, he has known how to take rundown property and build it up into paying investments. In addition he has been such an excellent judge of human nature that he has seldom made a mistake in chosing his associates and has placed in positions of authority only those in whom he could put implicit trust. There are few men of Butte, or the entire state, who have more diversified holdings than Mr. Scovil, and none of them are giving to their different interests such conscientious supervision which necessitates as much personal effort along divergent lines. He is a remarkable man, and his rise and continued prosperity reflect credit upon him and the region in which he has been able to work these manifold improvements.

Otis Lee has spent practically all his life in Butte, and is a young man whose qualities have gained him favor both in industrial affairs and public life. For the past five years his name and work have been associated with public office and he is now clerk of the District Court at Butte.

Mr. Lee was born at Bessemer, Michigan, January 7, 1891. His grandfather, Edward Lee, was born in County Waterford, Ireland, and as a young man settled in New York State and later moved to Northern Michigan. He died at Hancock, Michigan, in 1873. The father of the clerk of the District Court is Patrick H. Lee, long an esteemed resident of Butte, whose home is at 849 West Copper Street. He was born at Palmer Hill, New York, in 1860, but grew up in northern Michigan. One of his early experiences was logging in the northern peninsula, and later he was an engineer in the mines. He was married at Hancock, Michigan, in 1886, and finally left that state to go to North Dakota, as an employe of the Northern Pacific Railway. In June, 1895, he arrived at Anaconda, Montana, and worked in the smelters for Marcus Daly. His home has been at Butte since September, 1899, and he followed mining in Montana until he retired in 1913. He is a democrat and a Catholic. His wife, Kate Harrington, was born in 1862, at Hancock, Michigan. She was one of the first born in that then isolated settlement in northern Michigan. Patrick H. Lee and wife had a family of ten children. Edward J., the oldest, now at home and an engineer at the mines, was born June 27, 1887, and made a brilliant record as a soldier in the World war. He enlisted October 7, 1917, and after training at Camp Lewis and at Camp Mills, New York, left Camp Merritt, New Jersey, on December 14, 1917, crossed the Atlantic on the Leviathan, reaching England December 23, 1917, and landing in France on the 30th of December. He was on active duty during the greater part of the year 1918 from the time the American forces took their place in the battle line. He was at Chateau Thierry, at Fismes, at San Mihiel, and was twice on the front line in the Argonne Forest. He was in the Argonne when the armistice was signed, and then went to Germany with the first Army of Occupation, remaining from November, 1918, until April, 1919. He was mustered out May 24, 1919. Jerry, the second child, born January 21, 1889, lives at home with his parents and is a chauffeur for the Butte Fire Department. The third is Otis. Loretta, born in 1893, is a graduate of the Butte Central High School. Mary, born in 1895, is the wife of Charles Cappa, a millman at Black Rock Mine and a resident of Butte. James, born in 1897, a graduate of the Butte Central High School and now at home and working as time keeper at the Stewart Mine, enlisted in the navy June 15, 1918, served with the Asiatic Squadron, and his final duties were in the Harbor of Manila at Cavite. He was mustered out June 30, 1919. Margaret, the seventh child, was born in March, 1899, and is a graduate of the Central High School. John, born July 9, 1901, is an apprentice machinist at the Berkeley mine. William, born April 1, 1904, is in the Central High School. Catherine, the youngest, born June 27, 1909, is a pupil in the Immaculate Conception School at Butte.

Otis Lee was about four years old when his parents came to Montana. He graduated from the Butte High School in 1909, worked in a mine one year, and in 1910 became a timekeeper for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. He left that corporation in 1915 to become assistant city clerk during the term of Charles H. Lane as mayor. This office he resigned in 1916, having been elected clerk of the District Court for a term of four years. He entered office in January, 1917, and by his administration has completely deserved the confidence of his fellow citizens who chose him to this position. Mr. Lee is a democrat, is affiliated with Butte Council No. 668, Knights of Columbus, Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a member of the Catholic Church.

His home is at 426 South Main Street. May 21,

1917, at Butte, he married Miss Doris E. Smith. Her parents are William G. and Mary (Smith) Smith, of the same family name but not related. They are residents of Butte, where her father is cashier for the Butte Electric Railway Company.

ELMER E. ESSELSTYN. While his name is most widely known over the state of Montana through his former service as state treasurer, Mr. Esselstyn is and has been for a number of years one of the prominent and substantial business men of Butte, and the part he played in republican politics has been incidental to a long and active career in Montana covering more than thirty years.

He was born at the little village of Aztalan in Jefferson County, Wisconsin, November 8, 1864. His people were Wisconsin pioneers, and his American ancestry in the paternal line goes back to Jacob Esselstyn, who immigrated from Holland to New Amsterdam in 1657. His grandfather bore the name Jacob Esselstyn and was born in Cape Vincent, New York, in 1806 and subsequently became a pioneer farmer in Wisconsin. He died in Richland City, Wisconsin, in 1878. Jacob Esselstyn married a Miss McLeod, a native of Scotland.

Roderick M. Esselstyn, a son of Jacob, was born at Hudson, New York, in 1827, and as a young man removed to Jefferson County, Wisconsin, where he married and where for a number of years he followed the business of mason contracting. In 1878 he went to Blue Earth, Minnesota, where he died the following year. He was a republican and a member of the Baptist Church, and his death was the direct result of the severe wounds received while a Union soldier during the Civil war. He had enlisted in 1861 in Company F of the 29th Wisconsin Infantry, and went all through the war. He was in the battle of Gettysburg, and was also in the Red River campaign under General Banks. He was twice severely wounded. Roderick Esselstyn married Ellen M. Strong, who was born in Hibernia, New Jersey, in 1825, and died at Santa Barbara, California, in July, 1919, at the advanced age of ninety-four. She was of a prominent family, her mother being a descendant of the De Castalines of France. Her grandfather, John Strong, was a native of Ireland, and came to the American colonies in time to participate as a soldier with the Continental armies during the struggle for independence. By trade he was an iron worker. He died at Morristown, New Jersey. His son Samuel Strong, father of Ellen M. Strong, was born in New Jersey in 1793, and for many years was a prominent iron master at Hibernia, New Jersey. His last years were spent in retirement at Blue Earth, Minnesota, where he died in 1883.

Elmer E. Esselstyn is the younger of two children. His older brother, Sam, is a dairy farmer in the great dairy district of Jefferson County, Wisconsin. Elmer spent the years of his boyhood on a farm in Jefferson County, Wisconsin, and had to be satisfied with the advantages of the rural schools. Soon after he was thirteen years of age he began doing regular farm work, and after going to Minnesota with his parents he was employed in a store at Jackson until the death of his father. Soon afterwards he found an opening as clerk in a store at Minneapolis, and lived there until 1887. His education, his opportunities in a business way and his varied achievements are all due to the initiative and courage which enabled him to take life as he found it and make the best of his circumstances.

Mr. Esselstyn came to Glendive, Montana, in 1887, in company with Angus Brown, master mechanic of the Northern Pacific Railway. For a time he was employed as shop clerk at Glendive and during 1888-89 as a locomotive fireman. He was then promoted to the purchasing department, with headquarters at Red Lodge, and was in the service of the Northern Pacific until he resigned to become clerk of court of Carbon County. That county was created in 1900, and he was elected as the first incumbent of the office. He was re-elected in 1904, but resigned in June, 1906, to accept the federal office of register of United States Land Office at Billings. He was the appointee of President Roosevelt, and was the first register after the opening of the office. This position he also resigned in 1908, after the State Republican Convention had nominated him for state treasurer. Mr. Esselstyn was elected in the fall of 1908, beginning his duties in January, 1909, and for four years was busy with his official duties at Helena.

In the meantime he was serving as trustee of the funds at the organization of the Montana Life Insurance Company and the Montana Fire Insurance Company, and subsequently became vice president and treasurer of the Montana Fire Insurance Company. In that capacity he has been instrumental in developing the business of this corporation until it is one of the leading concerns in point of volume of business in the northwest.

Mr. Esselstyn is also a director of the Boston Montana Development Company and the Southern Montana Railway Company. His offices are at 120 West Granite Street. Mr. Esselstyn is a member of the Baptist Church, is prominent in Masonry, his affiliations being with Billings Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Billings Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, Billings Commandery, Knights Templar, Helena Consistory and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is a member of the Rotary Club and the Silver Bow Club at Butte.

Mr. Esselstyn resides in the Idaho Apartments at 224 West Porphry Street. He married at Butte April 6, 1915, Miss Lottie Hardee. Mrs. Esselstyn was born in Iowa and is a graduate of the high school of Minneapolis, Minnesota.

JAMES P. CROULEY, proprietor of the Towanda Hotel of Hot Springs, is one of the progressive young men of this section, and assisted by his capable wife has developed a business that is in a flourishing condition, and that has a reputation for good service and excellent meals that is carried all over the country by satisfied guests. He was born at Towanda, Bradford County, Pennsylvania, a son of James and Mary (Griffin) Crouley, and second in order of birth in the family of six children of his parents. The Crouley home was a fine old colonial mansion, in which the father and grandfather of James P. Crouley were also born. It had massive white pillars supporting the veranda which ran clear across the front, and great open fireplaces inside. Having stood for so long, this house was the scene of many interesting incidents, and it is claimed that the blazed Indian trail used by the noted Indian fighter and Revolutionary hero, Gen. Anthony Wayne, ran through the Crouley property.

James P. Crouley was graduated from the Towanda State College, having specialized in architecture and building, and followed that line of business for some years prior to coming West to continue in it. He selected Seattle, Washington, as his new place of residence, but later came to Montana, and for a time was engaged as an architect and builder at Plains, executing some very important contracts there, including the beautiful high school building, which stands as a monument to his skill and faithful carrying out of the specifications of his contract. While at Plains he met and was married to Miss Margaret Pendergrass, born at Willsboro, New York, a daughter of Thomas and Ellen (Ryan) Pendergrass, natives of Vermont and Ireland, respectively, the ceremony occurring on May 2, 1910. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Crouley lived at Sand Point, Idaho, for a time, where Mr. Crouley was engaged in business, and from there they went to Wallace, Idaho, and subsequently to Couer d'Alene, in both of which places Mr. Crouley continued to operate as an architect and builder.

In the meanwhile their attention was attracted to Hot Springs and the opening here for a first class hotel to accommodate the thousands who come here yearly, and they finally erected a modern three-story hotel containing thirty-four rooms and named it for Mr. Crouley's birthplace. An electric light plant has been installed which furnishes light for every room and all the outbuildings, and the power for raising a supply of soft water so that each room has in it both hot and cold. While drilling for water Mr. Crouley struck an unlimited supply of artesian water. An experienced chef is employed and the cuisine is famed for its superior quality. During the hunting season the Towanda has as fine game on its tables as can be found in the country, and all the year around fresh vegetables, eggs, cream, milk and butter are used in plentiful abundance. This hotel is noted for the courtesy, geniality and amiability displayed. When a stranger steps into the large pleasant lobby he is at once made to feel at home because of the friendly and homelike atmosphere which prevails. The lobby is decorated with rare and beautiful plants, and the official barrenness so noticeable in some hotels is entirely absent. Although new to the business, Mr. and Mrs. Crouley have made their undertaking a success from the beginning, and their hotel ranks with the best in this part of the state. They are boosters for Hot Springs, and are always ready to give both financial and moral support to all measures having for their object the betterment of the community. As Mr. Crouley is occupied with his building operations, much of the burden of the management has fallen upon the shoulders of Mrs. Crouley, who has proved equal to her responsibilities. She is a cultured lady, who has traveled extensively both in this country and abroad, at one time with her mother traveling in Europe and visiting London, Dublin, Edinburgh, and the principal cities of the Continent. The people of Montana seem to pull together to produce results. Much of the factional jealousy to be found in other states fortunately is absent here, and among those who are "pulling" for their town and state Mr. and Mrs. Crouley occupy a very prominent place.

Mrs. Crouley's father, Thomas Pendergrass, is one of the pioneers of Montana, and after coming here took so active a part in politics that he was sent to the State Assembly to represent his district several times, both in the Upper and Lower houses, and is the father of some very important legislation. He served for four years as game warden of Missoula County and four other counties which were included in the district under his jurisdiction. His wife was graduated from the University of Dublin, Ireland, and was not only a lady of unusual mental attainments, but strikingly beautiful as well. Mrs. Crouley resembles her mother, and her capabilities were developed at Saint Mary's Academy of Salt Lake City, Utah, from which she was graduated, following which she took a special course in music in the Sisters Academy of the Sacred Heart of Missoula, Montana. Desiring to be of use in the world, she entered Columbus Hospital at Great Falls, Montana, where she began her training as a professional nurse, and after a year went to Chicago, Illinois, and completed her course in the Cook County Hospital of that city, from which she was graduated. There are not many ladies who have been so carefully trained as she, and she feels that her studies have been of inestimable use to her in her present undertaking. Guests of the Towanda Hotel benefit from the spotlessness of their rooms and the entire establishment from her years of training in sanitary observances, while her culture and musical attainments make her a delightful hostess and valued member of the best social circle of Hot Springs. Mrs. Crouley is a Catholic. Both she and Mr. Crouley are admirers of President Wilson, and vote the democratic ticket.

ARTHUR THOMAS has been a resident of Montana over thirty-five years, since early boyhood, and the business that has chiefly occupied him and in which he is still engaged is ranching, near Avon in Powell County. Mr. Thomas is at present a member of the Board of County Commissioners of Powell County.

He was born in the neighboring state of Idaho at Malad, August 29, 1872. He is of Welch ancestry on both sides. His grandfather, Thomas Thomas, spent all his life in South Wales, where he was a miner. The father, Reese P. Thomas, was born in South Wales in 1815, was reared there and came to the United States in 1849. Soon afterward he crossed the plains to Utah, was married in that western territory, and farmed in Utah and Idaho for a number of years. In 1884 he left his ranch at Malad and located at Butte, where he did teaming and followed other occupations for two years. In 1886 he located on his ranch and farm near Avon, and died there in 1892. His enterprise as a farmer brought him abundant means and prosperity. Politically he was identified with the republican party. His wife was Mary Evans, who was born in South Wales in 1835. She died at Deer Lodge in 1908. They were the parents of ten children, Arthur being next to the youngest. Reese the first in age was a farmer and died at Malad, Idaho, at the age of sixty-two; Sarah married Isaac Price and both died on their ranch at Avon; Eph is a sheep man at Malad; Thomas is a retired rancher at Avon; Margaret lives at Malad, widow of David M. Jones, who was a farmer; Etta is unmarried and a resident of Avon; Rachel lives at Race Track, Montana, widow of P. H. Meagher, who was a miner and rancher; Alexander died at Avon at the age of twenty-nine; Arthur is the next in age; and Emma is the wife of Frank Leibsch, a cattle buyer at Helena, Montana.

Mr. Arthur Thomas acquired his early education in the public schools of his native town in Idaho. He was twelve years of age when his parents located at Butte and fourteen when they settled on their ranch at Avon. He was his father's assistant on the ranch which he now owns. He has 800 acres, with water rights, and this is one of the valuable places of Powell County. The ranch is five miles north of Avon. Mr. Thomas does an extensive business raising cattle.

He was elected to his present post as a county commissioner in 1916 for a term of six years. He was elected on the republican ticket. In February, 1914, at Helena, Mr. Thomas married Miss Laura Beck, daughter of L. P. and Mary Beck. Her parents reside at Race Track, Montana, her father being a retired pioneer rancher of Powell County. Mrs. Thomas before her marriage was a teacher for several years. They have one son, Willard, born November 15, 1917.

ANDREW KARL RESNER, M. D. In Iowa, where he practiced fifteen years, and at Ronan, where he has had his home since 1910, Dr. Resner has always enjoyed exceptional standing and success as a physician and surgeon. Special interest is added to his professional standing by reason of his service with the rank of captain in the Medical Reserve Corps during the late war. One of his sons was also a soldier, an aviator, and saw hard and strenuous duty on the battle front in France.

Doctor Resner has been an American resident since he was fourteen years of age. He was born at Plotzka, Russia, July 22, 1865. His father, Andrew Resner, was born in the same locality in 1839. He had a small farm which he cultivated, and also served at one time as chief of police at Plotzka. After the death of his first wife he came to the United States, became a farm owner at Scotland, South Dakota, and in 1907 moved to Gascoyne, North Dakota, where he still owns a farm and at the age of over eighty retains much of his strength and takes an active interest in his work and his home community. He is a republican and a member of the Congregational Church. His first wife was Caroline Lyer, who spent all her life in Russia. She was the mother of two sons: Jacob P., manager of the Masonic Temple at Yankton, South Dakota; and Dr. Andrew Karl. For his second wife Andrew Resner married Margaret Stortz. They have four children: Mary, wife of Ludwig Hoffman, a farmer at Gascoyne, North Dakota; Nathaniel, John and Emanuel, all farmers at Gascoyne.

Doctor Resner attended the public schools of his native country to the age of fourteen. As a boy on his father's homestead in South Dakota he attended rural schools for two years, and in 1886 graduated from the German Seminary at Crete, Nebraska. Doctor Resner first prepared himself for the ministry, and is a graduate of the Chicago Theological Seminary. He received his degree from that institution in 1889. Later he abandoned the ministerial calling, and in preparation for medicine attended the University of Iowa at Iowa City, where he was graduated M. D. in 1895. The same year he began practice at Manning Iowa and during the sixteen years of his busy work as a physician there he was also president of the Board of Education. Doctor Resner located at Ronan in 1910, and except while away in the army has attended with skill and proficiency to his extensive general practice. He owns a modern home and office at Ronan. For eight years he was president of the Board of Education of District No. 28 at Ronan.

On January 25 1917, Doctor Resner was commissioned at Helena with the rank of first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps. He was called to active duty on June 1, 1918, was first at Fort Douglas in Salt Lake City, spent two months with the Twenty-first Regiment at Taliaferro Camp at San Diego, California, then accompanied the Twenty-first of Camp Kearney, and became regimental surgeon of the Eighty-first Regiment, organizing its medical service. He continued with the Eighty-first until after the signing of the armistice. His next duty was as post surgeon of the Remount Station at Camp Kearney, and he remained there until the date of his honorable discharge on May 20, 1919. Doctor Resner is still a captain in the Medical Reserve Corps, with a reserve commission valid for five years, subject to call by the Government. He is a member of the Missoula County and State Medical Societies, also the American Medical Association, is a republican, and is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World, Modern Woodmen of America and a former member of the Odd Fellows.

In 1890, at Crete, Nebraska, Doctor Resner married Miss Lydia N. Shaerer, daughter of John and Margaret (Lamlin) Shaerer. Her mother died at Canton, Missouri, and her father at Lafayette, Indiana. Her father was a Congregational minister who served many churches in the Middle West. Mrs. Resner completed her education in Doane College at Crete, Nebraska, and met her husband while there. They have four children: Herbert A., the oldest, born June 5, 1891, attended the University of Nebraska at Lincoln and is a professional musician living at Butte; Carl B., born November 20, 1892, is a graduate of the Manning, Iowa, High School, and is now on his father's ranch Roy J., a twin brother of Carl, is also a graduate of the Manning High School and is on the home ranch. Harold R., born July 23, 1898, lives with his parents at Ronan and is employed in a drug store. He was the soldier son. He spent a year and a half in France, being with the One Hundred and Fifty-seventh Aerial Squadron. He was mustered out in June, 1919.

When Doctor Resner came to Ronan in 1910 he homesteaded a claim and has invested much money and time in the improvement of his place. He now has 440 acres located nine miles south of Ronan. This is a productive ranch, growing hay, grain, cattle and hogs.

A. M. STERLING is proprietor of one of the chief general mercantile establishments at Ronan. He has been in Montana more than thirty years, and is one of a numerous colony of former residents of the eastern Canadian provinces who have become substantial and highly respected residents in different sections of Montana.

Mr. Sterling was born at Frederickton, New Brunswick, February 12, 1869. His father, J. A. Sterling, was born in the same Canadian town in 1836, and for many years was a merchant at Frederickton. Later he lived for a time at Boston, Massachusetts, and Block Island, Rhode Island, and in 1907 came to Montana and was a retired resident of Missoula until his death in 1912. He married Margaret Thorne, who was born in New Brunswick in 1838 and died at Missoula in 1914. They were the parents of four children: F. T., president of the Western Montana National Bank at Missoula; Agnes, wife of W. H. Reid, a printer at Augusta, Maine; A. M. Sterling; and Margaret, who died at the age of twenty-one years.

A. M. Sterling was educated in the schools of Frederickton, and in 1883, at the age of fourteen, began working in a general store at Block Island, Rhode Island. He was there two years, and for one year was employed by the grocery house of Cobb, Bates & Yerxa at Boston. Mr. Sterling was a very young man when he came to Missoula in 1886. His previous training made him a useful employe of the Missoula Mercantile Company, an organization with which he remained until 1899. The following year he was with the Montana Hardware Company at Butte, and in 1900 joined the tide of gold seekers to Nome, Alaska. He prospected in mines in the far north for a year and a half, but in the fall of 1902 returned to Montana and from January, 1903, to January, 1905, was under sheriff of Missoula County.

Mr. Sterling has been a leading factor in the community of Ronan since May, 1905, when he bought the general store business of Jesse R. Sear. He has a large store building, several warehouses, and keeps all the goods and commodities required by the people of his section of Missoula County.

J. Newton Alexander,

He also owns a modern home in Ronan, a ranch southwest of town, and another adjoining Ronan on the east.

Mr. Sterling is state highway commissioner, an office to which he was appointed in 1919. Politically he is a republican, and is affiliated with the Ronan Lodge of Odd Fellows and Hell Gate Lodge No. 383 of Elks, at Missoula.

In 1905, at Missoula, he married Miss Bessie J. Farrell, daughter of T. J. and Elizabeth (Bannon) Farrell, residents of Missoula. T. J. Farrell is widely known among Montana stockmen. He and his wife came to Montana during the territorial period. At one time he owned the largest band of horses possessed by any individual in Montana. Mrs. Sterling is a graduate of the State Normal School at Dillon, and before her marriage was a successful teacher in the schools of Butte and Missoula. Mr. and Mrs. Sterling have three children: Margaret, born March 6, 1906, a student in the Ronan High School; George, born October 3, 1909; and Robert, born July 4, 1915.

Joseph A. Lemire. With a broad and varied experience in merchandising in Montana extending over a period of a quarter of a century, Joseph A. Doctor Lemire and wife had a family of nine children: Adolph, a candy manufacturer at Lynn, Massachusetts; Joseph A.; Arthur, a painter, paper hanger and decorator at Windsor, Canada; Ross E., a partner of Joseph A.; Fred, a carpenter and builder at Tecumseh; Henry, who is employed in the Dodge Company's automobile works in Detroit, and has also attained considerable fame on the stage as a prestidigitator; Anna, wife of Israel Parent, a merchant at Tecumseh; Azilda, wife of Constant Carrierre, an employe of the Ford automobile works at Ford City, Walkerville, Ontario; and one child that died in infancy.

At the age of eighteen Joseph A. Lemire had completed his education in the public schools of Ontario, and had begun work in a general store near Windsor. He gained much knowledge of merchandising during the next four years, and in 1895, when he came to Anaconda, he had the experience that made him an acceptable and useful employe with the McCallum & Clotier Mercantile Company. He was with that organization many years, beginning as clerk, and for twelve years was office manager.

At the time of the opening of the Flathead Reservation in the fall of 1909 Mr. Lemire established a general store at Ronan. His store building and stock of goods were destroyed by fire in 1912, following which he built his present store block, including the postoffice building adjoining. This is one of the best equipped general mercantile establishments in Missoula County. Mr. Lemire was appointed and has served as postmaster of Ronan since 1915. He was the second citizen of Ronan honored with the post of mayor, and he also served one term as president of the local Commercial Club. Another result of his enterprise and influence was the Mission Valley Fair, which he helped establish and which has held three succesful fairs at Ronan. He is a director in the Ronan Flour Mill Company and owns a modern home and other real estate.

Mr. Lemire is a democrat, a member of the Catholic Church, of St. John's Society, and is a third degree Knight of Columbus, being affiliated with Anaconda Council No. 882, a member of the Catholic Order of Foresters at Anaconda and Anaconda Lodge No. 239 of the Elks.

In 1905, at Grand Forks, North Dakota, Mr. Lemire married Miss May McLean, daughter of Hugh and Hattie (Tolan) McLean. Her mother lives at Winnipeg, Canada. Her father, deceased, was a railway station agent. Mrs. Lemire is a graduate of the North Dakota Normal School at Mayville, and was a teacher in that state before her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Lemire became the parents of five children: Gertrude, born March 10, 1906, a junior in the Ronan High School; Hugh, born January 4, 1908, and Paul, born February 17, 1910, both grammar school pupils; Marjorie, born January 1, 1914, and Lois, born February 1, 1917.

James Newton Alexander, M. D. The physician of today not only is a trained man whose every faculty has been brought to the highest perfection, but he is also one whose vast experience with people and affairs enables him to act with the efficiency of a really first-rate man, and to energize all those with whom he comes in contact. He does not work for spectacular results, but sane, sound progress, not only in his profession, but in other directions. To him and his associates belongs the credit for practically all the advance made in civic sanitation and the obliteration of many dread diseases formerly deemed incurable. Such results have come from aggressive and self-sacrificing labor not only on the part of the few who come into public notice, but the profession as a whole, for no other band of men so truly work together as do those who are devoting themselves to medical science. One of the men who stands high among the physicians and surgeons of this class is Dr. James Newton Alexander of Roundup.

Doctor Alexander was born at Fannettsburg, Franklin County, Pennsylvania, April 8, 1873, a son of Randall McGinley and Mary Janet (McGanghey) Alexander, and great-grandson of Col. W. Alexander, who served during the War of 1812, defending Baltimore, Maryland, against the attacks of Lord Ross. Randall M. Alexander was born at Shirleysburg, Pennsylvania, and died at the age of sixty-eight years in 1913. His wife was born at Fairfield, Pennsylvania, and died at the age of thirty-eight years, in 1895. They had three children, of whom Doctor Alexander is the eldest. Growing up in his native town, Randall M. Alexander attended its schools and Jefferson Medical College, and after completing his studies located, at Fannettsburg Pennsylvania, where he spent the remainder of his life. He belonged to the Franklin County Medical Association, the Pennsylvania State Medical Society and served on the school board for many years. He was a democrat in his political convictions.

James Newton Alexander attended Mercersburg College, from which he was graduated in 1891, and Jefferson Medical College, from which he was graduated in 1895, following which for eighteen months he was house surgeon of the Pennsylvania Railroad Hospital at Altoona, Pennsylvania. In August, 1896, Doctor Alexander was appointed chief surgeon of Saint James Hospital at Butte, Montana, and held that position for ten years, and then returned to his old home and for a time was associated with his father in the latter's practice. Still later he spent six months at Washington, District of Columbia, in surgical work, and then came back to Montana, locating permanently at Roundup, as physician and surgeon for the Republic Coal Company, and was so serving when he enlisted in May, 1917, for the great war, receiving his commission as captain on October 1, 1917, and on April 1, 1918, was called into the service, being sent first to Fort Riley in the Officers' Training Camp, from which he was transferred to the Casualty Officers' Depot in France on July 1, 1918. On July 8th of that year he received orders to report to Base Hospital No. 7, La Rochelle, France, and was assigned as chief assistant to the base surgeon there, but was later made chief operating surgeon at Base Hospital No. 39, and given the major operations of the American Red Cross Hospital at La Rochelle. In August, 1918, he was recommended for a commission as major, which he received on February 17, 1910. The base hospital was abandoned in May, 1919, at which time he was the commanding officer and operating surgeon at Sussex Hospital, Base Section No. 7, La Rochelle. On July 1, 1919, he received orders to report at Brest, France, and returned to Hoboken, New Jersey, and later to Camp Dix, Wrightown, New Jersey, and was given a week's leave to report to Camp D. A. Russell, Wyoming, where he received his honorable discharge on July 15, 1919, and returned at once to Roundup, where he resumed his practice, and his former affiliation with the Republic Coal Company. He belongs to the county and state medical societies, and to the Sons of the American Revolution. Like his father, Doctor Alexander is a democrat.

Doctor Alexander was married to Germaine Kiere, who was born in Belgium, educated in England and was at the head of the welfare work of the American Red Cross at La Rochelle, France, which had charge of taking care of the Belgian refugees. Doctor Alexander and his wife met while engaged in their work for humanity, and were married on February 8, 1919, at La Rochelle. Their experiences during the great war have broadened them in every respect, and made their outlook on life somewhat different from those who have only viewed the conflict through the reports of others. Having for so long had the responsibility of the welfare of many upon their hands, they developed a capability which will never leave them, and although that was the last consideration they had in mind when they enlisted to help others, their future will be the brighter and happier for what they learned in that connection. Doctor Alexander is at present a major in the Medical Reserve Corps, U. S. Army.

James R. Faulds came to Montana more than thirty-five years ago and soon turned from teaching to the newspaper business, a vocation and profession in which his singular gifts and abilities have had their best scope.

Mr. Faulds, who was editor of the Northwest Tribune of Stevensville, was born at Yellow Springs, Dauphin County, Pennsylvania, April 19, 1853. His grandfather, James Faulds, had come from Scotland and settled in Pennsylvania in the early forties. He and several of his sons were mine workers in Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia. James Faulds, Jr., also acquired much knowledge of surveying and was employed to operate stationary engines for coal companies. Both James Faulds, Sr. and Jr., afterward moved to Glencoe, Wisconsin, where they spent the rest of their lives. James Faulds, Jr., married a lady of Scotch family, her father having been one of the California forty-niners.

James Russell Faulds was a small child when his parents moved to Wisconsin, and he received his education in the common graded and normal schools of that state. He began writing for newspapers when only fourteen years old, and at the age of sixteen began teaching school. He combined teaching with work on a farm, and at the age of twenty-seven he bought the plant of the Independent News at Independence, Wisconsin. He managed and published the paper for four years, and also was principal of the graded schools there.

In 1886 Mr. Faulds came to Montana, primarily to accept a place as teacher at Thompson Falls. He found that a second contract had been made with a woman from New York, and he gallantly resigned the honor to her and began transporting goods from Thompson to the mines at Murray, Idaho. In 1887 he was employed to teach the Stevensville school, and he made his influence much wider than his immediate contract with his scholars. He organized debating clubs and did much to improve the intellectual life of the community. In the summer of 1888 he took up a preemption on the west side of the river, proved up on it, and on February 22, 1889, entered upon his long continued duties with the Northwest Tribune, beginning as secretary, editor and manager. Soon afterward he bought the paper from the stockholders and for practically thirty years guided its destinies as one of the best news organs in that section of Montana.

The Tribune in Mr. Faulds' hands has been an instrument directed toward the public's greatest good. Politically it was independent, with clearly and strongly expressed standards of law and order in affairs both national and local. The value of his ideals to the community has been recognized in the numerous offices he has been asked to fill. For several terms he held the office of alderman, and for three terms the highest municipal office, that of mayor. During his municipal career the city waterworks were installed—owned by the municipality—the electric lighting system put into operation, and the wide cement sidewalks built. The elimination of grafting and law breaking received his most earnest attention, and it is a matter eliciting much gratification that Stevensville is now considered one of the cleanest towns in the state. So courageous had Mr. Faulds been in defense of the right and so determined in the exposition of what he believed, or knew, to be wrong, that his career of newspaper activity has at times been fraught with difficulty. The five suits brought against him cost him a four years' struggle, but he was successful in his opposition of the "court house ring," in which conflict he was ably supported by Colonel Sanders. In July, 1919, Mr. Faulds disposed of his interest in the paper and has since been engaged in closing the accounts of the business.

Mr. Faulds is a democrat, was an active supporter of Woodrow Wilson in both campaigns and is a Royal Arch Mason, and for thirty years has been actively and officially affiliated with the Order of Good Templars. In 1893 he represented the Grand Lodge of this order at Des Moines, in 1906 at Seattle, and in 1908 at Washington and attended the one hundredth anniversary of Templars at Saratoga, New York, in 1908.

Just before coming to Montana Mr. Faulds married Miss Rosetta Mosimann on April 22, 1886. She was a daughter of Christopher and Marie (Bracher) Mosimann, of Swiss descent. Mr. and Mrs. Faulds had one son and five daughters: James Welcome, who was born at Thompson Falls, Montana, in 1887; and Martha, Ruth, Russell, Kathryn and Elizabeth, all natives of Stevensville.

JOHN EGAN came to Montana in 1891, and has been continuously since that time a resident of Bonner. Connected with the Bonner plant of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, his faithful and diligent service has earned him steady promotion until he is now mill superintendent of this plant and one of the men high in the esteem of the corporation.

Mr. Egan was born at Frederickton, New Brunswick, Canada, January 3, 1868, son of John R. and Mary (Nicholson) Egan. His father was born in County Clare, Ireland, of Protestant ancestry, and was a lifelong member of the Church of England. He was reared in Ireland and was married in New Brunswick. All his active life was spent as a school teacher. He died in New Brunswick in 1891. In politics he was a conservative. His wife, Mary Nicholson, was born in Scotland in 1825 and died at Bonner, Montana, in 1913. They had a large family of children: Robert, who died at the age of four years; Elizabeth, who died in New Brunswick; Augusta, who has never married and is department superintendent in a cotton factory at Portland, Maine; Theodore Edward, an electrical engineer for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway at Ravalli, Montana; John; Martha, wife of Charles Hodgson, employed in the saw mill of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Bonner; Harry W., a tanner living at Halifax, Nova Scotia; and Agnes, wife of C. W. Hensel, a ship carpenter and shipyard worker living at Eureka, California.

John Egan received his education in the public schools of his native city, and lived there until he was twenty-two years of age. On leaving Canada he worked in the lumber woods of West Virginia for a year and then came to Montana. As mill superintendent at Bonner he has under his supervision a hundred and fifty employes of the plant. He is a democrat in politics and is affiliated with Covenant Lodge No. 6, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Hell Gate Lodge No. 383 of the Elks, and Missoula Camp No. 5329, Modern Woodmen of America, all at Missoula.

In 1903, at Spokane, Washington, he married Miss Clara Lebert, daughter of Frank and Ellen (Cox) Lebert, her mother being a resident of Bonner. Her father, deceased, was a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Egan have three children: Kathleen Mildred, born April 9, 1905; Winifred, who died at the age of two years; and Marion, born January 2, 1913.

WILLIAM EDWARD CARROLL has been a lawyer of Butte for thirty years. The law was his first choice of profession and he has remained loyal to its ideals from the beginning. His practice has brought him that satisfaction due to hard and successful work, and a proper degree of remuneration for his labors. Like many really successful lawyers Mr. Carroll has only a brief record of participation in public affairs.

He was born December 24, 1868, at Independence, now a suburb of Kansas City, Missouri. He was fourth among the five children of Rev. Alanson and Mary E. (Murch) Carroll, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Vermont. His father was a Presbyterian minister, educated at Western Reserve University in Ohio, and was one of the pioneers of his church in western Missouri and eastern Kansas. He died at Independence August 17, 1908.

William E. Carroll when three years of age was taken by his parents to Olathe, Kansas, but in 1881 the family home was returned to Independence. He acquired his education in the public schools of those two towns, also attended the Kansas City High School, and graduated in law from the University of Michigan in 1890. He came to Butte a young lawyer well recommended by his preceptors and former associates, but for his success has chiefly relied upon his individual ability to transact business and solve problems of litigation to the best interests of his clients.

Mr. Carroll was assistant city attorney of Butte from 1907 to 1909, and at different times has taken an active and speaking part in republican campaigns. He has been an official in the Grand Lodge of Masons of Montana, was master of Mount Moriah Lodge No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Butte from 1897 to 1899, and is also affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Elks.

At Butte on September 27, 1894, he married Miss Anna Martin, daughter of James T. and Margaret (Corby) Martin. Her father was born in England, was a skillful mechanic by trade, was a veteran soldier of the Civil war and died at Truro, Massachusetts, December 5, 1909. For many years he was a resident of Montana and is well remembered in the state. Mr. and Mrs. Carroll have three children: Helen, born December 9, 1896; Chauncey M., born August 8, 1901; and Charles R., born December 12, 1902.

MILES JORDAN CAVANAUGH has been a prominent Butte attorney for over a quarter of a century, has extensive interests in mining and other enterprises and represents a prominent pioneer family of the territory and state.

He was born at Denver, Colorado, October 3, 1865, son of Miles and Elizabeth (Downs) Cavanaugh. His father came to the Butte district of Montana in the early sixties, was a miner and prospector, and rose to the superintendency of a mine. He was selected by President Grover Cleveland as one of the men to safeguard the Government interests along the Northern Pacific Railway.

Miles Jordan Cavanaugh received his education in Butte, attending the public schools, and studied law with Carter & Clayberg. He was admitted to the bar November 2, 1891, and to practice in the Supreme Court on the 5th of the same month. Mr. Cavanaugh practiced at Helena from 1891 to 1894, and since then has been at Butte. He is a director and attorney for the Royal Development Company. Mr. Cavanaugh is a safe counsellor, a well read and hard working lawyer, and has also been a constant reader of good literature and enjoys the outdoor sports of fishing and hunting. He is a past noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is a member of the Silver Bow County and State Bar Associations.

He married Alphonsine Milot, daughter of H. A. Milot, one of the early mining men of Montana. By their union he had two children, Lorena and Martha. For his second wife Mr. Cavanaugh married Cora E. Baugh, a native of Kentucky.

JAMES LATIMER BRUCE, mining engineer at Butte, has had an interesting record of personal service during the past twenty years, one that has identified him with some of the big mining districts of the country and since 1913 with the state of Montana.

Mr. Bruce was born at Dublin, Ireland, May 20, 1880. His father, Stuart Bruce, was a native of Scotland and of a long line of sturdy Scotch ancestors. The mother, Margaret Latimer, was of Irish birth and of Scotch-Irish family. James Latimer Bruce received his first education in a kindergarten at London, England, in 1885. Later in that year his parents emigrated to Canada and from that time until he was thirteen Mr. Bruce lived on a farm and attended the public schools of Oxford County, Ontario, from 1889 to 1893. He left Canada with his brother, Stuart, for Denver, Colorado, in 1893, to join their father, who was then in the mercantile business. James Latimer Bruce during subsequent years had considerable work to do in his father's store at Denver, and when not in school was thus employed until 1899. He was a student in the public schools of Denver until 1894, and in 1896 entered the Colorado School of Mines, where he remained a student except for one year until graduating with the degree E. M. in 1901. In the meantime, in 1899, he was employed in the Cripple Creek gold mining district.

His experience and progress as a mining engineer during the past twenty years can be described briefly as follows: From graduation in 1901 he was chemist and assayer at the Little Johnny Mine at Leadville, Colorado, until 1902; surveyor and draftsman for the firm of Hills & Willis of Cripple Creek, 1902-03; chief engineer and later general foreman of the Federal Lead Company of Flat River, Missouri, until 1907; assistant manager of the Grace Zinc Company of Joplin, Missouri, 1907-09; and manager of the Continental Zinc Company of Joplin, 1909 to 1913.

Leaving the great mineral districts of Missouri, Mr. Bruce came to Montana and from March, 1913, to January 1, 1920, was manager of the Butte and Superior Mining Company of Butte. In September, 1919, he accepted his present responsibilities as manager of the Davis Daly Copper Company of Butte. Mr. Bruce is also a director in several mining companies.

He is a member of the Mining and Metallurgical Society of America, the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, the Montana Society of Engineers, the Silver Bow Club of Butte, the Butte Country Club, Elks Club, Masonic order, and in politics is a republican.

June 16, 1909, at Lexington, Missouri, he married Mary Louise Temple, of Joplin, Missouri. She died shortly after coming to Butte in 1913, leaving no living children. On December 25, 1915, Mr. Bruce married Leah Sidney Hills, of Denver, Colorado. Her father was Victor G. Hills, who was one of Colorado's early day engineers with office at Pueblo, and for a number of years practiced his profession at Denver and Cripple Creek. He was of the firm Hills & Willis of Cripple Creek, mentioned in preceding paragraph as the firm that employed Mr. Bruce soon after he graduated from the School of Mines. Mr. and Mrs. Bruce have three children: Mary Adaline, born in 1917; and James Stuart and Janet Victoria, twins, born in 1919.

DAVID E. BAIRD. The problems of health are really the problems of life and must pertain to all questions of human interest, so that the physician and surgeon is the most important man of his community. He must possess a wide range of general culture, be an observant clinician and well read neurologist, even though he never specializes along any particular line. To take his place among the distinguished men of his profession he must bear the stamp of an original mind, and be willing to be hard-worked, while at the same time his soul oftentimes faints within him when studying the mysteries of his calling. Acquainted as he is with the simple annals of the poor, and the inner lives of his patients, he acquires a moral power, courage and conscience which permits him to interfere with the mechanism of physical life, alleviating its woes and increasing its resistence to the encroachments of disease. No wonder that a skilled, learned and sympathetic medical man commands universal admiration and respect. Within recent years another badge of honor has been added to those to which the physician and surgeon is entitled, that of military service. The very flower of the medical profession has served this country in the hour of its greatest need, and not only saved countless lives, but preserved whole communities from the ravages of epidemics which usually follow in the wake of wars. One of the men of Montana entitled to distinction because of his skill and the eighteen years of military service he has rendered his Government, both as member of the state guards and regular army, is Dr. David E. Baird of Roundup.

Doctor Baird was born on his father's farm in Venango County, Pennsylvania, June 22, 1876, a son of John M. and Mary Grace (Hovis) Baird. This farm was the original location of the great-grandfather of Doctor Baird, who bought it in 1796, and on it John M. Baird was born October 29, 1848. His wife was also a native of Venango County, having been born on July 16, 1852. In July, 1871, they were married, and they became the parents of six children, namely: Susan M., who is the wife of J. C. Chambers, of West Newton, Pennsylvania; Doctor Baird, who was the second in order of birth; James C., who married Jessie Fulton, and served as sergeant in the Aviation Corps during the late war; Frank P., who married Bessie Barnes, is superintendent of the Roundup public schools; Almeda F., who married Rev. Edwin Howe, a missionary, died at Canton, China, where Mr. Howe was stationed, in 1915; and Jesse H., who married Sue Bragstad, of Roundup, Montana, is a Presbyterian minister and is now in charge of the First Presbyterian Church of Youngstown, Ohio; John M. Baird is a farmer and is also in the oil business, operating wells located on his farm. He is a man of prominence in his community, and has been elected several times on the democratic ticket to township offices, including those of assessor and collector. Very active in the Presbyterian Church, he has held the office of elder in it for many years and in the church and his community is an influence for good.

Doctor Baird attended the public schools of Venango County, the Pennsylvania State Normal School at Slippery Rock, Pennsylvania, the Grove City College at Grove City, Pennsylvania, and the medical department of the University of Maryland, being graduated from the latter in the class of 1906. For three years after his graduation Doctor Baird was physician and surgeon for the Ritter Lumber Company at Saginaw, North Carolina, from whence in 1910 he came west to Carlyle, Montana, and then on March 1, 1911, located at Roundup, where with the exception of the time he was engaged in military service he has since continued. He belongs to the county, state and national medical associations. In 1916 Doctor Baird was appointed health officer of Musselshell County, and reappointed in 1918, and served for two terms, and in 1917 he was appointed city health officer of Roundup, and served for two years. In politics he is a democrat, following in the footsteps of his father in his political belief. He belongs to Grove City Lodge No. 603, David E. Baird Jr. M.D.

Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Grove City, Pennsylvania; and he belonged to Bald Creek Chapter No. 36, Royal Arch Masons, but demitted to Roundup Chapter No. 30, Royal Arch Masons. He belongs to the Asheville, North Carolina Commandery, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Helena, Montana. Doctor Baird is also an active member of the Phi Chi Greek letter fraternity, having been the grand presiding national president.

In 1898 Doctor Baird enlisted in the Pennsylvania National Guards, served through the anthracite coal strike of 1902 with the Sixteenth Regiment, Pennsylvania National Guards, and on August 29, 1910, he was made a sergeant major of the Second Regiment, Montana National Guards, receiving his commission as second lieutenant in 1914, and was appointed assistant adjutant during the Butte riots in 1914. On June 19, 1916, he was ordered into service on the border, and on June 22d of that year received his commission as first lieutenant, being promoted to be battalion adjutant. He was released from duty on November 4, 1916, and mustered out of the service on March 25, 1917. During the late war he was ordered back into the service as first lieutenant, serving as such until August 3, 1917, when he was released and honorably discharged. He was appointed by Governor S. B. Stuart to serve on the local draft board of Musselshell County after he had volunteered for the medical service. His commission was received and passed through the surgeon-general's office to the adjutant-general's office on the day the armistice was signed. During 1917 Doctor Baird was in the general command of 163 regiments stationed at old Fort Keogh, from March 25 to August 5.

On October 30, 1907, Doctor Baird was united in marriage with Sarah Alice Whitney, born at Brandon, Vermont. Doctor and Mrs. Baird have three children, namely: Donald Whitney, Ruth Emily and David James. Doctor Baird is an earnest, carefully trained and faithful exponent of the healing art, never too much occupied to give time and attention to civic affairs, and few men stand any higher in popular esteem than he, and he has earned the confidence and affection he inspires.

JOHN J. O'NEILL has been a resident of Butte since 1903, in which year he moved from Denver to become manager of the Continental Oil Company over the district of Montana and northern Idaho.

His career might be briefly described as one of hard work, and as he has worked he has used the opportunities that have come and has achieved a degree of success sufficient to satisfy the ambition of a normal American citizen.

His parents were James and Sarah (O'Brien) O'Neill, both natives of Ireland. John J. was one of fourteen children and was born at Clifton Springs, Ontario County, New York, August 11, 1860. His birthplace is widely famous as the home of the Clifton Springs Sanitarium, whose superlative facilities have been patronized by many of America's foremost business men. After a few years of education in the local schools John J. O'Neill went to work at the Sanitarium as an errand boy. In time he made himself valuable to the management and the patrons of the sanitarium, and with increasing responsibilities remained there for ten years. The direct opportunity for a change of employment was due to his acquaintance with a guest of the sanitarium, Mr. C. S. Morey of Denver, who offered him a position with the C. S. Morey Mercantile Company.

Thus in 1881, at the age of twenty-one, Mr. O'Neill went to Denver and for six years was with the mercantile company, beginning as a utility man and when he resigned to go into business for himself he was foreman in one of the departments. Since 1887 practically all of Mr. O'Neill's business energies have been devoted to the oil business. He sold oil at retail in the city of Denver as a member of the firm Horan & O'Neill for about two years. In the meantime, in the latter part of 1887, he had become city salesman in Denver for the Continental Oil Company. Later he was made manager of the company's business at Colorado Springs, was there about six years, and for nine years had charge of the company's business at Leadville, Colorado. Then in 1903 the company selected him for the important responsibilities of looking after their business in Montana and northern Idaho, with Butte as his headquarters.

Since moving to Butte Mr. O'Neill has identified himself so far as consistent with all local enterprises and his name has been associated with the high minded and patriotic citizens of Montana. He is a democrat in politics, a member of the Catholic Church, of the Silver Bow Club, of the Elks and the Knights of Columbus, and is a former Grand Knight of the latter order at Butte. While in Denver he married Miss Alice Kendrick, of Ottawa, Illinois. She died at Denver in December, 1898, the mother of two children. The son, John R., born in July, 1890, at Colorado Springs, was educated in the public schools in Gonzaga University at Spokane and in the Art Institute of New York City. The daughter, Alice M., born in Colorado Springs, was graduated in 1913 from the Colorado State Normal School.

JAMES ALBERT POORE. A native son of Montana, James Albert Poore has enjoyed a steadily rising reputation as a lawyer at Butte for the past fifteen years. Most of this time has been devoted to the interests of a private clientage, though for nearly three years he was assistant attorney general of Montana.

Mr. Poore was born at Boulder, December 15, 1879, son of James and Jane Taylor (Baldwin) Poore. His parents were both natives of England. His father, born August 29, 1829, came to America in 1849, and was identified with the very first rush of prospectors to the valleys and gulches of Montana. He reached what is now the state of Montana in 1863, and was a placer miner at Virginia City, Last Chance Gulch, the Butte district and the vicinity of Boulder. After some years he went back to England and in 1877 brought his bride to Montana, still a territory. He died in Montana February 14, 1902, at the age of seventy-three. His wife, who was born October 2, 1846, survived her husband, and was the mother of four children: Mrs. Sarah Maude Boyington, James Albert, Thomas T. and Philip George.

James Albert Poore acquired his education in the public schools of Boulder, the Helena Business College and Butte Business College, and for five years, beginning at the age of nineteen, was employed by the law firm of Forbis & Mattison at Butte as a law clerk and stenographer. He acquired a considerable practical knowledge of the law while there, and also earned the funds sufficient to complete his legal education. Mr. Poore is a graduate in law from the law school of the University of Virginia, receiving his degree in 1905. From university he at once returned to Butte, where he has made a reputation for sound ability, careful handling of all interests entrusted to him, and on more than one occasion has exhibited brilliant qualifications as a lawyer. He is a republican in politics and was nominated in 1908 for county attorney of Silver Bow County. In May, 1910, he was appointed assistant attorney general, and gave his time to the law department of the state government until January, 1913.

Mr. Poore is a member of the Silver Bow Club, and is affiliated with Butte Lodge No. 240 of the Elks. June 3, 1911, he married Miss Mamie Lingo, daughter of Archie and Mary Lingo, of Anaconda, Montana. They have two children, James Albert, Jr., and Robert Arche.

CHARLES WARREN GOODALE is one of the eminent engineers of America. A resident of Butte, he is one of the oldest among a considerable number of former graduates of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology whose work and professional engagements have made them residents of Montana. It is forty-five years since Mr. Goodale graduated from that great American "tech" school, and since then his experience has taken him to many of the great copper mining districts of the West, and on professional engagements and in pursuit of recreation and knowledge he has become a world traveler.

Mr. Goodale was born at Honolulu, Hawaii, September 6, 1854, a son of Warren and Ellen R. (Whitmore) Goodale. He represents stanch and cultured New England ancestry, and the early home where he lived with an uncle from the age of six years was the old Goodale homestead at Marlboro, Massachusetts, an estate that has been in the family for more than two centuries. Both his father and mother were people distinguished by fine attainments and exceptional experience. His father, who was born at Marlboro, Massachusetts, in 1825, had to give up his studies at Yale College owing to an affliction of the eyes, and then on the recommendation of a physician took a long sea voyage, with the Hawaiian Islands as his destination. His aunt, Lucy Thurston, had for a number of years been a missionary at Hawaii. He made the voyage around Cape Horn in 1849, and considering the wonderful fascination of the Pacific Coast at that time it seems singular that he was not diverted to the gold fields of California. In Honolulu he became a tutor in the Royal School, subsequently was appointed marshal of the kingdom, and subsequently served as collector of customs at Honolulu. In 1852 he returned to the United States to claim his bride. Ellen F. Whitmore, to whom he had been engaged for several years, was also a native of Marlboro, Massachusetts, and as a young woman had become deeply interested in the education of the American Indians. She possessed the real courage of her New England ancestors, and in 1850, about a year after Warren Goodale set out upon his Pacific voyage, she undertook a then even more hazardous undertaking, and duties and an environment that offered a strange contrast to the home of culture in which she had been reared. From her eastern home she traveled by rail to Western Pennsylvania, and thence by several stages traveled down the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers and up the Arkansas as far as the low waters would permit, and thence by stage coach and wagon over a rough road to Tahlequah, the chief capital of the Cherokee tribe of civilized Indians in Indian Territory, now Eastern Oklahoma. She arrived after a journey of nearly six weeks and remained for two years as a teacher in the Indian schools among the Cherokees. Hither in the summer of 1852 Warren Goodale also came, and on the 17th of June at the old Cherokee capital they were united in marriage. After revisiting in New England they started for Honolulu, and lived there until the death of Mrs. Goodale in 1861. Warren Goodale then took his five children to his old home in Massachusetts, and the Civil war breaking out soon afterward he enlisted in the 11th Massachusetts Battery, and during his service rose to the rank of captain. After the war Warren Goodale went back to Honolulu and for many years was connected with the sugar industry in the Hawaiian Islands. He died in Honolulu in February, 1897, at the age of seventy-two. Charles W. Goodale received his early education in the schools of Marlboro, graduated in 1871 from the English high school in Boston, and then pursued his studies in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, which awarded him the degree Bachelor of Science in 1875. Practically his entire experience since graduating has been as a mining engineer. His first services were rendered the Boston and Colorado Smelting Company, remaining in the firm's office at Boston during 1875-76, and at Black Hawk, Colorado, from 1876 to 1880. The following five years he was superintendent and manager of the Boston and Arizona Smelting and Reduction Company at Tombstone, Arizona.

Mr. Goodale has been a prominent figure in mining circles in Montana for thirty-five years. He came to Butte in 1885 as superintendent of the mining department of the Colorado Smelting and Mining Company. Since 1898 he has been with the Boston and Montana Consolidated Copper and Silver Mining Company, now the Boston and Montana department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. He is at present chairman of the Bureau of Safety of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. His duties required his residence at Great Falls from 1889 to 1901, and since then he has been at Butte as assistant manager and manager. He is also president of the Barnes-King Development Company.

Despite the busy routine of his life, Mr. Goodale has had many active affiliations with professional, technical and scientific organizations, and besides the reports that have embodied the results of his painstaking investigations and examinations of mining properties and mining problems, he has prepared and read many addresses on technical subjects. He is a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers, the Mining and Metallurgical Society of America, the Institute of Mining and Metallurgy of Great Britain, the American Mining Congress, the Colorado Scientific Society, the Montana Society of Engineers. He is a member of the Engineers' and Technology Clubs of New York, the Silver Bow and Butte Country Clubs of Butte, the Montana Club of Helena, the Anaconda Club of Anaconda, and the Electric City Club of Great Falls. He is a member of the Loyal Legion, is an Episcopalian and a republican. About thirty years ago Mr. Goodale was a member of the City Council of Butte. Mr. Goodale is unmarried. His interests and recreation outside of his profession consist in outdoor sports and travel. He is fond of golf and plays that game chiefly on the links of the Butte Country Club.

PILO C. HANSON is president of the MacPherson-Hanson Company, real estate, mining investments, one of the leading companies of this kind in Montana.

Mr. Hanson is a keen young business man, and was one of the associates in establishing this corporation when only twenty-six years of age. He was born at Racine, Wisconsin, January 3, 1883, son of Lars and Anna B. (Jacobson) Hanson. His father was born in Sweden in 1834 and his mother in Christiana, Norway. They were married when young people at Chicago and moved to Racine, where Lars Hanson was employed in the lumber mills for a number of years. Later the family came to Butte, where the father died in April, 1899. Of the seven children the first six were born in Racine and the youngest at Butte.

Philo C. Hanson acquired a public school education, beginning at Racine and continuing at Butte. He left the Butte High School to take a special course in the Butte Business College, graduating in 1903, and then, at the age of twenty, began making his industry and his talents useful in the office of The Thompson Company. He was fortunate in getting into his proper field at the very outset, and it was not long before he was spoken of as a young man of more than ordinary powers and capabilities. In 1909 with Mr. MacPherson he bought out The Thompson Company and incorporated as the MacPherson-Hanson Company, handling real estate, mining prospects and properties and investments. The business has had a steady growth, and the firm has handled some of the largest deals in recent years in Silver Bow County.

Mr. Hanson has all the qualities of a popular young business man. He mingles with his fellow men in varied relationships, as a hunter and lover of outdoors, a republican in politics, in Mount Moriah Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and in the Scottish Rite Consistory, also in the Elks and Woodmen of the World at Butte. March 23, 1909, he married Miss Edith Terry, daughter of Elmore and Sarah J. (Boatman) Terry, of Butte. They have two daughters, Dorothy Racine and Helen Terry.

N. P. Walters has enjoyed a long residence at Helena, since 1883, and has found his talents and energies engaged in many interesting and useful lines of activity.

Mr. Walters was born at Onslunda, Province of Skane, Sweden, January 19, 1864, and was therefore only eighteen years of age when he came to Montana. His father, Per Nilsson, spent all his life in the same locality as a farmer, born in 1841 and died in 1913. He served the regular time in the Swedish army and was a member of the Lutheran Church. He found his wife in the adjoining community of Efverod, Petronella Anderson, and she was born in 1841 and died in 1916. Three of their children came to America. Besides N. P. Walters there is Tilda, wife of Erick Olson, a painting contractor at West Superior, Wisconsin, and also Otto P. Walters, who is in the laundry business at Tacoma, Washington.

N. P. Walters acquired the equivalent of a high school education in his native country. He also had some experience as clerk in a store before coming over in April, 1882. His first location was at Grove City, Minnesota, but on April 3, 1883, he arrived at Montana and located at Helena in October of the same year. He had some various employment there for a time, and in 1886 began applying himself seriously to detective work, for which he had special qualifications. In 1887 he established his detective agency and has continued in that work to a certain extent to the present time, being correspondent and local representative for practically every large detective agency in the United States particularly in Pinkerton's National Detective Agency.

In the meantime a growing group of business interests have absorbed his energies. He has mined and ranched on a large scale, and among other interests today he is secretary and treasurer of the Helena Ice Company. For a number of years he was manager and director of the Old Bald Butte gold mine, one of the old and most productive gold mines of Montana.

Mr. Walters still maintains offices in the Union Bank Building. Soon after the United States entered the World war Mr. A. M. Briggs of Chicago organized the American Protective League to work in connection with the United States Department of Justice as a volunteer detective agency and for investigations and other work as exigency required. Mr. Briggs was joined by Capt. Charles Daniel Frye, Victor Elting, Capt. J. T. Evans and S. S. Doty. The organization grew rapidly, the headquarters were moved to Washington to be in immediate touch with the various departments of government, and branches were established in every city, town and hamlet in the United States. Eventually the league comprised a membership of nearly 300,000. Mr. Walters by obvious qualification was early selected by the executive officers of the organization to direct the work in Montana, becoming chief in this state. He organized the Helena Division and later became state inspector in charge of the league work in Montana. He handled thousands of cases, in the apprehension of draft dodgers, in investigations prior to the granting of commissions in the army, navy and other branches of the service, in reporting on character and reputation of applicants for positions in the Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus and similar organizations. Its objects and purposes thoroughly performed, the league was disbanded February 1, 1919. In the meantime for more than twenty months Mr. Walters had given his time without compensation to the task. The services of the Montana organization are a direct tribute to Mr. Walters, and the value of his work was commended by the national directors of the league. Probably no other volunteer organization auxiliary to the great war cause performed so much difficult and disagreeable work, and, by the very necessities of the character of the service, unrecognized and unappreciated by most people, except government officials who had direct knowledge of what the league was doing. The league was officially thanked by Attorney General Gregory, who acknowledged that the Department of Justice would have been seriously crippled without the aid of this volunteer organization.

Mr. Walters has never taken part in any political campaign as candidate for office, though he has worked in the interest of good government, and has attended many local and state conventions of the republican party. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, being a member of King Solomon Lodge, No. 9, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Helena Chapter No. 2, Royal Arch Masons, Helena Council No. 1, Royal and Select Masters, Helena Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar, Helena Consistory No. 3 of the Scottish Rite, and is a Knight Commander of the Court of Honor and a member of St. Peters Conclave No. 8 of the Knights of the Red Cross of Constantine. He is also affiliated with Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and Helena Court No. 5 of the Royal Order of Jesters and for several years past custodian of the Consistory-Shrine Temple. He is a charter member of the Helena Rotary Club.

He married at Helena in 1884 Maria Andersson, who was born at Sellshog, Province of Skane, Sweden, a daughter of a noted educator, Per Andersson. They have two children. The son, N. P., Jr., attended Helena High School, is a graduate of the Minnesota School of Pharmacy at Minneapolis, and for the past eight years has been proprietor of the Walters Drug Company at Wolf Point, Montana. The daughter, Marie, acquired a thorough literary and musical training, is a skilled vocalist and instrumentalist, and is now the wife of Dr. Clem L. Shafer, an osteopathic physician of Helena. Doctor and Mrs. Shafer have one child, Clem, born in November, 1918.

John Lindsay, former judge of the District Bench of Silver Bow County, earned his first successes in the law at Butte nearly thirty years ago and has justified every claim made for him as an able jurist and lawyer.

Mr. Lindsay was born at Lanarkshire, Scotland, September 23, 1864. His parents came to the United States when he was very young, and he received a common school education and attended the law department of the University of Minnesota. Graduating in 1901, he chose the new state of Montana as the scene and arena of his professional career. After a brief residence at Butte he was enjoying a living practice, and in 1896, at the age of thirty-two, was preferred by the democrats of Silver Bow County as their candidate for the district bench. He was a young lawyer, of good character and ability, but his qualifications for the bench were not generally accepted. There was a faction of his own party opposed to his nomination, but he was elected by a big majority and entered upon his duties in January, 1897. During the next four years Judge Lindsay applied himself to his judicial duties with a degree of earnestness that made his administration of the judicial court exceptional in volume of results and in the splendid character of his decisions. One interesting comment on his judicial career is found in a set of resolutions passed by a committee of lawyers, including the following: "It is the sense of the bar of Butte that during his incumbency of the office he has just retired from the Hon. Judge Lindsay has discharged his duties with such painstaking care and with such high sense of honor as has made for himself a name of which he and his descendants may be justly proud." Another comment, to some degree even more flattering, is found in a newspaper which had opposed his election: "Sometime in the course of a lifetime every man is liable to make a mistake. What is true of a man is equally true of a newspaper. In the four years Judge Lindsay presided over one of the two departments of the District Court he showed himself a model judge. His record is an open book—one he has good cause to be proud of—one that may serve as an example to others upon whom time and conditions may impose the same arduous duties."

Since retiring from the bench Judge Lindsay has given his undivided time and energies to a private practice, and has satisfied the most exacting requirements of a successful lawyer.

He married Miss Cora Lee, of Burlington, Iowa. Their three children are Ruth Christie, William Harvey and Marion Lindsay.

William Martin Tuohy is a veteran business man of Butte, a city with which his home and chief interests have been identified thirty years, since 1890.

He was born at Bradford, Ontario, February 8, 1864. In Butte he has played an active part in commercial affairs, and for many years has been president of the Northwest Coal Company, one of the largest coal dealing concerns in the Northwest with headquarters at Butte. Mr. Tuohy has never been in politics, his zeal in the public interests being chiefly expressed through his work and official connection with the public schools. For many years the people kept him on the county school board, and the advanced facilities and standards of the Butte public schools are to be credited in a large degree to his unflagging efforts in the cause of public education.

Mr. Tuohy is a member of the Silver Bow Club and is affiliated with the order of Elks. He married Miss Anna Lee Kremer, of an old Kentucky family. They have three children. Florence Belle, wife of J. Ryan Gaul, with the Montana Power Company, in Butte; Charles, who was in the signal service during the late war as second lieutenant and was drowned at Vancouver Barracks on February 10, 1917; and Anna Lee.

Samuel Barker has spent nearly all his life in the great mining districts of the Far West, and for a quarter of a century has earned and maintained a high position among the mining engineers of Montana.

Mr. Barker, whose home is at Butte, was born in England, May 17, 1869, son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Oliver) Barker. His father met a tragic death in 1869 and the widowed mother five years later, in 1874, with her only child came to America. She made her home for ten years at Virginia City, Nevada, and then came to Butte.

Samuel Barker attended his first school in Virginia City, Nevada, and finished his literary education in the Butte High School. Neither wealth nor influential friends had any part in shaping his early career. He accepted life as he found it, and has been the architect of his own destiny. At the age of sixteen he was apprenticed to the firm of Kornberg & Hoff, civil and mining engineers. He served another four years' apprenticeship with Wilson & Gillie, prominent mining engineers, and rounded out his professional education at the College of Montana at Deer Lodge, from which he received his degree Mining Engineer in 1895.

After leaving college Mr. Barker resumed his employment with Wilson and Gillie at Butte a few months and in December, 1895, was placed on the engineering staff of the Anaconda Mining & Copper Company as engineer. In August, 1897, he and W. W. Pennington acquired the engineering business of Wilson & Gillie, and since then Mr. Barker has engaged in an engineering practice that has made his skill widely known all over Montana. He has acquired mining interests of his own and enjoys a secure reputation in business, professional and civic circles.

Mr. Barker is a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers, has served as an official of the Montana Society of Engineers and is a member of the National Geographic Society. He represented the Sixth Ward of Butte one or two terms in the council, and is a member of the Silver Bow Club, Mount Moriah Lodge No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Butte Consistory of the Scottish Rite and Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is a republican voter.

At Helena December 14, 1896, Mr. Barker married Blanche Stuart, daughter of Samuel D. and Amanda J. Stuart. Mrs. Barker was born in Iowa, and was liberally educated, achieving a high degree of proficiency in painting, both in oil and water colors. Mr. and Mrs. Barker have one son, Samuel Stuart Barker, born at Butte December 31, 1903. The family reside at 845 West Galena Street, while Mr. Barker's offices are at 60 East Granite Street.

Lewis A. Smith is one of the most loyal and enthusiastic citizen Butte has ever had. He first came to this city nearly thirty years ago, and its charms and advantages made such a strong impression upon him that as soon as he had qualified for the law he returned and since 1896 has been one of the hard working and eminently successful lawyers of the city.

He was born at Blandinsville, Illinois, February 27, 1871, son of Peter A. and Sarah J. (Stimson) Smith. His grandfather, Ambrose B. Smith, was born September 22, 1810, and died July 2, 1859, in Indiana. Peter A. Smith was born in Indiana June 24, 1842, and when about nineteen years of age enlisted in a regiment of artillery for service in the Civil war. He was all through the war, his chief commander being General Sherman. On January 23, 1864, he married Sarah J. Stimson, who was born in Michigan October 11, 1847. From Illinois the Smith family removed in 1877 to Burlington, Iowa, where Peter A. Smith developed a large and successful business in blacksmithing and carriage manufacturing. He and his wife had three children: Cora C., born April 22, 1866, and died in 1874; Frank A., born September 13, 1868, who became a contractor at Burlington, Iowa; and Lewis A.

Lewis A. Smith acquired his public school education at Burlington, Iowa, and in 1888, at the age of seventeen, left home and with a boyish zest for travel and adventure traveled over many of the western states. At different times he was in Omaha, Denver, San Francisco, Portland and Spokane, and in 1891 arrived in Butte, where he remained until 1893. That year he returned to Iowa and entered the law school of the State University, graduating LL. B. in June, 1895. While he had some experience as a lawyer at Peoria, Illinois, he soon returned to Montana and was admitted to the Supreme Court March 11, 1896. Since that year his time and talents have been taken up with a constantly enlarging general practice at Butte, and today his name is associated with the very ablest lawyers of the state.

In 1908 he was a candidate on the republican ticket for district judge, being defeated by a small majority. He was elected an alderman from the Fourth Ward of Butte April 1, 1912, and served as president of the Council one year, and acting mayor of Butte. Upon the organization of the Silver Bow County Bar Association in January, 1905, he was elected the first secretary and filled that office for a number of years. He is widely known over the state as a Mason and has been an official of the Grand Lodge. He was worshipful master in 1906 of Mount Moriah Lodge No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Butte, in 1914 and 1915 was grand master of Masons of Montana, and has taken thirty-two degrees in the Scottish Rite and is a member of Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is also affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Fraternal Brotherhood. Other important interests outside of his home and profession are dictated by his love of outdoor sports, hunting and motoring being his favorite pasttimes. He is a member of the Episcopal Church.

By his first marriage Mr. Smith had two children: Walter Allen, born January 25, 1902, at Butte, and died of lockjaw, brought on by an old-fashioned Fourth of July celebration, in July, 1910; and Lillian, born December 13, 1896, and died July 31, 1897. His son's death was due to the explosion of a toy pistol, and Mr. Smith employed his personal tragedy to impress upon the Legislature at the next session a law prohibiting the sale of toy pistols in Montana, one of the first practical steps taken by any state to enforce what is now practically a nation-wide safe and sane observance of the national holiday. Mr. Smith married December 25, 1909, Miss Lillian De Mordaunt, who died December 11, 1911. In 1913 he married Miss Rose Blake, then principal of the Franklin School of Butte and a daughter of one of Montana's early pioneers.

ANTON M. HOLTER, at the age of eighty-nine, is one of the very few survivors of that band of Montana pioneers who came in the early '60s. A sketch of his personal career is more than biography, it is true history, and involves the beginning of the lumber industry in Montana and much of the manufacturing and industrial enterprise of the old territory and early state. His life has thoroughly deserved the just tribute paid him some years ago: "He is one of those rugged indomitable spirits to whom the coming generation inhabiting the Northwest, and especially Montana, will owe in a large degree the magnificent heritage that awaits them."

Anton M. Holter was born thirty-two miles south of Christiania, Norway, June 29, 1831, son of Foin and Berta M. (Floxstad) Holter. As a young man he learned a mechanical trade, and in April, 1854, set out for America, landing at Quebec May 25th. He traveled by railroad with others of his fellow countrymen to Rock Island, Illinois, reaching there at a time of a cholera epidemic, and fortunately making his escape by river boat to the vicinity of Decorah, Iowa, where he worked at his trade at wages of $20 a month. He also made one or two small investments, and at the end of a year had accumulated a capital of $300. During the next four or five years he was in Missouri and Iowa, and in the spring of 1860 started for the gold fields of the Pike's Peak district in Colorado. He and his brother Martin remained there mining and farming for several years.

Some years ago Mr. Holter contributed to a trade journal an article entitled "Pioneer Lumbering in Montana," and gives an interesting account of his coming to Montana and his first operations in the lumber business in the territory. In the spring of 1863 he started with a team of oxen to Colorado, and from there joined a large party whose destination was what is now known as Ruby River, Madison County, Montana. They left Colorado in September, 1863, and owing to their slow progress Mr. Holter and Mr. Evenson, who had arranged a partnership for the purpose of setting up a sawmill in Montana, left the main train and arrived at Bevin's Gulch, about eighteen miles from Virginia City, in November. They had bought a second-hand saw mill outfit, and during the following winter they contended with every conceivable difficulty, including personal danger, making a camp, setting up their machinery, and in the absence of foundries and machine shops contriving with remarkable ingenuity to make a limited equipment serve the intended purpose. Mr. Holter gives a most interesting account of one of Montana's first industrial enterprises, and while that account is too long to be published here, it has the great historic value of showing conditions of early territorial times and the almost insurmountable difficulties confronting men engaged in any line of manufacturing.

Mr. Holter finally purchased Mr. Evenson's interest in the business and formed a partnership with his brother Martin Holter under the name A. M. Holter & Brother. This firm established the first planing mill in Montana in the summer of 1865, operating it in conjunction with a saw mill on Ten Mile Creek, about eight miles from Helena. After going east to purchase new machinery, Mr. Holter describes conditions affecting the lumber industry in the following sentences: "I arrived in Helena on the 17th of May and found the lumber business in a bad way. The firm of A. M. Holter & Brother had closed the mill with the first snow storm in the fall and had sent all the livestock to winter quarters, so in a short time they were out of lumber and also out of business. My first move was to hurry the men after live stock and to prepare to start the mill. Shortly after I had left Helena in 1866 the cutting of prices began, and from this time on the custom of selling for what you could get prevailed.

The prices obtained by A. M. Holter & Brother for the year 1867 and up to August, 1868, averaged about $50 for common lumber and $60 per thousand feet for sluice, flume, and the better grades, but during the month of August we reduced these prices $10 per thousand, without consultation with other dealers. We had reduced the price of planing mill work to $25 and $20 per thousand, according to quantity and $10 for surfacing. Shingles sold for $6 and lath for $12. We maintained the prices on the last three items, as we had no competition on these. I finally got the mill started and also erected a new mill on Spring Creek. Several more mills sprang up in the vicinity of Helena, mostly operated by inexperienced men on borrowed capital, at a high rate of interest, so they soon came to grief. I bought up some of these saw mills in 1868 and 1869. We also added to our holdings a water mill near Jefferson City in Jefferson County, and a portable steam mill that we located near Lincoln, in what is now Lewis and Clark county."

For many years Mr. Holter was one of the foremost figures in the lumber industry in the Northwest. He and his brother established in Helena in 1868 the first sash and door factory in Montana, the plant being operated until destroyed by fire in 1879. Mr. Holter established a pioneer lumber business at Great Falls in 1886. He became associated with William Thompson in the Montana Lumber & Manufacturing Company in 1889, this company operating all over the western part of the state, with main offices at Helena and Butte. Later his interests were extended to Idaho, Oregon, and even to Alaska.

Mr. Holter still retains his official post as president of the A. M. Holter Hardware Company. This is one of the oldest business organizations of Helena, having been established in 1867, by Mr. Holter and his brother. Originally it was a general merchandise store, but later became a general hardware business and for years has been conducted both wholesale and retail.

Mr. Holter was one of the organizers and incorporators of the company that established the first waterworks system in Montana, known as the Virginia City Waterworks Company, incorporated in January, 1865. This was the first corporation organized in the Territory of Montana, receiving its charter from the first Legislature. The water mains were logs, with a three-inch hole bored from end to end, and by this crude pipe water was conveyed a distance of two miles. Nearly all the equipment, including faucets and valves, were made by hand.

Mr. Holter was also identified with the first hydroelectric development in Montana. In 1890 he and associates made application for the use of the water of the Missouri River near Helena for power purposes, and secured permission from Congress to construct a dam across the river as a means of developing the power.

In 1875 Mr. Holter and brother bought from a German inventor the rights to manufacture the Utsch Jig, a machine for concentrating ore. This was the first jigging machine ever worked successfully in the mining business, and had a wide and effective use in the mines of the Northwest. Mr. Holter was also one of the organizers in 1898 of the Sand Point Lumber Company at Sand Point, Idaho, later known as the Hambird Lumber Company.

Such a career in itself is a constructive public service, but Mr. Holter at different times has been identified with official public life. He was the first republican ever elected to office in Helena, being chosen a member of the Territorial Legislature in 1878. In 1888 he was elected a member of the City Council of Helena, and became president of that body. In 1889 he was elected a member of the first house of representatives of the new state. He has served as president of the Helena Board of Trade, took a prominent part in securing the fine new high school building for the city, and was president of the association formed to build a statue to Montana's pioneer vigilante and statesman, Wilbur Fisk Sanders. He was also a member of the board that purchased the grounds and buildings for the State Hospital for the Insane. Mr. Holter built the Holter Block in Helena, the home of the A. M. Holter Hardware Company. For many years he has been an interested member of the Montana Pioneer Society, of which he is a past president, is a Knight Templar Mason and has been treasurer of Helena Commandery for forty-nine consecutive years. He is a member of the Lutheran Church.

In 1867, at Chicago, he married Miss Mary Pauline Loberg, also a native of Norway. Their oldest child is Norman B., now vice president of the A. M. Holter Hardware Company. Clara H. is the widow of Percy H. Kennett. Edwin O. Holter graduated from Yale University in 1894, from the law department of Columbia University, and is a practicing lawyer in New York City. Albert L. is a Helena business man and has gained prominence in the republican party of the state. The next child, Austin M., died at the age of five years. Aubrey M. graduated from Yale University in 1905 and is an official of the A. M. Holter Hardware Company. Percy W., the youngest, graduated from Yale in 1907, and died at Helena November 23, 1908, at the age of twenty-three.

Norman B. Holter continuously for nearly thirty years, ever since completing his university education, has been identified with the great business of Helena known as the A. M. Holter Hardware Company and is vice president of that corporation.

Mr. Holter is a son of A. M. Holter, who is president of the company, and whose long and honorable business career in Montana is reviewed elsewhere. Norman B. Holter was born at Helena February 8, 1868, was educated in the local public schools, and attended college at Columbia University, New York City. He graduated with the degree Mining Engineer in 1891, but his career has been one of practical business rather than professional. He returned to Helena and joined his father and by successive steps has acquired his present responsibilities as vice president.

Mr. Holter is also a director in the Federal Reserve Bank at Minneapolis. Is a director in the Montana Flour Mills Company, and is president of the Holter Company, which handles general property interests in Montana.

Mr. Holter is a member of the Delta Psi college fraternity, and in Masonry is affiliated with Helena Lodge No. 3, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Helena Chapter No. 2, Royal Arch Masons, Helena Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar, Helena Consistory No. 3 of the Scottish Rite, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is a member of the Rocky Mountain Club of New York City and the Montana Club of Helena, and is a member of Helena Lodge No. 193 of the Elks.

In 1900, at Helena, he married Miss Florence Jefferis, who was also born at Helena, daughter of Charles M. and Sarah (Bell) Jefferis. Her mother is still living at Helena, where her father died several years ago. Charles Jefferis was a Montana pioneer of the '60s, and served several times as sheriff of Lewis and Clark County. He was an influential republican in his section of the state.

Phil. E. Goodwin

Mr. and Mrs. Holter have three children: Marion, born in July, 1904; Richard M., born in November, 1905; and Norman J., born February 1, 1914.

PHILLIP CHARLES GOODWIN came to Montana at the age of eleven years, has been a Butte business man throughout his active career, and has figured prominently in both state and local politics.

Mr. Goodwin, who is president of the Sheehan & Goodwin Company, general insurance and real estate at Butte, was born at Columbus, Nebraska, February 17, 1872, son of Phillip and Rosa (Quinn) Goodwin. His father was a baker by trade, and in May, 1883, the family settled at Butte. Phillip C. Goodwin finished his education in the public schools of Butte, and then entered the employ of the Butte Miner and for twenty-two years was in the circulation department of that great institution of Montana journalism. Besides his prosperous real estate and insurance business Mr. Goodwin personally owns some valuable farming land in Montana.

Twice he has been a candidate on the democratic ticket for state office, though each time his candidacy fell in a year marked by abnormal strength of the republican party. He was candidate for state auditor in 1904 and for state treasurer in 1908. From 1905 to 1909 Mr. Goodwin served as city treasurer of Butte. On March 1, 1916, he was appointed postmaster of Butte, and has given a splendid administration to the growing business of the local office.

Mr. Goodwin served twice as chairman of the Democratic Committee of Silver Bow County.

In September, 1893, he married Miss Nora Lynch, of Butte. They have five children, Geraldine, Catherine, Rose, Dorothy and James. Geraldine is the wife of William E. Chapman, a civil engineer and county surveyor of Beaverhead County.

LEE MATHEW VAN ETTEN. Preparatory to his admission to the bar, Lee Mathew Van Etten had an exceptionally varied experience in mining engineering and saw a great deal of the west, including Montana. He is one of the prominent lawyers of Butte, and a recognized authority on Public Land Law.

He was born at Nunica, in Ottawa County, Michigan, September 24, 1871. He attended public school in his native state, and later for two years, while employed by the Pullman Company in Chicago, attended a night school maintained by that corporation. Leaving Chicago, he went West to California, and for eighteen months was an employe of the Union Iron Works and helped build the famous United States battleships Oregon and Olympia, the latter Admiral Dewey's flagship at Manila Bay, and the former making the remarkable cruise around Cape Horn and joining the battle fleet that shattered the Spanish flotilla at Santiago Bay. For two years Mr. Van Etten lived on a ranch in the state of Washington, and then came to Montana and was a student for two years in the Presbyterian College at Deer Lodge. During his summer vacations he followed surveying. Following that he attended school three years in the Sheldon Jackson Institute in Utah, and for a year was engaged in mining in that state. Mr. Van Etten graduated from Valpairaiso University in Indiana in 1901, and on returning to Montana engaged in mining for three years. He took his law course in the University of Michigan, where he spent three years and graduated in 1907. Mr. Van Etten began practice at Butte in the fall of 1907, and has been one of the busiest lawyers of the city since then.

On April 1, 1912, he was appointed United States commissioner and was reappointed to that office in 1916. He is a republican in politics, and is a past noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and has sat in the Grand Lodge. September 15, 1909, he married Maidie Rife, of Dillon, Montana.

Mr. Van Etten is a son of Samuel and Hannah (Maycroft) Van Etten. His father also had a career of exceptional experience. He was born in Tompkins County, New York, April 6, 1827, and died March 28, 1891. When nine years of age he ran away from home, and worked driving a horse along the towpath of the Erie Canal. The principal reason he left home and took this work was to get money to purchase tea for his mother. The very first earnings he invested in tea and took it home. Later he learned the carpenter's trade. He was promoted from his work on the towpath to captain or master of a canal boat, but left that service about the time of the Mexican war, and going to New York enlisted in Company K of the Eighth Regiment of United States Regulars. With his command he sailed to Vera Cruz, Mexico, and marched with the victorious forces of General Scott to the City of Mexico, being present at the time of the surrender. He returned north after the war, to New Orleans, thence to Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, and on receiving his discharge returned east by way of Chicago and Michigan. While in Michigan he became strongly attracted to the country, though for several years he lived in New York and resumed his work on the canal. Finally he went west to Michigan, took up a homestead, and spent the rest of his active life as a farmer. In 1861 he was an early volunteer to put down the rebellion, serving as a private in Company H, Fourth Michigan Cavalry, a regiment that earned a high record through the war. He was in the service three years and three months. He married in Michigan Miss Maycroft, who was of English parentage.

JESSE RANKIN WHARTON during a residence at Butte of nearly forty years has at many points been a leader in affairs, and always sincerely and deeply interested in movements affecting the vital welfare of the community. For nearly thirty years he has had a thoughtful part in the management and operation of Butte's public utilities.

Mr. Wharton was born at Greensboro, North Carolina, November 4, 1857, son of John Calvin and Rebecca Jane Wharton. His ancestors were Scotch Irish and settled in North Carolina about 1720. His family has therefore been stanchly American for two centuries.

Jesse R. Wharton attended the Greensboro Academy in his native state, and his boyhood was passed in a period of peculiar depression and lack of opportunity, when North Carolina was recovering from the disasters brought by war. In 1872, at the age of fifteen, he went to work as clerk in a book store, continuing until 1875. Before coming to Montana he had a thorough training in banking, serving as teller in the National Bank of Greensboro from 1875 to 1882.

His first work in Butte was as teller in the bank of Donnell, Clark & Larabee and of W. A. Clark & Brother. He was associated with those early Butte banking interests from 1882 to 1888.

Mr. Wharton served as manager of the Silver Bow Water Company from 1888 to 1890, as manager of the Butte Electric and Silver Bow Electric Light Companies from 1890 to 1892, and from the latter date until 1918 was manager of the Butte Electric Railway Company. He is a director in that corporation and also is a director and financially interested in the Plainsmont Land Company, the South Park Mining & Realty Company, the Arizona Realty Company and the Trail Creek Water Company.

As a young man Mr. Wharton had some military training as a private in the Guilford Greys, a National Guard Company in North Carolina. Though born and reared a southerner, he is a republican in politics, is affiliated with Butte Lodge No. 22, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and is a member of the Silver Bow Club, Butte Country Club, Rocky Mountain Club of New York, is president of the Newsboys Club at Butte, a director of the Associated Charities, is president of the Butte Young Men's Christian Association, and a member of the Rotary Club and Liberal Culture Club. The early religious influences thrown around him were Presbyterian, and he has always been loyal to that church and is a ruling elder in his home church at Butte.

March 9, 1886, at Butte, Mr. Wharton married Dorcas Elizabeth Noyes, daughter of Thomas and Mary Ann Noyes, who came from Cushing, Quebec. To their marriage were born four children: Jesse Noyes Wharton, deceased; Carolina P., wife of Edgar Wild; Carroll Clark Wharton, deceased; and John Calvin Wharton, unmarried.

Charles Ransom Leonard, who has just rounded out thirty years of residence in Butte and membership in the bar of that city, gained national distinction as a lawyer a number of years ago while chief counsel for Augustus Heinze in the prolonged litigation with the amalgamated copper interests, known as the "copper war." In his home state Mr. Leonard has not only enjoyed the well merited successes and triumphs of the bar but public honors, and is known as a man and leader to be trusted, a brilliant lawyer and a gifted personality.

Mr. Leonard had earned his first successes in the law in his native state of Iowa. He was born at Iowa City, Johnson County, Iowa, December 3, 1860, son of Nathan R. and Elizabeth (Heizer) Leonard. His parents, who lived for many years at Butte, were widely known both in Iowa and Montana. His father for a number of years was president of the School of Mines at Butte.

Charles R. Leonard was educated in the public schools, received his A. B. degree from the State University of Iowa in 1881, his Master of Arts degree the same year, and graduated from the law school of the University in 1883. He practiced law at Creston, Iowa, for several years, and came to Butte in 1890. He soon won a reputation as a lawyer whose abilities and industry were adequate for the most difficult problems of his profession. His services were engaged by several corporations and eventually he became chief counsel for Augustus Heinze and at the end of the historic litigation represented Mr. Heinze's interests in the settlement negotiations at New York. Mr. Leonard still represents a number of mining companies in Butte as attorney and director, and has also given much time to affairs outside his profession.

Mr. Leonard is a republican. In 1892, two years after coming to Montana, he was a candidate for the Legislature, but was defeated in that election. In 1894 he was elected a member of the Montana State Senate from Silver Bow County, serving until 1898. He was the Montana member of the Republican National Committee from 1897 to 1899. Mr. Leonard was chairman of the Temporary Montana Tax and License Commission which submitted its recommendations on tax matters to the Legislature of 1919.

Mr. Leonard has been generous of his time and efforts in behalf of the broader interests and welfare of his own profession. He has been a working member of committees of the Montana Bar Association, and was honored by that association as president for two years. He is affiliated with the Masonic Order and the Woodmen of the World. He is also a member of the Silver Bow and Country Clubs of Butte, and the Montana Club of Helena. For eight years he was a member of the State Board of Education.

August 10, 1887, Mr. Leonard married Miss Alice Sample, of Carthage, Illinois. On May 28, 1901, he married Fanny Sutphen Jones of Lancaster, Ohio. His three children, by his first marriage, were Frank, Margaret and Alice.

Henry Stephen Magraw, of Helena, state examiner and superintendent of banks, is prominently identified with the banking interests of Montana, the financial institutions of which he has control being in a flourishing condition. A son of the late Henry Slaymaker Magraw, he was born September 15, 1853, in Lancaster, Pennsylvania. On the paternal side of the house he comes of honored Irish ancestry, his great-grandfather, John Magraw, a native of County Kilkenny, Ireland, having emigrated to the United States when young, settling first in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, as a school teacher, but spending the closing years of his life in West Nottingham, Cecil County, Maryland.

James Magraw, Doctor of Divinity, paternal grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born in Pennsylvania, and was there fitted for the ministry. Subsequently settling in Cecil County, Maryland, he established a homestead in West Nottingham, and there founded the Presbyterian Church of which he had charge until his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Rebecca Cochran, was born in Cochranville, Chester County, Pennsylvania, and died on the homestead in West Nottingham, Maryland.

Born in January, 1815, at West Nottingham, Cecil County, Maryland, Henry Slaymaker Magraw received excellent educational advantages, and after his admission to the bar in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, began the practice of his profession in Pittsburgh, that state. Following the pathway of the gold seekers, he went by way of the Isthmus of Panama to California in 1850, and there practiced law a year. Returning to Pennsylvania in the winter of 1852, he remained there as an attorney-at-law until 1863, when he purchased the old homestead in Cecil County, Maryland, on which he resided until his death, which, however, occurred February 1, 1867, in Washington, District of Columbia, where he practiced law for many years, practicing in the United States Supreme Court.

A prominent member of the democratic party, he was influential in state and national affairs, and a firm friend of President James Buchanan. While a resident of Pennsylvania he served as district attorney of Allegheny County two terms, and as state treasurer for three consecutive terms of two years each. At the time of his death he was a member of the Maryland Legislature. He was affiliated with the Presbyterian Church, and belonged to the Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons.

The maiden name of the wife of Henry Slaymaker Magraw was Emily Hopkins. She was born in June, 1818, in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, being a direct descendant of George Ross, who was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and had the distinction also of having been the first lieutenant governor of Pennsylvania. She died on the home farm in West Nottingham, Maryland, in March, 1870.

H. S. Magraw

Four children were born of their union, as follows: Adam R., who died in 1908 in Germany, where his body was interred; Rebecca, who spent her brief earthly life on the homestead in Maryland, died in 1865; Henry Stephen, of whom we write; and Emily, twin sister of Henry S., married Samuel F. Rathvon, residing in Denver, Colorado, for the past thirty-five years.

Acquiring his preliminary education in the West Nottingham Academy and in the Chambersburg Academy at Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, Henry Stephen Magraw continued his studies at Lafayette College in Easton, Pennsylvania, completing his junior year. Leaving that institution in the fall of 1874, he remained on the parental homestead until 1880, when he went to Salida, Colorado, where he was engaged in forwarding freight for a year. The ensuing four years Mr. Magraw spent in the Bonanza mining camp, Colorado, where he lost all of his money. He subsequently spent a short time in Leadville, Colorado, from there going to Kansas with the locating corps of the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company.

Coming to Helena, Montana, in November, 1887, Mr. Magraw was for two years agent for the Continental Oil Company, and subsequently was variously employed until becoming bookkeeper in the Thomas Cruse Savings Bank, a position he held for two years. He was subsequently engaged in the lumber business at Basin, Montana, for two years. Entering the State Savings Bank at Butte, Montana, in 1896. Mr. Magraw was there receiving teller for four years, gaining in the meantime knowledge and experience of value. Assuming charge of a logging camp for the Largey estate in 1900, he retained the position a year, and then, on account of impaired health, rested from all labor for a year. Subsequently organizing the Sheridan State Bank at Sheridan, Montana, Mr. Magraw served as its cashier for seven years, and the ensuing four years was officer manager at Big Timber, Montana, for the Glass-Lindsay Land Company.

Returning to Helena in 1913, Mr. Magraw, who had been appointed by Governor S. V. Stewart state examiner and superintendent of banks, assumed the duties of his responsible position on March 1, 1913, his offices being in the State Capitol. Proving himself eminently capable and efficient, he had the honor of being re-appointed to the same high office in 1917, and is now serving his second term in the same satisfactory manner. Finding that previous state examinations of banks had been merely perfunctory, Mr. Magraw has established a new system of recording for the counties, and has revised and considerably elaborated the methods of accounting and reports for both counties and banks, so that now when he receives or makes reports he has a thorough knowledge of the conditions of both, and the banks realize that there has been a real examination. When Mr. Magraw accepted his present position his office force consisted of three assistants and one clerk, a number that has since been increased to ten assistants and two clerks.

Politically Mr. Magraw is identified with the democratic party. Liberal in his religious views, he is an influential member and a trustee of the Unitarian Church. He is a thirty-second degree Mason, and a member of Sheridan Lodge No. 20, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, of Sheridan, Montana; and of Helena Consistory No. 3. He is likewise a member of the Sigma Chi college fraternity. At 214 North Ewing Street he has a pleasant home.

Mr. Magraw married, January 23, 1899, Eugunia Norton, daughter of Charles and Ursula (Smith) Norton, neither of whom are now living. Her father was a grain buyer and elevator manager of Illinois, for many years carrying on an extensive business. On her mother's side, Mrs. Magraw is a direct descendant of Henry Sunster, the first president of Harvard University. Mr. and Mrs. Magraw have two children, Rebecca Ursula and Henry Slaymaker. Rebecca Ursula is the wife of John Uhl, of Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, president of the Pennsylvania Tobacco Company, wholesale manufacturers of smoking and chewing tobacco. Mrs. Uhl, a woman of much culture, was graduated with honors from Miss Wolcott's School, a famous educational institution of Denver, Colorado. Henry Slaymaker Magraw, now living with his parents, enlisted in the World war in May, 1917, as a private in the Machine Gun Troop, Twenty-fifth United States Cavalry, and was afterward made second lieutenant in Field Artillery A. E. F., and served with the Fifty-second Ammunition Train, Thirty-first Brigade, First Army Corps. He was sent overseas, sailing from New York January 20th, took an active part in the Meuse and Argonne drives, and a few weeks after the signing of the armistice sailed for home, landing in New York on January 23, 1919. He is a member of the Sigma Chi fraternity, and is a thirty-second degree Mason.

THOMAS J. WALKER was admitted to the bar in 1902, has been a resident of Butte since 1888, and for nearly twenty years his work and interests have brought him a substantial reputation as a sound and able lawyer and thoroughly public spirited Montana citizen.

He was born at Plymouth, Pennsylvania, March 25, 1878, son of David and Ellen (Comerford) Walker. His father brought the family to Butte in 1890, and for many years was actively identified with the mining interests of the state.

Thomas J. Walker was about twelve years of age when he came to Montana, and completed his primary education in the public and parochial schools of Butte. He was also a student at All Hallows College in Salt Lake City and for three years pursued his classical course in Georgetown University, District of Columbia. He attended the University of Virginia, taking the law course, and was graduated in 1902, and at once took up the labors of his profession in Butte. He was associated with the firm McHatton & Cotter for a time, later with Edwin M. Lamb, and for the past several years has been senior member of the firm Walker & Walker, his brother being his partner. The firm handles a large corporation practice, and Mr. Walker individually has acquired some valuable mining and other interests in the state.

Early in his professional career he was elected a member of the Legislature, representing Silver Bow County in the lower house in 1905. He was elected county attorney in 1908 and reelected in 1910. He is a democrat, is a member of the Silver Bow Club and is affiliated with the Elks, the Eagles and Knights of Columbus.

June 7, 1905, he married Miss Maud Galen. Her father was a pioneer citizen of Helena.

FRANK COMERFORD WALKER has made a sound reputation as a corporation and general lawyer, and also as a leader in politics and public affairs, and has been in active practice at Butte since 1909.

He was born at Plymouth, Pennsylvania, May 30, 1886, son of David and Ella (Comerford) Walker. His parents settled at Butte in 1890 and his father became interested in the mining industry of the state. The son was educated in the parochial schools of Butte, attended the Jesuit Institution, Gonzaga University, at Spokane, Washington, three years, graduating in 1906, and took his law work at Notre Dame University in Indiana. He was admitted to the bar in July, 1909, and in the same year was appointed deputy county attorney of Silver Bow County, filling that office with all the zeal and discretion of a mature lawyer for three years. His first year in practice he was associated with Charles R. Leonard. He then formed a partnership with his brother, Thomas J., and the firm Walker & Walker is still one of the best known legal partnerships in Butte. Mr. Walker was elected a member of the Legislature in 1913, serving one term.

While his field is general practice, he is attorney for the Northern Pacific Railroad, Swift & Company, The Mountain States Telegraph & Telephone Company, the Murray Hospital, the National Life Insurance Company of Montana and several other corporations.

He is a member of the Knights of Columbus, the Silver Bow and Country clubs, and on November 11, 1914, married Miss Hallie Boucher, a native daughter of Butte.

August Reichle. Known as a prompt, courteous, efficient business man of Butte for a quarter of a century, August Reichle has given a just name and reputation among Montanans to the Atlantic Buffet, of which he is proprietor.

Mr. Reichle has had an interesting career since coming to Montana. He was born at Stuttgart, Germany, the capital of Wurtemberg, a son of Andrew and Elizabeth Reichle. He was liberally educated, attending a technical college at Stuttgart and graduating as a civil engineer. At the age of nineteen he came to America, landing in New York, and thence traveling by an emigrant train from New York to Glen's Station, Beaverhead County, Montana. This journey lasted nine days. He came to Montana to join his older brother William, who had already become well satisfied with the Montana country and was a prosperous rancher and stock raiser, merchant and postmaster in Beaverhead County. The postoffice when first established was known as Willis and later the community was named Reichle. William Reichle was a homesteader in the valley, and August on arriving helped his brother improve the land with buildings.

August Reichle had the characteristics of industry, thrift and economy so frequently found in Americans who came from Germany, and out of his early wages and savings he bought 160 acres, and when his brother William moved to Butte to engage in the hotel business August remained in charge of the ranch and the postoffice at Willis. He was postmaster there five years.

When he came to America he did not altogether sever the ties that bound him to Germany. There remained behind the sweetheart of his youth, Eugenia Retter, who was a native of Ludwigsburg, Germany, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Retter. After August Reichle had made some satisfying progress in Montana and had the dignity of postmaster of Willis he returned east as far as Boston, where he met his betrothed, and they were married in that city. She came to Montana with him, and was soon introduced to the community at Willis and was doing her part as a homemaker.

In 1895 the family moved to Butte. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Reichle: Paul A., Helen, Walter and Martha. The children have been carefully educated and as young people show the results of their training and also the inheritance of integrity of character. Both sons completed their education in the Gonzaga University of Spokane, Washington, and graduated with the A. B. degree. Paul made a splendid record as a student, receiving three gold medal scholarship honors. Walter during his college career received two medals for general excellence and in oratory. Paul Reichle married Miss Mame Collins, and is now cashier of the South Side Bank of Butte and has two children, Jean and John Paul. Walter was one of the young patriots of Montana who volunteered their services during the war with Germany. He entered the officers training camp at Camp Taylor, Kentucky, was given a thorough training in the artillery branch of the service, received a commission as second lieutenant, and was appointed as a training instructor and is still held in reserve though not in active duty. He was ready for overseas work when the armistice was signed. He is now associated with his father in business. The daughter, Helen, a graduate of the Butte High School, and who also specialized in music in St. Vincent's Convent at Helena, is likewise a partner in her father's business. Martha is in the third year of her high school work at Butte.

The Reichle family are devout members of the Catholic Church at Butte. The sons, Paul and Walter, are fourth degree Knights of Columbus and members of the Elks. Politically they vote independently, supporting men and measures they consider best suited to local, state or national needs. It has been a matter of great satisfaction to Mr. Reichle that as a young man he cast in his lot with America, that his affairs have prospered in Montana and that he has reared two sons every inch Americans.

Joseph L. Asbridge has gained more than statewide recognition in his office of United States marshal. Although a true American citizen, loyal and devoted to its institutions, his birthplace was in England and he is a member of an old and prominent family of the mother country. His grandfather, John Asbridge, more familiarly known as "Jackie," was born in Cockermouth, England, in 1790. He was known in his native land as a gentleman, a position in America relative to a capitalist, and he died at the place of his nativity in about the year 1784.

Joseph Asbridge, a son of John and the father of Joseph L., was born in Cockermouth, England, in 1822. He was there reared, educated and married, and all of his children were born there. He was engaged in the wholesale and retail hardware business throughout the entire period of his industrial career, and in the place of his birth he now lies buried, although his death occurred in London, while there on a visit, in 1872. He was a conservative in politics, and a member of the Church of England and of the Masonic fraternity. Joseph Asbridge was an ardent sportsman, a devotee of both hunting and fishing.

He married for his first wife Rebecca Fisher, who was born near Cockermouth, England, in 1827, and died there in 1865. Their children were: John, who died in the City of London in 1911, where he had been engaged as a ship broker; Joseph L., the present United States marshal; and Robert, who died from the effects of an accident when but eight years of age. For his second wife Joseph Asbridge married Fannie Rapley, who still resides in Cockermouth, aged eighty-two years. There were no children by this second union.

Joseph L. Asbridge was born at the ancestral home of the family at Cockermouth January 9, 1860. Cockermouth, located in Cumberland County, is historically known as the birthplace of the poet Wadsworth, and this old town also sent a representative to the first English parliament which was formed during King John's reign. Joseph L. Asbridge was reared and educated in Cockermouth, later attending the old St. Bees grammar school, which was founded in the seventeenth century.

Leaving his native land for the United States, Mr. Asbridge arrived in the City of Billings, Montana, June 1, 1883, and established his home in what was then Fergus County, on Willow Creek, west of the Town of Roundup. There he homesteaded 160 acres, and in a short time became an extensive cattle and sheep raiser and organized the firm of Hightower, Asbridge & Battams. The ranch was known as the Lazy X, so named because the letter X did not stand in true, straight lines. Mr. Asbridge left this ranch in 1915, and as a democratic representative was elected to the State Legislature from Fergus County, serving as a member of the twelfth session. While a member of that governing body he was largely instrumental in introducing a bill establishing a grain laboratory at Bozeman for testing seeds. Although this bill became a law, it met with strong opposition from seed houses outside of the state, who had previously used Montana as a dumping ground for poor grades of seed. During this session Mr. Asbridge was also actively interested in the organization of the County of Musselshell, and in 1912 he was elected the first state senator from Musselshell County and served during the thirteenth and fourteenth sessions.

At the time of his appointment as United States marshal Mr. Asbridge came to Helena and took the oath of office May 5, 1915, this being a recess appointment. He was reappointed January 11, 1916, by President Wilson, and the appointment was confirmed on that date by the United States Senate. On March 16, 1920, he was again reappointed for four years, the appointment being confirmed by the Senate, and he took the oath of office on April 1, 1920. He has offices in the Federal Building. While living in Musselshell County he also served eight years as a member of the State Board of Sheep Commissioners. He is a member of the Judith Club of Lewistown, was a member of the Billings Club while living in that city and conducting his ranch, and is a member of the Pioneers of Eastern Montana. During his school days Mr. Asbridge played halfback on the St. Bees-Rugby team, also occupied the same position with the Cockermouth team, and in his earlier life was a splendid athlete. He was also a member of the Cumberland County team and often assisted the Northumberland County team. He has a record for a quarter mile run in fifty-three seconds and the mile run in 4.46, and this early athletic training has helped him to retain his physical vigor during all of his subsequent life. He is still an enthusiastic sportsman with the rifle, and takes great pleasure in all out-of-door sports. While on his ranch near the Town of Roundup he put in twenty years in the saddle.

Mr. Asbridge's present home is at 609 North Jackson Street, Helena. He was married on the 10th of July, 1893, at Billings, to Miss Celia A. Ring, a daughter of Capt. E. P. Ring, deceased. He was a veteran of the Civil war and resided at Lake Park, Iowa. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Asbridge, namely: Joseph, who was accidentally shot and killed on his father's ranch when but thirteen years of age; Vern, who enlisted for the World war as a private in 1917, served fourteen months in France with Company B, One Hundred and Sixty-Third Infantry, was mustered out as a sergeant, and is now engaged in ranching near Somers, Montana; Hazel, attending the State Normal College at Dillon; Frances, who died on the ranch when fifteen years of age; and Robert, who died in Billings when but two years old.

The mother of these children died in Billings in 1901, and on the 1st of October, 1908, Mr. Asbridge was married in that city to Miss Aimee P. Coates, who was born in Pennsylvania She is a member of an old Quaker family of English descent which was established in this country during colonial times. She is a graduate of Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania. Three children have been born of this union: Dorothy, who was born December 10, 1909; Robert, born January 23, 1912; and Ruth, who was born June 15, 1913.

William Baker Rodgers came to Montana and began the practice of law more than a quarter of a century ago. During that time one of the most important honors and remunerative positions in the profession have been accorded him. He is a former United States district attorney for Montana. For many years he has been counsel for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. His home is at Anaconda, but as counsel for this corporation he maintains his chief offices in Butte.

Mr. Rodgers was born in Coles County, Illinois. His paternal ancestors were Scotch-Irish and settled in North Carolina in colonial days. One or more of the family were Revolutionary soldiers. Mr. Rodgers' grandfather, John W. Rodgers, was a native of Alabama, but early in the nineteenth century moved to Illinois and became a pioneer farmer in Coles County, where he died. His wife was Lovisa Balch, a native of Kentucky. John White Rodgers, father of William B., was born in Illinois in 1828, and spent his active life as a farmer in Coles County, where he died in 1884. He was a very zealous and devout Presbyterian and an elder in the church for many years. Politically he voted as a republican. His wife was Margaret Elizabeth Gellenwaters, who was born in Illinois in 1838 and died in Coles County in 1887. They had five children. The oldest, James Farnsworth, was a graduate of Rush Medical College at Chicago and practiced medicine for many years, he died at Bowling Green, Kentucky, in August, 1918. The only daughter, Mary Livonia, is the wife of Dr. L. W. Bunnell, a physician and surgeon at Trenton, Missouri. The three younger sons, William B., Hiram W. and Henry G., are all well known Montana lawyers, the first at Butte, the second at Anaconda and Henry G. at Dillon.

William B. Rodgers was educated in the rural schools of Coles County. He grew up on his father's farm, attended Lincoln University at Lincoln, Illinois, and then entered Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, graduating in the law department and with the LL. B. degree in 1891. In University he was a member of the Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity. Soon after graduation Mr. Rodgers came to Montana, practiced at Phillipsburg one year, and in 1892 was elected county attorney, moving his home and office to Deer Lodge in January, 1893. He was county attorney two years. In 1894 he was chosen joint representative for Deer Lodge and Missoula counties, being elected on the republican ticket. He was a member of the important legislature of the fourth session, and there served as a member of the committees on judiciary, ways and means, state board and offices, code, and other committees. Mr. Rodgers continued his practice at Deer Lodge until 1897, when he accompanied the county seat on its removal to Anaconda in that year. In the fall of 1897 he was appointed assistant United States attorney for the Montana district. In 1898 he was appointed United States attorney, and for four years had charge of all the litigation in the Federal Courts of the state. On retiring from that office he resumed private practice at Anaconda, and soon afterward was made local counsel for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. In 1909 he was promoted to general counsel for this corporation, with headquarters at Butte, where his offices are in the Hennessey Building.

During 1901-02 Mr. Rodgers was president of the Montana State Bar Association, and for six years he was vice president from Montana of the American Bar Association. He has always been a steadfast republican in politics, is affiliated with the Presbyterian Church, and is a member of Deer Lodge Lodge No. 14, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Deer Lodge Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, and Deer Lodge Commandery of the Knights Templar, also Helena Consistory No. 3 and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is a member of Montana Lodge No. 13, Knights of Pythias, at Anaconda, and belongs to the Anaconda Club, the Silver Bow Club at Butte, the Lambs Club at Helena, the Anaconda Country Club, and the Rocky Mountain Club of New York City.

June 17, 1896, at Petersburg, Illinois, Mr. Rodgers married Miss Alice Jeannette Knowles, daughter of W. D. and Elizabeth (Shepard) Knowles, both now deceased. Her father was an Illinois farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Rodgers have one daughter, Margaret Elizabeth, nineteen years of age.

Lawrence S. Groff, deputy United States marshal for the District of Montana, has a remarkable knowledge of men and of world geography, and though he is a native son of Montana and has had many of his life interests here, Mr. Groff may be said to be at home anywhere and possesses that rare faculty of being equal to any emergency. He is always ready for duty and has seldom gone into anything without seeing it through.

Mr. Groff was born at Missoula, July 6, 1882, son of Joseph H. and Matilda C. (Shirell) Groff. His father was a Montana pioneer and had a long and most interesting career. He was born near Jefferson City, Missouri, in 1843, was educated in the public schools of his native state, and as a youth joined the Confederate army at the outbreak of the Civil war. Most of his service was in the western border country and exposed to singular risks and hardships. He was under Capt. Joe Shelby, also under the command of General Marmaduke and of the great guerrilla leader Quantrill. He was at the battle of Wilson's Creek, at Lone Jack, and many campaigns through southern Missouri, Arkansas and Kansas. At the battle of Lone Jack he was one of a party commanded by Cole Younger, later a famous character in American criminal history, detailed to capture a hotel occupied by a number of Federal troops. Under the protecting fire of his comrades Cole Younger, with some kindling wood and a can of kerosene, made a bold dash to the west side of the hotel, and undisturbed by the bullets raining about him cooly kindled a fire which with a favoring wind soon drove the Federals out of the building. After the battle of Lone Jack Mr. Groff was under the command of General Shelby until the close of the war. He was mustered out at Stockton, Missouri, in 1865. His military ardor being unsatisfied, he then went south and joined the Texas Rangers. He helped fight the Kiowa Indians in Oklahoma, also the Navajo tribes in Texas and New Mexico. After leaving that service he returned to Missouri, was married, and his wedding trip started with his bride in a cavalcade of ox teams from Stockton, Missouri, up to Omaha, Nebraska, and then across the plains by the Platte River route to Ogden, Utah, and on to Tillamock, Oregon. He engaged in mining and prospecting about two years in Oregon, and then came overland to the district where the city of Missoula now stands. At that time only six log cabins had been built at Missoula. He became prominently known among the pioneers of Montana as a freighter and also conducted a general store at Missoula. He ran his freight trains between Missoula and Fort Benton, also to Deer Lodge, Butte and Helena, and continued in that business until 1873. On leaving Missoula he moved to within four miles of Corvallis, and continued freighting from Corvallis to and from Fort Benton and also established a general merchandise store. His was one of the first log buildings constructed in the Bitter Root Valley. A man of great enterprise, he also helped develop the farming and cattle ranching interests of the valley, his chief partner being his father-in-law, Jacob Shirell. They ranged their cattle in the Bitter Root Valley and the Milk River country, and also south and east of the Great Falls locality. At that time the nearest accessible point to a railroad was at Cheyenne, Wyoming. Their market beef was driven overland to Cheyenne, thence shipped by cars to Chicago. The last shipment by way of Cheyenne was made in 1879. The Groffs had their share of experience with the outlaws and cattle thieves of the day. At one time Joseph Groff and Scott Shirell soon after leaving their ranch headquarters observed three distinct flashes of fire, and soon afterward the appearance of a gang of cattle thieves who tried to stampede the herd. A sharp engagement ensued, and before the fire of the resolute and determined cattle men the thieves withdrew. Joseph Groff was one of the volunteer participants in the campaign against the Indians which culminated in the historic battle of Big Hole in 1876. However, he was detailed to lead the command and look after the safety of his family, taking his wife and three children to old Fort Owens. He witnessed the hanging of the noted horse thief Pete Matt at Stevensville in 1878. Joseph Groff continued in the general merchandise and stock business in the Bitter Root Valley until 1882. His wife, who was born in Cooke County, Tennessee, died in 1882, a few weeks after the birth of her youngest child, Lawrence. There were five other children, three sons and two daughters, and four are still living. After the death of his wife, Joseph Groff took his family overland to Fort Benton, there boarded a steamboat and went down the Missouri River to Yankton, Dakota territory and thence by railroad to Versailles, Missouri. He lived in Missouri the rest of his life and died in September, 1909. He had become a member of the Masonic Order at Stockton, Missouri, at the age of twenty-one.

Lawrence S. Groff was a very small infant when his father returned to Missouri. He received his education in High Point, Missouri, but while still a boy came back to Montana and at Hamilton found employment in the famous racing stables of Marcus Daly. He was there from 1896 to 1897, and during 1898 was a messenger boy at the Daly home, and then became coachman for the Daly establishment in the Bitter Root Valley. In 1899 he went with the racing stable of the late Senator Stanford at Palo Alto, California, and in the spring of 1900 was given the responsibility of taking Senator Stanford's string of famous horses to Hartford, Connecticut, where the stock was sold.

Mr. Groff's next engagement was formed at New York City, where for a year he was with the New York Cuba Company. In 1902 he joined the Merchant Marine and in the next two or three years he traveled to nearly all parts of the civilized world.

His ship touched at such famous points in world geography as Gibraltar, Liverpool, London, Shetland Islands, Glasgow, Copenhagen, through the straits and seas of the north to Christiania, Norway, Kronstadt, Russia, the modern Petrograd, and while at Kiel, Germany, his ship, which was one of the few that had survived a recent storm, was anchored near Emporer William's yacht. He went through the Kiel canal of sixty miles into the North Sea, landed at the English harbor of so much interest to Americans, Plymouth, and from there cleared for Madeira, where the ship took on a load of wine, sailing for the Canary Islands and finally unloaded its cargo at Saint Thomas. Here they took on a cargo of rum for Trinidad and Port Au Spain. While there, by permission, Mr. Groff visited the famous leper colony of 400 people, thence back to Kingston, Jamaica, where a cargo of Panama hats and other supplies was taken on, and they sailed to San Domingo, Haiti, San Pierre, Havana, Cuba, where they reloaded with tobacco and cigars for New Orleans. At New Orleans Mr. Groff signed papers with the Pacific Steamship Company, and went with a cargo of machinery to South America, to Rio de Janeiro, and from there a cargo of fruit was taken back to New Orleans. After leaving the Merchant Marine Mr. Groff took a steamship to New York City, reaching there in May, 1904, after having traveled over twenty-four thousand miles. He finally returned to Montana in September, 1904, and soon afterward entered the train service of the Northern Pacific Railway at Missoula. The next stage in his adventurous career came in May, 1907, when he went to the great Bonanza gold district at Gold field, Nevada, remaining there prospecting and mining until 1908. He then resumed railroading, was conductor with the Great Northern at Havre, Montana, and in June, 1911, became yardmaster for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul. After about a year he went to Mexico City and was a conductor with the Mexican Central Railway from 1912 until the spring of 1913.

Mr. Groff was appointed a deputy United States marshal on May 10, 1915, serving until the spring of 1917. Then, about the time America entered the war with Germany, he was appointed to the United States secret service as a special agent, under the direction of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo. The district to which he was assigned included Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho and part of the state of Washington. Mr. Groff in 1918 returned to Montana and resumed his duties as deputy United States marshal for the district of Montana.

Less than forty years of age, Mr. Groff has lived on terms of intimacy with many of the great capitalists and business men of America, and has tasted the joys of experience and adventure in all parts of the world. He is an esteemed member of Hellgate Lodge No. 383 of the Elks at Missoula, Morning Star Lodge No. 5, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Helena, the Scottish Rite Consistory No. 3 and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine.

OLIVER V. MCINTIRE, while a resident of Montana only a few years, has given conspicuous evidence of his initiative and business enterprise by establishing and building up one of the largest mercantile houses in the western part of the state. He is head of the Pablo Mercantile Company at Pablo.

Mr. McIntire was born at Oakland, Illinois, September 23, 1888, and inherits at least a part of his commercial genius. His grandfather, Oliver McIntire, was a native of Ireland and an early settler in southern Indiana. A man of liberal means but of even more decided enterprise, he was associated with the establishment of a number of business concerns and of two towns in southern Indiana. He spent the rest of his life in that state. John Edward McIntire, father of the Pablo merchant, was born in Illinois in 1859, and is now living at Terre Haute, Indiana. He was reared and married in Illinois, and for many years his home was at Oakland, where he was a real estate operator. His keen judgment made him one of the first to open the great Illinois oil field west and southwest of Terre Haute, Indiana, at one time one of the richest and most productive oil districts in the Middle West. He has been an oil operator for many years, was very successful in that line, and now has extensive interests in the wonderful new oil districts of Texas. He is a republican, a Presbyterian and a member of the Knights of Pythias. John Edward McIntire married Elsie Ellen, who was born at Oakland, Illinois, in 1859, and died at Terre Haute in 1917. Their family consisted of the following children: Jeannette, wife of B. C. Kirsch, a railroad man at Terre Haute; Dada E., wife of E. R. Rowan also a railroad man, living at Pablo, Montana; Ada, unmarried, who for the past fifteen years has been connected with Terre Haute's leading department store, the A. Herze Mercantile Company; Oliver V.; Edward B., who is clerk in a clothing store at Terre Haute, enlisted in 1917, and spent about a year overseas and at the signing of the armistice was at the front in the Motor Truck Division being mustered out in 1919, with the grade of sergeant; and Wanda Alice, wife of Maurice Hewitt, who is son of one of the largest coal operators in Indiana, Maurice being a stockholder and interested in an automobile supply firm at Terre Haute.

Oliver V. McIntire was educated in the public schools of Oakland, graduated from high school in 1906, and for several years lived at Terre Haute with his parents. For two years he was employed in one of the leading industries at Terre Haute, the Columbia Enameling and Stamping Works.

Mr. McIntire arrived in Montana in 1908. During the next seven years he was serving a practical apprenticeship at merchandising as clerk in a store at Arlee. During those seven years he laid the foundation of his sound experience and judgment as a business man. After a brief time at Ronan he moved to Pablo and established the Pablo Mercantile Company, the largest firm of its kind in that section of Missoula County. The corporation owns a large modern store building and warehouses, and handles an immense trade, drawn to the store by the progressive methods of merchandising. Mr. McIntire is president of the company, with W. F. Stimpson, vice president and B. O. Shannum, secretary and treasurer.

Mr. McIntire is a republican, a member of the Presbyterian Church and is affiliated with Polson Lodge No. 78 of the Masons. At Arlee, Montana, in 1912, he married the daughter of one of the best known pioneer families of Montana, Miss Alice A. DeMers. She is a daughter of A. L. and Grace (Lambert) DeMers, the latter now deceased. A. L. DeMers, a resident of Arlee, was born near Montreal, Canada, and came to Montana in 1874. His enterprise has a conspicuous part in the history of the Flathead district in the old locality known as DeMersville, which antidated the modern city of Kalispell, which is supplanting it. Mr. A. L. DeMers was a pioneer merchant there, later was associated with his brother Jack DeMers as a merchant at Frenchtown, and he opened the first log store building at St. Ignatius, Montana. Since 1904 he has been retired at Arlee. Mr. and Mrs. McIntire have three children: Virginia, born in 1913; Jean, born in 1915; and Edward Alexander, born in 1918.

BERT W. DIMMICK, chief merchant and present postmaster at Pablo, has spent all his life in the Northwest and has had a busy and eventful career. He has been a farmer, rancher, merchant, county official, and his name is known and respected in several communities in Minnesota and the Dakotas as well as in Montana.

Mr. Dimmick was born near St. Paul, Minnesota, April 7, 1870. His people were pioneers in Minnesota territory. His grandfather, John Dimmick, was born in New York State in 1797, and opened up a farm in Minnesota as early as 1857. He died at Princeton in that state in 1883. John Dimmick married Cynthia Payne, a native of New York State, who died in Minnesota. The Dimmicks are an English family and were colonial settlers in America. William Dimmick, father of Bert W. Dimmick, is also a resident of Pablo, Montana. He was born in New York State in 1845, was twelve years of age when his parents moved to Minnesota, grew up and married near St. Paul, and was a farmer, lumberman and engaged in other occupations in Minnesota for many years. Since 1917 he has lived retired at Pablo. During the Civil war he was a soldier with a Minnesota regiment. Politically he is a republican. William Dimmick married Anna Rines, who was born in the State of Maine in 1845 and died at Elk River, Minnesota, in 1914. Their children were three in number: Nina, wife of Fred Stimson, a carpenter and builder at Pablo, Montana; Bert W.; and Blanche, of Dickenson, North Dakota, widow of George Frye, who was a cattleman and real estate broker there.

Bert W. Dimmick attended public schools, graduated from the high school at Princeton, Minnesota, in 1888 and then spent three years learning business in a store in the Red River Valley of North Dakota. For three years he clerked and did other work at Anderson in Shasta County, California, and then returned to North Dakota and was in a grocery store at Grand Forks one year, following which for several years he was in the cattle raising industry in McKenzie County, North Dakota. While in that county he was appointed county auditor in 1904, and was elected to that office in 1906, serving four years, from 1905 to 1909. He was appointed and served as clerk of the District Court of McKenzie County nearly two years. In the meantime he filed on a homestead of 160 acres in that county, proved up his claim and lived on it for three years. From North Dakota Mr. Dimmick went back to his native state and bought a farm at Elk River, but sold it at the end of three years.

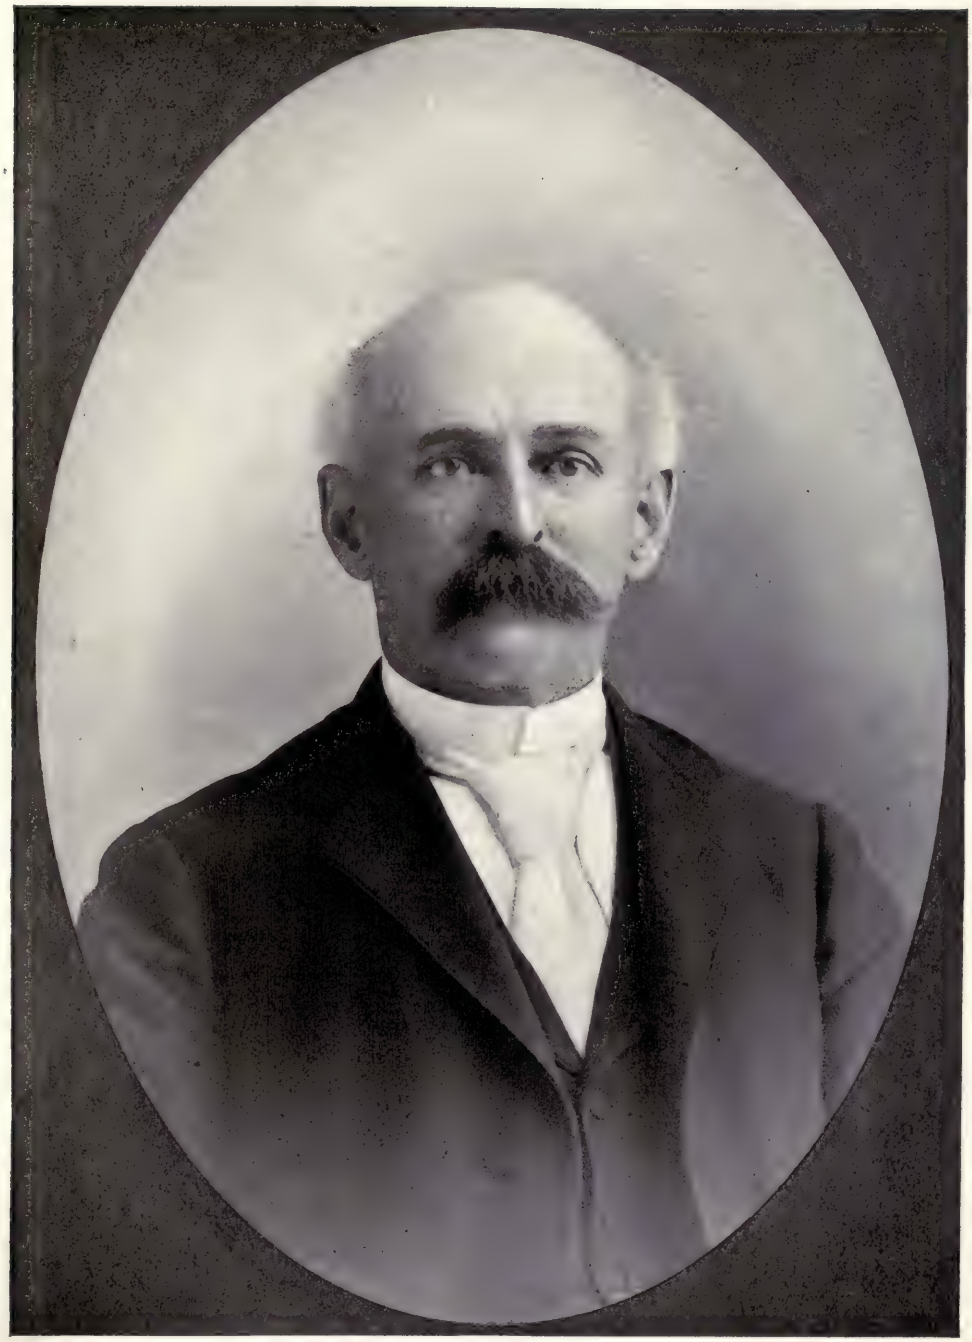
Mr. Dimmick came to Montana in 1917, and after a brief stay at Polson located at Pablo in May of that year. He built the first store building in the town, still owns that structure, and has made his one of the leading mercantile establishments in that section of Missoula County. He also owns a farm five miles east of Pablo. He was appointed to his present duties as postmaster on January 2, 1918.

Mr. Dimmick is independent in politics, and is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. In 1909, in Montana, Mr. Dimmick married Mrs. Marie (Lusier) Miller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lusier, retired farmers of Forest Lake, Minnesota. By a former marriage Mr. Dimmick has one son, Thomas, who is a cowboy at Shafer.

RICHARD LOCKEY. A resident of Montana more than half a century, Richard Lockey has played many parts in his long life, soldier, pioneer, mining prospector, merchant, banker, public official, and for many years has been one of the largest real estate owners in Helena. Richard Lockey is preeminently constructive and he has doubtless derived his greatest satisfaction from doing big things in a big way, and with less consideration for his own advantage than for seeing worthy undertakings properly carried out. He is an inveterate worker, and while now approaching his seventy-fifth birthday his wonderful vitality enables him to keep a master hand on a large and complicated business.

Richard Lockey was born in Yorkshire, England, June 11, 1845. His father, John Lockey, was born in the same district of England in 1816, and in his native country was a miner. He married in Yorkshire Mary Raw, who was born there in 1818. Three of their children were born in England. In 1846 John Lockey brought his family, Richard then a boy of one year, to America and settled at Dubuque, Iowa, where he spent the rest of his life and where he died in 1874. He owned a farm near Dubuque and was also interested in some of the lead mines in that section. After coming to America he was identified with the republican party and was a lifelong supporter of the Methodist Church. His wife died at Helena, Montana, in 1898. The oldest of their children was Jane, who became the wife of Crawford Bowman of Dubuque, and died in the fall of 1919 in South Dakota. Crawford Bowman died in 1918. He was a Union soldier, a farmer, and for several years was a guard at the State Penitentiary at Animosa, Iowa. Barnard Lockey, the second of the family, was a farmer and died at Spencer, Iowa. Richard was the third in age. James T. is a resident of Helena and interested in mining. Elizabeth died in infancy. John W. now occupies the same office at Helena with his brother. Sarah E. was the wife of Emile Brulo, a carriage and automobile trimmer at Helena, who died at Helena, Montana, in 1915. George W. was a merchant and died at Bozeman. Joseph E. also died at Bozeman.

Richard Lockey, though he left school between the age of sixteen and seventeen, made good use of his opportunities in the public schools of Dubuque. He had begun regular work as a clerk in stores at the age of eleven years. Mr. Lockey was small for his age, and therefore found his patriotic enthusiasm frequently balked when he applied for enlistment in the Union army. However, he was accepted as a member of the Fremont Huzzars in Missouri, under Col. George E. Waring, and in 1862 was appointed a clerk in the quartermaster's department. His first service was in some of the campaigns through Missouri and Arkansas. The winter of 1862-63 he spent at Columbus, Kentucky, and in Tennessee, and in the spring of 1863 the quartermaster's department of which he was a member was attached to the Sixth Division of the Sixteenth Army Corps under Gen. A. J. Smith. In the fall of 1863 he went to Memphis, then to Columbus, Kentucky, and was in Alabama under Gen. William T. Sherman. Early in 1864 he returned to Vicksburg and soon afterward was sent up the Red River with Banks expedition. It was Gen. A. J. Smith who really saved that expedition from disaster. Mr. Lockey was with the transports and gunboats and had charge of the quartermaster and commissary departments of the Sixth Division, Sixteenth Army Corps during the campaign. The southern climate induced malaria, and he was invalided to Memphis and finally returned to Dubuque. While recuperating he attended a business college there. About the time the war was closed General Smith sent for him to go to St.



Richard Lockey.

Louis to close up the accounts of the quartermaster and commissary departments, and he was diligently engaged in those duties from the fall of 1865 until February, 1866.

It was on March 7, 1866, that Mr. Lockey started with Capt. Charles Wunderlich in a party crossing the plains with mule teams, and arrived at Helena July 7, 1866. They made the quickest trip that year, four months. He became twenty-one years of age after arriving in Montana.

Mr. Lockey was therefore a witness of the Last Chance Gulch and Helena at the high tide of its fame as a mining center. In recent years he has frequently expressed his lively satisfaction at seeing Helena returned to its former importance as a mining center, since today there are more mines producing ore around Helena than at any time for a quarter of a century.

The first work he did in Montana was five months helping to build the Truitt and Plaisted ditch around Mount Helena for the purpose of bringing water to the placer mines. That ditch is now used as the Mount Helena Boulevard. After that until 1868 he was employed by the Cannon Brothers in their grocery store and bakery, occupying the present site of the Record-Herald office on Broadway. Then came a diversion when he made a horseback tour to Walla Walla, Washington, and Portland, Oregon, and it was probably during that time that Mr. Lockey looked upon the great falls at the present site of Spokane, and deliberated whether he should settle and secure for a practically nominal sum the land included in the site of that now rich and populous city. Returning to Helena the same winter Mr. Lockey took up the study of law, first in the office of the great Montana pioneer and vigilante Col. W. F. Sanders and then in the offices of Chaumasero and Chadwick. He continued reading law until 1871, but has used his legal knowledge chiefly in his private business. After that he was a merchant for a time and then became associated in the real estate and commission business with Seth Bullock, later of Deadwood, South Dakota, until 1872. Seth Bullock was one of the great characters of the Northwest, and became nationally known because of his long intimacy with the late Colonel Roosevelt. Mr. Lockey in 1872 opened a store and bakery on Main Street, Helena, at the point where Sixth Avenue now joins that thoroughfare. His old bakery oven is now buried about six feet under the street car tracks on East Sixth Avenue between Jackson and Main streets. Mr. Lockey did well in this business and in 1877 opened a branch store and bakery at Bozeman, one of the chief features of his manufacture being hardtack for the army and Indian departments. In 1881 he sold his Bozeman interests to his brothers John W. and and George W. and also disposed of his Helena store to William H. Ulm.

Thus relieved of the cares and responsibilities of merchandising, Mr. Lockey opened in 1881 a real estate, insurance and abstract of title business, and still looks after that, the oldest business of its kind in Montana under individual ownership. His offices are in the Lockey Building at 112 East Sixth Avenue and his home is in the same building.

Through all the years Mr. Lockey has maintained an undeviating faith in the City of Helena, and has seldom neglected an opportunity to show his faith in a practical manner by investing a large bulk of his surplus capital in local real estate. At times he has been probably the largest real estate owner in Helena, and still owns many buildings in the city and much unimproved property. The ground for the State Capitol was donated from one of his additions, and he still owns much of the addition known as the Corbin. He also owns nearly all of the Lenox addition adjoining the Corbin addition, and the larger portion of the Lockey addition at about the center of the platted part of the city. There are parcels of property in nearly every section of Helena owned by Mr. Lockey, and some of the leading business blocks are included in his holdings.

Mr. Lockey was an organizer of the American National Bank of Helena and served as a director for twenty-one years. He organized and is president of the Helena Realty Board, and through that organization has performed a splendid service to the entire city. He is also president of the State Investment Company and was president of the Helena Rapid Transit Company. He was one of the leading contributors to the Montana Wesleyan College, serving as a trustee and vice president of the board for many years. He donated to the city the Lockey Avenue Park, and no one has been more generous of his means and his time in beautifying and upbuilding the capital city.

His entire business career constitutes a real public service, though he has also held many official titles. He has always been a straight republican in politics. In earlier years he served as United States gauger, as justice of the peace, held a commission as notary public twenty-one years, for two terms was a school trustee and a member of the City Council two terms. Richard Lockey was one of the most influential members of the third State Legislature of 1893. Always interested in education, he did all he could to influence the Legislature to provide for one central university, embracing all the practical and professional schools, instead of having four or five branches in different sections of the state. The consolidation and centralization of Montana's institutions of higher education has been one of the live questions in the state in recent years, and the arguments put forth in behalf of the plan seem a special tribute to the foresight of Mr. Lockey a quarter of a century ago.

Mr. Lockey has been identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church since thirteen years of age. He is one of the widely known and prominent Masons of Montana. He served as master of Helena Lodge No. 3 in 1876, and is one of its oldest members, having joined it in 1867. He became affiliated with Helena Chapter No. 2, Royal Arch Masons, in 1868 and has served it as high priest. He was the first Knight Templar created in Helena Commandery of the Knights Templar in 1869. He is also a member of Helena Council No. 1, Royal and Select Masons, and he took an active part in organizing the Scottish Rite bodies in 1881, and has been Almoner since Helena Consistory No. 3 was reorganized in 1910. He is an honorary thirty-third degree Mason. Mr. Lockey joined Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine in 1889, and is a past potentate. He was imperial representative at Omaha and Dallas and as such instituted under dispensation and charter, Elkorah Temple of Boise, Idaho. Another interesting fraternal distinction is that he is the oldest living Odd Fellow in Montana. He joined Montana Lodge No. 1 in 1868, and is a past grand. He is a former member of Helena Lodge No. 193 of the Elks, and was prominent in the organization of the Good Templars in 1868, in which he was a member many years, and is also a son of St. George. Much of the good work accomplished by the Helena Commercial Club in upbuilding the city has been due to the active energies of Richard Lockey.

For all the heavy burden of practical affairs he has carried Richard Lockey has always been fond of good fellowship, and he has exemplified a real genius for friendship. A man of remarkable experience, with a rare charm of personality, he possesses the gift of humor and his quaint and unexpected wit has been associated with his name in Montana for many year The old timers of the state know him by the title of "Duke of Last Chance." He is and has been for about forty years the presiding officer of the "House of Lords," a burlesque legislative assembly first organized in Virginia City and moving to Helena when that city was established as the state capital. It was the unique combination of judicial gravity with sudden turns of wit and humor characterizing the orders and rulings of the presiding officer that gave this assemblage its long continued fame.

June 5, 1870, at Helena, Mr. Lockey married Miss Emily E. Jeffrey, a native of Ohio. Mrs. Lockey died at Palo Alto, California, December 26, 1907. Five children were born to their marriage, but only two survive, Mary Ishbel and Richard, Jr. The daughter presents a rare combination of the successful educator and the successful business woman. In 1906 she organized and established the Castilleja School, a girls preparatory school at Palo Alto, California, now one of the leading institutions of its kind on the Pacific Coast. She is president of the corporation, and principal of the school, and the property includes fine grounds and six modern buildings on a campus a mile east of Stanford University There are now twenty-five teachers in the faculty and the enrollment is limited to forty-five boarding pupils and a hundred twenty-five day students.

The son, Richard, Jr., is a graduate of the law school of Stanford University, also attended Harvard University, and for a number of years was a special agent and adjuster in Montana, Idaho, and Utah for a number of fire insurance companies, and for several years past has been actively associated with his father in business.

P. S. Rennick, M. D. A physician and surgeon of the highest standing and attainments, Dr. Rennick has practiced in Montana over fifteen years and recently located at Stevensville, where in addition to a general practice he is owner of a well equipped general hospital, an institution that gives that town many advantages over its neighbors in that section of Montana.

Doctor Rennick grew up at Missoula but was born at Farmington, Missouri, May 6, 1880. His English ancestors were colonial settlers in Virginia. His grandfather was born in Ohio in 1820 and was an early settler at Bismarck, Missouri, where he followed farming. He died at Bismarck in 1895. His wife was a Miss Barry.

J. W. Rennick, father of Doctor Rennick, was born in Missouri in 1845, and when little more than a boy joined a Kansas regiment and participated in several campaigns during the Civil war. He grew up and married in Missouri and graduated from the law department of Illinois College. For a number of years he practiced law at Farmington, and in 1882 moved to Ogden, Utah, where he continued practice, and in 1894 came to Missoula. In Montana he spent his time as a farmer. He died at Missoula in 1917. J. W. Rennick was a republican, a Baptist and affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married Nancy Shelley, who was born at Bonneterre in Missouri in 1849 and died at Missoula in 1904. Lenore, the oldest of their children, is a teacher in the Missoula public schools; Dr. P. S. Rennick is second; L. C. Rennick has spent many years in government service on the Crow Indian Reservation; and Paul, the youngest, is a stationary engineer with home at San Francisco, and enlisted in 1917 in the army and was in service until mustered out in 1919.

P. S. Rennick acquired his early education in the public schools at Missoula, attending high school and also the State University for six years. He graduated with the degree Bachelor of Philosophy from Montana University in 1900. He took his medical course at Louisville, Kentucky, in the University of Louisville, receiving his M. D. degree in 1904. That year he began practice at Victor, Montana, and in 1910 moved to Helmville, where he remained until 1917. On coming to Stevensville Doctor Rennick bought the hospital at Third and Church streets, and his personal management and widely known skill as a surgeon has made its facilities appreciated not only in the home community but over much of western Montana. Cases come to him from as far away as Great Falls. The hospital is a modern brick structure with accommodations for twenty patients.

In July, 1918, Doctor Rennick accepted a call to duty in the army as a member of the Medical Reserve Corps. He was first lieutenant and was on duty at Fort Riley, Kansas, until mustered out in December, 1918. He has done much post-graduate work, attending the Chicago Post-Graduate School of Medicine in 1908 and again in 1919, attended the Chicago Polyclinic in 1916, and in 1919 also pursued a course in the Charity Hospital at New Orleans. Doctor Rennick is the present city health officer at Stevensville.

Politically he is an independent voter. Edward Cason Day has been United States district attorney for Montana since his appointment in October, 1918, by President Wilson. The vigor and efficiency with which he has handled this office reenforce and give permanency to the reputation he has long enjoyed as one of Montana's foremost lawyers and public men.

Mr. Day, who came to Montana a year after the state was admitted to the Union, had practiced law and had served as a legal editor for six years. He was born in Harrison County, Kentucky, March 20, 1862, son of Alfred and Mary Frances (Cason) Day. Both the Day and Cason families came from England and established their homes in Virginia during the seventeenth century. Alfred Day and wife were both born in Harrison County, Kentucky. His father and grandfather both bore the name of Lewis, and the Days migrated from Virginia to Kentucky in 1782. Lewis, Jr., married Miss Hawkins, who died of the cholera in the '40s. The maternal grandfather of the district attorney was Edward Cason, who also bore an honored name in the early affairs of Kentucky. Alfred Day for many years was a farmer and served several terms on the county board of magistrates in Harrison County. He died at Cynthiana in that county in 1912.

Edward Cason Day, one of three children, acquired his early education in the graded city school of Cynthiana, graduating from high school in 1878. He completed his literary education in Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, receiving his A. B. degree in 1880 and three years later his degree in law. He studied law in Kentucky under the direction of Judge Quincey Ward, who later became a justice of the Kentucky Superior Court. He was admitted to the Harrison County Bar in 1882 and in 1884 was admitted to the bar of Ohio and practiced at Cincinnati until 1887. From 1887 to 1890 Mr. Day lived at St. Paul, Minnesota, where he was connected with the editorial board of the well known firm of law publishers, the West Publishing Company, having charge of editing the law reports issued by that company. That was an experience of inestimable value and gave him a knowledge of legal decisions and the vital principles of law such as no attorney ever secures through his individual practice.

Mr. Day identified himself with the Montana bar in 1890, and for the first six years lived at Livingston, and since 1896 has been a resident of Helena. At Livingston he practiced with Judge J. A. Savage and in Helena was successively a member of the firm Cullen, Day & Cullen, organized in January, 1897, Carpenter, Day & Carpenter, and now for many years past as senior member of the firm Day & Mapes.

While so much of his time has been taken up with the duties of public office, Mr. Day is one of the best grounded lawyers in the state, and has a masterful knowledge of the law and its application and has won some of the hardest fought battles in the courts of the state. He is also a popular public speaker, and has interested himself in a broad program affecting educational, religious and general welfare movements. During the war Mr. Day served as state chairman of the Red Cross, Young Men's Christian Association and United War Work drives, was chairman of the State Speakers Bureau of the Council of Defense, and in these movements distinguished himself as an organizer and executive. His first important political honor was an election to represent Lewis and Clark County in the Lower House of the Montana Legislature from 1898. However in 1892, two years after coming to the state, he had been nominated on the democratic ticket for the office of attorney general. He was again elected to the Legislature in 1913 and 1915. Mr. Day is the present city attorney of Helena, for the term 1919-20, and had previously held that office from 1905 to 1907.

Mr. Day is one of the most prominent Masons in Montana. He served as Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Masons in 1898, in 1909 as Grand High Priest of the Royal Arch Chapter of the state, in 1900 as Grand Commander of the Knight Templar Commandery, and in 1915 as Sovereign Grant Inspector General of the Scottish Rite, thirty-third degree. He is also a Past Potentate of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine and has been president of the board of trustees of the Masonic Home of Montana since its creation in 1909. He is a Past Exalted Ruler of the Livingston Lodge of Elks. Mr. Day is a member of St. Peter's Episcopal Church at Helena, is Chancellor of the Diocese of Montana and has served as a member of the board of managers of St. Peter's Hospital. He has been one of the most prominent members of the Montana Club at Helena since its organization, and is a member of the Chi Phi college fraternity. He has also served as president of the Rotary Club and is a member of the state committee of the Young Men's Christian Association. Mr. Day is unmarried.

Several times he was taken prisoner, but managed to escape from his captors. Except for this period of soldier life he spent his career as a farmer and planter and was a very prominent leader in community and political affairs. He was a democrat, an active supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church and a member of the Masonic fraternity. J. S. Lambard married Elizabeth Gilmer Smith, who was born at Petersburg, Virginia, in 1850. She is now living at Victor, Montana. A brief record of their children is: J. He then entered the Farmers State Bank at Victor as assistant cashier and was with that institution four years. He began with the Victor Commercial Company as bookkeeper, and since February 1, 1919, has had the responsibilities of its management. This business is a subsidiary branch of the Missoula Mercantile Company. Practically all the people who make Victor a trading place do business in the large department store on Main street. Besides general merchandise the company also deals in hay and grain, owning a large elevator of fifty thousand bushels capacity.

Mr. Lambard is a democrat and affiliated with Victor Lodge No. 43, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. At Hamilton, Montana, February 15, 1914, he married Miss Hazel Waddell, daughter of John F. and Clara (Knowles) Waddell. Her parents are still living on a ranch near Darby, Montana, where they settled in 1883, being among the first comers in that locality. Mr. and Mrs. Lambard have two children, Massey S., born November 7, 1914, and Richard Irby, born September 26, 1917.

LeRoy Southmayd, M. D. By many years of service recognized as one of the most conspicuous men in the medical and surgical profession in Montana, Doctor Southmayd of Great Falls has the distinction of being the first native son of Montana to complete the regular course of training and enter the ranks of physicians and surgeons.

He is a son of the late LeRoy Southmayd, Sr., and his wife, Sarah (Bartlit) Southmayd. His mother was descended from Joshua Bartlit, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. The Southmayd family has been in America nearly three centuries. William Southmayd, who came over to the colonies in 1640, was the youngest son of Sir William Southmayd of Devonshire and Kent, England.

LeRoy Southmayd, Sr., who died in 1883, was a prominent Montana pioneer, one of the first miners in Alder Gulch, and is frequently mentioned in the annals of the Vigilantes. He, as well as his wife, was born in Essex County, New York. His birth occurred in 1833, while his wife was born in 1844. She died in January, 1918, after about half a century of residence in Montana. Doctor Southmayd was the first of their four children, three of whom are still living. LeRoy Southmayd, Sr., was educated in his native state and in 1849 located at Appleton, Wisconsin, and subsequently engaged in the steamboat and transportation business on the Missouri River between St. Louis and the present site of Kansas City. In that enterprise he had his brother as a partner. In 1859 he went overland to Denver, Colorado, and was a miner in Georgia Gulch. He arrived at Alder Gulch, Montana, in the spring of 1863, having made the trip across the country by ox team. He and A. C. Hall were partners and were connected with the exploitation of some of the first mining claims in and around Alder Gulch. In 1864 Mr. Southmayd returned to St. Louis. There he contracted for the construction of a stamp mill, which was shipped in parts overland to Alder Gulch, and on being set up was the first institution of its kind in the Montana mining district. It was operated very successfully for several years. In 1866 Mr. Southmayd again returned East, this time to Essex County, New York, where he married and spent about a year. He and his wife then left the old home on their wedding tour, traveled by railroad to St. Louis, and thence by steamboat up the Missouri River. On account of Indian hostilities the steamer was compelled to tie up to the shore every night, and consequently they were three months in making the journey. LeRoy Southmayd as one of the prominent men among the miners of Alder Gulch and Virginia City had an active part in the Vigilantes organization. He and Mr. Hall continued their partnership until the early '70s, and afterwards he was identified with the gold mining industry until his death. He was affiliated with Summit Lodge No. 1 of the Masons at Alder Gulch, was a Methodist and a democrat.

Dr. LeRoy Southmayd was born at Alder Gulch July 19, 1869. He received his early advantages in Montana, but was sent East for his literary and medical education. He attended the University of Michigan and graduated M. D. with the class of 1892. He first engaged in practice at White Sulphur Springs, but shortly afterward moved to Virginia City. In May, 1898, Doctor Southmayd was appointed assistant surgeon of the First Montana Infantry when that regiment was enrolled among the United States Volunteers for service in the Philippines. He spent eighteen months with the regiment, and was on active duty during the greater part of the insurrection of the Philippines. In March, 1900, after his return from the Orient, Doctor Southmayd located at Great Falls, and for twenty years has been one of the leading physicians of that city. He was associated with the late Dr. R. P. Gordon, and since his death has been in practice alone. During the war with Germany he served nine months as a major in the Medical Reserve Corps. He had charge of the Three Hundred and Sixteenth Sanitary Train at Camp Lewis, Washington, with 930 enlisted men and 52 medical officers under his medical supervision.

By his attainments Doctor Southmayd is a member of the American College of Surgeons. He has served on the State Board of Health, is a past president of the County Medical Society, and also belongs to the State and American Medical Associations. GEORGE R. FISK, the present postmaster of Hamilton, has been citizen and business factor in that community for over twenty years, and his high standing as a citizen and his business training furnish him every qualification for the official responsibilities he now enjoys.

Mr. Fisk was born at Sparta Center in Kent County, Michigan, August 1, 1872. His English ancestors were colonial settlers in Canada. His father, William H. Fisk, was born in the Province of Ontario in 1844, and is now living with his son George at Hamilton. He was reared and married at Ontario, where he followed farming, and learned the blacksmiths' trade. At the age of seventeen he left his father's farm, and about 1863 located in Kent County, Michigan. He conducted a blacksmith shop for a number of years at Sparta Center, but in 1882 moved to Osceola County in that state, and his energies were absorbed in farming until he retired and removed to Hamilton in 1909. He served as supervisor of Marion Township in Osceola County, Michigan, and held other local offices. He is a democrat and a member of the Masonic fraternity. William H. Fisk married Margaret Ross, who was born in Ontario in 1844 and died at Hamilton, Montana, in 1915. They had four children, George being the youngest. Arthur E., the oldest, was a farmer and died in Osceola County, Michigan, at the age of fifty-two. W. O. Fisk was manager of the Valley Mercantile Company at Hamilton for many years, and during the World war served as a member of the State Efficiency Board. His heavy responsibilities in that connection only terminated in the summer of 1919. Hugh Wesley, the third of the family, is janitor of the high school at Hamilton.

George R. Fisk received his early education in the rural schools of Osceola County, Michigan, and lived on his father's farm until he was seventeen. Having an inclination for industrial life, he went to Detroit and spent three years as an employe of the Detroit Twist Drill Works. On coming to Montana in 1896 he worked for one year on the Marcus Daly ranch near Hamilton. For two and a half years he shipped lumber for C. S. Kendall at Florence, and another year was spent with the Big Blackfoot Milling Company at Butte. In 1900 he returned to Hamilton and for two and a half years clerked in the Page Hotel. Then followed his longest period of connection with one establishment, ten years with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company in the lumber department as timekeeper and lumber checker. Mr. Fisk was appointed postmaster by President Wilson in 1914. He is also a director of the Vermillion Silver, Gold and Lead Mining Company. He was born at East Randolph, New York, February 5, 1885, and is of Scotch-Irish ancestry. His people settled in New York in colonial times. His father, A. H. Holt, was born at East Randolph, New York, in 1856, and was a merchant there for several years. Later he went on the road as a traveling salesman and for past twenty years has been representative in the state of Ohio for the Clawson-Wilson Company. He now lives at Columbus, Ohio. James Edwin Totman has been manager of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Hamilton for over twenty years. He is a veteran lumberman, and he grew up in the big woods of Wisconsin and began his practical apprenticeship in the woods and around saw mills more than fifty years ago.

Mr. Totman, who is also the honored mayor of Hamilton, was born at Plattsburg, New York, June 9, 1849. He is of Scotch ancestry. His grandfather, Asaph Billings Totman, was born in Scotland in 1793 and came to this country with eleven brothers. He established his home on a farm two miles from Peru, New York, where he became a large and prosperous farmer. He died at Saratoga Springs, New York, in 1874. His wife was Anna Lindsley, of Scotch ancestry.

Henry Totman, their son, was born in New York State in 1827, grew up and married at Peru, and in early life took up the lumber industry. He operated saw mills in northern New York, and when that district lost its importance in the lumber field followed the tide in his business to Wisconsin. He went to that state in 1856, and was one of the pioneer sawmill men there. He was a graduate of the Malone College at Malone, Vermont. Henry Totman died at Oconto, Wisconsin, in 1867. Politically he was a republican. His wife was Elizabeth Jackson, who was born in 1828 and died at Oconto, Wisconsin, in 1884.

James Edwin Totman was the only child of his parents. He was seven years of age when his parents moved to Wisconsin and acquired his early education in the public schools of Oconto. Later he entered Beloit College, Wisconsin, but his father's death in 1867 called him home. He next began working in the woods and around sawmills. During the winter of 1876 he was engaged in scaling lumber in the woods around Nealsville, Wisconsin. During the next five years he was in the employ of C. L. Coleman, owner of one of the large saw mills at LaCrosse, Wisconsin. He spent eleven years as sawmill superintendent for the lumber firm of Sawyer & Austin at LaCrosse, and for five years was sawmill superintendent for Laird & Norton at Winona, Minnesota.

Mr. Totman arrived at Hamilton, Montana, on December 24, 1898, and since then has been continuously on duty as manager for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company there. He is also president of the Hamilton Hospital and president of the Farmers' and Business Men's Association of Ravalli County. He was elected mayor of Hamilton in May, 1919, for a term of two years. Mr. Totman resides in the Colter Block on South Second Street. September 2, 1872, at Oconto, Wisconsin, he married Miss Anna B. Dukelow. She was born at Mount Morris, New York, in 1850 and died at Missoula, Montana, in 1891. She is survived by two daughters, Eva and Bessie. Eva is the wife of George Beckwith, and they live at St. Ignatius, Montana. Bessie lives in Missoula, widow of D. W. Hughes, whom she married at Hamilton. Mr. Hughes was in a retail lumber yard at Butte, where he died. In 1904, at Hamilton, Mr. Totman married his present wife, Mrs. Mary L. Moore, a native of New York State.

John Frank Borough has been a merchant at Stevensville beginning as far back as thirty years ago. He is still active, and is proprietor of the largest and most completely stocked hardware store in Ravalli County.

Mr. Borough was born in Seneca County, Ohio, May 20, 1854. His Holland Dutch ancestors settled in Pennsylvania in colonial times. His grandfather, Frederick Borough, was a very remarkable man in many particulars. Born in Dauphin County, Pennsylvania, in 1771, he had some memories and recollections of the War of the Revolution. Had he lived nearly a year longer he might have witnessed the celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence. He died in Monroe County, Michigan, in 1875, at the age of one hundred four years, four months and fourteen days. As a young man he knew George Washington. His hundredth birthday anniversary was celebrated by dinner with Vice President Schuyler Colfax at the latter's home in South Bend, Michigan. Most of his active life Frederick Borough spent as a farmer in Seneca County, Ohio.

Rev. J. Borough, father of the Stevensville merchant, was born in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia in 1817 and as a young man accompanied his parents to Seneca County, Ohio. He was married in that county, afterward moved to Hancock County in the same state, and as a minister of the Evangelical Association and as a circuit rider his labors were widely extended. For many years he was one of the best known ministers of that denomination in Michigan and Indiana. He reared his children in Ohio and Michigan. He was a republican in politics. Rev. Mr. Borough died at Traverse City, Michigan, in 1912. His wife was Susannah Hetler, who was born in Ohio in 1835 and died at Traverse City in 1902. They had a large family of eleven children: William, a retired farmer, now eighty years of age and living at North Baltimore, Ohio; David, a farmer, aged seventy-eight, a resident of Leelanau County, Michigan; Isaac, a farmer who died in Ohio in 1887; Sarah, wife of William Brightville, a farmer of Calhoun County, Michigan; George, a farmer in Monroe County, Michigan; John F.; J. Milton, a traveling salesman whose home is at Marshall, Michigan; Samuel, a farmer who died at Traverse City in 1881; Letta, of Maple City, Michigan, widow of John Dull, a farmer who died in 1899; Charles Theodore, who for many years has conducted a grocery business at Traverse City; Emma, wife of William Bright, a farmer at Leelanau County, Michigan; and Catherine, who is the wife of a farmer in Leelanau County.

John Frank Borough acquired his early education in the district schools of Monroe County, Michigan, spent one term in the State Normal School at Ypsilanti, Michigan, and finished his education in the high school at Wauseon, Ohio. He attended his last school when he was about twenty-two years of age, and then went to work at the trade of harness maker, an occupation he followed both in Michigan and Ohio. In 1881 Mr. Borough became a merchant, and that occupation he has followed with few interruptions for nearly forty years. He established a hardware business at Ovid, Michigan, and conducted it until 1889.

He arrived at Stevensville, Montana, March 24, 1889. For twenty-three years Mr. Borough was president of the Amos Buck Mercantile Company, a large and thriving concern at Stevensville. He sold his interests in 1912, and during the next two years did not consider himself on the active list of local business men. He then bought the corner lot on Main and Third streets and re-entered business as a hardware merchant in partnership with C. C. Fulton. The firm of Borough & Fulton without exception does the largest business in hardware in Ravalli County. On coming to Stevensville thirty years ago Mr. Borough erected a substantial residence on Buck Avenue, and he still lives there. This is one of the good homes of the town. He also owns a ranch of two hundred acres five miles northwest of Stevensville. His land is irrigated and his chief crop is hay.

Back in his home state of Michigan Mr. Borough served as mayor of Ovid and as township treasurer several years. He was one of the first councilmen in Stevensville. Politically he could be described as a dyed-in-the-wool republican. He is past master of Stevensville Lodge No. 28, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and was also master of his lodge at Ovid, Michigan. He is past king and past scribe of Hamilton Chapter No. 16, Royal Arch Masons, a member of Hamilton Commandery, Knights Templar, and Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Butte.

September 27, 1877, Mr. Borough married in Monroe County, Michigan, Ada Bitting, daughter of Frederick and Elizabeth (Buck) Bitting. Her father was a saw mill operator. Both her father and mother lost their lives when the propeller Ironside, on which they were passengers, was sunk in Lake Michigan en route from Grand Haven to Milwaukee. Mrs. Borough is a graduate of a young ladies' seminary at Monroe, Michigan. Mr. and Mrs. Borough had two children. The only son, C. W. Borough, died in 1907, at the age of twenty-nine. Death interrupted for him an exceedingly promising and able business career. He was an associate with his father, and his business ability was known and admired over this part of the state. The daughter, Edna May, born May 2, 1884, is the wife of Herbert Metcalf, and they reside on their irrigated ranch of three hundred ten acres two and a half miles south of Stevensville. Mrs. Metcalf is a graduate of the Stevensville High School.

ROBERT S. FORD. Only those familiar by study, reading or experience with the great and varied life of the west and northwest during the past half century can appreciate the many incidents in the life of such a man as the late Robert S. Ford of Great Falls. When he began his career at the time of the Civil war, one of the greatest industries in the middle west was overland freighting and transportation before the era of transcontinental railways. He helped carry goods back and forth over the plains and brought his first cargo of merchandise into Montana in 1864. The extent of his subsequent enterprise as a stockman might justify the title "cattle baron," though the modesty and simplicity of the man would make such a phrase inappropriate except to describe the importance of his business relations.

For over twenty years he lived in Great Falls, where he died October 1, 1914. An imposing monument to his life is the Ford Building at Great Falls, which was in process of construction at the time of his death and is regarded as one of the finest public buildings in the state. The Ford Building now furnishes facilities for many offices and is also the home of the Great Falls National Bank.

Robert S. Ford was born in Simpson County, Kentucky, January 14, 1842, a son of John C. and Henrietta (Simpson) Ford. In 1847 his father died. In 1855 the family moved to Westport, Missouri, then a town of great importance, since practically merged into the larger Kansas City. Robert S. Ford had a common school education in Missouri. At the age of nineteen he began working for a freighting outfit which used ox teams and wagons in carrying goods between Nebraska City and Fort Laramie. The following year he was advanced to assistant wagon master, and in 1863 had charge of a wagon train. When he came to Montana in 1864 he had charge of an ox train of sixteen wagons of merchandise. Following that for several years he freighted from Benton, Cow Island and the Milk River country to the mining camps of Helena, Virginia City, Bannock and Deer Lodge. In 1868 he returned to Kentucky to visit his mother, who had returned to her home state during the war.

The beginning of his enterprise as a cattle man was made in 1869, when he bought 300 head of Texas cattle in Colorado and drove them into Beaver Head Valley. The venture was profitable, and he next bought seven hundred head of stock in Colorado and wintered them during 1871 at the mouth of the Sun River. His winter cabin was about two miles from Great Falls. In the fall of 1872 he brought still another large herd of cattle from Colorado. From the spring of 1873 his headquarters were near Sun River Crossing, in which locality he developed one of the most extensive ranching projects in the valley. Taking his livestock in the aggregate during the next twenty years Mr. Ford was one of the prominent livestock men in the territory.

He removed to Great Falls in 1891, and soon established the Great Falls National Bank, which he served as president until January 14, 1913. His estate also comprised a large amount of city property and other valuable interests.

Of a southern family, Mr. Ford was always a democrat. In 1876 he represented Choteau County in the State Legislature, and in 1877 Choteau and Meagher counties in the Territorial Council or Senate. In 1880 he was again chosen to represent his district in the Fourteenth Assembly.

Mr. Ford also went back to Kentucky to claim his bride. In that state in 1878 he married Miss Sue McClanahan, member of one of the oldest families of Kentucky. She was born in Simpson County July 1, 1859, daughter of James Wesley and Lydia A. McClanahan. A few weeks after their wedding they came to Montana and Mrs. Ford for seventeen years lived near Sun River Crossing on the ranch. She died October 25, 1906, at Great Falls. Of the five children born to their marriage three died in infancy. The two sons are Lee M. and Shirley S., whose careers are noted briefly on other pages.

LEE M. FORD, son of the Montana pioneer, the late Robert S. Ford, was born on his father's ranch on Sun River near Fort Shaw in what is now Cascade County April 1, 1883.

When he was about twelve years of age his parents moved to Great Falls, where he attended the grammar and high schools. He also was a student in St. Paul's School at Concord, New Hampshire. In 1904, having attained his majority, he went to work for the Great Falls National Bank, of which his father was president, in the capacity of messenger, and by his own diligence and merit was promoted from time to time until he was chosen president of the institution in January, 1913.

Mr. Ford is a democrat and takes an active interest in many of the broader concerns of his home state. He is vice president of the Montana State Historical Society. November 14, 1906, he married Rachel Mary Couch, daughter of Capt. Thomas and Rachel (Webber) Couch. They have one daughter, Rachel Sue.

GEORGE L. GAGNON. The wonderful growth in realty values in Butte have brought to the forefront a class of men who for general ability, astuteness and driving force are unsurpassed in the annals of trade in this state. It is well to say that conditions develop men, but it is better to say that men bring about conditions. The realty market of Butte owes what it is to the men who have had the courage to persevere, to act wisely and to keep their operations clean in one of the most difficult fields of endeavor. One of the men who through his energetic endeavors has made himself a most honored citizen of Butte is George L. Gagnon.

George L. Gagnon was born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, in the City of Chicoutimi, on September 3, 1864. Timothy Gagnon, his father, was born in the same province as his son in the year 1821 and died at Chicoutimi in 1875. He was a member of a family that had settled in Canada from France at a period antedating the occupancy of these provinces by the British. After his marriage at Malbe, Quebec, Canada, to Miss Marcelline Guay, born at Malbe in 1823, and died at Chicoutimi, Quebec, Canada, Timothy Gagnon moved to Chicoutimi, being the third white settler to locate in that community, and there he followed lumbering during the early days, later going into farming, and becoming successful in the latter calling. He was a member of the Roman Catholic Church. The children born to Timothy Gagnon and his wife were: Celina, who married Joseph Cote and lives at Saint Joseph d'Alma, Canada; Peter, who resides at Lynn, Massachusetts; Marie, who married Charles Bouttot, lives at Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada; Louise, who married R. C. Harvey, now living at Sudbury, Ontario, Canada; Ellen, who married Peter La Lancette, lives near Chicoutimi, Canada; Emma, who married Charles Trambley, and lives at Sudbury, Ontario, Canada; George L. whose name heads this review; and seven, who are deceased.

George L. Gagnon was reared on his father's farm and when only fourteen years old, and after the death of both his parents, he left home and went to work in a sawmill at Ottawa, Ontario, Canada, where he remained a year. He then came to the United States, his objective point being Potsdam, New York, and he spent the subsequent three winters there in the employ of the Snell Lumber Company, returning to Ottawa for the summer seasons. At the time he came to this country he could speak nothing but French, but was ambitious and determined to learn the English language and the customs and methods of the United States, and it was not long before he gained a fair working knowledge of the language. Although having been denied educational advantages as a boy, his quick perception soon discovered the larger possibilities which were presented to him, and he concluded to try for higher things; and in order to gain specialized acquaintance with commercial forms he took a business course in 1891, and a second one in 1906, and is now one of the best informed men in his line of endeavor. Commencing his business career with but little and having to rely on his own faculties and resources, he has succeeded far beyond even his own expectations.

However, he traveled a long way before he attained his present prosperity. Leaving Potsdam, Mr. Gagnon entered the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railroad as a bridge carpenter, and for four years was employed in construction work in the Province of Ontario. In 1887 he came to Helena, Montana, and followed his trade as a bridge builder for the Montana Central Railroad, operating from Helena to Butte, assisting to construct all of the bridges, section houses, depots and tanks on this route, and remained with this company until the fall of 1888, when he went with the Butte & Boston Mining Company at Butte as foreman carpenter and held that position for thirteen years. In 1902 he resigned this position and took charge of the carpenter work at the Cora Mine for A. Heinze, where he remained for four years. For the subsequent year Mr. Gagnon worked for the North Butte Extension Company, putting up all its buildings, and then embarked in the ice business, which he sold in the fall of 1911. Leaving Butte for a short time, Mr. Gagnon went to Polson, Montana, and began handling real estate, and in it found the field for which he was particularly adapted. Returning to Butte in the spring of 1912, he established himself in a general realty and insurance business, and also handles large timber contracts. This business has grown until Mr. Gagnon now has one of the leading concerns of its kind in Silver Bow County, with offices at 41-42 Owsley Block. He is president of the Gagnon Realty Company, which he incorporated in 1914, and also a member of the board of directors of the Vadnais Realty Company and administrator of the estate of Polydor Vadnais. Mr. Gagnon is owner of several business buildings in the heart of the city as well as a large amount of real estate and mining property in other parts of the city and state.

Mr. Gagnon is a member of Saint Jean Baptiste Society and served the Butte branch of it as president for two terms, and of Butte Camp, Modern Woodmen of America.

Mr. Gagnon is a modest and retiring gentleman who has aspired to no elective or appointive political offices, and seems happiest in the pursuit of his business duties or in the quiet of his home. In 1891 Mr. Gagnon was married at Butte, Montana, to Miss Tarissa Golden, a daughter of William and Amelia (Smith) Golden, pioneers of Kansas, Mr. Golden having served as captain in the Union army throughout the war between the states. Mr. and Mrs. Gagnon became the parents of three children: Edna, who married Charles Hambly, Maud, who married G. Leslie Bolitho, both of whom were graduated from the Butte High School, and Beulah who is attending the Butte High School at present.

Too much credit cannot be given to a man like Mr. Gagnon, for not only has he achieved a notable success through his own efforts and against many obstacles, but he has proven himself as well a generous contributor to worthy objects and a faithful and loyal friend to measures of a public nature. While becoming very successful, the more commendable fact remains that he has builded for himself a character which as a citizen, as a man of affairs, and as husband and father enables him to reflect some of the noblest traits which mankind can own. His record stands today without stain or blemish, and he is eminently entitled to his name of representative citizen. Clear-sighted and energetic, he has never failed in his allegiance to Butte since locating permanently in its midst, and he has placed the city under heavy obligations to him for his constructive labors in its behalf.

Lester J. Hartzell is professor of chemistry at the Montana State School of Mines at Butte. As a mining engineer his experience covers a large part of the West, though for practically a quarter of a century he has been identified with the mining industry of Montana.

He was born at Golden, Colorado, March 21, 1871, and is of Holland-Dutch and Pennsylvania ancestry. His father, James G. Hartzell, was born in Illinois in 1839, was reared and married in that state, and in 1861, at the beginning of the Civil war, enlisted in the Missouri Sharpshooters. Later he was transferred to the Sixty-Sixth Illinois Infantry, and saw a great deal of active service in the Middle West, being with Sherman on the March to the Sea. In 1869 he moved to Golden, Colorado, followed farming, and since 1914 has lived at the Soldiers' Home in California. He is a republican and a Mason. James G. Hartzell married Nellie M. Merryman, who was born at Moline, Illinois, in 1849 and died at Golden, Colorado, in 1898. Lester J. is the oldest of their three children; the second is Harry Hartzell, and the third is Roy.

Mr. Hartzell attended public school at Golden and Denver, for four years was on the range as a cowboy, and June 6, 1895, graduated Bachelor of Science from the School of Mines of Golden, Colorado. He specialized in mining engineering. During 1895 he traveled all through the South and Old Mexico, and on November 10th of the same year arrived at Butte. He followed his profession in mining and metallurgy at different points, and begining in 1898 was for five years chief chemist of the Granite Bi-Metallic Silver & Copper Mining Company at Philipsburg, Montana. The following two years he was employed at Butte and Anaconda by the Anaconda Copper Mining Company as assayer, resigning this post in 1904 to become assistant professor of chemistry and metallurgy in the State School of Mines. After two years he was promoted to the Chair of Chemistry, and has given practically all his time to the duties of this office. He is a member of the American Chemical Society and the Montana Society of Engineers, is a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church, and is a member of Mount Moriah Lodge No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Deer Lodge Chapter No. 3, Royal Arch Masons.

December 31, 1896, at Golden, Colorado, Mr. Hartzell married Miss Emma Hockings, daughter of Simon and Emma (Wall) Hockings, the latter now deceased and the former a retired resident of Missoula. Mr. and Mrs. Hartzell have one son, Lester J., Jr., born February 29, 1904.

Samuel J. Trevillion came to Montana about fifteen years ago, was employed as a machinist for several years, and then became interested in the monument business and is now president of the Trevillion-Mole Monument Company, the leading concern of its kind at Butte and in Silverbow County.

Mr. Trevillion was born in Cornwall, England, June 17, 1884. His people have been Cornishmen for a number of generations, and their business for the most part has been mining. Mr. Trevillion's grandfather, John Trevillion, while a miner by occupation, was well known at one time in America as an athlete and prize fighter. He died in New Jersey in 1889. Samuel J. Trevillion, Sr., father of the Butte business man, was born in England in 1859, and in 1884, just before the birth of his son Samuel, came to America and spent some time in the mines of New Jersey. He then went back to Cornwall, where he still resides, though for another short period he was in this country, spending most of his time in Arizona. His occupation and profession all his active life has been mining. He is a member of the Episcopal Church. His wife bore the maiden name of Amelia Mitchell. She was born in Cornwall in 1859. A brief record of their children is as follows: Hannah Jane, wife of David Thomas, foreman in a powder factory of the Hale Powder Works in Cornwall; Mabel, unmarried and living with her parents; Lillie, wife of David Noble, of Cornwall; Samuel J.; Beatrice, living in Cornwall, is the widow of Richard Matthews, who came to Butte in 1907 and accidentally lost his life in 1910 while in the employ of the Speculator Mine; Lila is the wife of Richard Edwards, a resident of Canada, Mr. Edwards having sustained honorable wounds while a soldier in the World war; Thomas Charles, a farmer in Cornwall; Ethel Maude, married and living in Canada; Archie a farmer in Cornwall, and Rhoda May, unmarried and at home.

Samuel J. Trevillion acquired his education in the public schools of Cornwall. At the age of ten years he began to work in the machine shops of his native country, and had acquired a thorough knowledge of his trade before he came to the United States in 1903. For the first seven years in Butte he worked in the Leonard Machine Shops. In 1910 he became president of the Trevillion-Mole Monument Company. This business was established by Theodore Walker and was the pioneer concern of its kind in Silverbow County. It is a family corporation, Mr. Trevillion's father-in-law, Antone Wicke, being vice president, while his wife, Lena L. Trevillion, is secretary and treasurer. The plant is located at 2400 South Montana Street, and has complete facilities for all classes of monumental work in both marble and granite.

Mr. Trevillion is a republican voter, a member of the Episcopal Church, and affiliated with Monitor Lodge No. 35, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Washington Lodge No. 35, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Sons of St. George. Besides his business he owns a modern residence at 2900 Elizabeth-Warren Avenue.

He married at Helena, Montana, in 1911 Mrs. Lena L. (Wicke) Walker, widow of Edward Walker and daughter of Antone and Pauline Wicke. Her parents reside at Portland, Oregon, where her father has been a merchant for thirty-five years. Mr. and Mrs. Trevillion have two children, Samuel Roy and June.

JOSIAH L. WINES. Few Montana attorneys have been permitted to gather the laurels of success in the law for a longer period than Josiah L. Wines of Butte. Mr. Wines was admitted to the bar and tried his first cases as a lawyer about the time the great American Civil war came to an end. During the '70s he moved to Nevada, and has spent over forty years in his profession in that state and Montana.

He was born in Wabash County, Indiana, November 25, 1838, son of J. L. and Rebecca (Little) Wines, his father a native of Vermont and of New England stock. J. L. Wines was an Indiana farmer, and died in 1840, when his son was only two years of age. The widowed mother survived until 1906.

Josiah L. Wines grew up in an Indiana rural district, but acquired a thorough literary as well as professional education. He attended old Asbury or DePauw University at Greencastle, Indiana, and completed his course in the law school of the University of Michigan in 1865. During the next nine years he practiced law in Eastern Kansas at Olathe, and then removed to Nevada, where he achieved distinctive eminence as an attorney. He practiced five years at Elko and subsequently lived at Eureka and Reno. Mr. Wines located at Butte in 1894, and with an energy that few men of his age could equal continued to handle a large professional business, and for a number of years was attorney for the Southern Pacific Company in Nevada, and also in Montana for the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company. Mr. Wines retired from the active practice of his profession in December, 1918.

As a young man Mr. Wines became identified with the Masonic fraternity, and is one of the oldest Masons in Montana. In 1860 he married Miss Elizabeth Jackson, a native of Indiana. Their one daughter, Eva L., was married to James B. Gallagher, a mining man of Butte, who died leaving one son, Frank M. Gallagher. After the death of Mr. Gallagher she became the wife of Nat. H. Wood of San Francisco.

MILES ROMNEY. Every fact in his life record is an additional qualification for the inclusion of Miles Romney among the real progressives in Montana politics and public affairs. His home for many years has been in Ravalli County, where he has acquired substantial ranching interests, is publisher of The Western News, the official paper of Ravalli County, and for many years has been prominent in Montana public affairs. One of his most recent distinctions was his service with the rank of captain during the World war.

He was born at St. George, Utah, December 18, 1872. His grandfather, Miles Romney, was born in Dalton, Lancashire, England, and married in England Miss Gaskell. He brought his family to America and lived at St. George and Salt Lake City, Utah, where he followed his profession as an architect and builder. He died at St. George. Thomas Romney, father of the Montana newspaper man, was born at Nauvoo, the old time capital of the Mormon Church in Illinois, in 1846. He was reared at St. George, Utah, was married there, and also became a carpenter and builder. In 1881 he settled on a ranch a mile east of Hamilton, Montana, and had a long and successful career as a farmer in this state. In 1912 he removed to Seattle, Washington, and died there in 1914. He was a republican in politics. Thomas Romney married Annie Wood, who was born in England in 1846 and died at Corvallis, Montana, in 1907. Miles was the oldest of their children, and three died in early childhood. Jane is the wife of P. J. Murray, a teacher living at Creston, Washington; Naomi is the wife of E. L. Popham, a rancher at Corvallis, Montana; Kenneth is cashier for the House of Representatives at Washington, District of Columbia; Winifred is the wife of Franklin Pratt, an insurance man of Los Angeles, California; and Thomas was a newspaper publisher and died in New Mexico at the age of thirty-five.

Capt. Miles Romney acquired his early education in the rural schools of Ravalli County, being nine years of age when his parents located on their ranch. At the age of fourteen he went to work and spent two years at common labor. He then went east to complete his education with a business course at the Ohio Northern University at Ada. He returned to Corvallis in 1889 and was employed on ranches, saw mills and in other lines of work until he moved to Hamilton in 1895 and bought The Western News. This paper was originally established at Stevensville in 1889 and was transferred to Hamilton in 1894. It is a democratic paper, being the official paper of the county, and has an extensive circulation in that and surrounding counties. The plant and offices are at 176 Second Street.

Mr. Romney owns a valuable ranch of 200 acres of irrigated land two miles west of Hamilton. Forty acres of this is planted to orchard. The trees were set out in 1906 and for several seasons past the orchard has borne a valuable crop of apples. Captain Romney also owns a modern home on Third Street in Hamilton.

He earned his first distinctions in public affairs when elected mayor of Hamilton in 1902, holding that office two years and during that time establishing a free public library and reorganizing the fire department and beautifying the city by planting trees along the streets and improving the cemeteries. In 1904 he was nominated by the Democratic State Convention as secretary of state, and was renominated on the same ticket in 1908 for the same office.

In the meantime he had been elected state senator from Ravalli County, and was one of the most effective workers for progressive legislation during the period from 1906 to 1910. His association with the progressive element is indicated by the legislation which he supported, including the enactment of measures providing for first investigation of spotted fever, protecting orchards, establishing horticultural experiment stations, requiring prompt report of sales by commission merchants, lengthening terms and increasing efficiency of public schools by a readjustment of the school tax levy, and opposing the notorious House Bill 160 which legalized and domesticated mining, waterpower and timber monopoly in Montana.

In 1911 Captain Romney organized the People's Power League of Montana and as its president directed the initiative campaign that resulted in enactment by the people of primary laws and corrupt practices act. In 1914 he took up the initiative campaign for workmen's compensation and farm loan laws. In 1916 Mr. Romney was one of the most prominent candidates for the democratic nomination for governor of Montana, and went before the democratic voters on the record of his experience and service in the Legislature and as an advocate of an advanced program of state administration.

During the Spanish-American war in 1898, Mr. Romney recruited a company for the war. In the World war he was away from home and business for eighteen months. He enlisted August 25, 1917, entering the officers' training camp at the Presidio, San Francisco, California. He was commissioned a captain in the Quartermaster Corps on April 20, 1918, and served twelve months on the staff of the quartermaster general. He was ordered to Atlanta, Georgia, the general supply point and headquarters for the Southeastern Department, and was supervising officer for the distribution of supplies for more than 1,000,000 troops during September, October, November and December of 1918. After that he was made traveling camp inspector in the same zone, and visited all the sixty stations in that zone. He was recommended for the rank of major, but no promotions were made on this side of the ocean after the signing of the armistice. He was mustered out April 15, 1919.

B. P. McGrair

Captain Romney served as president of the Montana State Press Association in 1902. Fraternally he is affiliated with Ionic Lodge No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Butte Consistory of the Scottish Rite and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is also a member of Hell Gate Lodge No. 383 of the Elks at Missoula and Ravalli Aerie No. 1693 of the Fraternal Order of Eagles.

In 1897, at Corvallis, Montana, Captain Romney married Miss Bessie Robbins, daughter of Albert E. and Susan E. (Florida) Robbins. Mrs. Robbins lives with Captain and Mrs. Romney. Mrs. Romney's father, who is deceased, was for many years a Montana rancher. Mr. and Mrs. Romney have one son, Miles, born December 6, 1900. He is now in the second year of the State University of Montana at Missoula.

Benedict P. McNair has been a prominent business man of Great Falls for nearly thirty years. He is a former county commissioner and has shown a public spirited willingness to assume many responsibilities in connection with the progress and advancement of his locality.

Mr. McNair was born at Dansville, New York, August 23, 1862, a son of Isaac and Caroline (Pierrepont) McNair. His father, a native of Pennsylvania, died in 1903, at the age of seventy-six. He took his family to Minneapolis in 1868, and was a pioneer business man of that city.

Benedict P. McNair was the second in age among his father's children. He attended the public schools of Minneapolis, also the University of Minnesota, and gained his early business training with the wholesale hardware house of Janney, Brooks & Eastman of Minneapolis. He was clerk and subsequently for six years had charge of the wholesale shipping department of the business. From Minneapolis he went to Kansas and opened the State Bank of Colwich in Sedgwick County, near Wichita, and managed that institution successfully for about six years. He then spent a year in New York, and in March, 1893, arrived at Great Falls and since then has been steadily engaged in the real estate, loan and insurance business. He was associated with Charles M. Webster, under the name of Webster & McNair, and also with H. J. Skinner, under the name McNair & Skinner, but since 1909 has been in business under his own name. He also has some valuable interests in stock raising and farming. Mr. McNair was one of the earnest war workers, particularly in the campaign for the sale of Liberty Bonds. He is a democrat in politics and served as county commissioner of Cascade County from 1897 to 1901. He is a past master of Euclid Lodge No. 58, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and was a member of the Board of Trustees when the Masonic Temple was erected at Great Falls. He is also a member of Chapter No. 9, Royal Arch Masons, Black Eagle Commandery No. 8, Knights Templar, and a thirty-second degree member of the Scottish Rite.

August 12, 1896, Mr. McNair married Miss Marion Grace Sprague, who was born at Spragueville, New York, a town named for her grandfather. She is a daughter of Chester and Laura (McGill) Sprague, also natives of New York State. Mr. and Mrs. McNair have three children. Chester Sprague, the oldest, enlisted at the age of nineteen with the Engineer Corps, was transferred to the aviation branch at Mineola, Long Island, went overseas to England in September, 1918, and after the armistice was returned home and granted an honorable discharge. After another year at college he is now associated with his father in business. Sarah Pierrepont, the second of the family, is a graduate of the Great Falls High School and during her senior year was editor in chief of the high school paper, The Roundup. She is now in college and intends to graduate at Stanford University. Benedict P., Jr., is a student at Massee Country School, Bronxville, New York.

Charles Stephen Henderson has been a resident of Montana nearly thirty-five years, grew up in this state, and has long been prominent in business and civic affairs at Butte.

He was born at Hastings, Nebraska, October 19, 1874, son of George and Helena (Adamstone) Henderson. His father was a civil and mining engineer and was employed by some of the great mining and industrial corporations in the West. The family located at Butte in 1886, where Charles S. Henderson completed his education. He began his business career as salesman in a local mercantile branch, remaining there fifteen years.

Mr. Henderson came into political prominence when he was elected sheriff of Silver Bow County in 1906, serving for two years. In 1914 he was again elected to that office, and handled every duty with energy and promptness characteristic of him. Mr. Henderson was appointed United States marshal for Montana by President Taft in March, 1910.

He served two terms as a member of the Butte School Board, and during the period of the World war he devoted practically all his time to various patriotic causes, serving as chief of staff under B. E. Calkin on the Thrift Stamp Committee and in behalf of bond sales.

Mr. Henderson is a member of the Silver Bow Club, the Rotary Club, a life member of the Elks, and is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner.

April 19, 1895, he married May Barnard, of Butte. They have one daughter, Rita Barnard.

Edgar Gifford. Among the able and influential members of the Montana bar no attorney holds a more honored position than Edgar Gifford, of Billings, who by reason of his scholarly attainments, comprehensive knowledge of law, and his legal ability has won distinguished success in his chosen profession. The descendant of one of the earlier families of New England, he was born May 24, 1869, at North Dorset, Vermont, which was likewise the birthplace of his father, the late Jerome Gifford. He comes of Scotch ancestry, the founder of the branch of the Gifford family to which he belongs having immigrated from Scotland to America in 1632, settling in Salem, Massachusetts. His great-grandfather on the paternal side served in the Revolutionary war, holding a captain's commission.

Ezra Gifford, grandfather of Edgar, spent his entire life in North Dorset, Vermont, being engaged in the independent calling of a farmer. He was a veteran of the War of 1812. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Tabor, was born in Bennington County, Vermont, and died in North Dorset. She, too, belonged to a colonial family of note, one of her distinguished cousins having been the late Senator Tabor of Colorado.

Born in 1821, Jerome Gifford succeeded to the ancestral occupation, and during his earlier life carried on general farming in his home town, North Dorset, Vermont. He subsequently moved with his family to Michigan, and having bought land near Port Huron there continued his agricultural labors until his death in 1911. From the formation of the republican party he was one of its most ardent supporters. A man of strong religious tendencies, he was for seventy-one years an active member of the Presbyterian Church. He married Amanda Powers, who was born at Woodstock, Vermont, in 1823, and died in Michigan, near Port Huron, in 1913. They were the parents of the following children: Henry D., who died near Port Huron, Michigan, in 1870, was then studying for the ministry; Lucy, who died at Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, in the summer of 1917, was the widow of Henry Mellick, who died on his home farm a short time after their marriage; Rev. Myron W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, resides near Lansing, Michigan; Albert, engaged in the insurance business at Forestville, Michigan; and Edgar.

A studious lad, fond of his books, Edgar Gifford attended first the rural schools of St. Clair County, Michigan, and in 1889 entered the Northwestern University at Evanston, Illinois, and in 1893 was there graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He has never relinquished his interest in his alma mater, retaining his membership in the Beta Theta Pi fraternity, and in the Greek Letter Social Fraternity, B. O. T. Entering the field of journalism, Mr. Gifford was for two years editor of the Valley City Times Record at Valley City, North Dakota, in the meanwhile devoting all of his leisure to the study of law. Going to Minneapolis, Minnesota, in 1896, he was receiver for the Republic Mining and Lumber Company of Seattle, Washington, until 1912, assisting while there in the reorganization of the concern. The ensuing four years he taught law in the Minneapolis College of Law, proving himself a most competent teacher. Coming to Montana in 1916, Mr. Gifford was engaged in the practice of his profession at Columbus until April, 1918, when he located at Billings, with offices at 215-16-17-18 Securities Building. Devoted to the best interests of his many clients, he has built a large general civil and criminal practice, which is constantly increasing in extent and importance, and he is now one of the leading attorneys of Southeastern Montana.

A democrat in politics, Mr. Gifford has but little time to devote to public affairs, his legal business demanding his entire time and attention. One of the most faithful and trusted members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he has filled practically all of the lay offices, having been a trustee and a steward in Minneapolis, and having served as superintendent of the Sunday school. Fraternally he is a member of Valparaiso Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Valparaiso, Indiana; of Fargo, North Dakota, Consistory, being a thirty-second degree Mason; and of the Knights and Ladies of Security. He is also an ex-member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He likewise belongs to the Yellowstone County Bar Association, being an active member. He resides at the Martha Hotel in Billings.

Mr. Gifford married, in 1894, at Detroit, Michigan, Miss Emma Wright, a daughter of Thomas and Anna Wright, neither of whom are now living. Mrs. Gifford passed to the higher life in 1909, her death occurring in Detroit. Mr. Gifford has one child, Marie, who was educated at Alma College, St. Thomas, Ontario, Canada, and is now teaching in Detroit, Michigan.

Robert B. Kelly, safety engineer for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, is one of the valued men of the corporation, whose experience and foresight are recognized. He was born in Grundy County, Illinois, March 28, 1863, a son of Timothy Kelly, and grandson of Robert Kelly, born in County Mayo, Ireland, who died in LaSalle County, Illinois, about 1856. A substantial business man in Ireland, he was there well known as a tavern keeper, but after he came to the United States in 1853 he engaged in farming. His wife bore the maiden name of Edwards, and she, too, was a native of County Mayo, Ireland.

Timothy Kelly was born in County Mayo, Ireland, in 1822, and he died on his home farm in Norman Township, Grundy County, in 1901. He was a young man when he came to Canada, joining his mother's brother at Montreal, and there he completed his education by taking an engineering and mathematical course. Later he came to the United States, and for a time was in the employ of the City of Detroit, Michigan, in an engineering capacity, but subsequently went to Chicago, and was employed on the construction work of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, in the engineering department. Moving to Ottawa, LaSalle County, Illinois, he formed a partnership with Frank Edwards, and they carried on a large contracting business until Mr. Kelly left for New Orleans, Louisiana. The outbreak of the Civil war prevented his making any permanent connections there, and he returned to Ottawa, and continued his operations with Mr. Edwards until he bought a farm in Norman Township, Grundy County, which comprised 160 acres of land, to which he later added eighty acres, moving on this farm and making it his home the remainder of his life. It is still owned by his heirs. A democrat, he served as township supervisor of Norman Township for a number of years, and also as road commissioner, being largely responsible for the construction of the bridges in Grundy County. A man of superior education and sound practical ideas, Mr. Kelly made many improvements, and was the first man in Grundy County to lay tiles to drain his farm, thus redeeming many acres of low land, and becoming one of the most successful agriculturalists of his region. All his life he was a devout member of the Roman Catholic Church. Timothy Kelly was married to Margaret Killale, born in County Galway, Ireland, in 1837. She survives him and makes her home at Seneca, Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Kelly had the following children: John, who died when eighteen years of age; Robert B., whose name heads this review; Edward, who resides at Seneca, Illinois, is employed in the maintenance department of the Illinois & Michigan Canal; Mary, who died at the age of 2½ years; Timothy, who is an attorney, real estate dealer and postmaster at Seneca, Illinois; Margaret, who is unmarried, lives with her mother; and J. W., who is an attorney, lives at Denver, Colorado.

Until he was twenty-one years old Robert B. Kelly lived on his father's farm and attended the rural schools. He then left home and going to Chicago secured employment in the motor power department of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, and when that company extended their line west of the Missouri River Mr. Kelly went to Horton, Kansas, and remained in the motor power and mechanical department of this road until the spring of 1889. In that year he came to Montana and was in the same department for the Northern Pacific Railroad at Livingston until 1894. He then left railroad work and for a year conducted a grocery at Livingston, when he entered the employ of the Livingston Lighting & Power Company, continuing with it until 1901. That year saw Mr. Kelly's advent at Anaconda, and the beginning of his connection with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company when he started in the mechanical and electrical department, rising by 1905 to the position of master mechanic. In 1913 Mr. Kelly was promoted to be safety engineer, which position he still holds, with offices in the machine shop building of the Washoe Reduction Works, two miles east of Anaconda. Mr. Kelly is firm in his adherence to the principles of the democratic party, and was chairman of the board of county commissioners for four years while residing at Livingston, and was candidate for state senator on his party ticket of Park County in 1900. The Roman Catholic Church holds his membership. Mr. Kelly belongs to Anaconda Lodge No. 239, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Anaconda Camp No. 6039, Modern Woodmen of America. The Kelly family residence is at No. 1892 Elm Street, Anaconda.

Rev. M. D. O'Brien.

In 1892 Mr. Kelly was married to Miss Margaret Ralph, a daughter of Thomas and Ella (Thompson) Ralph, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Ralph came to Gallatin County, Montana, in 1875, and was one of the pioneer farmers of that region. Mr. and Mrs. Kelley became the parents of the following children: Robert T., who lives at home, is a civil engineer in the employ of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, was graduated from the University of Montana at Bozeman, with the degree of Civil Engineer; Jean D., who is also at home, was graduated from the agricultural department of the University of Montana at Bozeman, and is now in the employ of the Goodyear Rubber Company at Butte, Montana. He enlisted in May, 1917, for the great war, was sent to Presidio, California, and after taking the course was commissioned a second lieutenant, assigned to Camp Lewis, Washington. After receiving his commission as first lieutenant he was detailed to Camp Perry, Ohio, where he was qualified as a sharpshooter, and was returned to Camp Lewis, where he was detailed as fire control officer. Still later he was commissioned captain, and just prior to the signing of the armistice he was detailed for Siberian service, and was twenty hours out at sea when the expedition was recalled, and he was mustered out of the service in February, 1919.

Mr. Kelly is a man who holds the confidence and respect of all with whom he is associated. He has always had the good of the community at heart, and is generous in his donations of time and money for the betterment of civic conditions, possessing in marked degree those qualities always conspicuous in the best citizenship.

John Milton Murphey, who came to Butte from Spokane, Washington, where he was in the insurance and real estate business, has been an active associate since 1898 with Gen. Charles S. Warren in mining enterprises.

Mr. Murphey, who was born at Des Moines, Iowa, March 19, 1869, represents some lines of the old Colonial Quaker ancestry of the Carolinas and Eastern Indiana. His grandfather, Robert T. Murphey, was born at Wilmington, North Carolina, in 1789. At an early date he moved to Eastern Indiana, and married there Sarah Burgess, who was born at Richmond, Indiana, in 1795. Miles Milton Murphey, father of the Butte business man, was born at Milton, Indiana, October 10, 1829, was reared and married in that community and then removed to Middletown, Indiana, where he took up a business that attracted the attention and enterprise of many individuals at the time, pork packing. In 1868 he removed to Des Moines, Iowa, and continued in the same line of business for six years. In 1885 he moved his home to Auburn, California, where he entered the real estate business and in 1911 retired to Eugene, Oregon, where he died in 1914. In politics he was independent. Miles Milton Murphey married Mary Virginia Yount, who was born at Middletown, Indiana, February 17, 1837, and died at Omaha, Nebraska. Her parents were Joseph E. and Sophia Yount, both natives of Virginia.

John Milton Murphey acquired his early education in the public schools of Des Moines, also attended Drake University in that city, and was about sixteen years of age when his parents moved to California. In 1889, at the age of twenty, he engaged in the fire insurance and real estate mortgage loans business as a member of the firm of Alonzo M. Murphey & Company at Spokane, and remained there until 1898, when he came to Butte. Mr. Murphey is secretary and director of the Revenue Consolidated Gold Mines, and in the past twenty years has been identified with other concerns of the group headed by General Warren.

Mr. Murphey in 1889 served as a member of Company C of the Second Regiment National Guard of Washington. He is a republican, is a member of Lodge No. 228 of the Elks at Spokane, and in religion is a Protestant Episcopal. January 19, 1898, in All Saints Cathedral at Spokane, he married Mary Alice Warren, daughter of Gen. and Mrs. Charles S. Warren of Butte. They have one daughter, Katherine Warren Murphey, now a student in the University of Montana.

Rev. Michael T. O'Brien. There is no earthly station higher than the ministry of the Gospel; no life can be more uplifting and grander than that which is devoted to the amelioration of the human race, a life of sacrifice for the betterment of the brotherhood of man, one that is willing to cast aside all earthly crowns and laurels of fame in order to follow in the footsteps of the lowly Nazarene. It is not possible to measure adequately the height, depth and breadth of such a life, for its influences continue to permeate the lives of others through succeeding generations. One of the self-sacrificing, ardent and loyal spirits who has been a blessing to the race is Rev. Michael T. O'Brien, chancellor of the diocese of Great Falls, and a man who holds the unequivocal confidence and esteem of the people among whom he has labored.

Michael T. O'Brien was born in Barre, Massachusetts, on April 1, 1862, and is the son of Patrick and Johanna (Callahan) O'Brien, both of whom were natives of Ireland. Patrick O'Brien was born on March 17, 1823, and in young manhood left his native land and went to Canada, where for some time he followed agricultural pursuits. Later he went to Barre, Massachusetts, where he located on a farm and where he spent the remainder of his days. Politically he was a democrat. His wife, who was born in 1822, died in 1890. They were married in Canada and became the parents of five children, of whom two are living.

Michael T. O'Brien attended the public and parochial schools, and then was a student in St. Hyacinth's College in the province of Quebec, Canada; was a student in Holy Cross College, Worcester, Massachusetts, where he was graduated on June 25, 1885, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts; then he attended St. John's Ecclesiastical Seminary at Boston, Massachusetts. He was ordained to the priesthood in Holy Cross Cathedral, Boston, on June 22, 1889, by Most Rev. John J. Williams, Archbishop of Boston. He was at once assigned to St. John's Church at Worcester, Massachusetts, where he remained for fourteen years. He was then placed in charge of St. Mary's Church at Orange, Massachusetts, being the first priest to be stationed at this church. From there he was sent to Sioux City, Iowa, where for three years he was in charge of the cathedral. In October, 1910, he came to the Musselshell Valley, Montana, with a colony of his people and established what came to be known as the O'Brien Colony, and which became the nucleus for as fine a community of souls as settled anywhere in Montana. There he built a church and hall, subsequently built a church at Ryegate, and in 1913 he also built a church at Columbus. In 1916 he built two more churches, one at Reed Point and one at Absarokee. The parish was divided in 1917 and Father O'Brien was placed in charge of the churches at Columbus, Big Timber, Reed Point and Absarokee. He promptly took hold of this work and had just finished the building of a parish house at Columbus when Bishop Lenihan called him to Great Falls and placed him in charge of the cathedral. He was made chancellor of the diocese and also has direct charge of the school, with about two hundred and eighty students. He brought to the work here the ripe experience of years and an enthusiasm which was bound to overleap all obstacles, so that the efforts and labors of Father O'Brien at Great Falls have borne abundant fruit. A ripe scholar, forceful and eloquent in utterance, systematic and methodical in his administration of the affairs under his charge, he has impressed his personality on the varied interests of the diocese, and enjoys to a remarkable degree the love and esteem of the people among whom he labors.

HARRY W. TURNER, who is president of the Montana Electric Company of Butte, made applied electricity his profession at an early stage of its development, and was handling the interests of electrical companies in the Northwest when about the only use to which electricity was put was electric lighting, and when great power plants and hydro-electric development had hardly begun.

Harry W. Turner was born at Madison, Wisconsin, September 27, 1863, son of Dr. Henry W. and Sarah (Noland) Turner. His father, born in New York in 1836, was a successful physician and surgeon and practiced in Iowa many years. In the Civil war he was a hospital steward, regimental surgeon, and was mustered out with the brevet rank of major of the Sixteenth Wisconsin Infantry. He died in Iowa in 1876. His wife, left an orphan, was adopted by Simeon D. North, president of Hamilton College in New York, and was liberally educated. While at college in Wisconsin she married Doctor Turner, and she spent her last years at Butte, where she died in 1900.

Harry W. Turner went to Northern Iowa with his parents in 1865, and at the age of twelve had to leave school and contribute his labor to the support of his widowed mother. He had some rugged experiences during his youth, was driver of a stage coach, taught school, clerked in stores, and also read law.

In 1887, about the time the first electric street railway lines were being built in the United States, he entered the service of the Thomson-Houston Electric Company at St. Paul, Minnesota, and acquired a practical knowledge of the industry. In 1889 the company sent him to take charge of its business at Portland, Oregon, and later made him manager of its sales agency at Helena, Montana. In 1892 Mr. Turner removed to Butte and took charge of the plant and business that is now the Butte Electric and Power Company. During the successive years under his management the company's service doubled many times, and enormous sums were expended in development and extension of its working plant. Mr. Turner continued the general management until 1910, and is still financially interested in the industry.

The Montana Electric Company, of which he is president, is a wholesale concern dealing in electric supplies and equipment and was established by Mr. Turner in 1895. Later a similar business was established at Spokane known as the Washington Electric Supply Company, and Mr. Turner is also president of that corporation.

Mr. Turner has been one of the live and enterprising citizens of Butte for nearly thirty years. He is a member of the Montana Society of Engineers, the Silver Bow Club, the Butte Country Club, the Rocky Mountain Club of New York, is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner and also an Elk. Politically he is independent.

He married at St. Paul September 7, 1891, Mary N. LeBeau, and they have one daughter, Frances Maried, born at Helena in 1892. She was graduated from the Marlboro School for Girls at Los Angeles in 1912.

HARRY A. GALLWEY. That Montana offers plenty of opportunities to the brainy man is proven many times over by the rapid advancement of those who have selected this state as their field of operation, and among them one worthy of special mention is Harry A. Gallwey, general manager of the B. A. & P. Railroad, and former senator of the State Assembly. He was born at Virginia City, Nevada, August 16, 1866, a son of Dan Gallwey, who was born at Clonakilty, County Cork, Ireland, in 1832, and died at Virginia City, Nevada, February 5, 1885. Reaching mature years in his native land, Dan Gallwey then left Ireland for the United States and coming west to San Francisco, California, was engaged for a time in acting as purser on a boat running between that city and the Isthmus of Panama. In 1852 he went to Virginia City, Nevada, being one of the pioneer miners of that place. In politics he was a democrat, and in religious faith a Roman Catholic. He married Ellen Hickey, who was born in Limerick, Ireland, in 1834, and died at Virginia City, Nevada, January 31, 1885. Their children were as follows: Harry A., whose name heads this review; Margaret, who married James Farrell, a grocer and general merchant of Butte, Montana; William, who was an electrician in the employ of the Hennessy Company, died at Butte, Montana, in 1899; and Daniel, who died in infancy.

Harry A. Gallwey attended the public schools of Virginia City until he was sixteen years old, at which time he began working and for two years was a telephone operator for the Bell Telephone Company, leaving it to become bookkeeper for the Western Union Telegraph Company, rising to be manager of the company's office at Reno, Nevada, in 1886, and holding that position for a year, when he resigned and became bookkeeper for J. R. Douglas, a stock broker of Virginia City, Nevada, with whom he remained for six years. Mr. Gallwey then went to Sutro, Nevada, to engage as bookkeeper for the Sutro Tunnel Company, leaving them after eighteen months to come to Butte, Montana, and spent a short time during 1894 in that city, but then returned to Virginia City, Nevada, and was deputy county clerk and treasurer of Story County. In October, 1895, he came back to Butte, Montana, and for a year was bookkeeper for the Pat Mullen grocery store. Once more he left Montana, and for a year was bookkeeper for the De Lamar's, Nevada, Gold Mining Company of De Lamar, Nevada. At the expiration of that period he became bookkeeper at Butte, Montana, for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company and was promoted to be general manager of the Parrott Silver & Copper Company at Butte, and held that position until 1911, when he was made general manager of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad, having worked his way up to this position by hard work and faithfulness to his responsibilities. His offices are in the general office building of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad on West Commercial Avenue, Anaconda. His division extends from Butte to Anaconda, and he has under his immediate supervision some 500 employes.

Always a strong democrat, Mr. Gallwey has been called upon to represent his district, and in 1899 was a member of the Lower House of the State Assembly from Silver Bow County, Montana, and during his period of service was chairman of the committee on privileges and elections, and a member of other important committees, upholding the interests of his constituents and assisting in the passage of some very constructive legislation. His record was such that he was re-elected several times, serving in all twelve successive sessions the last two times being a member of the Upper House. For years he has been a member of the Democratic State Central Committee, and was its chairman several terms. While in the Senate he was on the judiciary, mines and mining, and the railroad and transportation committees, as well as others of importance. For a number of terms he was chairman of the County Central Committee of his party, and has always been very active in party matters. The Roman Catholic Church holds his membership. He belongs to Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of which he was exalted ruler in 1910, and district deputy in 1911. The Anaconda Club, the Anaconda Country Club, the Rotary Club, the Silver Bow Club, and the Country Club, all furnish him social relaxation. For some time he has been an active member of the Butte Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Gallwey belongs to the American Institute of Mining Engineers. He at one time was president of the Independent Telephone Company of Butte, having been active in securing its organization. The Gallwey family residence is at No. 207 North Excelsior Street, Butte, Montana.

Mr. Gallwey has been twice married, first in 1895, at San Francisco, California, to Miss Georgia Brophy, born at Virginia City, Nevada, and died in 1911 at Oconomowoc, Wisconsin. There were no children. On July 12, 1913, Mr. Gallwey was married to Mrs. Mary (Fagin) Kennedy, born at Salt Lake City, Utah. She is a graduate of St. Mary's College of Salt Lake City. Mr. and Mrs. Gallwey have no children.

Not only is Mr. Gallwey recognized as a business man of more than ordinary capabilities, but is also accredited with being a power in his party. In addition to holding the offices already mentioned, he has been a delegate to six state conventions, and two national conventions of the democratic party, and has made his influence felt in the deliberations of these bodies. He is a man who wins the affection, the respect, the understanding and adherence of the men with whom he comes into contact. As a party leader he is sagacious and far-sighted, able to plan and look ahead and so govern his actions as to bring about constructive action, rather than that which is destructive. As an executive he has been able to so regulate the affairs of his division as to eliminate much of the friction and bring about a better understanding with his men. Utterly unafraid, he forges ahead to accomplish what he believes is best and right, and is always ready and anxious to render an accounting of his actions and to back them up with unanswerable arguments.

JAMES SCOFIELD O'ROURKE. It is no doubt true that Ireland, of all countries of the world, has sent more immigrants in proportion to population to the United States than any other country, and the reason is well known. For hundreds of years the Emerald Isle has been denied many valuable rights and privileges by Great Britain, and the pride and honor of the people were ground into the dust. They could avoid all this only by leaving the island, much as they loved it, and accordingly thousands of them, as the years rolled round, have crossed the wide Atlantic to find homes of greater freedom in America. In every state they settled and built up comfortable homes. They were among our first teachers and business men, and today they occupy many of the proudest positions within the gift of our people.

Among the sons of Ireland who have "made good" in Montana should be specifically mentioned James Scofield O'Rourke, an extensive rancher and stock raiser, residing near Wilsall. Mr. O'Rourke was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, on January 13, 1849, the son of William and Mary (Scofield) O'Rourke. The father was born in County Tipperary in 1815 and was there reared to the life of a farmer. In 1868 he came to the United States and settled first in Chicago, moving shortly afterwards to Pueblo, Colorado, where he died in 1889. He was a democrat in politics and a member of the Catholic Church. His wife was also born in County Tipperary, in 1821, and she died in Pueblo, Colorado, in 1889. To these parents were born the following children: Cornelius, who died in Pueblo at the age of forty-five years, had been employed by various mercantile concerns. He served six years in the United States army, beginning at the close of the Civil war, and took part in the campaigns against the Apache Indians. John, who was a member of the fire department of the City of Chicago, was killed in the line of duty during a big fire, a water tank falling from the top of a building and killing him and four others. Thomas, who was a railroad engineer in Texas, is deceased. William, of California, who also followed railroad engineering, is deceased. James is the immediate subject of this sketch. Mary became the wife of John Donnahue, a merchant in Chicago, and both are deceased. Michael is a merchant in Pueblo, Colorado. Edward is a railroad conductor and resides at Taft, California. Harry is president of the LaSalle Institute, of Kansas City, Missouri. Nellie became the wife of Jack O'Connor, who was engaged in the mercantile business at Denver, Colorado, but is now deceased, and she is now conducting the business. Four other children died in childhood.

James Scofield O'Rourke received his education in the public schools of County Tipperary, Ireland, where he remained until nineteen years of age. In 1868 he came to the United States, settling at Westchester, New York, where he remained for two years. He then came west and engaged in railroading, working in Colorado, Texas, New Mexico and Arizona. In 1883 he came to Livingston, Montana, and was employed as road master by the Northern Pacific Railroad, with which company he remained until 1894, when he bought a ranch located on Elk Creek, about nine miles northeast of Wilsall, where he now resides. He is now the owner of 1,280 acres of fine irrigated land. In the same year in which he bought the ranch Mr. O'Rourke engaged in railroad construction work for the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad and constructed the road through to Cripple Creek. During this period his family were living on and operating the ranch. Then, from 1896 to 1906, Mr. O'Rourke was with the Southern Pacific Railway in Texas as road master, but since then he has devoted his entire time and attention to his ranch. He has been very successful as a raiser of blooded Shorthorn cattle and Percheron horses, and also raises immense quantities of hay and grain. His ranch buildings, including residence, barns and outbuildings, are well built and conveniently arranged, and the ranch is considered one of the best in this locality.

In political matters Mr. O'Rourke gives his support to the democratic party and his religious connections are with the Roman Catholic Church. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Columbus at El Paso, Texas.

In 1885, at Helena, Montana, Mr. O'Rourke married Octavia Murphy, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Murphy, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Murphy was one of the pioneer ranchers of 1880 on Elk Creek, Montana. To Mr. and Mrs. O'Rourke have been born the following children: Mary is the wife of Nels Crane, of Bozeman, an engineer on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad; James is in the automobile business at Livingston; William is employed in the Northern Pacific railroad shops at Livingston; James, who enlisted in the United States army, was sent overseas in June, 1918, and was in France for eighteen months, being assigned to the Ninety-first Division, Machine Gun Corps. He fought at Chateau Thierry, the Argonne Forest and other hotly contested engagements, and returned to the United States in May, 1919, and was mustered out. He is now connected with the automobile business in Livingston. Stephen has been overseas with the United States forces for two years, being first with the Eighty-first Division, and now with the Army of Occupation. He too took part in Chateau Thierry, Argonne Forest and other historic drives by the American forces. Octavia died at the age of twenty-one years. John remains at home on the ranch.

Mr. O'Rourke, though not favored by inherited wealth or the assistance of influential friends, has, by perseverance, industry and wise economy, attained a comfortable station in life and is well and favorably known because of his accomplishments. He possesses a social nature and by his genial and kindly attitude to those with whom he comes in contact he has won the confidence and respect of every one.

George W. Stapleton possessed abilities and character which elevated him to a rank among Montana's most eminent lawyers and statesmen. He was a man of action as well as a lawyer, law giver and law maker, and in some respects it is doubtful if any of his contemporaries exercised such a profound influence over the life and affairs of the state from the earliest territorial period until statehood as did George W. Stapleton.

A pioneer in Montana, he came of pioneer ancestors. It was the pioneer spirit that had caused his family by successive stages to leave the Atlantic Coast in South Carolina and move across the mountains to the Kentucky frontier, where were born Judge Stapleton's parents, Cyrus S. and Margaret (Scott) Stapleton. His father was a skilled physician and lived with his family and practiced his profession in Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois and Iowa. G. W. Stapleton was born in Rush County, Indiana, November 28, 1834, and first attended school in Iowa. He finished his literary training in an Academy at Fort Madison, Iowa, and in 1852 began the study of law at Lancaster, Iowa. He was admitted to the Iowa bar in November, 1855, about the time he reached his majority. After practicing in that state four years he joined the rush of settlers to Colorado, and for several years practiced among the gold miners of that territory.

Judge Stapleton arrived in what afterward became Montana territory in 1862. As there was no territorial organization and no established courts, there were also no professional engagements for a lawyer. However, he was equally at home among the prospectors and shared in the rough work and adventure of the early miners. He made one of the pioneer gold discoveries at Grasshopper Creek and founded a town there which he named in honor of the Indian tribe of the country, Bannack. About a mile below the camp he purchased a claim and with a crude, hand-made wooden rocker he took out gold at the rate of from $200 to $500 per day. At that he was only moderately successful, since provisions and supplies could then only be purchased in Montana mining camps at figures that would make modern high cost of living seem tame.

In 1863 Judge Stapleton was prominent among the parties that stampeded to the Alder Gulch discovery. While on the way he drew up a code of laws for the government of the new camp, and as his party was the first in considerable numbers to reach Alder Gulch his "charter" of laws was immediately enacted, and this was the first community in Montana that might be said to have come under a regular system of law and order. Here again Judge Stapleton acquired some profitable claims, but in 1865 moved to Last Chance Gulch at Helena and then resumed his law practice. A few months later he resumed mining at Ophir Gulch and later practiced law and did quartz mining at Argenta in Beaverhead County until 1879.

Judge Stapleton was a resident of Butte from 1879 until his death thirty years later. In that city he devoted his time and energies to the law, and earned that eminent reputation which will always be associated with his name in the history of the Montana bar. He also developed some extensive mining interests, and having acquired a comfortable fortune he retired from active business several years before his death, after that appearing only occasionally in court either in his own behalf or for some old time friend. After locating at Butte he was associated with Judge Spratt as a partner until the death of the latter in 1881, and then as member of the firm Robinson & Stapleton until the death of Mr. Robinson in 1898. During his last years his partner was his son Guy W., who is one of the prominent lawyers of Butte today.

Judge Stapleton died April 25, 1910. His last words comprise a terse epitaph that many men would delight to deserve: "I have lived long; I have had a good time; I am not scared to die; the game's over." He had in fact lived to see the fruit of his labors and the prosperity and happiness of the people he so faithfully served, and the established success of public institutions to whose creation and development he so essentially contributed.

The story of his life is essentially bound up in the history of Montana territory and state. But as some further comment on his career the following well deserved tributes should be quoted: "Judge Stapleton was really one of the first attorneys of the state to devote his attention to mining law, which was destined to become such an important feature of the practice in Montana. The experience he gained in mining and from close touch with all the varied phases of early Montana life proved of very great assistance to him in his professional career, and was also of invaluable assistance to the territory and state through the practical knowledge he was able to bring to bear in the framing of mining and other laws of the new country. Few, if any, of Montana's pioneers were any more serviceable and valuable, and it is doubtful if any man played a more influential part in shaping the laws and early history of the territory. He was elected to the territorial legislature four times—as often as he would serve—and during his tenure was first speaker of the House and then president of the Senate. He was also a member of the judiciary committee of each House. When it was found necessary to codify the laws of the territory, all eyes turned to him as a capable man to head the commission for the purpose, owing to his wide practical knowledge and great ability. As such he was the leading force in giving clearness and consistency to the bodies of the statutes and proper trend to the course of subsequent legislation.

"He also served conspicuously in the convention of 1889 that formulated the constitution on which Montana was admitted into the Union as a state. He was always identified with the democratic party, and had practically the refusal of every office within the gift of the people, governor, attorney-general, supreme court justice, member of Congress, and all the rest, absolutely declining them all.

"As a citizen he was not only one of Montana's oldest, at the time of his death, but one of her worthiest and most valued ones. Throughout his life he was thoroughly independent in thought and action; he hated sham and had a very great aversion for pretense and hypocrisy, as well as being a bitter foe of fraud, a firm advocate of political honor and an earnest and indefatigable striver after official honesty and square dealing. One of his strongest characteristics was his rugged honesty. His reading was wide in its scope, he was broad-minded in his views, independent in thought and fearless in execution."

In 1870 Judge Stapleton married Miss Cora E. McIntosh, a native of Missouri. Their only son is Guy W. Stapleton, who has always regarded the example and character of his father as the chief source of his inspiration. He was educated at Deer Lodge, Montana, and graduated from the law school of the University of Virginia in 1895. For a quarter of a century he has been a lawyer at Butte, and, as noted above, was associated with his father for nearly fifteen years. He has been county attorney of Silverbow County, and a member of the Montana Legislature.

ROY E. MCKNIGHT. In touching upon the life history of Roy E. McKnight, the well known automobile salesman of Great Falls, the writer aims to avoid fulsome encomium and extravagant praise; yet he desires to hold up for consideration those facts which have shown the distinction of a true, useful and honorable life. Having by sheer force of character and persistency won his way to a place of influence among the business men of this community, Mr. McKnight is entitled to special mention in a volume of the nature of the one in hand.

Roy E. McKnight was born in Mapleton, North Dakota, on November 3, 1884, and is the youngest of the six children born to his parents, Eugene Victor and Elizabeth (Trombley) McKnight. The father was born in Rochester, New York, in 1840, and at the age of fifteen years he came West as far as Battle Creek, Michigan, where he began to earn his own living, his first employment being in a stove works, which he soon relinquished for a job as teamster. Later he removed to St. Paul, Minnesota, and engaged in farming in Ramsey County until 1874, when he located near Mapleton, North Dakota, and took up homestead and tree claims. He gave his attention to wheat raising there until 1892, when he went to Sheldon, and secured 1,280 acres of land, which he devoted to the raising of wheat until 1904, when he sold his land and improvements and removed to Los Angeles, California. There he now resides. Politically he is an ardent supporter of the republican party and while a resident of Ransom County served as a county commissioner. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity. His wife was born in Ramsey County, Minnesota, and died in 1911, at the age of fifty-six years.

Roy E. McKnight was reared under the parental roof and secured his education in the public schools of North Dakota, in the Fargo (North Dakota) Agricultural College, and at the Los Angeles (California) Business College. At Fargo, North Dakota, when but eighteen years of age, Mr. McKnight took over the management of his father's farm for a period of about four years. He then located at Russell, North Dakota, where he became identified with the banking business, being one of the principal organizers of the First State Bank of Russell, of which he became the first assistant cashier, and later its cashier. His brother, John F. McKnight, who had co-operated with him in the organization of the bank, was made president. They remained identified with the banking business up to 1909, when they engaged in the real estate business at Minot, North Dakota, under the firm name of the McKnight Land Company. They continued in this business up to 1912, when he resumed the active management of his land interests in North Dakota and was occupied in wheat raising up to 1916, when he came to Great Falls and engaged in the automobile business, organizing the Overland-Great Falls Company, of which he is president. They are distributors of the Overland and Willys-Knight automobiles and International motor trucks, and, though they have been handling these machines here for only about four years, they have already made a very flattering record in the matter of sales. Mr. McKnight thoroughly understands the automobile business and having two cars in which he has abundant faith he has no trouble in convincing prospective buyers of their merits. Yet he is conservative and careful, not overstepping the bounds of good business ethics in his relations with his customers. The result is a satisfied clientele and a rapidly increasing business.

On December 27, 1917, Mr. McKnight was married to Charlotte Woodburn, who was born in Terre Haute, Indiana.

Politically Mr. McKnight gives his support to the republican party. Fraternally he is a member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mr. McKnight has pursued the even tenor of his way in a quiet and unostentatious manner and it is not a matter of wonder that the elements of a solid and practical nature which unite in his composition should win for him a conspicuous place in the business circles of the community.

A. VON DACHENHAUSEN, president and general manager of the Electrical Equipment Company of Butte, has had many years of training and experience in the management of public utility corporations, and first came to Montana twelve or thirteen years ago as one of the officials of the Montana Power Company.

Mr. von Dachenhausen was born in Washington, District of Columbia, September 20, 1872. His father, Adolphus Henry Carl von Dachenhausen, made a distinguished record as an officer in the American regular army, serving all through the Civil war and remained in the regular army until his death, at Washington, District of Columbia, in 1874. He was born in Hanover, Germany. His father held the rank of a colonel in the Prussian army, and was with the Prussian troops under the Duke of Wellington at the battle of Waterloo and for specially meritorious action in that historic engagement, received a medal of honor. Adolphus Henry Carl von Dachenhausen was reared and educated in Hanover, and during his youth was an officer in the Imperial Guard. He came to the United States in 1861, and as a result of his military training, readily acquired a commission in the Union army and served as captain and adjutant in the One Hundred and Sixty-ninth New York Cavalry. He was in the battle of Gettysburg and in many other campaigns, and his early death was directly due to the hardships sustained during the war. Captain von Dachenhausen married in 1864, when the war was still in progress, Margaret Elizabeth Hunter, a southern girl, born at Fairfax Courthouse, Virginia, in 1849. She died at Washington, District of Columbia, May 24, 1912. Of her three children the Butte business man is the youngest. Frederick William, the oldest, is connected with the United States Geological Survey and lives at Washington, District of Columbia; George Adolphus is also a resident of Washington and is in the automobile business.

A. von Dachenhausen was educated in the public schools of Washington, District of Columbia, graduating from high school there, graduated in 1890 from the State School of Virginia at Blacksburg, and for three years studied law at Georgetown University, District of Columbia. He was diverted from his early ambition for the law and in 1893 entered the service of the Washington Gas Light Company. He remained with that corporation seven years and familiarized himself with all details of business management and much of the technical work. From 1900 to 1906 he was manager of the gas department of the Public Service Corporation of New Jersey, with headquarters at Camden.

Mr. von Dachenhausen came to Montana in 1907 and for ten years was commercial manager of the Montana Power Company and the Great Falls Power Company. He has been a resident of Butte since March, 1907. He resigned from these corporations January 1, 1917, and in the following July organized the Electrical Equipment Company of Butte, of which he is president and general manager. W. A. Willoughby is vice president and R. E. O'Reilly secretary and treasurer. The company's offices are at 28 East Broadway. The firm handles electrical supplies of all kinds, 95 per cent of the business being wholesale, and its trade relations cover the states of Montana, Wyoming and Idaho.

During the late war Mr. von Dachenhausen was chairman of the Silver Bow County Fuel committee, and rendered every patriotic service within his power. He is an independent democrat in politics, a member of the Episcopal Church, and the Silver Bow Club and Country Club. His home is at 1256 West Aluminum Street. December 5, 1911, at Butte, he married Edith Olive Hall, a graduate of the Montana State University of Missoula. Her mother is Mrs. M. H. Hall of Butte. They have one child, Alexander, Jr., born April 21, 1915.

Arthur Murchie Riddell is treasurer and general manager of the Riddell Paint and Art Company of Butte. This is a business which has enjoyed a successful growth of a quarter of a century. The Riddell family were pioneers in Montana, and Arthur Murchie Riddell was born at Missoula October 9, 1889.

He is of Scotch ancestry, his grandfather having come from Scotland and established the family in the Province of Ontario, Canada. Joseph Alexander Riddell, father of Arthur M., was born at Bolton, Ontario, in 1855, was reared and educated at Toronto, was married at Grafton, North Dakota, and at an early day came to Missoula, Montana, where he engaged in business as a general contractor and mason. He probably owned the first brick yard in Missoula. As a contractor his business was widely extended. He did a great deal of public work for the state, including the erection of the buildings of the School of Mines at Butte, the State Normal School at Dillon, the State Agricultural College at Bozeman, the Deaf and Dumb Asylum at Boulder. He also established the business in which his son is now an active official at Butte. Joseph A. Riddell is now living retired at Long Beach, California. He is a democrat, a Presbyterian, and a member of Butte Lodge No. 240 of the Elks.

He married Catherine Murchie, who was born in Ontario in 1866. Arthur M. is the oldest of three children. The second, Marion, died at the age of seven years. Robert, the youngest, is a student in the Harvard Military School at Los Angeles.

Arthur M. Riddell was educated in the public schools of Missoula, graduated from the Butte Business College in 1908, and his active business associations from that time have been chiefly with the Riddell Paint & Art Company. His father in 1895 founded the Butte Paint and Wall Paper Company. The Riddell Paint & Art Company is the direct outgrowth of that business. It is the leading store of its kind in Silverbow County, and is located at 131 West Park Street. The company is incorporated, Catherine Riddell being president, P. C. Dietler, vice president and secretary, and A. M. Riddell, treasurer and general manager. Mr. Riddell entered the business as assistant manager and has been general manager since 1916.

He is also secretary and treasurer of the Empire Amusement Company of Butte. Mr. Riddell, who is unmarried, is a democrat, a member of the Rotary Club, and is affiliated with Silverbow Lodge No. 48, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Deer Lodge Chapter No. 3, Royal Arch Masons, Montana Commandery No. 3, Knights Templar, and Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine.

Herman Strasburger, city treasurer of Butte, has had many interesting associations with the life and affairs of Montana, including the fact that he was born in the old mining town of Virginia City nearly fifty years ago.

Mr. Strasburger is a son of Isadore Strasburger, who was born near Warsaw, Russia, in 1838. The Strasburgers were long a noted family in Warsaw, and some of them were scientists of distinction and were associated with the management of the famous Botanical Institute, one of the distinguishing features of the old capital of Poland. Isadore Strasburger came to the United States in 1854. From New York City he went to Ohio, then to Kentucky, to Missouri, and in 1859 arrived on the site of the present city of Denver. He was a merchant and dealer, and his business for many years identified him with pioneer mining communities. From Colorado he returned to the East for a time, and in May, 1863, was one of the early arrivals at Bannock, while on the 6th of June of the same year he located at Virginia City, and in that crude and rough mining center opened a stock of merchandise under a tent. He remained active as a merchant at Virginia City for twenty years, and eventually owned a large and flourishing establishment. In 1883 he transferred his mercantile enterprise to Bozeman and in 1885 to Butte. In the beginning he sold dry goods, but for the last fifteen years of his career was a furniture dealer. He died at Butte in 1904, and is well remembered as one of Montana's real pioneers and a distinctly useful and public spirited citizen. He was a republican voter and in 1866 he became affiliated with Virginia City Lodge No. 2, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. The wife of Isadore Strasburger was Rachel Cohen, who was born at New Orleans in 1850 and died at Butte in June, 1908. They had a family of five children: Nettie, a teacher of music at Duluth, Minnesota; Eva, wife of A. W. Lignell, a Duluth architect; Herman; Edgar J., city engineer and commissioner of public works at Butte; and Rod E., a mining man at Butte.

Herman Strasburger was born September 6, 1871, and spent his early life at Virginia City. His education was acquired in the schools of Virginia City, Bozeman, Salt Lake City, San Francisco and at the high school in Butte. He also attended Deer Lodge College. Mr. Strasburger inherits from his ancestors a love of study, and has mastered many branches of knowledge. For several years under private tutors he specialized in bookkeeping, the German and French languages, and mining engineering, and for eighteen months was a student of law.

Meanwhile, at the age of seventeen, he put forth his efforts in practical business. He was first employed in a clothing store at Butte, and became manager of the M. P. Sipple Clothing Company. He next took charge of the W. W. Wishon men's furnishing establishment for one year, and for six months was bookkeeper for Dave Goldberg, a railroad broker and commission agent. Leaving Montana he took charge of a large mercantile establishment in Park City, Utah, and wound up its affairs during the next year. On returning to Butte he was associated with his father in the furniture business until 1899 four years of which were spent at the bench as a cabinet maker, after which he spent a year as bookkeeper with the Boston-Montana Mining Company, and the following two years as manager of the McRae Strasburger Harness Company. Mr. Strasburger has helped originate and manage several distinctive enterprises in Butte commercial district. In 1901 he organized the Safety Fuse Ignition Company, manufacturers, and had active charge of the plant for three years. In 1904, for a year he had charge of the Pipestone Hot Springs, and then under Pat Boland had the chief responsibility of the county assessor's office. After that he engaged in mining at Bear Gulch in Madison County, and was also managing director of the Empire Exploration Company. After an interval of a year, during which he was recovering from an injury received in a railroad accident, Mr. Strasburger again took charge of the Pipestone Springs, and continued their management until the fall of 1911. He then located on a ranch he had previously bought nine miles north of Whitehall, on the White Tail Creek, and employed his time buying and selling cattle until April, 1013, when he sold his ranch and cattle. For the sake of his wife's health Mr. Strasburger then spent three months in Los Angeles and three months at Prescott, Arizona. On his return to Montana he was engaged in contracting and building at Whitehall for a year and then became secretary of the first commercial organization of Whitehall. From there he returned to Butte, and was secretary and general manager of the Monarch Sales Company, underwriters, and also secretary and treasurer and part owner of the Mountaineer Welding Company. From 1916 until the fall of 1918 he was manager of the Vignoles-Rail Chair Company. Mr. Strasburger was elected city treasurer in the spring of 1919, but he still has many important business responsibilities.

He is secretary-treasurer of the Beaty's Sporting Goods Company; secretary-treasurer of the Butte Copper Links Company; secretary and managing director of the Empire Exploration Company; is also active in the management of the Vignoles-Rail Chair Company; and is president of the West Butte Mining Company.

Mr. Strasburger is a member of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. He joined the Masonic order at Whitehall and is now affiliated with Summit Valley Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Butte, and is a member of the Silver Bow Club. He resides at the Touraine Apartments, 226 West Silver Street.

In 1906 he married Miss Carrie Lou Lindley, daughter of Charles D. and Catherine (Fitzhugh) Lindley.

G. W. CRAVEN is an electrical engineer of twenty-two years' experience, and for the past fifteen years has divided his services between his duties with the Montana Power Company of Butte and as professor and vice president of the Montana State School of Mines.

Mr. Craven was born at Helena, Montana, April 1, 1871, being one of the older native sons of Montana. His father was the late Rev. R. M. Craven, a Montana pioneer of revered memory. R. M. Craven was born at Walterboro, South Carolina, in 1841, son of James Craven, and descended from the Scotch Cravens who were colonial settlers in the Carolinas. James Craven spent his life in South Carolina as a farmer and married a native of the State of Maine and of colonial New England stock. R. M. Craven grew up in his native state, and served as a Confederate soldier with the Second Volunteer Regiment of South Carolina throughout the war period. He also entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and it was as a missionary that he came to Montana, arriving in the Prickly Pear Valley on June 28, 1868. It was his distinction to be the first ordained minister of that church in Montana, and he carried the message of the Gospel and performed the services of his office all over the territory. He was an enthusiastic Montanan, believed in its great possibilities and resources, and was greatly beloved by all classes of citizens. For many years he was called upon to preach memorial services not only for the Confederate dead but also for deceased Union soldiers. For over fifty years he was member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and in politics a democrat. He died at Columbia Falls in June, 1919. His wife was Mary E. Frazier, who was born in Ohio in 1843, and is still living in Prickly Pear Valley and Lewis and Clark County. G. W. Craven is the oldest of her three children. Ina E. is principal of the Pingree School at Ogden, Utah. W. S. Craven, a resident of Utah, connected with the State Highway Commission, enlisted in 1917 and as captain of the Twenty-third Engineers spent eleven months overseas. He received his honorable discharge at Camp Lewis in July, 1919, with the rank of major in the reserve corps of United States Engineers.

G. W. Craven acquired his early education in the schools of Bozeman, graduating from its high school in 1892. During one year he was a student in the Chauncey Hall Preparatory School at Boston, and for five years was a student of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology of Boston. He graduated with the degree Bachelor of Science in Electrical Engineering in June, 1898, having given additional time to mechanical engineering. Returning to Montana, he joined the technical staff of the Boston-Montana Consolidated Silver Mining Company at Great Falls, and that corporation immediately sent him to Salt Lake City on construction work for the Highland Boy Company's smelter at Murray, Utah. In 1899 he was transferred to Butte, and continued with the Boston-Montana Company until 1905, having in the meantime been promoted to chief engineer of construction. He resigned to become identified in 1905 with what is now the Montana Power Company of Butte, and in the same fall accepted additional responsibilities as professor of mathematics and mechanics in the Montana State School of Mines. He still continues his work as consulting engineer for the Montana Power Company. As vice president of the Montana State School of Mines he has offices in the Administration Building. Mr. Craven is owner of a modern garage at 215 South Main Street and has a residence with every improvement and equipment at 951 Caledonia Street.

He is a member of the Montana Society of Engineers, and the National Association of Stationary Engineers, and also holds first class license from State of Montana. Since early youth he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In Masonry he is past master of Mount Moriah Lodge No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, past high priest of Deer Lodge Chapter No. 3, Royal Arch Masons, past commander of Montana Commandery No. 3 Knights Templar, and a member of Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine.

June 30, 1903, at Butte he married Miss Marthell Arnold daughter of William H. and Susan (McGinley) Arnold, the latter now deceased. Her father is a resident of Butte, a retired merchant tailor, and for many years incumbent of the office of justice of the peace. Mrs. Craven is a graduate of the Butte High School. To their marriage were born: Dorothy, on May 1, 1904, and Eleanor, on August 7, 1907.

FRANK A. CRASE. The local demands of a city as large as Butte are very heavy and of sufficient importance to engross the attention of some of the most energetic of the business men of the state. Each line has its own representatives, and all of them are kept busy meeting the requirements and solving the problems now more than ever complicated, especially in the coal trade. The local consumption of this commodity is immense, and daily increasing with the speeding up of the various industries located in Silver Bow County, combined with the needs of individual consumers, and one of the largest retail concerns in the coal business here is the West Side Coal Company, of whom Frank A. Crase is president and treasurer, the remainder of the stock and offices being in the hands of his wife and daughter.

Frank A. Crase was born at Rockland, Ontonagon County, Michigan, on July 2, 1867, a son of William Crase. The birth of William Crase took place in Cornwall, England, on the estate of Lord Bassett, his father, grandfather of Frank A. Crase, being head gardener of the Bassett estate. He was born and spent his entire life in Cornwall, England. William Crase came into the world in 1833, and he left it in 1912, passing away at Calumet, Michigan.

When he was eighteen years old William Crase came to the United States, leaving Cornwall, England, where he had been reared and educated, accompanied by his bride, and they settled at Copper Harbor, Michigan, where the youthful husband carried on copper mining for a time, but later prospected for copper in the iron regions of Michigan. Still later he went to Rockland, Michigan, and was there engaged in mining until 1878, when he moved to Keweenaw County, Michigan, and until 1882 was engaged in mining at the old Central Mine. For the next three years he was engaged in mining in Marquette County and Ishpeming, Michigan, but in 1885 he returned to Keweenaw County and was made foreman on the surface for the Copper Falls Mining Company, which position he held for three years. Once more he returned to the old Central Mine, but left it in 1893, when he moved to Calumet, Michigan, where he lived in honorable and well-earned retirement until his death. He was one of the pioneer miners of Michigan, and experienced many hardships incident to the time and locality. At one time Mr. Crase crossed Lake Gogebic with Capt. James Dunston and his wife, the latter being the first white woman who ever made the crossing. They were prospecting for copper, and she accompanied her husband on the journey into the wilderness. From the time he cast his first vote William Crase was a republican, and he never swerved from his adherence to the principles of that party. The Methodist Episcopal Church held his membership, and benefited from his efforts in its behalf. His wife bore the maiden name of Caroline Richards, and she was born in England in 1832. Her death occurred at Ishpeming, Michigan, in 1882. She and her husband had the following children born to them: Silena, who is deceased; William T., who is also deceased; Caroline, who married Alexander Collins, yard foreman for the West Side Coal Company, and they reside at No. 1233 West Copper Street, Butte; Richard H., who is deceased; James J., who lives in Houghton County, Michigan, is a stationary engineer; Edward Charles, who is solicitor for the West Side Coal Company, lives at No. 605 West Silver Street, Butte; Frank A., whose name heads this review; Minnie and George A., both of whom are deceased.

Frank A. Crase attended the public schools of Michigan, and received the equivalent of a high school course. He left school when fifteen years of age, having been very quick at his lessons, and began to be self-supporting as a caretaker of machinery in the mines of Keweenaw County, Michigan. In that connection he learned the machinist trade and worked at the old Central Mine until 1894, but in that year left Michigan and arrived at Butte, Montana, on August 17th, and until 1905 was occupied working at his trade.

During the period he was working as a machinist he was making a wide acquaintance and gaining a knowledge of conditions with the view of going into business for himself, so that when he founded the firm of Gillis & Crase he was at once able to control an excellent trade, and one which justified the incorporation of the business in 1907, when it became the West Side Coal Company. The yards and offices are located at No. 520 North Excelsior Avenue. Mr. Crase is president and treasurer of the company; Edith Crase, who is Mrs. Crase, is the vice president; while Ethel Crase, their daughter, is the secretary. This company owns and operates one of the largest retail coal yards in the State of Montana. In addition to his other interests Mr. Crase owns a comfortable modern residence at No. 521 North Excelsior Avenue. In politics he is a republican. Having been brought up in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he early connected himself with it, and has remained a faithful member ever since. He belongs to the Silver Bow Club of Butte.

In 1894 Mr. Crase was married at Calumet, Michigan, to Miss Edith T. Robert, a daughter of John F. and Henrietta (Brunn) Robert the former being a direct descendant of Colonel Robert who served in the American Revolution, and was married to a sister of LaFayette. John F. Robert was superintendent of a mine in Michigan, but later came to Butte, Montana, and at the time of his death in 1909 was secretary of a mining company of this city. Mrs. Robert died on January 4, 1920.

Mr. and Mrs. Crase became the parents of the following children: Ethel, who is secretary of the West Side Coal Company, attended the Montana College at Deer Lodge, Montana; and Frederick Robert, who is attending the Butte High School. Mr. Crase is an excellent type of the self-reliant man who has made his own way in life. While he has been forging ahead, overcoming obstacles and laying the foundations for his present flourishing business, he has not neglected other things, but has always taken a sincere and dependable interest in civic matters as a private citizen, and has cheerfully and effectively given his support to those measures and movements which in his estimation would prove beneficial to the majority.

J. H. O'Connor

THOMAS F. O'CONNOR. The career of Thomas F. O'Connor, of Great Falls, is too well known to the readers of this work to need any formal introduction here, for he has been prominently identified with the business life of the community for nearly a decade. He enjoys distinct prestige here, his practical intelligence, mature judgment and sound business sense winning for him the confidence and good will of all with whom he has come in contact.

Thomas F. O'Connor, who successfully conducts well-ordered undertaking parlors at 701 Central Avenue, Great Falls, was born in Ralls County, Missouri, on January 3, 1869, the seventh in order of birth of the nine children born to Thomas and Mary (Flanagan) O'Connor. Thomas O'Connor was born in County Cork, Ireland, and his death occurred in 1904, at the age of seventy-eight years. In young manhood he came to the United States, the trip being made in one of the typical slow-going sailing ships of that day. His first permanent location was in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where he became a stone cutter and contractor, which business he carried on there for some years. Subsequently he located in Ralls County, Missouri, where he engaged in farming and stock raising, in which he was fairly successful. There he spent his remaining years and died. Though he took an intelligent interest in all public events, he never cared for public office. He was a democrat in his political views, and in religion he was a communicant of the Roman Catholic Church His wife was born in County Louth, Ireland, and came to the United States in a sailing ship when eighteen years of age. She located in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where she met and married Thomas O'Connor. She is now living in Great Falls, at the ripe old age of ninety-one years.

Thomas F. O'Connor spent his boyhood days on the paternal farmstead up to 1898, when he took the course in the Barnes Embalming School, Chicago, where he was graduated in 1899. His first location was at Butte, Montana, in 1900, where he was associated with E. H. Sherman in the undertaking business for about two years. Then for about five years Mr. O'Connor was engaged in stock raising, following which he located in Townsend, Broadwater County, and there conducted a successful undertaking business up to June, 1911, when, desiring a larger field for business, he came to Great Falls and has since been engaged as a funeral director here. His offices on Central Avenue are well arranged for funeral parties when desired, and every facility is afforded for the comfort and accommodation of patrons. Since locating in Great Falls Mr. O'Connor has received his full share of patronage. Because of his courteous ways and sound common sense exercised in performing the exacting duties devolving upon him he enjoys the esteem and confidence of all who have had dealings with him.

On October 22, 1892, Mr. O'Connor was married to Catherine Leake, who was born in Ralls County, Missouri, and they are the parents of two children. William, the first born, who is now twenty-five years of age, enlisted in September, 1917, in the U. S. Army, and in July, 1918, he was sent overseas. His first service was in France, and then stationed at Cologne, Germany, having seen service in practically all the front lines. The other child is Margaret I.

Politically Mr. O'Connor gives his support to the democratic party, and his religious faith is that of the Roman Catholic Church. Fraternally he is a member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; the Fraternal Order of Eagles, the Woodmen of the World, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Loyal Order of Moose and the Knights of Columbus. He is also a member of the Montana Funeral Directors' Association. Personally Mr. O'Connor is a man of pleasing and attractive address and is a popular member of the social circles in which he moves.

REV. CHARLES FREDERICK CHAPMAN, rector of Saint John's Episcopal Church of Butte, is recognized as one of the scholarly men of his profession and through his efficiency and genuine sincerity he has not only been able to develop his parish and expand the scope of its influence, but also has been instrumental in bringing about some much needed reforms in civic affairs. He was born at Piedmont, West Virginia, on April 17, 1872, a son of Dr. Ephraim Chapman, grandson of Edwin Chapman, and great-grandson of William Chapman.

William Chapman was possessed by the same spirit of adventure which animated Daniel Boone, and followed the latter Indian fighter and frontiersman into Kentucky from his native State of Vermont. Still later he went into what was then a part of the Northwest Territory, but is now the State of Ohio, and there he acquired land and became one of the pioneer farmers of Jackson County. His son, Edwin Chapman, was born in Ohio, where he was married and where he lived for a number of years. The pioneer instinct of his father lived again in him, however, and he finally left Ohio for Missouri, acquired land and was engaged in developing it when he was stricken with typhoid fever. His wife came down with the same disease, and both died before the birth of Charles Frederick Chapman. In politics Edwin Chapman was a whig.

Dr. Ephraim Chapman was born on a farm in Jackson County, Ohio, in 1838, and died at Keyser, West Virginia, on March 25, 1882. Growing up in his native county he was engaged in teaching his district schools for some years after reaching his majority. At the death of his father he was appointed administrator of his estate and after he had settled it he and his wife moved to Cumberland, Maryland, where he embarked in a mercantile business. All his life he had been ambitious, desiring to become a professional man, and while at Cumberland found opportunity to realize his hopes and studied medicine with Dr. J. M. McCormick. Later he attended Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and Washington Medical College of Baltimore, Maryland, from which he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Following his graduation Doctor Chapman located at Piedmont, West Virginia, which was a division point of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. When this division point was moved to Keyser, West Virginia, the greater number of the inhabitants of Piedmont flocked to the new place, Doctor Chapman going with them, and there he rounded out his practice, although death claimed him in the prime of life. Inheriting his father's political convictions, it was but natural that he became a republican. Both as a Mason and an Episcopalian Doctor Chapman lived up to the highest ideals of manhood.

Doctor Chapman was married to Julia Russell, born in 1839 at West Liberty, a suburb of Wheeling, West Virginia. She survives her husband and makes her home at Delaware, Ohio. Doctor and Mrs. Chapman became the parents of the following children: Elizabeth May, who lives with her mother; Charles Frederick, who was second in order of birth; John Percy, who is a merchant of Delaware, Ohio, lives with his mother; and Lela Pearl, who is assistant librarian in the University at Delaware, Ohio, also resides with her mother.

After the death of Doctor Chapman, Mrs. Chapman went with her four children to live in the home of her father, John Russell, at Berlin, Pennsylvania. For the six years the family lived there Charles Frederick Chapman studied so as to prepare himself for a collegiate course, and when he was ready for it, removal was made to Delaware, Ohio, and he matriculated in the university there and was graduated therefrom in June, 1895, with the degree of Bachelor of Art. In the fall of 1895 he entered Bexley Hall Theological Seminary of Kenyon College at Gambier, Ohio, from which he was graduated in June, 1898, with the degree of Bachelor of Divinity. That same year he was ordained a deacon of the Episcopal Church and the year following was ordained to the priesthood. In the fall of 1898 he was in city missionary work at Cincinnati, Ohio, and continued in that field until May 1, 1902, when he came west to Central City, Nebraska, and took charge of Christ Episcopal Church of that city. In the fall of 1906 he was placed in charge of the Church of Our Saviour at North Platte, Nebraska, and remained there until August 24, 1913, when he came to Butte, and since then has been rector of Saint John's Episcopal Church.

Saint John's Episcopal Church was established on October 20, 1875, in the store of Foster & Ray, by Rev. M. N. Gilbert, who was afterward bishop coadjutor of the diocese of Minnesota, and the parish covers all of Silver Bow County. During the administration of Reverend Chapman the splendid parish house has been erected at a cost of $38,000. It is used for social service work as well as for the regular church work, and he and his people are contemplating building an addition to the church consisting of a chancel and organ loft, the latter to accommodate the magnificent new organ generously donated by Senator W. A. Clark. This addition will cost approximately $20,000. The church is located at the corner of Idaho and Broadway streets, and the rectory is at No. 15 North Idaho Street.

Reverend Chapman is a republican. He is a Mason and has risen very high in his order, belonging to Platte Valley Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at North Platte, Nebraska; Euphrates Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons, at North Platte; Palestine Commandery No. 13, Knights Templar, also of North Platte; was made a thirty-second degree Mason at Hastings Consistory No. 3, at Hastings, Nebraska; and he belongs to Zabud Council No. 2, Royal and Select Masters, of Butte. He is also a member of North Platte Lodge No. 985, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and of the Butte Rotary Club. In his church honors have been conferred upon him and at present he is president of the standing committee of the Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Montana and one of the examining chaplains of the diocese.

On September 3, 1902, Reverend Chapman was married at Cincinnati, Ohio, to Miss Carrye Garlick, a daughter of Henry and Ida (Stow) Garlick. Mr. Garlick was a wholesale dealer in naval stores at Cincinnati, Ohio, where he died, but his widow survives him and now lives at Los Angeles, California. Mrs. Chapman attended the Oxford University at Oxford, Ohio. The children of Reverend and Mrs. Chapman are as follows: Henry Charles, who was born on September 3, 1903, is attending the Butte High School; Elizabeth, who was born on July 27, 1906, is attending the Butte High School; Frederick Garlick, who was born March 25, 1909; and Edwin Stow, who was born in May, 1912.

Reverend Chapman is very proud of the fact that his family on both sides dates back to the colonial period of this country. The Chapmans were founded here by Robert Chapman, who came from Whitby, England, and located in Massachusetts in 1635. John Russell, Mr. Chapman's maternal grandfather, was born near Wilmington, Delaware, in 1807, and died at Delaware, Ohio, in 1892. For some years he lived at Wheeling, West Virginia, and he was also at one time a resident of Berlin, Pennsylvania. By trade a millwright, he developed into an inventor of some note and among other patents he took out were those for a separator, a machine for taking smut from wheat, and also a rice cleaner, but was unfortunate with reference to it, for although it was a valuable invention he did not receive a cent for it. He married Mary Smith, who was born in Western Pennsylvania. The execution of Lord William Russell of England drove the Russell family out of England to the American colonies, and members of it settled in Southeastern Pennsylvania and Delaware, from whence they spread to different portions of the country. Miss Elizabeth Russell, a sister of the mother of Mr. Chapman, was a missionary under the mission board of the Methodist Episcopal Church to Japan, where she spent forty-five years. It was she who founded the woman's college at Nagasaki, known as Kwassui Jo Gaekko. This lady gained and held the respect and esteem of all classes, and when she left Japan in the fall of 1919, was decorated by the Japanese emperor for distinguished service in the field of education, a most remarkable honor.

A man of scholarly attainments, Reverend Chapman also possesses other characteristics which enable him to reach the understanding of his people directly and surely, and to stimulate them to wholehearted endeavor. He is a nobly gifted man, sincere and unselfish, patriotic and courageous and possesses a striking personality, general ability and a working knowledge of human nature and the motives which control men and their actions, so that there is little wonder that he has risen to the place in his church and community to which his talents entitle him.

Judge Sydney Sanner, former associate justice of the Supreme Court of Montana, now one of the most distinguished members of the legal profession, has long been noted for his brilliant intellectual qualities, fine discriminating ability and a sensitive conscience. He is now conducting a large and important law practice as a member of the firm of Templeman & Sanner, one of the strongest combinations not only of Butte, but of the entire state.

Judge Sanner was born in Maryland on October 16, 1872, a son of James B. and Maria (Beetly) Sanner, natives of Maryland and Virginia, respectively. On both sides of the house the forebears were of Revolutionary stock, but when the disputes between the North and the South culminated in war, James B. Sanner, like many of his associates in Maryland, took the side of the South and gave expression to his belief by enlisting in the Confederate army.

The supporters of the "Lost Cause" returned home after the close of the war broken in fortune, and Sydney Sanner, coming into the world during the difficult reconstruction period, was thrown upon his own resources when still a child. Until he was fifteen years old his education was entirely self-directed, but at that age he reached Helena, Montana, and began to work his way through high school. His efforts proved successful, and he was graduated from the Helena High School in 1892. In the meanwhile he had given all of his spare time to the study of law and after completing his high school course he continued his legal studies under the preceptorship of Judge Henry C. Smith, of Helena, to such good purpose that he was admitted to the bar in 1894.

For two years after his admission to the bar Judge Sanner was engaged in a general practice at Helena, and then went to Big Timber, Montana, where he continued in practice for four years. He then moved to Miles City and formed a partnership with Judge George R. Milburn, which association continued until it was dissolved by mutual consent. Judge Sanner thereafter continued alone, building up a large and valuable clientele in the eastern section of the state. From 1903 until 1907 he served as a member of the Custer County high school board, and in 1908 was appointed to represent the First Ward of Miles City in the city council. During that same year he was elected judge of the Seventh Judicial District, taking his place on the bench in 1909. During his incumbency Judge Sanner displayed the sound judgment, the intellectual honesty and freedom from bias so necessary in a jurist, and his judgments were recognized as being so accurate that when he was placed on the democratic ticket for the high office of associate justice of the Supreme Court of Montana, his fellow citizens, irrespective of party lines, gave him handsome support and elected him on November 5, 1912. The nomination came to him entirely unsolicited, and was the expression of his party's confidence in him and his capabilities.

A Miles City journal had the following reference to Judge Sanner's election:

"The election of Judge Sanner to the Supreme Bench will mean the loss to this community of one of the brightest legal minds in this section of the state. Regardless of party lines, local people will be glad to know of the honor which has come to the Miles City man, and they believe that he will establish the same record for probity, fairness and efficiency in the Supreme Court that he has in the District Court since assuming his judicial office here.

"Judge Sanner has been a conspicuous and influential force, not alone in the legal profession, but as a leading citizen, interested in the important public movements of the day, and it is but natural that he should have the esteem of the people in the communities in which he has lived, and the sincere friendship of a wide circle of acquaintances."

Some conception of his work on the Supreme Bench may be gathered from the many opinions written by Judge Sanner, and the quality of that work may be gauged by the more notable of these opinions in Scott v. Waggoner, 48 Montana 541; Pittsmont Copper Company v. O'Rourke, 49 Montana 288; Colbert's Estate, 51 Montana 462; Hill v. Rae, 52 Montana 378; Empire Theatre Company v. Cloke, 53 Montana 187; State v. Weinrich et al., 54 Montana 391; State v. Stewart, 54 Montana 506. These decisions have reached the dignity of national authority.

Like millions of other Americans when this country entered the World war, Judge Sanner tendered his services to his Government, and in October, 1918, he resigned his distinguished office to enter the United States army. He was placed in the Judge Advocate General's Department with the rank of major, receiving promotion on April 23, 1919, to the rank of lieutenant colonel, and was honorably discharged with that rank. While in the service he was chief of the special board of review, created to re-examine records in court martial proceedings, and he was also a member of the general board of review charged with the duty of formally reviewing all cases of private soldiers convicted of violations of the Civil and Military law. Of his service in the army his commanding officer had this to say:

"I cannot see you go without expressing to you my deep personal appreciation of the splendid work you have done while on duty in this office. Your profound knowledge of the law, accurate judgment and strong common sense have combined to make you an invaluable member of the Board of Review of the Military Justice Division, the work of which has been of the most arduous, difficult and important character. I shall miss your wise counsel more than I can say."

After being mustered out of the service Judge Sanner returned to Montana and resumed the practice of his profession at Butte. The firm of Templeman & Sanner has offices in the Miner Building.

Judge Sanner was married in 1901 to Miss Kirtlye Hill, a daughter of W. D. and Lucy A. (Russell) Hill. Mr. Hill was a stockraiser and ranchman, but is now deceased. Mrs. Hill survives him and lives at Miles City, Montana. Judge and Mrs. Sanner have one daughter, Lucy Beetly, who is attending the Butte High School. Fraternally Judge Sanner belongs to Yellowstone Lodge No. 26, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Miles City Lodge No. 537, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is also a member of the Montana State Bar Association and of the American Legion.

Judge Sanner takes rank with the foremost orators of the state. He is a persistent student who has made himself a man of large learning and broad views. His vision is always forward. Responsive to the popular will, he has nevertheless been honest with himself and true to his settled convictions of duty. In every capacity his service has been loyal, faithful and fearless.

HAROLD GORDON GAINOR. A young man of sterling ability and worth, Harold Gordon Gainor, manager of the Walkerville Market, located at 27 West Daly Street, is distinguished not only as a native born citizen, but from the honored ancestry from which he is descended, being of substantial New England stock on both the paternal and maternal side of the house. A son of Louis T. Gainor, his birth occurred September 17, 1894, and with the exception of the time during the World war that he was in the United States service has resided in Walkerville.

Born in 1860, in Maine, Louis T. Gainor received his education in his native state, and continued a resident of New England until after attaining his majority. Coming to Montana in 1883, he spent a brief time in Butte, from there coming during the same year to Walkerville, and establishing himself as the pioneer butcher of this suburb of Butte. He was at first associated with the firm of Bielenburg & Gurman, and later became junior member of the firm of Bielenburg & Gainor. The firm being dissolved in 1918 he became sole proprietor of the large business which is now being carried on at 27 West Daly Street under the name of the Walkerville Market, the leading meat market of the city. He has also been a member for the past thirty years of the Butte Butchering Company, of which he is now secretary and treasurer, its abattoirs being situated at the south end of Montana Street, Butte, and he is likewise secretary and treasurer of the Metropolitan Meat Company.

Public-spirited, progressive and intensely interested in the establishment of all beneficial enterprises, Louis T. Gainor was a stockholder in the Butte Independent Telephone Company, and from 1900 until 1902 held an interest in the Walkerville Drug Company. In 1900 and 1901 he served as mayor of Walkerville, and from 1911 until 1914, inclusive, was a member of the local school board. Interested in the advancement of the prosperity of both Walkerville and Butte, he is numbered among the foremost business men of both cities. He is a republican in politics, and a member of Olive Branch Lodge No. 23, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Walkerville, and of Walkerville Camp No. 6422, Modern Woodmen of America.

Louis T. Gainor married Julia Hevey, who was born in 1871 in Vermont, and into the household thus established three children have made their advent, as follows: Harold Gordon, the subject of this sketch; Hazel, wife of Elmer Duhame, a butcher for the Walkerville Market, residing at 849 West Broadway; and Virginia, born July 24, 1905, now a freshman in the Butte High School, is noted for her brilliant scholarship.

Having acquired his elementary education in the Walkerville public schools, Harold G. Gainor entered the Butte High School, where he remained a student until completing half the course of study in the senior year. Then, at the age of eighteen years, he learned the butcher's trade with his father, with whom he has since been associated, at the present time holding a position of responsibility and trust as manager of the Walkerville Meat Market.

On July 13, 1917, Mr. Gainor voluntarily enlisted for service in the World war at Seattle, Washington, and during the following five months was with the United States Naval Reserve Corps at the University of Washington Camp on Lake Union. He then served for two months as fireman on the United States Steamship Great Northern, and the next month filled a similar position on the United States Steamship Maine. Being then transferred to the United States Steamship Roanoke, he was made second class cook for fifteen months, having charge of the ice boxes and butcher's shop. During the time he was on the sea Mr. Gainor sailed all around the north coast of Scotland, and along the western coast of Norway, going 150 or more miles north of Bergen, near the "Land of the Midnight Sun." He was with the fleet that laid the mine in the North Sea, in his marine travels having experiences that are indelibly impressed upon his mind. On May 12, 1919, he disembarked at Newport News, Virginia, and on May 28, 1919, was mustered out at Bremerton, Washington, but he is still a member of the United States Naval Reserve force, being on inactive duty. Returning to Walkerville, Mr. Gainor worked for the Schrock-Nelson Packing Company until September 17, 1919, when he assumed the management of the Walkerville Market, a position he is filling with characteristic ability.

Mr. Gainor married, in December, 1915, at Anaconda, Montana, Miss Charlotte Collins, daughter of J. P. and Olive (Reese) Collins, who now reside at 1050 West Galena Street, Butte, where Mr. Collins, now a stationary engineer, was a pioneer settler.

ED MATHEWS. A broad-minded, public spirited citizen of Walkerville, a suburb of Butte, Ed Mathews, now serving as mayor of the city, has long been associated with the higher and better interests of this section of Montana, advocating and working for those enterprises that will be of lasting good to the people therein. He was born January 14, 1865, in Rockland, Michigan, where he was brought up and educated.

His father, John Mathews, was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1836, and as a boy came with his parents to this country, locating in Rockland, Michigan. Beginning work for himself as a miner, he remained in Rockland until 1887, when he came to Montana to pursue his chosen occupation in the mining fields of Butte. Returning to Michigan in 1895, he continued his residence in Rockland until his death in 1899. He was a trustworthy citizen, and an adherent of the democratic party. His wife, whose name before marriage was Winifred English, was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, in 1838, and died in Walkerville, Montana, in 1890. There were eight children born into their household, as follows: John, a miner by occupation, died in Walkerville, Montana, December 19, 1889, aged twenty-nine years; Anthony, a miner and business man of Butte, died in Butte in 1900; Patrick, also a miner, died in Calumet, Michigan, aged forty-five years; Ed, the special subject of this brief biographical review; Mary, wife of Tom Mennie, a millwright in Detroit, Michigan; William, who owned and operated a meat market in Butte, died in that city at the comparatively early age of forty years; George, whose death occurred at the age of thirty-three years in Butte, served on the police force of that city for six years; and Agnes, unmarried, lives in Chicago.

Completing his studies in his native town, Ed Mathews, anxious to try the hazards of new fortunes, came to Butte, Montana, in 1884, and engaged in mining in this vicinity until 1896, his home being in Walkerville from that time until the present, since 1893 having occupied the house at 101 Dunn Avenue, where he is enjoying all the comforts of life and very many of its luxuries. An influential member of the democratic party, and a highly respected and popular citizen, Mr. Mathews was elected county commissioner of Silver Bow County in 1896, and served in that capacity four years. In 1901 he opened a café in Butte, and after operating it successfully for eight years transferred his business in 1909 to Walkerville, locating at 3 West Daly Street, where he has established a well patronized café, which he is managing with great success.

Mr. Mathews has served as alderman from the Walkerville Third Ward four terms, and in April, 1919, had the honor of being elected mayor of the city for a term of two years. Possessing excellent business foresight and ability, Mr. Mathews has acquired considerable property. Fraternally he is a member of Butte Aerie No. 11, Fraternal Order of Eagles.

In 1893, in Walkerville, Mr. Mathews was united in marriage with Olivia, daughter of Jerry and Margaret (Holland) Murphy, who settled in Butte in 1879, in pioneer days, and there spent the remainder of their lives, the father having been a miner. Three children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Mathews, namely: Frank, who died at the age of twenty-two years, on January 24, 1919, enlisted for service in the World war in 1917, was sent as bugler to Camp Lewis, where he was mustered out December 12, 1918; Pearl, born January 6, 1899, completed the course of study in the Butte High School, and after her graduation from the State Normal College in Dillon accepted the position of teacher in the Blaine School at Butte; and Edward, born in 1901, was graduated from the Butte Business College, and is now time keeper for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company.

Victor Siegel

VICTOR SIEGEL, superintendent of the Columbia Gardens, founded by Senator William A. Clark, is one of the representative men of Butte, and one who is held in the highest respect. He was born at Dresden, Saxony, Germany, on May 10, 1867, a son of Adolph Siegel, and grandson of Adolph Siegel, the latter being a manufacturer of textiles upon an extensive scale. Adolph Siegel, the younger, was born near Dresden, Saxony, Germany, in 1834, and he died at Dresden in 1880, having spent his entire life in that vicinity, and there developed into a manufacturer of lumber and pulp, and later became a merchant. He was a Mason and Lutheran, and a most excellent man. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Minnie Gunther, was born at Dresden in 1841 and died there in 1877. Their children were as follows: Clara, who is the wiodw of a Mr. Andreas a cattle buyer and butcher, lives at Leipsig, Germany; Otto, who died at the age of forty-three years at Missoula, Montana, was engaged in the hotel business in that city, to which he had come in 1885, being one of the pioneers of Montana; Oscar, who is foreman of large iron works at San Francisco, California; Victor, who was the fourth in order of birth; Lizzie, who married Charles Heckler, a retired hotel proprietor of Missoula, Montana; Walter, who came to Montana in 1888, was a pioneer butcher of Missoula where he died in 1914; and Jennie, who married Albert Nuhshag, is a bank official of Strassburg, France.

Victor Siegel was educated in the public and Real schools of Dresden, receiving the equivalent of our high school course, and learned the trade of a florist and landscape gardener, and then in 1890 came to the United States. After a short period spent in San Francisco, California, he came to Butte, Montana, reaching this city on October 25, 1890. He first worked as an engineer in the old Centennial Brewery, but after a year there went with the Old Germania Mine, where he spent two years. Mr. Siegel then began work at his calling in the employ of Mrs. Jessie Knox, who owned the first greenhouse in the State of Montana, and remained with her for three years. Mr. Siegel then homesteaded 160 acres of land in the vicinity of Missoula, but later sold it, and went into the ice business in that city. In 1899 he became connected with the Columbia Gardens, which were then being developed, as a foreman of construction, and two years later was made superintendent of them, and has since then held this responsible position and maintains his residence in the park. He is a republican, a Lutheran and belongs to Silver Bow Lodge No. 48, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and the Montana Florists Association, which he is now serving as president.

In 1896 Mr. Siegel was married to Miss Helena Leck at Missoula, Montana, who was born near Bremen, Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Siegel have one son, Victor, who was born on February 20, 1910.

The Columbia Gardens are located three miles east of Butte, at the foot of the Continental Divide, the beauty spot of Montana, and cover eighty-five acres. The beauty, splendid arrangement and costly proportions of these gardens staged amidst a vast horticultural display, make them a veritable dream of loveliness. Something like twenty or more years ago the site now occupied by these gardens was a patch of wild wood and bramble, with a few tumbledown buildings and a dance-hall. Butte needed a park, a place of recreation for the public and Senator W. A. Clark, recognizing this fact, looked about him for a proper location and found it, possessing a broad enough vision to recognize the natural possibilities of the spot he selected. An immense amount of money has been expended on these gardens and at least $50,000 are spent annually in their maintenance. Special attention has been paid to the provision of attractions for the children, including the installing of roller-coasters, merry-go-rounds and a score or more of entertaining devices to keep them amused.

The landscape gardens, the work of Mr. Siegel, are a wonderful achievement. Emerging from the intricacies of cottonwoods, quaking asps, birch, ash and kindred trees, one's view is met by a series of beds of luxuriant flowers, caressed by the clinging fingers of vines. Particularly noticeable is the artistic way in which the gardener has fashioned the varicolored beds. Precision of detail and a fine sense of the really artistic, speak forth from the cheerful faces of the millions of pansies. These are a most remarkable feature of the gardens, where millions of plants vie with each other for supremacy in the eyes of those beholding their beauty. Any florist could well envy the beautiful pansy beds, as they are unequalled in size or color any place.

The whole garden landscape seems as if nature had spread a huge green rug upon the surface and flecked it with floral dots.

The great picnic grove is one spot in the gardens which the families of Butte and its vicinity claim as their own, and the management accords them all the privileges of the place. Here on summer days and evenings are to be found whole families enjoying nature in the rough. It is Butte's outing place, and without it the gardens would be merely a beautiful spot, made so by artificial means and improvements. It is the custom of families to go out there with their hampers and enjoy their dinners on the grass. Rustic seats are everywhere, and water gurgles through sanitary spouts placed here and there for the convenience of visitors. Streams of clear water course down the grass-fringed waterways and sing a sweet melody under the spreading branches of the trees and underbrush. To sit for an hour in this grove is better than a draught of the most approved drug tonic on the market.

The surroundings of this grove are such as are calculated to drive away the cares of men, women and children. Testimony of men in Butte is to the effect that to spend frequent afternoons in it, is to enhance one's desire to live and to forget the rush of business life.

The people of Butte take pride in the gardens, and feel that the management of the resort and the street car line is a part of their own business, in that everything that pertains to them goes to make up a portion of their daily routine of pleasure. A more courteous and capable set of men, headed as they are by Mr. Siegel, cannot be found elsewhere in the United States.

Each year there is a special ceremony in which Senator Clark participates, and that is the one on Arbor Day, when all of the school children of the county assemble in the groves to observe the simple, yet very impressive ceremony of planting the trees. Appropriate exercises are held in connection with this ceremony, and as many as 12,000 children have attended.

As one enters the gardens he hears the merry laughter of children from the playgrounds and, following the sounds of joy, beckoning him, as it were, he is amazed to see beyond the great pavilion the spacious playground where thousands of children are being entertained. Swinging, see-saws, shooting the chutes, wading and swimming are to be found among the numerous sources of pleasure for the children as well as for those of more mature years.

Trained men and women playground experts are employed to organize the different games and sports for the girls and boys, teach them folk dances and other innocent and pretty forms of amusement. No restraint is placed upon the children to get them to take part in systematized play, but those who like to join in with their little companions in such organized pastimes do so of their own free will, and the grownup instructors make themselves one with their pupils and are dearly loved by them.

This pretty feature is a fitting introduction to the visitors who make their first trip into the shady grove beyond. Passing on, the paths diverge, one leading across to the hillside flower-beds, and the other over a rustic bridge to a large enclosure where are found many of the wild animals.

The great dance pavilion is where the gay revel in the delights of youth. The measures of the dance are here charmingly stepped to the tune of the best orchestral music obtainable. The floor space is 130 feet by 180 feet, the floor being of the finest grained hard-wood. There is a spring to the floor which is an added charm. The spacious balcony affords an excellent view of the dancers, and on the east end is a refreshment hall, where ice cream, sodas and numerous soft drinks are served. The orchestra platform is on the west side of the hall, raised to the desired elevation. There are three large entrances. The hall is on the ground floor of the grand pavilion, and is occasionally chartered by social parties, but every night in the summer it is open to the respectable public.

Leaving the gardens with the multiplied attractions, and forgetting all else save the opportunity to continue the journey after stepping off the car, one is led by inclination to climb the mountain's magnificent heights. "Mountain-climbing" parties make the journey to the summit of the Continental Divide of the Rockies, a distance of only one mile from the gardens.

One has but to look back to see sights which well repay him for the trip. Magnificent views open out to the west, south and north. Away across the valley are the white-crowned domes of the Highlands, whose gorges are filled with snow, glittering like powdered crystal. To the west are the ridges of blue mountains that dim into the perspective to a minute yet clearly traceable outline of white. To the northwest lies Butte with all of its mines, works and spires seen distinctly through the clear crystalline atmosphere of the high altitude. Along the route are miniature dells, or benches, moss-covered and shaded by shrubs and overhanging rocks, and at the top are springs of cold, pure water to delight the weary traveler. To climb the mountains back of the gardens is a delightful excursion and one that is enjoyed every day in the summer. Indeed some of these excursions are made during the winter, and then the scenes laid out before the eye are still more beautiful in their cold and forbidding presence.

To return to the gardens, it is only just to give special attention to the immense and magnificent floral display which in its beauty, splendid arrangement and costly proportions, is the overshadowing feature. Columbia Gardens is famed from Labrador to the Rio Grande as the home of the finest collection of flowers in the Northwest. This feature is indeed, a revelation, especially to thousands of people who have hitherto known but little of Butte. The hot-houses at the gardens are just a few notches ahead of anything of the kind in the West. Far-famed is the beautiful collection of begonias, which experts declare to be unsurpassed in brilliant and varied coloring that is positively dazzling to the eye. The original stock of these wonderously tinted plants was obtained years ago in Holland. Most of the species of this botanical order were originally discovered in their wild state growing at high altitudes and, as the elevation at the gardens is nearly 6,000 feet above sea level, these plants are well suited there. This, with the long days and almost perpetual sunshine of the Montana summer, has brought these handsome flowers to their greatest perfection.

Visitors have marveled at the tropical buds to be seen on all sides. But the culture of the tender plants has demonstrated the possibility of floriculture in the mountain resort near Butte. While to behold them in their splendor is to inspire the thought that the flower-beds are at the zenith of their importance and glory, still Mr. Siegel and his corps of able assistants feel that they have but commenced their work and plan many further developments. They have in the gardens and hothouses more than 150,000 growing plants of over 200 varieties, including the most delicate products of the countries of the tropics, housed in the large glass nurseries.

The hot-houses are on the list of attractions shown and enjoyed by the visitors, for here are to be found plants of the rarest character. In them are seeded the thousands of pansies that ultimately adorn the flower-plots throughout the gardens. The climate is congenial to pansies, which in the gardens grow to an enormous size, some measuring as large as three inches in diameter. As many as 25,000 pansy plants are transplanted every season, which yield millions of vari-colored blooms.

Another remarkable feature of this wonderful resort is the great zoo, in which are to be found a variety of animals and birds which belong to Montana's fastnesses and plains in addition to those gathered from the far corners of the world. These specimens of the fauna of Montana are especially valuable, inasmuch as some of them are becoming extinct outside of collections such as these. Among other animals here may be mentioned bears, wild cats, lynx, coyotes, rabbits, deer, Rocky Mountain goats, buffalo, catalo, black and gray wolves, beavers, badgers, chipmunks, pine squirrels, porcupines, guinea pigs, ferrets and a young mountain lion.

Among the birds are the bald-headed eagle, peacocks, swans, other varieties of eagles, owls, fantailed and other pigeons, and "Mike," the pet parrot, is well known to the visitors of the hot-houses.

Over $250,000 have been spent in improving these gardens, although they would be delightful without them, for no more beautiful natural spot could be imagined, but they would not be as comfortable. There is a practical side to the gardens as well, for in addition to the successful experiments in horticulture are those made in the fish hatcheries, which alone afford a great study, interesting thousands upon thousands of visitors. Here are hatched millions of fish, which are used to fill the streams of Montana with a bountiful supply of the best obtainable fish. The magnificent herbarium contains specimens of every flower and plant growing in Montana. This collection has been a source of much pleasure and interest to those students who desire to familiarize themselves with the wonders in the plant kingdom of the state.

A summary of the attractions of the gardens includes the shooting-gallery, the moving pictures, the play-grounds, the lake, over a score of sanitary spring fountains, the walks leading through bowers of beauty both natural and artificial, the wonderful rocks, the exquisite flower-beds, the apple, plum and pear trees and the pavilion.

The people of Butte are highly favored in having within a few minutes' ride of the center of their city such a desirable lounging place, where the urban comforts are admirably combined with the beauties of the mountain wilds, and where they can associate with their fellows amid such remarkable surroundings. Few indeed of the people of Butte, or those who are but transients in the city, miss coming to Columbia Gardens, and once they have enjoyed these delights they never forget them, or fail to repeat their visit at the first opportunity.

From the start there has been no intention of conducting the gardens as a money-making project, but rather as a public-spirited enterprise by a philanthropist of rare character, who has imbued his assistants with his own spirit. No wonder that Mr. Siegel is entirely wrapped up in his work, and feels proud of the fact that he has been connected with this enterprise almost from the beginning. An artist to the fingertips, he finds expression for his beauty of thought and soul in his flowers, and through them raises humanity above the ordinary ruck and places them on a plane not always reached in this humdrum, workaday age. The millions of almost human-faced pansies which look up into the eyes of the hordes who throng these gardens deliver messages of wholesome living, kindly thoughts and duty well performed, as perhaps nothing else could do, and in bringing them and the other wonderful features of Columbia Gardens to perfection Mr. Siegel is as great an artist as one whose masterpieces are hung on the walls of national galleries.

Coming from the constant hum, heat, dust and increasing activity of the greatest mining center of the world, jaded and pessimistic, the visitor to Columbia Gardens passes into an earthly paradise of pure air, green grass, wonderful flowers and the unflecked, placid, serene realm of genuine rest that cannot help but have its lasting influence upon his character. It is unnatural for anyone accustomed to make frequent visits to these gardens to continue to indulge in evil habits of thought or action, while it is safe to predict that the children brought up within the influence of such wholesome and delightful pleasures will be saved from active participation in those of a doubtful nature. Therefore, in every way, the founder of these gardens and those who have aided him in making them possible, are public benefactors and factors for great moral good in the world.

Montana Mercantile Company. Many of the old business houses of Montana trace their history back to the days of the pioneers and the gold seekers. Through successive stages of development the Montana Mercantile Company has grown to its present importance from most humble beginnings.

While Montana was still united with Idaho the territorial legislature at Boise City granted a charter to Jim Ryan and others to permit them to build and operate a toll road across the mountains. As an outcome of the authority granted by this charter Ryan's Toll Road down the Red Rock and Beaverhead rivers was later constructed. Where this road entered Beaverhead Valley proper, at the Beaverhead Rock, was the Sim Estes stage station on the stage line between Corinne, Utah, and Helena. At this point at the head of the valley a pioneer store was established by Jim Barrett. In the old placer mining days this picturesque spot, now called Barrett's Station, was on the direct line of travel between Bannack and Virginia City. Henry Plummer, Slade and other worthies of those days often tarried there while passing back and forth between the two populous mining centers.

Soon a new era began. In 1880 the railroad was built down the canyon, following Jim Ryan's Toll Road. The Town of Dillon was started ten miles below, in the heart of Beaverhead Valley. L. C. Fyhrie, who was conducting the Barrett store, moved his stock to Dillon and in partnership with Burfeind Brothers carried on the business under the firm name of L. C. Fyhrie & Company. Later Burfeind Brothers succeeded this partnership and in 1893 the Montana Mercantile Company was incorporated.

This brief survey indicates how intimately this mercantile establishment has been connected with the growth of the community which it serves. Not only has the Montana Mercantile Company prospered with the growing prosperity of Beaverhead County—it has fostered the development of the community, it has shared in the hopes, success and disappointments of the people of Beaverhead.

The present directors of this firm are as follows: Leonard Eliel, president; Adolph Eliel, vice president; Frank Eliel, secretary and treasurer; Alfred I. Cashmore, sales manager; and S. F. Erwin, manager of the grain department.

Alfred Cave was a Montana pioneer of the '60s, and his activities especially identify him with Missoula, where he lived for over thirty years. He was frequently honored by offices of responsibility and trust, and his name is closely associated with the pioneers who laid the foundation of Montana's greatness.

He was born near Columbia, Missouri, October 5, 1829, son of Richard and Colma B. (Williams) Cave. His parents were natives of Kentucky and of Virginia ancestry. Richard Cave had a farm and flour mill in Kentucky and in 1820 moved to Boone County, Missouri. In 1850 Alfred Cave, part of whose early life had been spent at Florida, Missouri, where he was a playmate of Mark Twain, set out for California in company with his father and others. They made the trip overland and spent their first winter near Nevada City, California. Richard Cave lost his life at the hands of highwaymen in Northern California in 1859.

In California Alfred Cave followed placer mining, but was especially interested in pioneer forms of transportation, packing supplies over the rough mountain trails to the isolated mining camps. In 1865 he came to Montana, bringing provisions by pack train to Helena, and supplying several of the well known mining camps of that day. In 1869 the Cedar Creek stampede started, and he packed in general supplies and opened a store at Forest City. Later he also had a similar business on Nine Mile Creek, having moved his family to Missoula in 1873. For many years he kept in operation a pack train. This train was captured by Nez Perce Indians at Henry's Lake during General Howard's campaign of 1877. While a resident of Missoula he acquired some landed interests and engaged in ranching. He also handled contracts to supply wood and telegraph poles to the government. At one time he was manager of the waterworks of Missoula. In 1876 he was elected from Missoula County to the Territorial Legislature. In 1894 he was elected county treasurer, and re-elected in 1896. He was also a valued member of the Building Committee of the Montana State University. Alfred Cave was one of the first men in Montana to engage in the raising of fruit, and his efforts did much to prove Montana's special facilities in horticulture.

The death of this honored old timer occurred at Missoula in February, 1909. He had married in 1871 Mrs. Carrie (Nicol) Hackleman. She was the mother of one son by her former marriage, who now bears the family name of his stepfather, and has long been a permanent resident of Missoula.

Will Cave is at present filling the office of state deputy humane officer. He was first to hold the office of county auditor of Missoula County, in 1891; served as deputy county treasurer and during the late '90s made two trips to Alaska. In 1898 he volunteered in the Spanish-American war, organizing a local company which was tendered to Governor Smith as a Montana organization, but which was accepted by the United States Government and which became a troop in the Third United States Volunteer Cavalry. He was in service, chiefly in camp at Chickamauga, Georgia, four months. After his return he was deputy county clerk four years, was county assessor two years and then deputy county clerk again some four years.

WALTER COOPER. The name of Walter Cooper is certainly entitled to special mention in a compendium of the nature of the one at hand, for he has long been one of the influential citizens of Montana. Through his personal efforts, this section of the west has reaped lasting benefits, which will continue to accrue to the people long after he has passed from the scenes of his former activities, for his exceptional capacities have been directed along lines calculated to be for the general good. A man of forceful individuality and marked initiative power, he has been well equipped for the duties of citizenship, while his probity of character and his genial personality have gained for him universal esteem and friendship in the locality where he has spent the major portion of his active and useful life.

Walter Cooper was born in Sterling, Cayuga County, New York, on July 4, 1843. He is descended from rugged old English stock, his emigrant ancestors having come to America in the days of the colonies. Their descendants are later found in New York State, where the subject's grandfather, George Cooper, was born in Washington County. He spent his entire life in that state, following the vocation of a farmer, and he died in Cayuga County, that state. He was a soldier of the War of 1812, holding a commission as captain. He was compelled to surrender at Fort Oswego to Commodore Yeo, whose fleet was afterwards destroyed by Commodore Perry. Among the children of George Cooper was the subject's father, Andrew H. Cooper, who was born in Washington County, New York, in 1812. He remained in his native state until 1849, having followed the occupations of farming and stockraising. In the year last mentioned Mr. Cooper went to the State of Michigan, locating in Shiawassee County, where his death occurred in 1857. He was a Presbyterian in his religious belief. He married Sarah E. McGilvary, a native of New York State, and whose death occurred in Tuscola County, Michigan. To them were born the following children: Alexander H., a retired lumberman, lives at Whatcomb, Washington; George H., a retired dentist, lives in Spokane, Washington; Walter, the subject of this sketch, is the next in order of birth; David is in the insurance business in Syracuse, New York; William, who was in the implement business in Tuscola County, Michigan, died at the age of forty-five years; Ransom is an attorney in Great Falls, Montana.

Walter Cooper remained at home and attended school until he was fifteen years of age, when he began work on his own account, applying himself to anything he could find to do. Mrs. Cooper, the mother, had in the meantime returned to New York, taking her second and three younger sons.

In the fall of 1858 Walter started West, reaching Leavenworth, Kansas, in the month of November, where he passed the winter doing such work as he could find to do, until February, 1859, when he crossed the plains to Pikes Peak. In the spring of 1860, he joined a prospecting expedition to the San Juan Mountains. The party left Denver, Colorado, early in May, and visited Old Mexico. Returning to Colorado in the winter of 1861, our subject spent the summer and fall of 1862 near Colorado Springs, acting at times as scout for the First Colorado Regiment. In November, 1863, he started for Montana (then Idaho), arriving at Virginia City in February, 1864, and engaging in mining in Alder Gulch. In May he became interested in a freight train, with which he started for Fort Benton to meet the steamboats, expecting to return to Virginia City with freight. During 1864 the water was so low in the Missouri River that little freight reached Fort Benton, and he was forced to return with his teams empty. Arriving at Virginia City in August, he disposed of his train, fitted out a team with supplies for the winter, and passed the winter of 1864-5 in the Missouri River Valley, spending his time hunting. In the spring of 1865 he engaged in mining and continued with varying success until the fall of 1869, when he settled in Bozeman, Gallatin County, Montana.

On the 19th of April, 1870, Mr. Cooper married Miss Mariam D. Skeels, only daughter of Nelson Skeels, of Boulder Valley, Jefferson County, Montana. Nelson Skeels, father of Mrs. Cooper, was born at Columbus, Ohio, in 1822. His father, Reuben Skeels, was born in the State of New York. Truman Skeels, father of Reuben Skeels, a Revolutionary soldier, was born in the State of New York in 1753, and died near Columbus, Ohio, in 1804. The family has since resided at Bozeman. Mr. and Mrs. Cooper have had one son and two daughters born to them, the son and one daughter having died in infancy. They have one daughter, Mariam Cooper Bunker, wife of E. F. Bunker, an attorney at Bozeman, and they have two little daughters, Virginia Mariam and Elizabeth Frances, with their parents.

In the year 1876 Mr. and Mrs. Cooper took what they called their wedding trip, to the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, Mr. Cooper having loaned P. A. Largey and J. P. Woolmoan, commissioners for the Territory of Montana, a very large collection of minerals, National Park petrifications, Indian weapons, ornamental work together with a fine collection of Indian wearing apparel, all of which were exhibited in the Government Building, the use of which our territory had. Mr. Cooper had to return to Philadelphia to repack the collection, which he did, and it was later presented to the Syracuse University and was known as the "Cooper Collection."

In 1870 Mr. Cooper engaged in mercantile pursuits at Bozeman. He also engaged extensively in the fur business in 1872, giving this branch of business such energy and attention that, as a result of his efforts, Bozeman in three years became second in importance in Montana as a shipping point for fur robes, furs and skins. While thus engaged Mr. Cooper made use of many steamboats for the transportation of his large collections of furs, robes and skins on the Yellowstone River, and was among the first to use them on this great highway of nature for strictly commercial purposes. Referring to the importance of future navigation of this great water highway, his forceful letter, dated March 1, 1911, protesting against the action of the board for refusing to recommend the construction of a lock in the concrete dam at Glendive, Montana, was sent to the board of engineers for "Rivers and Harbors." This letter was republished by the Secretary of War in his report of June 30, 1911, on the Yellowstone River, Montana.

This letter was written while Mr. Cooper was president of the Bozeman Chamber of Commerce in 1911, and shows a perfect knowledge of this great water highway with a clear insight into the danger which the State of Montana was facing in having the only safeguard swept away against future exorbitant freight charges demanded by powerful and selfish railroad organizations, pointing out the fact that he loaded the Steamer Helena, in 1881, at Huntley, 213 miles west of Glendive, the point where it was proposed to close navigation.

Mr. Cooper invented and patented many improvements in firearms, and at one time manufactured the most famous long-range hunting rifle ever used in the West.

He was selected as one of the incorporators of the City of Bozeman in 1883, and was a member of the first city council. He was nominated for mayor of the City of Bozeman in 1888, but declined for business reasons. On the organization of the Board of Trade of Bozeman in 1883, Mr. Cooper became its first president, serving two years. In 1884 he was elected to the constitutional convention as delegate at large, and was made chairman of the committee on privileges and elections. He was again elected to the constitutional convention in 1889, on the admission of Montana into the Union, and was made chairman of the committee on appointment and representation. As chairman of this committee Mr. Cooper reported and advocated the adoption of an article giving one senator to each county. This article was ratified by the convention, and became a part of the constitution. and is appreciated, being considered a safeguard against reckless legislation.

Mr. Cooper was selected as a delegate at large to the national democratic convention held at Chicago in 1892, and served on the committee on credentials. Mr. Cooper was nominated as an elector on the democratic ticket in 1892. He was elected president of the State Pioneer Society in 1892, serving two years, and was president of the Pioneer Society of Gallatin County in 1893. He served as a member of the Legislature of 1895, and secured the passage of an act which made possible the erection and equipment of the buildings now occupied by the Montana State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts. He was appointed in 1892 as a member of the executive board of the Agricultural College, serving six years.

When, in 1889, the City of Bozeman wanted a supply of fresh water for fire protection and domestic use, Mr. Cooper organized the Bozeman Waterworks Company, and caused the construction of the most perfect system of waterworks in the Northwest. He became vice president and one of the largest stockholders of the company. In 1884 he secured control of the coal fields on Rocky Fork, and, with his associates, brought about the building of the Rocky Fork & Cooke City Railway, and the development of this great coal field, with its limitless supply of coal. As an enterprise bearing upon the general welfare of the state, it will doubtless rank among the most important achievements of the last three decades.

Mr. Cooper has, among other things, devoted some of his attention to mining, making extensive development in several important properties. He was also largely instrumental in organizing the Bozeman Milling Company, operating one of the largest flouring mills, in its time, in the state, and was its first president, as well as its largest stockholder.

Mr. Cooper is identified with many other enterprises of a public and private nature. In politics he is a democrat, and has taken a prominent part in the councils of his party since the formation of Montana as a territory. Mr. Cooper took an active part in the political affairs which agitated Montana in 1898 and 1900. He conducted the preliminary campaign which culminated in seating the regular democratic delegates at the Kansas City convention July 4, 1900. Later he successfully conducted the preliminary contest against powerful corporate combinations, and secured for the regular democratic party control of the state convention, and was made its chairman. He was elected by the state convention chairman of the state central committee, and conducted the great campaign of 1900 against the united republican and independent democratic forces of Montana, resulting in a complete victory for the regular democratic national and state tickets, and the election of a large majority of the Legislature, insuring the election of two democratic United States senators.

In 1902 Mr. Cooper organized the Walter Cooper Company and prosecuted lumbering operations on a large scale, manufacturing and furnishing to the Burlington and other railroads some 2,500,000 railway ties, together with large quantities of other timber products. These extensive operations were interrupted by the great panic of 1907, which lasted several years, absolutely destroying the lumber industry from coast to coast, from the results of which this great industry is now slowly recovering.

At present Mr. Cooper is looking after his mining interests, which since the close of the war are generally beginning to assume satisfactory stability, carrying with it the assurance that Montana will soon assume its position as one of the greatest of our mineral producers.

Eugene F. Bunker. An enumeration of the enterprising and successful men of Southern Montana who have won recognition and success for themselves and at the same time have conferred honor upon the locality where they reside would be incomplete were there failure to make specific mention of Eugene F. Bunker of Bozeman, who, though yet comparatively young in years, has achieved an enviable position in his profession, being now recognized as one of the leading lawyers of the state.

Eugene F. Bunker was born in Woodstock, Illinois, on February 4, 1888, and is the son of Frank M. Bunker. The latter was born in Ridgefield, McHenry County, Illinois, in 1854, and died at Woodstock, Illinois, in 1917. He followed the mercantile business, in which he was successful. He was a republican in politics and was a member of the Illinois National Guard. He married Elizabeth Johnston, who was born in 1859 in Illinois and now resides at Woodstock, that state. To these parents were born the following children: George T., a mechanical engineer, who resides at LaGrange, Illinois; Blanche C., an osteopathic physician at Aberdeen, South Dakota; Park J., who is cashier of the First National Bank at Forsyth, Montana; Alice, who is the wife of John B. Romans, a capitalist of Aberdeen, South Dakota; Eugene F.; and Donald, who died at the age of four years.

Eugene F. Bunker received his elementary education in the public schools of Woodstock, Illinois, including attendance in the high school. He then entered Morgan Park Preparatory School, where he graduated in 1907. He then entered the law department of the University of Wisconsin, where he graduated in 1912, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. While in that institution Mr. Bunker became a member of the Greek letter fraternities, Sigma Chi and the Phi Delta Phi.

Immediately after the completion of his technical training Mr. Bunker came to Bozeman and entered upon the practice of his profession, in which he has since been engaged, including both civil and criminal practice. Years of conscientious work have brought with them not only increase of practice and reputation, but also that growth in legal knowledge and that wide and accurate judgment the possession of which constitutes marked excellence in the profession.

Politically Mr. Bunker is a republican and has been active in the support of his party, having served as secretary of the republican county central committee since 1914. Fraternally he is a member of Bridger Camp No. 62, Woodmen of the World. He is also a member of the County and State Bar associations. Mr. Bunker is keenly interested in everything that promises to benefit the community in any way and has some investments in mining operations and in construction works.

On December 27, 1913, at Bozeman, Mr. Bunker was married to Mariam Cooper, the daughter of Walter and Mariam (Skeels) Cooper, who are mentioned specifically elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Bunker is well educated, being a graduate of the National Park Seminary at Washington, D. C. Mr. and Mrs. Bunker have one child, Mariam Virginia, born on August 20, 1918. Because of his fine personal qualities and abilities Mr. Bunker enjoys a well deserved popularity in the city and county of his choice.

ALLEN PIERSE. Biographies should not be published unless there is something in the life and character of the individual worthy of emulation or imitation by others under like circumstances—certainly not for self-aggrandizement. However, sufficient has been gleaned from the life history of Allen Pierse, one of the well-known and energetic business men of Great Falls, to show that there is something in the life of this man worthy of more than mere incidental mention. He began life practically at the bottom of the ladder, which he has climbed to the top with no help but industrious hands and an intelligent brain, and is a living example of what may be accomplished in this nature-favored country of ours by thrift and perseverance.

Allen Pierse was born at St. Paul, Minnesota, on March 26, 1856, and is the son of Allen and Annie (Corbin) Pierse. These parents had four children, two sons and two daughters. The father was a lawyer by profession and while a resident of Kansas served as a member of the State Legislature. During the Civil war he enlisted in the Union army and gave up his life on a Southern battlefield.

Allen Pierse received his educational training in the public schools of Leavenworth, Kansas, and Buffalo, New York, to which city the family had moved during his boyhood. In 1873 he went to Corinne, Utah, thence by overland stage to Deer Lodge, Montana. There he engaged in driving a stage for Gilman & Salisbury for two years, and then he established the old Buffalo Hump Station, between Butte and Deer Lodge, to the operation of which he devoted himself for the following ten years. He then located in the Judith Basin, where he engaged in the sheep business from 1885 to 1890. In the latter year he went to Neihart and engaged in mining and merchandising. In the fall of 1894 Mr. Pierse was elected county treasurer of Meagher County, Montana, and in 1896 was re-elected to that office, thus serving two terms, to the entire satisfaction of the voters of that county. In 1898 he was elected county clerk, and served one term. He then spent about one and a half years in California, but is now and has been for several years a resident of Great Falls, where he is conducting a successful automobile agency, under the name of the Pierse Auto Company. He owns mining interests in Neihart, Butte and the Little Rockies, which are proving good investments. He is well informed on the automobile business and is proving an efficient distributor for the cars he handles. He is a member of the Great Falls Chamber of Commerce. Politically he is a democrat.

On June 27, 1880, Mr. Pierse was married to Carrie M. Woods, a native of Missouri, and they are the parents of one son, Edwin A., who is a graduate of the School of Mines and is an acknowledged authority on questions pertaining to ore and mining prospects. He was married to Marie Lyon. They have two children, Edwin A., Jr., and Thomas L. Though Mr. Pierse has never sought to be a leader of men, merely striving to live up to the standard of good citizenship, he has, nevertheless, taken a commendable interest in local public affairs and has been an earnest supporter of every movement for the advancement of the best interests of the community, thereby winning the confidence and good will of all who know him.

DANIEL HANLEY, formerly of Helena and Butte and now of Lewistown, has been in Montana for over thirty years. His experiences and achievement, about which he is personally very modest, must be allowed to speak for themselves in a straightforward narrative.

He was born at Lowell, Massachusetts, December 3, 1857, son of Jeremiah and Hannah (Leahy) Hanlev. His parents were born in County Cork, Ireland, coming to the United States at an early age. They were married at Lowell in 1856. Jeremiah Hanley was a practical miner, had worked in the mines in Berehaven, County Cork, and in 1859, removing from Lowell to Hancock, Michigan, was employed for several years in the copper mines there. He enlisted as a Union soldier in 1864, serving until mustered out in 1865. From Upper Michigan in 1870 he went West and was in the silver mines of Nevada, California, Arizona and New Mexico, and died at Sante Fe at the age of seventy-five, his wife passing away aged eighty-six.

Daniel Hanley was the oldest of four sons. Altogether he probably never attended school more than six months. His schooling was acquired at Copper Harbor, Michigan, during the year 1868. At that time educational facilities were practically unavailable in the copper mining districts. At the age of twelve he began work in the mines, at first in Michigan and later in the Black Hills of South Dakota. He worked as a waterboy on the Marquette, Houghton & Ontonagon Railway in the summer of 1870. After running a hoisting engine and performing other practical duties in the mines, including clerking in a company store, in the fall of 1877 he started for the Black Hills country. The first railway engine he ever saw was on the Mineral Range Railway, a narrow gauge line between Hancock and Calumet, Michigan. On going West a stage took him from Houghton to L'Anse, Michigan, thence by the Chicago and Northwestern Railway to Chicago and to Omaha, by the Union Pacific to Sidney, Nebraska, and thence overland by stage coach 300 miles to Deadwood. After three years as a mining prospector around Deadwood he started for Leadville, Colorado, in 1880, and had some varied experiences in the mining regions of Colorado, both at Leadville and in the Gunnison Valley.

Mr. Hanley removed to St. Paul, Minnesota, in 1880, for several years was employed in a wholesale fruit and produce house and in 1887 engaged in the wholesale fruit and produce business at Helena, Montana. He was in business at Helena under the name Daniel Hanley & Company until 1896, and for fourteen succeeding years was in a similar business at Butte. In 1910 he moved to Lewistown and during the past ten years has looked after his mining interests and has been in the real estate and insurance business as president of the Montana Land Company, his two sons Marcus and Roy being his business associates.

Mr. Hanley has always been a democrat in politics. He served as city alderman of Helena four years, from 1888 to 1892, and was chairman of the democratic county central committee of Lewis and Clark County in 1892. He served two years as city treasurer of Lewistown, beginning in 1915. July 26, 1910, he was appointed United States commissioner, and has held that office three consecutive terms. Fraternally he has been an Elk since 1896 and is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus since 1917. He is a member of the Catholic Church.

At St. Thomas, Minnesota, August 2, 1881, he married Margaret Harrington, who was born in Northern Michigan, daughter of Jeremiah Harrington. To Mr. and Mrs. Hanley were born ten children: Marcus R., who married Hazel Berkin; Daniel John, who married Olive Threlkeld; May Ethel, who became the wife of John R. Bartlett, a mining engineer of Butte; Edward Jeremiah, who died in 1914, aged twenty-six; Earl Richard, who died in 1916, at the age of twenty-four; Paul William, unmarried and living in New York City; Helena Catherine, at home; Roy W., who married Ruth Howser; Clement, who died in 1910, aged eight years; and Mary, who died in 1886, aged sixteen months.

The son Paul registered at Lewistown, June 5, 1917, in September enlisted in the air service in New York, reached France in November, 1917, and spent considerable time in the American Army Headquarters at Chaumont. He was promoted to the rank of sergeant, and after eighteen months abroad returned to America in April, 1919. The son Roy joined the Student Army Training Corps at Missoula, September 27, 1918, and was discharged December 18, 1918.

MARCUS R. HANLEY, secretary of the Montana Land Company at Lewistown, is a son of that veteran Montanan, Daniel Hanley, a record of whose career is found on other pages. Marcus R. Hanley has been an active business man in this state for fifteen years or more.

He was born at St. Paul, Minnesota, July 25, 1882, the oldest child of Daniel and Margaret (Harrington) Hanley. He acquired his education in the public schools of Helena and Butte, and his first business experience was in the wholesale and retail coal business at Butte. He remained in that city until 1916, when he came to Lewistown and assumed his present duties as secretary of the Montana Land Company. Mr. Hanley is a democrat and is affiliated with Butte Council No. 664, Knights of Columbus, and is a member of the Catholic Church. He belongs to the Judith Club and the Chamber of Commerce in Lewistown.

May 18, 1906, he married Miss Hazel Berkin. She was born at Boulder, Montana, daughter of John and Hallie (Wolgamoth) Berkin, the former a native of England and the latter of Illinois. Mrs. Hanley was the second of their four children. John Berkin was a Montana pioneer, having come to Boulder Valley with his parents and having received his early education in this state. He is a veteran mining man and is still active at Butte as one of the superintendents of the Anaconda Copper Company. He has also been a leading figure in the democratic party and twice represented his district in the State Legislature. Mr. and Mrs. Hanley have three children: John Berkin, Mary Isabel and Edward Daniel.

LEE W. CRUTCHER, of Butte, sales manager of the Simmons Company, spent his early life on an Illinois farm. About the time when most young men make a choice of some definite vocation he was stricken with typhoid fever and spent a number of weeks in bed, with plenty of time to think over and canvass thoroughly his individual talents, his inclinations and tastes. The fever left him incapacitated for hard physical labor, and thus the door was shut to any idea of becoming a farmer. He decided that he could sell goods, and that youthful decision has been justified by a career that proves Mr. Crutcher of the supreme class of salesmanship.

He was born at Chicago, Illinois, August 28, 1881. His grandfather, James Crutcher, was born in Kentucky in 1801, of Scotch and English ancestry. James Crutcher moved from Kentucky to the vicinity of Leavenworth, Kansas, in pioneer times, had a farm in Eastern Kansas and died at Leavenworth in 1888. Everard H. Crutcher, father of the Butte business man, was born in Kentucky in 1858, and was a small boy when his parents moved to Kansas. He was reared and educated in the vicinity of Leavenworth, was married there and then removed to Chicago, where for a time he was in railroad work. In 1882 he established his home at Plainfield, Illinois, and from that time until his death in 1897, was busy with the cares and responsibilities of farming. His farm was a half mile west of Plainfield, and he enjoyed the reputation in that community of being a thorough farmer and expert judge of livestock. He was a democrat in politics and was affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was a member of the Masonic fraternity, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Home Forum. Everard H. Crutcher married Lyda A. Thomas, who was born at Plainfield, Illinois, in 1861, and is now living at Lincoln, Nebraska. Her children are four in number: Lee W.; Allan T., who lives at San Francisco and is general sales manager on the coast for the Simmons Company; Rebecca, wife of Cyril M. McKee, a farmer living at Lincoln, Nebraska; and Elizabeth, wife of C. E. Ayer, a promoter, whose home is at Lincoln.

Lee W. Crutcher attended the public schools of Plainfield, Illinois, and was sixteen years of age when his father died. He continued to live on the home farm for about a year after that, when he was stricken with typhoid. After recovering somewhat his health and strength he made his first essay at salesmanship, in a house to house canvass at Plainfield selling household novelties. He went through that difficult test of salesmanship successfully for two years. Leaving Illinois he went to Lincoln, Nebraska, worked six months in a grocery store as a salesman, and then in the carpet and drapery department of the Herpolsheimer Company until the spring of 1903. The following three years he was on the road representing the Lincoln Upholstering Company, covering the territory of Southern Nebraska and Kansas. He also became a stockholder in that company and at the present time is assistant secretary of the business.

While on the road for the Lincoln Upholstering Company Mr. Crutcher took as a side line the famous Hoosier Kitchen Cabinet, manufactured at Newcastle, Indiana He sold those cabinets on a commission basis until 1906. The Hoosier Company then attracted him into their exclusive service on a straight salary proposition, and for over ten years, until January 1, 1917, his salesmanship was relied upon as the chief instrument in building up the tremendous business of this company in many of the western states. For several years he covered the territory of Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas. In 1912 he was assigned the task of opening new territory into which the Hoosier cabinets had not yet been carried on an organized scale. This territory included part of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Washington and Oregon. During 1915-16 Mr. Crutcher made his home and headquarters at Portland, Oregon. His success in opening and establishing business in the new territory was such that he was appointed district manager in charge of the sales organization over part of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon. Mr. Crutcher paid his first visit to Montana in the fall of 1912.

He resigned from the Hoosier Company and on January 1, 1917, became sales manager of the Butte branch of the Simmons Company. For many years the Simmons Company at Kenosha, Wisconsin, has been one of the largest plants in the world manufacturing "Simmons" beds, springs and similar equipment. The quality and design of the Simmons beds are unsurpassed, and in recent years as a result of a nation-wide publicity campaign these beds have enjoyed a tremendous sale and are handled by some of the most exclusive department stores in the country. The Simmons Company also manufactures a large line of supplies for camp equipment, including double deck bunks, folding chairs, etc. The company has branch houses in every prominent city in the United States and Canada, the plant and offices at Butte being at 843 East South Montana Street. From the returns now available it is estimated that the business of the Simmons Company for 1920 will average more than a million dollars a week.

Mr. Crutcher very appropriately has enjoyed a modest share of the prosperity which he has helped create for this great business institution. Among other interests he owns a modern home at 2719 Edward Street in Butte, also a large residence at Kansas City, Missouri, and a farm in Texas. He is an independent voter, is affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is a member of the Rotary Club, Silver Bow Club, Chamber of Commerce, South Side Club of Butte, and is affiliated with Lincoln Lodge, Ancient Order of United Workmen. In 1905, at Chicago, he married Miss Laura M. Kidd, daughter of W. A. and Emma Kidd, residents of Portland, Oregon. Her father is now retired on a pension after a long service for the Northwestern Railroad. Mr. and Mrs. Crutcher have three children: Lee W., Jr., Genevieve E. and Mercelia.

H. B. PULSIFER as research professor of the Montana State School of Mines and metallurgist to the State Bureau of Mines and Metallurgy, occupies a peculiarly responsible position with reference to the great mineral resources of Montana. His experience has been a broadly practical one and his technical training has also been derived from association with some of the leading scientific institutions of America and abroad.

Mr. Pulsifer was born at Lebanon, New Hampshire, December 23, 1879, and represents a family of sterling New England farmers. He is in the ninth generation of the Pulsifer family in America. His first American ancestor was Joseph Pulsifer, whose father was probably an English sea captain, and who lived at Ipswich, Massachusetts, from 1705 to 1749. The grandfather of H. B. Pulsifer was George Baxter Pulsifer, who was born at Danbury, New Hampshire, April 7, 1824, and spent all his life as a New Hampshire farmer. He died at Lebanon, May 26, 1904. His wife was Elizabeth Jane Taylor, a native of Danbury, who died November 26, 1903. Two of their children are still living: C. E. Pulsifer and George, the latter a business man at Lebanon.

C. E. Pulsifer was born at Danbury, New Hampshire, in 1846, and has spent all his life in his native state. As a young man he learned the carpenter and cabinet maker's trade, but for the past twenty-five years has been a merchant and a leading and substantial citizen of Lebanon. He is a republican, a member of the Baptist Church, and an Odd Fellow. In 1872 he married Clara A. Clay, a native of New Hampshire, who died in 1873. C. E. Pulsifer married for his second wife Ellen D. Bridgman in 1877. She was born at Hanover, New Hampshire, in 1850, and died at Lebanon in 1904. Her two sons were H. B. and F. Ernest. The latter is in business with his father at Lebanon.

H. B. Pulsifer attended public school at Lebanon, graduating from high school in 1898, spent one year in the Colby Academy at New London, New Hampshire, and in 1903 graduated from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology with the Bachelor of Science degree. The following year he spent as instructor of chemistry in the New Hampshire State College, and in 1904 became chemist in Henry Souther's engineering laboratory at Hartford, Connecticut. During 1905, and until the fall of 1906, he was assayer and employed in metallurgical work in Old Mexico. The next year he added to his qualifications by a course of study in the University of Munich in Germany, specializing in physics, chemistry and other sciences. From 1907 to 1909 he was engaged in various technical capacities in the mining districts of Missouri, Oregon and Old Mexico, and from 1909 for two years was connected with lead smelters in Utah. Since 1911 Mr. Pulsifer has given most of his time and talents to technical education. In 1911 he became instructor of metallurgy at the Armour Institute of Technology in Chicago, and later was appointed assistant professor, remaining with that institution until 1917. In the latter year he came with the Montana State School of Mines at Butte as professor of metallurgy, and in 1919 was made research professor and when the State Bureau of Mines and Metallurgy was established in that year was appointed metallurgist. His offices are in the Administration Building in the School of Mines. Mr. Pulsifer affiliates as a republican in politics.

September 9, 1909, at Salt Lake City, Utah, he married Sarah Cecilia Cantlion, daughter of Daniel and Elizabeth Cantlion. The latter makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Pulsifer. Her father was a miner. Mr. and Mrs. Pulsifer have three children: Carmen, born June 15, 1910; Phyllis, born October 11, 1911: and Verne, born July 5, 1915.

ARTHUR ERNEST ADAMI, a mining engineer, assistant professor of mining engineering in the Montana State School of Mines at Butte, is a native Montanan, and his father was a pioneer at Helena.

Mr. Adami was born at Helena, May 2, 1886. His father, Henry Adami, was born in Germany in 1852, came to the United States at the age of fourteen, and has lived at Helena and other points in Montana since 1870. He grew up with the capital city and spent his active life as a contractor in road building and other lines of construction and also in stock raising. He has served as a councilman at Helena, is a republican and a member of the Lutheran Church. Henry Adami married Elizabeth Maas, who was born at Neiderweisel, Germany, in 1854. They have six children: Charles J., general manager of the St. Joe Lead Company at Bonne Terre, Missouri; Henry C., an assayer and chemist at Wallace, Idaho; Louise, wife of D. J. Ragen, a rancher at East Helena; Elizabeth K., wife of L. W. Williamson, a real estate and insurance man at Helena; Arthur E.; and Bertha E., wife of J. S. Higgins, cashier of an oil company at Great Falls.

J. N. Walker

Arthur Ernest Adami was educated in the public schools of Helena, graduating from high school in 1903 and received his degree Mining Engineer from the Montana State School of Mines in 1907. The four months following he spent as an assayer with the Red Metal Mining Company. The following two years he was an instructor in the Montana State School of Mines. During 1908 he was again employed for four months as an assayer for the Boston and Montana Mining Company, after which he assumed his duties as Assistant Professor of Mining Engineering. He is also mining engineer for the Montana State Bureau of Mines and Metallurgy.

Mr. Adami is an independent in politics and a member of the Episcopal Church. August 9, 1911, at Butte, he married Miss Alma Erickson, a native of Butte and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Erickson. Her parents were pioneers in the mining district of Butte. Mrs. Adami is a graduate of the Butte High School. They have two children, Jane, born December 6, 1912, and Arthur E., Jr., born June 6, 1915.

I. N. WALKER has been in business in Montana, North Dakota and other sections of the Northwest for a number of years, has a host of loyal friends in all these communities, and that fact alone speaks better than anything else for his sterling ability and integrity. His home for a number of years has been in Great Falls, where he is a member of the Williams-Walker-Purdy Company, real estate and loans.

As the people of Montana are now aware, Mr. Walker has for several years been doing more than anyone else to make real history in this state. He supplied the faith, the hope, the energy and by his contagious influence among his friends also much of the capital for the first important oil development in the state.

The culmination of his history making enterprise as an oil developer came in July, 1919, when a well pumped to the depth of 1850 feet flowed full of oil. This event was heralded far and near as the first important oil strike in Montana. It is known as the Tri-City well and is located near Franklin west of Roundup in the Musselshell oil district. Experts and doubters of all kinds steadily discouraged the idea that Montana had oil in commercial quantities. It was the insistent enthusiasm and efforts of Mr. Walker that disproved this theory. Mr. Walker was the man who first secured the leases on which the Tri-City well was sunk.

The Great Falls Daily Tribune in commenting upon the oil strike gave some historical facts concerning the enterprise that may be properly quoted here:

"The company was formed in Great Falls about three years ago by S. S. Hobson, I. N. Walker, Frank Mitchell, J. B. Elliott and others. More than 60,000 of the 150,000 shares issued by the company are held by local parties. Some time after the formation of the local company Billings residents, including A. L. Babcock and J. E. Logan, joined the Great Falls men in financing the proposition. Directors of the company at the present time include S. S. Hobson and J. B. Elliott of Great Falls; T. C. Power of Helena and L. C. Babcock of Billings.

"Besides the property near Franklin the Tri-City Company has large holdings in the Devil's Basin country north of Roundup. By assuming leases to 12,000 acres of oil land held by the Roundup Gas and Oil Company, the Tri-City Company acquired leases to 6,000 acres. A sub-contract to the Van Dusen Oil Company granted the Van Dusen Company 1,500 acres in return for drilling a well in the Devil's Basin Country. This company is now preparing to drill the well. In the well which produced the flow near Franklin the Tri-City Company financed the drilling to 1,500 feet and beyond that depth the Van Dusen Company agreed to meet half the expenses of the drilling, which is being carried on by the Tri-City Company.

"I. N. Walker of Great Falls, a large stockholder in the Tri-City Company, returned to this city recently after a visit to the strike at Franklin."

Mr. Walker was born at Lestard, Ontario, Canada, January 20, 1866, a son of James and Martha (Bradley) Walker. His parents were both natives of Ontario. His father was born in 1845 and died in 1897, while the mother is still living in her eighty-first year. I. N. Walker was the seventh of eleven children, seven of whom are still living. His father was a blacksmith by trade, and for several years worked as a tool dresser in the oil fields of Western Pennsylvania. He then went back to Lestard, Ontario, and was in business until his death. He and his wife were members of the Methodist Church.

I. N. Walker attended the public schools of Ontario, and when about twenty-one years of age he was attracted to the newly developed country of the Dakotas. He took up a homestead near the present City of Devil's Lake, and used ox teams to break his land. He had poor crops, and in order to make a living he taught school at Grand Harbor, North Dakota. About 1887 he engaged in the loan business and for several years he was employed as an examiner of loans, representing twenty-one banks in this capacity throughout North Dakota. When several banks in that section were thrown into receivership Mr. Walker was appointed to clear up their affairs, and it is said that no one ever lost a single dollar from his management and administration. Mr. Walker had about a year of experience and residence in Old Mexico, and then going back to Devil's Lake he engaged in the real estate and loan business with Eaton & Higbee. This firm later, in 1896, sold out to the William H. Brown Land Company, now of Chicago. From 1896 to 1904 Mr. Walker had full charge of the business of this concern as its outside manager. From 1904 to 1908 he was in the land business and also personally engaged in the colonization of the Province of Southern Alberta, Canada.

On coming into the Judith Basin of Montana in 1908 Mr. Walker resumed the management of the local affairs of the William H. Brown Land Company, and in 1911 moved to Great Falls and for the greater part of the time since then has been a member of the Williams-Walker-Purdy Company, handling lands and city property. Mr. Walker handles all the loans made by this company, and is regarded as one of the best posted men in the state on land values in general.

He has been too busy with other affairs to take an interest in politics as a matter of personal advantage. He was made a Mason in the lodge at Devil's Lake, North Dakota, and is now affiliated with Euclid Lodge No. 58 at Great Falls. He was also a member of Devil's Lake Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, and now belongs to Great Falls Chapter No. 9 and is affiliated with Black Eagle Commandery No. 8, Knights Templar, and belongs to the Odd Fellows. He is a republican in politics.

June 4, 1892, Mr. Walker married Anna L. Lynden. She was born in Iowa. They have three daughters, Ruth, Martha and Esther.

OSWALD M. GERER is one of the prominent fruit growers in the western part of the state, having cultivated and developed a fruit ranch near Hamilton for a number of years. His prominence in fruit growing circles makes him a highly qualified member of the State Board of Horticulture. He is also one of the leading men in the Equity Co-operative movement in the Northwest, being president and manager of the association's store at Hamilton.

Mr. Gerer was born at Vorarlberg, Austria, February 4, 1875. His father, Matthews Gerer, was born in the same locality in 1844 and in 1884 came to America and located at Helena, Montana, where he lived the last ten years of his life. He died in 1894. He was a gardener by occupation. He was a Catholic in religion. He married Josephine Hellbuck, who is still living in Austria, near the Swiss border. They had three children: Hirlanda of Helena, Montana, widow of John Kauzman, who for many years was connected with the Kessler Brewing Company; Albina, wife of J. H. Bierman, operator of the stage and mail route and a resident of Helena; and Oswald M.

Oswald M. Gerer attended public school in Austria, and was fourteen years of age when in 1889 he came to Helena, Montana. He worked at various occupations there for seven or eight years, and in 1897 learned and engaged in the bakery business. He operated a bakeshop at Helena until 1903, in which year he located at Hamilton and engaged in fruit farming. His fruit ranch is three miles northwest of town. He has made a special study of horticultural conditions in this section of the Northwest and has made the business profitable. His chief crops are apples and cherries. He owns a modern residence on his home ranch.

Mr. Gerer became president and manager of the Equity Co-operative Association of Hamilton in 1917. He is also a director in the Equity Co-operative Association of Montana. There are many branches of the Equity Association of Montana and the history of the enterprise as a whole is a substantial demonstration of the power and vitality of the cooperative principle. The business at Hamilton sells and handles for the growers produce and fruit and also contributes groceries and other supplies to its members.

Mr. Gerer is an independent in politics. He is affiliated with Ionic Lodge No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hamilton Chapter No. 18, Royal Arch Masons. He married at Helmville, Montana, Miss Elsie Peterson, who was born at Breslau, Germany. They have three children: Rudolph, born May 13, 1902, a sophomore in the Hamilton High School; Mildred, born February 11, 1904, also in her second year of high school; and Dorothy, born June 5, 1910, in the fifth grade of the grammar school.

JOHN F. MAIR is an expert millwright and lumberman, a profession he learned in the lumber districts of Eastern Canada, and has followed it since early manhood. He has been identified with the construction of mills and their operation in nearly every state and province of Western Canada and the northwestern states. Mr. Mair is now general superintendent of the lumber department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, with headquarters at Bonner. He was born at Campbellton, New Brunswick, January 15, 1874. He is of Scotch ancestry. His grandfather, John Mair, was born near Aberdeen, Scotland, and was one of the first three emigrants from Scotland who settled the village of Campbellton, New Brunswick. He spent the rest of his life in that province as a farmer and ship carpenter. His wife was Margaret Adams, a native of Halifax, Nova Scotia. They were married at Campbellton, and both of them died there. John Mair, father of John F. Mair, was born at Campbellton in 1834, and spent all his life there. He was a lumberman, farmer and also had interests in the salmon fisheries. He died at Campbellton in 1916. He was a sturdy type of citizen, in whom his fellows reposed the utmost confidence, and he exercised much influence in local affairs. For more than forty years he was a trustee of the public schools of Campbellton. He was an elder in the Presbyterian Church forty-five years and in politics was a liberal. He married Katherine Firth, who was born in the Province of Quebec at Escuminac in 1847 and died at Campbellton, New Brunswick, in 1903. John F. Mair is second in a family of seven children. Elsie, the oldest, is the wife of Alexander Miller, a farmer at Campbellton; Edgar W. is a druggist at Woodstock, New Brunswick; Mary died at Campbellton in 1914; Katherine, who died at Ham Heung, Korea, April 4, 1919, was a missionary, and was married in Korea to L. L. Young, also a missionary there but at present in Nova Scotia; Marjorie, wife of Donald McLean, a prominent land and property owner at Campbellton; and Douglas J., a banker at Vancouver, British Columbia.

John F. Mair received his education at Campbellton, and though he left school at the age of fourteen he had completed the work of the twelfth grade and was well advanced in his school studies. The next four years he worked on a farm and at the age of eighteen he began a practical apprenticeship in the lumbering business in his father's sawmill at Campbellton. He continued to help operate that plant until the mill was sold. Then, at the age of twenty-six, with an expert knowledge of lumber manufacture, he started out as a journeyman, and his experience in the building and operation of mills has taken him all over the West, through Ontario, Canada, and other provinces and states. For many years he was a foreman for W. A. Wilkinson in building sawmills in Ontario as far west as Nelson, British Columbia, at Boise and Potlatch, Idaho, at LaGrange, Oregon, then again for a time in British Columbia, following which he was at Sand Point and Spirit Lake, Idaho, Park Falls, Wisconsin, and at Bonner's Ferry, Idaho. In the fall of 1909, Mr. Mair left the service of Mr. Wilkinson, and as foreman for H. W. Huffman built a sawmill at Winchester, Idaho. During the spring of 1911 he was employed in repairing the A. C. M. Company's mill at St. Regis, Montana, and continued the same line of work during the winter of 1911-12 at Somers, Montana. Following that he entered the employ of the A. C. M. Company and was again at St. Regis until August, 1914, when he came to Bonner as superintendent of construction at the Bonner plant of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. Later he was promoted to general superintendent in the lumber department of this corporation and has under his direction 300 employes.

Mr. Mair takes an active part in local affairs, is scout master of the Boy Scouts of Bonner, is superintendent of the Sunday school of the American Sunday School Union at Bonner and is a member of Campbellton Lodge of Masons in his native province. Politically he is independent. Mr. Mair married at Sand Point, Idaho, in 1907, Miss Nellie Mahoney, daughter of Charles and Margaret Mahoney, both deceased. Her father was a Wisconsin farmer. Mrs. Mair died March 5, 1917.

CHARLES M. JOHNSON. It is the good old adage which tells us that "opportunity knocks once at each man's door," that at least one time in a man's life he is given the chance to grasp advantitious circumstance and through it places himself in a position to rise to recognition in the field opened up before him.

This is undoubtedly true, as can be proved by thousands of successful careers, but the man who waits for the knock of opportunity will be found far in the rear of the individual who has the ability to make opportunity while his less ambitious fellows have allowed it to slip through their grasp. The modern man of business has little use for the man who waits for something to "turn up." He realizes that it takes but mediocre ability to take something that has already been developed; and it is, therefore, that the man who makes a place for himself, not the man who takes a place vacated by others, is the one who creates the greatest demand for his services. Some men there are who can follow but one line; their abilities seem to have been developed in but one direction, and oftentimes they never discover their proper field of activity until it is too late, until the best of their power has been contributed to a vocation upon which their inclination and inherited abilities have been wasted. It is the man who realizes his proper field, who is possessed of the courage to grasp the opportunity presented in that direction, who rises above his fellows and eventually attains distinction, just for the reason that he has these qualities.

The above statements review in brief the reasons for the successful career of Charles M. Johnson, one of the leading builders and contractors of Anaconda, who has to his credit practically one-third of the residences and other buildings of the city, as well as other work in the surrounding district. Mr. Johnson was born at Wexio, Sweden, July 26, 1836, a son of Magnus Johanson, also born at Wexio, Sweden, in 1820. There he spent his useful life, occupying himself with farming, and died in 1872. He married Joanna Magnuson, who was born at Wexio in 1834, and died there in 1902. Their children were as follows: Mary, who is deceased, married a Mr. Tillstrom, a soldier in the regular Swedish army, and died near Wexio, Sweden; Sophia, who married a Mr. Skon, a carpenter and builder, lives at St. Paul, Minnesota; Sara, Annie and Emma, all of whom still live in Sweden; and Charles M., who was the third in order of birth.

Growing up in his native place, Charles M. Johnson attended its schools until he was eleven years old, at which time he had to begin working, and alternated in assisting his father on the farm with an apprenticeship to the carpenter trade. Coming to the United States in 1879 he found work in a lumber yard at Minneapolis, Minnesota, for a season, and then for four months was employed by a contractor in installing water pumps. For the next two and one-half years Mr. Johnson was engaged in operating an old wood sawing machine on the Saint Paul & Sioux City Railroad. For the next three years he worked completing his apprenticeship at the carpenter trade at Duluth, Minnesota, and upon finishing it he engaged in contracting in that city for four years. It was his ambition to go further west, and in 1889 he came to Montana, and for a time was at Butte, where he built two large residences, a big business block and some smaller buildings. He then came to Anaconda, where he has since remained, and when he located in the city he was the pioneer in his line. He is now assisted by Mr. W. A. Law, whom he has taken into partnership. Mr. Johnson has erected the courthouse, the Elks Hall, the Alpine Apartments, the Durston Block, the high school and many residences and business buildings, all of which stand as monuments to his skill and faithful attention to detail.

In politics Mr. Johnson is a democrat. The Presbyterian Church holds his membership and through it he finds expression for his religious faith. Fraternally he maintains connections with Anaconda Lodge No. 239, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, while in the Anaconda Club and the Anaconda Country Club he finds social relaxation. In addition to his other interests Mr. Johnson is a director of the Hidden Lake Mining Company. He is not married, and resides at 212 East Fourth Street. During the long years of his residence here Mr. Johnson has championed every movement designed to promote the general welfare, has supported every enterprise for the public good, and has materially aided in the advancement of all social, educational and moral interests, and there are few men who stand higher in the opinion of their fellow citizens than he.

ARTHUR HALLECK BROWN. Among all the professions the law perhaps requires the greatest amount of study along lines generally accepted as uninteresting, for the physician in the greater majority of cases becomes absorbed in scientific investigation at the beginning of his reading, the educator's interest is quickened by the possibilities which lie before him in the field of instructing the minds of youth, and the minister enters upon his labors with mind illumined and heart attune. The hard facts of law that have to be learned by themselves, and so learned, that the understanding is quickened into the comprehension that may later be drawn upon before judge and jury, have very often discouraged a student at the outset and have resulted in his turning to a much easier vocation. Not so, however, with Arthur Halleck Brown, one of the leading members of the Billings legal fraternity, and senior member of the firm of Brown & Tilford. Mr. Brown did not commence his career as a lawyer, but once he had entered upon his profession he became an interested devotee of his difficult vocation, and since his admission to the bar has maintained and even further developed this interest with the passing of each year.

Mr. Brown was born November 12, 1880, at Winamac, the county seat of Pulaski County, Indiana, a son of E. R. and Emma (March) Brown. The Brown family originated in England, from whence the original immigrant came to America during the colonial days and settled in New Jersey, and the great-great-grandfather of Arthur H. Brown enlisted from that colony for service as a soldier of the Continental Line during the Revolutionary war. Ira Brown, the grandfather of Arthur H., was born in Salem County, New Jersey, and was a pioneer into Pulaski County, Indiana, where he followed agricultural pursuits throughout a long and honorable career, and died at the age of fifty-eight years, prior to the birth of his grandson. He married Sophia Blew, a native of Indiana, born near Brookville, Pulaski County, who died at the age of eighty-four years.

E. R. Brown was born in 1846, in Pulaski County, Indiana, and during the past twenty-five years he has been a resident of Monticello, that state, where he is a prominent merchant and banker, a leading and public spirited citizen, an elder for many years in the Presbyterian Church, and a republican and member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. During the Civil war he served as a soldier of the Union for four years, during which time he participated in twenty-seven of the leading battles. He was a member of the Twenty-seventh Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and among his engagements were Chancellorsville, Antietam and Gettysburg, following which his regiment was transferred from the Army of the Potomac to the Army of the Cumberland, and with the latter took part in General Sherman's famous March to the Sea. The Twenty-seventh Regiment was one of the hardest-fighting units of the Union Army and had the third highest percentage of casualties sustained by any regiment during the war. Mr. Brown was a brave and valiant soldier and always at his post of duty, and during the fierce fight at Antietam received a severe wound, and still carries this honorable scar. For many years he has been prominent in the Grand Army of the Republic, and in 1906 was department commander for the State of Indiana. Mr. Brown married Emma March, who was born in 1859, in Pulaski County, Indiana, and they became the parents of two children: Arthur Halleck; and Genevieve, who is unmarried and makes her home with her parents.

Arthur H. Brown attended the public schools of Monticello, Indiana, where he finished his junior year in high school. He left school to engage in the furniture business in partnership with his father, but after a short experience enlisted in the volunteer army for service during the Spanish-American war, in the spring of 1898, as a member of the One Hundred and Sixty-first Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry. With his command he was sent to Jacksonville, Florida, and then to Cuba, where he took part in a number of engagements, and in May, 1899, received his honorable discharge and was mustered out of the service, with an excellent record. Returning to Monticello, he again took up his studies as a student at Wabash College, Crawfordsville, Indiana, which he attended from the fall of 1900 to the fall of 1902. Next Mr. Brown took a course at Indiana College, Bloomington, Indiana, being graduated with the class of 1903, and the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and during his college career joined the Phi Gamma Delta Greek letter social fraternity. When he returned to Monticello he was associated with his father for three and one half years in the furniture business, and then re-entered Indiana University as a law student. He was duly graduated in June, 1909, with his cherished degree of Bachelor of Laws, and as a member of the legal fraternity of Phi Delta Phi. In the same year he began practice at Monticello, but in September came to Billings and formed the law firm of Hathhorn and Brown. In 1912 he was made receiver for the First Trust and Savings Bank of Billings, a work which required his undivided attention until the spring of 1919, when his task was completed. In the meantime his partner, Mr. Hathhorn, had died, and in 1913 there was formed the present firm of Brown & Tilford, considered one of the strong and skilled legal combinations of the city. The firm maintains office at 319 to 322 Securities Building, and has a long list of prominent concerns upon its books, its connections as counsel and adviser being a prominent, formidable and representative one. In many cases of vast importance the members of this combine have demonstrated their ability, and both members are prominent in legal circles.

Mr. Brown is the owner of a modern residence at 321 Yellowstone Avenue, a dwelling at 308 N. Lewis Avenue, farms in the Crow Indian Reservation, and 160 acres of valuable land near Billings. His political faith causes him to support the republican party. Mr. Brown is prominent in fraternal affairs, being a member of Libanus Lodge No. 154, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Monticello, Indiana; Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons; Aldemar Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar; Billings Consistory, thirty-second degree; and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, Helena; and of Monticello Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He also belongs to the Spanish-American War Veterans and the Billings Midland Club, and he and Mrs. Brown hold membership in the Congregational Church.

Mr. Brown was married June 1, 1910, at Indianapolis, Indiana, to Miss Helen Norris, a graduate of the Shortridge High School of Indianapolis, and subsequently a student at Indiana University. She is a daughter of James C. and Carrie (Vawter) Norris, the former of whom was engaged in the wholesale millinery business at Indianapolis up to the time of his death. Mrs. Norris still survives and is a resident of that city. Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Brown; Edmund Vawter, born April 19, 1914, and Elizabeth Ann, born March 13, 1918, both at Billings.

George H. Asselstine. The true Western spirit of progress and enterprise is strikingly exemplified in the lives of such men as George H. Asselstine, one of Great Falls honored citizens, whose energetic nature and laudable ambition have enabled him to conquer many adverse circumstances and advance steadily. He has met and overcome obstacles that would have discouraged many men of less determination and won for himself not only a comfortable competency, but also a prominent place among the enterprising men of this section of the great Treasure State. Such a man is a credit to any community, and his life forcibly illustrates what energy and consecutive effort can accomplish when directed and controlled by correct principles and high moral resolves, and no man is worthier of conspicuous mention in a volume of the province of the one at hand.

George H. Asselstine was born in Kingston, Ontario, Canada, on April 16, 1875, and is the eldest of the three children born to his parents, Henry and Hattie (Bliss) Asselstine. The father, who was born June 7, 1837, died May 28, 1920, at the age of eighty-two years, and his wife, who was born in Louisville, Kentucky, died at the age of twenty-nine years. Henry Asselstine was first a carpenter by trade, and subsequently became a railroad contractor, having constructed all the bridges on the Northern Pacific Railroad from the North Dakota state line to Missoula, Montana, and did other extensive railroad construction work in the latter state. He retired from active business when about sixty years of age.

George H. Asselstine began the serious program of life at an early age, for when only nine years old he engaged in selling newspapers on the streets of Chicago. When eleven years of age he obtained employment in a book store, at twenty-five cents a day, but subsequently he again sold newspapers and shined shoes. In 1890 Mr. Asselstine came to Great Falls and obtained employment as a clerk in Strain Brothers' general store, at what then seemed to him the big salary of ten dollars a month. However, to Mr. Asselstine the size of the salary was not the big thing. He was looking ahead, and here he found the opportunity for which he had been looking, for here he gained experience of the best kind, and so well did he avail himself of his opportunities and so efficient did he prove himself in every position in which he was placed that he was promoted from time to time until eventually he became manager of the store. He remained identified with that store for nearly twenty-seven years, enjoying during that period the fullest measure of confidence on the part of his employers and the good will of the patrons of the store. After severing his connection with Strain Brothers, Mr. Asselstine engaged in the wholesale fruit and produce business, under the firm name of Devine & Asselstine. Success attended the enterprise from the beginning, and now this firm is the leading concern in its line in this section of the state. They handle oranges, lemons, strawberries in season and all other fruits and produce for which there is a local demand in carload lots and distribute to practically this entire district.

Geo. H. Asselstine.

On the 30th of August, 1905, Mr. Asselstine was married to Nell Short, who was born in Kansas, and they are the parents of two children, Ruth and George H., Jr.

Politically Mr. Asselstine is a stanch supporter of the republican party and his fraternal relations are with Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He also belongs to the Commercial Club and the Employers' Association. In every relation of life Mr. Asselstine has performed his full duty and because of his faithfulness and integrity, as well as his perseverance and industry, he has richly earned the high standing which he now enjoys, his friends being in number as his acquaintances.

THOMAS MATTHEWS, M. D. Some one has aptly said, "He serves the Master best who serves humanity most." There is no class to whom we owe more gratitude than the self-sacrificing, self-denying, noble-minded men whose life work is the alleviation of suffering and the ministering of comfort to the afflicted, to the end that the span of human existence may be lengthened and a greater degree of satisfaction enjoyed during the remainder of their sojourn. Among the physicians and surgeons of Western Montana who are proficient in their chosen calling and are conscientious workers in the sphere to which their life energies are devoted, the name of Dr. Thomas Matthews, of St. Ignatius, who, while yet comparatively young in years, has shown a profound knowledge of his profession.

Thomas Matthews was born at Calumet, Michigan, on December 5, 1881, and is a son of John R. and Martha (Moreshead) Matthews. John R. Matthews was born in England in 1847 and died at Calumet, Michigan, in 1892. He came to the United States in young manhood and settled in Calumet, Michigan, where he at length became a foreman in the mines. He was a republican in his political views. His wife also was a native of England, born in 1849, and her death occurred in Los Angeles, California, in 1914. The children born to this worthy couple were as follows: John, who died at Calumet at the age of twenty-one years; Elizabeth, who is the wife of Alfred James, chief mining inspector for the Calumet and Hecla Mining Company at Calumet; William, who is a paymaster in the mines at Calumet; Anna, who is the wife of Amos Snyder, who is manager of one of the departments in a big store in Los Angeles, California; Rhoda is unmarried and lives in Los Angeles; Thomas is the immediate subject of this sketch.

Thomas Matthews received his elemental education in the public schools of Calumet, and then was a student in Ferris Institute at Big Rapids, Michigan, where he was graduated in 1906. Having decided to make the practice of medicine his life work, Mr. Matthews then matriculated in the medical department of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, where he was graduated in 1910 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He then became interne in the Northern Pacific Hospital at Missoula, where he remained one year, but in 1911 he came to St. Ignatius, where he has since remained, engaged in the general practice of medicine and surgery. Doctor Matthews is also surgeon at the St. Julian Hospital at St. Ignatius. Doctor Matthews has built up a large and lucrative practice, being numbered among the representative citizens of this locality, and known as an able, reliable and progressive physician. He is esteemed for these commendable traits, together with his cordial disposition and genuine worth, and, although he has been more or less active in various relations with his fellow men, his name stands out more prominently in connection with the medical profession, in which he is a prominent figure.

Politically Doctor Matthews gives his support to the democratic party. He is a member of the Missoula County Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He owns a modern and conveniently arranged residence in St. Ignatius, and is also the owner of a splendid ranch located about 1½ miles north of St. Ignatius.

EDWARD O. SISSON, who from 1917 to July, 1921, was president of the State University of Montana, has had an exceptional experience in educational affairs during the past thirty years.

Mr. Sisson was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, May 24, 1869, and came to the United States in 1882. His father, George Sisson, was born at Lanchester, England, in 1828, and though he also came to America in 1882 and lived for two years in Kansas, the rest of his life was spent in England.

Edward O. Sisson received his early schooling in the Royal Grammar School at Morpeth, England. In 1882 he entered the Kansas State Agricultural College at Manhattan, graduating with the degree Bachelor of Science in 1886. The following five years he taught, two years in rural schools, two years in the Manhattan High School, and one year as superintendent of schools at Mound City, Kansas. In the fall of 1892 he enrolled as one of the first students of the University of Chicago, and graduated with its first class in 1893, with the A. B. degree. He is a member of the Beta Theta Pi college fraternity. In 1892 Mr. Sisson founded the South Side Academy, which became one of the best preparatory schools in Chicago. He remained as its principal until 1897, and at the same time carried on post-graduate work in psychology and philosophy at the University of Chicago.

In 1897 Mr. Sisson became director of the Bradley Polytechnic Institute at Peoria, remaining in charge until 1904. During 1903 Mr. Sisson spent some months abroad in Germany on a leave of absence, doing special work in the University of Berlin and making a study of the German school system. In 1904 he entered Harvard University, and received his Doctor of Philosophy degree in 1905. His thesis was "The Protestant Religious Instruction in the Prussian Schools."

During 1905-06 Doctor Sisson was assistant professor of education at the University of Illinois, and in 1906 came to the Northwest as head of the Department of Education at the University of Washington. He remained there until 1912, and during 1912-13 was head of the Department of Education of Reed College in Portland. From 1913 to 1917 he was commissioner of education for the State of Idaho, and in the latter year entered upon his duties as president of the State University of Montana.

Doctor Sisson has served as a member of the Advisory Council to the Simplified Spelling Board; the Revision Committee on Secondary Education of the National Education Association; is a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science; the College Teachers of Education; and the Religious Educational Association. He is author of "The Essentials of Character," published in 1910, and is joint author of The Social Emergency, published in 1913, and Principles of Secondary Education, published in 1914. He has also published many articles in educational journals. For a number of years he has been a popular speaker on educational and other subjects. At Missoula he is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, the Rotary Club and other local organizations. In the year 1917 he entered upon his duties as president of the State University of Montana, his resignation of that office taking effect in 1921.

November 29, 1899, at Lawn Ridge, Illinois, Doctor Sisson married Miss Nellie Stowell, daughter of Calvin and Priscilla (Greenhalgh) Stowell. Her mother resides in Los Angeles. Her father was an Illinois farmer and died at Boise, Idaho, in 1917. Mrs. Sisson is a graduate of the Art Department of Knox College, Galesburg, Illinois, and also pursued the study of art in Berlin. Doctor and Mrs. Sisson have two children: Margaret, born February 19, 1908; and Calvin Richard, born July 12, 1910.

Preston R. Felker is superintendent of schools at Superior, Montana. He is a graduate of the University of Montana and has made school work his profession and was superintendent of schools in Dakota before he came to Montana.

Mr. Felker was born at Meriden in Jefferson County, Kansas, December 15, 1887. His paternal ancestors were Holland Dutch and were colonial settlers in Pennsylvania. His grandfather, Jacob Felker, was born in Pennsylvania in 1823 and spent his life as a farmer in his native state and near Martinsburg, West Virginia, where he died. He was a Union soldier in the Civil war. C. H. Felker, father of the superintendent of public schools at Superior, was born at Pennsylvania in 1854 and was reared at Hagerstown, Maryland, and Martinsburg, West Virginia. After his marriage in Illinois he moved to Jefferson County, Kansas, where he developed a farm, and since 1890 has lived in Jackson County, Kansas. He is now a retired resident of Hoyt in that county. He is a republican and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. C. H. Felker married Agnes V. Fairchild, who was born at Harpers Ferry, Virginia, in 1856. Of their five children Preston R. is the youngest. Mabel, the oldest, is the wife of A. B. McCoy, a resident of Meriden, Kansas; Horace W. lives on the old homestead in Kansas; Florence is the wife of Charles Diehl, a funeral director at Emporia, Kansas; and Calvin died in infancy.

Preston R. Felker attended the rural schools of Jackson County, Kansas, and graduated in 1912 from the State Normal College at Emporia. The following two years he was superintendent of schools at Emarado, North Dakota, and spent three years in a similar capacity at Egeland, that state. One year of residence, 1917-18, at the University of Montana in Missoula gave him the A. B. degree, and in the fall of 1918 he came to his present duties as superintendent of schools at Superior. Mr. Felker has the local school system thoroughly well organized, with seven teachers consituting his staff and an enrollment of 125 pupils. Mr. Felker is also owner of a farm three miles south of Superior.

He is a member of the Montana State and the Inland Empire Teachers' Association, is an independent voter, a member of the Baptist Church, and is affiliated with Mountain Lodge No. 110, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Superior, Western Sun Chapter No. 11, Royal Arch Masons, at Missoula, and Coral Chapter No. 70 of the Eastern Star at Alberton.

August 14, 1912, at Rossville, Kansas, he married Miss Jessie Doud, daughter of E. S. and Rose (Stamp) Doud, her mother still a resident of Rossville. Her father, who died in 1909, was a Union soldier and for many years a mail carrier and pensioner. Mrs. Felker is a graduate of the Rossville High School, also attended the Kansas State Normal College at Emporia and the State University of Montana, and as a teacher spent three years in the rural schools of Wabaunsee County, Kansas, two years in the grade schools of Ogden, Kansas, and one year at St. George, Kansas. Mrs. Felker's brother, Eventus S. Doud, was in the first draft, standing fourth on the roll, and was sent overseas in June, 1918. He was among the American soldiers who gave up their lives in October, 1918, during the Argonne Forest battle. He was awarded a distinguished service medal.

Frank B. Campbell. One of the worthy native sons of the thriving city of Missoula is Frank B. Campbell, secretary and treasurer of the Independent Oil Company of that city. He is easily the peer of any of his fellows in the qualities that constitute correct manhood and good citizenship. He possesses not only those powers that render men efficient in the material affairs of the community, but also the gentler traits that mark genial and helpful social intercourse. In his daily affairs he manifests a generous regard for his fellows, and he therefore commands the good will of the people of the southwestern part of the state, where he has spent his life.

The Campbell family from which the subject of this sketch is descended is probably originally of Scotch origin, though the family eventually became located in Ireland, whence the subject's great-grandfather immigrated to the United States, settling in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where he spent the remainder of his life and died. Among his children was Bartley Campbell, who was born and spent his entire life at Pittsburgh. He was a contractor and builder by vocation and was a veteran of the Civil war. He married Bridget Lavey, a native of County Clare, Ireland, and to them was born Hugh B. Campbell, father of the subject of this review. Hugh B. Campbell was born in 1868 at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and accompanied his parents on their removal to Montana in 1876. They finally settled in Missoula, and here he was reared and educated. For twenty years he was successfully engaged in the transfer business, and then, from 1907 to 1909, he served as sheriff of Missoula County, to which office he had been elected on the democratic ticket. Upon the expiration of his official term, Mr. Campbell bought from Mentrum & Briggs the Western Montana Electric Company, which he owned and operated up to 1914. In the following year he established the Independent Oil Company, of which he is still the owner and which is now incorporated. The company does a wholesale oil business, supplying the trade of Missoula and the neighboring country. The Independent is one of the leading oil companies of Western Montana and is enjoying a well deserved prosperity. The officers of the company are as follows: President, Hugh B. Campbell; vice president, Hugh Campbell, Jr.; and secretary and treasurer, Frank B. Campbell.

Politically Mr. Campbell is a stanch supporter of the democratic party, in the ranks of which he has been an active worker for many years, and he served as a member of the city board of aldermen for fourteen years. He is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, of Hell Gate Lodge No. 383, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and of the Missoula Chamber of Commerce. Hugh B. Campbell was married to Mary Kelley, of Providence, Rhode Island, where her birth occurred in 1872. To them have been born the following children: Frank B., the immediate subject of this review; Hugh, Jr., who is now a student in the Montana State University, at Missoula, and who is a senior member of the Iota Nu Greek-letter college fraternity; Ursula is a graduate of the Sacred Heart Academy at Missoula, and is now teaching at the Target Range School in Missoula County; May is a student at Sacred Heart Academy; and Charles H. attends St. Joseph's Academy.

Frank B. Campbell, who was born at Missoula on July 8, 1892, was reared at home and secured a good elementary education in the public schools of Missoula, graduating from the high school. He then became a student in Notre Dame University, Notre Dame, Indiana, where he was graduated in 1914, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. The following year he became actively identified with the Independent Oil Company, which was at that time organized by his father, and he has since devoted himself to that company.

Politically Mr. Campbell is an independent democrat, and his religious connection is with the Roman Catholic Church. Fraternally he is a member of Missoula Council No. 1021, Knights of Columbus, and of Hell Gate Lodge No. 383, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is also a member of the Rotary Club and the Chamber of Commerce.

In September, 1916, at Sioux City, Iowa, Mr. Campbell was married to Helen Coen, daughter of M. J. and Naomi (Weber) Coen, of Spokane, Washington, where Mr. Coen is manager of the Crescent store. Mrs. Campbell is a graduate of St. Mary's Academy and of Notre Dame University at Notre Dame, Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell are the parents of one child, Frank, Jr., born on September 16, 1917.

Mr. Campbell has succeeded in his work because he has labored earnestly and honestly, doing well whatever he has undertaken and keeping himself well posted on the trend of the times in material, civic and moral evolution. His conduct has been such as to inspire the confidence and respect of his fellow men.

Simeon S. Hobson. The best title one can establish in the high and generous esteem of an intelligent community is a protracted and honorable residence therein. Simeon S. Hobson, one of the best known and most highly esteemed citizens of Central Montana, has resided here for many years and his career has been a most commendable one in every respect, well deserving of being perpetuated on the pages of an historical work of the nature of the one in hand. He has been a man of well defined purpose and has never failed to carry to successful completion any enterprise to which he has addressed himself. Coming to Montana when it was a comparatively new country and under many unfavorable auspices, but knowing that the country was destined to take a very high rank in the productive localities of the North, he applied himself closely to his work and waited for the future to bring its rewards, so that today he is one of the substantial and influential men of the locality.

Simeon S. Hobson was born in York County, Maine, on the 29th of April, 1839, and is the son of Enoch and Nancy (Strout) Hobson, both of whom were also natives of the State of Maine. They are both deceased, the father dying at the age of seventy-five years, and the mother when sixty-five years of age. Of their eight children, the subject of this sketch is the second in order of birth and is also the only survivor. Enoch Hobson devoted his entire active life to agricultural pursuits. He was a faithful member of the Free-will Baptist Church and in politics was an old-line whig.

Simeon S. Hobson received his educational training in the district schools of his home community and in Limerick Academy. When but fifteen years of age he obtained employment as clerk in a general store for one year, for which he received his board and forty dollars. For his second year's service he received his board and one hundred and twenty-five dollars. In 1865 Mr. Hobson went to Davenport, Iowa, and obtained employment with W. C. Wordsworth & Company, a wholesale dry goods firm. Starting in as an inside man, he soon afterward became a traveling salesman for the company, and eventually acquired an interest in the business, with which he was connected up to 1879. In the spring of the following year Mr. Hobson went west as far as Ogden, Utah, thence by rail to the end of the narrow-gauge railroad in Idaho, thence by stage to Helena, Montana. Here he engaged in the cattle business, being one of the pioneers in that business in the Judith Basin. He had many herds of cattle in the mountain ranges and in North Dakota. He also gave considerable attention to the raising of sheep in Fergus County. He had altogether many thousands of both kinds of animals, in the handling of which he was very successful. During this same period he was also interested in farming. He continued the stock business over twenty-five years, but of late he has cut down the cattle and sheep herds to a comparatively small size, and has turned his attention to the raising of wheat, having put out 7,000 acres to wheat in 1918 in Fergus, Cascade and Teton counties. Because of the drought in that year he did not get his seed back in the next crop, but, nothing daunted, he repeated the same planting the following season. Again the weather conditions were unfavorable and the results were the same, but Mr. Hobson feels that the tide is bound to turn in his favor, so does not feel discouraged with his experience so far as a wheat raiser. Mr. Hobson has taken a keen interest in the general development of the communities where he has been interested in a business way, and has contributed in various ways to the development of the country. He was the organizer of the Fergus County Bank at Lewistown and was president of that institution for twenty-two years. He has been eminently public spirited in his attitude on the vital questions of the day and rendered appreciated service as a member of the State Constitutional Convention. He also served as a state senator from the Twelfth (Lewistown) District in the sixth session. Mr. Hobson usually spends the rigorous months of mid-winter in California and expects hereafter to spend the mid-summer months in Maine.

Politically Mr. Hobson has been a life-long supporter of the republican party. Fraternally he is a member of Lewistown Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He is also a member of the Great Falls Commercial Club. He has never sought to be a leader in the affairs of the locality, merely striving to live up to the standard of good citizenship. Because of his sterling qualities of character, his kindly manner and his business success he has richly earned and today enjoys to a remarkable degree the friendship and good will of the entire populace.

John G. Howe is a graduate dairyman from the agricultural school of the University of Minnesota, and for twenty years has been successfully engaged in the creamery business. He has managed plants in several communities in Minnesota and Washington, and for over ten years has been manager of the Bitter Root Co-operative Creamery Company, one of the largest establishments of its kind in Western Montana.

Mr. Howe, who is also a banker of Stevensville, was born in Kellogg, Minnesota, February 9, 1879. His grandfather Howe came from Germany and settled at an early day in Illinois. Peter Howe was born in Illinois in 1841 and was a pioneer farmer at Kellogg, Minnesota. He is still living there, and is a prominent and widely known citizen of that section. He is president of one of the leading banks of Kellogg. He is a republican and member of the Catholic Church. Peter Howe married Elizabeth Baker, who was born in Illinois. Their children are: Kate, wife of Peter Schierts, connected with a feed and coal company at Helena, Montana; John G.; Elizabeth, wife of Peter Steiber, a farmer at Kellogg, Minnesota; Marie, a teacher in the schools of Stevensville, Montana; Celia, wife of Lynn Efilsticker, a farmer and pure bred cattle raiser at Wabash, Minnesota.

John G. Howe attended the public schools near his home at Kellogg, and was graduated in the dairy course from the Minnesota Agricultural College at St. Anthony's Park in 1899. He left college to become assistant manager of the creamery at Mankato, Minnesota, remained there a year, filled a similar position for a year at Belle Plaine, another year at Detroit, Minnesota, and four years at Oakland, Minnesota. Prior to coming to Montana he was assistant manager of a large creamery at Spokane, Washington, three years. Mr. Howe was called to the management of the Bitter Root Co-operative Creamery Company of Stevensville in 1908. This is a highly successful concern, the president of the company being George Kinneman, the vice president P. B. Liddell, the secretary Mr. Howe and treasurer Ben Wood. The plant is located a quarter of a mile east of Stevensville.

Mr. Howe is also vice president of the First National Bank of Stevensville. He owns a modern home in the town on Park Street. He has served as alderman, is a republican in politics, and is a citizen who works for the good of the community at every opportunity. May 4, 1904, at Oakland, Minnesota, he married Miss Ruby Parsons, a native of Mankato, Minnesota. They have three children: Warren, born October 13, 1905; John George, Jr., born September 21, 1911; and George Quinton, born May 14, 1919.

Lillian G. Miller, M. D. While Montana has had a number of women physicians, and is justly proud of their record, two interesting distinctions belong to Doctor Miller, one in the fact that she was the first woman physician to hold the office of county physician in the state. She also established the first and only hospital at Hamilton, now a city institution.

Doctor Miller is a thoroughly trained and competent member of her profession. She was born at Baltimore, Maryland, and when she was a small girl her parents moved to Emporia, Kansas, where her father became a farmer. She is a daughter of August and Julia (Baker) Miller, both natives of Germany. Her father was born in 1843 and came to this country at the age of seventeen, living for a number of years in Baltimore, where he followed the trade of shoemaker. Soon after he came to this country the Civil war broke out and he joined a New York regiment of infantry and was all through the struggle. At Gettysburg he was shot through both cheeks. He followed farming at Emporia, Kansas, for twelve years, and in 1893 moved to Milwaukee, where he engaged in the real estate and grain business. He died at Milwaukee in 1902. He was a republican. His widow is still living at Milwaukee. Doctor Miller had six brothers and sisters: Margaret, wife of George S. Kelley, a retired resident of Ontario, California; George Edward, who was a broker and died at Milwaukee at the age of forty-nine; Carrie M., living at Hamilton, Montana, widow of Perry Baker, an attorney of that city; Rose, wife of Charles Hoffbauer, who is a ranch owner near Billings, Montana, and lives in Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Emma, wife of George Mayne, in the steel business at Brooklyn, New York; and Nellie, wife of J. M. McGill, of Louisville, Kentucky.

Doctor Miller acquired her early education in the public schools of Emporia, Kansas. She completed her freshman year in the high school, and finished her high school course at Milwaukee. Preliminary to her medical work she was a professional nurse. She took the nurses' training course at the Hahnemann Hospital Training School in Chicago, and was a graduate nurse in Chicago for four years. She then entered the Woman's Medical College at Baltimore, where she received her M. D. degree in 1906. For 1½ years she was resident physician at the Endowood Sanitarium for Tuberculosis. Then after a vacation and a period of considerable travel she located at Billings in 1909 and engaged in active practice there for three years. While at Billings she was appointed county physician, being the first woman in Montana to receive that honor. She moved to Hamilton in 1912 and established the Hamilton Hospital, but six months later turned the institution over to the city. Since then she has been busy with a general medical and surgical practice and has offices in the First National Bank Building. She has served as county physician of Ravalli County. Doctor Miller is a republican, a member of the Presbyterian Church, is affiliated with the Rebekahs at Hamilton, and is also a member of the Women's Benefit Association, formerly the Ladies of the Maccabees. She belongs to the Woman's Club. Her home is in the Coulter Block.

Capt. Earl Mathias Welliver, who is county contractor for Ravalli County, has been a resident of Hamilton since 1908. He served with the rank of captain in the National Army during the World war, and for a number of years was an officer in the New York National Guard. He has had a widely diversified experience as a teacher, public official, merchant and is an all around business man.

Captain Welliver was born at Muncy, Pennsylvania, January 3, 1872. His paternal ancestors came out of England and were colonial settlers in New York and Pennsylvania. His father, Mathias Welliver, was born in Pennsylvania in 1827, and spent all his life in that state. He married at Lairdsville and after his marriage moved to Muncy, where he was a hotel proprietor and real estate dealer. He was also a breeder and owner of trotting horses. His experience and qualifications as a horse man made him valuable to the Confederate Government during the Civil war. For two years he was captain of a company of Pennsylvania cavalry on active duty at the front. The last two years of the war his services were even better placed in the remount department, where his knowledge of horses made him especially useful. He was a democrat in politics. Mathias Welliver married for his first wife a Miss Crawford, a native of Pennsylvania. Her children were: Mrs. Jane Maniville, of Pennsylvania; James, who owned a flouring mill and died at Williamsport, Pennsylvania, at the age of thirty-two; Florence, of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, widow of Sam Lehman, who was a foreman in the machine shops of that city; and McClelland, a hotel proprietor at Williamsport. For his second wife Mathias Welliver married Julia Gregory, who was born in New York State in 1843 and is still living at Hamilton, Montana. Her ancestors were Scotch-English. Both the Welliver and Gregory families were represented by soldiers in the American Revolutionary War. Mrs. Julia Welliver had two children: Myrtle, wife of F. H. Bailey, a civil engineer at Hamilton, Montana, and Earl Mathias.

Earl Mathias Welliver acquired his early education in the public schools of Muncy, Pennsylvania, graduating from high school in 1887. In 1889 he graduated from the State Normal School at Mansfield, Pennsylvania, and for one year was a teacher in Lycoming County. In 1891 he engaged in mercantile business at Wellsboro, Pennsylvania, was there two years, and was a merchant at Elmira, New York, until 1896. He continued in business at Buffalo, New York, until 1908. Captain Welliver came to Hamilton, Montana, on July 1, 1908. His first duties here were as purchasing agent for the L. E. Myers Company, a Chicago contracting firm which constructed the big ditch of the Bitter Root Valley. He was with that firm six months, and then became department manager of the Valley Mercantile Company, a post of duty he held until August, 1917.

On February 21, 1892, Captain Welliver enlisted as a private in the Thirtieth Separate Company of the New York State Guards at Elmira. He was transferred to the Seventy-fourth Regiment at Buffalo in April, 1896. He was promoted from private to corporal, sergeant, first sergeant, first lieutenant and captain, and resigned his captain's commission when he came west in 1908.

Though not subject to the draft, Mr. Welliver on account of his previous military experience entered the Officers' Training Camp at The Presidio, California, in August, 1917. He was commissioned a captain of infantry and was on duty at Camp Lewis, Washington, as instructor in the officers' training camp and assistant inspector and instructor for the school of small arms. Captain Welliver was mustered out and given his honorable discharge February 5, 1919. He then resumed his residence at Hamilton, where as county contractor he is engaged in the important work of classification of lands in Ravalli County. His offices are in the courthouse.

Captain Welliver is a republican, is past master of Ionic Lodge No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, is affiliated with Hamilton Chapter No. 18, Royal Arch Masons, with Crusade Commandery No. 17, Knights Templar, and is inspector general of the Knights Templar for the State of Montana. He is also a member of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. His home is at 516 Sixth Street.

In 1896, at Elmira, New York, Captain Welliver married Miss Ida McNeal Rockwell, a daughter of Andrew and Julia (McNeal) Rockwell, both deceased. Her father was a contractor and builder at Elvira. Mrs. Welliver is descended from the first white child born in Chemung County, New York. Captain and Mrs. Welliver have five children. Two of their sons were members of the military establishment of the Government during the late war. The oldest son, Earl R., was born October 2, 1896, attended the Hamilton High School through his junior year, and for two years, 1916-18, was in Alaska with the Alaskan Engineering Commission. He is now assisting his father. The son Julian, born October 29, 1898, also at home, enlisted April 17, 1917, spent one year in Texas, six months in England and six months in France, as a member of the Aviation Corps. Edwin, born July 5, 1902, was sixteen years of age when he joined the navy at San Francisco in March, 1918, and was on duty with a submarine chaser until mustered out January 20, 1919. The two younger children, twins, are Frank and Harrison, born September 8, 1915.

F. R. Fulsher, M. D., C. M. Present coroner of Mineral County, a physician and surgeon at Saltese, Doctor Fulsher has had wide experience and possesses the finest talents and has spent many years in the service of various large corporations, particularly railroads, organizing and building up hospitals

Doctor Fulsher was born in the City of Winnipeg, Canada, June 19, 1881, at a time when Winnipeg consisted largely of a small settlement around old Fort Garry. His grandfather, William Fulsher, was a native of England and an early settler at Port Hope, Ontario, where he died. Fred Fulsher, father of Doctor Fulsher, was born at Port Hope, Ontario, in 1828, and as a young man moved to Western Canada, to Winnipeg, where he married and where he kept his residence the rest of his life. For several years he had some successful experience as a placer miner in the Caribou District in British Columbia. He died at Winnipeg in 1890. Fred Fusher married Jean Gibson, who was born at Kildonan, Manitoba, Canada, in 1833, and is still living, a resident of Winnipeg. The date of her birth shows that her family was one of the very first in the western wilderness of Canada. Her father, William Gibson, came over with the original Lord Selkirk colony of Highland Scotch, who made the first settlements in the Red River Valley of what is now the Province of Manitoba.

Dr. F. R. Fulsher was educated in the public schools of Winnipeg, graduated from the Collegiate Institute there in 1898 and received his A. B. degree from the University of Manitoba in 1900. Doctor Fulsher spent two years as an interne in the Du Brett Sanitarium at Banff, British Columbia, and for two years was provincial health officer of the Province of Alberta. For eighteen months he was associated in practice with Dr. M. D. McEwen at Headley, British Columbia. In order to restore his health, seriously impaired by overwork, he spent two years traveling in Europe, Japan and throughout the Orient. Returning to Seattle, Washington, in 1908, Doctor Fulsher was given the responsibility of handling the construction work for the D. & R. Hospital Association for the Great Northern Railway at Wellington, Washington. He was engaged in that work one year, and then at the Dalles, Oregon, was chief surgeon for construction work of the D. & R. Hospital Association, and also for the S. P. and S. and Oregon Trunk Railways. For a short time Doctor Fulsher was located at Marysville, Montana, and since then has been engaged in a general medical and surgical practice at Saltese. Her parents are residents of Cascade, Montana, where her father is police judge of the City Court and city clerk. Doctor and Mrs. Fulsher have one daughter, Margaret Jeane, born September 28, 1913.

He was a Lutheran minister and he also developed a vineyard at Alma, Wisconsin, and spent many years in caring for that property. He died there in 1899. Conrad Moser, Jr., father of the Montana lawyer, was born in Zurich, Switzerland, in 1832, was reared and married in his native land, and shortly after his marriage he and his wife, Verona, came to the United States. They lived for a time at St. Louis, Missouri, where he was a teacher in the public schools. He also studied law and was admitted to the bar at St. Louis. For a number of years he practiced law successfully in Wisconsin, at Alma until 1872 and at Eau Claire until 1888. Conrad Moser moved to San Francisco in 1888, and had a good practice as a lawyer in California until his death, which occurred at San Francisco, July 4, 1904. While in Wisconsin he represented Buffalo County in the Legislature and was also probate judge. He was a republican and a member of the Masonic order. In the meantime he had studied law, and after his admission to the bar in June, 1895, practiced with home and offices in Missoula until September 1, 1898. At that date he was appointed supervisor of the Lewis and Clark Forest Preserve. This was the first preserve in Montana taken over by the United States Government. He continued as a supervisor until 1904, and the following year he served as timekeeper for the Montana Ore Purchasing Company at Butte. Removing to Thompson Falls in Sanders County, he was the first county clerk of that county, from February 1 to December 31, 1905.

For the past fifteen years Mr. Moser has been a resident of Saltese, and has handled many cases in civil and criminal law arising in this section of the state. He maintains offices in Saltese, while his home is at the head of Packer Creek, five miles northwest of Saltese. He has a mining claim there and through many years has been interested in mineral production. Mr. Moser is chairman of the Board of Trustees of the local government of Saltese. CHARLES D. ELIOT. There can be no impropriety in scanning the acts of any man as they affect his public, social and business relations. In this work will be found mention of worthy citizens of all vocations, and at this juncture we are permitted to offer a resume of the career of one of the substantial and highly esteemed citizens of Great Falls, where he has not only attained a high degree of success in his chosen field of labor and enterprise, but also established a splendid reputation for uprightness in all the relations of life.

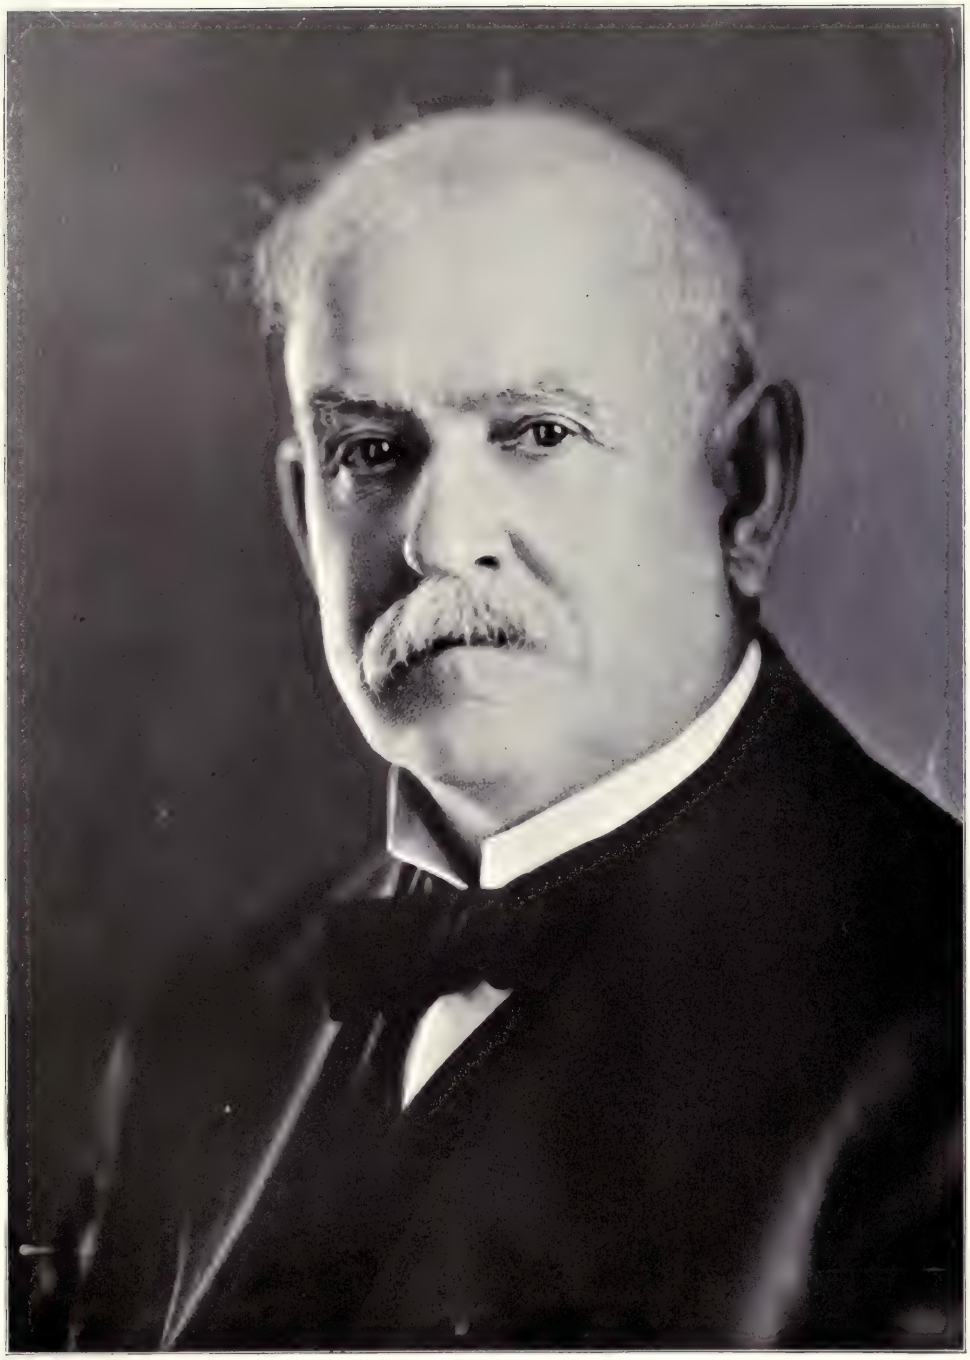
Charles D. Eliot was born on a farm in Androscoggin County, Maine, on July 2, 1855, and is the son of Rev. John and Arabella (Berry) Eliot. The father was born in West Nottingham, New Hampshire, October 5, 1800, and his death occurred in 1877. After completing his common school studies he became a student in Gorham (Maine) Seminary. Then, having decided to devote his life to the ministry of the Gospel, he became a student in Troy Theological Seminary, and on the conclusion of his studies he was ordained a minister in the Congregational Church. He became a successful missionary among the Indian tribes in the western part of New York State for a number of years. Later he became pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Lewiston, New York, where he remained for ten years. Then for the long period of thirty years he was pastor of the First Congregational Church at Rumford Point, Maine, where his death occurred. He was a man of scholarly attainments, ripe experience and fine pulpit ability, being remarkably successful in his ministerial labors. Politically he was first a whig and later a republican. Mrs. Arabella Eliot was born in Lisbon, Maine, on December 25, 1820, and died in 1889. She became the mother of five children, of whom two are living.

Charles D. Eliot received his elementary education in the public schools, after which he became a student in North Bridgewater Academy, completing his educational training in Kent's Hill Seminary, Maine. His first independent employment was at farm work, at which he was employed during two summers, at seven dollars per month. He then went to Boston, where he became bookkeeper for the Barstow Stove Company, which position he filled for about ten years. In 1884 Mr. Eliot came to Montana, locating at Oka, where he was employed in herding sheep for Charles E. Severance. A year later he engaged in the sheep business on his own account, about eight miles from Belt, Cascade County. He was engaged in the sheep business there for about fifteen years, when he sold out there and located on the American Fork in that part of Meagher County which is now Wheatland County, where he again became extensively engaged in the raising of sheep. In 1909 he sold out his interests there and going to Great Falls engaged in the fire insurance business. He has been very successful in this line and is representative here for five of the leading fire insurance companies of the country. He is energetic and a good business man, which, with the innate courtesy which always characterizes his business dealings have gained for him the good will and esteem of all who know him. Mr. Eliot is vitally interested in the growth and development of the city of his adoption and is a stockholder and director in the Commercial National Bank and treasurer, of the Great Falls Cemetery Association and director in the Great Falls Building Association.



Charles W. Eliot

On the 5th of December, 1900, Mr. Eliot was married to Eleanor L. Tracy, who was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. They are the parents of one daughter, Eleanor, who is the wife of Seldon S. Rodgers and the mother of three children, Seldon T., Oliver Eliot and Eleanor Lind.

Politically Mr. Eliot has always been an ardent supporter of the republican party, and has taken an intelligent interest in local public affairs. In 1892 he was elected county assessor of Cascade County, and was re-elected to the office in 1894, serving two terms. For the past ten years he has been a member of the school board and rendered effective service in the cause of the school system of this city. His religious membership is with the Congregational Church, of which he is a generous supporter. Such men as he are a credit to any community, and his life forcibly illustrates what energy and consecutive effort can accomplish when directed and controlled by correct principles.

J. L. Hartman has been in Montana over thirty years, was long identified with timber contracting and ranching, and still has much valuable property in the western part of the state, but his time for the past six years has been given to his official duties as sheriff of Sanders County.

Mr. Hartman was born in Summit County, Ohio, near the City of Akron, February 11, 1865. His people have been Americans for nearly a century. His father, John Hartman, was born in Bavaria, Germany in 1817, and in 1826, at the age of nine years, came to this country with his parents and also his grandfather, all of whom thenceforth were thrifty American citizens. The family located at Buffalo, New York, where John Hartman lived until he was sixteen years of age. For a number of years he lived at Akron, Ohio, where he married and where he followed the cooper's trade. From 1878 to 1898, twenty years, he was a farmer at Chanute in Neosha County, Kansas, and at the latter date retired and came to Plains, Montana, where he died in 1901. He was a democrat and a member of the Catholic Church. His wife was Barbara Geugel, who was born in Germany in 1832 and died at Portland, Oregon, in 1908. They had a large family of children: Barbara, of Portland, Oregon, widow of Anthony Metzler, who was a sawmill foreman; John, who for the past twenty years has been foreman of the track department of the Street Railway Company at Grand Rapids, Michigan; Mary, who died in childhood; Chris, a retired railroad man living at Thompson Falls, Montana; Frank, road master for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway at Avery, Idaho; J. L. Hartman, who was the sixth in age; Henry, section foreman for the Northern Pacific Railroad living at Frenchtown, Montana; Mrs. Mattie Ellinger, wife of a hotel man at Portland, Oregon; Laura, wife of Phil Sheehan, their home being on a farm ten miles out of Portland; and Anthony, who is a traveling engineer for the Canadian Pacific Railway, with home and headquarters at Calgary, Alberta, Canada.

J. L. Hartman received his early advantages in the public schools of Ohio, and after he was thirteen years of age attended school at Chanute, Kansas. He lived on his father's farm to the age of twenty-one, and on March 9, 1887, coming to Montana, located at Thompson Falls. The following year he was a brakeman with the Northern Pacific Railway. Leaving the railroad service he became a timber contractor, and for about twenty years most of his time was spent in the lumber districts of Western Montana. He then located on his ranch and began farming, which he continued until 1911, when he sold most of his ranches. He now owns 160 acres of valuable irrigated land on Trout Creek, and has much real estate, including a modern home at Thompson Falls, two dwelling houses in the same city and a dwelling at Plains. When he left his ranches in 1911 he retired to Plains, but not being satisfied to have no regular business he established a stage route from Plains to Camas and from Plains to Elmo. He sold that two years later, and in the fall of 1914 was elected sheriff of Sanders County. Mr. Hartman was re-elected in 1916 and 1918, and has given an administration of his office of which his friends are deservedly proud.

While living on his ranch Mr. Hartman also served on the School Board at Whitepine. He is a republican in politics, is affiliated with Ponemah Lodge No. 63, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Plains Lodge of Odd Fellows, and is a former member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

In 1886, at Fredonia, Kansas, he married Miss Ida Cowen, daughter of David and Caroline (Harney) Cowen. Her parents are now deceased. Her father was a farmer in Kansas and afterward in Missouri.

William H. Shipley for the past eleven years has been superintendent of public schools at Plains. He has spent the greater part of his active life as a teacher and school administrator but has also had a varied experience in business and other affairs.

Mr. Shipley was born at Boscobel, Wisconsin, April 27, 1875. He is of English ancestry, the Shipley family having first settled in the State of Delaware. His father, John T. Shipley, was born in Pennsylvania in 1849 and as a young man went to Branch County, Wisconsin, and is still living in that section of the Badger State. For over forty years he has been a leading merchant at Boscobel and is still active and looking after his business affairs every day. He has served as member of the town council many years and in politics is a democrat. John T. Shipley married in Grant County, Wisconsin, Mina Josephine Miles, who was born in Kansas in 1854. William H. is the oldest of their children. Cora is the wife of George W. Rice, a traveling salesman living at Onalaska, Wisconsin. Albert and John T., Jr., are both traveling salesmen and live at Madison, Wisconsin. Josephine is the wife of John R. Muffley, Jr., a printer at Rochester, Minnesota. Walter Evan, the youngest, is a business man of Madison.

William H. Shipley attended school at Boscobel, graduating from high school in 1894. He then acquired a year of experience teaching in rural schools of Crawford County, Wisconsin, and for two years was principal of the graded schools at Seneca, that county. For another two years he was principal of the Lynxville schools in Crawford County. Leaving school work, Mr. Shipley engaged in the mercantile business at Hurlbut in Crawford County, Wisconsin, but at the end of two years sold out and entered the State Normal College at Whitewater, Wisconsin, graduating in 1903. He did a year of post-graduate work in the University of Wisconsin, and from there came to Montana and took special studies in the Montana State College at Bozeman during 1906. During that year he was also principal of the Irving School at Bozeman. Mr. Shipley had charge of the department of physics and chemistry in the Gallatin County High School at Bozeman in 1907, and in 1908 came to Plains as superintendent of schools. The splendid school system of this town owes much of its advancement to the wise guidance of Mr. Shipley during the past eleven years. Plains has two school buildings, a staff of ten teachers, and an enrollment of 200 scholars. Mr. Shipley owns a modern home at Bozeman. He is a member of the State Teachers' Association, is past master of Ponemah Lodge No. 63, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and is a republican and belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In 1897, at Boscobel, Wisconsin, he married Miss Katherine M. Roan, daughter of Martin W. and Mary (Fitch) Roan, both deceased. Her father was a farmer in Crawford County, Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Shipley have two children: Leila M., born July 16, 1900, is a graduate of the Plains High School and is now in the second year of the State University of Montana at Missoula; Josephine, born December 1, 1906, is in the eighth grade of the grammar schools at Plains.

Frank Dallin, proprietor of the Montana Tent and Awning Company, is one of the prosperous and enterprising business men of Butte, and one who stands very high among his associates because of his honorable methods and prompt service. He was born at Springville, Utah, on May 19, 1885, a son of Cyrus Dallin, also a native of Utah, born at Lehi City, that state, in 1857. His death occurred at Eureka, Utah, in 1907. Reared at Springville, Utah, Cyrus Dallin attended its schools and lived there until after his marriage, when he went to Idaho and did some ranching as one of the pioneers in that industry there. During the pioneer days of Montana he came to Deerlodge County, and followed mining in the old Cable Mine, being one of the first to work it. Becoming very prominent in politics, he held the offices of constable, road supervisor and others of a local character, and never lost his interest in civic affairs. He belonged to the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

Cyrus Dallin was united in marriage with Ella Fuller, born in Springville, Utah, in 1859, who died at Thousand Springs, Idaho, in 1893, having borne her husband the following children: Mabel, who married William Hardy, now deceased, a railroad man, later became the wife of Earl Bradshaw, and they live at Salt Lake City, Utah, where he has a laundry delivery business; Frank, who is the second in order of birth; Guy, who is a veteran of the great war, was trained at Camp Lewis, became a sergeant, and was mustered out in the spring of 1919, following which he went to Seattle, Washington, where he is now employed in a shipyard; and Ella, who married A. W. Young, of Salt Lake City, Utah, where he is employed in Walker's Bank of that city.

Frank Dallin attended the Eureka High School through the freshman year, and then, when between the ages of seventeen and eighteen years, he left school and enlisted in the United States navy, serving from January, 1903, to May, 1906, along the coast in Atlantic and Mexican waters and among the West Indies, and also along the Pacific coast. He was at Panama several times. Entering the service as a third class apprentice, he was mustered out as a first class seaman. After receiving his honorable discharge he returned to Utah and followed mining until 1909, in which year he became fireman for the Rio Grande Railroad, with headquarters at Salt Lake City, Utah, and held that position until 1912. For the next year Mr. Dallin was engaged in mining at Park City, Utah, and then, becoming interested in the tent and awning business, he went to Los Angeles, California, and learned the trade, located at Butte, Montana, in 1915, and alternated working at his new trade and mining for a year. Then, in 1916, he established his present business, under the caption of the Montana Tent & Awning Company, and since then has developed it into the leading business of its kind in Silver Bow County. The offices and plant are located at 17 North Arizona Street, Butte. Mr. Dallin is a republican. Formerly he belonged to the Odd Fellows. His modern residence, which he owns, is at 1125 Stewart Street.

In the spring of 1913 Mr. Dallin was married at Salt Lake City, Utah, to Miss Eva Mitchell, a daughter of William and Minnie (Thayer) Mitchell, and they have one daughter, Dorothy Romana, who was born on April 3, 1914.

Mr. Dallin is a real American, his family having been established in this country by his great-grandfather, Tobias Dallin, born in England in 1807, who died at Springville, Utah, in 1892. While living in England he owned and operated a large ship rigging establishment at Liverpool, but after he came to the United States he lived in retirement. His son, the grandfather of Frank Dallin, was John Dallin, and he was born at Liverpool, England, and died at Springville, Utah, in 1917. During his younger days he was a sailor, and it was through his influence that Frank Dallin decided to enlist in the navy. As a young man he accompanied his father to the United States, and located at Springville, Utah, where he was married to Mary Llewellyn, a native of Wales, who died at Springville, Utah. At first after coming to Utah John Dallin was a railroad contractor, but later, during their pioneer period, he engaged in merchandising at Silver City and Nanti, Utah. His next venture was conducting a summer resort on the lake at Geneva, Utah, but he finally settled at Springville, Utah, where the remaining years of his useful life were spent in honorable retirement.

Frank Dallin is still in the very prime of vigorous manhood, and yet he has had many experiences and learned through them to take a broad view of life, realizing that different surroundings produce other conditions from those of his immediate vicinity. His business is now absorbing him, but with his varied knowledge and keen judgment, especially with reference to men and their motives, he no doubt will in time interest himself in public affairs, and when he does it is safe to predict he will act in the same capable manner that has characterized him hitherto.

Judge Patrick James Whitty. While for the past five years he has performed some important official duties at Butte as police magistrate, Judge Whitty's career from boyhood has been identified with the mining industry, and he was a mine worker when he first came to Butte more than thirty years ago.

Judge Whitty was born in Schuykill County, Pennsylvania, May 30, 1858, and had a public school education. He was a boy worker in the mines of Pennsylvania and in 1887 came into the mining district of Montana. He has performed all the labor incident to mining precious minerals, from underground worker to shift boss and superintendent of mines. He was elected police magistrate of Butte in May, 1915, and was re-elected in 1917. He has also held the offices of assistant city clerk, deputy clerk and treasurer of Silver Bow County. Judge Whitty and family are members of the Church of the Immaculate Conception.

June 26, 1880, at Williamstown, Pennsylvania, he married Miss Mary Ann Courtney (sister of the late Senator Courtney, one of the framers of the Constitution of Montana). They have two children. Mary Frances is the wife of Bernard Noon, a prominent Butte attorney. Margaret is the wife of William Harrison Shannon, also a resident of Butte.

John D. McDonald. The gentleman whose life history is here taken under consideration is one of the strong, sturdy characters who have contributed largely to the material welfare of the community where he lives, being a business man of more than ordinary sagacity and foresight, and as a citizen, public-spirited and progressive in all that the term implies. He is ranked as one of the leaders in business circles in Great Falls and one of the most representative citizens of that community, and yet a plain, unassuming, straightforward gentleman whom to know is to admire and respect.

John D. McDonald was born in Green Valley, Glengary, Ontario, Canada, on January 23, 1865, and is the son of Donald S. and Mary (McLachlan) McDonald. Donald McDonald was born in Canada and died in 1914, in the eighty-sixth year of his age. He was engaged in the lumber business and was one of the pioneers in that industry in Alcona County, Michigan. There he engaged in farming and stock raising, which occupied his attention until his death. Politically he was a supporter of the democratic party and his religious membership was with the Roman Catholic Church. His wife, who was born in Scotland, passed away in Michigan, May 14, 1920, at the age of eighty-four years. Of the seven children born to them two are still living.

John D. McDonald received his education in private schools and early learned the meaning of labor, for at fourteen years of age he found employment in a mill, piling staves, at a wage of fifty cents a day. During the following summer he picked berries and then spent the following winter in a lumber woods. After spending the following summer driving teams, Mr. McDonald became a clerk in a general merchandise store, where he remained until 1893, the summer of which year he spent in Chicago. In the fall of that year he came to Great Falls, Montana, and engaged as a clerk with Strain Brothers. Two years later, in 1895, Mr. McDonald engaged in business on his own account, opening a boot and shoe store, and he has been so engaged continuously to the present time. He carries a large and well selected line of shoes, and his store is today considered one of the leading houses of the kind in Great Falls. Because of the quality of his goods, the fairness of his prices and the courteous and prompt service he extends to his customers, he has built up and retains a large and satisfied list of patrons.

Politically Mr. McDonald is a democrat, but is not a seeker after public office, though while a resident of Michigan he served five successive years as township clerk. Fraternally, he is a life member of the Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On February 4, 1901, Mr. McDonald was married to Anna Dolliver, who was born in Gloucester, Massachusetts. To them have been born five children, three sons and two daughters, namely: John D., Jr., Mary, Lydian, Donald P. and Joseph. Mr. and Mrs. McDonald are justifiably proud of the school record of their eldest child, John, who in May, 1919, won the state declamatory championship in the annual contest between the high schools of the state. The Great Falls Daily Tribune of May 19, 1919, had the following mention of this event: "Great Falls high school is rejoicing that for the second time in two consecutive years students from the local school have won state honors in the declamatory contest. Thursday night, at the State University in Missoula, John McDonald of this city and Eloise Wilson of the Gallatin County high school won the title of state champions in declamation in their respective classes, following the elimination of nearly half a hundred of the picked speakers in the state. John McDonald, who is a prominent member of the junior class at Central high school here, is sixteen years of age and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John D. McDonald. His subject was 'The Cremation of Sam McGee,' the famous poem by Robert W. Service."

Because of his high personal character and his genial manner, Mr. McDonald has won and retains the confidence and esteem of the people of Great Falls. He stands stanchly for the best things in community life, giving his support to every measure looking to the upbuilding of the community in any laudable way.

WALTER J. SEWELL. Among the men who have attained to deserved distinction among the honorable business men of Butte is Walter J. Sewell, hardware merchant and public-spirited citizen. He was born in New Brunswick, Canada, on June 3, 1876, a son of George H. Sewell, and grandson of Thomas Sewell. The Sewell family came originally from Wales to the American Colonies, from whence they emigrated to Canada.

Thomas Sewell was born in New Brunswick, Canada, in 1816, and died in that province in 1880, having spent his entire life there, and during all of his mature years he carried on farming. George H. Sewell was also born in New Brunswick, Canada, in 1841, and he died at Helena, Montana, in December, 1913. He was reared, educated and married in New Brunswick, and there all of his children were born. In 1883 he began working for the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and was employed as a carpenter on bridge construction through British Columbia. In 1885 he came to Anaconda, Montana, and worked at the old smelter and then in different parts of the state as a miner and lumberman. With the discovery of gold in Alaska he went to the new gold fields and remained there for two years. Returning to Anaconda in 1898, he was employed as a carpenter in the Washoe Reduction Works until 1913. In the latter year he went with a crew of carpenters to Hurley, New Mexico, and was employed in the construction of a new smelter plant and for the Chino Copper Company for a year, when he was stricken with apoplexy. His son, Walter J. Sewell, went after him and brought him back to Montana, and after a short stay at Butte, took him to a hospital at Helena, where he died. He was a republican in his political faith, and a very active member of the Masonic fraternity.

Walter J. Sewell attended the parochial schools of New Brunswick, Canada, until he was twelve years old, when he began to be self-supporting and obtained employment rafting logs on the Saint John River and followed that for two years. For the subsequent years he was a clerk in a dry-goods store at Fredericton, New Brunswick, and then spent two years in a plumbing business. For five years he worked as a carpenter at Fredericton, and then, in 1898, went to Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada, and spent two months. In May, 1898, he came to the United States and for six years worked as a journeyman carpenter at Butte. At the expiration of that period he began contracting and building on his own account and was engaged in this line of industry for seven years, during that time erecting Saint Mary's Parochial School and Holy Saviour Parochial School and a number of residences and other buildings. In 1911 Mr. Sewell entered the hardware business, establishing his present store at 221 East Park Street, which he has developed into a very prosperous enterprise, and expanded his lines until he now carries hardware, paints, plumbing material, sporting goods and automobile accessories. Mr. Sewell owns the building in which his business is located and a modern residence at 524 Caledonia Street.

As a democrat Mr. Sewell casts his vote and exercises his influence. He belongs to the Roman Catholic Church and Butte Council No. 668, Knights of Columbus, in which he has been made a Fourth Degree Knight. In addition to these connections he is a member of the Robert Emmett Literary Association, the Ancient Order of Hibernians and the Friends of Irish Freedom.

In 1901 Mr. Sewell was married at Seattle, Washington, to Miss Agnes Kelly, a native of Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Sewell have the following children: Walter J., who was born on July 6, 1902, and Barbara, who was born on December 31, 1903, one of triplets and the only survivor, the others having died in infancy.

Mr. Sewell is a man who has advanced because he set a goal and worked steadily toward it. He is recognized as an honorable man and a citizen who is interested in the further development of large interests of Butte and Silver Bow County, and willing to do his full part toward bringing this about.

DANIEL R. FISHER. Throughout an active and interesting career duty has ever been the motive of action of Daniel R. Fisher, one of the representative business men of Great Falls. He has performed well his part in life, and it is a compliment worthily bestowed to say that his locality is honored in his citizenship, for he has achieved definite success through his own efforts. He is thoroughly deserving of the proud American title of self-made man, the term being one that, in its better sense, cannot but appeal to the loyal admiration of all who are appreciative of our national institutions and the privileges afforded for individual accomplishment. It is a privilege to meet a man who has had the courage to face the battles of life with a strong heart and steady hand and to win in the stern conflict by bringing to bear only those forces with which nature has equipped him, self-reliance, self-respect and integrity.

Daniel R. Fisher was born in Humansville, Polk County, Missouri, on the sixth day of July, 1878, and is a son of Oliver W. and Euphemia (Robinson) Fisher, both of whom are still living. Oliver W. Fisher was born in Ohio in 1842, and was there reared and educated. In young manhood, fired by the stories of fortune to be found in the great Western Eldorado, he started overland with cow teams for California. The journey was a long and tiresome one and was not without its thrills, one of which was an attack by Indians near Salt Lake. After his arrival in California he engaged in prospecting and teaming. Meeting with only ordinary success in California, Mr. Fisher returned to Ohio by way of the Isthmus of Panama, landing at New York City. Later he went to Canada, where he was engaged in the operation of a flour mill, and while living there he was married. Some time later he returned to the States, locating first in Kentucky, whence he went to Missouri, locating at Orleans, where he ran a mercantile business and operated a grist mill for some time. Later he located at Humansville, where he also engaged in the flour mill and mercantile business. He was one of the organizers of the Farmers and Merchants Bank, of which he became president. He also operated a flour mill at Bolivar, Missouri. He became interested in construction work as a contractor, erecting many bridges on the line of the Kansas City, Clinton & Springfield Railroad. He also established a sawmill and lumber business at Winona, Missouri, and afterward took over the Cordy-Fisher Lumber Company at Birch Tree, Missouri. Later he moved to Springfield, Missouri, and established a sawmill at Fisher, Louisiana, where he established and laid out a town site. He was one of the organizers of the Louisiana Central Lumber Company and a number of other lumber companies in the South, including a number of large sawmills at different points.

In 1906 Mr. Fisher came to Montana, locating at Bozeman, where he had a mercantile establishment and also constructed a large flour mill at Belgrade, Montana. He became interested in a string of thirty elevators and was numbered among the largest handlers of grain in this part of the state. He helped to organize the Gallatin Trust and Savings Bank at Bozeman, and became president of the Fisher Mercantile Company, which had stores located at Bozeman, Missoula, Red Lodge and Great Falls, under the name of the Golden Rule Stores. In 1912 Mr. Fisher removed to Seattle, Washington, having established at that place the Fisher Flour Mills, with a daily capacity of 6,000 barrels of flour, making it the largest flour mill west of Minneapolis. He was also interested in the organization of one of the largest lumber companies in the West, operating its own mill. He is also financially interested in a number of banks in Washington. Among the companies in which he is interested is the Snoqualmia Falls Lumber Company, which has at Snoqualmia Falls one of the largest and most complete lumber plants in the world. Associated with Mr. Fisher in all these industries are his five sons, Will P., Burr, O. D., Daniel R. and O. W., Jr., and his daughter, Lulu, the wife of W. W. Warren. He is a republican in his political views, and is a member of all the different bodies of the Masonic order, including the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite.

Daniel R. Fisher was reared and educated at Humansville, Missouri, after which he became a student in Colorado University. He was also a student in Wentworth Military Academy at Lexington, Missouri. His first employment was in a lumber camp in Southwestern Missouri, near Birch Tree, where he worked in the capacity of bookkeeper in a store operated by his father. He then went to Boulder, Colorado, and assumed the management of a store owned by Fisher Brothers, himself and brothers being the co-partners in the enterprise. Later he went to Missoula, Montana, where he helped to organize the Fisher Mercantile Company.

Some time afterward he went to Red Lodge, where he was in charge of a large mercantile establishment for a time. In 1902 he came to Great Falls, where he operated the Fisher Mercantile Company's store for about a year, following which he located at Belgrade, Montana, and served as manager of the Gallatin Valley Milling Company. In 1916 Mr. Fisher returned to Great Falls in order to be better in touch with a string of about thirty elevators operated by the Gallatin Valley Milling Company. This is a large enterprise and requires administrative ability of a high order, but Mr. Fisher has demonstrated his ability in no uncertain way and enjoys a well-earned reputation as a strong, sensible and shrewd business man. He was made president of the Farmers Bank of Belgrade at the time of its organization, holding that office until he changed his residence to Great Falls. He is a director of the Gallatin Trust and Savings Bank and is vice president and general manager of the Gallatin Valley Milling Company. He is also secretary and treasurer of the Chambers-Fisher Mercantile Company at Bozeman.

On June 23, 1908, Mr. Fisher was married to May B. Bennett, who was born in Butte, Montana, the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Bennett. To this union have been born three children, Daniel R., Jr., Bennett I. and George O.

Politically Mr. Fisher takes an independent attitude, preferring to vote for the men and measures which meet his approval. Fraternally he is a member of Great Falls Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Bozeman Chapter No. 12, Royal Arch Masons; St. John Commandery No. 12, Knights Templar; Great Falls Consistory, Scottish Rite; Algeria Temple; Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine at Helena; Bozeman Lodge No. 463, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, as well as the Commercial Club of Great Falls.

Mr. Fisher has realized a large and substantial success in the business world, and is known as a man of action rather than words. He is eminently utilitarian, and energy of character, firmness of purpose and unswerving integrity are among his chief characteristics. He occupies a large place in connection with the productive energies and activities of life and is eminently worthy of specific mention in a work of the character of the one in hand.

JOHN J. GREENE. Judge of the Nineteenth District Court, and though one of the youngest of six judges in Montana, has behind him ample experience and qualifications for the varied duties of his office, and his work on the bench has thoroughly justified the confidence of members of the bar and general citizenship who recommended and supported the recommendation of the governor when Judge Greene was allotted these responsibilities.

Judge Greene was born on his father's farm in Allamakee County, Iowa, December 4, 1887, son of Levi N. and Alice B. (Bulman) Greene. His father was born in Pennsylvania in 1844, and at the age of seventeen, in 1862, enlisted in Company H of the Ninth Iowa Infantry. He was with his regiment in every skirmish and battle in which it participated, and was all through the Atlanta campaign and the march to the sea under Sherman. At the close of the war he was mustered out in 1865, and soon afterward engaged in farming on what is known as the New Galena Farm in Allamakee County, Iowa. He farmed successfully, and, when well advanced in years, in 1892, he was ordained a minister of the Methodist Church. He then sold his farm, and during the rest of his life devoted his time to the church and the cause of humanity. He died at Delhi, Iowa, in 1906. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and a republican in politics. Levi N. Greene's wife was born in Allamakee County, Iowa, was married there and is still living in that community. Of her six children one died in infancy. The others are: Marion, wife of Arthur Moorehouse; Grace, wife of Edward Bargendale; Carrie M.; Leonard, who married Gertrude Reiner; and John J.

Judge Greene grew up a minister's son, graduated from the Delhi High School in Iowa in 1906, then attended Upper Iowa University at Fayette, and pursued his law studies in the law department of the University of Minnesota. He was graduated in law in 1912 and was admitted to the Minnesota bar. In the spring of 1913 he came to Montana, was admitted to the bar in March of that year, and at once began making himself known in his profession at Conrad. He was soon elected county attorney in the fall of 1914, and served one term in that office. In the spring of 1917 he became associated with George Coffey, Jr., under the firm name of Coffey & Greene. They had a large law practice in Teton County until Mr. Greene was called from active practice by the appointment of Governor Stewart as judge of the Nineteenth District on March 8, 1919.

Judge Greene is a member of the Delta Phi Delta law fraternity, Choteau Lodge No. 44, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Choteau Chapter No. 25, Royal Arch Masons, and Bethany Commandery No. 19 of the Knights Templar.

August 1, 1914, he married Miss Alice Timmis. Their three children are Alice Joan, Frank Timmis and John J., Jr.

NICK BAATZ. The business career of Nick Baatz, a popular and successful business man of Great Falls, is one that should encourage others to press on to greater achievements; for when a boy he set to work to overcome all difficulties that might lay in his path to success and the high standing which he now enjoys is the result. Earnest labor, unabating perseverance, a laudable ambition and good management are the elements by which he has ascended the steppes.

Nick Baatz was born on Mach 17, 1861, in Haller, LaRochette, Luxemburg, and is the son of John and Annie (Kessler) Baatz. The father, who also was a native of Haller, died in 1902, at the age of eighty-eight years. He was a distiller and foreman on the banks of the Rhine for twenty-five years, and was also engaged in getting out ship timbers and in farming. His wife, who was born in Bayford, died on August 19, 1903, at the age of seventy-six years. The subject of this sketch is the third child in order of birth of the seven children born to this worthy couple, five of the children being still alive.

Nick Baatz left his native country when eleven years of age, immediately after the close of the Franco-Prussian war, and located in Verdun, France, where he was employed as a hotel clerk. In 1880 he came to the United States and managed to obtain six months' school training in Ohio. In 1881 he made the long overland journey to Montana, locating at Helena, where he engaged in the manufacture of brick for Nick Kessler. Some time later Mr. Baatz went to Marysville, Montana, and engaged in contracting as a hauler, carting wood for the Drumline Mine Company. Then he embarked in the wholesale liquor business, in addition to which he gave some attention to mining, running the Belmont Quartz Mill, in all of which enterprises he was fairly successful. In 1890 Mr. Baatz moved to Flathead County, Montana, and established a brick yard at Columbia Falls, manufacturing the first brick made at that place. Two years later he moved to Great Falls and engaged in the manufacture of carbonated drinking waters, in connection with the sale of which he also conducted a wholesale liquor and cigar business. During the same period he was also engaged in the real estate business, handling a great deal of land and improved properties in Great Falls and vicinity. In 1919 Mr. Baatz quit the liquor business and engaged in the liquid carbonated gas business in Billings, this state. He soon sold that business, however, and organized a company with a capital stock of a quarter of a million dollars, known as the Washington Liquid Gas Company. They are now engaged in the erection of a building and the completion of a plant, which is to go into operation in the winter of 1919. Of this company Mr. Baatz is the president and controlling spirit, and, being a man of practical experience and good business judgment, no doubt the business will prove a wise investment.

On August 29, 1898, Mr. Baatz was married to Elizabeth Zimmerman, a native of Cincinnati, Ohio. Politically Mr. Baatz is an earnest supporter of the republican party and takes a keen interest in public affairs, though in no sense is he a seeker after public office. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the United Commercial Travelers' Association. Genial and whole-souled, Mr. Baatz is very approachable and makes friends easily, enjoying a large and varied acquaintance, among whom he is deservedly popular.

MATHIAS KRANZ is the veteran florist and greenhouse man in Montana, having been in that business continuously at Great Falls nearly thirty years. It has been a lifelong pursuit with him. As a boy he learned floriculture and gardening while working on the grounds of the ex-Kaiser William in Germany. He has what is probably the largest business of its kind in the state.

Mr. Kranz, whose name has long been a synonym of integrity and good citizenship in Great Falls, was born in Prussia November 18, 1864, youngest of the eight children of Mathias and Lucille Kranz. His parents spent all their lives in Germany. His father was a soldier and died in 1869, at the age of seventy-one, his wife passing away two years later.

Mathias Kranz attended the common schools of his native land to the age of fourteen, and then served four years apprenticeship in the landscape department of the Imperial Government. At eighteen he came to America, and for a year or so lived at Minneapolis, where he was associated with his brother Peter in the truck gardening business. Selling out his interests to his brother he came to Great Falls April 7, 1890, but during the greater part of that year found employment at Helena. In December he returned to Great Falls, and soon afterward bought some lots and during 1891 started the first hothouse in Great Falls. At first his line of production was lettuce and other vegetables, but gradually he enlarged his enterprise for the growing of flowers exclusively. He now has an immense plant, 40,000 square feet under glass, and the fame and appreciation of his productions are by no means confined to the community of Great Falls, though that city gives him his chief market.

Mr. Kranz is a democrat, a Catholic, a member of the Catholic Order of Foresters, Woodmen of the World, Modern Woodmen of America, of The Eagles, and a member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214 of the Elks.

February 11, 1896, he married Miss Annie Stergart, of Great Falls, daughter of Charles and Lizzie Stergart. They have two children: Charles M., born June 9, 1898, and Lillian Dorothy, born November 15, 1899.

ARTHUR PERHAM, proprietor of the Montana Cadillac Company at Butte, has been a figure in the automobile business in Montana for the past five years, and for a number of years prior to that time had enjoyed places of trust and responsibility in banking and other business institutions.

Mr. Perham represents a pioneer family in the Northwest. He was born at The Dalles, Oregon, August 25, 1876. His father, the late Judge Eugene L. Perham, was one of the prominent pioneers of the State of Oregon. He was born in the State of Maine in 1828, of Scotch and English ancestry. The Perhams settled in Massachusetts in colonial times. Judge Perham came overland to Oregon at the age of twenty-one. During his residence at The Dalles he was associated with the Oregon Steam Navigation Company. He also studied law, was admitted to the Oregon bar, and served two terms as judge of Wasco County. He enjoyed much influence among the pioneers on account of his exceptional education and his many versatile talents. In 1888 he retired from business and removed to Portland, where he died in 1893. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity. Judge Perham married Martha Lona Geary, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1840 and is living at Portland in her ninetieth year. There were seven children in the family. Harriet, the oldest, is a resident of Portland, widow of Hon. J. F. Van Name, a prominent attorney and judge of Cowlitz County, Washington. H. W. Perham is a contractor and builder at St. Anthony, Idaho. Edwin Geary is a general contractor at Marshfield, Oregon. W. T. Perham is a resident of Glendive, Montana, and a general contractor. Arthur is the fifth in age. Margaret is the wife of George E. Waggoner, of Portland Oregon, but a prominent oil operator in Wyoming and Texas. Benjamin A., the youngest, lives at North Yakima, Washington, and is proprietor of the Perham Fruit Company, an organization that ships a large volume of northwestern fruit over the United States.

Arthur Perham attended the public schools of Portland to the age of fifteen. In 1893 he graduated from the Portland Business College and subsequently took a course in higher mathematics at the Holmes Business College. His first regular employment was with the Northwest Loan and Trust Company, remaining there four years. For three years he was associated with his brothers, E. G. and H. W. Perham, in the contracting business. Mr. Perham came to Butte in 1896, and for a time was employed as a laborer under W. A. Clark. He was advanced to timekeeper, and for three years was foreman of the Mine Timber Framing Plant. For one year Mr. Perham was employed as foreman at White Sulphur Springs, Montana, under his brothers, the contractors. Returning to Butte he entered the State Savings Bank, beginning as head bookkeeper, and remained with that institution for twelve years, eventually being its cashier. In the meantime he served seven months as state manager of the Prudential Life Insurance Company. When the bank was closed in 1914 he assumed the responsibility of looking after the interests of two business concerns, the Tuolumme Copper Mining Company and as manager of the State Savings and Realty Company.

In March, 1915, Mr. Perham entered the automobile business. At first he owned an interest in the Barry Motor Company and later bought out the other stockholders and reorganized as the Montana Cadillac Company, of which he is now sole proprietor. This company has the state agency for the Cadillac cars, and under Mr. Perham are sub-dealers in Montana. Fifteen men are in the service of his personal organization at Butte. The offices and garage and service station are at 22-26 East Quartz Street, while the salesrooms are at the corner of Granite and Alaska streets. In recent years Mr. Perham has turned over an immense volume of business in Montana to the Cadillac Company.

In politics he is a democrat, and is a member of Mount Moriah Lodge No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Oswego Lodge No. 9, Knights of Pythias. He is very prominent in the Knights of Pythias order, being past chancellor commander of his lodge, past grand chancellor of the State of Montana, and for the past twelve years has been grand master of the exchequer. Other interests and avocations are indicated by his membership in the Rotary Club, the Silver Bow Club, the Country Club of Butte, the Butte Curling Club, Butte Advertising Club, Rocky Mountain Rifle Club, Butte Rod and Gun Club and the Young Men's Christian Association.

Mr. Perham owns a modern home at 1009 West Platinum Street. August 29, 1907, at Butte, Mr. Perham married Miss Anna Louise Dee, daughter of Thomas and Mary Dee. Her mother resides at Butte and her father, deceased, was one of the early blacksmiths in this city. Mr. and Mrs. Perham have three children: Margaret, Elizabeth and Ruth.

JOHN EDWARD FOLEY. The development of the oil interests of the country forms one of the most important chapters in its industrial history. Associated with this remarkable expansion are the names of those men who have assisted in bringing about present day conditions, and one of them is that borne by John Edward Foley, division manager of the Continental Oil Company of Great Falls, Montana, who makes his headquarters at Butte. Mr. Foley was born at Ottawa, Illinois, on April 25, 1878, a son of James Foley, and grandson of John Foley, the latter having been born in Ireland in 1796. John Foley founded the family in the United States, coming to this country in young manhood and locating at Ottawa, Illinois, during its pioneer period, and assisting in bringing it out of that condition and into one of settled business interests. After arriving at Ottawa, the alert young Irishman was married to one of the native daughters of Ireland, Mary Lynch, who had also settled in that village.

James Foley was born at Ottawa, Illinois, in 1852, and is still a resident of his native city, where he was reared, educated and married, and where he was engaged in blacksmithing until his retirement. He is a democrat in politics and a Roman Catholic in his religious convictions. James Foley was married to Elizabeth Kendrick, born at Ottawa, Illinois, in 1855, and they became the parents of the following children: John Edward, who is the eldest; Dennis J., who died at Leadville, Colorado, in 1904, was connected with the Continental Oil Company; W. H., who lives at Salt Lake City, Utah, is associated with the Continental Oil Company; James J., who lives at Albuquerque, New Mexico, is also associated with the Continental Oil Company; and Clara Elizabeth, who married R. I. Wills, lives at Ottawa, Illinois, her husband being associated with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.

John Edward Foley was educated in the public schools of Ottawa, Illinois, being graduated from its high school course in June, 1896, following which he went to Denver, Colorado, for a few months, and thence to Grand Junction, Colorado, where he began to work for the Continental Oil Company as one of its agents, and so continued until October, 1897, when he left for Leadville, Colorado, to assume the responsibility of utility clerk for the same company. So capable did he prove himself that further confidence was shown in him by his promotion to be special agent, and he held that position until May, 1904. At that time he was made a traveling salesman for the company, covering Eastern Montana, with headquarters at Butte, and this continued to be his work until in October, 1907, when he was called to Denver, Colorado, to become chief clerk for the company. In September, 1913, Mr. Foley was returned to Butte as assistant division manager. He received his final promotion on January 1, 1920, when he was made division manager of all the northern section of Montana. His rise has been remarkable, and entirely through his own merits. From the start he displayed such a grasp of the business, such capability for handling details that his superiors advanced him from one position to another until he has now reached the top of his division. Mr. Foley is not a man easily deceived in men or their motives, and one of his qualifications for his continued promotion has been his ability to handle his men. His knowledge of the oil business, and particularly the field covered by the Continental Oil Company, is thorough, and gained through personal experience, so that his judgments are authoritative and so recognized.

In his political views Mr. Foley is a democrat, but he has not had the time to do more than exercise his right of suffrage. The Roman Catholic Church holds his membership, and he belongs to Butte Council No. 668, Knights of Columbus, of which he is a Fourth Degree Knight; and Leadville Lodge No. 236, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

The offices of the Butte plant of the Continental Oil Company are located at No. 1321 Kaw Avenue, and those of the Great Falls plant are on Eighth Avenue, South, Butte.

In April, 1910, Mr. Foley was married at Ottawa, Illinois, to Florence Sinon, a daughter of W. J. and Julia (Bossenin) Sinon, both of whom are living and reside at Ottawa, Mr. Sinon being a retired merchant. Mrs. Foley was graduated from the Ottawa High School. There are no children in the Foley family. Mr. Foley has had the brain and initiative to rise, and has always been a sound, conscientious and honorable man in every position which he has occupied, and always felt that the experience he gained in one was a great advantage to him in discharging the duties of the one next farther up. In dealing with other men Mr. Foley has always claimed that the question of character is more essential than that of talent, and that unless he is certain that a man is at heart one who has the staying power, he would rather not take the trouble to advance him, no matter how brilliant he might appear. Stability, steadfastness, uprightness in the smallest detail, and an untiring industry are some of the characteristics which have raised Mr. Foley from obscure agent to division manager for one of the big oil corporations of the country, and they are ones every man ought to cultivate, even if some appear to be lacking in his nature, if he desires to advance beyond the everyday routine and become a worth-while man in his line of business.

ADOLPH H. HEILBRONNER. The functions of the dealer in real estate are varied and he has many responsibilities resting upon him. If he lives up to the highest conceptions of his calling he will endeavor at all times to foster a local pride so as to awaken an interest on the part of the citizens in their community, and make them realize that they are part and parcel of it, thus starting them on the right road. When he has accomplished this the public-spirited realty operator stretches out for wider fields and endeavors to attract to his city new blood and capital, so that, in a measure, he develops the policies of his community, popularizes it and directs the investment of its revenues and management of many of its affairs, and much of this is accomplished through individual effort that is never relaxed. In Butte the part played by the real estate men is of so important a character that they command respect and admiration, and one of the men who has gained a strong position here is Adolph H. Heilbronner, known to his friends as "Dolph."

Adolph H. Heilbronner was born at Salt Lake City, Utah, on July 6, 1880, a son of Henry Heilbronner, a native of Bavaria, Germany, who died at Butte, Montana, in 1882. He came to the United States in young manhood and lived in various western states coming to Butte in the spring of 1882, and in all of the places in which he lived he carried on merchandising. He had just succeeded in opening a crockery and furniture establishment when his death occurred. Like all young men of his native land, he served the stipulated time in the Bavarian army. After coming to the United States he took out his citizenship papers and supported the candidates of the republican party. In religious faith he was a Hebrew. For many years he belonged to the Masonic fraternity. Henry Heilbronner was married at Portland, Oregon, to Henrietta Steinhauser, born on May 1, 1838, in Bavaria, Germany. She survives him and makes her home at Butte. Their children were as follows: Theressa, who married I. N. Symons, a member of the Symons Dry Goods Company of Butte; Max, who is a jeweler of Prince Rupert, British Columbia, Canada; I. A., who is a broker of Butte; J. H., who is a partner of Adolph H.; Adolph H., whose name heads this review.

Growing up at Butte, Adolph H. Heilbronner attended its schools, and was graduated from the high school course in 1899. His first business experience was gained with the Butte Electric Railway Company, which he served as press agent for the advertising department, and although not much more than a boy displayed what was almost genius in his handling of the affairs placed in his hands. He was one of the prime movers in having Butte's magnificent playground, Columbia Gardens, established and developed. His success in this line encouraged him to branch out for himself and in 1910 he left his company and established himself in the Daly Bank Building as general agent for the Salt Lake Route, one of Senator Clark's railroads, and held that position until the road was taken over by the Government in 1918.

In the meanwhile, Mr. Heilbronner, together with his brother, J. H. Heilbronner, had established and built up a large business in real estate and insurance. Mr. Heilbronner is manager of the Butte Electric Car Advertising Company; has been the representative of the Yellowstone Trail, and it is largely through his efforts that this trail has been preserved through Butte; he has for years been a consistent "good roads" booster, and inaugurated and operated the first tourist cars in Silver Bow County. These cars are specially designed to boost Butte and the surrounding territory, and through their operation Mr. Heilbronner has rendered this region a great service, for by means of them visitors to the city are enabled to gain some idea of the advantages of the locality as they could in no other way, and many are so impressed that they later invest in homes or business ventures and become valuable adjuncts to Butte. Mr. Heilbronner is a member of the Rotary Club, was its first president and helped to organize the club and is still one of its aggressive members. He also belongs to Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and the Silver Bow Club, and the Butte Ad Club of the Good Roads Organization. His modern residence at the corner of Quartz Street and Excelsior Avenue is his property, and he is interested in mining. During the great war Mr. Heilbronner took a very active part in all of the war work, and as president of the Butte Ad Club took charge of all of the advertising for the various drives, generally serving as chairman of the several committees. Needless to say, all of the quotas were oversubscribed in each of the drives.

On October 21, 1907, Mr. Heilbronner was married at Portland, Oregon, to Miss Fay Lavenson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. Lavenson of that city. Mr. Lavenson was a pioneer of California and Oregon, and for many years was a merchant of Portland, but is now retired. Prior to her marriage Mrs. Heilbronner was a public school teacher of Portland. Mr. and Mrs. Heilbronner have three children, namely: Keith, who was born on January 23, 1910; Julian, who was born October 27, 1912; and Carol, who was born November 27, 1918.

Mr. Heilbronner has risen through his talents and efforts to the position in his community to which he is entitled because of his constructive achievements. He possesses in marked degree the characteristics of stability, power of concentration, personality, general ability and a working knowledge of human nature which enable him to attain in full measure the popular heart and confidence, and in all of his undertakings reaches the understanding of the public directly and surely. In his business he displays tact, courtesy, intelligence and sound judgment, while as a citizen he shows in every action that he possesses that broader sense of responsibility which urges him constantly to forward new measures for the improvement and expansion of Butte and Silver Bow County, and he is universally recognized as a useful and valued representative of the best interests of this region.

WILLIAM H. TAYLOR. Now living retired at Great Falls, William H. Taylor was on the ground when this now thriving city was a mere village, and for a quarter of a century had an active career as a rancher, miner, stock raiser and contractor.

Mr. Taylor, who before coming to Montana was a veteran English soldier, was born in Lancashire, England, March 22, 1860, a son of William and Ellen (Ellison) Taylor. His father was a farmer and died in England in 1866, at the age of thirty-seven. He was a member of the Church of England. Of his five children two died in infancy. His widow came to Montana in 1878, and was one of the early women to domicile in this territory. She came up the Missouri River as far as Fort Benton. For several years she was employed at Fort Benton while the Eighteenth United States Regulars were stationed there. In 1884 she moved to the present site of Great Falls and built one of the first homes in the town, on Second Avenue, South, and Third Street. Here she lived the rest of her life with her daughter, Mrs. Martha Jane Wright, and died in 1912, at the age of eighty.

William H. Taylor secured his early education in the schools of England and at the age of sixteen, on July 26, 1876, joined the British army in the Two Hundred and Seventy-third Manchester Regiment. He was in service for eight years, being honorably discharged on December 5, 1884. He saw a great deal of service in the British Empire and participated in the bloody Egyptian campaign in 1882.

Mr. Taylor came to Great Falls, Montana, in 1887, and for some months was employed by the Sand Coulee Mining Company. In the spring of 1888 he went on a ranch for himself in Meagher County, but subsequently sold his preemption there. In 1891 he homesteaded and engaged in cattle raising until July, 1903. He then returned to Great Falls and became a contractor for city sewer construction. In 1908 he and B. P. McNair bought the S. H. Ranch and Mr. Taylor had the active management of this property until December, 1913, when he sold his interests and retired.

He is affiliated with Cascade Lodge No. 34, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Great Falls Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Black Eagle Commandery No. 9 of the Knights Templar, and in politics is a republican.

March 4, 1885, at Standish, England, he married Miss Ellen Simm, a native of Lancashire, England, and daughter of John and Mary (Pennington) Simm.

JOHN VALENTINE CARROLL, for many years a practicing physician and Government surgeon at Fort Benton, now a resident of Great Falls, owns some of the largest stock and ranching interests in Northern Montana. He is one of the principal owners and managers of the Benton Sheep Company and the Northwestern Livestock Company, which, together own about twenty-five thousand acres of land in Chouteau County. These companies have operated on an extensive scale the sheep and cattle industry for over a quarter of a century.

Doctor Carroll is an interesting example of the man of contemplative thought, of scholarly tastes, who has made a big success in practical business. As a young man he was attracted to the Northwestern frontier, and the fascination exercised by the country is still strong and he is one of Montana's real enthusiasts.

He was born at New York City February 14, 1854, son of James and Mary B. (Welsh) Carroll. His parents were born in Ireland and were married in New York in 1853. His father came to this country in 1846 and followed the trade of merchant tailor. He died in 1888, and his wife died in the same year. James Carroll was at one time an officer in the old Ninth New York Militia, which later became the Sixty-ninth. Its membership was almost entirely Irish, and during the visit of the Prince of Wales to this country the entire regiment was placed under arrest for refusing to parade in the Prince's honor.

John Valentine Carroll, who was the only one of five children to survive infancy, was educated in the public schools of New York, spent one year in Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, a year at St. Francis Xavier University in New York, and in 1879, before completing his studies in the medical department of the University of New York, came to Montana. Though not qualified by degree for the practice of medicine, there was a great need for men of medical training in the new country, and by special permission of the secretary of war he found his time and energies thoroughly taken up by professional duties. In 1886 he returned East and received his degree in medicine from the University of New York, and during the following year was a member of the staff of the Asylum for the Insane.

Doctor Carroll then returned to Fort Assinniboine, where he had spent his earlier years in Montana, and on July 19, 1888, was appointed surgeon at Fort Belknap. He continued his work as a Government physician until September 24, 1895. Then, following a year of post-graduate work at the University of Michigan, he located at Fort Benton, and carried on a large private practice until 1908.

The community of Fort Benton owes much to the enterprise and enlightened judgment of Doctor Carroll. He was a willing worker and frequently a leader in any movement directed to the attainment of some important community project. One instance was the building of an opera house greatly needed by the town, and he served as president of the company. For a number of years he was identified with the Board of School Trustees, and as a man of university training succeeded in influencing much of the work of the board in the direction of better schools and improved standards. He also served as chairman of the Board of County Commissioners. Besides the business connections above noted Doctor Carroll was president of the Benton Electric Light Company, was vice president of the Stockmens National Bank, and a member of the firm of Mee & Carroll, cattle ranchers.

At Fort Assinniboine, September 22, 1882, three years after he came to the territory, Doctor Carroll married Miss Martha Simpson, of St. Paul. Her father was a mining engineer. Four children have been born to their marriage. John V., Jr., born at Fort Assinniboine, May 2, 1884, completed his education in the Virginia Military Institute, the West Point of the South, receiving his diploma with the class of 1904. In 1913 Governor Stewart appointed him commissary general of Montana, with the rank of major, after he had served two years as first lieutenant of Company M of the Montana Second Regiment of National Guard. The only daughter, Grace Mary Virginia Carroll, born at Fort Belknap February 2, 1890, is the wife of Charles W. Houck, of Great Falls. Charles Simpson Carroll, born June 7, 1895, at Fort Belknap, was educated in the Fort Benton High School, the U. S. Naval Academy, Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie, New York, and served with the rank of second lieutenant in the Quartermaster's Corps during the World war. James Martin Carroll, the youngest, was born at Fort Benton June 27, 1899, and has about completed his work in the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis.

WASHINGTON J. MCCORMICK, who came to Montana in 1863, and was one of the founders and builders of the City of Missoula, died in 1889, but the memory of his character and achievements is still vital in the history of his home city. In recent years his son Washington J. McCormick has proved a worthy possessor of the honored name, being one of the able and brilliant young lawyers of the state.

The late Washington J. McCormick was born near Muncie in Delaware County, Indiana, in 1835. His grandfather, John McCormick, was a native of Virginia and a soldier of the Revolution. Other branches of the family in America included that to which McCormick of Harvester fame belongs, and James C. Blaine was also a descendant of a McCormick. Rev. William McCormick, father of W. J. McCormick, was a native of Virginia and a soldier of the War of 1812, a Baptist minister, and for many years followed his profession in Indiana, and was also honored with judicial office in that state.

Washington J. McCormick was a graduate of old Asbury, now DePauw University, at Greencastle, Indiana, and was admitted to the bar in 1856, at the age of twenty-one. He at once identified himself with the great West, coming to Utah in 1857, and rose to distinction in the law and politics in that territory. He served as acting secretary of state, attorney general and chief justice of the Supreme Court of Utah. On coming to Montana in 1863, he lived in Virginia City and practiced law two years and was secretary of the first democratic convention of the territory. He was one of the first lawyers to be admitted to the bar in Montana. In 1864 he was chosen a member of the Territorial Legislature, and in 1865 moved to Deer Lodge and was elected to the Legislature from that county. From 1866 to 1868 he was superintendent of the Flathead Indian Agency, and in the latter year came to the present site of Missoula. Here he became associated with Captain Higgins and Hon. F. L. Worden in developing and planning those activities which constituted the groundwork of the new city. He was the founder and first editor of the Missoula Gazette, and was also extensively interested in milling and stock raising. At four different times he represented Missoula County in the Legislature.

The late W. J. McCormick was distinguished not only for the services indicated above, but a broad versatility of talents and public spirit made him an invaluable ally in every undertaking in his community. He was a gifted lawyer, wielded a great influence in politics, had fine literary tastes, and he needed no impetus of personal reward to work for benefits that would be distributed among the people at large. He was one of the local citizens of Missoula who did most to secure the building of the Northern Pacific Railroad through the town. Though not a Catholic, he gave the grounds in Missoula where the church, school and hospital stand.

His death was due to injury received in a wind storm at Fort Owen. He had bought the property from Major John Owen in 1870. Fort Owen was the oldest fortification in Montana. Mr. McCormick died February 3, 1889.

In 1869 he married Miss Kate Higgins, daughter of Christopher P. and Edith (O'Byrne) Higgins and sister of the late Capt. C. P. Higgins of Missoula, an associate of Mr. McCormick in some of the pioneer enterprises of Missoula. The seven children of Mr. and Mrs. McCormick were all born at Missoula. Mary Edith O'Byrne, William Worden, John Francis Higgins, Blanche Ada Louise, Veronica Honore Hester, Paul Christopher and Washington J., Jr.

Washington J. McCormick, Jr., was born at Missoula, January 4, 1884, and was only five years of age when his honored father died. He was given every advantage of good home, environment and scholastic training. He attended the public schools of Missoula, the University of Montana, Notre Dame University in Indiana, and graduated from Harvard University in 1907. He received his law degree from Columbia University in 1910, was admitted to the New York bar and began practice at Missoula the same year. In ten years he has more than justified the confidence of his friends and admirers, and has gained a high and influential place in the Montana bar. Mr. McCormick, Jr., was elected to the Legislature in the Sixteenth Legislative Assembly from Missoula County. Politically he is a republican, and has been active in a number of local campaigns.

In 1915 he married Miss Edna T. Fox, of Twin Bridges, Montana, a daughter of John F. Fox of that place. They have two children, Washington J. and Angela Patricia. He is a member of Hell Gate Lodge No. 383, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and of the Fraternal Order of Eagles.

Stephen A. Schmitz. Having spent his life as a patternmaker, Stephen A. Schmitz is an expert in his line and fully qualified to discharge the duties of his present position, that of superintendent of the pattern department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company's foundry. He was born at Bloomington, Illinois, October 10, 1867, a son of John Schmitz. The birth of John Schmitz occurred in Germany in 1831, and his death at Bloomington, Illinois, in 1904. Between nineteen and twenty he come to the United States because of the obligatory military service exacted in his native land, and reached Chicago, Illinois, in 1850, where he lived for a time and was married. By trade he was a cabinetmaker, and seeing a suitable opening he went to Bloomington, that state, where he worked at his calling and also engaged in the furniture and undertaking business, being a pioneer business man there. He was a democrat in his political convictions and voted the ticket of that party after securing his citizenship papers. His wife was Mary Metzger before marriage, and she was born in Germany in 1836, and died at Bloomington, Illinois, in 1880. Their children were as follows: Peter, who is a pattern maker living at Hastings, Nebraska; Helen, who married Henry Krieger, a retired merchant, lives at Bloomington, Illinois; Elizabeth, who married a Mr. Flinchback, is deceased, having passed away at Bloomington, Illinois; Anna, who is deceased, married James McGrath, who after his wife's demise left Bloomington, Illinois, and went to California, where he is still living; Angela, who died at Bloomington, Illinois, in 1881, aged nine years; and Stephen A.

Attending school until 1880, Stephen A. Schmitz began working in September of that year, and was employed in general lines of labor until he went to Florence, Wisconsin, in 1882 and began his apprenticeship at pattern making and followed this trade as a journeyman at Marinette, Wisconsin. In 1890 he came west to Anaconda, Montana, as a pattern maker for the Tuttle Manufacturing & Supply Company, which later was merged with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company as its foundry department. The plant shut down in 1891 and Mr. Schmitz went to Duluth, Minnesota, and later to Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and subsequently worked at his trade at different points in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Michigan. In 1899 he returned to Anaconda and resumed work as a pattern maker in the foundry department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, rising through the position of foreman to be superintendent of his department, and has continued as such since June 1, 1906, having under him fifteen men. His office is in the pattern shop of the foundry department on the corner of Adams and Sixth streets, Anaconda.

In politics he is a republican. He belongs to Anaconda Lodge No. 239, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and Anaconda Homestead No. 312, B. A. Y. Mr. Schmitz owns his residence at No. 603 Main Street.

In July, 1899, Mr. Schmitz was married to Miss Gussie Murafska, born at Watertown, Wisconsin, the ceremony being performed at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Schmitz have the following children: Walter, who was graduated from the Anaconda High School, lives at Anaconda and is with the Washoe Reduction Works of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company; Gilbert, who is attending the Anaconda High School; and Edgar, who is also attending the same high school. The second child, Lawrence, died when about eighteen months old.

Mr. Schmitz is one of the experienced men in his line and has proven the advisability of confining oneself to one particular calling instead of wasting effort in acquiring a partial knowledge of many. Having located permanently at Anaconda he naturally is interested in its growth, and gives to the city a wholesome and intelligent attention without entering into public life.

Howard E. Matson. A man of energetic nature, sound judgment and excellent business qualifications, Howard E. Matson, secretary and treasurer of the Butte Battery Company, is meeting with acknowledged success in his undertakings, and through a diligent use of his faculties and opportunities has proved himself a useful and worthy citizen. A son of the late F. F. Matson, he was born in Beardstown, Illinois, August 2, 1885, and there acquired his preliminary education.

Born in New Jersey in 1858, F. F. Matson followed the tide of immigration westward when a young man, settling in Beardstown, Illinois, in pioneer days. Buying a tract of land that was still in its virgin wildness, he cleared and improved a farm, on which he lived and labored until his death in 1893. He was a democrat in politics, and a much respected citizen. He married Elizabeth Nickel, who was born in 1859, and is now residing in Butte, her home being at 1015 West Porphyry Street. Three children were born of their union, as follows: Howard E., the special subject of this sketch; Finis F.; and Edna, who was educated in the schools of Beardstown, Illinois, and is now the wife of William Roberts, a salesman for the Spokane Company, with home at 1015 Porphyry Street, Butte, Montana.

Finis F. Matson was born in Beardstown, Illinois, in December, 1888, and was there educated.

An electrician by occupation, he came to Butte in April, 1907, and for a time worked for the Montana Power Company. In February, 1917, he established the Exide Service Station, and met with such marked success in its management that in May, 1919, he had the business incorporated as the Butte Battery Company, with plant and offices at 207 South Montana Street. It is one of the leading firms of its kind in Western Montana, and its officers, all men of recognized ability, are Finis F. Matson, president; Thomas Davis, vice president; and Howard E. Matson, secretary and treasurer. An independent democrat in politics, Finis F. Matson was candidate for clerk and recorder of Silver Bow County, and made a good run at the polls. Religiously he is affiliated with the Baptist Church. To him and his wife, whose maiden name was Lulu Atkins, two children have been born, Alice and Helen.

Leaving school at the age of fifteen years, Howard E. Matson worked on a farm near Chandlerville, Illinois, for three years, when his widowed mother, who had been living in that vicinity, moved back to Beardstown, where he remained for awhile. Going then to Quincy, Illinois, he attended the Gem City Business College, and for four years worked for the State Savings and Loan Company, obtaining valuable business knowledge and experience. Coming from there to Butte, Montana, in April, 1907, Mr. Matson was employed in the bank of W. A. Clark & Brother until August, 1918, starting as a clerk and being promoted to receiving teller. In the meantime he became associated with his brother Finis F. Matson, financially assisting in the establishment of the substantial business now carried on by the Butte Battery Company, in which he owns a half interest.

Mr. Matson married, June 18, 1907, Miss Ida C. Adam, a daughter of William and Joanna Adam, her father being a merchant in Quincy, Illinois, where the death of her mother occurred. Mr. and Mrs. Matson reside at the Mueller Apartments. Politically Mr. Matson is a republican, and fraternally is a member of Butte Lodge No. 22, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons.

A. T. PURDY. Coming to Montana when a boy, A. T. Purdy has lived his active life in the territory and state, and has found here both adventure and achievement. Mr. Purdy for a number of years past has been widely known as owner of the noted fruit farm, the Twin Orchards Ranch, in Lincoln County, near Eureka.

Mr. Purdy was born in Jackson, Michigan, in 1866, fourth among the eleven children of Henry and Mary (Keeler) Purdy. He spent his boyhood days in Michigan, but at the age of fifteen came alone to Butte, Montana, and was soon working in the mines.

Mr. Purdy married Terecia LeBeau, who was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, a daughter of Alexander and Ida (Towsley) LeBeau, her father being of French ancestry and her mother of German. She was one of a family of nine children, being the oldest. She was six years of age when her parents came out to Butte, but she grew up in their home at Kalispell. Mr. and Mrs. Purdy were married at the LeBeau ranch, a mile north of Kalispell.

They then moved to Foy's Lake, where Mr. Purdy was engaged in the timber business. Subsequently at Tobacco Plains he homesteaded 160 acres a mile southwest of Glen Lake, and remained in that community eight years. During these experiences Mr. and Mrs. Purdy had all the trials and hardships of pioneering. Mrs. Purdy frequently lived alone with her children while her husband was absent on his duties as road supervisor. Five children were born into their home: Frances, Lynn, Gordon, Alexander and Thomas. They were well educated in the public schools. Frances is the wife of Jerome Filiatreau, a rancher near Eureka, and is the mother of three daughters, June, Edith and Joyce. Lynn married Miss Jessie Crowley and has a son, Donald. Gordon, who is employed in the St. Paul Lumber Mill at Tacoma, Washington, married Inez Doble. Alexander and Thomas are still at home and students in the district schools.

Mrs. Purdy's mother, who died in 1896, at Kalispell, was a devout Christian of the Adventist faith, and was greatly beloved by her own people and many friends. Mrs. Purdy's father came to the Purdy home for a two weeks' visit, and has so enjoyed the environment that he has remained two years with them.

Mr. and Mrs. Purdy are republicans in politics. Mrs. Purdy while growing up became an expert in assisting her father on the ranch and has been a fearless rider. She still keeps at the ranch her faithful old dog Collie, which has shown almost human intelligence. Mr. Purdy has served as school trustee, ditch director, and in other offices connected with the public welfare.

For a number of years the Purdys owned and operated the Meadow Home Dairy at Eureka, and on selling that bought 200 acres at the foot of the beautiful Rocky Range near Independent Mountain. This ranch contains two large orchards, thus giving the name Twin Orchards to the ranch. This is one of the largest fruit farms in Lincoln County, and thousands of boxes of apples are marketed every season. The Purdy home has always been noted for its hospitality, and friends and acquaintances alike have learned to esteem the beauty of the surroundings and the welcome of entertainment. Mr. Purdy is the type of citizen whose influence is always for the good of the community. He is a man of convictions and ready to act on them. A few years ago, as a typical instance, he learned that a local character, who had claimed to have been a rough rider, had cruelly shot his horse in the flank, and threatened the life of his young companion if he betrayed this act of cruelty. Mr. Purdy on learning of it visited Huff and said he would give him just two hours to go back on the road and put the horse out of suffering and return and report. He permitted the bully no excuse or delay, and he remained to see his orders faithfully executed.

C. F. RICHARDON, vice president and manager of the farm loans department of the Citizens State Bank of Roundup, which he helped to organize and of which he was cashier for several years, is one of the most prominent men and public-spirited citizens of this region. He was born at Dexter, Michigan, July 14, 1872, a son of Jacob and Rose (Wildner) Richardon, both natives of Germany. The father died on July 27, 1916, aged seventy-five years, as he was born May 4, 1841. His wife, who was born July 2, 1848, died on March 2, 1902. They were married at Stuttgart, Germany, and became the parents of seven children, of whom three now survive. Four of their children were born in Germany, and the remaining three in Michigan, C. F. Richardon being the sixth in order of birth.

Jacob Richardon served an apprenticeship in a jewelry factory, but having a distaste for the trade he went into business with a Mr. Siegle who was the discoverer of the formula of carmine red, and they began manufacturing this product, and while connected with this concern he met his wife, who was one of its employes. After coming to the United States and locating in Michigan Mr. Richardon was engaged in farming until his retirement, which took place after the death of his wife in 1902, after which he went to North Dakota and visited his children. A year later he returned to Michigan and was married to Mrs. Fredica Benze, and about 1905 they went to Pasadena, California, where he died. From the time he secured his naturalization papers he was a republican.

C. F. Richardon attended the rural schools of his native county and the Dexter High School, from which he was graduated in the class of 1897, and in the fall of that year he came as far west as Chaffee, North Dakota, where he spent two years teaching school. He then embarked in a general merchandise business at Chaffee, and conducted it until the fall of 1902, when he sold. In 1903 he assisted in organizing the Chaffee State Bank, and served it as cashier for four years, when he helped to organize the Farmers Security Bank of Chaffee, which absorbed the state bank, and he was its cashier until the fall of 1908. At that time he came to Roundup and organized the Citizens State Bank of this city, and was its cashier until the spring of 1915, when he resigned to take charge of the farm loans department, and become its vice president. Mr. Richardon owns a fine ranch and is quite an extensive wheat grower. He was also instrumental in the organization of the Musselshell County Abstract Company, of which he is president, and he is manager, secretary and treasurer of the Citizens Loan and Insurance Company. For one term he served as city treasurer of Roundup. In politics a republican, he is very active in his party, and was chairman of the County Central Committee of his party until 1918, when he was made a member of the State Central Committee. During the great war he was chairman of the Young Men's Christian Association committee and took an active part in all of the movements of that organization, as well as all of the other drives for war work purposes. At present he is chairman of the Roosevelt Memorial drive. For two years he has been on the school board of Roundup. The Methodist Episcopal Church holds his membership, and he is as energetic in it as he is in other organizations.

On December 29, 1899, Mr. Richardon was united in marriage with Alice E. Oertli, born in Wisconsin, a daughter of Conrad and Louise (Linse) Oertli, the former born in Switzerland and the latter in Saxony, Germany. Of their three children, Mrs. Richardon is the eldest. Mr. and Mrs. Oertli are now living at Yakima, Washington. Gladys Merle, the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Richardon, is one of the bright students of the Roundup public schools. The organizing ability Mr. Richardon has displayed has brought into being several first-class concerns, and he has never lost his interest in them, nor have they in him, but his advice is sought and followed upon many occasions, for his executive capabilities are fully as great. As a citizen he measures up to the highest standards of usefulness, and Roundup has benefited from his location in its midst and his efforts in its behalf.

DANIEL A. G. FLOWERREE. As a Montana pioneer the late Daniel A. G. Flowerree had some share and experience in the mining activities which was the primary attraction of the territory. His most interesting distinction rests upon the foresight and enterprise that led him, probably first among the original settlers, to devote his resources to ranching and stock raising. At one time he was the largest individual producer of livestock in the state. He was a sterling business man, highly successful, and through his power and integrity was a stay to other business in time of storm and stress.

He was born in Ralls County, Missouri, May 19, 1835, son of Kemp and Matilda (Caldwell) Flowerree. His grandfather, Walter Flowerree, was a Virginia planter, moved from there to Kentucky, and in 1822 settled in Missouri. Walter Flowerree married a member of the distinguished Breckenridge family of Kentucky. Kemp Flowerree lived in Missouri from 1833 until his death in 1881, and his widow survived him until 1887.

Daniel A. G. Flowerree grew up in Missouri, but the far west, with its romance and adventure, soon took him away from home ties. In 1852, at the age of seventeen, he went to California, and in 1855 went to the southern country of Nicaragua with the Walker Expedition. From 1857 to 1864 he lived quietly in Missouri.

Mr. Flowerree came to Montana in 1864, just about a year after the first mining prospectors had located in the gulches and valleys. He traveled by the Salt Lake City route and arrived at Virginia City in 1864. Late in 1865 he moved to Last Chance Gulch at Helena, and in that year introduced to Montana a herd of cattle brought from Missouri. Doubtless there were others among the pioneers who recognized the availability of Montana as a cattle growing section, but probably none of them put their faith into execution and carried out plans to larger proportions than did the late Mr. Flowerree. During the '70s he introduced many hundreds of cattle, brought up over the old cattle trails from Texas, and also brought in horses and cattle from Oregon. In time his herds covered a vast domain of leased and patented lands in Lewis and Clark, Teton, Cascade and other counties, and to the end of his life he owned immense holdings in those sections. It is said that Mr. Flowerree built the first shingled roof houses in Helena and Virginia City, the one in Virginia City being the first two-story house erected in Montana.

His business initiative never left him. Late in life, after he had begun spending his winters in Florida, he recognized the possibilities of the grape fruit and orange industry of that state, and near Fort Meyer developed one of the most productive and valuable grapefruit plantations in Florida.

Mr. Flowerree was possessed of extensive capital resources and became a recognized power in Montana finance. Business always meant to him something more than an opportunity for personal advantage and profit. He recognized his duty as a steward of wealth. During the panic of 1893 he borrowed on his personal note $400,000 from a Chicago commission house and turned it over to a Helena bank which was threatened with bankruptcy, saving it from failure and doing much to bolster up the financial credit of the entire state.

Mr. Flowerree died at Atlanta, Georgia, November 22, 1912, at the age of seventy-seven. His funeral was held in Helena under the auspices of the Lewis and Clark Society of Montana Pioneers. From a well deserved tribute paid him by one of the speakers of the occasion is appropriately selected the following paragraph:

"Much of the best in many people whom I have known is not proclaimed upon the house tops. It is quiet, unobtrusive and silent; yet there is good there, there is kindness and health and sympathy and love. Like the coming of the day upon the grass and flowers, or the approach of the morning sun to the golden doors of the East, not a footfall is heard, not a trumpet sound, not a saluting gun is fired; yet they come, and because they come some barren place is revived, some drooping flower lifts its head, some discouraged soul looks up and takes courage. Like so many of these earlier men of Montana who saw the rougher side of life and endured the hardships incident to formative days of social evolution, Mr. Flowerree was big-hearted and generous; keen and prudent in business which grew in dimensions, he was open-handed and unselfish. Many an old friend and acquaintance, down on his luck, knew where he could turn for help, and indeed many could testify that they did not need to ask, as it was enough that they were in need to find his helping hand ready. As a father, husband and friend he was loved. As a citizen he was esteemed. He did what he could as he knew it, as life appeared to him, as the unselfish spirit led him in the way of sympathetic helpfulness to express the best within him."

Mr. Flowerree married Miss Elizabeth Wethers, of Missouri. She died in 1882, the mother of four children, William K.; Annie M., who became the wife of W. L. Velie, of Moline, Illinois; Eudors, who was married to J. J. Gray, of Chicago, and Elizabeth, wife of William Wallace, Jr., of Helena. February 4, 1885, Mr. Flowerree married Miss Elizabeth F. Cornelius, and they had one son, Daniel A. G., Jr.

William Kemp Flowerree, banker, business man and rancher of Great Falls, grew up from early childhood in Montana, and for many years was actively associated with the extensive ranching and other business enterprises of his father, the late Daniel A. G. Flowerree, whose career as a Montana pioneer has been elsewhere sketched.

William Kemp Flowerree was born at Huntsville, in Randolph County, Missouri, June 30, 1861, and came to Montana with his parents in 1865. He can hardly remember a time when he could not ride a horse. At the age of eight he spent a summer riding the range for his father and was given in pay two heifer calves. The commercial instinct manifested itself in him as a boy. At Helena, where the family lived, he would gather up bottles and sell them, whiskey bottles bringing seventy-five cents apiece, other bottles a dollar and a half a dozen, and tin cans, especially old oil cans, twenty-five cents apiece. There was a scarcity of tin in the state at that time, and the tin recovered from cans and other containers was used for roofing purposes. Another early employment was driving a mule through a long day from seven in the morning until six at night, at a salary of 50 cents per day. Mr. Flowerree was sent back to Missouri to complete his high school education, and he also attended the Kempers Military School at Booneville.

As an associate with his father in the cattle and horse business he served as vice president of the F. D. Company. In 1880 he was one of a party of ten men who took 1200 head of cattle across the country to Cheyenne, Wyoming. On the way they were halted by Sitting Bull and his 600 Indians, and remained a day and a half in parley before the white men and their cattle were allowed to proceed. Cheyenne was then the nearest shipping point, and from there the cattle were sent to the Chicago markets. Mr. Flowerree was vice president of the Flowerree Stock Company until his father's death, and then succeeded as president of the company, one of the largest concerns of the kind in Montana.

Mr. Flowerree became associated in the organization of the American Bank & Trust Company at Great Falls in 1915 and is vice president of that institution. He served two terms as a member of the State Senate, representing Teton County, and is affiliated with Helena Lodge No. 193 of the Elks.

March 2, 1889, he married Norma Kinna, who was born at Helena, daughter of John and Jennett Kinna. Her father was a Montana pioneer, and Mrs. Flowerree was the second among six children, three of whom are still living. Mr. and Mrs. Flowerree have two children, William Kemp, Jr., and Norma.

The son earned distinction as a soldier in the World war. He was educated in the Kents Hill College in Maine, in the University of California at Berkeley, and also attended a school of commerce and banking at New York City. April 23, 1917, he enrolled in the First Officers Training School at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, received a first lieutenant's commission in cavalry, and was sent to Camp Grant at Rockford, Illinois, and became a member of Company B of the Three Hundred and Thirty-third Machine Gun Battalion. He went overseas in October, 1918, and was in active service in France up to January 3, 1919, when he received his honorable discharge at Camp Grant, Illinois.

Frank P. Baird. The educator of today has to meet and overcome many obstacles of which those of an older day knew nothing. The enlarging of the curriculum of the public schools, with the demand for the practice of pedagogy, necessitates a long and careful training and constant subsequent study and reading on the part of those to whom is entrusted the training of the plastic mind of youth. Popular demand has resulted in the development of a class of men who have no equal in the history of the world as educators. Their knowledge of their work and public affairs is extensive and profound, while at the same time their judgment is sound and they have a keen insight into human nature so that it is possible for them to give to each pupil the individual attention now regarded as so necessary for the proper rounding out of character. Among those who have thus distinguished themselves along these lines in a broad and comprehensive manner is Frank P. Baird, superintendent of the schools of Roundup.

Frank P. Baird was born on the farm in Venango County, Pennsylvania, purchased by his great-grandfather in 1796, and owned in turn by his grandfather and his father, the latter, John M. Baird, having been born on it October 29, 1848, and he is still living in Grove City, Pennsylvania, conducting an oil business, handling the oil from several producing wells on this property. John M. Baird is a democrat, and as such has been elected assessor and collector of his township. For years he has been an elder of the Presbyterian Church, of which he is a steadfast member. In July, 1871, he was married to Mary Grace Hovis, born in the same township in Venango County as her husband, and they became the parents of the following children: Susan M., who is the wife of J. C. Chambers, of West Newton, Pennsylvania; Doctor Baird, who is in a general practice at Roundup, Montana; James C., who married Jessie Fulton, served during the late war in the Aviation Corps as a sergeant; Frank P., whose name heads this review; Almeda F., who died in 1915, was the wife of Rev. Edwin Howe, a missionary at that time stationed at Canton, China; and Jesse H., who is the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Boise, Idaho, married Sue Bragstad, of Roundup, Montana.

Frank P. Baird attended the public schools of his native county, the Slippery Rock Normal School of Pennsylvania, from which he was graduated in 1902, and Grove City College of Grove City, Pennsylvania, from which he was graduated in 1905, and since then has done post graduate work at the Grove City College and the University of Montana. In order to earn the money necessary for his college expenses

Mr. Baird taught school, his first charge being a rural one in Venango County, and his salary twenty-eight dollars per month. This school was three miles from his home, and he walked the distance back and forth each day. Later he was principal of the grade schools at Southwest, Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania. His next charge was as principal of the West Sunbury Academy, a preparatory school for college, and there he remained until 1906, when he came to Montana, arriving at Wibaux in August to take charge of its public schools. He graduated the first high school class of Wibaux, and continued there as principal for five years. During the period he was there the high school was made a credited one with a four years' course. While living there he homesteaded a ranch five miles east of Wibaux, and there established his home, for on August 25, 1908, he was married to Bessie M. Barnes, one of the teachers under his charge. She was born in Ohio, a daughter of Sylvestor and Delilah (Christopher) Barnes, who had six children, four of whom are now living, Mrs. Baird being the second in order of birth. Mr. Barnes, a carpenter by trade, was a soldier in the war between the states.

On March 1, 1911, Mr. Baird came to Roundup as superintendent of its public schools, and graduated the first high school class in 1914 on a full credited basis. When he took charge of the schools he had seven teachers, and now he has thirty-seven, and the number of pupils in attendance has increased from 275 to 900. He has been a member of the county board of examiners representing the counties of Dawson and Musselshell ever since the passage of the law creating this board, and was appointed a member of the state tax book commission in November, 1917, by Governor S. V. Stuart. During the summer of 1917 he was one of the instructors at the summer school conducted by the State University at Missoula.

Like his brother Doctor Baird, Professor Baird has had considerable military experience. During his course in Grove City College he received military training in the Cadet corps, which was in the charge of a captain of the regular army. He was commissioned first lieutenant and adjutant in the College Cadets and served in this capacity when the Cadet Corps participated in the inauguration of President Theodore Roosevelt at Washington, D. C. Before graduation from college he joined Company M of the Pennsylvania National Guard and served as private, company clerk and sergeant for a period of three years. While at Wibaux, Montana, he was appointed sergeant of Company I of the Montana National Guard and drilled a number of young men for the company, the headquarters being at Glendive. As first sergeant of this company he camped with the Second Montana at American Lake and Helena, Montana.

Professor Baird organized and was commissioned captain of Company B, Second Montana National Guard, in February, 1914, by Governor Stewart. While captain of the company the Second Montana camped for ten days with the regulars at Fort Wright in the summer of 1914. On account of the labor troubles and riots in Butte, an order was issued by the governor on August 30th for the Second Montana to assemble in Helena, preparatory to declaring military law in the City of Butte. He led Company B to Helena and joined the regiment, which entered Butte September 1, 1914. He remained with the company for a month, and on account of educational duties demanding his attention in Roundup, was released from active charge of the company and placed on the reserve list of officers in Montana.

He is a consistent member of the Congregational Church. Like his father and brother, Doctor Baird, Professor Baird has always upheld the principles of the democratic party. Professor and Mrs. Baird have three children, namely: John Sylvestor, Lawrence Edwin and Frances May.

When it is realized that 24 per cent of the population of the United States, a trifle less than one-fourth of the American people, are in school, either as pupils or educators, some relative idea may be gathered of the great importance of the schools. From these figures it would seem that schooling is our greatest national industry, and the proportion of brains, hearts and souls that this industry absorbs is even greater. It is estimated that over 23,500,000 persons are enrolled in the various educational institutions in the country. Small wonder that so much importance is placed upon the selection of the men and women who are to guide these pupils who in turn will have to create and guard the future of America. Measured by all the standards used in such tests Professor Baird comes forth as a talented, carefully trained and enthusiastic teacher, high-spirited man and loyal citizen. His love for his work and his understanding of the problems of young people during their formative period peculiarly fit him for his high calling, and the people of Roundup are very fortunate in having him in charge of their greatest industry, the production of alert brains and healthy, normal characters from the plastic young pupils sent to the schools under his able supervision.

MICHAEL D. STAUNTON is now engaged in operating a large wholesale grocery business at Roundup, and has reached his present commercial importance through a series of experiences each one of which has had its part in the development of his character and determining his worth to his community. He was born in England on October 3, 1874, a son of Thomas and Margaret (Quigley) Staunton, both natives of Ireland. In 1879 Thomas Staunton brought his wife and eight children to the United States and settled in Meeker County, Minnesota, where four more children were born. Nine of these twelve children survive, Michael D. Staunton being the fourth in order of birth. Although a merchant in England, after coming to this country Thomas Staunton engaged in farming. He served as county commissioner of Meeker County for two terms, being elected on the democratic ticket. His death occurred when he was fifty-five years old, his widow surviving him and passing away when sixty years of age.

Michael D. Staunton remained in Meeker County until he was eighteen years old, and attended its schools. He then was employed by the wholesale grocery house of Anthony Kelley & Company at Minneapolis, Minnesota, continuing with the new firm of W. B. and W. G. Jordan, who took over the business, for nineteen years, rising through the different departments and finally becoming one of the best traveling salesmen. During all of this period he gained a thorough and practical knowledge of the grocery business and formed a valuable acquaintance with the trade, which he is now putting to practical use. In 1913 Mr. Staunton located permanently at Roundup and for five years conducted a general merchandise business, but branched out then into the wholesaling end of it, and operates under the name of Staunton's Wholesale Grocery. Like his father, he is a strong democrat, but has not cared to enter public life.

On April 5, 1901, Mr. Staunton was united in marriage with Miss Mary Ellen Noonan, born at Anoka, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Staunton nave two sons, Richard and Frederick. Possessing the business instinct in marked degree, coupled with his intimate knowledge of the wholesale grocery business, Mr. Staunton has been able to advance further than one whose equipment was only theoretical. While he has been building up his own business connections, he has not failed to take a warm interest in civic affairs, and has given his support to those movements which have been projected with the idea of improving and advancing Roundup and Musselshell County.

Dr. Creswell T. Pigot, one of the reliable medical men of Musselshell County, is engaged in a general practice at Roundup, which was interrupted during the great war by his service in the army. He was born at London, Ontario, Canada, November 25, 1878, a son of Joseph and Martha (Blair) Pigot. Joseph Pigot was born in Shropshire, England, in 1841, and died in 1898. His wife was born in London, Ontario, Canada, in 1847, and is still living. They had four children, three of whom survive, Doctor Pigot being the youngest of the family. Joseph Pigot came to Canada in young manhood, having acquired an education in his native land, and locating at London, Ontario, embarked in a wholesale crockery business, which he conducted the remainder of his life, becoming one of the most prominent men of his community. He was very active in Masonry, and was a past master of his lodge. From boyhood he belonged to the Church of England.

Doctor Pigot attended the public schools of London, Ontario, and then entered the medical department of the Western University of London, Ontario, from which he was graduated in 1900 following which he became an interne of Saint Josephs Hospital of that same city, and he was also at the Williamsburg Hospital of Brooklyn, New York. In the fall of 1902 Doctor Pigot came west to Butte, Montana, and was there engaged in the practice of his profession until 1910, when he moved to Roundup, and has been here ever since, becoming physician and surgeon for the Round Coal Company, the Davis Coal Company, and the Chicago, Milwaukee & Saint Paul Railroad Company. He belongs to the Montana State Medical Association, the American Medical Association, and is a Fellow of the American Medical College of Surgeons. Doctor Pigot was made a Mason by Silver Bow Lodge No. 48, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Butte, Montana, but demitted to Unity Lodge No. 71, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Roundup. He was a member of Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons, but demitted to Roundup Chapter No. 30 Royal Arch Masons, and he also belongs to Aldemar Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar of Billings, Montana, and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Helena, Montana.

On February 10, 1915, Doctor Pigot was united in marriage with Alice Lowry, a daughter of Thomas M. and Molly (Pierce) Lowry, prominent people of Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Lowry had eight children, five of whom are still living, and Mrs. Pigot is the eldest living daughter. Doctor and Mrs. Pigot have one son, Creswell T., Jr., and one daughter.

Doctor Pigot was commissioned a first lieutenant of the Medical Reserve Corps on August 4, 1917, and called into the service in July, 1918, being sent to Fort Riley and later to Camp Dodge, Des Moines, Iowa. He was discharged in February, 1919, and returned at once to Roundup to resume his former peacetime duties. He is a man of unusual talent and has won due appreciation from his patients and others who are associated with him. A man of high ideals, he has always tried to live up to them, and the respect he commands he has won by the most honorable of methods.

August Schrump is one of the men of his day and locality who have responded in a remarkable degree to the urge of the times and developed a fine mercantile establishment at Roundup, and at the same time has discharged the onerous duties of several official positions. He was born in Iowa County, Wisconsin, on a farm owned by his father, on October 1, 1863, being a son of Bernard and Elizabeth Schrump, natives of Germany, who were married in their native land. They became the parents of nine children, seven of whom survive, and of them all August Schrump was the eighth. After seven of their children were born the parents came to the United States on a sailing vessel, and after landing in New York City came west to Iowa County, Wisconsin, where they were pioneers of the rural districts of that region, and worked hard to develop a farm, and there both died. The Lutheran Church held their membership. First a Whig, the father later became a republican, and he was held in very high regard in his neighborhood as an industrious, upright and dependable man.

August Schrump attended the public schools of his native county, and during his boyhood learned how to make himself useful under his father's excellent direction. When he was fifteen years old he earned his first money pulling weeds in a corn field, for which he received twenty-five cents per day. Losing his parents, he was forced to become self-supporting. Having no one else upon whom he could depend, he exerted himself to the utmost and by the time he was twenty years old held a responsible position with an elevator company, and when he attained his majority was made its manager, holding that position for twelve years. Having saved his money he was by then able to embark in a merchandise business at Lawton, North Dakota, where he saw a good opening, and continued there until January 3, 1908, when he moved his stock of goods to Roundup, where he has since remained. He has the distinction of having been the pioneer in his line at this place, and since he first came here has enlarged his business, now controlling a fine trade. While at Lawton he was appointed postmaster on September 25, 1892, and served under Postmaster General C. H. Payne until in April, 1898. On April 6, 1910, he was appointed postmaster of Roundup under Postmaster General Frank Hitchcock, and held the office for four years. In politics a republican, he has been very active in his party and represented Musselshell County in the Fourteenth Montana State Assembly. For some time he has been a member of the City Council of Roundup, and is now its chairman. Well known in Masonry, Mr. Schrump belongs to Unity Lodge No. 71, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Helena Consistory, by which he was made a Thirty-second Degree Mason, and Bagdad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Butte, Montana.

On September 5, 1889, Mr. Schrump was married to Nettie Fonger, born in Illinois. They have one daughter, Lottie, who is the wife of A. H. Goetz, of Roundup. Mr. Schrump is an excellent example of the self-made man, and his success in life is all the more to be commended in that it is the result of his own, unaided efforts. He has a hearty, sincere manner which impresses persons favorably, and he has many warm, personal friends in addition to his business associates. Taking a constructive interest in the commercial and industrial growth of Roundup, Mr. Schrump may be counted upon to give his support to those measures which have this end in view, and is certainly one of the county's most representative and highly respected men.

WINFIELD SCOTT STOCKING. One of the veritable trail blazers of Montana and the Northwest, a pioneer miner, rancher and town builder in Montana, was the late Winfield Scott Stocking, whose life of achievement and adventure came to a quiet close on January 4, 1910, at the age of seventy-three.

He was born in Grand Rapids, Michigan, March 15, 1837, son of Jared and Lucy (Bigelow) Stocking, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of New York. Jared Stocking learned the cabinet maker's trade as a boy and made his trade the basis of a large and profitable lumber and furniture business at Grand Rapids, Michigan. He died in Chicago at the age of sixty and his widow survived him to the venerable age of ninety. Jared Stocking was a Presbyterian and a whig and republican voter.

Winfield Scott Stocking was one of ten children and acquired an early education in the schools of Grand Rapids. From the age of fifteen he was making his own way in the world, employed in lumber and sawmill camps in Michigan, and also sailing on the Great Lakes. About 1859 he and his brother Jerome went to California, traveling by sailing vessel around Cape Horn to San Francisco. He was in the mining business in California and in 1862 joined in the stampede to the Salmon River mines of Oregon. His party discovered the John Day mines in Oregon. In 1863 Mr. Stocking continued his prospecting to a place known as Rocky Bar, Idaho, and while there he met Miss Margaret Henry, who had come from Louisville, Kentucky. They were married January 16, 1864, at Boise City, and their honeymoon was spent traveling overland to Bannock, Montana. Mr. Stocking continued mining and prospecting there, and also located a hay ranch on Crow Creek. In July, 1865, he had decided to go to Fort Benton for supplies. Mrs. Stocking not wanting to be left alone, accompanied him, and after they reached Fort Benton he returned with ox teams and took his household goods to the Fort. He built a home at Fort Benton, and in the fall of 1865 with nine other men went down the Missouri River to Camp Cook, and soon afterward moved his family from Fort Benton, where the Indians had become threatening, to a place of safety at Camp Cook, where United States troops were on guard. In the spring of 1866 he returned on the ice of the Missouri River to Fort Benton, and from that time forward was a resident of that community. He engaged in the retail meat business and was also proprietor of the Benton Hotel for five years. In 1867 he had located the first ranch in Choteau County, and for many years did an extensive business in general farming and stock raising. In 1883 he built the first Opera House in Fort Benton, and he also served as one of the first county commissioners, being appointed in 1867. He was a member of the grand jury at Benton. In 1872 he planted the first fruit trees in Choteau County, and four years previously, in 1868, had raised the first grain on the banks of the Teton River. He was in every sense a pioneer, and by his initiative had an important influence in the development of the country. He owned valuable property in and around Fort Benton. He joined the Knights of Pythias Lodge at Fort Benton in 1884. Politically he was a stanch republican and was a friend of many of the pioneer statesmen of Montana, including Paris Gibson.

Mr. Stocking and wife had two children: Katherine Lou, wife of Albert H. Stewart, a resident of Great Falls, and John J.

THOMAS F. CORBALLY. Owing to his long connection with the public affairs of Cascade County, the name of Thomas F. Corbally, of Great Falls, needs no formal introduction to the readers of this volume. In a straightforward, conservative manner he has sought to perform his duties as a conscientious public official, believing, as was enunciated by an eminent American statesman, that "public office is a public trust." He has always sought to perform the duties of a progressive citizen, and his support can always be counted upon in the furtherance of any laudable movement having for its object the welfare of the general public.

Thomas F. Corbally was born in New York City on February 16, 1881. His parents, John P. and Julia (Smith) Corbally, were natives of Ireland, the father born in County Louth and the mother in County Cavan. They are both now deceased, the father dying in 1915, at the age of sixty years, and the mother passing away in 1914, at the age of fifty-eight years. They were married after emigrating to this country and meeting in New York City, and they became the parents of four children, three of whom are living. John P. Corbally came to the United States in young manhood with his widowed mother, landing in New York. He was a carpenter by trade and was an employe of the Stephens Car Building Company for many years. Politically he was a democrat.

Thomas F. Corbally attended the parochial school in New York City and also was a student in the College of the City of New York. In 1897, when sixteen years of age, he came to Great Falls, Montana with his late uncle, Thomas Corbally, one of the first settlers of Great Falls. His first employment here was with the B. & M. Smelter Company, and in 1906 he was appointed chief of the department of county clerk and recorder of Cascade County. He performed the duties of that position so satisfactarily that in 1910 he was appointed chief of the department of county treasurer, holding the office until 1913. On March 17, 1913, he was appointed public receiver of the United States land office at Great Falls, taking over the office on April 2, 1913. He was the first land officer appointed by President Wilson, and has given to the office his very best efforts, discharging the duties of the position to the entire satisfaction of the government and the patrons of the office.

In February, 1909, Mr. Corbally was married to Bessie E. Rowles, who was born at Sunriver, Cascade County, Montana, the daughter of Presley H. and Ellen (McDonnell) Rowles, the former of whom is a native of Ohio and the latter of Connecticut. They are now living in Great Falls. Mrs. Corbally was the second in order of birth of the five daughters born to them, four of whom are living. Mr. Rowles was one of the pioneers of Cascade County, having done much early freighting, later operating a ranch on Sunriver. To Mr. and Mrs. Corbally have been born three children, John P., Thomas T., Jr., and Elizabeth.

Politically Mr. Corbally is a stanch supporter of the democratic party and has been active in advancing its interests. Fraternally he is a fourth-degree member of the Knights of Columbus, and also belongs to Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He has shown himself to be a man of strong and alert mentality, deeply interested in the welfare of his community, and today is recognized as one of the representative men of the locality.

GEORGE N. GRIFFIN. There are many individuals who attain material success, and there are many others who answer the call to serve in high positions in life. When both these ends are achieved by one man and entirely through his own unassisted efforts there is occasion for more than usual interest to be aroused in the consideration of the factors that have brought this about. It is a long step from the task of a mine boy picking slate from the dump of an English coal mine to a seat of equality among the dignified legislators of one of the great commonwealths of United States. Such a step has been taken by George N. Griffin, a prominent citizen of Roundup, Montana, who now bears additional honors and is serving under Governmental appointment as state coal mine inspector.

George N. Griffin was born in Lowestoft, County Suffolk, England, December 30, 1861. His parents were William and Susanna (Nicholls) Griffin, natives of Cambridgeshire, England, the former of whom died in 1894, when aged sixty-seven years, and the latter when the youngest of the five children, George N., was a child. In 1879 the father and three surviving children came to the United States and located at Rapids City in Rock Island County, Illinois. There he worked until 1884 as a coal miner, although he was a tailor by trade, but in that year he went to Colorado, going into the business of raising cattle and horses, spending his last days on his ranch near Leadville. He was a sturdy, honest man, but accumulated no fortune.

To a large extent George N. Griffin has been identified with the coal mining industry all his life. Before coming to the United States he worked as a miner, having but indifferent school privileges in his youth, and after locating with his father at Rapids City, Illinois, he worked in the coal mines for about three years, and later at Kirksville, Iowa, for eighteen months, and at Angus, Boone County, Iowa, for two years. While at Angus he repaired his neglected education by attending night school, and also took a course with the International Correspondence School at Scranton, Pennsylvania. In June, 1886, Mr. Griffin came to Almy, Uinta County, Wyoming, where he resided for twelve years, during which time he held positions of responsibility, being fire boss and mine foreman. Later he spent one year at Lewisville, Colorado, then moved to the Sheridan Coal Company neighborhood near Sheridan, where he was employed as mine foreman until he pushed on to Diamondville, Wyoming, where he was mine boss and assistant superintendent for three years.

In the spring of 1902 Mr. Griffin came to Gallatin County, Montana, where he was employed as coal mine superintendent with the Amalgamated Coal Mining Company for about six years. In the spring of 1908 he accepted the appointment of coal mine superintendent with the Republic Coal Company at Roundup, Montana, and continued his association with that company for six years, relations being severed with feelings of mutual esteem.

In the meanwhile the sterling qualities which made Mr. Griffin so useful and efficient in the positions of responsibility entrusted to him by some of the greatest corporate business bodies of the country were recognized by his fellow citizens at large as those most needful in the firm conduct of public affairs, this general feeling resulting in 1900, in his election from Uinta County as a member of the First General Assembly of Wyoming. Public approval did not end here, for in 1910 he was elected a member of the Upper House of the Fifth Legislature of Wyoming, representing Uinta County. Although elected for a term of four years, Senator Griffin did not serve the full term, resigning his seat in order to accept a superintendent's position with the A. C. M. Company. At this time he was also a member of the town council and of the school board of Diamondville. In 1911 Governor Richards appointed him a member of the State Board of Arbitration, which he served as chairman. For one year he served as city auditor of Roundup, and for six years has been a member of the school board. On July 28, 1918, Governor Samuel V. Stewart appointed Senator Griffin to the office he still so admirably fills, that of state coal mine inspector. Many other unsolicited honors have come to him as a result of his broad-minded, intelligent views on leading questions of the day, and as tribute to his high personal character.

On May 8, 1882, Mr. Griffin was united in marriage to Miss Catherina Proud, who was born in England, a daughter of John and Hannah (Walker) Proud, both of whom died in the United States. Of their ten children Mrs. Griffin was the youngest born. To Mr. and Mrs. Griffin the following children have been born: Edith, who died in infancy; Edith (2), who is the wife of J. C. Knapp; Arthur, who is married; Maud, who is widely known as an educator in Montana, has served as county superintendent of schools in Musselshell County; Ruth, who is the wife of Dr. H. H. Cox, of Chicago, Illinois; Bessie, who is an expert stenographer; Harry P., who is a student in the department of journalism in the University of Montana, received his honorable discharge from military service following the signing of the armistice, was a member of the auxilliary naval force, completed his training at Great Lakes and was then transferred to Pelham Bay, New York; Philip, who served during the great war as a member of the S. A. T. C. at Missoula, Montana, is a student in the Montana State University; Walter, who is a student in the high school at Roundup; Dorothy, who also attends the high school; and Mollie, who is a grade student.

Senator Griffin belongs to Bozeman Lodge No. 18, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, demitting to become a charter member of Unity Lodge No. 71, Roundup, and served as the first master of this lodge. He belongs also to Zona Chapter No. 12, Royal Arch Masons; St. John's Commandery No. 12, Knights Templar; and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, Montana. With his family he belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church. As his father favored the policies of the democratic party, Senator Griffin in his youth accepted the same, but later, in the course of a busy and rather eventful life, he found reason to change his views and since then has been a zealous supporter of the principles of the republican party.

Oscar R. McVay, United States commissioner at Roundup, police magistrate of the city and a justice of the peace, is a man who is known for his efficiency, trustworthiness and absolute dependability, and his record amply justifies his occupancy of these offices. Mr. McVay was born on his father's farm in Union County, Iowa, August 27, 1858, a son of Jacob Newton and Rachel (Davis) McVay. Jacob N. McVay was born in Pennsylvania in 1828, and died in 1899, and his wife, born in Knox County, Ohio, in 1832, died in 1871. They were married in Ohio and had nine children, six of whom are still living, Oscar R. McVay being the fourth in order of birth. Growing up in Pennsylvania, Jacob N. McVay attended the schools of his native state, and left it in 1852 to move to Ohio, from whence he moved on westward to Illinois, and after two years there, during which time he was engaged in farming, he settled in Union County, Iowa, and until 1869 was engaged in farming and stockraising. In the latter year he went to Jasper County, Missouri, where he bought land and continued his agricultural activities up to the time of his death. While always voting the democratic ticket, he was not a man who cared for office and never sought public honors.

Oscar R. McVay attended the public schools of Iowa and Missouri, and until he was sixteen years old remained with his father, but at that time went to Kent County, Kansas, and rode the range in Kansas and later in Colorado and New Mexico for seven years. He then became a stationary engineer, and was employed as such in Missouri until 1896, when he came to Musselshell and was a rider for the old Roundup Ranch. His next occupation was sawmilling with his brother John V. McVay, and he continued in it until 1905, and was then made head sawyer in a large sawmill and held that position for two years. In January, 1908, he became pump man for the Republic Coal Company, but resigned in April, 1908, to go with the Carpenter Creek Coal Company as hoisting engineer, but left its employ in July, 1908. Then, in October, 1908, he became engineer with the Republic Coal Company, and remained with it until March, 1910. In April of that same year he was elected police judge of Roundup, and with the exception of a short period has held that office ever since, and for the past seven years he has also been a justice of the peace. On August 15, 1916, he was appointed United States commissioner, and his record has been such as to insure his continuance in office for some time to come. He is a member of Order of Eagles. In politics he is a republican.

On November 29, 1880, Mr. McVay was married to Miss Emma E. Shenefelt, born in Illinois September 10, 1862, a daughter of E. M. and Catherine Shenefelt, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Shenefelt had thirteen children, of whom Mrs. McVay was the fifth. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. McVay are as follows: Ella M., who is the wife of William C. Grant, of Musselshell County, Montana, has nine children; Bertha M., who died in infancy; Pearl E., who is the wife of Oliver M. Wyman, of Yellowstone County, Montana, has five children; John O., who died in infancy; Creola F., who is the wife of Erin M. Beall, of Roundup, Montana, has one child; and Ernest O., who is attending the Roundup High School. Mr. McVay is a man who has known how to take advantage of opportunity when it came to him. In his official duties he plays upon his problems with the great searchlight of personal knowledge, and his decisions are seldom reversed.

Patrick A. Hopkins, assessor of Musselshell County, is one of the alert young men who are making this section of the state one of the best localities in the West, not only because of their official work but also on account of the encouragement they offer to agricultural and industrial activities, and the public-spirited interest they show in making public improvements and supporting the good roads and similar movements.

Patrick A. Hopkins was born on his father's farm in Saint Croix County, Wisconsin, March 19, 1883, a son of Patrick and Catherine (Hennesy) Hopkins. Patrick Hopkins was born in County Mayo, Ireland, and died in 1886, aged fifty-two years. His widow was born at Rockford, Illinois, and is still living They were married in Wisconsin and had seven children, five of whom survive, Patrick A. being the third in order of birth. Coming to the United States in young manhood, Patrick Hopkins landed from the sailing vessel in which he had made the trip at New York City, from which he drifted westward and finally located in Wisconsin, where he obtained employment on steamers plying on the Great Lakes, and remained in this line of work for about ten years. He then bought a farm on Erin Prairie, Wisconsin, which was in the wilderness of Saint Croix County, and here he worked hard to develop his land. As his earnings accumulated, he invested his money in another farm, which was in Goodhue County, Minnesota, paying $1.25 per acre for it, but he continued to reside on his original farm, where he died. From the time he was naturalized he voted the democratic ticket.

Patrick A. Hopkins grew up on his father's farm and during the winters attended the rural schools. When he was twenty-two years old he left home and bought a farm in Cavalier County, North Dakota, on which he remained for three years. In the fall of 1909 he came to Musselshell County and homesteaded, and since then has been closely identified with the development of this region. Like his father he is a democrat, and he was the successful candidate of his party for county assessor in 1918.

On June 27, 1917, Mr. Hopkins was united in marriage with Emma A. Voght, born in Pembina County, North Dakota. Mr. Hopkins is a man who has always worked hard, and his success in life has come from the fact that he has been industrious, thrifty and efficient in everything he has undertaken, and the people of Musselshell County feel satisfied with his administration of the affairs of his office. Both he and Mrs. Hopkins are popular, and their pleasant home is oftentimes the scene of the gathering of their many friends to partake of their open-handed hospitality.

Albert J. Fousek is one of the most useful citizens Great Falls has ever had. He has lived in that community for a quarter of a century, is a veteran business man now retired, and again and again he was called upon to render duty in public office. For many years he was a member of the city council, for two terms was mayor, and has also served in the Legislature.

Few citizens of foreign birth have been more frequently honored in Montana, and have more justly earned these honors and the confidence of American people than Mr. Fousek, who was born in Bohemia November 27, 1869, son of Joseph and Anna Fousek. His parents were natives of the same province. Albert was the youngest of three children, two of whom are still living. His father was a carpenter by trade and in 1876 brought his family to America, spending about six years in New York City. He worked as a carpenter with the Havemyer Sugar Company of New York. He then moved to Minnesota, establishing a new farm in Renville County. He continued farming for a number of years, and later returned to New York City, where he remained about six months and received an injury from which he died. He died in New York in 1905, at the age of sixty-five. His widow survived him until 1918, being seventy-four at the time of her death. Both were members of the Catholic Church.

Albert J. Fousek was about six years old when brought to America, and acquired his early education chiefly in the public schools of New York City. He also attended school for a time in Minnesota. The first money he ever earned was in digging potatoes in Minnesota. For that heavy labor he was paid $10 a month. For about two years he worked as a farm hand. He was in St. Paul for some years, at first working at street grading at $1.50 a day, and then began an apprenticeship at the cigar making trade. He followed his trade in St. Paul until 1893, when he came to Great Falls and was employed as a cigar maker until 1896, when he engaged in business for himself. Mr. Fousek continued active in the cigar business at Great Falls for over twenty years, until he retired in June, 1918.

His first important office in local affairs was his election as alderman from the Third Ward in 1904. He was re-elected in 1906, 1908, 1910, 1912 and 1914. He served altogether for eleven years, until he was elected mayor in 1915. He was re-elected in 1917, and gave two terms of efficient administration of local municipal affairs. He was elected to the Legislature in the fall of 1914, and served in the fourteenth session, being a member of the city affairs and publicity and other committees.

Mr. Fousek is a democrat and is one of the most influential men in his party in this part of the state. For the past thirteen years he has been treasurer of the Fraternal Order of Eagles and is also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen of America.

November 22, 1892, he married Miss Anna Havlick, a native of LeSueur County, Minnesota. They are the parents of six children: Mamie, Lydia, Albert E., Lewis, Benjamin and Blanche. Mamie is now a student in the Montana State Normal School at Dillon. Lydia is a Red Cross nurse and has been on duty with the American army at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. The son Albert E. while a high school boy enlisted in the Second Montana National Guard Regiment in the spring of 1917, and on December 24, 1917, arrived in France as a member of Company D, One Hundred and Sixty-third Infantry with the Forty-first Division. He saw nearly a year of active service in France, and was granted an honorable discharge with the rank of sergeant at Fort Russell, Wyoming, March 15, 1919.

MARK DEFOREST DEARBORN. Possessing ambition, courage and perseverance in the realm of commercialism, Mark Deforest Dearborn of Roundup has made a success of his life and is now engaged in booming the realty values of his community and county under the firm name of Mark D. Dearborn. He was born in Waverly, New York, March 16, 1886, a son of Deforest and Emma (Davenport) Dearborn. Mr. Dearborn traces his ancestry back to Henry W. Dearborn of Massachusetts, who served as a general in the United States army, succeeding General Hull during the War of 1812, and was secretary of war under President Jefferson. Fort Dearborn, about which the great metropolis of Chicago has grown, and Dearborn Street of that city are named for Gen. Henry W. Dearborn.

Deforest Dearborn was born at Janesville, Wisconson, July 5, 1856, and his wife was born in New York state and died in 1906, aged thirty-nine years. They were married at Waverly, New York, and became the parents of two sons and one daughter, of whom Mark D. Dearborn was the eldest. Brought to New York state when a child, Deforest Dearborn was educated in its public schools, and his first position was with the Lehigh Valley Railroad, and he rose from brakeman to passenger conductor, but left that road in 1898 and went to McAlester, Oklahoma, to engage with the C. O. & G. Railroad. Later he went to Denison, Texas, with the M. K. & T. Railroad, and was engaged in construction work for some time. Still later he was with the Fort Worth & Denver Railroad at Amarilla, Texas, and while living there joined the Order of Elks, and he also belongs to the Order of Railroad Conductors. In politics he is a republican.

Mark D. Dearborn secured a public school education at Rochester, Buffalo and Geneva, New York, and Denison, Texas, and also attended Harshaw Academy in the last named city for three years, completing his courses at a business college. He then became cashier for a leading commercial house of Denison, Texas, leaving it to assume the duties of assistant postmaster at Sherman, Texas. Still later he was with the Rockwell Lumber Company of Denison and Midland, Texas, as bookkeeper and cashier, leaving that concern to become treasurer and accountant with the Denison Cotton Mill Company. In 1909 he came to Roundup, Montana, as cashier of the Roundup Coal Mining Company. In 1912 he engaged with the Studebaker Company at Spokane, Washington, assistant manager of its automobile department, but returned to Denison, Texas, to become accountant for the Southwestern Security Company. On October 1, 1914, he located permanently at Roundup as cashier for Frank M. Wall, general merchant, leaving him to go with the Roundup Merchandise Company as cashier, and held that position until he embarked in a real estate and loan business under the firm name of Morrow & Dearborn. Mr. Dearborn is now largely interested in the oil development of this section and is making a specialty in handling and selling oil properties in the entire district. He is trustee for a syndicate headed by L. A. Moran of Texas, which is drilling with standard rig and equipment in one of the subdivisions of the City of Roundup. In 1917 Mr. Dearborn was appointed city clerk of Roundup, and in April, 1918, was elected mayor of the city, and has given it a very business-like and efficient administration. Mr. Dearborn belongs to Unity Lodge No. 71, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, to the Roundup Club and to the Literary Club, and is appreciated in all. The First Congregational Church of Roundup holds his membership and receives his hearty support.

On September 22, 1908, Mr. Dearborn was married to Hazel C. Sanders, born at Denison, Texas, a daughter of William P. and Corina (Wright) Sanders, natives of Wisconsin, who are both now deceased. They had three children, two of whom survive, Mrs. Dearborn being the eldest. Mr. and Mrs. Dearborn have three sons, namely: Mark Deforest (IV), Ralph William and Wright Sanders. Mr. Dearborn is well balanced and sensible. By training and instinct he is fitted for the business he is now developing, and already he has registered astounding results in the development of the realty values of this region. In his official life he has been equally successful, and his constituents are prolix in their testimonials with reference to his effectiveness and careful attention to details.

JAMES GUNOLF ALEXANDER. Though his father was a prominent and successful lawyer James Gunolf Alexander early showed a preference for commercial affairs, and in the comparatively brief period of fifteen years since he left high school has been identified with banking. He is now cashier and managing officer of the Security State Bank of Judith Gap, and since coming to Montana has acquired numerous interests and holdings that serve to make him an important man of affairs in this section of the state.

In the paternal line Mr. Alexander is of Scotch ancestry. The Alexanders on coming from Scotland settled in New York. His grandfather, John Alexander, was born in that state, and was one of the early pioneers around Northfield, Minnesota, where he developed a farm and became widely known as an importer of Belgium horses. A man of prominence in his locality, he was a representative to the State Legislature of Minnesota during the '60s. He died at Northfield in 1888. His wife was a native of Norway.

In the same year that his grandfather died James

Gunolf Alexander was born at Elkton, South Dakota, November 13, 1888. His father, John P. Alexander, is one of the veteran members of the South Dakota bar. He was born at Northfield, Minnesota, March 9, 1857, grew up in that locality, and was graduated with the second class from Carleton College in Northfield. He received both the degrees A. B. and LL. B. In 1879 he removed to Canon Falls, Minnesota, where he began practice and where he was married in January of that year. From Canon Falls he moved to Groton, South Dakota, then Dakota Territory, about 1882, from there went to Elkton in 1888, and since 1907 has been a resident of Brookings, South Dakota. He is still active in the law, and one of the few members of the South Dakota bar who practiced continuously for forty years in the state. The firm of Alexander & Alexander, lawyers at Brookings, is composed of John P. Alexander and his son John C. The father has always been a strenuous democrat in his political affiliations and has served as county judge in South Dakota. He is a member of the Congregational Church and he is affiliated with the Masons and Odd Fellows. Judge Alexander married Adeline Chamberlain, who was born at Scranton, Pennsylvania, in January, 1864. She died at Brookings in 1917, the mother of two sons, John C. and James G.

James G. Alexander acquired his early education at Elkton, graduating from high school in 1905, and immediately entered the First State Bank of Elkton. It was his ambition to become a banker, and in the early years he regarded his work as an opportunity to learn the business more than as a source of income. When he left the Elkton Bank in 1907 he was bookkeeper. Then after four months as bookkeeper with the First National Bank of Balaton, Minnesota, he accepted an opportunity to acquire metropolitan banking experience as bookkeeper with the Northwestern National Bank of Minneapolis. January 1, 1911, the Citizens State Bank of St. Peter, Minnesota, was organized and opened by N. H. Olson and Mr. Alexander, the latter filling the post of assistant cashier. For the past ten years he has been an associate of Mr. Olson in the banking business. In December, 1914, he came to Judith Gap, Montana, and in the same month became cashier of the Security State Bank of Judith Gap, and has since been given the chief responsibilities of management. The bank was established in October, 1909, under a state charter, and its present officers are: N. H. Olson, president; Dr. E. M. Gaps, vice president; Knute Husted, vice president; James G. Alexander, cashier. The bank, whose home is in a modern building on Main Street at the corner of Third Avenue, has a capital of $20,000, surplus and profits of $15,000, average deposits of $250,000, and is an institution well qualified by resources and the personnel of its management to render a perfect banking service to the community.

Mr. Alexander is a member of the State Bankers Association and the American Bankers Association. Other important interests he has acquired since coming to Montana are as president of the First State Bank of Coffee Creek, Montana, as a member of the Montana Development Association, as a stockholder in the Southern Minnesota Mortgage Investment Company, and as a stockholder in the Judith Gap Land Company. Mr. Alexander owns a ranch of 520 acres four miles south of Judith Gap, devoted to grain raising. He has other real estate in Judith Gap, including a fine modern home, one of the best in the city, located at the corner of Louis Street and Fourth Avenue.

His standing as a citizen is indicated by the fact that he is the present mayor of Judith Gap. Politically he is a democrat, is a member of the Catholic Church, is a third degree Knight of Columbus, affiliated with St. Peter Council No. 1509 at St. Peter, Minnesota. In October, 1912, at St. Peter, he married Miss Florence Burg, daughter of Albert and Catherine Burg, her mother still living at St. Peter. Her father, who died there in December, 1912, was a retired farmer and an early settler of Minnesota. He died at the age of sixty-five. Mrs. Alexander is a graduate of St. Peter High School, and graduated as a trained nurse from St. Mary's Hospital of Minneapolis. To their marriage was born one child, Charles, on June 5, 1914.

HERBERT M. PEET. It is the progressive, wide-awake man of affairs who makes the real history of a community, and his influence as a potential factor of the body politic is difficult to estimate. The examples such men furnish of patient purpose and steadfast integrity strongly illustrate what is in the power of each to accomplish, and there is always a full measure of satisfaction in adverting in even a casual way to their achievements in advancing the interests of their fellow men and in giving strength and solidity to the institutions which tell so much for the prosperity of the community. In every life of honor and usefulness there is no dearth of incident, and yet in summing up the career of any man the biographer needs touch only those salient points which give the keynote to his character. In the life history of Herbert M. Peet are found evidences of a peculiar characteristic that always makes for achievement—persistency—and as a result of such a life he has become one of the best known and most highly esteemed citizens of Montana, and as such is eminently entitled to representation in a work such as the one in hand.

Herbert M. Peet was born in Shongo, Allegany County, New York, on April 22, 1892, and is the son of Edgar J. and Bertha (Graves) Peet. The father was born in Allegany County, New York, on October 12, 1870, and died on September 10, 1898. In his early days he had been employed as a telegraph operator, but later became manager of the estate of Edgar Peet. He died at the comparatively early age of twenty-eight years. He was a member of the Knights of the Maccabees and in politics was a democrat. Mrs. Bertha Peet was born in Allegany County, New York, on April 11, 1875. By her union with Mr. Peet she became the mother of three sons, Herbert, Harold and Mark.

Herbert M. Peet attended the rural school at Shongo, New York, and the common schools at Canisteo and Belmont, New York, in his youth, but at the age of eleven years he began to learn the "art preservative" in the office of the Genesee Times at Genesee, Pennsylvania, where he remained until thirteen years of age, and during this period he was given the opportunity of attending school. He then went to work for the News at Whitesville, New York, but some time later went to school at Wellsville, and at the same time put in as much time as possible on the Wellsville Reporter, a daily paper, his service on this paper extending through his high school course and terminating in 1909. During these early years Mr. Peet had been gaining some valuable experience, both in the technical side of the printing trade and also in the other phase of newspaper writing. In 1909 he removed to Boston and entered the employ of the Jamaica Printing Company, continuing for about two years, when at the age of nineteen years, he returned to New York state and became editor of the Whitesville News. In 1913 Mr. Peet was the democratic candidate from his district for the Assembly, and as an evidence of his popularity it is worthy of note that he was defeated by only 1,700 votes in a district that nominally was republican by about 5,000 plurality. In March, 1916, Mr. Peet sold the Whitesville News and went to Kittanning, Pennsylvania, where he became city editor of the Daily Times, but in October of that year, at the urgent request of Bert C. White, state senator from Fergus County, Montana, he came to Great Falls, Montana, and became editor of the Montana Equity News. In 1917, he became secretary to Mr. White and legislative correspondent for the Equity News.

In May, 1918, Mr. Peet enlisted in the United States army, and was assigned to the Eighth Division, where he was made personnel sergeant in training headquarters at Camp Fremont, California. He proved an efficient soldier and was on his way overseas when the armistice was signed. Consequently he was returned to the home soil and was discharged at Camp Lee, Virginia, on December 13, 1918. In January, 1919, Mr. Peet returned to Helena, Montana, where he again became secretary to Senator White. On June 1, 1919, he became president of the Harlowton Printing Company and editor of the Harlowton Press, with which he is still associated. The Press is one of the most important enterprises of Harlowton and is probably doing more to build up and promote the prosperity of this section than any other single element. Mr. Peet is a forceful and pleasing writer, with the necessary "punch" to emphasize what he has to say, and his influence in local affairs is generally acknowledged.

On June 30, 1919, at the first state convention of the American Legion, Mr. Peet was elected state historian, and on July 1, 1919, he was appointed by Governor S. V. Stewart a member of the Veteran Welfare Commission of the State of Montana, of which he later became chairman. In August, 1919, he was selected as editor-in-chief of the Montana Legionaire, the official organ of the American Legion for the State of Montana. Honors and responsibilities were thus heaped on him thick and fast, but he is fully capable of discharging his official duties to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

Politically Mr. Peet is a stanch supporter of the democratic party. Fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, having first been made a Mason in Andover Lodge, at Andover, New York, whence he demitted to Musselshell Lodge No. 69, at Harlowton, Montana. He is also a member of Harlowton Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, and Palestine Commandery, Knights Templars.

On August 27, 1919, at Whitesville, New York, Mr. Peet was married to Marie Fortner, a native of Whitesville and the daughter of Lester J. and Bertha (Wildman) Fortner, the former of whom is a successful banker in Whitesville. To Mr. and Mrs. Peet one daughter has been born.

Mr. Peet is a man of pleasing personality, broad of mental ken and possesses to a marked degree those characteristics which beget esteem, confidence and friendship.

ANDREW THOMAS ANDERSON, clerk of the Fourteenth Judicial Court, ex-mayor of Harlowton, and one of the representative men of Wheatland County, is recognized as a typical westerner of the highest standard. He was born in the County of Haldimand, Ontario, Canada, August 31, 1861, a son of John and Janet (Geddes) Anderson. John Anderson was born at Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1809, and died in 1903, while his wife, born in New York state in 1819, died in 1908. They were married at Gault, Ontario, Canada, and had ten children, five of whom survive, Andrew Thomas Anderson being the youngest of them all. When he was nineteen years of age John Anderson came to Canada in a sailing vessel and landed at Quebec after being forty-nine days on the ocean. Securing land in County Haldimand, he developed a valuable farm and had the distinction of being one of the pioneers of that district, and he and his wife rounded out their lives on this same farm. He was a member of the reform party, and held several important offices, including that of treasurer of the county. The Presbyterian Church held his membership.

After attending the public schools of his native county Andrew Thomas Anderson took a course in the Toronto Normal School, and for eight years was engaged in teaching school in Ontario. Then, in the spring of 1891, he came to the United States, and was a clerk in the store at Bigtimber, Montana, for about three years, when, having saved up some money, he went into the drug business at that place, and conducted it for six years. He then came to Harlowton as bookkeeper for a mercantile establishment, and later assisted in incorporating the Union Mercantile Company, of which he was manager from 1903 until December 31, 1909, when he was appointed United States commissioner, which office he held until May 15, 1917, at which time he received his present appointment. Mr. Anderson was elected mayor of Harlowton in 1908 and re-elected in 1909. Although he was again elected in 1912, he refused to qualify, feeling that his occupancy of the office for two terms was sufficient service in behalf of the city. During the great war he served as chairman of the Wheatland County Draft Board, and cheerfully donated his services to his country as long as they were needed. Fraternally he belongs to Carbonate Lodge No. 39, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is past noble grand; Musselshell Lodge No. 69, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is past master, and he has the distinction of being the first man initiated in this lodge; Harlowton Chapter No. 22, Royal Arch Masons; and Palestine Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar. Politically he is a strong republican and will continue to uphold the principles of that party. Like his father he is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

In 1886 Mr. Anderson was married to Miss Jessie Hall, born in London, England. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have two children, Mame Alberta and Andrew Geddes. Mr. Anderson is a man who possesses vision, courage and initiative. He early learned to work for knowledge and hold on to what he learned. He looked into the future with all a man's keenness of vision and made his plans so as to have his efforts yield him the fullest measure of profit, and at the same time he has so ordered his life as to give more than the ordinary measure of service to his community.

WILLIAM ALLEN CHESSMAN. The distinction of William Allen Chessman is not so much his long life and residence in Montana as his forceful and valuable participation in the business, civic and municipal history of Helena.

Now living at the age of ninety, he was born at Weymouth, Massachusetts, August 19, 1830, son of John and Lucinda (Wild) Chessman. The founder of the family was George Chessman, who came from England about 1700 and located at Braintree, Massachusetts. He married Jane Duran. The heads of the successive generations were: Clifford Chessman, a native of Braintree, who moved to Weymouth and married Lydia Orcutt; Hosea Chessman, who married Olive Shaw; Josiah Chess-man, who married Susannah Kingman; John Chessman, who married Lucinda Wild, and William Allen Chessman.

William Allen Chessman attended common school at Weymouth, and learned and followed the trade of shoemaker for two years before going West.

Mr. Chessman is one of the rare few who were among the original California forty-niners. In that year he embarged on a sailing ship at New York, went around Cape Horn, and reached San Francisco December 20, 1849. He is still a member of the Society of California Pioneers. For a number of years he was interested in placer mining in that state, and on coming to Montana in 1865 continued mining. He bought some placer mines, subsequently some water ditches, and built a bed rock flume in Last Chance Gulch. At a cost of about $30,000 he equipped his plant with a hydraulic appliance. The water supply for the use of the mines around Helena came from different sources. July 1, 1889, the owners of the various ditches and water rights were consolidated under the Helena Consolidated Water Company, with Mr. Chessman as president. June 11, 1898, the company was reorganized as the Helena Water Company and in September, 1911, the property was bought by the City of Helena. Thus he had a very prominent part in developing the present public water system of the capital. Mr. Chessman served several years as vice president of the Peoples National Bank, and at one time was a director of the Montana National Bank.

He served in five sessions of the Territorial Legislature, being a member of the extraordinary session of the House convening April 14, 1873, at Virginia City, then the capital; was a member of the eighth session of the House, which convened also at Virginia City, January 5, 1874; attended the ninth session, beginning January 3, 1876, at Helena; and for two terms was also a member of the Territorial Council, the thirteenth session, beginning January 8, 1883, and the fourteenth session, beginning January 12, 1885. Mr. Chessman is an original republican. He cast his first presidential vote for General Scott as a whig in 1852 and several years later joined in the movement to establish the republican party. Mr. Chessman was initiated as a Mason June 11, 1874, and was elected worshipful master of Helena Lodge No. 3 four different times, in 1879, 1884, 1885 and 1886. He has taken all the other degrees except those of the Council and thirty-third Scottish Rite, and is a Mystic Shriner. He is an original member of the Montana Club, had an active part in its early management, serving once as president, twice as vice president and sixteen times as a member of the board of managers. For a long period of years Mr. Chessman has been identified with St. Peter's Episcopal Church and is now senior warden. He is one of the two survivors and the only one left in Helena of the eight original incorporators of St. Peter's Hospital, which was incorporated June 11, 1886. He has served continuously on the board since its incorporation. For twenty-three years Mr. Chessman was connected with the Helena Fair Association as president or one of the managers.

At Galena, Illinois, February 4, 1875, he married Penelope V. Newhall. Her father, Dr. Horatio Newhall, a native of Lynn, Massachusetts, graduated from Harvard College with the class of 1817, finished his work in the Harvard Medical School in 1821, and going to Western Illinois in 1826 was one of the pioneer physicians and surgeons at Galena, and because of his skill and his learning achieved a very prominent rank among the professional men in the Mississippi Valley. Mr. and Mrs. Chessman had four children: Susan Blanchard Chessman, Frank Newhall Chessman, William Allen, Jr., deceased, and Frank N. Chessman. The son, Dr. Frank N. Chessman, married Marvel White, of Chicago, June 16, 1909.

ERNEST C. BAXTER. When he first came to Montana Mr. Baxter was a bookkeeper with the Government Indian Agency, but successive years have brought him an increasing share in the industrial, business and banking affairs of the state. He is closely identified with a number of land, cattle, banking and mercantile firms in the Musselshell Valley.

Mr. Baxter was born on his father's farm in Steuben County, New York, May 3, 1870, son of Harry and Phoebe Marie (Smith) Baxter. His father, who was born in Steuben County in 1844, was for many years a farmer and later a dealer in agricultural implements at Nelson, Pennsylvania. At one time he served as sheriff of Tioga County, Pennsylvania. He was a deacon and active member of the Presbyterian Church, a republican and an Odd Fellow. He died in 1910. His wife was born in Pennsylvania in 1844 and died in 1912, at the age of sixty-eight. They had three children: Portus, a physician at Libby, Montana; Ernest C.; and May, wife of B. C. Vestal, at Ingomar, Montana.

Ernest C. Baxter acquired a high school education at Addison, New York, and his early discipline and business training was largely afforded by the farming community of Steuben County, New York. Mr. Baxter came to Montana in July, 1893. After leaving his work as bookkeeper at the Crow Indian Agency he ranched on the Yellowstone River near Springdale, and did general farming and cattle raising until 1898. Selling out, he moved to Livingston, and was employed by A. W. Miles in the mercantile business until the fall of 1899. He then went with the Babcock and Miles general mercantile house at Castle, and in the spring of 1900, still with the same firm, established a business at Twodot and had an active part in its management until 1905. In that year Mr. Baxter with C. P. Tooley and George K. Robertson, under the name Twodot Livestock Company, directed some extensive land and livestock interests, and in the spring of 1906 Mr. Baxter with C. P. Tooley and Dr. H. B. Tice organized the second bank ever established in the Musselshell Valley, known as the banking house of Tooley, Baxter & Tice. The home of the bank was at Twodot. Later was organized the Twodot Land and Livestock Company, also the Tooley-Baxter Land and Livestock Company, which acquired the Linton Ranch, the Duffey Ranch and the Tice Ranch west of Martindale, giving the firm an aggregate of about 20,000 acres of land. In September, 1917, was organized the Bank of Wheatland County at Harlowton, and since then Mr. Baxter has made his home at Harlowton and gives his personal supervision to the bank as vice president and cashier.

With accumulating business interests, he has yet found time to serve the public welfare and was a member of the fourteenth and fifteenth sessions of the Montana Legislature. He is a republican, is a past grand chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, is affiliated with Diamond City Lodge, No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons at Twodot, Harlowton Chapter No. 22, Royal Arch Masons, Palestine Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine.

March 3, 1900, Mr. Baxter married Miss Frances Chapman, who was born at Otisville, Orange County, New York, daughter of Henry and Frances (Otis) Chapman, the former a native of Michigan and the latter of New York. Her parents are both deceased, and Mrs. Baxter is the younger of two children, a brother being Henry. Mr. and Mrs. Baxter have an interesting family of five children, Galen O., Robert H., Frances, Harry and Helen.

E. C. Baxter.

FRED P. MARRS. Examples that impress force of character on all who study them are worthy of record in the annals of history wherever they are found. By a few general observations the biographer hopes to convey in the following paragraphs, succinctly and yet without fulsome encomium, some idea of the high standing of Fred P. Marrs of Harlowton as a business man and as one of the representative citizens of his section of the state. Those who know him best will readily acquiesce in the statement that many elements of a solid and practical nature are united in his composition and which during a series of years have brought him into prominent notice, his life record earning for him a conspicuous place among his compeers.

Fred P. Marrs was born in Tompkinsville, Kentucky, on May 18, 1882, and is the son of William L. and Mary E. (Payne) Marrs. The latter was born in Mount Herman, Kentucky, on February 5, 1855, and is now living at Tompkinsville. William L. Marrs was born at Tompkinsville on April 10, 1854, and died on May 3, 1909. He was educated in his native community and later engaged in the lumber business, also being interested in farming and live stock raising. Politically he was a democrat, but was never an aspirant for public office. Fraternally he was a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and his religious membership was with the Methodist Episcopal Church. To him and his wife were born nine children, of whom seven are living.

Fred P. Marrs attended the public schools in Tompkinsville, and then became a student in the Bowling Green Business College at Bowling Green, Kentucky, where he was graduated in 1904. However, before entering business college he had taught school for four years and also taught one year after leaving college. Then for two years he was employed as bookkeeper for a manufacturing concern. In the fall of 1907 Mr. Marrs came to Montana and entered the employ of what was known as the Jawbone Railway Company (later the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company), in the capacity of cashier and ticket agant at Harlowton. After filling that position about nine months Mr. Marrs assisted in the organization of the Musselshell National Bank at Harlowton, of which he became assistant cashier on November 11, 1908. In this position Mr. Marrs demonstrated executive abilities of a high order and on February 1, 1911, he became cashier of the First National Bank of Harlowton, which position he is still filling, to the entire satisfaction both of the bank officials and the patrons of the institution. The First National Bank is one of the strong and reliable financial institutions of this section of the state and has been an important factor in the growth and prosperity of the community. A large part of the success of the bank has been due to the careful, conservative and yet liberal policy of its cashier, who is held in high regard by his business associates.

On April 11, 1909, Mr. Marrs was married to Eula Pauline Franklin, who was born at Fountain Run, Kentucky, the daughter of Benjamin F. and Lula (Goad) Franklin, both of whom were natives of Kentucky. The father died in 1907. Of their four children the subject's wife is the third in order of birth. To Mr. and Mrs. Marrs have been born two children, Don Franklin and Fred P., Jr.

Fraternally Mr. Marrs is a member of Musselshell Lodge No. 19, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Harlowton Chapter No. 22, Royal Arch Masons; Palestine Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar; and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. His religious affiliation is with the Methodist Episcopal Church while politically he is a democrat.

Although a quiet and unassuming man, with no ambition for public position or leadership, Mr. Marrs has contributed much to the material, civic and moral advancement of the community, while his admirable qualities of head and heart have won for him the esteem and confidence of the circles in which he moves.

CHARLES B. RIEDEMAN, treasurer of Wheatland County, has the distinction of being the first man to hold that important office, having been placed in it first by appointment and later by election. He was born in Monona, Iowa, November 14, 1882, a son of Henry and Louisa (Messing) Riedeman, natives of Germany. Henry Riedeman died in 1915, aged eighty-two years, but his widow survives him, being now seventy-one years old. Of their nine children six are now living, and of them all Charles B. Riedeman was the seventh in order of birth. Coming to the United States from Germany when nineteen years of age, Henry Riedeman went from New York City, where he landed from the sailing vessel which brought him across the ocean, to Ohio, and was living in that state when the war broke out between the North and the South, and he enlisted in defense of his adopted country in an Ohio volunteer regiment of infantry, and served for 3½ years, participating in all of the engagements of his regiment, including that at Shiloh. After the organization of the Grand Army of the Republic Mr. Riedeman became a member of it. From the organization of the republican party he gave it an earnest support. Some time after his return from the army he went to Kansas and proved up a homestead, but after five years there, on account of excessive drought and other causes for crop failure, he went to Monona County, Iowa, where he was engaged in farming and stock-raising until 1912, in that year retiring and moving to Onawa, Iowa, where he died.

Charles B. Riedeman attended the public schools of Iowa during the winter months, and in the summer time helped his father on the farm, in this way learning to be useful and the value of time. These lessons of industry and frugality inculcated in the growing lad, had an important part in the formation of his character, and he feels that he owes much to the precepts of his excellent father and mother.

Hard work and responsibilities developed the boys of those days and gave them ambitions to strike out for themselves at a very early age. Although only fifteen years old when he left home, Charles B. Riedeman had no fears for the future, and his faith in himself was justified, for he went to South Dakota and engaged in rock digging with mature men, receiving, as did they, $1.25 per day, the regulation wage for that class of labor. Later he put to practical use the lessons he had learned in farming, and still later did carpentering work, being engaged at the latter for about two years. Having saved some money, he invested it in a restaurant, owning several at different times, one being at Onawa, Iowa, to which he returned when he had some means to prove that he knew what he was doing when he left home. After conducting this last restaurant for about six years he sold it, and in the spring of 1909 came to Montana, homesteading at Judith Gap, where for some years he was engaged in conducting his farm. When he had it in good condition he went into the real estate business, and also negotiated loans and wrote insurance, at the same time overseeing the operations of his farm. With other representative men of this region he saw that it would be advisable to have a new county formed, and was one of those who promoted the movement and induced Senator Baxter to introduce the bill creating Wheatland County, which was acted upon favorably, and the new county was organized with Harlowton as the county seat. Mr. Riedeman was appointed the first treasurer of Wheatland County in 1917 and was elected to that office on November 6, 1918, and is the present incumbent. He is a democrat, and was elected on his party ticket.

On November 29, 1914, Mr. Riedeman was married to Marguerite Gordon, born in Wisconsin, a daughter of H. L. Gordon. There were eight children in the Gordon family, of whom Mrs. Riedeman was the seventh in order of birth. Mr. and Mrs. Riedeman have two children, Gordon Charles and Grace Marguerite.

Robert W. Holland, county assessor of Wheatland County and one of the constructive optimists, with a practical vision and abiding faith in the possibilities and prospects of Harlowton and the region around it, has done much to develop this section. He was born in Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, August 19, 1886, a son of Thomas and Ellen (Mellors) Holland, both born in Manchester, England, he in 1847 and she in 1849. They were married in Manchester, and ten children resulted of their union, five of whom are now living, Robert W. Holland being the ninth in order of birth. They came to the United States in 1860 and located in Allegheny City, Pennsylvania. In his earlier years Thomas Holland was a sailor on many seas, but after coming to this country was employed by various companies in the steel industry, retiring from active life in 1909. In politics he is a republican.

Robert W. Holland was educated in the public schools of his native city and those of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. His first employment was in the advertising department of a retail mercantile house, from which he went to the mailing department of the Crucible Steel Company. He was then employed by the cost department of the Park Steel Company, from whence he went into the paymaster's department. In the fall of 1906 Mr. Holland came to Montana and located at Twodot, as bookkeeper for G. R. Wilson & Company. Subsequently Mr. Holland established a mercantile business under the firm name of Holland Brothers, his brother James being his partner. In the meanwhile, during 1908, Mr. Holland was appointed postmaster of Twodot and held the position until 1913, giving entire satisfaction in his conduct of its affairs. When Wheatland County was organized in 1917 Mr. Holland was appointed assessor, and was elected to the office on November 6, 1918, and is occupied with its duties. Fraternally he belongs to Musselshell Lodge No. 69, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Harlowton Chapter No. 22, Royal Arch Masons, and is a member of the Knights of Pythias. Like his father he is a strong supporter of the republican party. He belongs to the Episcopal Church and is a worker in it.

On February 14, 1913, Mr. Holland was married to Miss Maud Evans, born in Anaconda, Montana, a daughter of Evan and Mittie Evans. Mr. Evans was born on the line between Montana and Idaho, and died in 1917, but his widow survives him. They had six children, five of whom are now living, Mrs. Holland being the second in order of birth. For many years prior to his death Mr. Evans was a ranchman and pioneer cattleman of Montana. His political sentiments made him a republican. Mr. and Mrs. Holland have the following children: Robert Evans, Thomas D. and Jean Marie.

Daniel Gay Stivers, counsel for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company and one of the veterans of the great war, in which he attained to the rank of lieutenant colonel, is one of the most representative men and distinguished attorneys of Butte and Silver Bow County. He was born at Fort Davis, Texas, February 10, 1869, a son of Maj. Edwin J. Stivers, United States Army, now a resident of Paris, France.

Major Stivers was born in Ohio in 1830, and is descended from the one of two brothers bearing the name of Stivers who, coming from Holland in 1714 to the American Colonies, settled in New Jersey, his brother selecting New York. Growing up in Ohio, Major Stivers lived there until he was thirty years of age, when he entered the United States Army in 1860, and served all through the war between the states, being with the Army of the Cumberland, and later under the command of General Sherman. Following the termination of that war Major Stivers was in the Indian warfare, serving as major of his regiment, and was mustered out of the service in 1894 with the rank of major. From then until 1901 he lived in New York City, but then went abroad to Paris, France. He is a republican, a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, the Sons of the American Revolution and the Masonic fraternity. The maiden name of his wife was Kaziah A. Rawson, and she was born in Cayuga County, New York, in 1840. Through her Revolutionary ancestors she was eligible to the Colonial Dames and has been a member of that organization for many years. Major and Mrs. Stivers became the parents of the following children: Lizette, who married Charles T. Nagele, an artist of New York City, New York; Edwin R., who is in the customs service of the United States Government, resides at Juneau, Alaska; Daniel Gay, who was third in order of birth; Charles G., who is a physician and surgeon of Los Angeles, California, served in the great war in the medical corps and was mustered out with the rank of major; and Howard R., who is in an electrical supply business in New York City, New York.

Daniel Gay Stivers was educated in the military schools of the United States and the Chicago High School, following which he attended lectures in the law department of Columbia College at Washington, District of Columbia, leaving the latter in 1893. In the meanwhile, during 1889, he had become connected with what is now the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, entering the office of W. W. Dixon, chief counsel of the company. In 1895 Colonel Stivers was admitted to the bar, and in 1897 was appointed deputy county attorney of Silver Bow County.

With the declaration of war between the United States and Spain, D. G. Stivers was one of the young men who responded to his country's call and was commissioned captain of Troop L, Third United States Volunteer Cavalry, Rough Riders, and was mustered out in November, 1898.

Returning to Butte, he resumed his connection with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company and was made one of the counsel for the company in 1899, and has so continued ever since. During 1903 he took a trip to Alaska prospecting for copper, but with that exception remained at Butte until the United States entered the great war.

Mr. Stivers was commissioned a major on June 1, 1917, and was detailed to build the embarkation camp known as Camp Merritt, New Jersey, as constructing quartermaster, the camp's capacity being 50,000 men. In November of that year, under his direction, construction of the Port Newark terminal was begun. In March, 1918, he was ordered to France as quartermaster of the Third Division of the Regular Army, and actively participated in the campaigns as follows: Aisne defensive from May 27 to June 5, 1918; Champagne-Marne defensive from June 5 to July 18, 1918; Aisne-Marne defensive from July 18 to August 6, 1918; Saint Mihiel offensive from September 12 to September 16, 1918; the Meuse-Argonne offensive from September 26, to November 11, 1918; and the First Army Area between August 30 and November 11, 1918. On October 14, 1918, he was wounded during the Argonne offensive, and he was awarded the Croix de Guerre of France with the palm for gallantry in action in the battle of Chateau Thierry. He was cited by General Pershing on April 19, 1919, for exceptionally meritorious and conspicuous services; and was cited by General Petain, Marshal of France, for important services rendered in the battles on and north of the Marne in July, 1918. October 14, 1918, he was cited by General Pershing for distinguished and exceptional gallantry at Montfaucon, Argonne. Major Stivers was promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel in August, 1918, and was thrice recommended for the Distinguished Service Medal and once for the Distinguished Service Cross. Returning to the United States, he was mustered out at Camp Dix, New Jersey, in May, 1919, and returned to Butte and his connection with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company.

In politics Colonel Stivers is a democrat. He belongs to the Episcopal Church. A Mason, he is a member of Mount Moriah Lodge No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Deer Lodge Chapter No. 3, Royal Arch Masons; Butte Commandery No. 3, Knights Templar; Bagdad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; and Butte Consistory No. 2, in which he has been made a thirty-second degree Mason. He belongs to the American Bar Association, the Montana Bar Association, the National Geographical Society, the United States Military Institute, the Military Order Foreign Wars of the United States, is one of the original executive board and an incorporator of the American Legion, and is a member of the Spanish War Veterans, and the National Rifle Association. Socially he maintains membership with the Silver Bow Club of Butte; the Anaconda Club of Anaconda; the Butte Country Club; is president of the Anglers Club, the Rocky Mountain Club and the Bonita Club, and belongs to the Montana Hunting Club.

Colonel Stivers was married first to Susie F. McManimon, of San Jose, California, on February 22, 1897, and she died in that same year. On November 10, 1916, he was married to Sally S. Knight, of Anaconda. There are no children. Colonel and Mrs. Stivers maintain their residence at No. 206 South Excelsior Avenue.

Frank M. Wall. The abilities of some men are such that there appears to be no limit to what they can accomplish, as practically everything they undertake turns out successfully. However, it is a mistake to regard such prosperity as the result of blind luck, for it is nothing of the kind. These men who appear to the world as favored sons of fortune are in reality simply those who possess the initiative, the executive ability and determination to forge ahead, never sparing themselves, but exerting themselves to produce as many and good results as lie within the possibilities, and in time they begin to reap results which must be very gratifying. One of these men is Frank M. Wall, one of the leading business men and financial magnates of Roundup, who has risen steadily to his present standing from the very humble position of driver of a grocery wagon.

Frank M. Wall was born at Saint Albans, Vermont, December 29, 1869, a son of John and Ann (Hand) Wall, both born in County Tipperary, Ireland. He died in September, 1909, and she passed away December 27, 1880. They were married in Vermont and had ten children, six of whom are now living, Frank M. Wall being the fifth in order of birth. John Wall came to the United States when nineteen years old by sailing vessel, and his wife was brought here by her parents when she was six years old. After landing in New York City, John Wall went to Saint Albans, Vermont, and became a farmer and breeder of fine horses and cattle. After spending about twenty-five years in Vermont he came west to the vicinity of Jamestown, North Dakota, and homesteaded, later buying additional land, and was one of the pioneers of that locality. Discovering that his land was suited to wheat growing, he raised that crop and at one time had 1,060 acres planted to it. Subsequently he sold and went to Helena, Montana, where he lived in retirement until his death. He never cared for public office, but took care to vote, and was a strong republican. From childhood he was a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

Frank M. Wall attended the schools of Vermont, North Dakota and Helena, Montana, and completed the high school course. His first work was the driving of a delivery wagon for a Helena grocery store, from which he rose to be a clerk and continued in a grocery for three years. Mr. Wall then became associated with the Copper City Commercial Company, and remained a member of its sales force for eight years, when he resigned to become Indian trader on the Black Foot Indian Reservation, and for seven years he was engaged in trading with the Indians, but then sold, and in the spring of 1908 he located permanently at Roundup and established the general merchandise house of F. M. Wall & Company, of which he was president. In 1912 Mr. Wall took over the business and is now the sole proprietor. He was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Roundup in 1908, and was its president until 1913. In addition to his other interests Mr. Wall owns 6,000 acres of ranch land. He belongs to Anaconda Lodge No. 239, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks; Helena Council, Knights of Columbus, and in his religious faith he is a Roman Catholic. Politically he is a republican, but like his excellent father he has not cared to enter public life.

On February 14, 1913, Mr. Wall was united in marriage with Miss Ira Gorsline, and they have two children, Agnes Louise and Frank Michael. Mr. Wall has always taken a constructive interest in the growth of Roundup, and is proud of the progress it has made. Few men in this vicinity stand as high in public confidence as he, and he deserves the respect his life and business methods inspire.

Emil R. Lausted, now in his third successive term as county surveyor of Meagher County, has been a civil engineer as a result of long and practical experience, and that has constituted his chief work and service during his active life.

He was born at Menominee, Wisconsin, February 7, 1876, son of Frederick J. and Sophia (Runneburg) Lausted. His parents were natives of Germany, his father born August 26, 1840, and his mother August 9, 1844. The father came to this country when a young man by sailing vessel, landing at New York City, and first located at Menominee, Wisconsin. He worked in the lumber camps and mills of that section, and later took up a homestead in Dunn County, Wisconsin, where he made a home and farm out of the wilderness. In 1883 he returned to Menominee, and in 1893 located at St. Cloud, Minnesota, where he died in February, 1915. He was a republican and a member of the German Evangelical Church. His widow is now living at Harlowton, Montana, and of their eight children seven are living.

Emil R. Lausted, the third among these children, received his education in the public schools of Menominee, graduated from the St. Cloud High School with the class of 1897, and in 1900 graduated from the Minnesota State Normal at St. Cloud. After about three years as assistant superintendent of the air brake department of the Great Northern Railway Mr. Lausted went to work for the Minnesota state engineering department, beginning as a chain man with a surveying crew in Stearns County the first year, the second year was a rod man in drainage work, and for three years an instrument man. In 1907 he was elected county surveyor of Douglas County, Minnesota, and by reelection in 1909 served two full terms. At the close of this service he came to Meagher County, Montana, and homesteaded near Harlowton. While busily engaged in improving his homestead he was elected in November, 1914, to the office of county surveyor, and has been re-elected in 1916 and 1918, and his office during the past six years has been burdened with a large amount of technical duty not only in the laying out of boundary lines but in the technical service involved in much public construction work.

Mr. Lausted is a member of Diamond City Lodge No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and in politics a republican. June 5, 1907, he married Lillian S. Britzius, who was born at Wells, Minnesota, fifth among the eight children all still living of Rev. George and Margaret (Brown) Britzius. Her father was born in Ohio and her mother in Minnesota. Her father has for many years been a minister and is now located at Minneapolis. Mr. and Mrs. Lausted have two children, Richard T. and Luella May.

Thomas William Welsh, M. D. Those of a future generation looking back over the records of the operations of the physicians and surgeons of the great war are going to marvel how the people of this country managed to keep in even ordinary health with so many of the best representatives of the profession under arms. Certain it is that the very flower of the class who devote their talents and skill to the alleviation of disease responded to their country's call and either devoted themselves with the care of the embryo soldiers at home camps or went across seas and plunged into the horrors of hospital work, winning honors and the eternal gratitude and affection of the wounded. One of these enthusiastic professional men who proved their loyalty as well as their skill is Dr. Thomas William Welsh, of Roundup.

Doctor Welsh was born on his father's farm in Johnson County, Iowa, October 5, 1877, a son of Michael and Ann (Hallarand) Welsh. Michael Welsh was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, and his wife was born in County Clare. He died in 1896, but she survives. Of their twelve children seven are living and Doctor Welsh was the youngest born. Both of the parents were brought to the United States by sailing vessel when young, landing in New York City. In those days a trip across the ocean was an undertaking, nine weeks being the usual time of passage for the sailing vessels, and sometimes the journey consumed much more. After learning the tanner's trade, Michael Welsh working at it for some time in New York State, and then learning of the opportunities offered in Iowa for securing cheap land, he traveled overland to Johnson County, and there obtained 160 acres of land on which he was engaged in farming and stockraising until his death, making a specialty of hog-raising. He was a man who devoted himself to his work, and did not care for public office, but never failed to vote, casting his ballot for the democratic candidates.

Doctor Welsh grew up on the farm and attended the rural schools, after which he took a course in the Iowa City Academy, and was for three years a student of the University of Iowa. Entering the medical department of the Northwestern University at Chicago, Illinois, he took the regular medical course, and was graduated therefrom in 1903. In 1913 he took a post-graduate course in the Royal Ophthalmic Hospital of London, England, and that same year was at the Vienna-Allgemeine Poliklinik and the K. K. Universitat Zu Wien and in other foreign cities.

Following his graduation he located at Braddock, North Dakota, remaining there from 1903 until in July, 1908, when he came to Roundup, Montana. For some years Doctor Welsh has specialized in diseases of the eye, ear and throat. He belongs to the Musselshell Medical Society and the Montana Medical Society and is an active factor in both organizations.

On November 22, 1905, Doctor Welsh was united in marriage with Miss Ethel A. Jung, born in South Dakota. They have three sons and one daughter, namely: Michael, Lucile, Leo and Leslie.

On January 14, 1914, Doctor Welsh enlisted in Company B, Second Regiment, Montana National Guard, and was made sergeant of his company. He first saw active service during the Butte, Montana, riots in 1915, and was on the border from June 23 to November 7, 1916. On September 1, 1917, he was called to the Officers' Training Camp at Presidio, California, and remained until December 1, was enrolled into the Medical Corps in June, 1917, and called to active duty on August 6, 1918, and remained in the service until February 20, 1919. During that period he was at the base hospital of Camp Lewis from September 1, 1918, until October 1, when he was sent to Camp Kerney, California, as assistant of the Sixteenth Sanitary Train, and was later placed in command of Field Hospital No. 263. His honorable discharge bears the date of February 20, 1919. In politics he is a democrat. Since his return to Roundup he has resumed his practice and his interest in local affairs.

Hon. John Hurly was born in Berrien Springs, Michigan, July 19, 1878, and attained his rank on the Supreme Bench soon after he became forty years of age. His grandfather, Thomas Barry Hurly, spent his life in County Kerry, Ireland, and was an Irish barrister. He died in 1861. His son, William Hurly, born at Tralee, County Kerry, on June 12, 1854, came to this country with his mother about 1862, grew up at St. Joseph, Michigan, was married there, and for ten years was in the newspaper business in Southwestern Michigan. In 1886 he moved to Forman, North Dakota, and continued in the real estate and newspaper business there until his death on March 1, 1913. He was always an active republican. William Hurly married Ella B. Murphy, who was born at Berrien Springs, Michigan, June 20, 1860, and is still living at Forman, North Dakota.

Her father, Sanford Murphy, was a member of Company E, Sixth Iowa Cavalry, which regiment came west in 1863 or 1864 with General Sully and Mr. Murphy was killed in an engagement with the Indians near Fort Rice, near what is now Mandan, North Dakota.

Judge John Hurly spent his boyhood at Forman, North Dakota, attended public schools, graduating from high school in 1897. As a means of earning his living and preparing himself for his chosen profession he learned shorthand, and for five years was a stenographer at Wahpeton, North Dakota, part of that time acting as court reporter. He was studying law at the same time with Hon. W. E. Purcell, since United States senator from North Dakota, and with Hon. W. S. Lauder, district judge, and was admitted to the bar in March, 1903. Later he went to Washington as secretary to Congressman Thomas F. Marshall of North Dakota. In the fall of 1907 he began practice at Minot, North Dakota, remained there one year, and in 1908 came to Montana and opened his law office at Glasgow. He was elected county attorney of Valley County in 1910, serving one term of two years. In 1912 he was a candidate on the republican ticket for the office of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, but was defeated. He continued in practice at Glasgow until 1917. In 1916 Mr. Hurly again received the republican nomination for district judge and was elected by a large majority. The Seventeenth District comprised Valley, Phillips and Sheridan counties. Judge Hurly was on the District Bench until September 1, 1919, when Governor S. V. Stewart appointed him as associate justice of the Supreme Court.

Judge Hurly and family reside at Glasgow, Montana. April 20, 1908, at St. Paul, Minnesota, he married Miss Jeannette P. James, a native of Minnesota. They have three children: Ella Marjorie, born November 1, 1911; Jean, born September 13, 1915, and John Thomas, born January 28, 1918.

Charles Gilbert Gaddis, chairman of the board of commissioners of Meagher County, and one of the extensive ranch owners of this region, is engaged in the cattle industry. He was born at Fort Logan, Montana Territory, August 31, 1879, a son of William and Margaret L. (Young) Gaddis, both born at Washington, District of Columbia, he in 1831 and she in 1836. His death occurred in 1908, but his widow survives him and is living in her native city, although eighty-three years of age. They had four children, of whom Charles Gilbert Gaddis, the youngest, is the only survivor. Growing up at Washington, William Gaddis embarked in a grocery business and conducted it until 1869, when he left the capital for Fort Shaw, Montana Territory, to take the place of post trader for the Federal Government. Later he was transferred to Fort Logan, and continued to hold that position until 1880, when the post was abandoned, at which time he bought the fort with the land surrounding it and engaged in the cattle industry, continuing in it until his death. Well known in Masonry, he belonged to Navy Lodge No. 4, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Washington; Helena Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Helena Commandery, Knights Templar; and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. In politics he was a strong democrat.

After acquiring his education in the public schools of Helena, Montana, Charles Gilbert Gaddis became manager of his father's ranch, and when the latter died he bought the estate and is still in the cattle business, having from 300 to 350 head of cattle of the Hereford strain. His ranch contains about 3,200 acres and is well improved and very valuable. In November, 1918, Mr. Gaddis was elected commissioner of Meagher County, and is now chairman of the board. His political convictions are such as to make him support the principles of the democratic party. Mr. Gaddis, like his father, became a Mason, and belongs to the Diamond City Lodge No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Helena Consistory No. 3, in which he has been raised to the thirty-second degree; and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and both he and his wife belong to Martha Chapter No. 11, Order Eastern Star.

On February 6, 1907, Mr. Gaddis was united in marriage with Emma C. Wilson, born at Portland, Oregon, a daughter of John J. and Emma C. (Ranner) Wilson, who had ten children, of whom four daughters and two sons survive, Mrs. Gaddis being the eldest of them all. The Wilsons are now living at Dalton, Montana, where Mr. Wilson is engaged in mining. Mr. Gaddis is a man of open mind and heart and quick understanding, and has always had the will and resourcefulness in carrying on his business which make for profitable results. As a citizen he has shown a commendable public-spirit that has led him to support those measures he believes will work for the best interests of his sections, and as an official his record is unblemished and characterized by the power to stimulate his associates to whole-hearted endeavor, so that he is a natural leader, and one upon whom many rely for inspiration and advice.

Ira B. Tourtlotte, secretary and general manager of the Stockfeeders' Company of Glasgow, is one of the dominating figures in the horse industry of this part of the state, having raised himself to his present responsible status through his own individual efforts. He is a native of Anoka County, Minnesota, where he was born on December 18, 1879, a son of Jonathan B. Tourtlotte, born in Maine, whose father was of French origin, although himself also a native of Maine. He married a Miss Whitney and Jonathan B. was their youngest child.

Jotham B. Tourtlotte was born in February, 1857, and his educational training was confined to the public schools. The greater part of his mature life has been spent with the Washburn Flour Mills at Anoka, Minnesota, although, after twenty-five years of service with them, in 1910 he resigned and located at Puyallup, Washington. He was married to Clara Herrick, a daughter of John Herrick, and a native of Wisconsin, where she was born in 1860, and they had two sons, namely: Ira B. and his brother, Alvin F., a merchant of Sanger, North Dakota. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. While he is a republican, he has never sought or desired to be burdened with the responsibilities of office, and he has never joined any fraternal organizations.

Growing up at Anoka, Minnesota, Ira B. Tourtlotte attended its public schools, and when he was nineteen years old left school to go into the Pillsbury Flour Mills, and remained with this corporation until he came to Montana in 1902. At that time he was a finished miller, and could have remained indefinitely with the Pillsbury people had he so desired, but he decided to branch out, and so came west. He immediately entered the sheep business on the Big Dry in Dawson County as a partner of Clarence Hall and W. A. Twitchell, the partners beginning with about 3,000 head of sheep, and they ran them on the range until the spring of 1904, when they lost one-half of their flock in the terrible March storm, and they disposed of the remnant of their sheep.

Mr. Tourtlotte then went to work for wages on the Selway ranch at the head of Pumpkin Creek, Custer County, of which DeLos Selway, brother of R. R. Selway, was foreman, and remained for a year. Returning then to Minnesota, Mr. Tourtlotte spent the ensuing winter, and then, in the spring of 1906, located at Wilton, North Dakota, and embarked in a hotel business. Although this was an entirely new line with him, he made money, and spent six years as proprietor of the Wilson Hotel of that place. Having recuperated his losses, Mr. Tourtlotte then returned to Montana, in 1912, and embarked in business at Glasgow in partnership with Messrs. Twitchell and Selway. They are extensively engaged in shipping horses in and out of Glasgow, and since 1916 have been incorporated as The Stockfeeders' Company. Until then Mr. Tourtlotte had charge of their farm, located south of Glasgow, and they handled a considerable amount of cattle, but since they have confined themselves exclusively to horses.

On August 14, 1906, Ira B. Tourtlotte was united in marriage with Miss Frances W. Gearhart, who was born at Bradford Junction, Ohio, April 21, 1877, and was brought to Minnesota as a child. She was reared at Elk River and after she had completed the courses in the public schools there, took the regular course at the Winona Normal School, from which she was graduated therefrom in 1898. Prior to that she had been engaged in teaching in the country, and after completing her normal course she spent several years in grade work in Minnesota and two years at Everett, Washington. Mrs. Tourtlotte is a daughter of William F. Gearhart, a native of Pennsylvania, who married Priscilla De Weese, born in Ohio. Both Mr. and Mrs. Gearhart died at Elk River, the former many years ago, and after his death his widow became a milliner. Mr. and Mrs. Tourtlotte have four children, namely: Eugene and Donald, who are living and two who died when very young. Mrs. Tourtlotte has a sister, Mellie, who is the wife of William Holt, of Tripp, South Dakota.

Ira B. Tourtlotte cast his first presidential vote in 1900 for William McKinley; in 1908 for Mr. Taft, and then in 1912 and 1916 he cast his vote for Woodrow Wilson. He is a man who has never permitted obstacles to overcome or adversity to discourage him. The majority of men after having sustained the loss he met with would have felt that fate was against them, and certainly few would have returned to Montana, or any other locality that he had found so unprofitable, but Mr. Tourtlotte is not of such caliber. It is a source of pride to him that he has been able to return and wrest from Montana more than was taken from him through the forces of nature in his first venture in the state. He has also won the confidence of his fellow citizens, and is recognized as one of the dependable and sound business men of Glasgow. Mrs. Tourtlotte's intellectual attainments are of such a character as to make her an authority on matters pertaining to cultural movements, and she and Mr. Tourtlotte have gathered about them a very congenial circle of personal friends whom they delight to entertain at their hospitable home. The influence of such people is naturally strong, and when it is exerted, as it is in this case, along constructive lines, its force is felt over a wide area and is always inspiring in character.

Edward Carter Hargadine, receiver of the United States Land Office at Glasgow, has been a resident of Valley County since 1908, and of Montana since 1899, having come here from his native State of Delaware. He was born at Felton, Delaware, November 22, 1873, a son of Robert W. Hargadine, born at Viola, Delaware, a farmer's son, who became a practicing physician and a florist. He was graduated in medicine from the University of Pennsylvania, and not only attained to distinction in his profession, but was a man of note in his community, serving as president of the local school board, as a member of the Delaware State Board of Medical Examiners, and directed his mind toward educational advancement. His death occurred in 1893 when he was forty-nine years of age.

Doctor Hargadine was married to Mary Evelyn Carter, a daughter of Edward J. Carter and his wife, Elizabeth (Reynolds) Carter. The Carters, Reynolds and Hargadines were all old Delaware people and all held to the democratic faith. Robert J. Reynolds, once elected on the democratic ticket governor of Delaware, was a brother of Mrs. Elizabeth (Reynolds) Carter. Mrs. Hargadine died in 1910, having borne her husband the following children: Edward Carter, whose name heads this review; Mary, who is the wife of George E. Hurd, the eminent Montana attorney of Great Falls; Robert W., who is a resident of Saint Paul, Minnesota; Albert, who is a conductor of the Great Northern Railroad out of Havre, Montana; Julia, who married Robert S. McKellar, an attorney of Glasgow, and Aimee C., who is the wife of John Todd, a farmer of Glasgow.

Growing up at Felton, Edward Carter Hargadine attended the graded and high schools there and learned floriculture and horticulture in his father's greenhouses and nursery in a practical manner. He had the misfortune to lose his father when he was only seventeen years old, but he had, even at that age, sufficient knowledge of the business to continue it, and did so until he left Felton for Montana.

After his arrival in the latter state in 1899, he sought and found employment with Houser & Company, railroad contractors, and began with them as a "flunky." Later he was made shipping clerk, and when he had been with the concern but six months was placed in the office of the Great Northern Railroad at Glasgow as cashier. Still later he was made agent of the company at Chinook, Culbertson and then Glasgow, and also discharged the duties of yardmaster at Glasgow. On March 1, 1910, he left the road and secured some government land three miles from Glasgow, and spent three and one-half years on it. His claim shelter was a four-room cottage, and he had proper accommodation for his stock. During the time he spent on this claim he harvested four crops, his produce comprising potatoes, wheat, corn and garden stuff, and he left it only to assume the duties of the land office.

On August 1, 1913, Mr. Hagardine was appointed to his office to succeed Walter Shanley, one of the early settlers and widely-known men. Mr. Hargadine was re-appointed in August, 1917.

Edward C. Hargadine was married at Glasgow, Montana, on August 24, 1909, to Miss Anna M. Dignan, a daughter of David Dignan, born at Richfield Springs, New York, in December, 1883. She was educated at her native place, reaching this state in 1902. Mrs. Hargadine is the youngest of four children. Her brother, Thomas Dignan, is one of the leading attorneys and a prominent business man of Glasgow. Mr. and Mrs. Hargadine have three children, namely: Mary Evelyn, Ellen Elizabeth and Anna Jane.

During the great war the Hargadine household was actively engaged in Red Cross work and Mrs. Hargadine was secretary of the Valley County Chapter of that organization. Mr. Hargadine is a member of the Knights of Columbus. He and his family are Catholics.

CHARLES MANSON CRUTCHFIELD was established in a profitable law practice in Montana before the territory merged into the state, and for many years enjoyed a position of singular prominence in the bar of Western Montana. His home for many years was at Hamilton, where he died August 25, 1910, and where Mrs. Lena Payne Crutchfield, his widow, still resides. Mrs. Crutchfield is one of the prominent women of Montana, and is a Daughter of the Revolution and was very prominent in Red Cross and other patriotic activities during the late war.

The late Charles Manson Crutchfield was born at Richmond, Virginia, June 19, 1863, and death came to him at the very zenith of his professional career. He was reared in Richmond, Virginia, attended public schools there, and was a graduate of the law school of Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia. He received his LL.B. degree in 1885. He was a member of the Sigma Chi college fraternity.

After his admission to the bar Mr. Crutchfield practiced for a time at Richmond, but in 1887 came to Montana and established a home at Phillipsburg. In 1889 he removed to Missoula and was a partner in practice with Col. Tom Marshall. In 1896 he established his home at Hamilton, where he enjoyed a large general civil and criminal practice. He was at one time attorney for Marcus Daly and handled many of his legal interests. After the death of Mr. Daly he served as attorney for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Hamilton until his death.

Mr. Crutchfield was a fine type of the southern gentleman, polished, scholarly and the soul of integrity. He was deeply interested in democratic politics and for four terms was a representative in the Montana Legislature, two terms from Deer Lodge County and two terms from Ravalli County. He was also a delegate to the Constitutional Convention which framed the organic law of the State of Montana. Mr. Crutchfield served as a vestryman in the Episcopal Church, and was affiliated with the Masons, Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America and Knights of Pythias.

In 1891, at Warrenton, Virginia, Charles Manson Crutchfield and Miss Lena Payne were united in marriage. Mrs. Crutchfield is a native of Warrenton, Virginia, and belongs to an old and prominent family of Virginians. Her eligibility to the Daughters of the American Revolution comes from her paternal ancestor, Col. William Edmonds, who was commissioned a captain in the Virginia troops before the Revolution and rose to the rank of colonel during the war for independence.

Mrs. Crutchfield's father was Inman H. Payne, who was born at Warrenton, Virginia, in 1822, and died while visiting his daughter in Hamilton, Montana, in 1895. He was a Confederate soldier, serving all through the war. His life at Warrenton was spent as a merchant and farmer. He was a democrat and a member of the Episcopal Church. He married Mary Massie, who was born at Warrenton, Virginia, in 1824, and died there in 1891. Mary Massie, the oldest of their children, married Col. M. B. Hardin, a Confederate soldier, and afterward a professor of chemistry at the Virginia Military Institute. Both are now deceased. George H. Payne is a traveling salesman living at Baltimore. John M. is a retired farmer at Warrenton, Virginia. Inman H. is a real estate broker at Norfolk, Virginia. Bernard W. is a retired merchant at Columbus, Ohio. Julian D. was in the insurance business and died at New Orleans at the age of forty-five. Alexander was a minister of the Episcopal Church and died at Warrenton at the age of twenty-nine. Markham B. died at Warrenton aged thirty-five, a merchant.

Mrs. Crutchfield, ninth and youngest of her father's children, has been a resident of Montana nearly thirty years. At Hamilton she is a member of the Woman's Club, the Delphian Society, the Episcopal Church, Leona Chapter of the Eastern Star, the Royal Neighbors, and is also a member of the Hamilton School Board.

Mrs. Crutchfield was the mother of seven children: Virginia, the oldest, died at the age of two years. Inman Payne served as an American soldier on the Mexican border eight months, then attended an officers' training camp, and spent twelve months overseas. He was wounded in the leg at the battle of the Argonne, and during 1919 was a convalescent in the Walter Reed Hospital at Washington, D. C. Charles Manson, Jr., is in the automobile business at Minneapolis. Mary Hardin was a graduate of the Hamilton High School in 1918 and lives with her mother. Lena Robb died at the age of two months. Miss Jack Massie is a senior in the Hamilton High School, while Virginia Denoon is in the second year of her high school work.

MALCOLM GILLIS became a resident of Butte over thirty years ago, and as a result of his previous experience in the mining district of Northern Michigan he readily found employment with the old Butte & Boston Mining Company, and later with the Boston & Montana Mining Company. Afterward he engaged in business as a merchant, for two terms was postmaster of Butte, and for many years has wielded an influence amounting to leadership in public affairs and in the republican party.

Mr. Gillis was born at Morris, Canada, April 30, 1862, son of Neil and Jessie (Campbell) Gillis. His parents were born in Scotland and were married at Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, Canada. Neil Gillis settled at Cape Breton in 1852, was a farmer there, and subsequently moved to Lake Linden, Michigan, and spent his last years at Butte, where he died in December, 1905.

Malcolm Gillis' memories of his early boyhood are associated with the state of Michigan. He attended district and high schools there, and soon after he was eighteen years of age went to work for the Quincy Mining Company. He was also employed in the machine shops of the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company, and therefore when he came to Montana in 1889 he was equipped with a considerable practical and technical experience in mining operations. After a brief residence at Anaconda he moved to Butte in December, 1889. He was in the service of the Butte & Boston Mining Company fifteen years, and then with the Boston & Montana Mining Company until he went into business for himself. In later years, however, he never lost his interest in his former associates in the mines, and made their welfare a subject of his direct influence and action. He performed a valuable service to the miners of the Northwest in their contest with the American Federation of Labor.

In partnership with F. A. Chase, Mr. Gillis engaged in the hay, grain and coal business at Butte, beginning with a total capital of $2,000 and with a small plant and equipment. The business prospered and grew, but eighteen months later Mr. Gillis sold out to accept appointment as postmaster of Butte to succeed George W. Irwin, deceased. Mr. Gillis was a personal friend of the late President Roosevelt and was appointed postmaster by Mr. Roosevelt when president. In 1911 he was reappointed for a second term by President Taft. Mr. Gillis has been associated on terms of intimacy with many of the prominent men of the republican party in Montana. For three terms he was elected chairman of the County Central Committee of Silver Bow County. He is a former secretary of the Good Roads Congress of Montana, and has held all the leading offices in the Engineers' Association. Mr. Gillis for years has been a devoted follower of the national sport of baseball, and in 1909 he sold his interest in the Butte baseball team, of which for a year he was president and owner. Mr. Gillis is a member of the Butte Chamber of Commerce, is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a member of Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine, has filled all the chairs in his Lodge of Odd Fellows, is a past exalted ruler of Butte Lodge of Elks, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

At Lake Linden in Northern Michigan in 1891 he married Miss Bertha Schlichting, a native of that city, daughter of Herman and Margaretha (Oseau) Schlichting. They have two children: Herman Donald, born at Butte in 1892, and finished his education in the State Agricultural College at Montana; and Clara Lucile, born at Butte in 1894, graduated from Radcliffe College, Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1916, and is employed by the government in the Bureau of Standards in Washington, District of Columbia.

Dominick Fox. It is not strange that the people of the little republic of Switzerland should come to the United States and establish homes, for our institutions are similar in many respects to their own, and they do not have such a hard time adjusting themselves here as do the emigrants from other countries of Europe, born and reared under conditions which are just about the antithesis of our own. The ports of entry to our republic have ever been open to the Swiss and they have been coming to our country for two centuries or more, and their substantial homes now adorn the hills and plains of the farming communities all over the Union, while there is scarcely a city of note where they are not found engaged successfully in business. They have been loyal to our institutions and have proven to be splendid citizens in every respect. Thus they have aided us in pushing forward the civilization of the western hemisphere and we have helped them in material ways, giving them every opportunity, which they have not been slow to grasp, being people of thrift, tact and energy.

Among the successful and well known citizens of Western Montana is Dominick Fox, who was born in Switzerland, the son of Aloise and Mary (Reichmat) Fox, of whose family of twelve children he is the eleventh in order of birth. He was reared in his native land and secured a good practical education in the schools of that country. At the age of twenty-two years he decided to cast his lot with the New republic across the sea, and on landing in this country he at once come to Butte, Montana. During the first three years he was employed in the smelters, but he had larger visions of his future career here and he came to the Flathead Valley. He filed on a homestead located nine miles northwest of where Kalispell now stands, though at that time the Indians roamed without molestation over the spot where later that prosperous city was founded. Mr. Fox had married at Butte just before coming to the new country, and he and his wife bravely and energetically set to work to carve them a home out of the wilderness. They made substantial improvements and not only created a fine farm for themselves, but were of incalculable help to many other early settlers in the Flathead country. They have been witnesses of practically all of the development of this section of the state and have in a quiet and unostentatious manner contributed as best they could and in many ways to the progress of civilization here. They acquired 320 acres of fine land, which they devoted to general farming and stock raising. A number of years ago they sold their homestead ranch, but having decided to again engage in farming they bought a farm near Columbia Falls, where they lived eight years. Eventually, however, they decided to dispose of their farm land in order that they might take life a little easier. They moved to Kalispell, where they had purchased a fine modern home, and there they are now living in comfort and ease, enjoying the rest which their years of toil so richly entitle them to.

Through the years which embrace the early settlement of the Flathead country Mr. and Mrs. Fox bore their part in every movement for the advancement of their community. They were especially interested in the welfare of the public schools and were influential in their promotion. They have continued their old habits of hospitality and it is a common saying that "the latch string of the Fox home always hangs on the outside." Mr. Fox is still enjoying vigorous health, and he enjoys nothing better than a day with a hook and line at a nearby stream or lake. He is an unusually successful fisherman, and for a number of years he has in the summer time preserved fish by smoking and which in the winter time is considered quite a delicacy. Mrs. Fox relates that she was the first white woman in her neighborhood when she first came to the Flathead country, and that the Indians frequently camped near her home and held their war dances there, at which time she says their war whoops were not particularly reassuring to her. However, she never allowed fear to conquer her. She persisted in being kind to the red men, who were always welcome to food whenever they called at her cabin, and in return the Indians never molested them. The nearest town at that time was Demersville, while the county seat then was Missoula, some 150 miles distant. At that time Missoula County reached clear to the Canadian line. With all of their extraordinary experiences Mr. and Mrs. Fox never regretted casting their lot with their adopted country, and they surely have honored the county of their citizenship.

While living in Butte Mr. Fox was married to Magdalena Spani, who also was a native of Switzerland and who, during her girlhood days, was a playmate of Mr. Fox back in their Swiss home.

Religiously Mr. and Mrs. Fox are adherents of the Roman Catholic Church at Kalispell. In his political views Mr. Fox is broad, preferring to give his vote and his support to those men and measures which in his opinion will most benefit all the people. Quiet and unassuming in manner, Mr. Fox is genial and approachable, and because of the material success which he has earned and the fine qualities of his character he enjoys the confidence and esteem of the entire community.

Daniel Francis Mooney, present deputy sheriff of Beaverhead County, is prominently interested in ranching around Dillon, and is the son of a Montana pioneer, Edward Mooney, whose history has been identified with Montana for nearly forty years.

Daniel Francis Mooney was born at Chester, Pennsylvania, April 26, 1886. Edward Mooney, his father, was born in County Mayo, Ireland, in 1852, and came to the United States in 1873, at the age of twenty-one. For several years he was satisfied with the life of the Eastern states and was employed as section foreman for the Baltimore & Ohio Railway at Chester, Pennsylvania. In 1880 he came out to Montana, locating at Feely, and was the first section foreman of the Utah Northern, now the Oregon Short Line Railway. In 1885 he established his home at Red Rock, where he continued his work as section foreman, but in 1898 left railroading to devote all his time to his growing farming and ranching interests in Rayans Canyon. He is one of the men who have been prospered by many years of attention to the agricultural and stock raising resources of the state. He still owns 3,000 acres, but since 1916 has lived retired at Dillon. He is a republican in politics and a member of the Catholic Church. Edward Mooney married Miss Kate Doherty, who was born in County Mayo, Ireland, in 1854. Lizzie, the oldest of their children, is the wife of W. F. Henneberry, a rancher at Dillon; Edward died when three years old; Daniel F. is the third in age; Katie died at the age of two years, and Nellie, the youngest, is the wife of W. S. Trask, proprietor of a garage at Jerome, Idaho.

Daniel Francis Mooney acquired his early education while living on his father's ranch in Beaverhead County. Later he attended the College of Montana at Deer Lodge and was graduated in 1902. He found adequate outlet for his energies and enterprise on his father's ranch until 1916, and operated that extensive property, raising cattle for beef. He owns individually 1,600 acres of Rayans Canyon and manages this as a grain and hay farm.

A resident of Dillon since 1916, he has served as deputy sheriff and taken a prominent part in republican politics, serving on the Republican Central Committee of Beaverhead County and as a member of its executive committee. Mr. Mooney is affiliated with Dillon Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He and his family reside in a comfortable modern home at 310 South Dakota Street.

He married at Butte in August, 1917, Miss Lucy Morris. She was born at Trout Creek, Montana, was educated in the public schools of Whitehall, and is a member of the Methodist Church and is affiliated with the Ladies of Woodcraft of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Women's Guild at Dillon. Mr. and Mrs. Mooney have one son, Francis, born June 10, 1918.

Mrs. Mooney is a daughter of Matthew Morris, who was born in England and was a Montana pioneer, locating in the vicinity of Whitehall as early as 1879 and being one of the pioneer ranchers in that vicinity. Mrs. Mooney's mother was Annie Williams, a native of England, and she is still living at Fishcreek, Montana.

LIVINGSTON MARBLE AND GRANITE COMPANY. Among the most important of the local industries which have had much to do with the growth and prosperity of Livingston, one of the leading enterprises is the concern whose title forms the caption to this brief review. Starting modestly a dozen years ago, the company has enjoyed a steady, healthy growth through the years, until today its products are known over the entire west. A fine quality of granite and expert technical knowledge on the part of those who handle it are the elements which have gained this company the enviable reputation which it now enjoys, and those who are mainly responsible for its success are entitled to specific recognition in a work of the character of this one.

D. E. Ayres, president of the Livingston Marble and Granite Company, was born in Iroquois County, Illinois, on May 23, 1862, and is a son of D. H. Ayres. The family is an old one in America, the subject's paternal ancestors having come from Germany and located in Pennsylvania in colonial days. D. H. Ayres was born in 1831 in Hamilton County, Ohio, where he was reared and where he married. He followed farming all his life. Some time in the '50s he moved to Iroquois County, Illinois, being a pioneer of that locality, and in 1869 became a pioneer settler of Bates County, Missouri, where he lived the rest of his days, his death occurring there in 1897. Before leaving Hamilton County, Ohio, he married Mary Wise, also a native of that county, born in 1833, and who died in Bates County, Missouri, in 1899. Their children now living are as follows: John I., a farmer in California; Mark, who operates a broom factory in Bates County, Missouri; D. E.; Oliver Ulysses, a contractor and builder in Bates County, Missouri. D. H. Ayres was a republican in politics, and his religious membership was with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

D. E. Ayres received such an education as was afforded in the rural schools of Bates County, Missouri, and remained on his father's farm until he was twenty years of age. He then learned the marble and granite cutting trade, which vocation he followed at different places in Missouri and for a time was engaged in that business at Butler, that state. In 1905 Mr. Ayres came to Montana, locating at Livingston, where he followed his trade until 1907, in which year he went into the monument business on his own account. At that time he bought all his marble and granite from eastern quarries, but it was soon afterward discovered that right here at home in Park County lay unlimited deposits of the finest granite in the world, and from that time the success of the enterprise was assured, for, from the fact that the granite is found largely in the form of granite boulders, it is more cheaply obtained than is possible in the quarries of the east. The business grew rapidly and in 1917 the Livingston Marble and Granite Company was incorporated, with D. E. Ayres as president, Irene L. Ayres, secretary and treasurer, and E. M. Ayres, manager. In 1915 a splendid plant had been erected at 117 East Park Street, equipped with all modern machinery for cutting and polishing, but eventually the work outgrew the old plant. To this another large addition was made in the summer of 1919. The company owns and controls 970 acres of granite land, situated at Gardner, Park County, the source of supply being thus practically unlimited. This is of the finest quality of monumental granite, coming out in various shades, and takes a beautiful polish. The company also handles the best New England granites, the extra dark from Quincy, Massachusetts; the dark from Barre, Vermont; the light carving granite from Concord, New Hampshire; the marble which withstands all climates from Rutland and Proctor, Vermont; the regal blue marble from North Carolina; Italian marble from Carrara, Italy, and also red and dark granite from Scotland, as well as the red and blue from Sweden.

Politically D. E. Ayres is a republican and fraternally is a member of Zephyr Lodge No. 151, Woodmen of the World; Silver Tip Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, and Livingston Lodge, Knights of Pythias. He is also a member of the Livingston Chamber of Commerce and the Livingston Club.

In 1885 at Butler, Bates County, Missouri, D. E. Ayres married Mary DeAtley, the daughter of J. T. DeAtley, who was a successful farmer and who is now deceased, as is his wife. To Mr. and Mrs. Ayres have been born the following children:

Ernest M., who died on March 18, 1919, at Livingston, was manager of the plant of the Livingston Marble and Granite Works; Nora is the wife of W. A. Boles, a rancher in Paradise Valley, Montana; W. E. is a rancher at Shields River Valley, near Livingston; Ethel died in 1912, aged twenty-one years; Thomas J., who is a marble polisher in the plant at Livingston; Ruth is the wife of W. E. Bayne, a farmer near Livingston; Irene is secretary and treasurer of the Livingston Marble & Granite Company; Roy, who is a traveling salesman for the granite company, enlisted in November, 1917, as a yeoman in the United States Navy, and was mustered out in May, 1919; Chester A., is also an employe of the granite company; Mark died at the age of eleven years.

Robert S. Oliver, superintendent of the dust treating plants at the Big Stack of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, is one of the energetic young men who have assisted in developing this mighty corporation and become such important factors in the life of Anaconda. He was born at Escanaba, Michigan, June 22, 1880, a son of John F. Oliver, and grandson of John Oliver, born at Aberystwithe, Wales. John Oliver came to the United States about 1854, settling in Waukesha County, Wisconsin, on a farm, being the head of the first Welsh settlement in the country west of Chicago. He died at Genesee, Wisconsin, before his grandson, Robert S. Oliver, was born.

John F. Oliver was born at Aberystwithe, Wales, in 1844, and was brought to the United States by his father in 1854, and was reared near Milwaukee in Waukesha County, Wisconsin. In 1862 he went to Escanaba, Michigan, and was engaged in a wholesale and retail coal business for thirty-five years, dying there in 1914. He belonged to the Episcopal Church. The first Master Mason who lived in Northern Michigan, John F. Oliver was very active in his order. When he came to this country the events which resulted in the organization of the republican party were vital and before the public, and from its birth he supported that party. The maiden name of his wife was Harriet Baldwin. They were married at Escanaba, Michigan, where she still resides, but she was born at Cleveland, Ohio, in 1849. Their children were as follows: Catherine, who married H. M. Stevenson, manager of the Mt. Fleecer Timber Company, of Butte, Montana; Clinton B., who is conducting his father's coal company at Escanaba, owned by his mother; Col. L. W. who is colonel in the cavalry branch of the regular army, was graduated from West Point Military Academy, and is now stationed at Washington, District of Columbia, on special detail as a member of the general staff; Robert S., whose name heads this review, and Annie, who married N. B. Briscoe, a major in the regular army, who has just returned from France after serving in the great war.

Robert S. Oliver attended the public schools of his native place, and was graduated from its high school in 1899, following which he spent a year in the West Indies with the Army of Occupation immediately succeeding the Spanish-American war, holding a clerical position with that force. He then went to the Michigan College of Mines at Houghton, Michigan, and was graduated therefrom with the degree of Engineer of Mines, and a member of the Greek Letter fraternity Sigma Rho. In 1903 Mr. Oliver began to make practical use of his technical knowledge and was assistant engineer of the Tri-Mountain Mining Company on the copper range of Michigan, remaining with that concern for eighteen months. He then came west to Utah and for a year was engineer for the Continental Alta Mines at Alta. From there he went to Southwestern Idaho to become superintendent of the Addie Consolidated Gold Mines, and continued this connection for two years. His next change was when he went to Bingham Canyon, Utah, as a miner, soon being made engineer, then foreman and finally superintendent and manager for the Utah Apex Mining Company, with which he remained until 1911. On October 20th of that year he came to Anaconda and started in the testing department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, rising rapidly through various stages of engineer of the light and water department, foreman of the then new 3,000-ton leaching plant, head of the research work on aluminum investigation, head of the tailings disposal, superintendent of the public utilities department, his present very responsible position, where he has charge of seventy-five men. His offices are in the Stack Building of the Washoe Reduction Works, two miles east of Anaconda. Having been reared a republican, Mr. Oliver has adhered to that party, but has confined his support of it to exercising his right of suffrage. He is a member of the Episcopal Church. A Mason, he belongs to Canyon Lodge No. 13, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Bingham Canyon. He is also a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers, the Anaconda Club and the Anaconda Country Club. His residence is at 415 West Park Avenue, Anaconda.

In 1908 Mr. Oliver was united in marriage at Salt Lake City, Utah, with Miss Hattie Pike, a daughter of Dr. W. R. and Mary Pike. Mrs. Pike is deceased, but Doctor Pike resides at St. George, Utah, having retired from practice as a physician and surgeon. Mrs. Oliver is a graduate of the Brigham Young University of Provo, Utah. Mr. and Mrs. Oliver have three children, namely: Helen, who was born July 4, 1910; John, who was born March 31, 1913, and Harriet, who was born August 4, 1917.

James B. Gnose. Not readily deceived in men or misled in measures, James B. Gnose, of Anaconda, is eminently fitted by natural ability and training to represent his district in legislative halls, where he has displayed vision, courage and initiative, and been able to bring about some important legislation for his state. In addition to his pre-eminence as a member of the Upper House of the State Assembly, Mr. Gnose is one of the substantial business men of Anaconda, conducting here one of the leading mercantile establishments. He was born at Millhausen, Indiana, January 3, 1865, a son of James Gnose, a native of Pennsylvania, who died in Millhausen, Indiana, in 1899, having been taken there in childhood. By occupation he was a millwright, and was also engaged in farming. From the time of the organization of the republican party, James Gnose was one of its strong supporters, and he never neglected an opportunity to live up to his convictions, not only with reference to civic matters, but also those of religion, and found expression for them through the medium of the Lutheran Church, of which he was a consistent member. He married Catherine Snell, born at Millhausen, Decatur County, Indiana, who died at Zenas, Indiana, December 23, 1918. Their children were as follows: Delia, who married Henry Osman, lives at Elwood, Indiana, Mr. Osman now being in a transfer business, although until he lost his arm in an accident he was in the traffic department of a railroad; Senator Gnose, who was the second in order of birth; Ira, who is associated with his brother, Senator Gnose; William, who is in the United States army; Charles, who is in his brother's, Senator Gnose, dry goods establishment; Martha, who married Benjamin Baker, a merchant of Zenas, Indiana; and Selma, who married Dennis A. Woods, banker, merchant and leading man of Zenas, Indiana.

James B. Gnose attended the rural schools of Decatur County, Indiana, and for a year was a student of Moore's Hill College, when he entered the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, and spent two years in that institution. In the fall of 1887 Mr. Gnose returned to Zenas, Indiana, and taught school for two years, and for one of those years was principal. He then came to Anaconda, and for a time was engaged in chopping saw logs on Modesty Creek for Walton & Scott, and then located in the town and drove a team for contract work until October, 1888, when he began teaching a school in the Deer Lodge Valley, which occupied him that winter. In the following summer Mr. Gnose was engaged in developing fish culture on Lost Creek with the hope of interesting the Federal authorities to the extent of putting in a Government hatchery at Anaconda. In this he was disappointed, for the hatchery was established at Bozeman, Montana. With the coming of winter Mr. Gnose resumed his school teaching and the following summer engaged with Jesse Miller in his dairy, remaining with him until 1891, when he established a small general store at 317 East Commercial Avenue, which has been expanded until it is now the leading establishment of its kind in Deer Lodge County, it being a wholesale and retail grocery and bakery, occupying three fronts, of seventy-five feet of frontage. He is a strong republican and very active in politics, serving as alderman of Anaconda for one term, and then being elected to the State Senate in 1916. Mr. Gnose served as a member of the Fifteenth and Sixteenth sessions and is still representing his district. He was chairman of the mines and mining committee of the Sixteenth Session, and was chairman of the fish and game laws committee in the Fifteenth Session and codified these laws. In the Fifteenth Session he also served on the educational, banks and banking and other important committees, and was chairman of the commerce and trade committee, and fathered some of the most constructive legislation introduced and passed during those sessions.

Senator Gnose belongs to Anaconda Lodge No. 239, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Anaconda Club, and the Anaconda Country Club. He resides in the Gnose Block, and owns it, the block opposite the Montana Hotel, his store building and other city realty, and did own several ranches, but has lately disposed of them. As his name indicates, his family originated in Holland, representatives having come from there to Pennsylvania at an early day in the history of America. Mr. Gnose has never married. Always active in promoting the welfare of Anaconda, during the Second Liberty Loan drive he served as chairman of the local committee, and saw to it that the quoto was considerably oversubscribed. This drive was the most successful of the series at Anaconda, the amount raised being $1,250,000, and the senator received many telegrams from prominent national office holders and others congratulating him on his especially good work in this drive. The plans he made and put into operation for this drive were followed in the subsequent drives.

Peter Lagoni. In many respects the career of the late Peter Lagoni, long one of the progressive farmers of the Flathead Valley, is peculiarly instructive in that it shows what a well defined purpose, supplemented by correct principles and high ideals, can accomplish in the face of discouraging circumstances. It is an example of triumph over obstacles, the winning of success by honorable methods, and as such may be safely followed by those whose life work is yet to be accomplished. He was a fine type of the sterling pioneer, having invaded the wilderness of this locality when settlers were none too numerous and when there was much to be done before a comfortable home could rise and good crops be reaped from the virgin soil, but he was a man who never permitted discouraging circumstances to influence him, for he forged ahead despite them, and won not only material success, but the confidence and good will of all who knew him.

Peter Lagoni was born in Denmark, where he was reared to the age of thirteen years. At that time he and his brother August were brought to the United States by their father, who took that move in order to avoid their being conscripted into the German army. After accompanying them safely to the new world in which they were to cast their future lot the father returned to his home and family. Possessing the industrious and economical habits of his progenitors, Peter Lagoni bravely went to work to win his way and in time succeeded in no uncertain manner. His first investment in real estate was the purchase of a pre-emption right from a Spaniard in the Flathead Valley, and it is interesting to note that his judgment in the selection of that particular tract was verified in subsequent years, for that tract became the homestead which has been occupied by the family during later years. The tract is located about a mile west of Kalispell and is considered one of the choice farms of this section of the country. The residence is attractive in style and convenient and comfortable in arrangement, while the other farm buildings are substantial in character, an additional feature of value about the place being the many fine fruit and shade trees which were set out by Mr. Lagoni, and which now give an added beauty to the home.

That Mr. Lagoni was progressive in his ideas and methods may be judged from the fact that he was one of the first men in this section of the country to advocate irrigation for farm lands, and he persisted in his advocacy of the system in the face of almost solid opposition. However, the irrigation idea gradually began to take hold of the ranchmen and eventually its advantages became a matter of absolute record, thus justifying Mr. Lagoni's arguments.

Mr. Lagoni was proud of his humble beginnings and they fitted in with his hopeful, helpful philosophy of human life that merit will have its reward and that in this free country, which he loved, although born under an alien flag, young men may still look forward to success and honor as confidently as at any time in its history as the prizes of fidelity, courage and indomitable energy. Of lowly beginnings, he nevertheless belonged to the highest nobility of the race. No accident made his career, for he achieved every step, often in the face of overwhelming obstacles. He was universally recognized as a splendid citizen, progressive in all that the term implies; a man of lofty character, sturdy integrity and unswerving honesty. During the early years of his settlement here he was one of the sturdy figures upon whom the burdens of the new community fell and he bore his part in the general upbuilding of the same manfully and well. So when on June 22, 1918, Mr. Lagoni closed his eyes to earthly scenes the community realized that it had suffered an irreparable loss.

Mr. Lagoni married Anna Hannan, who was born in Bethlehem, Northampton County, Pennsylvania, the daughter of Martin and Johanna (Hartnett) Hannan. To this union were born two children, Sylvia and Dixie Jane, the latter being now a student in the Kalispell public schools. Sylvia, after completing her elemental education in the Kalispell schools, finished her education at St. Mary's Hall, Faribault, Minnesota, where she specialized in art and music, graduating with distinctive honors in both subjects. She then returned home and took up the duties of housekeeper, devoting herself to her father, whose faithful companion she was during the remainder of his life, she and her sister contributing in every possible way to his comfort and ease. She is cultured and refined, and because of her many fine qualities of character is held in the highest esteem throughout the community where she has lived all her life. After the death of the father the grandmother Hannan came into the home and assisted the girls to care for the home, in conjunction with her married daughter, Mrs. Helen Harmon, whose husband is manager of the estate. The members of the Lagoni family are adherents of the Episcopal Church, to which they give generous support. Politically Miss Lagoni pays but little attention to party lines, supporting the men and measures which in her opinion are for the greatest good to the greatest number. During the trying days of the recent World war the Lagoni sisters showed themselves to be typical 100% American girls, and, as did many others, they donned their khaki suits and, going into the fields, they contributed in a very definite way to the success of the allied cause by their efforts at home.

The Lagoni ranch is one of the best in the Flathead, standing today as a monument to the sturdy industry and intelligent direction of Mr. Lagoni. The ranch was devoted to diversified farming and stockraising, special attention being given to the breeding and raising of Chester White hogs, which were raised for the stock market. It is the purpose to specialize to some extent on Holstein cattle.

Elmer Jay Anderson. This is a brief account of a Montana pioneer, whose life for nearly forty years was lived at White Sulphur Springs, where he achieved success as a merchant, and enjoyed many of the substantial honors of citizenship and the esteem of his friends due the integrity of his character.

Of an old Ohio family, Elmer Jay Anderson was born at Alliance in that state November 20, 1854. He was well educated, finishing at Mount Union College at Alliance, and then returned to the vocation of farming, in which he had been reared. In 1878, more than ten years before Montana became a state, he came up the Missouri River, first to Fort Benton and then to Townsend, where for a brief time he worked on the ranch of Governor Potts.

He had been in Montana about a year when he went back to Ohio, and on December 25, 1879, he married Miss Eva King, a native of Homeworth, that state. After their marriage they started for Montana, and in 1880 Mr. Anderson located at White Sulphur Springs, where he bought out a store previously established, and was actively identified with merchandising, banking, mining and stock raising until his death on May 7, 1917. Along with the cares and responsibilities of a successful business he at different times exercised much influence in politics as a republican, and served as a member of the Montana State Senate in 1900-01. He was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Mr. and Mrs. Anderson were the parents of four children: Glenn, Olive King, George Eldon and Harold. Harold died in 1895. Olive King is the wife of Moncure Cockrell, of Deer Lodge, Montana. George Eldon, who is a salesman for a wholesale grocery house of Bozeman, where he lives, married Wilma Trotter, a daughter of William Trotter, of Boulder, and they have a daughter, Virginia.

Glenn Anderson, a prominent mining engineer, was educated at Columbian University at New York, graduating in 1904 with the E. M. degree. He has been engaged in mining ever since, and is now a resident of Butte and has given his professional services to a number of the mining companies of the state. He is a republican in politics, is a member of the Phi Kappa Psi college fraternity, and is affiliated with Summit Valley Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. In 1907 Glenn Anderson married Lucy Stephens, daughter of A. J. and Fannie Stephens, of Fort Logan, Montana. To their marriage were born two children, Jay Stephens and Marian Montana Anderson.

Robert M. Mitchell. In reviewing the various branches of commercial activity, the historian finds that there is none more important, especially during the present epoch, than that connected with the handling and distributing of foodstuffs of all kinds, so that the men engaged in a business of this nature are not only certain of obtaining a fair measure of prosperity, but are rendering a service to the world. One of the men of Butte who is not only now concentrating upon this work, but has devoted his life to it, is Robert M. Mitchell, manager of the Northwest Sales Agency, fruit and vegetable brokers and car lot distributors.

Robert M. Mitchell was born at Farmington, Washington, on November 17, 1887, a son of Edmund and Lela (McDowell) Mitchell. The Mitchells colonized in Ireland, from Scotland in the sixteenth century, coming from that country to the American colonies, while the McDowells are of Scotch descent. The birth of Edmund Mitchell took place in Missouri, and his death, at Bellingham, Washington, in 1907. He was reared, educated and married in his native state, and there owned and conducted a hotel, but left Missouri for Washington before his son Robert M. Mitchell was born, continuing as a hotelman at Stanwood, Everett, Farmington and Bellington, and other points in Washington. He was a democrat politically, and fraternally belonged to the Knights of Pythias. His widow, who was born in Missouri, survives him and makes her home in Seattle, Washington. Their children were as follows: Allie, who married Herman Gantenbein, salesman of Seattle; Robert M., whose name heads this review; Vera, who married Charles Schloth, a salesman, resides at Portland, Oregon; Frank, who died at Ballard, Washington, at the age of thirteen years; Mayme, who married Leonard Shortall, a salesman of Seattle; and Walter, who is a banker of Seattle.

After the death of her husband Mrs. Mitchell was married to Michael E. Sullivan, a mill foreman of Seattle, and they have a son, Eugene, who is attending high school.

Robert M. Mitchell attended the public schools of Washington until he was fourteen years old, but at that time he left school and became a clerk in a grocery store at Seattle, where he remained for six years. He then went to Spokane, Washington, to become a wholesale fruit salesman, and during the two years he was thus engaged he learned the mercantile business from both the retail and wholesale ends. In 1911 Mr. Mitchell became salesman and manager of the wholesale fruit house of the Brown Fruit Company at Edmonton, Canada, and continued with this concern until 1916, when he left and went to Calgary, Alberta, as manager of the Mitchell Fruit Company, which he had organized in connection with the Nash Organization, and managed both until 1917. In the latter year Mr. Mitchell's services were secured as salesman by the Ryan Fruit Company, with which he continued until April, 1918, when he came to Montana and organized the Pacific Brokerage Company at Great Falls, and in October of that same year he organized the Northwest Sales Agency, a business of his own, which he still conducts. In December, 1919, he transferred his headquarters from Great Falls to Butte, although he still maintains a branch at Great Falls, and another one at Billings, Montana. Although his is a new company he has already built up the leading business of its kind in Montana. His offices are at 9 Hennessy Annex, and he resides at 12 Hennessy Annex.

In 1910 Mr. Mitchell was married at Spokane, Washington, to Miss Mabel Rausch, a daughter of Julius F. and Margaret Rausch, residents of Tacoma, Washington, where Mr. Rausch is recognized as a musician of great talent. Mrs. Mitchell was graduated from the Broadway High School of Seattle, Washington. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell are as follows: Helen Roberta, who was born January 2, 1913; Edmund Vance, who was born in September, 1915; and Margaret Lela, who was born in March, 1917. Mr. Mitchell is a democrat in his political faith. Since boyhood he has been a consistent member of the Baptist Church and is a generous contributor toward its support. He belongs to Great Falls Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; and Deer Lodge Chapter No. 3, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Butte. Mr. Mitchell is a man who possesses the staying power and is now reaping the harvest of years of steadfast endeavor, and although he has been located at Butte but a short time, the conservative business men feel that he is a valuable addition to the sound interests of the metropolis of Montana.

Alfred L. O'Brien, metallurgical engineer for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, is one of the most expert men in his line in the country, and although only thirty has attained to a well-known distinction in his calling. He was born at Boston, Massachusetts, April 3, 1890, a son of J. J. O'Brien. The paternal ancestors came from Ireland to Massachusetts in 1791, while on the maternal side Mr. O'Brien traces back to Quaker forebears, who were also among the founders of the republic. J. J. O'Brien was born at Boston, Massachusetts, in 1833, and is now living at Dorchester, Massachusetts, having spent his entire life in and about Boston. During his active years he was engaged very profitably in merchandising, but for some years has been retired. He is an independent democrat. During the Civil war he gave his country his service as a soldier, and was at the battles of Antietam and Gettysburg. Two of his brothers made the supreme sacrifice, dying in defense of their country during that conflict. J. J. O'Brien was married to Mary A. Paul, born at New Bedford, Massachusetts, in 1858. She died at Boston, Massachusetts, having borne her husband the following children: Frank J., who is a hotel proprietor of Chicago, Illinois; Mabel, who is unmarried and resides with her father; Alfred L., whose name heads this review; Paul, who is a lieutenant in the regular army, served as instructor in the transport service during the great war; Lucy, who married Harry G. McLeod, a manufacturer of soft drinks, lives at Dorchester, Massachusetts; Grace, who married W. H. Hanlin, an artist, lives at Chelsea, Massachusetts; and Hester, who married William Cummings, who served during the great war overseas, and as a member of the Army of Occupation, and she during the period of his service is living with her father.

Alfred L. O'Brien attended the excellent public schools of his native city, and was graduated from high school in 1909, following which he became a student of Lehigh University at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, from which he was graduated in 1913, with the degrees of Mining Engineer and Metallurgist. In October of that same year Mr. O'Brien came west to Anaconda and became assistant testing engineer for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. It was not long before those in authority realized his capabilities, and the young man was promoted to be chief chemist and later was made assistant superintendent of reverberating smelting. His services further received recognition by his appointment to his present very responsible position. His offices are in the general office building of the Washoe Reduction Works two miles east of Anaconda. In his political views Mr. O'Brien is independent, preferring to use his own judgment with reference to supporting candidates. He belongs to the Anaconda Club and the Silver Club of Butte, Montana. Fraternally he maintains affiliations with Anaconda Lodge, No. 239, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

In 1916 Mr. O'Brien was married at Anaconda to Miss Moina Ducie, a daughter of John and Ellen (Mulhern) Ducie, both of whom died in 1917. Mr. Ducie was one of the pioneers of Montana, and during the early days was engaged in prospecting over the state. Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien have two daughters, Phyllis Milicent and Rosalba. Mr. O'Brien is a man who possesses the power to stimulate men to wholehearted endeavor, and not only has technical training, but also business ability, a strong will and resourcefulness. During his connection with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company he has attained the full measure of the confidence of his associates and has proven his personal integrity and sincerity in every day conduct of the affairs entrusted to him. Both he and Mrs. O'Brien are popular socially, for they hold their friends in good account and like to have them about them, their pleasant home oftentimes being the scene of delightful gatherings. Just as Mr. O'Brien is a model host, he is equally popular as a guest, and is a man of personal charm, culture and wide intellectual interests, which are shared by his wife.

William G. Allin. The name Allin belongs among the early pioneers in Montana. William G. Allin, who at the time of his death was one of the oldest residents of Cascade County and a prominent citizen of Great Falls, was a son of the late William Allin, and father and son for many years were successfully associated in ranching and stock raising, and both have been well known leaders in state affairs and in democratic politics in Montana covering a period of half a century or more. William G. Allin died at Great Falls, May 1, 1920.

Grant Allin, grandfather of William G. Allin, was a pioneer of Missouri, and for many years held the office of clerk of court of Randolph County, that state. He was an ardent democrat. When he left office he was succeeded by his son William Allin. William Allin was born in Kentucky, and that state was also the birth home of his wife, Amanda Allin. She died in 1882, at the age of forty-six, the mother of seven children, three of whom are still living. The late William Allin though a native of Kentucky spent many years in Chariton and Randolph counties, Missouri. William G. Allin was born on his father's farm in Chariton County November 19, 1856. In the meantime his father had become a California forty-niner. He went overland to the coast and spent some time in the mining districts, until the spring of 1850. He went back to Missouri, married, and was again in California for a time. In 1864 he arrived in Montana, was in the Alder Gulch mining district, and the winter of 1864-65 he and several of his companions spent in Deer Lodge Valley. He owned some mining interests near Butte. In 1866 he again crossed the country to his home state of Missouri. In the early '70s he was interested in Texas and lived there for a time. From 1872 to 1875 he was again in Missouri, and in the latter year came to the Chestnut Valley of Montana. This time his choice of a home was permanent, and he lived in the Chestnut Valley until his death in 1915, at the age of eighty-five. He became extensively interested in farming and cattle raising.

William G. Allin acquired his early education in the public schools of Missouri and later attended college at Huntsville, Missouri. From the time he was eighteen years of age he was closely associated with his father in the livestock and ranching business. In 1914 he was appointed state stock inspector and continued to perform those duties until his death. He was a delegate to county democratic conventions in Cascade County for over thirty years, and probably no one has a better knowledge of politics in that county from the time of its organization from Meagher County. Mr. Allin was a member of the Christian Church.

July 20, 1899, he married Ethel Maw, a native of England, who came to America, in early childhood with her parents, who settled at Hot Springs, Arkansas. They had three children, Ethelyn, William F. and Edith.

JOHN LANG. No state in the Union can boast of a more heroic band of pioneers than Montana. In their intelligence, courage, capacity and loyalty to the right they have never had any superiors, for in their daring and heroism they have been equal to the Missouri and California argonauts. Their privations, hardships and earnest labors have resulted in establishing one of the foremost commonwealths in the great Northwest of our country, and one which still has great possibilities before it. A member of this worthy band is John Lang, long one of our successful and thrifty ranchers, but who is now living retired in Kalispell.

John Lang was born in Renfrewshire, Scotland, and is the son of John and Jane (Hannah) Lang. He was reared under the parental roof and secured his education in the schools of his home neighborhood. In his early life he followed the sea, but shortly after his marriage, which occurred in 1864, he determined to cast his lot with the great republic across the sea. Taking passage on the "Brittania," he arrived in New York harbor on May 4, 1865. As they entered the harbor the first news that reached them was of the assassination of President Lincoln. Mr. Lang had left his young bride in Scotland until such a time as he should have a home established for her. Times were hard, and Mr. Lang's start in the new land of his adoption was anything but propitious, for, going down into Virginia, he was forced to work for his board for a time. Later, however, he went to Cole Valley, Illinois, where he was fortunate in obtaining steady employment. He then sent back to Scotland for his young wife, who with her young babe made the trip across the ocean alone, rejoining her husband on Christmas day, 1865. In the following year Mr. Lang left Illinois in a covered wagon and drove overland to Nebraska, where he took up a homestead in Washington County. He made his home there until 1881, when he came to Butte, Montana, where he remained for a time, but later filed on a pre-emption claim in the Flathead Valley, on which he located on May 14, 1883, thus being literally one of the very first settlers in this locality—in fact he was the only man with a family on the east side of the river, there being four "squatters" there beside him. He entered at once upon the task of improving his land and constructing a home, which in a new country is a task of some proportions, though their needs in those days were much less than the necessities of the present day. Mr. Lang took a prominent part in the various phases of the development of the new country, having helped to build the first schoolhouse, which was constructed of logs. He also rendered good service as a school director. He was the first justice of the peace in Flathead County, Tyson Duncan holding that office on the west side of the river. At that time wild game was abundant, and the pioneer table was seldom without meat. Mr. Lang had a unique way of providing himself with wild game as he needed it. He had caught and tamed a young fawn, which would follow him about like a dog. The animal would go into the woods and after remaining awhile would return to its adopted home accompanied by a number of wild companions, who would be shot by the settlers, though they were always careful not to kill more than they really needed at that time, thus not wasting any food. Mr. Lang relates that as many as twenty-five deer have followed the fawn home at one time. Through the years that have come and gone since Mr. and Mrs. Lang came to the Flathead country a wonderful transformation has taken place in this country in almost every respect, and to such men as Mr. Lang is the community indebted for much of the solidity and stability of the civilization which has followed so closely on the heels of the pioneers. Under the noted Bill Huston, Mr. Lang gave good service as deputy sheriff of Missoula County. Mr. and Mrs. Lang are now living in a comfortable and attractive home in Kalispell, where they are quietly passing the evening of life, surrounded by friends and acquaintances who enjoy nothing more than to hear Mr. Lang recite incidents of the early days. Mrs. Lang recites that at one time two squaws, with large knives, came into the cabin and tried to terrify her, but she hid her true feelings and carelessly moved about, apparently unconcerned. The squaws sat around, watching her and laughing and talking, and finally left. At another time a big ill-looking Indian came into the cabin while the men folks were away, and lay down on the floor so as to obstruct the doorway and thus prevent her from going out. After awhile, seeing that she paid no attention to him, he left. The red men got ugly at times and committed outrages of the worst kind. They cremated two white men, from whose ashes some twenty-dollar gold pieces were raked, thus identifying them. At another time they killed a white man from whose coat a squaw took a Masonic pin, which she wore into town soon after, thus revealing the identity of the dead man and the criminals. A couple of Indians were arrested and were under the guard of Mr. Lang. The Vigilant Committee, deciding to teach the Indians a salutary lesson, told Mr. Lang that his wife was sick and that he was wanted at home at once. In his absence the Vigilants took the Indians out and hung them.

John Lang was married in Scotland, on April 29, 1864, to Margaret Stone, who, as has been related elsewhere, did not accompany him on his immigration to the United States, but remained at home until such a time as he could send for her. She finally rejoined him on Christmas day, 1865, and at that time placed in his arms their first-born child, who had been born in bonnie Scotland. Her name is Margaret and she is now the wife of John E. McCarthy, of Browning, Montana. They have three children, namely: Daniel E.; John E., who saw active military service in France during the World war and is now a cadet at West Point Military Academy; and Grace, the daughter, is a stenographer in Washington, D. C. The remaining children of Mr. and Mrs. Lang are as follows: John, who is engaged in the mercantile business in Pendleton, Oregon, married Catherine Kenny, and they have one son, John. James is probationary officer at Kalispell, having under his charge three counties. He married Mollie Bosten, a native of Kentucky. William, who is a stockman at Thompson Lakes, married Phoebe Elliott, and they have a son, Adelbert, who is a student in electricity at Oakland, California. Jane is the wife of L. C. Sloan, a stock raiser at Browning, Montana, and they have one son, Manly McCormick, who is now a student in the Armour Technical Institute, Chicago. Jessie, who was the first white child born on the east side of the Flathead River, became the wife of Duncan J. St. Claire, a stockman at Browning, Montana.

Politically John Lang has been a supporter of the republican party ever since coming to this country, his first presidential vote having been for U. S. Grant. Mrs. Lang is independent in her political attitude, giving her support only to those measures and men which she deems to be for the best interests of all the people. Religiously they were both reared in the faith of the Presbyterian Church, to which they still are connected and to which they give generous support. Fraternally Mr. Lang is a member of the Knights of Pythias. Mr. Lang has been essentially a man of the people, because he has large faith in humanity and is optimistic in his views. His success in life has been the direct fruitage of consecutive effort, directed and controlled by good judgment and correct principles.

Shirley S. Ford, a prominent young banker of Great Falls, is a son of Robert and Sue (McClanahan) Ford. The life record of his father, one of the earliest settlers in Montana, and long a prominent stockman and later a banker at Great Falls, is sketched on other pages.

Shirley S. Ford was born at his father's home at Sun River in Cascade County, March 9, 1887, being the fourth of five children. He was educated in the public schools of Great Falls, prepared for college at St. Paul's School at Concord, New Hampshire, then entered Harvard University, from which he received his A. B. degree in 1909. Returning home, he went to work for the Great Falls National Bank as bookkeeper, and since January, 1914, has served as vice president of that institution. Mr. Ford is a member of the Rotary Club, Commercial Club, and in politics is a democrat.

August 25, 1915, he married Miss Elizabeth Wallace, only child of William J. and Elizabeth Wallace. Her father was for many years a prominent lawyer at Helena, but is now living in New York City. Mr. and Mrs. Ford have one daughter, Gertrude Elizabeth.

Henry Holmes Stanley. Whether the elements of success in this life are innate attributes of the individual or whether they are quickened by a process of circumstantial development, it is impossible to clearly determine. Yet the study of a successful life, whatever the field of endeavor, is none the less interesting and profitable by reason of this same uncertainty. In studying the life history of Henry H. Stanley, a well known business man of Great Falls, we find many qualities in his make-up that always gain definite success in any career if properly directed, as has evidently been done in his case through his persistence in the pursuit of a worthy purpose.

Henry Holmes Stanley was born in Chariton, Lucas County, Iowa, on May 27, 1860, and is the son of Robert and Evelyn Stanley. Robert Stanley was a native of Indiana and died at the age of seventy-three years. He became one of the pioneer farmers of Lucas County, Iowa, where he spent his last days, having retired and moved into the Town of Chariton. Politically he was a republican. His wife was a native of Illinois and died at the age of fifty-six years. To them were born seven children, of which number four are living.

Henry H. Stanley attended the public schools of his native community and remained on the paternal farmstead until he had attained his majority. He then went to Seattle, Washington, where for some time he was employed in lumber mills, and later on farms in that community. Going from there to Idaho, he was employed in the mines for about a year, when he went to Phillipsburg, Montana, and was there employed as a miner for some time, later following the same occupation at Butte for about a year. He then came to Great Falls and engaged in teaming, but about a year and a half later he sold out and engaged in the real estate and loan business, with which he has been identified continuously since and today is considered one of the leaders in his line in this section of the state. He has been very successful in handling many large real estate deals and has so conducted his affairs as to give entire satisfaction to those with whom he has had dealings. He possesses an accurate knowledge of land and building values and his services are frequently sought as an appraiser of values on real estate.

On February 15, 1880, Mr. Stanley was married to Amelia C. Wood, who was born in Lucas County, Iowa, and to them have been born five children, namely: Howard, who married Ruth Proyer and they have one daughter; Adelaide; Amelia; Evelyn and Dean. Howard and Dean are associated with their father in business.

Politically Mr. Stanley gives his support to the democratic party, though he is not an aspirant for public office. Nevertheless he takes a commendable interest in the public affairs of the community and for the past seven years he has rendered efficient service to the public as a member of the school board. His religious membership is with the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally he is a member of Cascade Lodge No. 34, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Great Falls Chapter No. 9, Royal Arch Masons; Black Eagle Commandery No. 8, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Helena. He is also a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason.

The splendid success which has come to Mr. Stanley is directly traceable to the salient points in his character, for he started in life at the bottom of the ladder, which he has mouned unaided. With a mind capable of planning, he combined a will strong enough to execute his well-formulated purposes, and his great energy, sound judgment, keen discrimination and perseverance have resulted in the success which is now crowning his efforts.

J. E. Kenkel, the pioneer shoe man of Great Falls, was born in St. Paul, Minnesota, in 1863. He came to Montana in 1887 by way of the Missouri River to Fort Benton and thence by stage to Great Falls, where he engaged in the shoe business the same year, the style of the firm being Budge & Kenkel. Their opening stock came to Helena by way of the Northern Pacific and was from there freighted by the T. C. Power Forwarding Company to this place.

Mr. Kenkel's parents were John and Mary (O'Connor) Kenkel, who were among the early settlers in St. Paul, where his father was engaged in the cigar manufacturing business for many years, a member of the firm of Hart & Kenkel. His father died in 1899 and his mother in 1913.

In October, 1891, Mr. Kenkel was married to Miss Adaline Riley, a native of Lansing, Iowa. Five children were born to their union, and the three still living are John T., Kathrine and Evelyn. John T. Kenkel is associated with his father in business.

HARRY B. MITCHELL has been a resident of Montana since 1890, with the exception of a comparatively brief period when he followed his occupation of a newspaperman elsewhere. He was born in Scotland April 7, 1867, and came with his parents to the United States while yet a small boy. The family settled in Fergus Falls, Minnesota, and there he passed his boyhood years and received his education. His parents were David and Mary (Ferguson) Mitchell. They were the parents of thirteen children, eight sons and five daughters, Harry being the ninth in age. Upon leaving school he entered the office of the Fergus Falls Journal and learned the printing trade. Striking westward, he came to Great Falls in 1890 and entered the employ of the Great Falls Leader. In 1892 he purchased the Belt Mountain Miner, published at Barker, then a flourishing mining camp. A year or so later he sold that newspaper and became associated with J. Alex. Wright in the publication of the Neihart Miner, a business connection which has continued ever since, although the Neihart Miner has long ceased to exist. In the summer of 1893 the slump in the price of silver brought stagnation to mining in Neihart, and Mr. Mitchell was compelled to seek employment elsewhere. Leaving Montana he was engaged in newspaper work in Minneapolis and Chicago, spending the winter in the same employment in New York. The following summer business brightened in Neihart and he returned there, resuming his position as editor of the Neihart Miner. In 1896 he purchased an interest in the Great Falls Leader and was its manager until 1900. In that year he sold his interest in the Leader and became managing editor of the Great Falls Tribune, and in that position he continued until 1918.

In the meantime, in 1907, he had purchased a tract of land a few miles south of Great Falls, and in the course of time this was developed into a dairy farm of considerable size, being, in fact, one of the most modern and probably the largest distinctively dairy farms in the state, the milk from which is sold directly to consumers in Great Falls. He retired from the newspaper business in 1918 for the purpose of giving the whole of his attention to the farm. The farm is irrigated with water pumped from the Missouri by electricity, Mr. Mitchell being the pioneer in the use of electricity for this purpose in Montana.

In 1916 Mr. Mitchell was a democratic candidate for Congress for Montana, but was defeated by a small plurality by Miss Jeanette Rankin. Again in 1918 he was nominated by his party without opposition, but was again defeated by a small plurality in a district largely republican. These are the only times he has been a candidate for public office, but he was for fourteen years a member of the Great Falls Library Board and is at present a member and vice president of the State Livestock Commission. He is a Mason, a Knight Templar and Shriner and an Elk. During the war he was active in the Red Cross, and is still a member of the home service department of that organization.

On August 8, 1895, Mr. Mitchell was married to Miss Mary Greening, a native of Wisconsin and daughter of William and Catherine (Cameron) Greening. The former is still alive (1920) aged ninety-four years. Mrs. Mitchell is one of the prominent women leaders of the state, being very active in club work and other civic activities. She has been twice president of the Montana State Federation of Women's Clubs, and during the war was chairman of the Woman's Council of Defense for Cascade County. Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell have three children: Catherine M., Fergus G. and Hugh B. Catherine is a student at Wellesley College, Massachusetts, and Fergus attends the State College at Bozeman. The latter served in the students' trainings corps during the closing months of the war.

CYRUS W. BUCK. The gentlemen to a brief review of whose life and character the reader's attention is herewith directed is among the favorably known and representative citizens of Western Montana. He has by his enterprise and progressive methods contributed to the advancement of his community during the course of an honorable career, and he has ascended through his individual efforts from the bottom of the ladder to a place of relative importance in this locality, having ever been known as a man of unswerving integrity, sound judgment and honesty of purpose.

Cyrus W. Buck was born in Washington County, Minnesota, on the 5th day of October, 1868, and he is the son of Orvil and Lavina (Mars) Buck. The father was born in Indiana in 1843, and died in 1915, and the mother, who is also deceased, was a native of Minnesota. They became the parents of four children, two sons and two daughters, the subject of this sketch having been the second child in order of birth. Orvil Buck went from Indiana to Minnesota in young manhood and engaged in farming in Ottertail County, where he lived until 1902, when he removed to the State of Washington, where he engaged in farming and fruit raising until 1910. In the latter year he located in Chouteau County, Montana, in what is now Teton County, and was there engaged in the sheep business up to the time of his death. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and of the Grand Army of the Republic, his affiliation with the last-named organization being consistent from the fact that during the Civil war he served for one year and six months in the Union army as a member of the Sixty-first Regiment, Minnesota Volunteer Infantry. Politically he gave his support to the republican party.

Cyrus W. Buck received his education in the public schools of Minnesota, having been reared in the home of his grandfather. The first money ever earned by him was by selling to his grandfather for $2 a dog which had cost him $1. The days of his early youth were spent in working on the home farm, and at the age of sixteen years he engaged in working out as a farm hand in Ottertail County, Minnesota. After about two years of such work he went to Glenwood Springs, Colorado, and entered the employ of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad, working in the supply department for about two months, at the end of which time he was transferred to the civil engineering department. He continued in that work until April 1, 1887, when he came overland by the way of Salt Lake to Silverbow, Montana, thence on to Fort Benton, where he was employed in riding the ranges as a cowboy up to 1894, when he located a homestead in Chouteau County, near Lost Lake, and here he has since been engaged in the horse, cattle, sheep and hog business. He has been successful in his ranch enterprise and is recognized as one of the most progressive and enterprising stock men in Western Montana. He ships his cattle mainly to the Chicago markets, and buys and sells many horses. His ranch property is well improved with substantial and conveniently arranged buildings, the general appearance of the place indicating the owner to be a man of sound judgment and excellent taste.

J. H. Barrington

On January 11, 1899, at Fort Benton, Montana, Mr. Buck was married to Margaret McVicar Gray, who was born in Glasgow, Scotland. Her parents, William and Isabel (McVicar) Gray, were also natives of Scotland, and both are deceased, the father dying in 1913 and the mother in 1899. They became the parents of twelve children, six sons and six daughters, all of whom were born in the land of hills and heather. The father was a market man in Glasgow for many years, up to 1880, when he came to the United States, locating in Minneapolis, Minnesota. Some time later he sent for his family, who joined him here. In 1881 he came up the Missouri River to Fort Benton and located on a ranch in Chouteau County. Later he returned to Minnesota and bought cattle, which he shipped by rail to Billings, Montana, from which point he drove them overland, a distance of 210 miles, to his ranch in Chouteau County. In 1887 he added a herd of sheep to his stock interests, and later added horses and hogs. All of his meat animals have been shipped to the Chicago market. In 1902 he retired from active business and is now enjoying a richly earned rest. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church and gives his support to the republican party. To Mr. and Mrs. Buck have been born five children, namely: Marion McVicar, Jack, Margaret A., Grace B. and Robert R.

Politically Mr. Buck is an ardent supporter of the republican party, though to a certain extent he reserves the right to vote for the men and measures which meet with his approval, regardless of political lines. Religiously he is a member of the Presbyterian Church, to which he is a liberal contributor. Fraternally he is a member of Benton Lodge No. 25, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In every phase of community life Mr. Buck has stood consistently for whatever will advance the best interests of the community, and because of his clean character and genial personal qualities he enjoys a well-earned popularity in this community.

J. V. Harrington. For more than three decades the honored and venerable pioneer and substantial farmer whose name appears above was a resident of Western Montana and a prominent factor in its material growth, playing well his part in the material, civic and moral unbuilding of the same. He noted many wonderful changes after he made his advent into the wilderness here and he talked interestingly of the early days when this section of the country was still the home of the Indians and the haunts of many varieties of wild beasts. The death of this honored Montana pioneer occurred on the 17th of April, 1920.

J. V. Harrington was born in the quaint and historic Town of Pictou, Nova Scotia, and is the son of John and Elizabeth (Norton) Harrington. He was educated in the public schools of that country, but when only fifteen years of age he determined to cast his lot with the people of the states. Going to Eastport, Maine, he was soon engaged in engineering work, his first job being the erection of machinery on the steamboat "Westmoreland." He then sailed to Portland, Maine, and Boston, Massachusetts, and during the summer time made many trips to Philadelphia and to southern ports, whence vegetables and other farm products were brought to the northern ports. During the winter months he sailed to New Orleans, carrying marketable produce from northern ports. This program he carried out during three seasons on the steamship "Oriental," calling at the ports of New Orleans, Pensacola, Havana and Cienfugoes, and carrying north a cargo of melons and other tropical and semi-tropical fruits and vegetables. At length Mr. Harrington decided to transfer his attention to the Great Lakes, and for some time he served as an engineer on a tugboat on the lakes and Detroit River, occasionally taking trips to Cleveland and Erie. One fall he was taken sick with the "fever and ague" and was compelled to lay the boat up at Milwaukee for the winter while he went to Chicago for medical treatment. About the time he recovered sufficiently to think of work a call was made for men to work on the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad, mechanics especially being called for. Mr. Harrington answered the call and went to the Wasatch range, which was then the terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad, where he was engaged as an engineman. However, hearing wonderful stories of the success attending gold hunters in Montana and Idaho, he determined to venture in that line himself. He first located at Rocky Bar, Idaho, where his mining venture was fairly successful. He determined to solve the best means of working the ground in sluicing and hydraulic power, and in this he was successful. Possessed with a natural desire to see the country, he then went to Arizona. While there he became engaged in a round-up of some bad Indians, being associated with a noted Indian fighter named Smith. On one occasion also he was with General Crook, the famous Indian fighter, at a time when the Indians had been unusually ugly, killing men, women and children in a most dastardly manner. Mr. Harrington joined with other citizens and United States troops and they pursued the Indians, killing 103 of the savages and taking others as prisoners. From Arizona he came by horseback to Montana, and at Butte he was again engaged as an engineer. While there he helped to erect the largest hoisting engine in the State of Montana, also one of the largest Cornish pumps in the state.

Two years later Mr. Harrington came to the Flathead Valley and filed on a homestead claim of 160 acres, and also bought considerable land adjoining, his holdings of Montana land finally amounting to about 1,000 acres. This has continued the home ranch to the present time, though the family now spend the major portion of their time in their modern and comfortable home in Kalispell. At one time Mr. Harrington operated a threshing machine on the land where now stands the beautiful and thriving City of Kalispell. In this connection it is worthy of note that to Mr. Harrington belongs the credit for bringing the first steam thresher and the first steam plows to the Flathead Valley. The secret of his success was simply that he made the best use of the opportunities that presented themselves. He was a good business manager and accumulated a goodly property, but at the same time was generous in his support of every measure for the general good and was of material assistance to others who had a hard time getting started. He was a stockholder in the First National Bank of Kalispell and was also the president of the Dayton State Bank, both being strong and influential financial institutions. He was active in all matters affecting the Flathead Valley during all the years of his residence here, and related many interesting stories. Among these he told of one occasion when Indians had committed depredations in Missoula County. Mr. Harrington was instrumental in capturing and bringing them to justice, three of the criminals being hung. Three escaped, and it took three years of good work to capture and bring them to justice. While hunting and fighting Indians in Arizona Mr. Harrington had learned how to deal with them, and his services were now most valuable to the authorities in their efforts to round up the criminals.

While living in Butte Mr. Harrington was married to Mrs. Nellie Hathaway, who was born in Idaho, the daughter of William and Mary (Edwards) Richards. By a former marriage Mrs. Harrington became the mother of a daughter Elizabeth, and an adopted son, James. Three children were born unto Mr. and Mrs. Harrington, John, Viva and Nellie. All of these children have been educated in the public schools of Kalispell. John is assisting in the operation of the home ranch. James, who also is helping to operate the ranch, married Rosa Lerch, and they have two children, J. V., Jr., and Hilda. Viva, who possesses a remarkable singing voice, is specializing in music and is now a student in the Chicago Conservatory of Music studying both instrumental and vocal. Nellie, who has attended school in Spokane, is now a student in the Kalispell High School. Elizabeth is the wife of J. W. Harrington, of Alberta, Canada.

Politically Mr. Harrington was an earnest supporter of the democratic party, while fraternally he was a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Religiously he was an earnest member of the Presbyterian Church, as is also his wife, of which they are generous supporters. Mr. Harrington was a great believer in travel as an educational agent, and made a number of pleasant and interesting trips. In 1913 he and the family took a trip to Liverpool, England, Swansea, Wales, London, England, and Belfast, Ireland. Mr. Harrington by ceaseless toil and endeavor gained a marked success in business affairs, won the respect and confidence of men and was recognized as one of the distinctively representative citizens of his community.

Bower Brothers Ranch. The ranch known as "Bower Brothers' Ranch" lying in the western part of the Judith Basin country, east of Wolf Butte and south of the High Wood Mountains on Surprise Creek, in what was then Magher County, Montana Territory, was established by A. W. and J. E. Bower in 1880. In the spring of 1881 their brother G. C. Bower joined them.

All were born in Pleasant Valley, Dutchess County, New York. All came to Montana by way of Bismarck and the river route to Fort Benton, the head of navigation on the Missouri, at that time a thirty-days' trip from New York. The country was full of game and Indians, although the Indians had been ordered to their reservations.

The firm, afterwards incorporated, continued in business for twenty-seven years or until 1907, building up one of the largest and best sheep ranches in Montana. Their wools were much sought for by the large manufacturing houses of the East.

A. W. Bower went East to live. J. E. Bower makes his home in Helena, is a director in the Union Bank & Trust Company, while G. C. Bower became a resident of Great Falls. He is a thirty-second degree Mason and president of the Great Falls Dairy Products Company.

Leslie Henry Hamilton. It is said that this well known Great Falls capitalist, banker and business man started his career in Montana forty years ago with only about $500 in capital which he invested in a flock of sheep. He was in the sheep industry through various ups and downs, and eventually saw his flocks "grazing on a thousand hills." He has had his home in Great Falls for many years, and his executive ability, his means and influence have been sought by many of the leading enterprises of that locality.

Mr. Hamilton was born on his father's farm in Windham County, Vermont, December 6, 1852, son of Joseph Henry and Abigail (Mather) Hamilton. His parents were also natives of Windham County, and of old New England ancestry. His father, who died in 1899, at the age of seventy-two, was educated in the common schools of Vermont and spent his active career as a farmer in the Green Mountain State. He was honored with several local offices, was a member of the Congregational Church, which he served as deacon, and cast his first votes for whig candidates and later was a republican. He came out to Montana several times during the '90s, visiting his son in the Judith Basin. His first wife died in 1860, at the age of twenty-six. Of her five children Leslie H. is the oldest, and four are still living. The father married for his second wife Abigail Cross, and had three sons, two of whom are living.

Leslie H. Hamilton received his early impressions of life on his father's rugged and rather stern farm in Vermont. He was eight years old when his mother died. He lived at home until reaching his majority, and then for several years did some contract work getting out timber and cordwood. His chief employer in that work was the father of the late Gen. Nelson J. Miles. In March, 1878, Mr. Hamilton left home for the West, traveling by rail as far as Winnemucca, Nevada, and thence taking a stage sixty miles north to the Hoppin Brothers sheep ranch near Camp McDermott. He worked on that ranch herding sheep and building fence and later had charge of the feed lots, looking after about 1600 sheep and ninety head of cattle. In July, 1879, the Hoppin Brothers sent him to Bannack City, Montana, with 5,000 head of sheep consigned to a well known Montana French miner, Abail Bazette. When he turned over the sheep to Mr. Bazette, Mr. Hamilton remained in his employ as superintendent of the Bazette sheep interests. He also did some mining. In April, 1880, he bought a team and journeyed into the Yellowstone Valley and on to the Judith Basin. At that time he had as working partners Albert Barney and John Stoutenberg. They formed a partnership under the name Barney, Hamilton & Stoutenberg to engage in the sheep business. They bought their first thousand head of sheep in the fall of 1880. In 1888 Mr. Hamilton bought the interests of Mr. Barney, and in the meantime Stoutenberg had sold his share to Rev. Jacob Mills. Mills and Hamilton continued the partnership under the name of the Sage Creek Sheep Company, and in 1890 the company was incorporated with Mr. Hamilton as president, Mr. Mills, vice president, and Mrs. Hamilton, secretary and treasurer. This became one of the biggest sheep outfits in the Judith Basin. The company had 26,000 acres of land, which in 1908 they sold to the Cotton Wood Coal Company for $260,000. At that time they also had 50,000 head of sheep on the range, and these were also sold.

In the meantime, in 1891, Mr. Hamilton had moved his home to Great Falls. He was one of the organizers of the Bank of Fergus County at Lewistown, the oldest state bank in Montana, started in 1887, and he is still a director of that institution. He was one of the organizers of the Commercial National Bank of Great Falls in 1913, and since 1916 has served as its president. In 1908, after selling his sheep and ranch properties, Mr. Hamilton took his family to Boston in order to afford his children the advantages of the best institutions of learning in the East. He remained there three years, and on returning to Great Falls in 1911, where he had retained many valuable property interests, he built the Standard Garage, which was the largest and best equipped garage in the state. He sold his automobile business in 1914. Mr. Hamilton was one of the founders of the Deaconess Hospital at Great Falls, and put up the first building and has always been one of the stanchest supporters of the institution. He is president of its board of trustees. Mr. Hamilton is one of the large stockholders in the Montana Flour Mills Company, which operates three mills, one at Lewistown, Harlowton and Great Falls, besides a chain of elevators. He is a stockholder in the Montana Lumber Company, the Montana Power Company, and has interests in banks and business undertakings too numerous to mention. Mr. Hamilton is a republican, without official record, and is a member of the Congregational Church. During the war he saw his two sons go into the service, and at home he took a leading part in the various campaigns for war funds and was especially active in behalf of the Red Cross.

Mr. Hamilton married Miss Elizabeth Montgomery at Sage Creek in the Judith Basin on August 10, 1887. She was born at Newport, Vermont. To their marriage were born five children. Julia Bell, born February 6, 1890, is a graduate of the LaSalle Seminary in the East, and is the wife of Julius C. Peters, a Great Falls attorney, and the mother of three children. Henry Montgomery the oldest son, born December 6, 1892, was educated in the public schools of Great Falls, in the Phillips Exeter Academy, and graduated from Dartmouth College in the class of 1914. Before America entered the war with Germany he made application for service with an ambulance corps in France. In April, 1917, he enlisted in the American Field Service, and for five months was on ambulance duty on the French front and for five months on the Italian front. He then enlisted in the French army, choosing the light artillery, and was sent to the French Artillery School at Fontain Bleau, graduating November 1, 1918, with the rank of aspirant. For three months he was with the Army of Occupation in Belgium and Luxemburg, and received his honorable discharge at Paris February 15, 1919. Abigail Mather, the third of the children, was born in July, 1894, was educated in Vassar College, and is now the wife of William Heron, and they live in Florida. They have one daughter. Harley Alexander, born in March 18, 1895, was educated in the Great Falls grammar and high schools, the University of Wisconsin and the University of Minnesota, and on June 28, 1918, enlisted in the United States Infantry. He was assigned to duty with Company C of the One Hundred and Fifty-ninth Regiment. After a very brief period of training he left Camp Kearney in California and went overseas in July, 1918. He saw service in the great battle of the Argonne and was wounded October 5, 1918, and as a result of his wounds died and was buried at the American Field Hospital No. 4 at LaGrange-aux-Bois on October 7, 1918. Leslie H. Hamilton, Jr., the youngest of the children, was taking a course in banking at the University of Pennsylvania, where he died at the age of nineteen.

Adam Stimpert is a past master in the agricultural implement and machinery business. During his hard working youth on an Illinois farm he learned to appreciate good implements, though there were few of them at his command. Nearly twenty-five years ago he engaged in the implement business in Illinois, and in 1911 transferred his field of operations to Great Falls, where he is now sole proprietor of the largest implement and machinery house in Cascade County.

Mr. Stimpert as a local business man and booster of Great Falls has many interests outside his home community. While in the Legislature he originated the constructive measure by which Montana voted an appropriation to acquire a state owned elevator system for the benefit of the Montana grain growers. Mr. Stimpert is a member of the board of managers of the State Terminal Elevator Commission, and has given much of his time from his business to the investigations and the other preliminary efforts looking toward the establishment of the first state owned elevator.

Mr. Stimpert was born on his father's farm in Woodford County, Illinois, January 9, 1869, a son of Theobald and Charlotte (Muller) Stimpert. His parents were both natives of Germany. Theobald Stimpert came to New York in the early '50s, met and married Charlotte Muller in that city, afterward lived at Boston, and from there moved west to a farm in Woodford County, Illinois. He had much of his land cleared and was on the high road to prosperity when death overtook him in the prime of life, in 1871, at the age of forty-three. His widow survived him and passed away on the old Illinois homestead in 1903. Of their eight children four are still living, Adam being the youngest child.

Adam Stimpert was only two years old when his father died. The work of the farm had to be carried on somehow, and as soon as old enough Adam Stimpert did his share in the duties. He attended local schools only for a few terms, and at the age of thirteen his mother called his education finished and required his continuous presence and work in the fields. At the age of sixteen he and an older brother rented the homestead, and after his marriage Mr. Stimpert took his bride to the home farm and remained there until the spring of 1896.

In that year he moved to Benson, Illinois, and engaged in the farm implement and machinery business. He had the technical talents and qualifications that made this an appropriate field for his energies, and his aggressiveness soon showed that he had chosen wisely. For several years he was traveling representative for the Huber Manufacturing Company in Northern Illinois, and later became a traveling man for Reeves & Company, handling their machinery in Illinois. In 1911 this company sent him to Montana, with headquarters at Great Falls. Mr. Stimpert has been a steadfast enthusiast with respect to the opportunities and advantages of Great Falls ever since locating here. His alertness to new opportunity soon caused him to sever his connection with Reeves & Company and buy the old established Judd Implement Company, which started business at Great Falls in 1895. Mr. Stimpert has since been sole proprietor of this business, and has extended its scope from an exclusive retail to both a wholesale and retail farm implement concern.

Mr. Stimpert has been a democrat in his political affiliations, and on that ticket he was elected a member of the State Legislature in 1916. During the following session he introduced a bill providing for a state owned terminal elevator, and after the passage of the bill and when the first board of managers was under consideration, he was appropriately selected for one of the board. His appointment was made April 8, 1919. Mr. Stimpert is also a member of the International Association of Rotary clubs and is affiliated with Euclid Lodge No. 58, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Great Falls Chapter No. 4, Royal Arch Masons, Black Eagle Commandery, Knights Templar, Helena Consistory of the Scottish Rite, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is a member of the Christian Church and is identified with all the local organizations for better business, better government and better general development of the community of Great Falls.

January 14, 1892, Mr. Stimpert married Miss Jescena Seggerman, a native of Woodford County, Illinois, and a daughter of Henry Seggerman. To their marriage were born five sons, only two of whom have reached mature years. Walter, born September 3, 1894, early in the war with Germany enlisted in the aviation department at San Diego, was transferred to Dallas, Texas, and then to Waco, and was promoted to first sergeant November 11, 1918, armistice day, receiving his honorable discharge soon afterward. The son Frederick D., born April 7, 1899, was a member of the Students Army Training Corps of the University of Montana at Missoula, and was granted his discharge from that organization after the cessation of hostilities.

George E. Grover. The greatest results in life are often attained by simple means and the exercise of the ordinary qualities of common sense and perseverance; but practical industry, wisely and vigorously applied, never fails of success. The everyday life, with its multiform duties, affords every opportunity for the acquisition of experience of the best kind, and its most travel-worn ways provide an earnest worker with ample scope for effort and improvement. This fact having been realized by George E. Grover, the well-known stone and marble worker of Great Falls and one of the most highly esteemed citizens of that locality, he seized the small opportunities that he encountered on the Labyrinthine road of life, permitting no obstacles to bar his advance toward the ultimate goal of success—never attained by the inert, craven and ambitionless plodder.

George E. Grover is a full-blooded Yankee by both ancestry and birth, his nativity having occurred at Brandon, Vermont, on August 27, 1868, and he is the son of Samuel T. and Julia (Manley) Grover, both also natives of Vermont. The father, who was born in 1841, is still living, his wife having died in 1877, at the age of thirty-five years. They were the parents of two children, the subject of this sketch and a sister. Samuel T. Grover spent his boyhood days on his parent's farm, securing his education in the district schools. At the outbreak of the Civil war in 1861 he enlisted in Company G, Twelfth Regiment, Vermont Volunteer Infantry, taking part in all the campaigns, battles and varied experiences of the command up to the time when he was taken sick with typhoid fever. On his recovery he was granted an honorable discharge and returned to his home. There he first engaged in farming, but later teamed for a number of years, until his retirement. Politically he is a republican and fraternally is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, being a past commander of the post to which he belongs.

George E. Grover remained on the paternal farmstead until he was fourteen years of age, when he learned the marble business at Proctor, Vermont, one of the great marble-producing centers of the country. In 1888 he went to Chicago, Illinois, where he was in the employ of the Vermont Marble Company up to 1903. In that year he came to Great Falls and engaged in the monument business, in connection with which he also opened a department for the production of cut stone for building purposes. He has been eminently successful in this enterprise and has supplied some of the most beautiful monuments now found in our cemeteries. In both design and execution the product of his marble shop will compare favorably with the best work seen anywhere in the West. He has supplied dressed stone for a number of the best buildings of this community, and in all his contracts he has given thorough satisfaction, for one of the cardinal principles of his creed is to turn out only such work as will pass the most rigid inspection. As a result he has won not only a large share of the local business in his line, but also has gained that which is of more real value, the confidence and good will of all who have had dealings with him.

On April 16, 1892, Mr. Grover was married to Anna M. Thompson, who was born at Neenah, Wisconsin, and they have two children, Ethel, the wife of E. J. Higgs, and Marjorie Jane.

Politically Mr. Grover gives his support to the republican party, and has taken a keen interest in local public affairs. In April, 1917, he was elected alderman from the Third Ward and was re-elected in 1919. Fraternally he is a member of Cascade Lodge No. 34, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Great Falls Chapter No. 9, Royal Arch Masons; Black Eagle Commandery No. 8, Knights Templar, of which he is a past commander. He is also a member of the Great Falls Chamber of Commerce, in which he has taken an active part in assisting in the furtherance of every movement for the upbuilding and advancement of Great Falls. Genial and approachable in manner, he has gained a host of acquaintances, all of whom are his friends, for he has proved himself deserving of the friendship of all good men.

Thomas M. Collins. The history of the loyal sons and representative citizens of Montana would not be complete should the name that heads this review be omitted. When the fierce fire of rebellion was raging throughout the Southland, threatening to destroy the Union, he responded with patriotic fervor to the call for volunteers, and in some of the bloodiest battles for which that great war was noted proved his loyalty to the government he loved so well. During a useful life in the region where he lives he has labored diligently to promote the interests of the people, while at the same time insuring his own welfare. He bore his full share in the great task of opening up the Flathead country to civilization, coming here at a time when the danger from Indians and wild animals was still a reality. Through the period of early development he was an important factor in the improvement and advancement of material, civic and moral affairs.

Thomas M. Collins was born in Franklin County, Vermont, and is the son of Thomas and Margaret Collins. Early in life he was taken to Clinton County, New York, where he was reared, and he secured his education in the public schools of Chazy in that county. On July 29, 1861, when seventeen years of age, he enlisted at Burlington, Vermont, in defense of the Union. He enlisted as a musician and was assigned as bugler to Company H, Fourteenth Regiment, United States Infantry. This command was assigned to the First Brigade, Second Division, Fifth Army Corps, and became a part of the great Army of the Potomac. Mr. Collins took part in sixteen major engagements, and in the seven days battle in the Peninsular, under General McClellan, he lost a brother, who was shot down at his side. On July 29, 1864, in front of Petersburg, Mr. Collins received an honorable discharge because of the expiration of his period of enlistment, and returned to his home in Ellenburg, New York. His next venture was as a sailor on the high seas, going on the Minerva Smith, a whaler, from New Bedford, Massachusetts. He made two voyages on the whaler, and then for six months he was a member of the crew of the revenue cutter Miami, which was stationed at Newport, Rhode Island. This boat had the distinction of having been used by President Lincoln as his pleasure yacht while in the presidency. Mr. Collins was next in the merchant service, going around Cape Horn to San Francisco. There, after six years service on the water, he quit the sea and went to Prescott, Arizona, where for a time he followed mining and prospecting. From there he went to Pioche, Nevada, where he also prospected and mined. He next located in the mining camp at Frisco, Utah, where he became superintendent of the noted "Cerro Gordo" mine. Some time later, after having devoted himself to mining and prospecting for eighteen years, he moved to Anaconda, Montana, where he was employed in the great smelter works for five years. He also engaged in the real estate business there, erecting houses and selling them, but he sold out there and moved to the Flathead country, where in 1886, he homesteaded a farm. Here during the years following he devoted himself to the improvement and cultivation of this ranch, which he maintained at a high state of improvement, the residence and farm buildings being of a substantial and attractive character, while he ever followed up-to-date and progressive methods in his operations. Eventually he sold out there and moved into the Town of Kalispell, where he bought a comfortable home and where he is quietly spending the evening of his life, in comfortable enjoyment of that rest which he has richly earned.

While a resident of Frisco, Utah, Mr. Collins was married to Fannie Stewart, and to them were born five children, Charles Clinton, William Wilkie, Thomas M., Jr., Fannie J. and Harold. Mr. Collins suffered the loss of his first wife by death, and some years later he was married to Mrs. Edward Trueman. Her maiden name was Margaret Anna Inglis, the daughter of William and Fannie (Wright) Inglis, of Bolivar, Missouri. In that place she was reared and educated until ten years of age, when she accompanied an aunt to New Mexico. Later she accompanied her to Denver, Colorado, thence to Laramie, Wyoming, and Deadwood, Black Hills, South Dakota. Some time later, in Nevada, she was married to Edward B. Trueman, a mine owner. Later they moved to Montana, where Mr. Trueman engaged in mining. They became the parents of four children, namely: Henry Edward, Bertha Idela, Raymond Inglis and Edward Benton. In 1883 they came to the Flathead Valley to engage in farming. They left Anaconda with 2,000 head of cattle and 500 head of horses, most of which were sold on the way. They became the owners of three ranches, a part of their land comprising the site of the future City of Kalispell, and at that time Missoula was the nearest postoffice. But little improvement had been effected in the Flathead country, settlers being widely separated, while Indians were frequent callers at the settlers' cabins and wild bears were numerous. The death of Mr. Trueman occurred about fifteen years ago, and Mr. Trueman remained a widow until her marriage to Mr. Collins in 1916.

Mr. Collins relates many thrilling incidents of the pioneer days, and one in particular is worthy of note here. While returning from a trip to Ravalli, Montana, he met Mr. Trueman, who was returning from Missoula. The stage, which made but one trip a week, had gone, and their only alternative was to walk the distance home, fifty miles. They two and another man, Thomas Stanton, started to walk, but before the journey was completed Mr. Collins became exhausted. They walked far into the night, but at length Mr. Collins could go no further and told his companions to go on and he would follow as soon as he had rested. It was getting cold, so before leaving him they built a fire. When they had traveled several miles farther they were overtaken by a horseman who reported that he had passed Mr. Collins, who was still lying by the roadside where they had left him. Mr. Trueman, uneasy over leaving his friend alone, asked the stranger for the temporary loan of his horse that he might go back and look after Mr. Collins. The horseman declined to loan his horse, claiming that Mr. Trueman might be a horse thief. After some parleying Mr. Trueman finally pulled the rider off his horse, told him to go ahead to a certain stopping place and await his return. Riding back, he found Mr. Collins lying where he had left him, but in so deep a sleep it was difficult to arouse him. It was getting bitter cold, and it was with considerable difficulty that Mr. Trueman got Mr. Collins up on the horse behind him, in which way he got him safely to the next stopping place, where he returned the horse to its owner.

Mrs. Collins has a vivid recollection of the early days of Butte, when it was but an embryo mining camp. Mr. Trueman was a participant in many of the stirring events of the early days in the Northwest. He went all through the Nez Perce war, acting as guide to the United States troops. They marched from Assiniboia, under Captain Norwood, to the Big Hole country, thence to the Snake River and the Yellowstone, and was on the Gibbons battle on Big Hole River, that being the battle in which Captain Logan lost his life. When Trueman left his family to go with the United States troops to battle with the Nez Perce Indians he left his butcher business in charge of his wife who conducted it during his absence. There were some 200 men employed at Dewey's Flats who were dependent on Mr. Trueman for their meat supply, which supply ran short, and as the cattle were in the vicinity in which the Indians were giving so much trouble there was great danger in going after the cattle for a fresh supply of meat, the men refusing to take the necessary danger, so Mr. Trueman in company with a boy seventeen years old agreed to take the risk, which they successfully accomplished in two days and one night and received a royal welcome on their return to camp with the much needed supplies. Mrs. Collins remembers when she was living in the Black Hills that the Sioux became troublesome and were driven back from the settlement to Laramie City.

Mrs. Collins is a consistent member of the Christian Church at Kalispell and is a member of the Woman's Woodcraft. Mr. Collins was reared a Catholic. They are both hospitable and generous, and an hour spent in their comfortable home, listening to their stories of the early days, is a genuine pleasure. They look upon the world with optimistic eyes, rejoicing that they have had so large a part in the wonderful development of the Flathead country, and secure in the love and esteem of all who know them.

Mr. Trueman was sheriff of Elks, Nevada, and also was sheriff in Beaverhead County, Montana.

FRANK O. WHEELER. It is a well authenticated fact that success comes not as the caprice of chance, but as the legitimate result of well-applied energy, unflagging determination and perseverance in a course of action once decided upon by the individual. Only those who diligently seek the goddess Fortuna, find her—she never was known to smile upon the idler or dreamer. The subject of this sketch clearly understood this early in life, so he did not seek any royal road to success, but sought to direct his feet along the well beaten paths of those who had won in the battle of life along legitimate lines. In tracing his life history it is clearly seen that the prosperity Mr. Wheeler now enjoys has been won by commendable qualities, and it is also his personal worth that has gained for him the good standing among his fellow citizens in Great Falls, which he now enjoys.

Frank O. Wheeler was born in Burlington, Vermont, on May 2, 1887, and he is the second in order of birth of the three children born to his parents, Charles F. and Louise (Olmsted) Wheeler. Charles F. Wheeler was also a native of the Green Mountain State, and died in 1897. He was reared and educated in his native state and then engaged in the clothing business at Burlington. He was appointed postmaster of that city by President Garfield and served one term. Politically he was a republican; fraternally, a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and his religious affiliation was with the Congregational Church. His wife, who also was born in Vermont, died in 1902, at the age of forty-five years.

Frank O. Wheeler was reared under the parental roof and secured his education in the public schools of Burlington. On completing his education he entered a drug store and thoroughly learned the business. In 1907 Mr. Wheeler came to Great Falls and entered the employ of La Peyre Brothers, with whom he remained about three years. He then formed a partnership and engaged in the drug business under the firm name of Kenyon & Wheeler, the business being prosperous from the start. In 1918 Mr. Wheeler became the sole owner of the business, which is now conducted under the style of the Wheeler Drug Company. The store is most eligibly located on Central Avenue, between Third and Fourth streets, and enjoys a large and representative patronage. Mr. Wheeler carries a large and well selected stock of goods such as is usually found in an up-to-date drug store, and because of his courteous treatment and prompt service he enjoys a well-deserved popularity.

On September 23, 1912, Frank Wheeler was united in marriage to Josephine Farrell, who was born and reared in Lawrence, Massachusetts, and to this union two children have been born, Frederick F. and Dorothy L.

Politically Mr. Wheeler gives his earnest support to the republican party, though not in any sense a seeker after public office. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic Order, belonging to Euclid Lodge No. 58, and to Great Falls Consistory (thirty-second degree), Scottish Rite, and is also a member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Because of his genial personal qualities and his active interest in everything that tends to the upbuilding of his adopted city he richly deserves the confidence and esteem of the people which are unreservedly accorded to him.

ARTHUR P. HEANEY is one of the best known business men in Great Falls, for, though a resident of this city only since 1915, he has already gained a wide reputation for progress and fair dealing. Though he has labored indefatigably for the advancement of his own interests, he has not been neglectful of his duties as a citizen of one of the choicest sections of the great Treasure State. Therefore he is held in high regard by all classes in his home community, enjoying the confidence and good will of all as a result of his public spirit, fair and straightforward business methods and his exemplary character.

Arthur P. Heaney was born on his father's farmstead in Renville County, Minnesota, on April 12, 1872, and is the son of Owen and Margaret (Percey) Heaney. Owen Heaney was born in Ireland in 1820 and died in October, 1898, at the age of seventy-eight years. When but twelve years of age he was brought by his parents to Canada. He spent his youth and received his education there, and in 1867 came to Rochester, Minnesota, near which place he engaged in farming for about two years. He then located in Renville, that state, to which place he traveled with an ox team, and there literally hewed a farm out of the wilderness, being one of the pioneer settlers in that locality. He was a successful farmer and also became a successful breeder of Durham cattle and Percheron horses. He became prominent in local public affairs, and served for twelve years as chairman of the board of county commissioners and for many years was a member of the school board. Nominally a democrat in his political faith, nevertheless he took a broad view of local affairs and always voted for the men whom he considered best fitted for the offices to be filled. His wife was born near Quebec, Canada, and her death occurred in 1912, at the age of eighty-one years. They were married in Canada and became the parents of nine children, seven sons and two daughters, of whom five are living.

Arthur P. Heaney secured his educational training in a log cabin schoolhouse in his native county and later was a student in the public schools of St. Paul, Minnesota. The first money he ever earned was for picking potato bugs on the Fourth of July when eight years of age. When but ten years of age he drove plow horses and did other farm work of like nature. He lived at home until nineteen years of age, when, in partnership with his brother William J. Heaney, he engaged in the hardware and agricultural implement business at Olivia, Minnesota. This business was continued for four years. In 1897 he came to Great Falls, Montana, and obtained employment with the Great Northern Railroad Company in the train department for two years. He then returned to Minnesota, and engaged as a traveling salesman and collector for the McCormick Harvester Company, later the International Harvester Company, with whom he remained for eight years. In 1906 he was elected clerk of the District Court, serving one term of four years. During the last year he engaged in the automobile business in Minneapolis and Aberdeen, South Dakota, continuing these two enterprises up to August, 1915. He then came to Great Falls as state distributor for the Velie automobiles, trucks and tractors. This reliable car has under his able direction found many buyers in the state, and he is building up one of the best automobile agencies in the Northwest.

On May 5, 1905, Mr. Heaney was married to Pearl V. Smith, who was born in Ellsworth, Wisconsin, and they are the parents of two daughters, Lola Elaine and Gladys.

Fraternally Mr. Heaney is a member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Ancient Order of Hibernians, having been a member of the two last named organizations for more than twenty years. He is also a member of the Illinois Commercial Travelers' Association. He was one of the organizers of the Montana State Auto Distributors' Association, which he served as president in 1917, and is chairman of the State of Montana for the National Auto Association. He is also a member of the Great Falls Commercial Club, in the various activities of which he takes a leading part. Politically he is a stanch supporter of the democratic party. He is recognized as one of the live, energetic business men of Great Falls, and he enjoys the confidence and good will of those he has been associated with either in a business or social way.

ANDREW JOHN SULLIVAN. The life of Andrew J. Sullivan, the well-known merchant of Great Falls, has been such as to elicit just praise from those who know him best, owing to the fact that he has always been true to the trusts reposed in him and has been upright in his dealings with his fellow men, at the same time lending his support to the promotion of any cause looking to the advancement of the interests of the community at large.

Andrew J. Sullivan was born in Petersboro, New York, on the 31st day of March, 1860, and is the son of Jerry and Mary Sullivan. Jerry Sullivan was born in Ireland, and died in 1906, at the age of eighty-eight years. In young manhood he came to the United States by sailing vessel, and after arriving in this country first followed his trade, that of a shoemaker. Later he located in Madison County, New York, where he engaged in farming, and there spent his remaining days. In politics he was first a whig and on the dissolution of that party and the formation of the republican party he aligned himself with the new party. Jerry Sullivan was married in Petersboro, New York. His wife was a native of England, and died in 1912, at the age of eighty-two years. They became the parents of three children, all of whom are living and of whom the subject is the eldest.

Andrew J. Sullivan was reared on the home farm and attended the district school during the winter months. When eighteen years of age he engaged in teaching school in New York State, after which he took up teaming on railroad contract work. In March, 1890, Mr. Sullivan came to Great Falls and was first employed in carrying brick. Later he engaged in teaching school and was employed as an instructor in McKay's Business College. He then entered into a partnership with W. G. Stark, and from 1892 to 1906 they were engaged in the hardware and furniture business, enjoying a large patronage and carrying a large and well selected stock of goods. In the year last mentioned Mr. Sullivan bought his partner's interest in the business, of which he has since been sole owner. His courteous treatment of his customers and the high quality of the goods he carries have attracted to his store a representative patronage and he is now conducting one of the leading stores in his line in Great Falls.

On January 21, 1896, Mr. Sullivan was married to Catherine McCarrick, who was born in St. Paul, Minnesota, but whose death occurred in 1908. They became the parents of two daughters, Helena and Florence.

Politically Mr. Sullivan has been a consistent supporter of the republican party and has taken an intelligent interest in local public affairs. He served three terms as alderman from the Second Ward, and since 1918 he has been giving efficient service as police commissioner. Fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World, the Fraternal Order of Eagles and the Knights of Columbus. The record of Mr. Sullivan, as outlined above, contains no exciting chapter of tragic events, but is replete with well-defined purposes which, carried to successful issue, have won for him an influential place in business circles and high personal standing among his fellow citizens.

JAMES RUSSELL HOBBINS. Golden opportunity, awaiting a Midas-like touch of genius and ability, is not necessarily metropolitan in its abode, but is resident, too, far from the commercial turmoil of big cities. Upon the plains and benches of an immense western empire and in the busy municipalities of a newer domain has it beckoned to the capabilities of able and talented men. There are many such men who have wrought in the evolution of the Treasure State, evolved vast businesses consistent with community growth, and wrested fortunes from a resilient opportunity that yielded easily to their power. Among the adopted sons of Montana who have contributed of their ability to the development and growth of this state is the gentleman whose name appears at the head of these paragraphs.

James Russell Hobbins was born in Madison, Wisconsin, on August 19, 1883, and is the son of Joseph W. and Minnie (Mears) Hobbins. Joseph W. Hobbins was born in England in March, 1847, and was brought to the United States when eleven years of age. He received a good public school education and then attended the Wisconsin State University at Madison. His first business engagement was as general agent and appraiser for fire insurance companies, but in 1881 he engaged in the banking business, having been one of the leading spirits in the organization of the Capital City Bank of Madison. He was elected president of the bank, which is one of the strong and influential financial institutions of that city, and is still serving in that capacity. He is also an extensive holder of real estate in Madison. Politically he is a republican. He married in Madison Minnie Mears, who was born at Madison in 1857, and they became the parents of eight children, all of whom are living and of whom the subject of this review is the sixth in order of birth.

James R. Hobbins attended the public schools of Madison, completing his educational training in the University of Wisconsin, where he was graduated with the class of 1904. On leaving school he became identified with the fire insurance business as a special agent and adjuster, in which capacity he was employed for six years, his territory covering the states of Wisconsin, Minnesota and Illinois, where he represented a number of companies. He then became identified with the Hydro Electric Company, operating in California, New Mexico and Colorado, being employed in plant construction and operation. Then he made surveys and planned construction work for the Federal Light and Traction Company, of which he was general engineer. In 1912 Mr. Hobbins came to Great Falls and joined the construction department of the Great Falls Power Company having in charge the transmission line conduits and the development of its commercial interests in Northern Montana. Subsequently he became commercial manager of this company. For about a year he was transferred to the main office of the company at Butte, where he had charge of the lands department and of the right of way. On April 1, 1916, Mr. Hobbins came to Great Falls as manager of the Northern division of the Great Falls Power Company, and of the Great Falls District of the Montana Power Company, in which capacity he is still rendering efficient service.

On August 3, 1908, Mr. Hobbins was married to Bertha Bollinger, who was born in Davenport, Iowa, the daughter of James and Alice Bollinger. To this union have been born two children, James R., Jr., and Mary Alice.

Politically Mr. Hobbins gives his support to the republican party. He is identified with a number of local institutions. He is a member and past president of the Great Falls Rotary Club, and is district governor of the Twentieth District of Rotary clubs, including Utah, Idaho and Montana. He is a past president of the Commercial Club and at the present time is a member of its board of directors. He is a member of the Cascade County Board of the Red Cross and also of the executive council of the Home Service Society of the Red Cross. He is also a member of the Greek-letter college fraternity Kappa Sigma. A man of forceful individuality and marked initiative power, Mr. Hobbins has been well equipped for the duties of citizenship, while his probity of character and his genial personality have gained for him universal esteem and friendship among those with whom he has been associated.

ROBERT E. MCCARTEN, M. D. The man who devotes his talents and energies to the noble work of administering to the ills and alleviating the sufferings of humanity pursues a calling which in dignity, importance and beneficial results is second to no other. If true to his profession and earnest in his efforts to enlarge his sphere of usefulness, he is indeed a benefactor of his kind, for to him more than to any other man are entrusted the safety, the comfort and in many instances the lives of those who place themselves under his care and profit by his services. Of this class of professional men is Robert E. McCarten of Great Falls, who stands with few peers and no superiors among the physicians and surgeons of Montana.

Robert E. McCarten was born at Viroqua, Vernon County, Wisconsin, on September 1, 1884, and is a son of James and Margaret (Harkness) McCarten. James McCarten was a native of the north of Ireland, and his death occurred in 1885, about eleven months after the birth of the subject of this review. He came to the United States with his mother by sailing ship when he was a young man. He was a pioneer settler in Vernon County, Wisconsin, having been one of the first settlers in that now favored locality, and there he literally hewed him a farm out of the wilderness, and there he spent the remainder of his life and died. He was survived many years by his widow, who was born in Waukegan, Illinois, and who died on December 24, 1918, at the advanced age of eighty-one years. The subject of this sketch is the youngest of the eleven children born to these parents, of whom four sons and four daughters are still living.

Robert E. McCarten secured his elementary education in the public schools of his native town, and then became a student in the University of Minnesota. Having determined to make the practice of medicine his life work, he then matriculated in the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he was graduated with the class of 1910. The following year he spent as interne in St. John's Hospital at Lowell, Massachusetts, where he gained some valuable experience.

In 1911 Doctor McCarten came to Great Falls and entered upon the active practice of his profession, and here his talents and abilities were quickly recognized, so that for several years he has been recognized as one of the leading medical practitioners in this section of the state. During this time he has not only gained a good name in his chosen vocations but has also established a sound reputation for uprightness and noble character in all the relations of life. He early realized that to those who attain determinate success in the medical profession there must be not only given technical ability, but also a broad human sympathy which must pass from mere sentiment to be an actuating motive for helpfulness.

On January 4, 1916, Doctor McCarten was married to Ann Shannon, a native of Helena, Montana.

Doctor McCarten is a member of the Cascade County Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. In 1917 he was appointed city physician of Great Falls, serving two years. Politically he is independent. Genial and unassuming in manner, nevertheless Doctor McCarten possesses to a pronounced degree those qualities which attract, and he enjoys a large circle of warm and loyal personal friends.

EARLE F. ANGELL. The alert city attorney of White Sulphur Springs, Earle F. Angell, is attracting attention by his masterly handling of the legal problems of the community, in which he displays a thorough knowledge of the law and its proper interpretation. Mr. Angell was born at Washington, District of Columbia, January 24, 1890, a son of Albert E. and Sarah F. (Fiske) Angell. Albert E. Angell was born at Providence, Rhode Island, January 12, 1854, and died September 13, 1914. His widow, who was also a native of Providence, was born in that city on January 3, 1858, and is now living in it. She and her husband had two daughters and one son, the latter being the second child. For thirty-five years Albert E. Angell was a clerk in the United States war department. In politics he was a republican, and in religious faith a Universalist.

Earle F. Angell was reared at Washington, and attended its schools, being graduated from the high school course. He then entered the law department of Georgetown University, from which he was graduated in 1913, and in October of that same year came to Montana and was admitted to the bar of that state at Helena, where he was engaged in the practice of his profession until 1916. In the latter year he located permanently at White Sulphur Springs, and that same year was appointed city attorney, and has been reappointed each year since that date. Mr. Angell was elected attorney of Meagher County in 1918 and was equally efficient in that office. In politics he is a democrat. He maintains fraternal connections with Lewiston Lodge No. 456, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

On June 24, 1913, Mr. Angell was united in marriage with Edna Louise Groff, born at Washington, District of Columbia, a daughter of Hector and Rosa Groff, she being the younger of the two children born to her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Angell have two children, Jane Hamilton and Robert Fiske. Mr. Angell is a young man of great initiative, and is bending every energy to improve the conditions of his community, as well as to protect its interests. Possessing as he does a strong personality, he is able to put over plans he knows will work out for the best and exerts a powerful influence among his fellow citizens, who, recognizing his ability, are very willing to have him assume leadership, for they know that he will not promote any movement that will not meet with the approval of the better element.

AMOS THEODORE PETERSON. In the fall of 1914 Amos Theodore Peterson took charge of the Jefferson County High School as principal, and that school has grown and developed under his direction and management for the past six years. This high school at Boulder undoubtedly represents one of the most advanced schools in the state in the matter of equipment and departmental administration. It possesses an almost unique feature of county high schools, two dormitories, providing accommodations for pupils from a distance and converting the school practically into a boarding school or college. Boulder was the second city in the state to make this provision for the students of the county high school.

Mr. Peterson is a college and university graduate and holds a high rank among Montana educators. He was born at Edwall, Washington, January 13, 1889. His father, George A. Peterson, who was born at Christiania, Norway, in 1842, was twelve years of age when he came to America with his father. The family settled in Upper Michigan, where George A. Peterson was reared and educated. In 1872 he moved to the Northwest and settled on a farm at Spangle, Washington, moved to another farm near Edwall in 1887, and achieved a substantial success in agriculture, though he went through many of the hardships of the pioneer days. Since 1912 he has enjoyed a comfortable retirement at Spokane. He is a republican and a member of the Lutheran Church. His wife was Hannah Anderson, who was born in Litchfield, Minnesota, in 1860. They have a family of seven children: Hulda M., wife of A. P. Harold, a furnace manufacturer at Spokane; Emily E., wife of B. O. Killin, a postal clerk at Hayford, Washington; J. E., who is a graduate of the University of Washington at Seattle in the law department with the degree LL. B. and a successful attorney at Seattle; Amos Theodore; Wallace, who took his degree as Doctor of Dental Surgery from the North Pacific Dental College at Seattle and is now practicing at Sitka, Alaska; Florence C., wife of Robert Nelson, a veterinarian at Molson, Washington, and Genevieve L., who is attending Whitworth College at Spokane.

Amos Theodore Peterson acquired his early education in the rural schools of Spokane County and so far as possible pursued his consecutive work from the primary schools through the various grades until he had finished his university career at the age of twenty-five. He attended for two years the preparatory school of the State College of Washington at Pullman, and then took the regular academic course of the State College, graduating A. B. with the class of 1914. He has since taken post-graduate work in chemistry at the University of Colorado at Boulder. Mr. Peterson is a member of the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity.

Mr. Peterson has been continuously identified with the schools at Boulder since the fall of 1913. The first year he was a commercial teacher, and was then promoted to principal of the Jefferson County High School. He has a staff of six teachers, and while he started with an enrollment of only twenty-eight pupils, the scholars now number ninety-six and the school is rapidly growing in every department. The spring of 1920 saw the completion of the handsome new high school building with dormitories and gymnasium. Mr. Peterson has during his administration added four departments of instruction, domestic science, agriculture, manual training and teachers' training.

He has also been a leader in community affairs as well as a teacher. He is county director of the War Savings funds, and served all through the war in that capacity. He was also a four-minute man and took the lead in all the drives for the Young Men's Christian Association during the war. He is a director of the local Young Men's Christian Association, is chairman of the vocational education committee of the State of Montana, is a democrat, a member of the State Teachers' Association, and is affiliated with Boulder Lodge No. 41, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

August 22, 1915, at Moscow, Idaho, he married Miss Daisy E. Wilson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Wilson, residents of Pullman, Washington. Her father is a traveling salesman. Mrs. Peterson is a skilled musician, especially as a pianist, and is a graduate of the music department of the State College of Washington. They have one daughter, Helen Daisy, born September 25, 1918.

Isaac Watts Choate, at present code commissioner for the State of Montana, was born at West Barnet, Vermont, September 12, 1882. His branch of the Choate family is English and settled in Vermont and Massachusetts in colonial times. David Worthen Choate, his grandfather, a third cousin of Rufus Choate, was born in Thetford, Vermont, February 12, 1808, and spent his life as a farmer and merchant in Peacham, Vermont, where he died July 14, 1894.

Charles Augustus Choate, the father of I. W. Choate, was born in Peacham, Vermont, March 30, 1838. In his early manhood he left his native state and joined the argonauts of his day in the search for gold in California, making the voyage around the Horn. Three years were spent as a miner in California and Idaho, and then he returned to his home state, spending the remainder of his life as a farmer at West Barnet, Vermont, where he died April 7, 1902. He was a man of prominence in his community, representing the County of Caledonia at one term of the State Legislature. He was a republican in politics, a very consistent Christian and a member of the Congregational Church.

Charles Choate married Alice M. Watts, who was born in Peacham, Vermont, January 6, 1845, and died in West Barnet, Vermont, September 19, 1882. He later married Lucy Ella Watts, a sister of Alice M. Watts. The children of Charles Choate and Alice Watts were as follows: David Worthen Choate was born at West Barnet, Vermont, August 26, 1869. For eighteen years he was a locomotive engineer in the employ of the Soo Railway, with headquarters at Minneapolis, Minnesota. Returning to his old home at West Barnet, Vermont, he died September 8, 1909, survived by his wife, Harriett Choate, formerly Harriett Bailey, of Peacham, Vermont, and by a son, Worthen Choate.

Charles Augustus Choate, Jr., born October 2, 1871, is a farmer at West Barnet, Vermont, occupying the lands first settled by his father and which have now been developed into a beautiful and productive country home. In 1903 he was married to Pearl Field, and they have two sons, Charles Augustus, Jr., and Paul Merrill Choate. A deceased daughter, Alice Choate, was taken from them at the age of three years.

Elsie A. Choate, born November 26, 1880, was educated at Peacham Academy, Bridgewater Normal School and Wellesley College. She has spent much of her life as a teacher and has made her home at Peacham, Vermont, where she now resides.

Isaac Watts Choate is the fourth in age of the children of Charles A. Choate, and there were also two other children, a daughter born March 25 and died October 4, 1877, and a son, Nelson Choate, born May 2, 1879, and died March 12, 1881.

Mr. Choate attended the public schools in Caledonia County, Vermont, graduating from Caledonia County Grammar School, familiarly known as Peacham Academy, with the class of 1900, and entered the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis. He received his A. B. degree in 1904 and at graduation was elected a member of the honorary scholarship fraternity, Phi Beta Kappa. He was also a member of Phi Gamma Delta fraternity. The two years following his graduation Mr. Choate spent in Chicago as an employe of Sears Roebuck & Company. From there he went to Seattle in 1906, and for a short time was with the house furnishing concern of Frederick Nelson & Company, and after that until 1908 he was employed by the Independent Telephone Company. In the summer of 1908 Mr. Choate moved to Bridger, Montana, where he entered the law office of W. L. Hyde, and for two years pursued the study of law, resulting in his admission to the bar of Montana in 1910. He practiced law at Manhattan, Montana, from the spring of 1911 until 1914, and then moved to Bozeman, Montana, where he established himself in practice, serving one term as deputy county attorney of Gallatin County and a year as city attorney of Bozeman. In 1918 Mr. Choate became assistant attorney general under Attorney General S. C. Ford, and, moving to Helena, performed the duties of that office until the following spring, when he was appointed by the Supreme Court to the office of code commissioner.

Mr. Choate is a republican. He is past exalted ruler of Bozeman Lodge No. 463, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and for the year 1919-20 served as president of the Montana State Association of Elks. He is a member of the Montana Bar Association and of the Presbyterian Church.

Isaac Watts Choate married, September 20, 1909, at Lynn, Massachusetts, Miss Roberta E. Gammon. She was born at West Barnet, Vermont, October 21, 1884, moving to Lynn, Massachusetts, in her early girlhood. She graduated from the high school of that city and resided there until her marriage. Charles J. Weston is a veteran building contractor, for many years identified with the industry in his native state of Minnesota, and for over a decade in Montana at Miles City and at Sidney. For five years he has lived at Sidney, going to that city when it was taking on urban proportions, and his work has characterized him as one of the chief builders of the county seat.

Mr. Weston was born at Lake City, Minnesota, May 3, 1864, son of Albert E. and Jennie (Jenks) Weston. His father was born in Essex County, New York, son of a farmer and charcoal burner of the Empire State. Albert Weston grew up in Essex County, became a mechanic and carpenter, and spent many years in contracting. In early life he lost several of his fingers in a planing mill and was therefore disabled for military service during the Civil war. He came to Minnesota by boat up the Mississippi River to Lake City, and lived and did his work there for many years. He died in 1907. He was a republican without participation in public office, and was a member of the Methodist Church. After coming to Lake City he married the daughter of Thomas Jenks, who had come to Minnesota from Montpelier, Vermont, and was a very successful farmer. Mrs. Albert Weston died in 1906. She was the mother of four sons, Arthur T., of Minneapolis; George W. of Chicago; Charles J.; and Allen C., of St. Louis.

Charles J. Weston made the very best of his rather limited opportunities to secure an education in Lake City, Minnesota, where he spent his boyhood. Later he supplemented this with a business course in Minneapolis. He learned the carpenter's trade, and at the age of seventeen became a journeyman worker in South Dakota. Before he was twenty-five he was taking contracts in building at Watertown, South Dakota, but subsequently moved to Minneapolis, and for twenty-one years was busily engaged in the building business. He was rather a pioneer in the plan of building homes and selling them on monthly payments to working people. He employed his capital and enterprise to encourage a great many residents of Minneapolis to become home owners. His construction work in that city is still in evidence, and perhaps the most conspicuous of his contracts are the Wooscocket Flats and the Nelson Apartments.

On leaving Minneapolis Mr. Weston moved to Miles City, Montana. During the six years he was there he built the first hospital, the Young Men's Christian Association Building, the Masonic Temple, the Smith Building and three annexes to the Olive Hotel, besides performing many minor contracts.

While the five years spent in Sidney constitutes an era of rather difficult conditions for the building contractor, Mr. Weston's work is in evidence by many notable structures, including the homes of the First National Bank and the Yellowstone Bank & Trust Company, the business house of the Yellowstone Mercantile Company, the Sidney Deaconess Hospital and Clinic, the Valley Hotel, one of the best institutions of its kind in Eastern Montana, the Bendon concrete garage building, two additions to the Sidney High School, made to accommodate the growing school population, and another evidence of his ability to construct places of amusement as well as commercial establishments is the Princess Theater.

Mr. Weston while at Watertown, South Dakota, voted for Benjamin Harrison for president in 1888, and has remained steadfast with that party though he has never offered himself for a public candidacy. His family are members of the Congregational Church at Sidney. During the war he and Mrs. Weston helped carry on the local work of the Red Cross and were interested in the success of the Liberty Loan and other campaigns.

At Minneapolis Mr. Weston married Miss Lois Green, who was born in the State of Maine, a daughter of Charles E. Green. Mr. and Mrs. Weston have one child, Helen, who is the wife of J. Clifford Moore, of Miles City, and has two sons, James and Robert Moore.

Ben C. Brooke, M. D. At least four generations of the Brooke family, which was transplanted from Scotland to America more than a century ago, have furnished men of distinction to the profession of medicine and surgery. One of the first medical college graduates and thoroughly well qualified physicians to come to Montana was the late Dr. Benjamin C. Brooke, whose character and abilities honored the profession of his choice and made his residence and citizenship in Montana productive of the finest service to his community and state. A son of this pioneer physician is and has been for a number of years regarded as one of the most skillful surgeons of Montana, Dr. Ben C. Brooke of Helena.

His father, the late Benjamin Coddington Brooke, was born at Morgantown, West Virginia, April 1, 1822. Other branches of the Morgantown Brooke family have achieved distinction in various lines. The parents of Benjamin Coddington Brooke were Dr. Thomas Frederick and Mary (Coddington) Brooke, the former a native of Prince George and the latter of Allegany County, Maryland. Dr. Thomas Frederick Brooke's father was a native of Scotland, was an early settler in Maryland, and likewise practiced medicine. Dr. Thomas Frederick Brooke began his professional career in Maryland, but subsequently moved to West Virginia. His widow finally came to Montana with her son.

Benjamin Coddington Brooke was liberally educated in the schools of West Virginia, and had no other ambition than to qualify himself for the profession and service which had been outlined for him by the dignified example of his father and grandfather. He studied in the Cincinnati Medical College, and graduated from the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia. Nearly all his professional service and experience were gained in the far West, much of the time close to the frontier. In 1854 he went to Western Missouri, began practice in the district that has since become Kansas City, and in 1858 he crossed the plains, joining in the rush to the new gold discoveries at Pike's Peak, Colorado. Thus he became one of the pioneer doctors at Denver. From there in the spring of 1863 he came to Montana, first identifying himself with the community of Virginia City, but after 1866 lived at Helena. His skill and knowledge in medicine and his long continued devotion to the work set a high standard in his profession, and did much to elevate the vocation of medicine at the very beginning of Montana's territorial history. He was a man of fine character, excellent business ability, became interested in mining, farming, stock ranching and other business affairs, and whether as a private citizen or as a physician his name and record properly belong in any account of the pioneer personalities of Montana. He died at Helena May 9, 1891. He married Sarah Mackbee and they were the parents of six children. Of the two sons that reached mature years, Lee D. has earned a high place in the profession of law. The two daughters are Mrs. Rudolph Horsky and Miss Lalla M. Brooke.

Dr. Ben C. Brooke was born at Helena May 9, 1872, and his nineteenth birthday was the date of his father's death. He received his early education in the schools of Helena, including high school, and later entered Bellevue Hospital Medical College of New York City, graduating with high honors in 1896. Since that year his home and the scene of his professional work have been in Helena. For the past ten years he has confined his practice to surgery. In 1898 Doctor Brooke went east to the New York Post Graduate School, and thereafter for seven years devoted some weeks or months every year to study with this institution, specializing in surgery. He also did work in the New York Polyclinic. Doctor Brooke by his attainments and experience has worthily won a place as Fellow of the American College of Surgeons.

At Helena he is affiliated with the firm, Brooke & Lanstrum, the junior associates being Arthur Jordan, B. E. Wiley, Rudolph Horsky and Don L. Treacy. This firm maintains one of the finest equipped private offices in the state, at 12 Edwards Street. They have two special operating rooms and other facilities for surgery, including an X-ray department and a large medical library, and the firm does a large special practice in eye, ear, nose and throat.

Doctor Brooke served as county physician of Lewis and Clark County for 1897 to 1903, as city physician the same years, and for three terms covering about the same period was county coroner. For eight years he was a member of the City and County Board of Health. Doctor Brooke is the medical director of the Montana Life Insurance Company, served three terms as secretary of the Montana State Medical Society, and is a member of the American Medical Association. He is independent in politics, is affiliated with King Solomon Lodge No. 9, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Helena Consistory No. 3 of the Scottish Rite; Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine and Helena Lodge No. 193, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Doctor Brooke is vice president of the Placer Hotel Company and owns one of the best city homes in Helena, at 12 South Benton Avenue.

At York, Nebraska, he married Miss Bertha Sands, who was born at Rushville, Illinois, and finished her education in the Helena Business College. Doctor and Mrs. Brooke had five children: Virginia, who died in the fall of 1919, at the age of ten years; Ben, Jr., who died in infancy; Bennie, born in 1911; Wallace, born in 1914, and Robert, born in 1917.

JOHN GILMAN BULLARD, the surveyor general of Montana, has been identified almost continuously since boyhood with interests closely allied with those with which he is now connected, and few men of his years can lay claim to wider experience along certain lines or better preparatory training for the exceedingly important office he now holds.

Mr. Bullard traces descent through a long and substantial American ancestry to England and to the founder of the family in this country, Benjamin Bullard, who was among the very first settlers in Massachusetts, as he drew a grant of land in Watertown as early as 1637. Among his descendants was Doctor Bullard, born in Hollister, Massachusetts, December 8, 1768. He removed to Sutton, Massachusetts, in 1805, and his death occurred there on the 6th of May, 1842. He was the father of ten children, one of whom was Asa Bullard, the grand father of Montana's present surveyor general. Asa Bullard, who was born in Massachusetts, gained distinction as the founder of many Sunday schools of the Congregational Church in New England. He was a graduate of Amherst College, Massachusetts, and he died in the City of Cambridge, that state. Among other distinguished personages connected with this family may be mentioned Henry Ward Beecher and Clara Barton.

William Reed Bullard, a son of Asa, and the father of John Gilman Bullard, was born in Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1838, and he died at Helena, Montana, in 1890. He was reared in Cambridge, graduated from Harvard College, now Harvard University, with the class of 1857 and the degree of M. D., and during a short time thereafter practiced medicine in Indianapolis, Indiana. From there he came to Montana in 1866, choosing Helena as his future home, and here he enrolled his name among the pioneers and among Montana's most prominent and successful physicians and surgeons. He continued in the practice of medicine in Helena until his death, and his success was due more perhaps to the fact that he was a stanch advocate of careful nursing, giving efficient care and watchfulness precedence over medicine or drugs. He was independent in political matters, always exercising his right of franchise as his conscience dictated. Although reared a Congregationalist, Doctor Bullard after locating in Indianapolis affiliated with the Unitarian Church. He belonged to Morning Star Lodge No. 5, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and was a member of the State Medical Society and the Lewis and Clark County Medical Society.

Doctor Bullard married Mary Nancy Gilman, a member of a Puritan New England family. Her father, John Coffin Gilman, was a trail blazer in the Northwest, and was the first county treasurer of Jefferson County, Montana. Mrs. Bullard was reared in Ohio and Wisconsin. She died May 8, 1920, in Helena, Montana. Doctor and Mrs. Bullard became the parents of two children, twins, and the daughter, Clara Gertrude, resides with her brother in Helena. She attended the Helena High School and the Helena Business College, and is now engaged in stenographic work in the surveyor general's office.

John Gilman Bullard still lives in the house at 309 East Broadway in which he was born December 11, 1873. Just before completing the senior year in the Helena High School his father died, and he was obliged to leave school to assist in his own support. During the following three months he was employed by Wallace & Thornburg, real estate brokers, and then, in November, 1891, entered the office of the United States surveyor general as a draftsman in the mineral department. He remained there but one month, however, leaving the position to pursue a three months' course in shorthand and typewriting in Miss Jackman's shorthand school, where he attended during the year 1892, but he never found occasion to put into practice the knowledge he there gained.

From May, 1892, until July 30, 1892, Mr. Bullard was again in the office of the United States surveyor general, occupying the same position as before. On the 30th of July, 1894, he was appointed to a permanent position in the same office in the agricultural department, starting in as a draftsman and continuing in that capacity until 1908, when he was advanced to the office of examiner of plats. On the 14th of January, 1920, Mr. Bullard was appointed surveyor general of Montana, and this is the first promotion that has ever been made from the civil service ranks to an administrative position either in the surveyor general's office or in the land department of the United States Government. Mr. Bullard has offices in the Federal Building. He gives his political allegiance to the democratic party, is a member of the Episcopal Church, and belongs to Helena Lodge No. 193, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Bullard has gained more than a local reputation as a skilled penman, and is often called upon to engross resolutions passed by the Legislature upon the death of prominent statesmen. Among many other works of that character he engrossed the resolutions passed by the Legislature at the death of President McKinley and also at the death of Theodore Roosevelt. For the latter work he received a letter of thanks from Mrs. Roosevelt. Mr. Bullard has never married.

ARTHUR JORDAN, M. D. Doctor Jordan, now a member of the prominent firm of physicians and surgeons, Brooke, Lanstrum, Wiley & Jordan, at Helena, was formerly active in his profession and also in public affairs at Twin Bridges.

He was born at Atlantic, Iowa, September 17, 1869, son of James and Agnes (Dungan) Jordan. His father was a Union soldier, spent many years as a farmer in Iowa, and in 1907 removed to Oregon.

Doctor Jordan was reared at Atlantic, Iowa, attended high school, also took a normal course, and for four years was a student of medicine in Iowa State University, graduating in 1895. Soon afterward he came to Montana and for ten years practiced at Marysville and in 1905 moved to Twin Bridges.

While he was one of the hard working members of his profession at Twin Bridges he took a deep interest in local politics as a republican, was elected a member of the Legislature in 1910, was chosen mayor of the city in 1912, and also served as chairman of the Twin Bridges School Board and as a member of the City Council. He is active in the various medical societies, is a Mason, Elk and Maccabee, and is affiliated with several social organizations at Helena.

October 20, 1897, at Marysville, he married Adele M. Dillon, daughter of a pioneer family of Marysville, Patrick B. and Mary Dillon. Doctor and Mrs. Jordan have two children, Arthur and Elizabeth.

SIDNEY MILLER, who is registrar of state lands of Montana, has been a resident of Montana throughout the period of statehood and six months prior to that period, and has long been prominent in official affairs in Lewis and Clark County.

Mr. Miller was born on a farm in Andrew County, Missouri, March 2, 1866. His father, Frederick T. Miller, who for a brief period in the '60s was engaged in the freighting and transportation business to Virginia City, Montana, was born in Callaway County, Missouri, in 1832. He early moved to Northwest Missouri, locating on a farm in Andrew County, but had many interesting experiences and travels in the West. He first went out to California in 1852, followed placer mining in that state, and also worked in the mines around Jacksonville, Oregon. He spent seven years in the far West and enjoyed more than the average success of miners. He then went back to Andrew County, Missouri, married, and for a year or two engaged in the overland freighting business at Denver, Colorado. It was in this period of his career, during the early '60s, that he brought a load of supplies up to the pioneer mining camps of Montana, selling his goods and his outfit at Virginia City. He then returned to Andrew County, Missouri, and was satisfied with the quiet environment and duties of a farm. He died in Andrew County in 1898. He was a democrat and a member of the Christian Church. Frederick T. Miller married Christina Kelley, who was born in Andrew County in 1842 and died there in 1908. They were the parents of four children: Elvina, wife of Louis E. Nuckles, a farmer in Andrew County; Sidney; Andrew O., who lives on the old homestead farm in Missouri, and Clifford C., also an Andrew County farmer.

Sidney Miller attended the rural schools of Andrew County and graduated in 1886 from the Stanberry Normal School at Stanberry, Missouri. During the next year he taught at Union Star, Missouri, and then took a special course in shorthand at Stanberry, and put his newly acquired art to use as an employe of the Tootle-Housa Dry Goods Company, now Tootle, Wheeler & Motter Company, at St. Joseph, Missouri.

Mr. Miller came to Montana in March, 1889. For the first two years he was an employe of John T. Murphy, a Helena grocer, and then for a year was with an abstract company. For nearly thirty years Mr. Miller has been an efficient and capable public servant. From 1892 to 1900 he served as deputy county clerk and recorder of Lewis and Clark County. He was elected chief of that office in 1900, re-elected in 1902, and serving through 1904. In the meantime, in the fall of 1904, he was elected clerk of the District Court for Lewis and Clark County and his four-year term in that office began January 1, 1905. From 1909 to 1913 he was deputy assessor, and in the latter year was appointed by Governor S. V. Stewart as registrar of state lands, with offices in the State Capitol. Mr. Miller is a democrat.

He and his family reside in a modern home at 835 Breckenridge Street. He married at Helena in 1894 Miss Loretta Finnerty, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Finnerty, deceased. Her father was a New York State farmer. Mrs. Miller died at Helena in 1910, the mother of two children, Sidney Fred and Ethel Loretta. The son, after graduating with the A. B. degree from the University of Wisconsin, enlisted in 1918 and served overseas in France a year, being with the Machine Gun Company of the Twenty-Seventh Division. He was mustered out in May, 1919, and is now a student of law at Harvard University. The daughter, Ethel, is in the eighth grade of St. Vincent's Academy at Helena.

H. W. Wiley

Bert E. Wiley, M. D. Talent, inclination, physical and mental equipment, all combine to point the way of Doctor Wiley to specialization and unusual success in the field of medicine and surgery. He came to Montana in 1903 and in 1917 located at Helena, where he is the eye, ear, nose and throat specialist in the Helena Clinic, comprising Drs. Brooke, Lanstrum, Wiley, Jordan, Horsky and Treacy, an organization that probably combines a greater range of abilities in the medical profession than any other in Montana.

Doctor Wiley was born in New Brunswick, Canada, June 9, 1876. His grandfather, John Wiley, was born in the north of Ireland in 1812, was a cabinet maker by trade, and spent most of his life in New Brunswick. He died at Fredericton, that province, in 1882. He married a Miss Todd in Ireland, a native of that country. Three of their children are still living: Sarah, wife of A. B. Atherton, a retired surgeon of San Diego, California; Grace, wife of Henry Good, a clergyman, living near Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, and John M.

John M. Wiley was born at Fredericton in 1852 and is still in business as a druggist in that city, an occupation he has followed many years. He is a conservative in politics and a member of the Methodist Church. John M. Wiley married Margaret Macdonald, who was born in New Brunswick in 1856. Doctor Wiley is the oldest of their four children: Sarah is the wife of William Cooper, a lumber dealer at Kansas City, Missouri; Harold is a druggist at Missoula, Montana, and Margaret is the wife of a real estate and insurance man at Fredericton.

Bert E. Wiley acquired a public school education at Fredericton, graduating from high school in 1892, and in 1896 completed his literary education in the University of New Brunswick. He took his medical course at McGill University in Montreal, receiving his degree M. D., C. M. in 1901. He was a member of the Delta Upsilon college fraternity. After practicing for a year at Fredericton Doctor Wiley came west to Montana in the spring of 1903 and for nearly fifteen years practiced medicine with his home at Kalispell. In the early years he was associated with his uncle, the late Dr. A. D. Macdonald. Determining to specialize, Doctor Wiley went abroad in 1909, and for two years availed himself of all the splendid opportunities for study and clinical work on the subject of the eye, ear, nose and throat. Part of that time he was house surgeon in the London Central Ear, Nose and Throat Hospital, also in the Royal Ophthalmic Hospital, and spent six months in post-graduate work in Vienna. Returning to this country in 1911, he continued his work along special lines in Kalispell for six years, and in 1917 removed to Helena, becoming associated with the firm of which he is a member today. His partners are all men of the highest ability and he handles the work of the firm in eye, ear, nose and throat.

Doctor Wiley is a republican, is affiliated with Kalispell Lodge No. 42, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Kalispell Chapter No. 13, Royal Arch Masons; Cyrene Commandery No. 12, Knights Templar; Helena Consistory No. 3, of the Scottish Rite, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of the Montana Club of Helena and the Helena Rotary Club. He married at Helena in 1918 Mrs. Grace (See) Scott, a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, who has resided in Helena for the past fifteen years.

H. Sol Hepner was the first boy to receive a high school diploma from the Helena High School and graduate with the class of 1885. Some ten years later he opened an office and began making his abilities and services known as a lawyer. He has been steadily engaged in a growing practice as a lawyer nearly twenty-five years, and has long enjoyed an enviable rank at the Helena bar.

Mr. Hepner was born in Russia, at Tzaritzin, February 25, 1869, son of Barnett H. and Bertha (Maizel) Hepner. The business qualifications and the fine character of Barnett Hepner are well attested in Helena. In his early career in Russia he did considerable railroad contracting. Leaving his wife and children behind, he came to America in 1871, living in Pennsylvania and for several years in Colorado. In 1879 he opened a clothing store at Helena. He was one of the early merchants of that city and gave his personal supervision to his business until his death in 1908. He had sent for his family, who arrived and joined him at Helena in 1882. Of the three children H. Sol is the only son. The daughters are Jennie, wife of Louis Weigel, and Luba, wife of Sylvain Levy.

H. Sol Hepner was thirteen years of age when he came to this country. In the meantime he had made good use of the opportunities afforded by the Imperial Pro-Gymnasium at Tzaritzin, Russia, and continued his education in the public schools of America, rapidly becoming proficient in the English language. After graduating from high school as above noted he went to work in the Montana National Bank, and gave dutiful attention to his responsibilities there for several years. In 1889 he entered the law school of the University of Michigan, and was graduated two years later. He was admitted to the bar in 1892 and after working in several law offices began practice at Helena. Mr. Hepner still occupies his offices in the Union Bank Building, where his clients have sought his professional services for many years. He has enjoyed political honors, and has rendered service in every office he has held. From 1897 to 1899 he represented his home county in the State Legislature and in 1909-10 was county prosecuting attorney for Lewis and Clark County. He was a candidate for the district bench in 1900. He served as city attorney of Helena during 1911-12. Politically he is a democrat.

For over a year during the World war Mr. Hepner practically sacrificed his private practice and devoted his time and abilities to the Government. The President appointed him in January, 1918, a member of District Exemption Board No. 1 for Montana, with jurisdiction over twenty-six county and City of Butte local exemption boards. Elected chairman, he gave his time to this exacting service until the close of the war and received his honorable discharge March 31, 1919. In the various war auxiliary movements, such as the Liberty Loan, Red Cross, Young Men's Christian Association, United War Work and other drives, he was also extremely liberal with both time and personal means, serving on all of these as captain of teams.

Mr. Hepner is one of the prominent Masons of the State of Montana and has also been active in other fraternal organizations. In October, 1919, he attained the distinctive honor of the thirty-third degree in Scottish Rite Masonry. He served as grand master of the Grand Lodge of Masons in Montana in 1903-04, is a past grand patron of the Order of the Eastern Star, is past thrice illustrious grand master of the Royal and Select Masters, and is a past potentate of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He has also held the position of head adviser in the head camp of the Pacific Jurisdiction of the Woodmen of the World, is a past exalted ruler of Helena Lodge No. 193 of Elks, and is a past noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

June 6, 1899, Mr. Hepner married Josephine Israel. Mrs. Hepner is a native of Newark, New Jersey, who came to Helena in 1879 with her parents. She has also taken an active part in fraternal affairs, having been honored by being elected worthy grand matron of the Grand Chapter, Order of Eastern Star of Montana. On March 20, 1920, a second chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star was organized in Helena and by unanimous vote was named Josephine Hepner Chapter. She has served in various civic capacities and is one of the best known and most beloved women in the state. At present she is vice president of the Montana Children's Home Society and is actively connected with and on the board of directors of the Civic Club of Helena, and was the first woman ever appointed on the Public Library Board of Helena. Mr. and Mrs. Hepner have two children, Claire Algeria, born in 1900, and Harold Steffan, born in 1904. The daughter is now a junior in Northwestern University at Evanston, Illinois, while the son is in the junior class of the Helena High School.

William Wellman is now living retired at White Sulphur Springs, but has been very closely associated with the development of this region, and the Wellman addition to the city was made by him from a small ranch he owned on the outskirts. Prior to his retirement he was actively engaged in a harness business, and is held in the highest esteem by his fellow townsmen as a good citizen and upright man.

William Wellman was born at Quincy, Illinois, March 25, 1844, a son of William and Sophia Wellman, the former of whom was born in Germany in 1819, and died in 1902, at the age of eighty-three years, and the latter, who was also a native of Germany, was born in 1822 and died in 1905. They were married in Germany, and nine children resulted of their union, six of whom are now living, William Wellman being the fourth. The first child was born while the parents were crossing the ocean on a sailing vessel from Germany to the United States. They landed at New Orleans, Louisiana, and came up the Mississippi River to Quincy, Illinois, where the father worked at his trade of blacksmith, and there died. He was a democrat in politics, and a Roman Catholic in religious faith.

William Wellman, the younger, attended the public schools of Quincy, Illinois, and since leaving school has improved himself by self-instruction. He learned the harnessmaking trade in his native city, and leaving it in 1868, found employment at his trade at Ottumwa, Iowa, for about five years. His next change brought him further west to Freemont, Nebraska, where he spent six years, and then spent about two years at Denver, Colorado. Albuquerque, New Mexico, next attracted his attention, but he only remained there for six months, and then returned to Fremont, Nebraska. In 1883 he came to Montana Territory, and was at Bozeman for six months, and for the same length of time at Helena and Miles City, and then he located permanently at White Sulphur Springs, embarking in the harness business, carrying it on until his retirement in 1917. In politics he is a democrat, although not bound down by party ties, as he prefers to choose his own man.

On February 2, 1891, Mr. Wellman was married to Nellie Weaver, born in Clay County, Missouri. On September 17, 1892, Mrs. Wellman bought eighty acres of land adjoining White Sulphur Springs, later adding seventeen acres. This property the Wellmans have divided into town lots, on which comfortable residences are being built. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wellman are excellent people and they deserve the high esteem in which they are held.

Miss May Trumper. To her duties as state superintendent of public instruction Miss Trumper brings an experience of twenty years as a Montana educator, and also a singular zeal and resolution and a broad vision as to the objects and responsibilities of the public school system and her own state office.

Miss Trumper was born at Jeffersonville, Ohio, a daughter of Samuel P. and Maria Louisa (Hidy) Trumper. She acquired her early education in the public schools of London, Ohio, and at intervals in her teaching career has kept in touch with advanced thought as expressed at some of the leading institutions of higher education in the country. She did her early college work in Granville College in Ohio, and has also attended the Harvard University Summer School, the University of California, and received her degree Bachelor of Science from Columbia University in 1917.

Miss Trumper began teaching in rural schools in Madison County and afterward at Granville, Ohio, as an instructor in the high school, was principal of the high school at Bryan, Ohio, and in 1899 came to Montana and for several years was in the Flathead County High School at Kalispell. She was elected and served eight years as county superintendent of schools of Flathead County, filling that office from 1907 to 1915. She was elected four times on the republican ticket. In 1916 she was elected state superintendent of public instruction, her official duties beginning in 1917 and her term closing in 1921.

By virtue of this state office she is also a member of the State Board of Education, the State Land Board and the State Board of Educational Examiners. Her personal staff at the capital includes a deputy superintendent, two rural school supervisors, one high school supervisor, and one director of vocational education.

Since coming to Montana Miss Trumper has witnessed wonderful strides in the evolution of a complete educational program. While all of this is a matter of proper pride to Montana people, much yet remains to be done, not only in increasing the efficiency of the many splendidly equipped schools in the larger cities and more populous counties, but particularly in extending the facilities of popular education to remote districts. Miss Trumper since entering office has given this problem a great deal of thought and careful study, and has kept the imperative needs of rural districts before the educational authorities to the utmost extent of her influence. Miss Trumper attends the Episcopal Church.

Edmund Curtis Follensby. While his business as proprietor of the Auto-Election Station at Helena is a very particular service widely appreciated by the owners of motor cars in the capital city, Mr. Follensby has a much broader technical knowledge of mechanics than that involved in the motor car industry. He has been a machinist since early manhood, and has been called upon for some of the most exacting and difficult work of that profession.

Mr. Follensby was born at North Concord, Vermont, June 10, 1882, and is of the old New England ancestry. His grandfather was Frank Follensby, who died at Southboro, Massachusetts, in 1894. The father was Curtis C. Follensby, who was born at Southboro in 1854, was educated in his native town, and as a boy began earning his own living. His early experiences were in the lumber woods of New Hampshire and Vermont. He married at Sherbrooke in the Province of Quebec, and after his marriage lived at North Concord, Vermont, where he owned two sawmills. Both these plants were destroyed by fire, and in 1889 he bought a mill at St. Johnsbury, Vermont, in partnership with W. L. Russell, who had married his sister, Lavina. Curtis C. Follensby was a very successful business man at St. Johnsbury, served as selectman of the town for many years, and took a deep interest in doing what good he could in a civic way to his community. He was an active member of the Masonic fraternity and a republican in politics. He died at St. Johnsbury October 10, 1914. His brother, Lorenzo Follensby, served for twenty-four years as sheriff at Whitefield, New Hampshire. C. C. Follensby married Ellen Bailey, who was born at Sherbrooke, Quebec, January 13, 1849, and is still living at St. Johnsbury, Vermont. Edmund C. is the oldest of her four children. Maude E. holds a secretarial position in New York City. Bailey F. operates a mill and the extensive lumber business left by his father at St. Johnsbury. Isabelle F. is the wife of Ellsbree D. Locke, a traveling salesman, their home being at 1762 Beacon Street, Waban, Massachusetts.

Edmund Curtis Follensby was reared in a good home and had every encouragement to make the best of his talents and abilities. His education was completed when he was about sixteen years of age, concluding with a course in the high school at St. Johnsbury. For two and a half years he was an apprentice machinist in the factory of the E. and T. Fairbanks Scale Factory. Another six months were spent with a shop at St. Johnsbury which made a specialty of repairing all kinds of sawmill machinery. His work as a machinist had an interesting variation when he was employed for six months in the woods of Vermont operating a portable sawmill for his father's estate under the name of the Russell, Follensby & Peck Lumber Company. In order to master motor mechanics he entered an automobile electric station at Worcester, Massachusetts, remaining there a year, and then for one winter resumed the operation of the portable sawmill plant in Vermont. When the mill ceased operation he spent three months in the factory of the Stanley Motor Carriage Company of Newton, Massachusetts, and was then sent on the road by the company as a service man. He was in that work a year, and his duties brought him to Montana June 1, 1906. Resigning from the Stanley Company, he went with the Morris Mining Company at Pony for two years. During the winter of 1908-9, with headquarters at Glendive, he drove a Stanley steamer on the mail route for the Yellowstone Stage Company. Late in 1909 he made a business trip to Spokane, and the following winter was spent at Radersburg, Montana, where he set up a number of Fairbanks-Morse gas engines and Ingersoll-Rand air compressors at the mines. From the spring of 1910 until the mines shut down in the fall Mr. Follensby operated a hoisting engine on the hill at Butte for the W. A. Clark interests. The Ingersoll-Rand Company then employed him at Virginia City to set up an air compressing plant and sawmill, and after putting both of these into operation he left in the spring of 1911 and came to Helena, soon afterward going to Radersburg, where he installed a hoisting plant operated by gasoline for the Ohio Keating Gold Mining Company. During the summer of 1911 he was again in Helena, and in the early fall became an engineer for the Power Heating Plant of the State Capitol, and held that position for seven years, until May 1, 1919.

At that date Mr. Follensby opened his auto-electric station, the plant and offices being in the Empson Building. His thorough technical knowledge and broad experience give him the highest qualifications for the service which his station affords. It is not proper to describe it as an ordinary automobile repair shop. The work is rather that of a thorough overhauling, with expert mechanics and facilities for renewing and overhauling the batteries, all the electric generating and starting ignition systems, also the motor, transmission and rear axles, and the plant has facilities for charging batteries on cars without removing them. It is the only business of its kind in Helena and the largest in Western Montana. A complete stock is kept of starting and generator brushes, ignition contact arms, coils and batteries.

Mr. Follensby is a democrat in politics and his home is in the Templeton Apartments on Main Street.

PETER SCHIERTS had a great deal of business experience in his native state of Minnesota prior to coming to Helena in 1911, though up to that time experience was his chief capital and his money resources when he reached the capital city of Montana amounted to only $2.40. In nine years he has made the best use of his opportunities and is now sole proprietor of the leading business of its kind in Lewis and Clark County.

Mr. Schierts was born in Wabasha County, Minnesota, November 28, 1878. His father, Joseph Schierts, and his grandfather, Frank Schierts, were both natives of Vienna, Austria, the former born in 1839 and the latter in 1810. Frank Schierts received his early education and was married at Vienna, Austria, and came to the United States in 1854, settling on a farm in Wisconsin. Later, in 1861, he homesteaded in Wabasha County and lived on his homestead until he retired. Joseph Schierts has been a resident of Wabasha County, Minnesota, since 1856. He was married there and worked as a day laborer to the age of twenty-one. He then homesteaded 160 acres, bought other land and acquired a large farm of 680 acres. He sold that and retired into Wabasha in 1900, where he is still living. His father died at Wabasha in 1892. Joseph Schierts is a Catholic and a democrat in politics. His wife was Elizabeth Roller, who was born in Germany in 1844. Their children are: Frank, a farmer in Wright County, Minnesota; Mary, who married Frank Graff, a farmer, and both died at Wabasha; Annie is the wife of Henry Tushaus, a cattleman and farmer in Wabasha County; Kate is the wife of Theodore Peters, a retired farmer and auctioneer at Kellogg, Minnesota; John is a teamster at Wabasha; Joseph is operating a lumber yard and furniture store at Kellogg, Minnesota; Peter is the seventh in the family; George, the youngest, is an attorney at Anandale, Minnesota.

Peter Schierts acquired a rural school education in Wabasha County, and lived on his father's farm to the age of twenty-two, and for three years thereafter conducted the old homestead. He then bought a ranch in Stutsman County, North Dakota, but his chief business was handling hardware and implements at Kellogg, Minnesota. He remained there three years, and for two years more was in the real estate and insurance business at Kellogg. Returning to Wabasha, he worked in a hardware and implement house until 1910, and for the following year was connected with the hardware and implement firm of McPhail Company at Langdon, North Dakota.

This is a brief outline of his business career up to the time he arrived at Helena on March 13, 1911. Without capital, he turned his experience to good account in the service of others, and for four years was in the hay, grain and farm implement business of C. H. Fortman. For another year he managed that business, and when Mr. Fortman became postmaster the firm of Schierts & Ries bought the establishment and a year later Mr. Schierts bought out his partner and has since been sole proprietor. He now does both a wholesale and retail business in hay, grain, coal and wood, and handles a number of nationally known and advertised farm implements, including the Heider tractors, cream separators, poultry supplies. The office of the business is at 15-17 Placer Avenue, and he maintains a large warehouse and yards on the Northern Pacific tracks. This is easily the most extensive concern of its kind in Helena and the surrounding county. Mr. Schierts is also a stockholder in the Foidel Undertaking Company at Helena.

Mr. Schierts is an independent voter, a member of the Catholic Church, is a third degree Knight of Columbus, affiliated with Helena Council No. 844, and is a member of Helena Lodge of the Loyal Order of Moose. He owns a modern home at 126 Chestnut Street.

In 1900, at Wabasha, Minnesota, he married Miss Catherine Howe, daughter of Peter and Otilda (Baker) Howe. Her parents reside at Kellogg, Minnesota, her father being a retired farmer and is now president of the Kellogg State Bank. The two children born to Mr. and Mrs. Schierts are Viola, born July 14, 1901, now a junior in the Helena High School, and LeRoy, born August 12, 1908.

PHILIP HENRY HUBER, who is a senior member and president of the corporation, Huber, Jasmin & Rouse Company, at Helena, has been more or less continuously identified with business at Helena for a quarter of a century, and the experience of his mature years have brought him a close acquaintance with many of the cities and towns of most of the states in the so-called middle and far West.

Mr. Huber was born at Hamilton in Butler County, Ohio, September 26, 1868. His grandfather, William Huber, was born in Germany in 1795, and in 1847 brought his family to America and settled in Butler County, Ohio. He was one of the early farmers in that locality and lived there until his death at Riley in 1875. George Huber, father of the Helena business man, was born in Germany in 1844, and was a small child when brought to America. He was reared, educated and married in Butler County and spent all his mature life there as a blacksmith. He died at Hamilton in February, 1916. He was a strong and ardent democrat in politics, a very consistent Christian and active supporter of the Presbyterian Church. His wife was Mary Stabe, who was born in 1846 and died at Riley, Ohio, December 24, 1884. Philip Henry is the oldest of their children. William F., the second in age, is a railroad man living in California. David G. lives at Hamilton, Ohio. Sadie M. is unmarried and also lives at Hamilton.

Philip Henry Huber acquired his early education in the rural schools of his native county. He practically grew up in his father's blacksmith shop, served an apprenticeship there, and has made that mechanical trade the basis of his very successful business career. He left home at the age of twenty-one, and his first sojourn was at Wellington, Kansas, where he worked as a blacksmith from August, 1889, to June, 1890. Continuing westward, he was in Denver a short time, reached Salt Lake City July 1, 1890, remained there as a horseshoer for the firm of Pembleton Brothers, a few months, and arrived at Portland, Oregon, in November, 1890. January 1, 1891, he spent at Seattle, Washington, and in December of the same year returned to Portland, and in January, 1892, went on to San Francisco, was at Los Angeles in the latter part of February, and then, after several years of traveling that had taken him pretty well over the middle and far West, he returned to Riley, Ohio, and resumed employment with his father for eighteen months. But the lure of the far West was strong upon him, and in 1895 he was back in Los Angeles. In February, 1896, he started north with team and wagon, following the coast route through San Francisco and up to Red Bluff, traveling the same trail that the old forty-niners had used. He worked as an itinerant blacksmith, stopping for a few days or weeks in various towns along the road, and in this way reached Caldwell, Idaho, from there went on to Shoshone, Idaho, where he sold his team, and thence by way of Pocatello arrived at Butte June 1, 1896. On the 4th of June he reached Helena, and, with the exception of a year or so has been identified with this city ever since. For eight months he worked as a blacksmith for W. C. Lewis at the corner of Ninth Avenue and Davis Street, and then bought a shop of his own on Main Street. In 1898, selling out, he spent part of the following year working at his trade for the firm of Huntley & Child, proprietors of the Yellowstone Park Transportation Company. Returning to Helena in the fall of 1899, Mr. Huber again followed his trade, and with a partner, Mr. Fowler, owned a shop on State Street until he sold his interest in 1904. In 1905 he bought another shop on Main Street and continued his work there until kicked by a horse in 1909. Receiving severe injuries, both legs being broken, he spent some time recuperating, and then, still unable to take up the regular work of his trade, he went on the road for the Capewell Horse Nail Company in March, 1910, covering the State of Montana and a part of South Dakota. He left the road in January, 1911, and returned to Helena and bought the establishment of S. T. Strange at 426 Fuller Avenue. That was his place of business until October, 1917, at which date he formed the corporation of Huber, Jasmin, Ott Company. Mr. Ott subsequently sold his interest to S. W. Rouse and the corporation is now Huber, Jasmin & Rouse Company, with headquarters at 418 Fuller Avenue. Mr. Huber is president of the company, P. T. Jasmin is vice president and S. W. Rouse is secretary and treasurer. This company does a general blacksmithing and horseshoeing business, also manufactures commercial automobile bodies, automobile accessories, does automobile repairing and handles the largest supply of Temme guaranteed auto springs in the State of Montana. Another line carried is the Presto tanks. This is the second largest business corporation of its kind in Montana.

Mr. Huber was for ten years state organizer for the Master Horseshoers' National Protective Association. In behalf of other business interests he has covered practically every state in the West, including besides those mentioned Arizona. Mr. Huber

MATHIS MOHN is a rancher and stockman in the Flathead country, his home being on rural route No. 2 out of Kalispell.

Born in Norway, a son of Mathis and Rachel Mohn, at the age of twenty he determined to realize the opportunities of the new world, and sailing from Norway landed at Boston and from there went on to Fergus Falls, Minnesota, and farmed in North Dakota until 1893, when he came to the Flathead country and bought 200 acres northwest of Kalispell. Here he has since profitably engaged in farming and stock raising, handling Hereford cattle, Chester White hogs and Percheron horses.

He is a member of the Norwegian Lutheran Church. For many years he has made a home for his mother and sister, until the death of his beloved mother in 1918. She was a good woman, a kind neighbor and loved by a large circle of friends, and had done her best to rear and train her chidlren to good citizenship.

Mr. Mohn has found all the opportunities he craved in the Flathead country, and has done much to advance its interests and advantages for others. He has served as trustee and clerk of the local school board and believes in securing the best teachers. He has a fine home located on high ground overlooking much of the surrounding district. He is secretary of his church. He has witnessed the surrounding community grow up from a wilderness. In earlier days he shot many bear and deer. A new irrigation district has recently been organized known as the Tarry Lake Irrigating District, with Mr. Mohn as president of its board of commissioners. He is also a director in the Farmers Mutual Insurance Company and in the Equity Supply Company at Kalispell. These are organizations directly benefiting all the farmers of his section. Mr. Mohn is a stanch republican, and has served as a member of the Republican Central Committee.

JAMES SHERWELL SCOTT first came to Montana a few days after the territory was admitted to the Union as a state, and for a number of years was operator with the Western Union Telegraph Company. Mr. Scott is now head of J. S. Scott & Company, stock brokers, and has been in the stock brokerage business at Helena for a number of years.

He was born at Detroit, Michigan, April 3, 1871. His ancestors for several generations lived at Kelso, Scotland. His grandfather, James Scott, spent his life there as a farmer, born in 1809 and died in 1881. Robert Riddell Scott, his son, was born in Kelso in 1848, and about 1864 came to America and settled at Chatham, Ontario, Canada. He was a carriage builder by trade and followed that trade all his life. He was married at Chatham, worked at his trade in Detroit from about 1869 until 1873, then returned to Chatham, and in 1890 moved to Minneapolis, Minnesota. When he retired from business in 1898 he came to Helena and in 1905 went to Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, where he died in 1907. He was a very consistent member of the Presbyterian Church. Robert R. Scott married Margaret Wilson Edwards, who was born at Chatham, Ontario, in 1850, and is now living at Edmonton. James S. is the oldest of her children. Robert is one of the owners of the Northern Hardware Company of Edmonton. Madge Thompson lives at Edmonton. George H. is associated with his brother, Robert, in the Northern Hardware Company, a wholesale and retail business, operating several stores in other towns besides Edmonton.

James S. Scott acquired his education in the public schools of Chatham. He was in high school through his freshman year and then on account of ill health left school in 1885 and for a time was employed as messenger with the Great Northwestern Telegraph Company at Chatham. After two years he was qualified for the position of telegraph operator, and a few months later was put on the regular force at Hamilton, Ontario. He remained there two years, in March, 1889, went to Spokane as an operator with the Western Union Telegraph Company, and was transferred to Montana in November, 1889. He continued with the Western Union Telegraph Company until 1893, and was then sent to Chicago, where he was with the same company until 1895. Returning to Helena in the winter of 1895, Mr. Scott was soon afterward made assistant day chief operator and in 1898 promoted to night chief operator.

Since 1903 Mr. Scott has been in the brokerage business. In 1907 he removed to Butte as manager of Mayo Sachs & Company, stock brokers, but in the spring of 1908 returned to Helena as manager of W. M. Biggs & Company. In the fall of 1910 he went East, making his headquarters at Chicago, and sold Montana lands and later handled Northern Michigan lands for a year or so. He was back in Montana at the close of 1912, and on January 1, 1913, bought the brokerage business of W. M. Biggs & Company, with Claude E. Wilson as his partner. Since July 1, 1918, he has been sole owner of the business. His offices are at 42 West Sixth Avenue, and he handles a large volume of business. The success of his firm is the more noteworthy, since Helena is the smallest city in the United States where a private wire service is maintained by brokers.

Mr. Scott is also vice president of the Cruse Consolidated Mining Company, is a director of the Amalgamated Silver Mining Company, and owns considerable real estate at Kalispell. His home is at 562 Fifth Avenue in Helena. He is an independent voter, is a member of Morning Star Lodge No. 5, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Helena Consistory No. 3 of the Scottish Rite; Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and is a member of the Rotary Club, Montana Club, Country Club and the Helena Commercial Club.

In 1901, at Helena, he married Miss Eva Josephine Breidenthal, daughter of H. and Elizabeth (Hall) Breidenthal, both now deceased. Her father was a flour miller, following that business in Indiana and later in Montana. Mrs. Scott was educated in the Helena High School and Vincennes University at Vincennes, Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Scott have three children: Sherwell, born March 26, 1904, is a freshman in the Helena High School and takes a prominent part in athletics, being a member of the basketball team; Elizabeth, born July 26, 1906, and Lyman, born May 3, 1912, are both in the grammar grades of the public schools.

Francis G. Johnson. The arrival of Francis G. Johnson at Scobey antedated the coming of the first railroad town. He was one of the pioneers in commercial affairs, and for eight years has handled a busy trade as a hardware merchant and has seen his efforts grow and prosper in every direction.

Mr. Johnson was born June 22, 1877, at the old town of Quincy in Trail County, North Dakota. That old town at one time was an important point on the Red River of the North, but the town disappeared when the river traffic ceased and another town sprang up on the railroad nearby.

Mr. Johnson is of English ancestry. His grandfather, John Johnson, came to Canada from England, and spent the rest of his life as a farmer near Bayfield, Ontario. He married Miss Ford. The youngest of their children was George H. Johnson, father of the Scobey merchant. George H. Johnson was born in Bayfield, Ontario, grew up and married there, and had practically no formal education. However, he had a keen intelligence, and by his own efforts gained enough knowledge to enable him to conduct his business successfully. Coming to the United States in 1872 he settled on the Red River, and though he had a very small capital, he took up a homestead and as a farmer delved into the inexhaustible riches of the Red River Valley with considerable success. His location at Quincy, the old Hudson Bay post, gave him other opportunities for business. He kept the post, fed the travelers, and gradually engaged in the mercantile business. Another important source of revenue was shipping horses from Ontario and selling them to the farmers of the Red River country. In course of time he had accumulated about 1,600 acres of the rich soil of the Red River country. However, he had suffered an accidental injury, and saw medical service far and near and dissipated a large part of his fortune in these efforts to restore his health. Nevertheless, he lived to the age of seventy, passing away in 1910. On coming to the United States he became an American citizen and was identified with the democratic party. He held several local offices, but feeling his disqualification on account of limited education declined an offer to become a candidate for both branches of the Dakota Legislature. He was deeply interested in political campaigns, served as a delegate to several state conventions, and once was sent to Washington to bring the attention of the postoffice department to his section of Dakota. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and for more than fifty years was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. Another part of his record that deserves attention was his work to secure the establishment of schools in the early days of North Dakota. After canvassing the situation with his neighbors and being unable to arouse them, he took the matter in his own hands, built a schoolhouse, hired a teacher, and thus gave the first practical impetus to public education in his region.

George H. Johnson married Margaret Sparling. She was born and reared at Clinton, Ontario. Her mother's maiden name was Margaret Elliott. The children of George H. Johnson and wife were: Mary, wife of Seth Carkin of Fargo, North Dakota; Elizabeth, wife of F. C. Harrington of the old Quincy locality in North Dakota; Joe E., of Opheim, Montana; John W., of Great Falls, Montana; Francis George, of Scobey, Montana; Clara, Mrs. R. B. Cox, of Neihart, Montana, and Florence, who died at the age of sixteen.

Francis George Johnson grew up under varied influences, his father being a farmer, merchant and hotel man. He attended public schools, but was not regularly enrolled after his tenth year. Most of his work was done on his father's farm to the age of sixteen. He then became a farmer on his own account, buying land near home, and remained there until 1911. He started without capital, the original machinery and stock being a present from his father, and with that start he handled his affairs so successfully that he paid for 380 acres of land and the equipment necessary to operate it.

On selling his farm and stock Mr. Johnson bought a half interest in a hardware business at Hendrum, Minnesota. The firm of Larsen & Johnson was in business there for several years. After the first year Mr. Johnson left the active management to his partner and came to Montana, establishing himself as a hardware merchant at Antelope. He was in that locality two years, beginning in 1912, and then removed to Scobey. Here his was one of the first three or four business houses on the town site. His building was 24 by 40 feet, and it housed a stock of shelf-hardware. Later he added harness, and has built up a large retail trade over the surrounding district. Since then he has established branch stores at Westfork and Avondale. At Scobey he is also interested in the Farmers' Oil Company.

Mr. Johnson, like his father, has felt a deep and sincere interest in public education. For the past two years he has served as a member of the Scobey School Board, his associates being H. W. Olson, Paul Crum, George Cudhie and Mr. Lund. During his term on the board the school building has been equipped with a steam heating plant and preparations made for the erection of a new high school building, which will cost $70,000.

Mr. Johnson since attaining suffrage has voted as a republican, his first ballot going to Major McKinley. He took his first degrees in Masonry at Scobey and is affiliated with the Chapter, Commandery and Consistory bodies of Helena.

In Norman County, Minnesota, December 28, 1904, Mr. Johnson married Miss Julia Nelson, a native of Minnesota. Her parents, Sivert Nelson and wife, were born in Norway. Mrs. Johnson is a sister of Cornelius S. Nelson, of Plentywood, Montana, referred to elsewhere. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have four children named Adalaide, Norman, Estella and Phyllis.

Sidney Bennett. All of those who identified themselves with Northeastern Montana before the close of the nineteenth century were pioneers. These pioneers almost without exception were in some way identified with the livestock industry, since farming and ordinary commerce offered no attractions until the last ten or twenty years. The firm of Bennett Brothers was prominent among the range stock men and shippers out of this region for several years. One of them is Sidney Bennett, now a resident of Scobey, where he subsequently became interested in merchandising, but is now giving most of his time to rural development work.

Mr. Bennett was born in England November 30, 1878, one of the four sons and three daughters of William and Kezia (Nichols) Bennett. The year after his birth the family came to Ontario, Canada, and when Sidney was eleven years of age they moved to the United States. Sidney Bennett acquired his final schooling in the St. Paul High School, and left school at the age of seventeen and came to Montana joining his brothers in the livestock shipments which they carried on for a number of years.

When the Spanish-American war came on in 1898 Sidney Bennett enlisted at Duluth in Company C of the Fourteenth Minnesota Infantry under Captain Resche and Colonel Van Duze. The regiment was sworn into the Federal service at St. Paul, went for training to Chickamauga Park and later to Knoxville, Tennessee, where it was in camp when the war ended. The regiment returned to St. Paul and was given a thirty-day furlough, and before that expired Chief Bugapagoosick of one of the Minnesota Indian reservations went on the war path with his followers and some of the volunteers, including Sidney Bennett, were called out to the seat of hostilities. They did guard duty to pacify the settlers, while the Indians all fled across the line into Canada. About ten days of guard duty was all that was required of the boys and they were then ordered to St. Paul for muster out. Mr. Bennett was discharged in 1899 and at once returned to Montana and since that year has been identified with Sheridan County.

He was associated in the ranch enterprises with his brother Jack Bennett, their headquarters being at Redstone on the Big Muddy. Some of the interesting facts regarding the Bennett Brothers business as cattlemen are told in the story of Jack Bennett. Sidney Bennett continued ranching until 1907, when he was appointed deputy sheriff of Valley County, then embracing all the region of Sheridan County. That was a time when much stock "rustling" was going on, and Mr. Bennett and other officers in the course of duty came into frequent contact with the cattle outlaws. He helped maintain the law and dignity of the state, the sheriff at that time being S. C. Small.

On leaving his official post Mr. Bennett came to old Scobey and organized the Cusker Lumber Company. He established his lumber yard and stocked it by hauling his supplies sixty miles from Poplar With the construction of the railroad and the opening of the new townsite of Scobey the yard was moved to that point and Mr. Bennett continued active in the management until 1916 when he sold out to the McCurdy Lumber Company. Since then his chief business has been investing in lands, handling farming and grain growing propositions, and in performing a number of services directly instrumental in the upbuilding of his community.

He was one of the chief movers toward the building of an electric light plant for Scobey, taking stock in order that the enterprise might get under way. He was appointed mayor of Scobey in 1917 as successor of Ole Helland and was elected to that office in 1918 for a term of two years. The chief features of his administration were the installation of a water plant and the construction of a sewer system. During the World war he was a member of the County Council of Defense, a member of the Fuel Administration, chairman of the local Red Cross and the Young Men's Christian Association, also chairman of one of the Liberty Loan drives, and of the "Seven in One" drive. Some of his most important work in promoting patriotism was as chief of the American Protective League, and for eighteen months he directed the work of that voluntary organization in and around Scobey.

Mr. Bennett cast his first presidential vote for Major McKinley, having been brought up as a republican. He served as chairman of the republican county central committee of Sheridan County four years. He took his first work in Masonry at Glasgow, including the chapter degrees, and the Consistory and Shriner degrees were conferred upon him at Helena, where he still holds his membership. The Bennett family enjoys the comforts of a modern home, with an independent water system at Scobey.

At Poplar, Montana, in May, 1912, Mr. Bennett married Miss Estelle Johnston. She was born at Lowell, Massachusetts, and the Johnston family was identified with the early period of colonization in New England, and in one of the early generations some blood of New England Indians was mixed with the stock. Her father Walter Johnston was also a native of Massachusetts, and was a Union soldier with a Massachusetts regiment. One of his brothers was lost in a battle of that war. Walter Johnston was a professional baseball player during early life, and while the Civil war was still in progress he went to Minnesota, entered a homestead, and later became a locomotive engineer on the St. Paul and Duluth Railway and did his last railroad service with the Santa Fe Company as a master mechanic. The Johnston home is now in Los Angeles. Mrs. Bennett is a daughter of Walter and Joquette (Spencer) Johnston, her mother being a daughter of Judge Spencer. Walter Johnston married a second time. Mrs. Bennett spent most of her early life at St. Paul, Minnesota, where she finished her education in high school.

ARTHUR STONE NEEDLES, M. D. The oldest physician in point of continuous service in the Scobey community is Dr. Arthur Stone Needles, who identified himself with that locality in 1914. Doctor Scobey is a very capable man in his profession, has both the natural talents and the thorough training for successful work as a physician and surgeon, and was also one of the representatives of the medical profession in Montana who volunteered their services to the Government at the time of the World war.

Doctor Needles was born at Pueblo, Colorado, September 12, 1885. His father John T. Needles, who went to Colorado about 1880, was born in the vicinity of Joplin, Missouri, one of the older sons in a large family of children. The grandfather was a Missouri farmer and spent his last years in Missouri. John T. Needles became a professional photographer and was in that business at Leadville, Colorado, and elsewhere, and in 1884 established his home in Iron City at Pueblo where he lived until his death in 1890 at the age of sixty. At Kansas City, Missouri, he married Miss Sylvia Stone, whose people were Kentuckians and early settlers around Booneville, Missouri, where Sylvia Stone was born. Her father was a physician. She is still living at Pueblo. There were three sons: John Walter, a dental surgeon at Pueblo; Frank; and Dr. Arthur S. of Scobey.

Doctor Needles grew up at Pueblo, attended the grammar and high schools of that city, and was classically educated in the University of Colorado at Boulder, graduating in 1908 with the A. B. degree. He took his medical course in the Medical School of the University of Michigan, graduating in 1911, and almost immediately came to Montana. At Missoula he was an interne in the Northern Pacific Hospital for a year, for another year was house physician at Hunters Hot Springs, and for a few months engaged in practice at Glasgow. From there he removed to Scobey in 1914, where from the beginning he found a welcome proportionate to his technical abilities and his popularity as a citizen.

In addition to his private practice he has served as local surgeon for the Great Northern Railway. Doctor Needles was on duty almost constantly for the benefit of his practice at Scobey except for the period of the World war, when he left his practice, was given intensive training for the service of the Medical Corps at Fort Riley, Kansas, and was assigned to active duty at Camp Lewis, Washington, with the rank of first lieutenant. He was with the Thirteenth Division in the Seventy-fifth Infantry, and completed his service in that camp. He received his honorable discharge February 20, 1919, and then resumed his work at Scobey. He is a member of the Scobey Post of the American Legion. Doctor Needles is a republican, having voted for Mr. Taft in 1908 and Mr. Hughes in 1916. He was the first member initiated into the Masonic lodge at Scobey after it was chartered. He also holds membership in the lodge of Odd Fellows at Scobey and in the Williston Lodge of Elks.

At Billings, Montana, Doctor Needles married Miss Emily Carter, who died at Scobey in 1915. July 29, 1918, at Scobey he married Miss Ingrid Jesten, daughter of Andrew Jesten and a sister of Mrs. Christian T. Swenson of Scobey. Doctor Needles has no children.

Christ Prestbye. All of the old timers in the Flathead country know and esteem the Prestbye family, people of splendid worth, early settlers in this section of Montana, hard workers and hospitable and generous friends.

Christ Prestbye, who now resides six miles northwest of Kalispell, was born in Norway, a son of Abraham and Edel Prestbye. There were three sons and two daughters in the family. The daughters were Hilga, now Mrs. Christensen, and Hannah. The sons were Antone, Christ and Martin. Christ spent his early life as a sailor on the high seas. More than thirty years ago he came to Montana, and was followed by his brother Martin. From Butte they came up into the Flathead country, filing on a pre-emption and engaging in farming and stock raising. They developed their homes by the planting of shade and fruit trees, and these farms still stand as a monument to their endeavors and sacrifices.

Christ Prestbye married Matilda Christensen, a native of Norway and a daughter of Christen and Marie Helgerude. They have three children, Abraham, Emin and Grant. The boys were well educated in the public schools of Kalispell, while Abraham and Grant finished their education in Spokane College and Emin the law department of the University of Montana. He is now a successful attorney and city attorney of White Fish. The son Abraham married Clara Gilbertson, and he lives on his father's farm. They have one child, Norman. The Prestbye family are members of the Lutheran Church and socially they belong to the Sons of Norway. Politically Mr. Prestbye gives his support to the principles of the democratic partv.

The Prestbyes have been distinguished by patriotic records. The son, Grant, was a soldier in the World war, being in an officers' training camp in Georgia and was commissioned a second lieutenant. He was preparing to sail overseas when the armistice was signed.

In 1917 Martin Prestbye relieved himself of the responsibilities of his farm and sold it, since making his home in Kalispell. The Prestbyes have never had reason to be dissatisfied with their choice of Montana as a home. In his early life Martin Prestbye saw many of the arduous experiences of a seafarer's life. He was engaged in the seal fisheries, sailing in the dangerous waters around the North Pole, going into the fishing fields early in the spring and returning in the fall.

When Mrs. Christ Prestbye was a young woman in Norway she was employed in a newspaper office. The Indians were still plentiful when the Prestbyes settled in Montana. Mrs. Prestbye thought it best to treat these aborigines with kindness. The Indians knew they could always be warmed and have something to eat in the Prestbye home, and they never threatened the Prestbyes with trouble. A squaw once came to the Prestbye home. Mrs. Prestbye asked the baby's age. The squaw leaned her head on her hands, closing her eyes, and then held up the fingers of both hands, indicating thereby that the baby was ten days old.

Christ Prestbye as a sailor crossed the Atlantic Ocean forty-three times. After coming to the Flathead district he became a navigator on Flathead Lake. He was pilot of the Crescent and captain of a sailing vessel for five years. Every season for three years from 1893 to 1896 he had the distinction of opening up navigation on the Kootenai River from Jennings to Fort Steele, British Columbia. Christ Prestbye at one time was the nominee of the democratic party for county treasurer. During the World war he took a leading part in his community in selling Liberty Bonds, and had a place on the honor roll for his efficient help in that direction. During the last Indian scare in this section of Montana Mr. Prestbye was detailed as a guard for the women and children, who took refuge in the schoolhouse at Ashley.

Joseph Benjamin Fleming was one of the early merchants both at old and new Scobey and while he has seen his business affairs prospered he has not neglected the welfare of the community and has given his aid not only in public office but with effective groups of citizens working for the common welfare.

Mr. Fleming has had a widely varied and interesting experience since coming to Montana and elsewhere. He was born at Carondelette in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, October 28, 1873. His parents were both natives of Ireland. Thomas Fleming, his father, came to the United States when young and married at New Orleans Miss Elizabeth McCaffery. Thomas Fleming located at St. Louis during the Civil war, was a steamboat man on the Mississippi River, and in 1877 moved out to Colorado, locating at Denver where he died soon afterwards. His wife also died at Denver, and of their children Joseph B. was the only one to grow up.

Mr. Fleming was about eight years of age when his mother died and after that he lived in the home of his uncle Bennett Fleming. He attended the parochial and public schools of Denver to the eighth grade and between the age of fifteen and sixteen began making his own living. His early apprenticeship and trade was as printer. He acquired a thorough knowledge of the art at Denver, where he was employed on the Rocky Mountain News, did work in a job office at Pueblo, was in the composing rooms of the Kansas City Star, on the Courier-News at Savannah, Georgia, and worked at various other points in the South as a journeyman doing his final work as a printer on papers and in job offices at Memphis.

On coming North Mr. Fleming located in North Dakota and for seven years was proprietor of the Merchants Hotel at Washburn. The following year he continued in the hotel business at Max, North Dakota, and on leaving North Dakota came to old Scobey on April 19, 1913. His business in Montana has been continuously in the bakery and confectionery trade. At old Scobey he erected a shop and business house, which he moved to the new town on October 17, 1913, and he still occupies his old stand.

His interests have always extended beyond his personal affairs. For two years he was a member of the Scobey Council, being on the first aldermanic board. On account of obsence of funds in the treasury that board had to content itself largely with marking time. For eighteen months he was a member of the school board until he resigned on account of illness. In politics he has acknowledged no party ties, acting independently in matters of votes and in support of candidates. He is a Master Mason and Odd Fellow.

At Harvey, North Dakota, June 14, 1904, Mr. Fleming married Miss Josephine Peterson, who was born in North Dakota, second of the eight children of Peter and Julia (Swan) Peterson. Her father was a Danish Norwegian, and her mother a native of Norway. Peter Peterson for many years was engaged in the hotel business and was also a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Fleming have two daughters, Grace, born in 1907, and May, born in 1909.

Henry Gray. A resident of Northeastern Montana for twenty years, Henry Gray, who began his life as a homesteader has achieved prominence and great influence in the business affairs of Sheridan County and has been directly interested in much of the growth and prosperity of Redstone.

Mr. Gray was born in Grant County, Wisconsin, June 6, 1870. His father Joseph Gray was a native of New York State and one of several children. One of his brothers reared a family in Vernon County, Wisconsin, and his only sister seems to have remained in New York State. Joseph Gray after his marriage went West and settled in Grant County, Wisconsin, and later homesteaded in North Dakota, where he finished his career as a farmer. He lived to the remarkable age of ninety-eight years twenty-seven days, his death occurring December 28, 1917. He was a strong republican in politics, and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married Caroline Stone, whose people were also New Yorkers. She died near Hope, North Dakota, in 1895. Their children were: W. C. of Tower City, North Dakota; George who has been a wanderer and was last heard from Texas; Willis and Randall, farmers at Page City, North Dakota; Omer, a business man of Page City; Frank of Oswego, Montana; and Henry who is the youngest of the family.

Henry Gray lived in Grant County, Wisconsin, until 1883 when his parents moved to North Dakota, and he grew to manhood in Steele County, that state. He had a public school education, and before he left home at the age of eighteen had acquired some knowledge of the butcher's trade. He began his career as a wage earner cutting meat on the block at Fargo, at Superior, Wisconsin, and then established a business of his own at Hunter, North Dakota.

From Hunter, North Dakota, Mr. Gray came to Montana in May, 1900, and established himself on the Big Muddy in the Redstone community. None of the lands in that region were then open for settlement, and where one stopped and sat down had a right to stay and use the surrounding territory so far as he did not trespass upon the similar rights of other squatters. The nearest trading and postoffice point was Culbertson. Mr. Gray came here for the purpose of ranching, bringing with him as a nucleus of his business sixty-five head of yearling heifers. As his home he built a one-room lumber shack, and the following year brought out his family, and with his cattle started earnestly to achieve success by grazing his stock on the public domain. As soon as the lands were open for settlement he filed on and proved up a homestead, and still owns it as part of his rather extensive ranch holdings. Mr. Gray continued actively as a rancher for about seventeen years, and while his personal interests have since been diverted elsewhere he still owns his ranch property and its stock. His cattle brand was VX on the right rib, while his horse brand is "lazy JM" on the left side. His first shipments of stock were made through Culbertson, and later when Redstone became a station on the Great Northern he shipped from that point. The Gray Ranch interests total 2100 acres. In recent years grain growing has become a feature of the ranch management, and about 840 acres are now under cultivation. Much of this is seeded to bromas grass and western rye grass, especially adapted to hay and grazing, and these grasses in the opinion of Mr. Gray do better and give more satisfactory results than alfalfa.

While still engaged in ranching Mr. Gray took stock in the State Bank of Redstone when it was organized, and was elected by the directors vice president. He remained one of the board until 1919, when he sold his stock. While connected with the bank he saw the need of an oil station at Redstone. Not being able to interest either the Standard Oil Company or an independent company, he decided to make it a matter of his individual enterprise and opened what is now the Westland Oil Station at Redstone in April, 1913. The business encouraged him and he gradually expanded by taking in other capital and assistants, establishing a number of branch stations. The Redstone Oil Company was merged with the Scobey Oil Company, resulting in the Westland Oil Company, whose headquarters are at Scobey, with about seventeen branches in other towns around. Mr. Gray has been president of the Westland Oil Company since it was organized December 29, 1919.

Mr. Gray has used his private business enterprise in a way to bring about community benefit, and has never contented himself with office holding. He is a republican, having cast his first ballot for Benjamin Harrison in 1892. He is a Past Noble Grand of Hunter Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in North Dakota.

At Perham, Minnesota, January 14, 1892, Mr. Gray married Miss Carrie Hutchinson. She was born in County Armagh, Ireland, September 25, 1868, eighth in a family of ten children born to John and Anna (McCann) Hutchinson. Mrs. Gray was sixteen years of age when she came to the United States with her brother, sailing from Londonderry, Ireland, aboard the Polynesia and landing at Toronto, Canada. Her destination was Fargo, North Dakota. Mrs. Gray had only a sixth grade education, and was a working girl at Fargo when she met Mr. Gray. Mr. and Mrs. Gray have four children: Emma, Harry, Ruth and Lulu. Harry is a factor on the Gray Ranch and married Pearl Guerin. Emma is the wife of Philip P. Schneider and Lulu is Mrs. Noel K. Dickson. Mrs. Henry Gray passed away April 26, 1920.

Oscar R. Aslakson is manager and a partner in the Flaxville Mercantile Company at Flaxville and has had a busy and interesting career as a homesteader and merchant in Northeastern Montana since 1907. His early training was in commercial lines, and he has proved one of the valuable factors in an organization that now operates three stores in Northeastern Montana.

Mr. Aslakson was born in Yellow Medicine County, Minnesota, April 21, 1880, a son of Norwegian parents. He lived on a farm to the age of fourteen, attended school at Canby, Minnesota, to the age of fourteen, and then accompanied the family on their removal to Chicago. In that city he attended the grammar and high schools for a year, took a commercial course at the Athenæum, and on leaving school went to work in the office of Swift & Company for six months and for a time was also in the correspondence department of Montgomery Ward & Company. By that time he had a hospital experience and for several months did nothing but recuperate. Leaving Chicago Mr. Aslakson prospected for opportunities for about two years in South Dakota and Minnesota, being employed by several wholesale houses. At Minneapolis he gained further experience as clerk with several firms for about two years.

With this varied knowledge of business affairs Mr. Aslakson came to Montana in July, 1907. His first location was at Culbertson, where he became connected with the Whittmeier & Brooks Company. He was one of the dependable workers of that organization for almost eight years. Three months before his eighth year term expired he came into Sheridan County and entered a homestead near Redstone. His neighbor just across the road was his brother Thomas. Mr. Aslakson began his improvements with a one-room frame house 14 by 20 feet, subsequently remodeled into three rooms, and during the period of proving up he did his duty on the land by attempting to raise grain and livestock. Like most of the homesteaders of that time he was unable to make the claims provide for his family and he earned additional funds by occasionally clerking for the Redstone Mercantile Company, working as a harvest hand and behind threshing machines. On leaving his claim Mr. Aslakson came to Flaxville, and in March, 1916, took the management of the Flaxville Mercantile Company, at the same time acquiring a partnership in the business. His personality has been the chief factor in the success of that firm.

For some years Mr. Aslakson has been associated with A. Ingwalson & Company, formerly a partnership, but changed to a stock company and incorporated in 1920. This corporation now conducts general merchandise stores at Plentywood, Flaxville and Redstone, Montana, Crosby and Wildrose, North Dakota.

Mr. Aslakson was reared in a republican home, and cast his first presidential vote for Colonel Roosevelt in 1904, also for Taft in 1908, but in 1912 and 1916 gave his ballot to Mr. Wilson. He was reared under good religious influences, and while not a member of any denomination he encourages church work.

At Culbertson December 15, 1910, Mr. Aslakson married Miss Evelynn Hill. She was born at Minnesota Lake, Minnesota, July 15, 1880. Her mother is Mattie (Dyer) Hill. She was one of two children to reach mature years, her brother being Vard Hill of Orland, California. Mr. and Mrs. Aslakson have a daughter, Candace Oralynn.

Jacob C. Timmons is one of many Iowa settlers who have identified themselves with Northeastern Montana. He left Iowa when farm values were beginning their rapid advance and came to the West where land could be had for practically nothing and, with a homestead and the open range, engaged in the livestock industry. His farm and ranch have been the essential features of his enterprise but he early lent himself to the promotion of business affairs, was one of the founders of the old Village of Scobey, and has also been closely identified with the growth and progress of the new town of that name.

Mr. Timmons was born in Marshall County, Iowa, April 22, 1868, son of Robert M. and Nancy (Shivley) Timmons. Both the Timmons and Shivley families were pioneers in the State of Iowa, going there about 1854. Robert M. Timmons was born in Delaware in 1833 and was the oldest of a numerous family of children and when they were orphaned it fell to his lot to help take care of and rear the younger children. For this reason he had but few educational opportunities. Going to Iowa by ox team he became a laborer and teamster, invested his surplus earnings in land, gradually became independent and finally a successful feeder of stock and widely known over that region as a pioneer, successful business man and a splendid citizen. His wife was a daughter of Ulrey L. Shivley, who moved to Iowa by ox team from Indiana. Mr. Timmons died in 1903 and his wife died in January, 1918, at the age of eighty-three. They were the parents of three sons and five daughters. Those still living are: John, Mrs. Emma Anson, Mrs. Elizabeth Shewalter all of Marshalltown, Iowa; Jacob C.; and George W. of Marshalltown. Three others now deceased were: Mrs. Alice Bell of Shadron, Nebraska; Mrs. Adel M. Daniels, who died at her old Iowa home the wife of M. A. Daniels; and Mary who died in childhood.

Jacob C. Timmons came to manhood with a knowledge of farming acquired by his experiences on his father's place and had a country school education. After two years as a helper to his father on the farm he married and for a dozen years farmed in Iowa until he sought larger opportunities in the West.

The influence that led him to Northeastern Montana was the presence of his brother-in-law the late Mansfield A. Daniels. He brought with him three or four cars of young cattle and a few horses and unloaded his emigrant car at Poplar in May, 1902. That country was then a part of Valley County. By wagon he proceeded up Poplar River in search of a permanent location, and established himself on that stream in section 20, township 35, range 48. The lands had not yet been surveyed, and he was a squatter until the region was platted when he filed and proved up his tract. His first act was to erect a temporary building, a two-room frame house with corrals and cattle sheds for his stock. A year later his wife and child joined him and he then vigorously launched himself into stock raising. He increased his herds by other shipments the following year, and what with improving his proposed homestead, looking after his stock, and providing housing facilities, he was a very busy man indeed.

Mr. Timmons has had a part in practically everything that could be considered essential to the history of development in that region. He early conceived the idea of irrigating his lowlands. With some of his neighbors including Joseph Bonness, Charles and Fred Woodley and M. A. Daniels, a system of ditches was constructed to ring the waters of Poplar River over the land, this system being known as "The Joint Irrigation Project." The work was a matter of a number of years. The first three dams constructed were temporary and were destroyed by freshets. In 1920 a solid cement dam was built, and that gives the system a permanent character

W. H. Belleflower.

Nevertheless the older dams proved their value and beneficiaries of the water rights have harvested aboundant crops of hay.

Some of the lands adjacent to his homestead and owned by him later came into Mr. Timmons' possession by purchase. His present ranch around old Scobey comprises 1180 acres. He also had extensive tracts under lease, all of which in former years furnished him abundant opportunity for his business as a ranchman and farmer. While he has maintained his hay lands intact, he has done much to cultivate his other holdings.

In former years Mr. Timmons and Mr. Daniels were partners in their stock raising and about nine years after he came to Montana they also opened a small store under the name Daniels & Timmons. This was continued until 1916 and was the central factor in the business life of old Scobey. Gradually other enterprises sprang up, including a blacksmith shop, hotel, livery, bank, and such was the enterprise of the little village until the building of the Great Northern Railway resulted in the founding of the new town of the same name.

Mr. Timmons was also one of seven men who launched and promoted the Farmers Elevator in Scobey. He is a stockholder in the Farmers Oil Company and in the Montana Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Timmons readily adapted himself to the changing conditions caused by the rapid introduction of newspapers and the converting of the open range into farming tracts. He was associated with Mr. Daniels and John Manternach in the purchase of the first threshing machine brought to the locality, and operated it for a couple of years. Daniels & Timmons continued their range and stock interests until about 1912, when they sold their surplus of cattle and horses and concentrated their attention upon farming. Their cattle brand was "lazy YD" and their horse brand was "Jbar 5" and for years the firm made annual shipments from Northeastern Montana to the Chicago markets.

Mr. Timmons was reared in a democratic home and cast his first presidential vote for Cleveland in 1892, and has always supported that party in national elections. While his private enterprise has been in the nature of a service to the entire community. He has also enjoyed official responsibilities as county commissioner of Sheridan County. He was elected in 1915 as successor to Harry Loucks and was associated with the commissioners F. A. Weinrich, P. J. Eie, J. D. Matkin and R. G. Tyler. Besides the routine work the board did important new road construction and bridge building, and also held special elections for seed grain and road bonds.

November 5, 1890, Mr. Timmons married Miss Martha Louella Benner, a native of Illinois. Her father Henry Benner was born in Pennsylvania and from Illinois moved to Iowa when Mrs. Timmons was a child. She was the youngest of five daughters and two sons. Her father spent his life at the anvil and forge. Mr. and Mrs. Timmons have one daughter, Blanche E. She grew up in the frontier country of Northeastern Montana, has been a constant and valuable aid to her parents, and like other new settlers has proved up a claim. The Timmons permanent home on the ranch was built and completed with twelve rooms, equipped with lighting system, hot and cold water and furnace. Besides this modern home the ranch has other features that make it noteworthy in the country around Scobey. It contains barns and granaries of generous capacity, and all the other facilities indicate that Mr. Timmons is one of the most progressive farmers and ranchers in this section.

W. M. Bellefleur has rendered an important service in Flathead County during the past seven years as superintendent of the County Infirmary and Hospital.

Mr. Bellefleur was born at Green River, Canada, son of William Bellefleur. He was educated in the schools of Canada and came to Montana in 1879, journeying up the Missouri River as far as Fort Benton. He did freighting around Missoula and also conducted a livery barn there. In 1881 he drove a herd of cattle back to Canada, returning to Montana in 1882 and locating in the Flathead Valley, where he filed on a homestead. He still owns that quarter section, and for many years was successfully engaged in farming and stock raising.

Mr. Bellefleur married Flora Tibdeau. She was the mother of four children, W. A., H. H., Elizabeth and Josephine. In 1913 Mr. Bellefleur assumed charge of the County Poor Farm and Hospital. His son, W. A. Bellefleur, was educated in the public schools of Kalispell and was a soldier in Company C of the Eighty-seventh Infantry, spending five months in training at Camp Dodge, Iowa. The daughter, Elizabeth, is now Mrs. Hamilton, and Josephine is the wife of George W. Lang and lives at Lovelock, Nevada. Mr. Bellefleur married for his second wife Irene Duffy, a native of Minnesota, and a daughter of Martin and Mary (Grady) Duffy. She was educated in the public schools at Northfield, Minnesota. They have one child, George.

The County Home at present has nine inmates. Everything about the home is a credit to the county and to the care and sympathetic management of Mr. and Mrs. Bellefleur. Mr. and Mrs. Bellefleur are members of the Catholic Church and he is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Elks, while Mrs. Bellefleur is a Maccabee. In politics he supports the democratic party. For six years he served as deputy sheriff of Flathead County, and while living at Creston was a member of the school board.

A visit to the County Home convinces anyone that Mr. Bellefleur is the right man in the right place. He has every department of the home in perfect system. A number of cows provide milk and butter for the home, there is an abundant supply of poultry, every winter 225 cords of wood are burned to keep the rooms warm, and the store rooms are well filled with provisions. Everything is in perfect sanitary condition.

Mr. Bellefleur owns a fine summer home at Lake McDonald in Glacier Park. His two sons farm his ranch and are among the progressive and capable young men of the county.

Carlton B. Bull. While he is now president of the State Bank of Redstone and has other important interests in that section, Carlton B. Bull began his career in this locality twenty years ago as a cowboy and ranch hand. His connection with Redstone covers the period of the life of the town. He has given his support to all matters deserving public consideration, and has influenced the destiny of the community to date.

Mr. Bull was born at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, August 2, 1880. His father Joseph W. Bull is a prominent Minnesota lawyer. Born near Reading, Pennsylvania, of a family of poor farmers, he worked his way through college, read law, was admitted to the New York State bar, and on removing to Iowa began practice at Tipton, where he was married. His wife, Harriet Boynton, was born near Upper Sandusky, Ohio, was liberally educated, and was a teacher in the states of Ohio and Iowa before her marriage. Joseph W. Bull removed from Tipton to Cedar Rapids and was an active member in his profession in that city for about twenty years. While his practice was general, he became distinguished as an expert on title and land laws. At the age of about sixty he retired from his profession, having in the meantime removed to Minnesota, and his winter home is now in Minneapolis with a summer home on Lake Minnetonka. Joseph W. Bull is a veteran Union soldier, and his name is inscribed on the soldiers' monument erected in Duluth. He has never been active in politics, though he was interested in the free silver issue of which Mr. Bryan was the chief exponent. He and his wife had four children: Emerson K. of North Bend, Washington; Bertha B., wife of Bert F. Lum of San Francisco; Clara who died in young womanhood; and Carlton B.

Carlton B. Bull was eight years of age when his parents removed to Duluth, Minnesota, in 1888, and he acquired most of his education there. For two years he attended high school in Pasadena, California.

He was not yet twenty-one years of age when he arrived in Montana October 25, 1900. From Culbertson he went out to the ranch of Jack Bennett, present sheriff of Sheridan County and rode the range and did the common work of the Bennett ranch one year. During three successive years he was employed similarly by other well known settlers and ranchers of the locality. In his ambition to become an independent rancher he had accumulated about fifteen head of cattle and a few horses. Most of his cattle perished in the hard winter that followed and with the remainder he located on Wolf Creek fourteen miles south of Redstone. He exchanged his few cattle for other horses, put up hay for their winter feed, and the next spring bought 400 head of cattle on time, giving as earnest money two of his horses and getting credit on the balance. The next four years constituted a period of regular work on the range, practically without vacations, and at the end he had $2,800 to show for his work besides a number of horses. His horses were a profitable feature of his business and for two years he also handled a considerable flock of sheep, likewise with some profit. Mr. Bull continued ranching until 1913. He had taken up a desert claim and homesteaded on Wolf Creek and when he abandoned his ranch he owned 480 acres. Since then his dealings in land have increased his holdings until he now pays taxes on 2,000 acres. More and more he has emphasized the farming branch of his business and has found a satisfactory profit from that portion of his land seeded to alfalfa and broom grass.

Mr. Bull had a brief experience in banking at Plentywood in the State Bank, and in the fall of 1913 he opened the State Bank of Redstone. His associates were Peter Marron, Andrew Fadness, N. L. Nelson and Norman Hanson of Fertile, Minnesota, and Henry Gray and L. C. Lindemann of Redstone. At the organization Mr. Fadness was elected president, Henry Clay, vice president, Mr. Lindemann, cashier, and Mr. Bull assistant cashier. The capital of the bank has remained steadily at $25,000. Since the death of Mr. Fadness the board of directors on January 2, 1920, promoted Mr. Bull from the vice presidency to president.

Mr. Bull was one of the organizers of the Commercial Club of Redstone, serving it as president, and is a member of the school board of the village. During the war he was a member of the County Council of Defense, was local chairman of Liberty Loan drives, and is a life member of the Red Cross. A republican, he cast his first vote for Roosevelt in 1904, and has always regarded himself as a republican in principle though like thousands of others he supported Mr. Wilson in 1916. He was made a Mason at Culbertson, Montana, and is Past Master of Eagle Lodge No. 103 at Redstone.

At Culbertson September 1, 1907, Mr. Bull married Miss Blanche Claydon. She was born at Perham, Minnesota, March 19, 1885, daughter of Frederick and Harriet (Haslett) Claydon. Her parents were born and married in England and left their home in London to come to America. Mr. Claydon came to the United States in 1881, took up a homestead and occupied it for a brief time in Ottertail County, Minnesota, and then removed to Perham and finally to Wadena, Minnesota, where during his last years he was engaged in milling. His widow survives him. Their children were: Dr. L. E. Claydon and Percy of Red Wing, Minnesota; Frederick of Wadena; Mrs. Bull; May, who died after her marriage at Wadena; and Horace C. of Phoenix, Arizona. Mr. and Mrs. Bull have one daughter, Harriet A., born October 17, 1914.

Herbert C. Hawley is one of the reliable and successful druggists of Harlowton, where he has established himself in the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens. He was born at Napanee, Ontario, Canada, April 21, 1879, a son of Charles H. and Cynthia R. (Detlor) Hawley, both of whom were born in Canada. He died on October 31, 1918, but she is still living, being now in her seventieth year. They had three children, as follows: Joseph C., Herbert C. and Edith M. Charles H. Hawley was a farmer and a breeder and lover of horses and cattle, preferring the Hambletonian and Shorthorn strains to any others. Although not connected with any religious organization, he helped to support and attended the services of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his wife was a consistent member from girlhood. During his long life, for he lived to be seventy-seven, he accomplished much, and was always hardworking and thrifty.

Herbert C. Hawley attended the public schools of his native place and the Napanee Collegiate Institute, after which he came to the United States and took up the study of pharmacy at the University of Minnesota, where he was thoroughly grounded in his profession. Subsequent to his graduation from the latter institution he established himself in business at Hensel, North Dakota, and remained there until 1908, in that year coming to Harlowton, where he has built up a very desirable connection. His drug store is well stocked with a full line of the goods usually found in an establishment of this kind, and his patrons know that when buying from him they will get just what they ask for, it being his pride that he never uses substitutes.

On August 25, 1902, Mr. Hawley was married to Miss Mabel McGuin, born at Winnipeg, Canada, a daughter of Henry and Jane (Lee) McGuin, natives of Canada, both of whom survive. They had two children, Delbert and Mrs. Hawley. Mr. McGuin was a farmer and also owned and operated an elevator during his active years.

Very prominent as a Mason, Mr. Hawley belongs to Musselshell Lodge No. 69, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Harlowton Chapter No. 22, Royal Arch Masons; Palestine Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar, of which he is now eminent commander; and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine of Helena, Montana. In politics he is a republican. During 1910 he served as president of the Commercial Club and is enthusiastic with reference to it and the work it is accomplishing toward building up Harlowton and expanding its commercial and industrial interests.

Mr. and Mrs. Hawley have two children, Edith

Bernice and Alma May, both of whom are charming girls. The family occupies an enviable position in the social circles of Wheatland County, and their pleasant home is often the scene of delightful gatherings.

GROVER CLEVELAND PERKINS, funeral director of Harlowton, is a man whose reliability in sympathetic service, moderation in charges in the hour of bereavement and thorough knowledge of his profession have recommended him to the general public. In addition to his undertaking business, Mr. Perkins is a traction specialist and handles the new Hart-Parr Studebaker cars, Diamond trucks and accessories, Oliver plows and tractors.

The birth of Mr. Perkins took place on his father's farm in Jefferson County, Missouri, on July 26, 1885. He is a son of David A. and Kansas Virginia (Frost) Perkins, both natives of Missouri, he born on October 15, 1856, and she on December 28, 1858. They had nine children, of whom three sons and four daughters survive, Grover Cleveland Perkins being the fifth child in order of birth. Early in life David A. Perkins was engaged in farming and stockraising, and then went into the mercantile field and for more than thirty-five years has been engaged in this line with profitable results. He is an Odd Fellow and Modern Woodman. In politics he is a strong democrat. The Baptist Church holds his membership.

After completing his public school courses Grover Cleveland Perkins took the teacher's examination and passed it, and then took a course at the St. Louis School of Embalming from which he was graduated in 1910, and later was graduated from the Eckels School of Embalming, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, following which he returned to Harlowton and engaged in a general merchandise business and undertaking, continuing until 1913 as manager of the Fair Store, and when he sold his interest in the Uruer Merchandise Company he went into the garage and automobile business, continuing as a funeral director, however. In 1915 Mr. Perkins was appointed to fill the office of county commissioner, and was elected chairman of the board and in November, 1918, he was elected a member of the county board of Wheatland County, and has been its chairman ever since. Fraternally he belongs to Musselshell Lodge No. 69, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Helena Consistory, in which he has reached the thirty-second degree; and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of the Odd Fellows, of which he is past noble grand, and since 1908 he has served on the finance committee of the Grand Lodge of that order. Like his father, he is an ardent democrat. For several years he has been a member of the city council of Harlowton. In addition to his other interests Mr. Perkins is a director of the Wheatland County Bank.

On February 12, 1908, Mr. Perkins was united in marriage with Miss Nellie May Townsend, a daughter of William H. Townsend, and second child in a family of three children born to her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Perkins have three children living and two dead, namely: Grover H.; Delmon D.; Clyde, who died when six and one-half years old; Glenn Wilson, who died in infancy; and Lois Mae. Both Mr. and Mrs. Perkins are held in high esteem by all who know them.

CHARLES HENRY LANIUS. It is a well attested maxim that the greatness of the state lies not in the machinery of the Government, or even in its institutions, but in the sterling qualities of its individual citizens, in their capacity for high and useful effort and unselfish endeavor and their devotion to the public good. To this class belongs Charles H. Lanius, the present efficient and popular postmaster of the Town of Harlowton. Through a residence of years in this locality his influence for good has been widely felt, for he has at all times been actuated by the highest motives and lofty principles, and the history of his section of the state should certainly contain his record.

Charles Henry Lanius was born in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, on January 18, 1883, and is the son of Charles C. and Sarah (Ebert) Lanius. The father was born in York, Pennsylvania, and his death occurred in 1897, at the age of forty-seven years. He is survived by his widow, who is now seventy years of age. She too was born in York. They were the parents of three children, all of whom are living, namely: Jane; Sarah L., the wife of J. Cullen Sullivan; and Charles H.

Charles H. Lanius received his elementary education in the public schools of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and then became a student in Nazareth Hall Military Academy at Nazareth, Pennsylvania, where he was graduated with the class of 1897. Then he took a course in Patrick's Business College at York, Pennsylvania. His first employment was as a bookkeeper in the York National Bank, where he remained until 1904, when he went to Denver, Colorado, and accepted the position of bookkeeper and chief clerk with the Glen Rock Coal Company. Two years later, in 1906, he went to Anderson, South Carolina, where for about three years he served as secretary for the Anderson Real Estate and Investment Company. In the spring of 1909 Mr. Lanius came to Meagher County, Montana, and took up a homestead. He immediately engaged in farming operations, which commanded his attention until 1914, when President Woodrow Wilson appointed him postmaster at Harlowton. So eminently satisfactory was his conduct of the office that in 1918 he was reappointed and is still serving in that position, to the entire satisfaction of both the Government and the patrons of the office. Mr. Lanius has always taken an intelligent interest in the public affairs of the communities in which he has lived and during the legislative session of 1913 he was, on May 9th, appointed treasurer of Wheatland County. He was later elected to that office, but never entered upon his official term, as the county was not located until afterward.

Politically Mr. Lanius is a stanch supporter of the democratic party. Fraternally he is a member of Musselshell Lodge No. 69, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and Harlowton Chapter No. 22, Royal Arch Masons.

Mr. Lanius was married to Bessie H. Hough, a native of South Carolina, and to them has been born a son, Charles Henry, Jr. Genial and approachable, Mr. Lanius has won a host of warm personal friends since coming to this section of Montana, and he deservedly stands among the leading citizens of this section.

I. L. FLINCHPAUGH. The years of the honored subject of this sketch are a part of the indissoluble chain which links the annals of the past to those of the latter-day progress and prosperity, and a history embracing Western Montana would not be complete without due reference to the long life he has lived and the success he has achieved as an earnest, courageous laborer in one of the most important fields of endeavor, agriculture. He is public spirited and lends his support to any cause that has for its ultimate object the betterment of his locality in material, civic and moral lines.

I. L. Flinchpaugh was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, and is the fourth in order of birth of the eight sons born to Caleb and Rachel (Ingersoll) Flinchpaugh. These children were named as follows, and it is worthy of note that all of the children are living at the present time, the youngest being over fifty years of age: W. H., principal of one of the Cincinnati high schools, David, Wesley R., I. L., Jacob, Francis M., A. E., who is also principal of one of the high schools of Cincinnati, and E. R., a successful physician in Prices Hill, a suburb of Cincinnati. The subject of this sketch received his education in the public schools of his native locality, where he remained until about thirty years of age. He was reared to a farm life, but subsequently learned the trade of a carpenter. At the age of thirty years Mr. Flinchpaugh came West and was employed as a bridge carpenter in the construction of the Bitter Root Railway. On December 5, 1887, he came to the Flathead country and filed a preemption claim to 160 acres of land, the tract being located where the thriving City of Kalispell now stands, and this same land he afterward sold to the Kalispell Town Site Company. About a year later he was married, and he and his wife went onto their claim and began in earnest to create a homestead or ranch. They have never left this section of the country, having been well satisfied with their first choice of location, and here they have reaped the rewards of their years of toil and discomforts and sacrifices, so that today they are in the enjoyment of a splendid competence. They have been witnesses of the wonderful transformation which has taken place here and can recite many interesting stories of those early years. At that time Missoula County extended clear up to the Canadian line, comprising an extent of territory larger than the State of Ohio. They were 150 miles from the county seat, Missoula, the trip being made by boat, wagon and horseback. In those days the country abounded in wild game of many varieties, and the pioneers had no lack of fresh meat for their larder. Deer were very plentiful, and Mr. Flinchpaugh has bagged hundreds of them, his home now being adorned by some magnificent mounted deer heads as trophies of the old hunting days. Mr. Flinchpaugh says he has counted in one day as many as 150 deer, twenty-five being in one bunch, and each hunter was permitted to shoot six deer. Indians were numerous and were frequent callers at the cabin homes of the white settlers, with whom they generally remained on good terms. Mr. Flinchpaugh's present home, which lies about one mile west of Kalispell, comprises sixty-one and a half acres and is a finely improved ranch, everything about the place being arranged for the comfort and convenience of the owners. They have made it a point to plant good fruit trees and now have some fine varieties of apple, plum and cherry trees, besides strawberries and small fruit. They have planted a large part of the place to alfalfa, which in this section proves a very reliable and profitable crop.

In Missoula Mr. Flinchpaugh was married to Mary Glockle, the daughter of John and Mary Glockle, who has proven a helpmate to him in the truest sense of the word. Religiously they attend the Church of Christ, Scientist, in the faith of which they are enthusiastic believers, and to the support of which society they give generously. Politically Mr. Flinchpaugh is a stanch supporter of the democratic party, though he is not in any sense a seeker after public office. The examples such men as Mr. Flinchpaugh furnish of patient purpose and steadfast integrity strongly illustrate what is in the power of each to accomplish. By a straightforward and commendable course he has made his way to an enviable position, winning the hearty admiration of the people among whom he has lived and earning a reputation for industry, public spirit and wholesome living.

McClellan Wininger, a son of Michael and Nancy (Tarter) Wininger, was born on a farm near Glasgow, Kentucky, January 24, 1862. Their ancestors were of Teutonic lineage, who immigrated to America prior to the Revolutionary war.

The Wininger descendants came from old Saxony, Germany, and settled in Pennsylvania about 1750. Subsequently, c., 1808, some of the families moved to Hawkins County, Tennessee, where the grandfather, Stephen Wininger, married Rhoda Robinette, of Scottish parentage, whose descendants were from Normandy, c., 1560. From this union there were five boys and four girls and during the year 1848 they all moved to Barren County, Kentucky.

Nancy Tarter was one of the twelve children of Andrew and Alfa (Haunschel) Tarter, of Scott County, Virginia. The Tarters (some of the families wrote their names Darter) were of Scandinavian extraction, and traditionally they traced their descendants from the ill-fated Greenland settlements and relief expeditions, c., 1410. The Haunschels and their relatives, the Wetzels, settled in Western Virginia. Living on the frontiers, the Haunschels were mostly exterminated during the Indian wars.

Michael Wininger was married in 1859. The following year he purchased a farm on which he resided for forty-five years. They raised six boys and four girls. McClellan was the oldest, and at the age of fourteen the father was taken with asthma, which rendered him incapable of attending to business for six years. During this time McClellan managed the farming operations successfully. There was never a mortgage on anything and all bills were duly paid. And the old farm is still owned by the family. Of the brothers, Stephen D. resides in Montesano, Washington; I. H. Wininger in Glasgow, Kentucky, and Chris M. in Oakland, California.

From early boyhood McClellan Wininger had a desire for books and study. Most of his spare time was given to reading history, travels and the sciences. After he became of age he took several courses in the Normal School and Business College, and taught school four years in his native county. He came to Helena, Montana, in 1887, and worked a while along civil engineering lines. Through political influences he was appointed one of the guards of the U. S. prison at Deer Lodge, which position he held till April, 1889, when he came to Flathead Valley.

There was an Indian scare at the time, but of no serious consequences. The trouble was mostly caused from whiskey. The Indian when sober is generally peaceable. Later, in September, 1890, Sheriff Houston with seventy-five volunteers, of which posse McClellan Wininger was secretary, made a raid on the Indians for the purpose of apprehending a few miscreants who were afterwards captured and legally executed. This was the last of what might be termed Indian troubles in the valley.

In 1891 he assisted A. A. White and others in obtaining the Kalispell townsite and was associated with the right of way department of the Great Northern Railway Company, when the line was located through the valley.

J. M. C. Winnegar

Mr. Wininger is a lawyer by profession and was admitted to the bar in 1893. During the panicky years he settled the business of the defunct Globe National Bank of Kalispell. This settlement resulted in a partnership and business relations with V. Simpson of Winona, Minnesota. The business was principally loaning money and farming. The loans amounted to about $36,000. The Acme Dairy Farm comprised 1,200 acres of land and several smaller tracts. There were thirty-five milch cows, about two hundred head of cattle in all, mostly Shorthorn. about 20 per cent registered. They propagated thoroughbred Poland-China hogs, over a hundred per year. The greatest number of horses was thirty-six head, some registered Percherons. The grain crop amounted to about 3,000 bushels per year. The largest amount invested was $55,400.

Some loans were made to Coats and Preston, lumbermen at Lakeview. The enterprise was not a success. Coats retired from the business. Mr. Preston was accidentally killed in the logging department. It devolved on Mr. Wininger to take the outfit. Improvements were made and the business put on a financial basis. Owing to cheap timber and close competition the profits were small. Common lumber sold at $7 per thousand. The entire cut during the summer was sold as low as $8 per thousand. The yearly cut stacked in the yard amounted to about $34,000. The cost of the plant, with logs for the next season and lumber on hand, aggregated a $65,000 investment. During the progress of this operation, 1904, the Great Northern Railway Company removed their line. And in reparation the railroad company purchased the mill, lumber on hand and the standing timber within two miles thereof. The amount received covered all the expenses and left a profit of about $16,000 for the five years' experience in the lumber business.

Mr. Wininger took an active part in progressive farming. He was secretary of the Farmers' Board of Trade, a farmers' organization affecting a betterment of conditions. He first built and promoted the farm telephone lines. In October, 1905, he headed a committee of farmers and investigated the sugar beet industry in Utah and Idaho with the object in view of growing them in this valley. It required irrigation and labor that the farmers here were unwilling to furnish. After the death of Mr. Simpson the farming enterprise was settled, in 1906, the junior partner realizing something over $16,000 profits for the eight years' transactions.

On March 26, 1907, he took over the business of the Farmers Mercantile Company and operated it for three years, but with not much success. He closed out the business and constructed a building called Wininger Block, which he now owns and in which he resides in Kalispell.

Retiring from the strenuous life at the age of fifty, he devoted his time to the study of the sciences, history and travels. For several years he has been an associate member of the Society of Psychic Research, and has perused the theories of the various religions of the world. He is a firm believer of the evolution of all animal life. He works upon the theory that human life has been millions of years in developing from the lowest forms of vitality to the present condition and that the individuality will continue after corporal extinction. He has a library of several thousand select volumes of books. There are specialties on biology, botany, geology, mineralogy, astronomy, etc. There is a fine collection of mineral specimens, relics, etc., where prospectors and those interested are welcome to investigate.

JOHN METCALF. History and biography for the most part record the lives of only those who have attained military, political or literary distinction, or who in any other career have passed through extraordinary vicissitudes of fortune. But the names of men who have distinguished themselves in their day and generation for the possession of those qualities of character which mainly contribute to the success of private life and to the public stability—of men who, without brilliant talents have been exemplary in all their personal and social relations, and enjoyed the respect, esteem and confidence of those around them—ought not be allowed to perish, for all are benefited by the delineation of those traits of character which find scope and exercise in the common walks of life. Among this class of citizens in Flathead County is John Metcalf, formerly an active and successful ranchman and efficient public official who is now retired from active life and living in the Town of Kalispell. His life history has been distinguished by the most substantial qualities of character and has exhibited a long and creditable career of private industry, performed with moderation and crowned with success, and he today occupies an enviable position in the esteem of the community.

John Metcalf is a native son of the old Hoosier State, having been born in Kosciusko County, Indiana, the son of Joseph and Sarah Metcalf. He was reared in his native community and received a good practical education in the public schools of his native county. Subsequently he moved to Iowa, where he engaged in farming for many years and in which his labors were rewarded with a fair measure of success. Eventually he came to Montana and located at LaSalle, where he conducted farming operations and also operated a dairy until 1916, when Mr. and Mrs. Metcalf decided that the time had come when they ought to retire from the labors and responsibilities of ranch life and enjoy the rest which their years of activity had entitled them. Coming to Kalispell, they bought a modern, comfortable and attractive residence on Wyoming Street, where they are now living.

John Metcalf was married to Margaret Eleanor Henry, a native of Marion County, Iowa, and the daughter of John and Sarah (Johnston) Henry. Mrs. Metcalf received her elementary education in the public schools of her home community, completing her studies in the Iowa Central University at Pella. She is a woman of more than ordinary culture, being a close reader and intelligent thinker on the questions of the day, and she has clearly defined opinions on the great issues which have held a vital relation to the American people. She has for many years been an active and enthusiastic member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, now holding a life membership in that society, and she was the first president of the society at LaSalle, Montana. She rejoices in the fact that she has been one of that great army of white-ribbon women through whose efforts principally John Barleycorn has been dethroned and sent to his doom. She has instilled in her children the same principles of righteousness and justice which she has herself been working and praying for through the years.

To Mr. and Mrs. Metcalf the following children have been born: Joseph, Miles J., Morris, John H., Sarah S., S. D., R. M., E. Grace, V. P., I. E., F. F. and two who died in infancy. Joseph, who lives at Skapoose, Oregon, was married to Daisy Lyons, of Pleasantville, Iowa, and they have three children, Leanore, Mary and Guy; Miles J. was married to Grace Warnock, and they have two children, Melvin E. and Rodger; Morris was married to Jessie Reynolds, and they have one son, Lloyd; John H. was married to Serena Snyder, and they have four children, Raymond, John, Grace and Margaret E.; Sarah became the wife of S. D. Caffrey, and they have two daughters; Elsie and Gladys; Grace became the wife of Al Childers, and they have two children, Margaret E. and Frederick A.; V. P. was married to Susan McGregor, and they have two children, Bernard and Gertrude; I. E., who was married to Ida Bailey, is an ordained minister in the Christian Church, but is now a student in Spokane University at Spokane, Washington; F. F. is a veteran of the World war, having served eighteen months in France. He was one of the survivors of the ill-fated "Tuscania," and was a member of the Seventeenth Company, Sixth Battalion, Twentieth Engineers. He was promoted to the rank of corporal and received his honorable discharge at the Wyoming Camp. Mrs. Metcalf herself comes of illustrious lineage, being a descendant of Patrick Henry, one of the earliest and greatest of the American patriots, and because of this fact she is entitled to and enjoys honorary membership in that great society, the Daughters of the American Revolution. This order has a splendid chapter at Kalispell, named after the noted Flathead Indian chief, Inneas.

In matters religious Mrs. Metcalf has been a member of the Christian Church since the age of sixteen years, and is now identified with that society at Kalispell. Politically she is broad in her views, not being bound by party ties, but prefers giving her support to those men and measures which in her opinion will be of greatest benefit to the greatest number. Always calm and dignified, never demonstrative, her life has been, nevertheless, a persistent plea, more by precept and example than by public action or written or spoken word, for the purity and grandeur of right principles and the beauty and elevation of wholesome character. She is a woman of many fine personal qualities and is held in the highest esteem by all who know her.

F. W. Bucksen was one of the first postmasters at Kalispell, and later until he retired, was a prominent merchant in that city. Mr. Bucksen is an old time Montana resident, for many years having been identified with the frontier outpost of Fort Benton, and was on the ground when Kalispell came into being.

He was born at Cumberland, Maryland, a son of William H. and Elizabeth (Rosenmerkle) Bucksen. The family moved to St. Louis, Missouri, in 1870, and F. W. Bucksen second among four children, finished his education in the public schools of that city. In 1878 he came up the Missouri River from St. Louis to Fort Benton, Montana, at that time the farthest northern outpost of civilization in Montana. He lived there until 1891, and knew intimately the activities and the historical personalities associated with old Fort Benton. When he first located there the nearest railroad was Corinne, Utah, and at Bismarck, North Dakota.

Mr. Bucksen came into the Flathead country in 1891, and for a time was in the Town of Demersville, until that pioneer settlement was moved and merged with the present City of Kalispell. Mr. Bucksen served as postmaster of Kalispell from 1893 to 1897, and after that engaged in general merchandising.

Mr. Bucksen is unmarried. He enjoys a large circle of friends, and for nearly thirty years has been looked upon as one of the men whose influence has counted most in behalf of every advance movement in this city. He has usually supported the democratic party in politics.

W. R. Twining. While he now lives practically retired from business responsibilities, W. R. Twining for many years was a leading building contractor at Kalispell, and many of the substantial structures, business houses as well as homes that lend attractiveness to the city are the product of his skill and business organization which he perfected and maintained.

Well known among the citizenship of the Flathead Valley, Mr. Twining was born in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, in 1855. His birthplace was on Neschaminey Creek, twenty miles north of Philadelphia. The Twinings are one of the oldest of American families, having come over from England at the time of the Mayflower. In Mr. Twining's library at Kalispell is an elaborate record of the family history, compiled by Thomas J. Twining of Fort Wayne, Indiana. This volume shows 7,000 names in the Twining genealogy. During a residence of nearly three centuries in America many of the Twinings have achieved prominence in business, the professions and in politics. Of the present generation perhaps the most notable is Nathan C. Twining, a distinguished member of the United States Navy, who during the World war was Chief of Staff to the Vice Admiral commanding the United States naval forces in European waters. Another member of the family is Arthur Twining Hadley, president of Yale University. The original Twinings were of Quaker faith, and the object of their immigration to America was to find a refuge for religious worship.

W. R. Twining, whose parents were Amos H. and Mary (Tomlinson) Twining, was educated in the public schools of Bucks County, Pennsylvania. He married Emma Croasdale, who passed away in 1905. She was a daughter of Austin and Mary Croasdale. As a youth he learned the trade of carpenter, and made that trade the basis of his profession and business. Seeking the broader opportunities of the West, he came out to Montana and was one of the early building contractors to locate at Kalispell. A long record of important contracts handled by him in the valley might be compiled. He was superintendent during the erection of the McKnight Block, one of the finest in the city. He also constructed the Buffalo Block, the office building of the Montana Power Company, the Dillon Hotel, a portion of Whipp's Block, and has also erected a number of buildings on his own account, including Stoop's Garage.

Along with a busy career he has not been unmindful of the public interests, and for four years was a member of the city council. He was also a member of the Carnegie Library Building Board. While on the city council he earned much credit by the influences he directed toward ridding the city of undesirable characters. His public spirit has led him into every movement for the advancement and improvement of the city. He and his wife give their political support to the republican party. Mr. Twining is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

For his present wife he married at Spokane, Washington, Mrs. Christine M. Lillevig, the widow of John P. Lillevig. She was born at Minneapolis, a daughter of Andrew and Carrie Pedersen. She was eight years of age when her parents moved to Montana, and she grew up in Kalispell, finishing her education in the public schools of that city. By her former marriage she has a son, Carlyle, now a student in the Kalispell High School. Mr. and Mrs. Twining have a son, Walmsley Ridge, who was born January 10, 1915. During the World war Mrs. Twining took a very active part in the work of the Red Cross Chapter. She is a member of the Christian Science Church, belongs to Crescent Lodge No. 22 of the Rebekahs, and is color bearer of the Woman's Relief Corps. Mr. and Mrs. Twining own an attractive summer home on Bitter Root Lake, and the summer season is passed altogether in that wonderful environment. They keep a motor launch, and Mr. Twining seldom neglects an opportunity to hunt and fish. As a boy those sports greatly attracted him, though he had but little opportunity to pursue the sport in the closely settled districts of the East. One of the chief sources of his enjoyment of Montana residence is the opportunity it gives for every pleasure and sport on the large scale possible in nature's wonderland.

August Heller, a retired wholesale merchant and rancher at Kalispell, has spent nearly all his life close to the frontier, far out with the advance guard of civilization, and for years doing the work of the pioneer.

He was born at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, then a western outpost, son of Albert and Caroline (Myers) Heller. In 1861 the Heller family crossed the plains to California, going by covered wagon. Their first stop was at The Dalles, Oregon, thence to Portland, by sea to San Francisco, and on down the coast to San Pedro and establishing their home in Los Angeles. August Heller spent a number of his youthful years in Los Angeles, and while there acquired a fluent command of the Spanish language. He learned the butcher's trade, and on account of his knowledge of Spanish was engaged by a business man to go to Mexico and buy cattle. For a time he lived at Tombstone, Arizona, and met and knew many of the characters that made that locality famous. The original mines at Tombstone were located by the Sheflin brothers according to Mr. Heller. The Sheflins had been scouts with the United States army. One year after they had discovered the site an agent who was leaving the frontier said to Mr. Sheflin "I guess we will see your tombstone here when we come back." Afterward Mr. Sheflin decided to call the place Tombstone. Sheflin subsequently went to Alaska, engaged in mining, and while there was taken ill and on his deathbed requested that he be carried back and buried at Tombstone. His brother and friends carried out his wishes.

From Tombstone Mr. Heller went into Mexico as an interpreter for a noted cattleman of that time, John Slaughter. His next experiences were at Bishop Creek, California, where he worked in the butcher business, then returned to Los Angeles, and subsequently moved to Portland, Oregon. He and his father were the first meat packers to engage in business at Spokane. Mr. Heller helped drive the first cattle over the trails to the Coeur d'Alene country of Idaho and from there came to Montana. The night following his arrival in Helena occurred the hanging of Con Murphy, a noted cattle rustler. Mr. Heller went on to Butte, worked at his trade, and at Bozeman bought a saddle horse and went to White Sulphur Springs, opening a butcher business at Neihart. He was at Great Falls, where Paris Gibson had just laid out a town, and was urged to purchase lots, but ridiculed the idea, being unable to foresee the development of the future and having no faith in the building of a railroad through there. Subsequently he filed on a ranch at Harlan, Montana, and while there met David R. McGinnis, emigration agent for the Great Northern. He acquired two of the best ranches in the country, but after selling out moved to Fort Benton and resuming his trade followed along with the construction of the Great Northern into the Great Flathead Valley, where he has since made his permanent home.

Mr. Heller married Miss Reta Heinze, a native of Germany. They have one daughter, Carrie Heller, who was educated in the Kalispell High School, also in colleges at Spokane, and has been carefully reared at home and given the best advantages of school and the world of culture.

Mr. Heller is one of the progressive and public spirited citizens of the Flathead Valley, always ready to support forward movements. He gives his ballot to the man best fitted for office.

E. J. Green, auditor of Flathead County, and a ranchman of this region, is one of the representative men of Montana. He was born in Kentucky, a son of J. B. and Mary C. (Taylor) Green. The Green family is of English origin, and the Taylors belonged to the same family as President Taylor and Governor W. E. Taylor of Kentucky. Of the nine children of his parents, E. J. Green was the third in order of birth. He attended the Southern Normal Schools of Huntington, Tennessee, and Bowling Green, Kentucky, and was graduated from the Bowling Green Business College. His brother, R. P. Green is now one of the leading educators of Kentucky, who specialized in mathematics and Greek and Latin. He was chosen by his fellow educators to be president of the Kentucky Educational Association, and is recognized as one of the leading figures in the educational life of his native state.

E. J. Green was married to Florence Derington, a daughter of J. H. and Mary Derington, of Florence Station, Kentucky, and a niece of Judge Reed and J. D. Parks, a leading attorney of Paducah, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Green became the parents of three children, namely: Mary Helen, who died when thirteen months old, Edward Derington and Florence Jean.

In 1909 Mr. Green came to Flathead County and became bookkeeper of the Farmers Protective Association at Kalispell, holding that position until 1914, when he was elected county clerk and recorder on the progressive ticket, and was re-elected in 1916 on the republican ticket. In 1918 he was elected county auditor. Mr. and Mrs. Green and their children are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Kalispell. He is an Odd Fellow and she a Rebekah, and both stand high in their orders. In addition to his other interests Mr. Green owns a valuable ranch six miles out of Kalispell and is a man of comfortable means. As a private citizen and public official Mr. Green measures up to the highest standards of American manhood, and is thoroughly reliable in every respect. During the late war he served as a member of the exemption board for his county, thus rendering valuable service to his Government, and otherwise took part in the war work of this neighborhood. Both he and Mrs. Green stand very high in popular estimation, and have a host of friends to whom they dispense a delightful hospitality at their charming home.

W. H. Reiter, who at the age of eighty-five is still enjoying life and with his good wife resides in an attractive home at Kalispell, is a pioneer of the great Northwest, having come to Idaho Territory in the '60s and was one of the first settlers in Kalispell.

Mr. Reiter was born at Niles, Ohio, September 8, 1835, son of Manassa and Eliza (White) Reiter, his mother being of English ancestry. Her Grandfather White was employed by the English Government to make banknote paper.

W. H. Reiter spent his boyhood at Niles, and his father's home was only two doors from that of the McKinley home. W. H. Reiter and the late William McKinley were playmates and schoolmates. Mr. Reiter recalls some of the early efforts of William McKinley at speech making. Mr. Reiter was several years older and frequently would stand behind McKinley and prompt him. McKinley's father was an ironmaker at Niles and his business was ruined because of the competition of foreign products during the free trade regime. It was this, asserts Mr. Reiter, that gave William McKinley his lifelong ardor for the protective principle, eventually resulting in the famous McKinley Tariff Act of the '90s, the most complete expression of protective principles in American economic history.

Mr. Reiter finished his education in Allegheny College at Meadville, Pennsylvania. In 1862 he accompanied an uncle to the far West and was soon engaged in mining at Florence, Idaho. He was elected a member of the Legislature in the eighth session, and while in the Legislature assisted in creating Idaho County. Mr. Reiter came to Montana in 1882, locating at Helena, and in 1890 moved to the Flathead country and filed on a pre-emption. He proved up that original land and has a fine home on it, situated in the very center of Flathead County. He enlisted in Company H, First California Volunteers, and fought in the Piute Indian war as a scout. Later, in 1877, he participated in the Nez Perce Indian troubles, was wounded three times, acted as orderly for General Howard and as a scout and performed many dangerous duties.

At Helena Mr. Reiter married Miss Julia Aurora Thore Ostlund. She was born in Sweden February 29, 1850, a daughter of Andrew and Anna Margaret Ostlund. Mrs. Reiter's father and mother were born in the year of 1814 and lived to the age of eighty-four, while the mother lived to be ninety-three. Andrew Ostlund was a prominent government official in Sweden, a well educated man and a man of affairs in his native country. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Reiter moved to the Flathead and Mrs. Reiter was the first bride at Kalispell, the town having been started the same year. Mrs. Reiter is a member of the Episcopal Church. Politically Mr. Reiter is one of the original republicans and cast his first vote in 1856, for the first standard bearer of the republican party, John C. Fremont, and has never missed an election in casting a straight republican ticket.

Mrs. Reiter as a young lady in Sweden was thoroughly educated and for ten years was a school teacher and a special teacher of music, also a composer of note. After coming to America she taught music up to the time of her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Reiter enjoy the comforts of a pleasant home on the banks of the Stillwater River, and the years still sit lightly upon her. During his residence in Idaho Mr. Reiter was postmaster in Florence for six years and also ran the hotel and livery and feed barn. He has had a great variety of western experience both as a business man and rancher, and has always kept in close touch with world affairs. He owns a good library, has been a constant reader, is a student and debater, and has always been positive in his convictions and fearless in expressing his views.

Earl Ogden. A purpose in life is as the helm of a ship—it shapes direction to the goal. It stirs ambition, arouses determination, and is the mainspring of success. To have some definite aim, some target to shoot at—no matter how modest it may be—is already to be well on the way to achievement. Destination has much to do with destiny. Purpose is that for which a man endures difficulties and hardships; takes blows and rebuffs; and tolerates disappointments. It is because the men who have achieved a permanent success in Montana have come here with a definite purpose, that of becoming valuable factors in the communities in which they locate, and have let nothing stand in the way of reaching their goal, that the state has advanced so rapidly. One of the well worth-while citizens of Augusta, who exemplifies in his life and prosperity the facts set forth in the above, is Earl Ogden, cashier of the Peoples Bank of Augusta and a rancher upon an extensive scale.

Earl Ogden comes of one of the old American families which was established in the American Colonies by ancestors who came here from England. He was born at Martinsburg, Iowa, on August 5, 1880, a son of I. N. Ogden, who was born in Indiana on March 4, 1843, and died at Oskaloosa, Iowa, on February 11, 1920. The grandfather, Daniel Ogden, was born in New Jersey in 1816, and died at Martinsburg, Iowa, in 1896, having been a pioneer farmer of Indiana and Iowa, and in the latter state developing into a banker at Martinsburg. He married Miss Rhoda DuBois, born in Indiana in 1821, who died at Martinsburg, Iowa, in April, 1919.

I. N. Ogden was reared, educated and married at Martinsburg, Iowa, and became a farmer and owner of a lumber yard and grain elevator, as well as of the controlling stock in the Martinsburg Bank. In 1913 he retired and moved to Oskaloosa, Iowa, where he rounded out his life. Not only was he a successful business man, but he took a very important and effective part in the civic and political affairs of Martinsburg, always working as a republican and as a sincere member of the Presbyterian Church, of which he was an elder for many years. He also maintained fraternal connections with the local lodge of Odd Fellows.

The marriage of I. N. Ogden took place at Martinsburg, Iowa, when he was united with Mary Botkin, born at Martinsburg, Iowa in 1878. She died at Yuma, Colorado, on July 9, 1903. Their children were as follows: Earl, who was the eldest born; Otto O., who lives at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where he is engaged in a lumber business; Fern, who died at the age of twenty-two years, as the wife of Dr. A. A. Lynn, a dentist, surviving his wife and a resident of Marshalltown, Iowa; N. D., who is a rancher near Simms, Cascade County, Montana; R. B., who is a rancher, lives at Cascade, Montana; Beth, who married Wallace Wick, assistant superintendent of the Des Moines, Iowa, Power and Light Company; Lois, who married C. C. Willett, a breeder of thoroughbred hogs and a resident of Brooklyn, Iowa, survives his wife, who died in 1916; Gladys and Florence A. both of whom are attending the Penn College of Oskaloosa, Iowa.

Earl Ogden attended the public schools of Martinsburg, Iowa, and was graduated from its high school in 1900, following which he became cashier of the bank of that place, and held that position for three years. He then embarked in the lumber, hardware and grain business at Martinsburg, and conducted it for seven years.

Mr. Ogden is an ambitious young man and found the confines of Martinsburg too restricted for him, so in 1909 he came to Great Falls, Montana, where he spent the ensuing winter, and then in the spring of 1910 he bought a ranch six miles south of Augusta, comprising 3,000 acres of deeded land, in partnership with his brother, N. D. Ogden, the two still being associated, although they sold this ranch in 1916 and bought another one of 7,000 acres just south of Simms, Montana, which they are conducting as a general ranching, cattle and sheep proposition.

In the meanwhile, in 1916, Earl Ogden became cashier of the Peoples Bank of Augusta, which position he still holds. This bank was established on December 22, 1913, and opened for business in March, 1914. The officers of the bank are as follows: J. F. McGraw, president; J. W. Nixon and Alexander Chrisholm, vice presidents; Earl Ogden, cashier; and Ursula Manix, assistant cashier. The bank has a capital of $40,000, and its surplus and profits amount to $20,000, while its deposits are $250,000. It is located on Main Street and is one of the sound banking institutions of Lewis and Clark County.

Mr. Ogden is a republican. He maintains membership with the Presbyterian Church of Augusta. Fraternally he belongs to Augusta Lodge No. 54, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Dearborn Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is past noble grand, and he is also a member of the Encampment of Odd Fellows. He owns a modern residence at the corner of Main and Laura streets, which is a new one completed in 1918, and one of the finest in the northern part of Lewis and Clark County.

In 1901 Mr. Ogden was married at Martinsburg, Iowa, to Miss Elizabeth M. Graves, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson Graves, who live at Martinsburg, Mr. Graves being a retired wagonmaker and an ex-Union soldier. Mr. and Mrs. Ogden became the parents of the following children: Dorothy, who was born on June 17, 1903, is attending the Augusta High School; Madeline, who was born on September 24, 1905, is also attending the Augusta High School; Ruth, who was born on May 5, 1908; Fern, who was born on January 17, 1910; and Donald, who was born on March 10, 1916.

John Edwin Shattuck, president of the Shattuck Commercial Company at Boulder, has been in the northwestern states a number of years, beginning his career as a railway telegraph operator, and through his enterprise has developed probably the leading mercantile establishment in Jefferson County.

Mr. Shattuck was born at Boston, Massachusetts, April 29, 1878. He is of English ancestry, his people having settled in Massachusetts in colonial times, and from Massachusetts moved to New Hampshire. His father, John Edwin Shattuck, Sr., is now living retired at Boston, where he was born in 1847, spent nearly all his life in that city, and for many years was a steward for the Revere House. At the age of sixteen, in 1863, he enlisted in the Union army in the Commonwealth Regiment of Massachusetts, and served to the end of the war. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and is a republican in politics. He married Melissa Stirks, who was born in New Brunswick, Canada, in 1850 and died at Eureka, Illinois, in 1881. She was the mother of two children: Florence and John E. The former is the wife of William Wight, employed in the accounting department of the city government at Chicago.

John Edwin Shattuck spent his early life at Loda, Iroquois County, Illinois, graduating from the high school there in 1895. For one year he also attended the Onarga Seminary, a Methodist school at Onarga, Illinois. While a boy at Loda he learned the duties of station agent and telegraphy at the local office of the Illinois Central Railway, and on leaving there went to St. Paul, Minnesota, and was employed by the Soo line as a telegraph operator six months. For another six months he was night agent for the Minnesota Transfer Company at New Brighton, Minnesota. Mr. Shattuck came to Montana in 1900, and at White Sulphur Springs established one of the first sheep-shearing plants in the state. This plant was located at Dorsey. He managed it through three summer seasons, and during the winter acted as relief agent in railway offices. Following that he was cashier of the Yellowstone Bank at Mondak until 1907, in which year he engaged in the mercantile business at Elliston, Montana. He was proprietor of a store there, but sold out in 1911, and removing to Spokane organized the Spokane Feed and Fuel Company. He was president and manager of this corporation until 1916, when he came to Boulder and established his present business. This is now the leading general store in Jefferson County, and has prospered through a steady adherence to the ideal of affording a complete and satisfactory service to all the patrons. The business is incorporated as the Shattuck Commercial Company, with Mr. Shattuck as president, Frank Happ as vice president, and Mrs. D. O. Shattuck, secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Shattuck also owns a ranch in Franklin County, Washington, and a modern home at Boulder. He is affiliated with Helena Lodge No. 193 of the Elks and in politics is a republican. In 1903, at Loda, Illinois, he married Miss Della Ogan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Wesley Ogan, now deceased. Her father was an early mine operator of Idaho. Mr. and Mrs. Shattuck have five children: Donald, born in July, 1904; Ralph, born in June, 1905; Wanda, born in April, 1907; Ramona, born in August, 1913; and Richard, born in October, 1914.

Harry Joseph McGregor, M. D. One of the best qualified surgeons in the northern part of the state is Doctor McGregor of Choteau, who in addition to his general practice has maintained a highly efficient hospital for the convenience of the people of Teton County.

Doctor McGregor was born at Davenport, Iowa, December 3, 1887, son of James and Elizabeth (Redfern) McGregor. James McGregor was born in Scotland and came to this country with his parents when he was an infant. The McGregors first lived in Pennsylvania and afterward made the overland journey to Iowa, in which state they were pioneers. James McGregor grew up and was educated in the Iowa schools, and became a merchant at Davenport, where he was successfully engaged in business for a quarter of a century. He died in Davenport in 1917, at the age of fifty-five. He was a democrat in politics. His wife was a native of Iowa, and is still living at the age of fifty-five. Doctor McGregor was the fourth of their six children, five of whom are still living.

Harry J. McGregor attended the schools of Davenport, graduating from high school in 1905. He took his medical course in the Iowa State University, receiving his degree in 1910. He served as an interne in the State Hospital of Iowa City and did his first practice in Nevada. He located at Choteau in 1911 and from the beginning has specialized as a surgeon. His hospital is finished with every appliance and is one of the best institutions of its kind in Northern Montana. Doctor McGregor is a Fellow of the American Medical Association, and is also a member of the Teton County and State Society.

For several years he was active in the Montana National Guard, serving in the medical department of the Second Montana Regiment. He held the rank of captain. He was on duty in 1915 during the Butte strike riots, and in 1916 went with the regiment to the Mexican border. Doctor McGregor is affiliated with Great Falls Lodge No. 214 of the Elks and in politics is a democrat.

June 12, 1912, he married Miss Mary O'Neill, a native of Iowa and a daughter of Michael O'Neill. They have two sons, Bob and Jack. Doctor McGregor has been a leader in commercial circles in his community, having been president of the Choteau Commercial Club during an active campaign, in which many roads were put under way and a $150,000 high school was erected in the Town of Choteau.

FREEMAN A. DALEY, of Teton County, has lived in that section of Montana for a number of years. He homesteaded a claim, has done his part in developing the country, and his father has been one of the well known ranchers in Northern Montana.

Mr. Daley was born near Madison in Lacqui Parle County, Minnesota, on his father's farm January 7, 1888, being the fifth among the thirteen children of John J. and Anne (Lund) Daley. His mother was born at Stavanger, Norway, January 26, 1860. His father was born in Wisconsin, April 1, 1855, grew up on his father's farm in that state, was married in Iowa and in 1879 took up a Government claim in Lacqui Parle County, Minnesota. He built a home, developed his land and was successfully engaged in farming in that state until 1902, when he moved to Teton County, Montana. Here he bought the old Charles Cooper ranch ten miles northwest of Choteau and became rather extensively interested in cattle and horse raising. In 1916 he sold that ranch and bought another one near Dupuyer, where he continued in the cattle industry. In 1918 he was appointed United States commissioner for his district. He has also served two years as justice of the peace and while in Minnesota was justice of the peace and one term county commissioner of Lacqui Parle County. He is a democrat in politics. Of his family of thirteen children three sons and five daughters are still living.

Freeman A. Daley was fourteen years of age when his parents came to Montana. He acquired his early education in Madison, Minnesota, and graduated from the high school at Choteau in 1907. Mr. Daley is a civil engineer both by occupation and experience. In 1912 he graduated from the civil engineering department of Montana State College at Bozeman. For two years he was connected with the engineering department of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway. He then homesteaded a claim near Choteau and in 1916 was appointed under sheriff, serving eight months. For about two years he worked and used every resource at his command to make a success of dry land farming. In November, 1918, he was elected county surveyor of Teton County, and in that office his thorough training as a civil engineer made him thoroughly qualified for all the responsibilities devolving upon him. He resigned from the office of county surveyor April 1, 1920, because the three former county commissioners of Teton County refused to place him in charge of road and bridge work in the county, thus making the office of county surveyor but a mere joke. Since that time he has done private engineering and contracting. He is a democrat in politics and is affiliated with Chevalier Lodge No. 12 of the Knights of Pythias.

August 17, 1915, Mr. Daley married Patti G. Caradine, a native of Beebe, Arkansas. They have three children, John Joseph, Marcus Freeman and Mary Anne.

REV. LEONARD JACOB CHRISTLER, rector of Saint Mark's Episcopal Church of Havre, is one of the aggressive clergymen of his diocese, and an executive of exceptional ability to whose enthusiasm and zeal is largely due the growth of the church in this part of the state. Rev. Christler is also an effective militant and during the period he served as a member of the State Assembly, fathered and put through some of the most constructive legislation of recent years. He was born on his father's farm near Union Springs, Cayuga County, New York, November 24, 1876, a son of Henry Lewis and Mary Jane (Riley) Christler, both of whom were born at Waterloo, Seneca County, New York, he in 1858 and she in 1859, and both are still living. They had five children, three of whom are still living, and of them all Rev. Christler was the second in order of birth. Henry L. Christler was engaged in farming until 1904, when he embarked in mercantile business at Waterloo, New York. He is a member of the Episcopal Church. Politically he is a democrat.

After attending the public schools of Waterloo, New York, Rev. Christler entered Brown University at Providence, Rhode Island, and took the special classical course. Following his completion of it he entered St. Andrew's Seminary of Syracuse, New York, under the Rt. Rev. Frederick Dare Huntington, S. T. D., and took the regulation four years' theological course, being graduated therefrom in 1896. For the subsequent four years Rev. Christler was rector of Calvary Episcopal Church at Homer, New York, and then from 1900 to 1907 was curate of St. Peter's Church at Auburn, New York.

The ardent spirit of the young clergyman, however, was not satisfied with the work of old established parishes and, his ability being recognized, he was sent west on March 1, 1907, as missionary of the Milk River Valley, Country of Northern Montana, with headquarters at Havre, and since that time has developed one of the largest mission fields in the American Church. When he arrived at Havre he found a mission of seven communicants and set to work with characteristic promptness to build a parish, and today St. Mark's Parish has a largely increased membership and is displaying a steady growth in all directions. Rev. Christler has just completed the erection of a beautiful stone church edifice and in the grounds surrounding it has a horticultural display which would do credit to any expert in this art. A lover of flowers, Rev. Christler devotes his spare moments to cultivating them, and in this healthful recreation doubtless finds a much needed relaxation from the problems he is constantly called upon to solve.

Since coming to Montana Rev. Christler has not only built up St. Mark's Parish, but established St. Mathew's Church at Glasgow in 1911; built Trinity Church at Gildford in 1915, and laid the foundation for parishes in Malta and in about twenty-five communities, which he visits every month, his territory extending from Havre to the North Dakota state line, to the Glacier National Park on the west, the Canadian line on the north, and the Missouri River on the south.

A democrat by inheritance and conviction, Rev. Christler has not been content with merely giving his support to its principles and candidates, but upon the urgent demand of the citizens of old Chouteau County to take a more aggressive part in securing for the people of his adopted state the benefit of the application of these principles as he interpreted them, he entered the field of politics. He therefore became the candidate of his party for the State Assembly from old Chouteau County, and was elected in November, 1908. From the time he took his seat, Rev. Christler made his influence felt and succeeded in introducing and having passed the House Bill No. 191, known as the Greater Montana Bill, out of which developed the bureau of agriculture, labor industry and publicity. To him is also due the credit for the passage of House Bill No. 131, which provides for the sending of refractory girls and boys to the House of the Good Shepherd or the Critten Home, according to sex. In these homes the offenders are given the benefit of home training and practical educational advantages, so that when they are released they are able to earn a living honestly and become good citizens. In addition Rev. Christler is responsible for several other bills, including House Bill No. 252.

On October 7, 1914, Rev. Christler was married to Anna Wadsworth, born at Auburn, New York, a daughter of Hon. David and Mary (Cramer) Wadsworth, both natives of New York State. Mrs. Christler is the eldest of the three children born to her parents. Mr. Wadsworth is a prominent man and extensive manufacturer of Auburn, New York.

Prominent as a Mason, Rev. Christler belongs to Homer Lodge No. 252, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Homer, New York; Washington Chapter No. 17, Royal Arch Masons, of Homer, New York; Salemtown Commandery, Knights Templar, of Auburn, New York, and Zyara Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Utica, New York. He is a member of Auburn Lodge No. 474, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and of Salemtown Chapter, Order of Eastern Star, holding a life membership in both of these organizations; of Havre Lodge No. 166, Fraternal Order of Eagles, and Mizpah Lodge No. 64, Knights of Pythias, and Assiniboine Lodge No. 56, Independent Order of Foresters, of Havre.

Possessing a personality that commands immediate attention, Rev. Christler is also so humane, so genuine and sympathetic that there are few men more popular with all classes than he. A thorough American, devoted to his country and to his church, it has been his aim to raise humanity and bring about an appreciation of the practical as well as spiritual benefits of upright living. His wide experience and broad sympathies enable him to understand men and their motives as few can, and in dealing with them he displays such truly Christian attributes that he wins confidence and inspires the erring with an honest determination to live more righteously, soberly and Godly, no matter what the personal sacrifice may be. Such men as he are the very salt of the earth, and their value cannot be estimated in ordinary terms. Only the future will spell out the extent of the debt this region owes to Rev. Christler and it but imperfectly. As the result of the diversity and bigness of the work in the Milk River Valley mission field and because of Rev. Christler's everyday practical application of the Kingdom of God to the needs of all sorts and conditions of men, he has been styled the "Bishop of All-Out-Doors" by those among whom he has ministered for fourteen years. Montana, the Land of Majestic Shining Mountains and the "Bishop of All-Out-Doors" are synonymous terms.

James L. Johnston reached Montana about the time the territory became a state, and for thirty years has pursued an uninterrupted career of hard work and good business management, chiefly in the ranch industry. At one time he was one of the large land owners in the state, and is still active as a wool buyer at White Sulphur Springs, his home.

Mr. Johnston was born in Indiana County, Pennsylvania, October 27, 1868, son of Joseph M. and Martha J. (Fleming) Johnston. His parents were also natives of Indiana County, his father born November 18, 1838, and his mother June 24, 1846. His widowed mother is now living at Warm Springs, Montana. Their five children are all living, James L. being the oldest.

His father, who died November 28, 1897, was a Union soldier during the Civil war, enlisting in the spring of 1862 in Company A of the One Hundred and Thirty-Fifth Regiment, Pennsylvania Infantry. For about nine months his commander was Gen. George B. McClellan. After his honorable discharge he resumed his career as a farmer in Indiana County and spent practically all his active life on a farm. He was active in local affairs, serving as school director many years, as secretary and treasurer of a local mutual fire insurance company, was affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic, and was a democrat and a Presbyterian.

James L. Johnston was educated in the public schools of Pennsylvania and lived on his father's farm until he came to the Northwest, reaching Townsend, Montana, November 8, 1888. A stage took him from Townsend to White Sulphur Springs, and he was soon employed riding the range as a cowboy on Rock Creek. He came here practically without capital and exercised both his industry and good judgment to acquire a permanent stake in the country. In 1897 he bought a squatter's right, and for several years was associated with his brothers, John and Frank, in the general merchandise business at Valley Park and Crystal City. In 1913 he also entered the merchandise business at White Sulphur Springs under the name Anderson, Spencer & Company.

The most active part of his career as a rancher was between 1899 and 1911. He owned two ranches, one of 6,800 acres and one of 4,650 acres. He sold the larger ranch in 1911 and at the same time disposed of the bulk of his sheep. In April, 1919, he sold his other ranch property. At times he ran from 200 to 2,000 head of cattle, and from 2,000 to 6,000 head of sheep were under his ownership. He was one of the organizers of the Clear Range Sheep Company, and was a director and manager of that company for two and a half years. Since 1912 Mr. Johnston has been chiefly engaged in the buying and shipping of wool, and through him immense quantities of the staple has gone to eastern and other markets.

Mr. Johnston has never been interested in politics or public office. He is a past master of Diamond City Lodge No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, is affiliated with Harlowton Chapter No. 822, Royal Arch Masons, is a member of Helena Consistory of the Scottish Rite and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and with his wife is affiliated with Martha Chapter No. 11 of the Eastern Star. For the past thirty-three years he has been a member of Castle Mountain Lodge No. 16 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is a past noble grand. Former Governor Norris appointed Mr. Johnston a member of the State Board of Stock Commissioners, and he performed the duties of that office for six years, having been reappointed by Governor Samuel B. Stewart.

January 24, 1912, Mr. Johnston married Dorothy Cookson, a native of England. They have two children, Isabel Mary and John Cartwright.

John H. Shober. A venerable, honored and highly respected citizen of Helena, John H. Shober won distinction not only as the pioneer attorney of the city, but as one who in his active days kept in touch with the living issues and affairs of the day, and was prominently identified by membership with the legislative bodies of three Middle Western states, Minnesota, Dakota and Montana. Having accomplished a satisfactory work, accumulating a competency, he is now living retired from his professional labors, enjoying at his pleasant home, 112 East Lawrence Street, all the comforts of life. A son of George H. Shober, he was born January 5, 1832, in Loudoun County, Virginia, where his immigrant ancestor settled in colonial times on coming to this country from his native country, Switzerland. His paternal grandfather, Simon Shober, was born either in Maryland or Loudoun County, Virginia, where he spent the greater part of his life, and where his death occurred.

Born in 1792 in Loudoun County, Virginia, George H. Shober was there reared, educated and married. He taught school as a young man and was later engaged in agricultural pursuits, and was also a mill owner. He was a veteran of the War of 1812, in which he assisted in the defense of Washington, District of Columbia. Subsequently removing to Ohio, he taught school and farmed in Jefferson County for a time, and was later a resident of Dodge County, Minnesota, his death occurring there at Mantorville, in 1869. He was a democrat in politics, a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, and belonged to the German Reformed Church.

George H. Shober married Susanna Sandbower, who was born in Loudoun County, Virginia, and died in Mantorville, Minnesota. Six children were born into the household thus established, as follows: Herod; Sophia, who died in 1918 in South Dakota; John H., the special subject of this sketch; Elizabeth and Sarah, both of whom died in Kansas, and Mary, whose death occurred at Mantorville, Minnesota. Herod, the eldest child, born in Loudoun County, Virginia, was a farmer by occupation and followed his chosen work in Ohio, Minnesota and in Iowa, where he spent the last years of his life. He married Melvina Scott, a life-long resident of Iowa, and they became the parents of four children, one of whom, Hattie M. Shober, became the wife of Col. Cornelius B. Nolan, a prominent attorney of Helena.

John H. Shober, who makes his home with Colonel and Mrs. Nolan, received his elementary education in the rural schools of Greene County, Illinois, and afterward read law at Jacksonville, Illinois, and in Iowa and Minnesota. Going to the Territory of Minnesota in 1854, he was there admitted to the bar in 1857. Prior to that time, in 1855, he was appointed clerk of Dodge County, and served in that capacity for two years, at the same time being clerk of the District Court, a position to which he was appointed by Chief Justice Welch. The pioneer lawyer of that county, he continued in practice there until 1858, when he settled in Bonhomme County, Dakota, and as a lawyer met with success. Influential in public affairs, Mr. Shober was a member of the First Territorial Legislature of Dakota, and president of the council of that body, and as an active member of the Second Territorial Legislature was chairman of the judiciary committee.

Coming to Montana in 1864, Mr. Shober spent the winter at Montana City and then engaged in mining at Nelson Gulch, just outside of Helena. Locating in Helena in September, 1865, he became one of the foremost attorneys of Lewis and Clark County and continued in the active practice of his profession until 1917, when he retired from active business cares. In 1865 and again in 1867 Mr. Shober was elected district attorney for the Second District of Montana, which at the first election included Edgerton, Jefferson, Chouteau and Gallatin counties, but did not include the latter named county at the second election. He also served in 1895 as a member of the fourth session of the Montana State Legislature.

During his earlier life Mr. Shober was a democrat in politics, but since 1896 has been independent, voting for the men and measures he deems best, regardless of party restrictions. Fraternally he is a member of Helena Lodge No. 3, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, with which he united at its formation in 1865, and of which he was the first treasurer, serving in that capacity two years. He is an ex-member of the State Bar Association, the County Bar Association and the National Bar Association. He has never married, but makes his home, as above stated, with Colonel and Mrs. Nolan.

Hon. John A. Matthews, who became an associate justice of the Montana Supreme Court in 1919, possessed every qualification for his present responsibilities based on long experience as a lawyer and public official and former judge of the District Court.

Judge Matthews has spent most of his life in Montana and knows the people and the state as a native son. He was born at Mankato, Minnesota, February 1, 1876. He represents an old American family, one that was transplanted from England to Connecticut early in the seventeenth century. His great-great-grandfather, Aaron Matthews, was a civil engineer by profession and spent all his life at Camden, New York. The great-grandfather, Lyman Matthews, also lived at Camden and followed surveying and civil engineering as his vocation. Judge Matthews' grandfather was Aaron Matthews, born at Camden, New York, in 1800. He was the third member of the Matthews family in as many generations to follow the profession of civil engineering. Some time before the Civil war he established his family at Priest Church, Virginia, and died there in 1876. His wife was a member of the Hibbard family of New York State.

T. L. Matthews, father of Judge Matthews, was born in Camden, New York, January 1, 1847. He spent his early life at his father's home at Priest Church, near Washington, D. C. A Northerner, thoroughly identified in sympathy with the Union cause, he left the uncongenial environment of Northern Virginia and went to Minnesota, where in 1861, at the beginning of the war, he enlisted in the Twenty-eighth Minnesota Infantry. He was a gallant Union soldier throughout the war and participated in the battles of Gettysburg and other campaigns of the East. After the war he returned to Minnesota and became a farmer at Mankato. From Minnesota he moved his home to Glendale, Montana, in 1877. At Glendale he became a foreman in the smelters and was also assigned the peculiarly hazardous responsibility of bringing to Glendale the company payrolls of the Hecla Mining Company from Bannock and Virginia City. These duties as a special messenger he performed with complete fidelity to his trust, though frequently exposed to danger from the highwaymen who infested the roads of Montana. In 1882 he removed to Marysville, this state; was in the hardware business there until 1886, and then established his home and business at Helena. For a time he had charge of the hardware department of the Kleinschmidt Brothers department store, and then engaged in the retail meat business. His first market was on Fifth Street at the corner of Rodney Street, and eventually he had three successful markets operating, the other two being on Broadway and Main Street, and these are still doing a private business in the capital city. He also established another market on Park Avenue. T. L. Matthews remained active in business at Helena until 1907, when he retired and removed to Spokane, Washington, where he died February 9, 1917. He was a republican and a Baptist. T. L. Matthews married Kate W. Pryse, who was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, and is now living at Spokane. They were married in Minnesota. Of their children only two are living: Edna and Judge John A. Matthews. The former is the wife of Henry G. Duerfeldt, a druggist at Spokane.

Samuel B. Walker

Judge Matthews was only an infant when his parents came to Montana, and most of his boyhood was spent in Helena, where he attended the public schools, graduating from high school in 1896. He pursued his law studies in the University of Michigan, graduating LL. B. in 1899, and in the same year returned to Helena and took his first cases in law. He practiced at Helena one year, another year at Butte, and then moved to Townsend, where he maintained his home interests and looked after a large and profitable law practice until 1913. From March, 1913, to December 1, 1919, he served as judge of the District Court for District No. 14, comprising Broadwater, Meagher and Wheatland counties. He was appointed to this office by Governor Stewart, and it was Governor Stewart who also named him as an associate justice of the Supreme Court to fill out an unexpired term. Before going on the bench Judge Matthews served almost continuously as county attorney of Broadwater County from 1902 to 1913, the only interruption to his consecutive service being the two years from 1910 to 1912. He was elected five times to that office. Judge Matthews still owns a modern home in Townsend. He is a member of the State and American Bar associations, is active in the First Baptist Church of Helena, and is affiliated with Valley Lodge No. 19, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Townsend; Townsend Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Helena Lodge No. 193, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Townsend Camp No. 365, Woodmen of the World.

At Helena in 1899 Judge Matthews married Mabel Rollins, daughter of J. A. and Mary E. (Johnson) Rollins, the latter a resident of Portland, Oregon. Her father was a merchant and died at Helena. Judge and Mrs. Matthews have a family of five children: Persis, a graduate of the Townsend High School; Thaddeus B., also a graduate of the high school at Townsend and is remittance clerk in the Union Bank at Helena; Winifred, a student in the Townsend High School; John Norman and Mary Elizabeth, attending the grammar schools of Townsend, where the family still reside.

PHILIP GREENAN. A college education is no prerequisite to success in business and public affairs since there are any number of men, prominent and successful from every standpoint whose acquaintance with schools was of the briefest character. A case in point is that of Philip Greenan, adjutant general of the State of Montana, and long prominent in politics, military affairs and in labor interests of this state.

His first twelve years were spent in Ireland, where his parents, Peter and Anne (Finnegan) Greenan, lived all their lives in County Monaghan. All the formal schooling Philip Greenan ever had was in Ireland.

He came to America with some relatives, and as there were no child labor laws in operation in 1881 he found employment in a rubber factory at Millville, Massachusetts. Three years later, in 1884, he went West, and for another three years worked in the smelters at Leadville, Colorado. The following year he was in Denver and in 1888 came to Montana and was put on the payroll of the great smelter at Anaconda. He was a resident of that city for ten years, and enjoyed a growing popularity among his fellow employes at the smelter.

His first active experience in military life came in 1898, when he was a member of Company K from Anaconda sent to the Philippines. He saw some of the strenuous campaigning during the insurrection and was wounded in a skirmish March 23, 1899, but soon left the hospital and rejoined his command. He remained in service until mustered out at San Francisco and then returned home to Anaconda and resumed work at the smelter for a year.

Mr. Greenan was elected as a democratic candidate in 1900 to the office of clerk of Deer Lodge County, and two years later was re-elected. When his term of service expired in March, 1904, he resumed his place at the smelters, and continued for another five years at that occupation.

On March 4, 1909, Governor Norris called Philip Greenan to the responsibilities of the state office of adjutant general. Soon afterward he removed his home to Helena and has served continuously as adjutant general for ten years. He had many exacting responsibilities during the period of the World war, and great credit is due his department for its aid in protecting Montana's quota of enlisted men and other resources.

General Greenan's family consists of his wife, Bridget Dorian Greenan and their one son, Philip Gregory. The only other child died in infancy. Mrs. Greenan was born in Wisconsin, coming to Montana when a young girl. Mr. and Mrs. Greenan are members of the Catholic Church and he is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World.

General Greenan is one of the most popular of the state officials and is a man of undoubted ability. He has supplied the deficiencies of his early school advantages by judicious reading and has made himself a real authority on military technique and organization.

SAMUEL C. WALKER. Deeds are thoughts crystallized, and according to their brilliancy do we judge the worth of a man to the country which produced him, and in his works we expect to find the true index to his character. The study of the life of the representative American never fails to offer much of pleasing interest and valuable instruction, developing a mastery of expedients which have brought about most wonderful results. The subject of this review is a worthy representative of that type of American character and of that progressive spirit which promotes public good in advancing individual prosperity and conserving popular interests.

Samuel C. Walker was born in Winchester, Frederick County, Virginia, on September 27, 1842, and is the son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Wilson) Walker. Samuel Walker was a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1808, and his death occurred in 1887, at the age of seventy-nine years. His widow, who survived him a number of years, was born in Winchester, Virginia, in 1813, and died in 1898, at the age of eighty-five years. Of the nine children born to their union, but two now survive, the subject of this sketch and Eva, who married William Smith, of McGheyville, Virginia. Samuel Walker accompanied his parents on their removal from Pennsylvania to Virginia when he was a mere child, and he secured his education in the schools of Virginia. He pursued his studies along theological lines and was ordained as a minister of the Baptist Church. Though he was deeply interested in his church and religious matters, he never preached, as his services were in constant demand in other lines of effort. He was a millwright by trade and was also engaged in the mercantile business at Fairmount, Virginia (now West Virginia), where he remained until 1854, when he removed to Clarksburg, now in West Virginia, and engaged in the hotel business, with which he was connected up to the time of his death. Politically he was a supporter of the democratic party.

Samuel C. Walker received his education in the public schools of Clarksburg, Virginia, where he was reared. He earned his first money in hoeing corn, for which he was to receive thirty-seven and a half cents a day, but up to the present time he has not been paid for that work. At the age of eighteen years his studies were interrupted by the outbreak of the war between the states, and he enlisted in Company E, Twelfth Regiment, West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until the close of the war, receiving an honorable discharge in July, 1865, at Wheeling, West Virginia, with the rank of a lieutenant major. He had a noteworthy military record, having participated in all the battles, skirmishes and campaigns in which his regiment had a part, including the first battle of Winchester, Lynchburg, Cedar Creek, Opequon, Gettysburg, and then, on July 6, 1864, was ordered back from Shenandoah Valley to rejoin the Army of the Potomac, with which army he took part in the battle of Hatcher's Run. It was there that General Grant ordered General Sheridan to drive General Lee back, thus preventing him from getting supplies. Sheridan drove the Confederates back to Petersburg, thence to Richmond and on to Appomattox Court House, where Lee surrendered on April 9, 1865. Grant was twenty-five miles away, but was sent for and hurried to receive Lee's surrender. When he arrived Lee said, "I presume you don't know me." Grant replied, "I do; we both served in the Mexican war." Then followed a short conversation, consisting principally of reminiscences of former days, followed by General Lee tendering his sword to General Grant. The latter generously declined to receive it, adding also that Lee's officers could retain their side arms. During the conversation Lee stated that his men were totally without rations, when Grant apologized for the delay and asked how many rations were required—if 25,000 would be sufficient. Lee replied that 12,000 would suffice. On the day the Confederate army was disarmed Grant rode over to Lee's headquarters, but, not being recognized, he was denied admission and was compelled to call for the officer of the day. Grant and Lee then walked over to a nearby hill and engaged in conversation for over an hour. The incidents just related were all witnessed by the subject of this sketch.

In the spring of 1866 Mr. Walker went to Baltimore and entered the employ of a wholesale hardware company as traveling salesman, in which capacity he served for fifteen years. In 1881 he engaged in farming in Barbour County, West Virginia, which occupied his attention up to 1893, when he was appointed United States immigration inspector of Chinese and kindred nationalities, being first located in the Puget Sound District, State of Washington. Later he was transferred for three years to Los Angeles, California, but in November, 1906, was assigned to duty as United States immigrant inspector at Havre, Montana, where he has remained on duty for the past fourteen years.

Politically Mr. Walker gives his support to the democratic party, though he is not in any sense a seeker after the honors of public office. He is deeply interested in fraternal affairs, being a member of the Masonic Order and the Grand Army of the Republic, his membership in the latter organization being in Custer Post at Tacoma, Washington. In 1867 he was made a Master Mason in Acana Lodge No. 110 and a Royal Arch Mason in Adiniram Chapter, Baltimore, Maryland, holding his membership in these two Masonic orders for a number of years and then demitting and now holding membership in Havre Lodge No. 55 and Royal Arch Chapter at Havre, Montana.

In May, 1877, Mr. Walker was married to Emma D. Pickens, a native of Barbour County, West Virginia, and to them have been born two children, Anna and James P. The latter, who resides at Richmond, Virginia, is a civil engineer in the employ of the Atlantic Coast Line Railway, and is now in charge of extension work at Charleston, South Carolina.

In every phase of life's activities in which he has been engaged, Mr. Walker has endeavored to perform his full part, and because of his high personal character, his industry and his success he has earned and today enjoys to a marked degree the confidence and good will of the people of his community.

The subject's eldest brother, Edward, was educated in Virginia, and in young manhood went west, locating in Leavenworth, Kansas, where he engaged with Majors Russell and Waddell as a freighter. His route lay from there to Pike's Peak, with ox teams, the long and tiresome overland journey being accompanied with constant danger from many sources. He was freighting with this firm when the Civil war came on, but he immediately quit work and rode horseback through Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia to Winchester in the latter state, where he enlisted in the Confederate army. He was commissioned a first lieutenant in Ashbay's Cavalry. He later died of yellow fever at Winchester.

Another brother of the subject, Henry S. Walker, became a man of considerable prominence in West Virginia, serving that commonwealth two terms as secretary of state. He was editor of the Wheeling Register for many years and became the founder of the Charleston Courier at Charleston, West Virginia.

HON. WILLIAM LAWSON HOLLOWAY is now in the eighteenth year of a consecutive service as an associate justice of the Supreme Court of Montana. For a number of years the decisions of the court have largely reflected the sound scholarship, comprehensive view and liberal spirit of Judge Holloway.

Judge Holloway began the practice of law during the early years of Montana's statehood, and was a resident and lawyer of Bozeman until he went on the Supreme bench.

He was born at Kirksville, Missouri, November 8, 1867. His ancestry is of sturdy English stock, and the Holloways were colonial settlers in Virginia. One member of the family was a delegate to the Federal Constitutional Convention of 1787. Judge Holloway's grandfather was John Holloway, who was born in Virginia in 1805, and in early life crossed the mountains into Kentucky, where he was a farmer, and later moved to Monroe County, Missouri, where he lived on a farm. He died at Moberly, Missouri, in 1895. Silas N. Holloway, father of Judge Holloway, was born in Kentucky, April 14, 1828. He lived there until he was about twenty years of age, and in 1847 volunteered for service in the Mexican war and joined the command of Gen. Phil Kearney. After his return from the Southwest he located in Monroe County, Missouri, but soon afterward moved to Adair County, near Kirksville, in Northeast Missouri, and spent the rest of his active life as a farmer. He exercised much influence in the community and for a number of times was honored by his fellow citizens with the office of probate judge of Adair County. He was a republican, for many years was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and was a member of the Christian Church. He died at Kirksville, September 19, 1895. Judge Holloway's mother bore the maiden name of Charlotte Alred. She was born in Monroe County, Missouri, February 14, 1833, and died at Hurdland in Northeastern Missouri, August 25, 1890. She was the mother of a large family of children, Judge Holloway being seventh among them. The oldest, Mary Ellen, born December 9, 1850, is the wife of Newton Corbin, a retired farmer at Kirksville, Missouri; Jennie, born August 28, 1852, lives at Cleveland, Ohio, widow of Dr. John A. Kerr, an osteopathic physician, who died in 1919; Perry D., born August 12, 1854, is a farm owner and minister of the Christian Church, living at Milton, Iowa; Thomas H., born October 25, 1856, is a farmer at Brashear, Missouri; Rosa B., born November 16, 1862, is the wife of E. E. Earhart, employe of a mercantile firm at Bozeman; Andrew J., born July 18, 1865, is in business in Indiana; Olive, the next younger to Judge Holloway, was born April 14, 1870, and is the wife of Samuel Surrey, a farmer at Hurdland, Missouri; Alberta, born September 26, 1876, was a trained nurse by profession and was acting as head of an orphan school at Salt Lake City when she died August 28, 1918; Jesse, the youngest of the family, was born November 21, 1874, and died while a student in the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor October 28, 1896.

William Lawson Holloway spent his early life on his father's farm in Northeast Missouri. The primary advantages afforded by the rural schools he supplemented by attending a boarding school, and afterward the Missouri State Normal at Kirksville, from which he graduated in 1887. The next four years he was principal of schools at Crystal City in Jefferson County, Missouri. In 1891 he entered the University of Michigan law department, and received his LL. B. degree June 30, 1892. As the scene of his professional career he chose the new State of Montana, coming to Bozeman and opening a law office, where he quickly earned a reputation as an able lawyer and a man of force and energy in the community. He practiced law at Bozeman eight years, until 1900, when he was elected judge of the Ninth Judicial District, comprising Gallatin, Meagher and Broadway counties. He was chosen for the regular term of four years, but resigned in the middle of his term as a result of his election in the fall of 1902 to the Supreme Court. Judge Holloway was re-elected in 1908 and 1914, and his present term expired December 31, 1920. In 1894 he was elected county attorney of Gallatin County.

Judge Holloway is a republican in political affiliation. He is a prominent member of the State and American Bar associations, is a member of the Christian Church, and is affiliated with Bozeman Lodge No. 18, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Zona Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, at Bozeman; Bozeman Lodge No. 463, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Pythagoras Lodge No. 2, Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the Country Club of Helena. February 18, 1898, at Butte, he married Miss Lalia Holmes, a daughter of Dr. L. E. and Sarah (Hall) Holmes, both deceased. Her father was a pioneer physician and surgeon of Montana, and had been an army surgeon up to 1870, stationed at various posts in the west. He practiced medicine at Helena, Deer Lodge and Butte. Mrs. Holloway is a graduate of the Butte High School, and completed her education in Wellesley College, Massachusetts. Judge and Mrs. Holloway have three children and have given them every incentive and advantage both in home and school. Eleanor, the oldest, born November 11, 1901, is now a student in Vassar College at Poughkeepsie, New York. William L., born March 16, 1903, is attending the Irving School at Tarrytown-on-the-Hudson. John, born September 14, 1909, is in the Helena grammar school.

A. J. DUNCAN. Among the men who are representing their districts in offices of civic importance, one who has a splendid record for public service is A. J. Duncan, the clerk and recorder of Lewis and Clark County. He has long been a leader in the local ranks of the democratic party, and in various other ways is an important factor in the life of his city and county.

Mr. Duncan, who was born at Oak Grove in Jackson County, Missouri, in December, 1876, traces descent in the paternal line to Scotland, but during colonial times the family became established in the South, as did also his family on the maternal side, who were originally from England. The father of A. J. Duncan was Robert Duncan, born in November, 1834, near Frankfort, Kentucky, and died at Helena, Montana, in October, 1918. The parents of Robert Duncan removed to Jackson County, Missouri, as early as 1840, where they were among the pioneers, and where A. T. Duncan, the grandfather of A. J., was a farmer for many years. He died there shortly before the birth of his grandson. He had served in the campaign against the Indians. His wife bore the maiden name of Elizabeth Bywaters, and both she and her husband were born in Kentucky.

Robert W. Duncan, a son of these Missouri pioneers, was reared, educated and married in Jackson County, and there for many years he followed farming. In April, 1883, he came to Montana and located in the Prickly Pear Valley near Helena, where he resumed his farming operations and became one of the community's influential citizens. He finally retired from an active life and moved into Helena in 1900, where for eighteen years or until his death he lived in the enjoyment of the rewards of former toil. In 1854, during the days of the California gold excitement, he crossed the plains to that state and spent about eight years in placer mining, returning then to his home in Jackson County, Missouri. He upheld the principles and policies of the democratic party, was a devout and consistent member of the Baptist Church, and for many years enjoyed affiliations with the Masonic fraternity. He joined the order when but twenty-one years of age, and during the remainder of his life retained an active interest in its work. When trouble arose between the North and South he enlisted for service in 1862 in the Confederate cause, and continued a brave and valiant soldier until the struggle ended, in the meantime having been taken prisoner and later exchanged.

In his early life Robert W. Duncan married Maria Joyce, who survives him and resides at Helena. She was born in Missouri in April, 1843. The following children were born to this union; J. M., a rancher in Richland County, Montana; Effie B., the wife of Thomas Matthews, who came to Montana with the pioneers of the '60s, and is now a retired rancher living at Bozeman; J. F., who is engaged in ranching in Richland County, Montana, near his brother J. M.; Eldridge Hill, who died during his youth; Eugene Herbert, who also died when young; A. J., of Helena; Lilborn, who died when young; Lula, the wife of Charles Grant, a merchant at Condon, Oregon; and Leona C., who resides with her mother in Helena, where she is serving as the deputy county clerk and recorder. During 1913 and 1916 she served as the county superintendent of schools for Sanders County.

After a training in the rural schools of Lewis and Clark County A. J. Duncan entered the Montana Wesleyan University in Prickly Pear Valley, now known as the Montana Wesleyan College of Helena, where he spent about four years. After attaining his twenty-fourth year he left his father's ranch and came to Helena and was appointed deputy clerk and recorder of Lewis and Clark County in February, 1901. He filled that position for five years, or until the spring of 1905, when he was elected the city treasurer, taking office in May, 1906, and two years later, in 1908, was reelected to the office and served for four years. In the fall of 1910 he was defeated for the office of county treasurer, and then engaged in the real estate business. In November, 1912, Mr. Duncan was elected the clerk and recorder of Lewis and Clark County, assuming the duties of the office January 1, 1913, and during the years of 1914-16-18 was returned to the office and is the present incumbent, having offices in the courthouse.

The home of Mr. Duncan is at 701 Sixth Avenue, Helena. He was married in 1905, in Bozeman, Montana, to Miss Esther Gullic, a daughter of F. B. and Martha (Wallis) Gullic. The father, who was a mine operator in California, died in that state, and the mother is now living in Helena. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan are Maria, born in April, 1907, and Robert Wallace, born in June, 1910. Mr. Duncan is a member of the Masonic Order, belonging to Morning Star Lodge No. 5, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Helena, Helena Consistory No. 3, fourteenth degree, and he is also a member of Helena Lodge No. 193, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, of Helena Aerie No. 16, Fraternal Order of Eagles, and of the Woodmen of the World.

Percival D. Scott, who is conducting an abstract and insurance business at White Sulphur Springs, is one of the representative men of his calling in Montana. Mr. Scott is a member of the American Association of Title Men, the Montana Abstracters Association and the Insurance Federation of Montana, and is prepared to furnish complete abstracts to town lots, farm lands, water rights and mining claims in Meagher County, and represents the Home, Aetna, Lloyds, Niagara, Montana, Caledonian, Manchester, Rocky Mountain, Fire Association, American Central, Law, Union and Rock, and Liverpool, London and Globe Insurance companies.

Percival D. Scott was born on his father's farm in Audubon County, Iowa, April 13, 1881, a son of John H. and Elizabeth (Carper) Scott. John H. Scott was born in Henry County, Iowa, July 31, 1854, and died on October 31, 1909. His widow was born at Harpersburg, Virginia, December 1, 1853, and is now residing at Los Angeles, California. They were married in Audubon County, Iowa, in 1880, and Percival D. Scott is their only child.

Completing his studies in the public schools of Iowa during his boyhood, which was spent on the farm, John H. Scott went into a merchandise business at Audubon, Iowa, and remained there until 1898, when he came to Montana and homesteaded at Livingston, Park County, and also engaged in a general merchandise business at Livingston with his son, the two being associated together until his death, which was caused by an accident. He became county clerk and recorder in Audubon County, Iowa, holding the office for two terms, and he was on the school board of his district for many years. He was made a Mason in Audubon Lodge No. 211, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, but demitted and became a member of Livingston Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and he also demitted from the Chapter in Iowa to Livingston Chapter, Royal Arch Masons. While in Iowa he served his lodge as master. In politics he was a democrat.

Percival D. Scott attended the public schools of Audubon County, the Audubon High School, and the Montana Wesleyan University at Helena, Montana, following which he became a civil service clerk in the postoffice at Livingston, Montana, leaving that office to go into business with his father. After the death of his father he continued this business until January, 1911, when he sold it and located in Meagher County on a homestead, and at the same time served as deputy clerk of the county court. Later he was a deputy for two years in the sheriff's office. Mr. Scott then embarked in his present business, which he has made the largest agency in Meagher County, and he has the only abstract office in the county. In politics he is a republican.

On April 7, 1910, Mr. Scott was married to Josephine Rader, a daughter of Charles T. and Josephine (Johnson) Rader, he born in Greene County, Indiana, March 30, 1842, and she in Copenhagen, Denmark, April 27, 1853. They were married at Salt Lake City, Utah, March 14, 1869, and had eight children, all of whom are living, Mrs. Scott being the fifth in order of birth. Mr. Rader was educated in Indiana, and enlisted from that state for service during the war between the North and the South, in the One Hundred and Forty-third Infantry, and took part in all the engagements of his regiment, and at the close of the war re-enlisted in Company G, Thirty-sixth Infantry, United States Regulars, and was sent to Camp Douglas, Utah. Later his command was consolidated with the Seventh, and he was quartermaster sergeant from the time he re-enlisted. On February 12, 1872, Mr. Rader was discharged at Camp Baker, Montana Territory. He then embarked in the sheep business on Camas Creek, his property being known as Rader's Ranch. Later he branched out and handled cattle and horses until his retirement in 1913. For several years he was sheriff of Meagher County, and also served as assessor for some time. He belonged to Washa Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Salt Lake City, Utah, but demitted and became a member of Diamond Lodge No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He also belonged to Helena Lodge, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Odd Fellows and the Grand Army of the Republic. In politics he was a strong republican. Mr. Rader died on August 11, 1915.

Jack E. Soden. The people of the country are awakening to the necessity for good roads, and the various localities are making the building of them part of their community work. Montana has taken a progressive stand on this class of improvement, and its citizens have on foot some very extensive plans for further extending the scope of the movement. One of the men who is making possible the construction of excellent country roads at a reasonable price is Jack E. Soden of White Sulphur Springs, who is also engaged in a real estate and loan business.

J. L. Auld

and Family

Jack E. Soden was born in Brockings County, South Dakota, November 4, 1880, a son of Francis and Julia (Finch) Soden. Francis Soden was born at Rockford, Illinois, on December 25, 1845, and died in 1917, while his wife was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on September 8, 1848, and died in 1916. They were married at Brooklyn, New York, and eleven children were born to them, nine of whom are still living, Jack E. Soden being sixth in order of birth.

With the outbreak of hostilities between the North and the South, Francis Soden enlisted in the Union army at Springfield, Illinois, as a member of Company H, One Hundred and Nineteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in 1801, and took part in numerous battles and skirmishes. He was wounded on the battlefield in the right thigh, and during that engagement was cited by his superior officer for bravery. After spending about three months in the hospital because of his wound he rejoined his regiment, with which he remained until the close of the war. In spite of the fact that he continued in the service he never fully recovered, and during the remainder of his life was a sufferer on account of this disability, as were so many of the survivors of that great conflict. In 1870 he came west to Kingsbury County, South Dakota, prior to the division of Dakota, and homesteaded, but later moved to Brockings County of the same state, and took up a tree claim and pre-empted land, continuing to farm until within three years of his death, when increasing disability, resulting from his old wound, forced him to retire. From its organization he took a deep interest in the Grand Army of the Republic, and belonged to the local post. The Methodist Episcopal Church had in him an earnest and active member. Like so many of the old soldiers, he supported the principles of the republican party.

Jack E. Soden attended the public schools of South Dakota, and found ample opportunity to be useful on his father's farm until he was twenty years old. At that time he left home and went to Grant County, South Dakota, and spent five years still continuing to farm, and then moved to Meeker County, Minnesota, where he not only was engaged in farming, but conducted a dairy for a year. Once more he made a change, going to Monona County, Iowa, for a year, agriculture still having in him an active exponent. Mr. Soden then came to Montana and homesteaded in Fergus County, near Garneill, but later moved to Judith Gap, and embarked in a real estate business and also handled farm implements, remaining there until 1913, when he located permanently at White Sulphur Springs, where, under the firm name of Soden & Heyn, he is engaged in building country roads. This firm had the contract for building the first road in Meagher County. Under the name of the Northwest Loan & Realty Company, Mr. Soden is handling stock ranches, irrigated farms and wheat lands, and making loans, and is doing a very large business in this line as well. Fraternally he is active as a member of Lewistown Lodge No. 654, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Brought up in the faith of the republican party, Mr. Soden has always given it his hearty support.

On December 16, 1902, Mr. Soden was united in marriage with Gertrude M. Jones, born at Charleston, West Virginia, a daughter of Thomas F. and Marian (Galbreath) Jones, both of whom are natives of West Virginia. They became the parents of ten children, nine of whom survive, and Mrs. Soden is the eldest of the family. Mr. Jones is engaged in farming in South Dakota, where he and his excellent wife are now living. Mr. and Mrs. Soden have two children, namely: Archibald C. and Grace. Mr. Soden is a man who has always realized that the future in Montana looms large with economic problems, which in his opinion can be satisfactorily solved by continuing to develop the rural regions so that more solid and reliable people will be encouraged to join those already here and aid in giving prestige to the great state of whom all fortunate enough to have interests here are so proud.

JAMES CURRIE AULD. It would be interesting to make a list of the early settlers in Montana and to note what a large percentage of them came originally from the Dominion of Canada. Certainly no country has done so much for us, having sent her best blood into the wilderness of the Treasure State to clear it up and make room for advancing civilization. That they have done their work well goes without saying, and to be convinced of this one has only to take a cursory glance over the fine, well-improved farms and ranches throughout the state and at our splendid public buildings, for, while laboring for their own advancement, they have also helped the public enterprises in a general way. Among the successful and enterprising farmers of Montana who hail from the neighboring country just over the line, specific mention should be made of James C. Auld, of Hill County, who as a farmer and stock raiser has achieved a splendid success and is numbered among the representative men of his section of the state.

James Currie Auld was born on his father's farm in Canada on March 8, 1851. His parents, James West and Isabella (Currie) Auld, were natives of Scotland, but both are now deceased, the father dying in 1884, at the age of sixty-one years, and the mother in 1885, at the same age. They were married in Dumfree County, Canada, and James C. is the fourth child in order of birth of the nine children born to them. Seven of the children, four sons and three daughters, are still living. James West Auld left his native country in young manhood and came to Canada, the trip being made by sailing vessel, which required six weeks to complete the voyage. They landed at Quebec. In his native land he had learned the trades of plasterer and stone mason, also that of tailor, and it is related that he made all the clothing for his children for a while. Eventually he was employed at his other trades in connection with building operations. In 1861 he located in the County of Huron, Canada, of which he was literally a pioneer, and there he and his sons bravely went to work to create a home, which meant the cutting of the dense timber growth and the clearing and breaking of the land. Eventually their efforts were rewarded in the realization of a good farm, where the father pursued his cultivation of the soil and the raising of live stock, in which he made a specialty of shorthorn cattle. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and a man of fine personal qualities of character.

James C. Auld secured his education in the public schools of Canada and as soon as old enough he helped his father clear the land and otherwise improve the new home in Huron County, Canada. He broke oxen, chopped cordwood and performed such other tasks as were characteristic of pioneer life in any community in those days. When twenty-four years of age Mr. Auld began farming on his own account, which he continued there until 1881, going then to Saskatchewan and taking up homestead and pre-emption claims. At that time the Riel rebellion was under way in Canada, and up to 1885 he served in the transport service of the Canadian Government. In 1887 he came to Montana and engaged with the N-Bar-N Cattle Company as a range rider or cowboy, but in the fall of that year he returned to Regina, Canada, riding the entire distance horseback. Returning, he brought his family with him, bringing also teams and two cows, and they located at Hinsdale, Chouteau County, but which is now in Dawson County. Shortly afterward they removed to where Toledo, Hill County, now stands, and there the family lived in a section house for five years, Mr. Auld having secured employment as section foreman on the Great Northern Railroad. He was the oldest employe of the company between Minot and Great Falls, and he ran the first section car into Havre. He finally resigned the position in order to "squat" on a tract of Indian reservation land, this being right after the Indian reservation land was opened for settlement. In the spring of 1889 Mr. Auld started in the cattle business, his start having been made with the two cows which he brought from Canada. Later he bought a carload of cattle, and increased his business from time to time until he had between 300 and 400 head of cattle. His favorite brand has been the Whiteface. He has also given considerable attention to the breeding and raising of Percheron horses, in which he has been successful. In the spring of 1919 he sold a team of horses which weighed 3,400 pounds. In 1914, just prior to the outbreak of the World war, he imported from France a fine Percheron stallion. He has been careful, prudent and discriminating in his operations and has prospered in all his undertakings, so that today he is numbered among the successful men of his community.

On February 24, 1876, Mr. Auld was married to Mary Ross, who was born in Zora, Canada, the daughter of William and Willena Ross. Her parents were both born in Scotland and in 1909 came to Havre from Canada and there they lived until their deaths, which occurred when they were ninety-two years of age. Mrs. Auld was the fourth in order of birth of their seven children. To Mr. and Mrs. Auld were born seven children, five daughters and two sons, as follows: William James, who was married to Ada Lawrence; John, who was married to Ethel Sprague; Margaret H., the wife of Thomas W. McKenzie, postmaster of Havre; Marion, who is the wife of John F. Lindhe, received a good college education and is now assistant cashier in the Security State Bank of Havre, with which she has been connected for four years, Mr. Lindhe being engaged in the mercantile business at Glacier Park, Montana; Mary, who received a teacher's certificate from the state superintendent of public instruction before she was eighteen years of age and who taught school for several years, is the wife of J. D. Kelly, of Havre, and they have a daughter, Virginia; Lillian is the wife of Harry B. Atkinson, a railroad conductor living at Havre, and they have two daughters and one son, Edith, Marion and James; Hazel is the wife of Clarence Reasman. During the recent World war he was in the United States aerial service, being in camp in Texas. He is now a traveling salesman for the Armour Packing Company of Chicago, with headquarters in Boise, Idaho. During 1918 Mrs. Reasman was employed as clerk and stenographer in the office of the clerk and recorder of Hill County at Havre.

Politically Mr. Auld is a stanch supporter of the democratic party, and for many years has rendered his community good service as a member of the school board. He was one of the first aldermen elected in Havre, representing the First Ward. Mr. Auld has always been of a progressive type of business man, taking the lead in improvements. In the fall of 1891 he built the first livery stable in Havre, and in many ways has shown himself to be a man of value to his community, a man of lofty character, sturdy integrity and unswerving honesty. During the pioneer period in this section of the state he shared fully the trials and difficulties known to the early settlers of a new country. He was one of the sturdy figures upon which the burdens of the new community fell, and he bore his part in the general upbuilding of the same manfully and well.

George Fowlie has given fifteen years of consecutive service in the courthouse at White Sulphur Springs, most of the time as county clerk and recorder of Meagher County. His home has been in Montana for thirty years, a residence dignified and made notable by many services, as school teacher, as a miner, public official and rancher.

Mr. Fowlie was born on his father's farm in Waupaca County, Wisconsin, March 11, 1866, son of James and Margaret (Whyte) Fowlie. His father, who was born in Scotland, came to this country at the age of eighteen. A brother had proposed to make the voyage with him, but turned back at the last moment. James Fowlie came on alone, and was on a sailing vessel six weeks, being thus delayed by storms, the ship losing its sails and drifting back for about 200 miles. He landed at Quebec, and operated a threshing outfit in Canada for several years. Moving to Waupaca County, Wisconsin, he played the part of a pioneer and hewed a farm from the wilderness. He died there in 1880, at the age of fifty-six. For four years he served as township clerk in Wisconsin and in politics was a republican. His wife was born in Quebec and died at the age of sixty. Of their eleven children George was next to the youngest, and six sons and one daughter are still living.

George Fowlie acquired a thorough education, attending public schools in Waupaca County, Milton College and the University of Wisconsin. His higher education was paid for largely through his earnings as a teacher. He taught his first term of school at the age of fifteen. He was engaged in that work for seven years in Wisconsin, and in 1888 came to Montana. His first location was at Castle in Meagher County. Most of his time for ten years was spent in silver mining, and he then resumed the occupation of teaching for three years. Mr. Fowlie has the distinction of having taught the first school at Harlowton, now the county seat of Wheatland County. He was also in the hotel business at Harlowton about a year. Mr. Fowlie was elected county treasurer of Meagher County in the fall of 1904, and by re-election in 1906 completed two terms in that office. Then in 1908 came his election to the office of county clerk and recorder, and he has been administrative head of that office now for twelve years, being reelected in 1910, 1912, 1914, 1916 and 1918.

In the meantime he has acquired many valuable property interest, serving to permanently and influentially identify him with this part of Montana. He homesteaded in 1908 a claim four miles northwest of White Sulphur Springs. To that original homestead he has added other lands until he has about 1,000 acres, and in normal years runs between 100 and 145 head of cattle and also a number of horses. He has also been interested in mining projects and since January, 1919, has been a director in the Central State Bank of White Sulphur Springs. Mr. Fowlie is affiliated with Carbonate Lodge No.

39, Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Harlowton, Lodge No. 27 of the Knights of Pythias at Twodot, and politically is a democrat.

In 1887 he married Miss Millie I. Chambers, also a native of Waupaca County, Wisconsin. Seven children were born to their marriage: Eva, George, James, Sadie, Freda, Frances and Mary. Eva is the wife of Harry C. Klock and the mother of three children. George enlisted in June, 1917, in the Marines and was on duty at Mare Island, California, and later at Galveston, Texas, and served until after the signing of the armistice. The son James also entered the service in 1917 in the Hospital Corps, received his early training at Camp Lee, Virginia, and less than sixty days after enlisting was sent overseas to France. He returned to the United States and received his discharge at New York in July, 1919. The daughter Sadie is the wife of Arthur F. Ford and is employed in Mr. Fowlie's county office. The daughter Freda is the wife of Prince Dimmitt.

George Bennett Nagues, who has served three elective terms as sheriff of Meagher County, has spent most of his life in Montana, is the son of a Montana pioneer, and is widely and favorably known over this section of the state both for his business and official service.

His father was the late James Nagues, who died at his home in Missoula February 15, 1917, at the age of seventy-nine. James Nagues was born in Cornwall, England, in June, 1838, and about two years later his parents, John and Priscilla Nagues, came to America. The family home was in Northwestern Illinois and Southwestern Wisconsin. About 1852 the Nagues family home was visited by the epidemic of cholera, and in a few days the parents and two of the children were taken away. James was fourteen years old at that time, and after that he had to rely upon his own energy to establish his position among men. He had only a common school education, and he learned the trade of harness maker. On April 19, 1861, he volunteered and was mustered into Company I of the Third Wisconsin Infantry. He saw more than three years of strenuous service. He was with the Federal armies around Washington, took part in the Shenandoah Valley campaign of 1862, was at Cedar Mountain and the second battle of Bull Run, at South Mountain and Antietam, and in the terrific campaign that culminated in the great battle of Chancellorsville. Being disabled, he was in a hospital at Annapolis, Maryland, for nine months, and before he could rejoin the army his term expired and he was honorably discharged at Atlanta July 22, 1864, with the rank of corporal.

During an interval of his army service he had returned to Wisconsin and married, and on April 4, 1865, he started for Montana, making the trip with mule teams and incurring several skirmishes with the Indians. He reached Virginia City in July, and for the next two years did some mining in Last Chance Gulch at Helena. Returning to Wisconsin, he remained in that state three years, and subsequently engaged in the butcher business at Hampton, Iowa, in LaSalle County, Illinois, was on a farm in Kansas a year, was attracted to the mining regions of Colorado, and spent several other years in Iowa and Illinois. He was one of the gold seekers attracted by the discoveries in the Black Hills District in the Dakotas in 1876, and after some more or less profitable venture there came on across the country to Helena, where he engaged in the harness business. In the summer of 1877 his wife and three children followed him to the West, making the journey by steamboat up the Missouri River to Cow Island, thence overland to Fort Benton and by stage to Helena. For two seasons James Nagues tried placer mining in Cave Gulch, and in 1881 removed from Helena to White Sulphur Springs. The next seven years he conducted a dairy ranch, and in 1888 moved to the Musselshell River and established a cattle ranch, where in association with his son George he continued active in business until 1910. It was as a rancher that he laid the basis of his modest fortune in Montana, and when he sold out in 1910 he retired and lived at Missoula until his death. He voted as a republican, had become a Mason in Illinois, and later demitted and became a member of Diamond City Lodge No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

March 15, 1864, James Nagues married Amelia Jane Rule, a native of Wisconsin and of English ancestry. She is still living at Missoula, at the age of seventy-six. Of five children, four are living: Emeline E., George B., Minnie and Jesse R.

George Bennett Nagues was born at Darlington, Wisconsin, March 12, 1868, and his early memories are associated with the family home in Illinois, Iowa, and Helena, Montana. He completed his education at White Sulphur Springs, and for about a quarter of a century was actively identified with his father in the cattle industry. After retiring from the ranch business Mr. Nagues located at White Sulphur Springs and took up contracting and building, an industry he prosecuted with much success and with a complete and adequate organization for several years, excepting a period of about three months when he was in San Diego, California. In the fall of 1912 he was appointed under sheriff of Meagher County, held that post of responsibility for a year and a half in connection with his other business, and was then appointed to fill out an unexpired term as sheriff for six months. In 1914 he was duly elected sheriff, and re-elected in 1916 and 1918 and has been retained at this post of duty and has given a most satisfactory record of his office for over six years. He had previously served by election as county commissioner of Meagher County in 1908. Mr. Nagues is one of the men most deeply interested in and associated with the welfare and progress of White Sulphur Springs. For over twenty years he has served as a member of the school board there, and for six years, two terms, was a member of the city council. Fraternally he is affiliated with Diamond City Lodge No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is a past master, with Harlowton Chapter No. 22, Royal Arch Masons, Helena Consistory of the Scottish Rite, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and he and his wife and their two daughters are members of Martha Chapter No. 11 of the Eastern Star, which he has served as worthy patron.

June 28, 1892, Mr. Nagues married Stella May Smith, who was born in Illinois. They have six children: Ella A., wife of Trevell DeLarhue, of The Dalles, Oregon; Maud May, wife of Steven H. Smith, a rancher near White Sulphur Springs; Raymond C., Madeline J., Beatrice M. and James Fielding. The son Raymond, who was educated in the schools of White Sulphur Springs, enlisted June 10, 1918, at Helena in the Marines, was mustered in June 21st at Mare Island, California, and was transferred to Galveston, Texas. He received his honorable discharge January 29, 1919. The son is affiliated with Diamond City Lodge No. 7 of the Masons.

Charles W. Cook, now an octogenarian at White Sulphur Springs, was a member of one of the first important exploration parties to visit the Upper Yellowstone and the magnificent country now known as Yellowstone National Park. He was one of the first big sheep men in Montana, and for years his herds and flocks ran by the thousands over the country around White Sulphur Springs. Among the survivors of the original Montanans his is a name that stands conspicuous by reason of many experiences and achievements.

Mr. Cook was born on his father's farm in Unity Township, Waldo County, Maine, February 24, 1839, son of Daniel and Elizabeth (Hussey) Cook. His father was a native of Kennebeck County and his mother of Waldo County, Maine, and the former died in 1880, at the age of seventy-five, and the latter in 1889, aged eighty-nine. Daniel Cook was a ship carpenter and joiner, a contractor and builder, and also had a farm where he indulged his taste for good horses. For many years he served as treasurer of his home township, was a whig and republican in politics, and a member of the Quaker Church. In the family were six sons, five of whom reached mature years, three now living, Charles W. being the fourth in age.

Charles W. Cook acquired a public school education in Waldo County, attended the Oak Grove Seminary in Kennebeck County, and at different times was a student of the Friends School at Providence, Rhode Island. Subsequent years Charles W. Cook spent on his father's farm to the age of twenty. He taught school one year and then moved to Providence, Rhode Island, where he was superintendent of grounds for the Friends School and again entered there as a student, continuing his studies two years.

The beginning of his life of adventure in the great West came April 15, 1864, when he left home for the West, traveling by railroad as far as St. Joseph, Missouri, then the terminus of railway lines on the Missouri River. A steamboat carried him up the Missouri to Omaha, where he met an old schoolmate, Henry Kizer. They bought teams of horses and with another man started overland for Denver. They made the trip unmolested though danger from Indians threatened. June 20, 1864, they joined a caravan of six wagons with 125 head of herd cattle besides the work cattle, Mr. Cook being employed as cattle driver and started overland for Virginia City, Montana, reaching that point September 20th. On the way they were held up by a party of Indians, but were permitted to resume their march after giving the Indians a steer. Reaching Montana, Mr. Cook participated in the usual activity of mining, soon went to Frenchtown and bought a load of flour, and secured a supply of potatoes at Hamilton. He paid $6 a sack for the flour, which he later sold at $1.25 per pound. The spring of 1865 found him at Diamond City, where he did mining and was also superintendent of the Boulder Ditch Company. The supply of water reaching the mines through the system owned by this company brought in a revenue of $10,000 a week, and Mr. Cook had the handling of many thousands of dollars worth of gold, and also the responsibility of supervising a force of men twenty-four hours a day, twenty men working in the day shift and twenty men in the night shift. He handled this office until 1869, and for the following two years was receiver for the Old Gallatin Flour Mill.

A number of historical connections contains a pamphlet entitled "The Folsom-Cook Exploration of the Upper Yellowstone in the year 1869," embracing an account of the expedition written by one of its members, David E. Folsom, whose article was published in Chicago in July, 1870, this pamphlet being a reprint of that article with a preface by Nathaniel P. Langford, who was the first collector of internal revenue of the Territory of Montana. The article is an historic document in the annals of Montana and the history of Yellowstone National Park. In his preface Mr. Langford says: "The wonders of the Yellowstone National Park were first brought to the knowledge of the people of Montana by David E. Folsom and C. W. Cook. Mr. Folsom had often heard vague and uncertain rumors of the strange phenomena to be seen near the headwaters of the Yellowstone and Fire Hole rivers. He was told by an occasional trapper that the Indians, taking counsel of their superstitious fears, believed that region to be the abode of evil spirits, and in their nomadic journeyings carefully avoided all near approach to it. This story, gathering in volume and embellishment as it was circulated throughout the mining camps of Montana, so wrought upon his curiosity that in September, 1869, he and Mr. Cook made a partial exploration of the region to solve their doubts. Bewildered and astounded at the marvels they beheld, they were, on their return, unwilling to risk their reputations for veracity by a full recital of them to a small company whom their friends had assembled to hear the account of their explorations. Mr. Folsom, however, published a careful account of his expedition in the Chicago Western Monthly for July, 1870, and this, with such information as could be gleaned from him, led to the organization of the Washburn exploring expedition." Elsewhere in the preface Mr. Langford says: "We trace the creation of the park from the Folsom-Cook expedition of 1869 to the Washburn expedition of 1870, and thence to the Hayden expedition (U. S. Geological Survey) of 1871. Not to one of these expeditions more than to another do we owe the legislation which set apart this pleasure ground for the benefit and enjoyment of the people."

While this expedition was an important one it took only thirty-six days from the busy life of Mr. Cook. In the spring of 1871 he left Montana, going overland to California and Oregon, where he bought up a number of bands of sheep and had them driven through into Montana, wintering at old Gallatin City and in the spring of 1872 continuing the drive of about 1500 sheep into the Smith River Valley, southwest of where White Sulphur Spring now stands. He was the first to bring sheep in any number into this locality, and it is claimed that he was one of the first three men to engage in the sheep industry in Montana. Later he added cattle and horses, and at one time his holdings were represented by the ownership in fee of 6,000 acres, besides 4,000 acres leased lands, and he ran as high as 10,000 head of sheep, 400 head of cattle and 300 head of horses.

Mr. Cook, who retired from ranching in 1909, was one of the organizers of the Central State Bank of White Sulphur Springs, and has been its president since January 9, 1917. He has served as mayor of his town and for one term was county commissioner of Meagher County. Politically he is a republican. Mr. Cook is one of the oldest Masons in Montana, having held affiliations with Diamond Lodge No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Diamond City since August, 1867. He retains his Royal Arch affiliation with Dunlap Chapter No. 12 at China, Maine, is a member of Lewistown Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. Both he and his wife are members of Martha Chapter No. 11 of the Eastern Star. Mrs. Cook has served as chaplain several times. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

At Helena, Montana, June 26, 1880, Mr. Cook married Miss Abbie W. Kennicott. She was born at Mayfield, New York, a daughter of James H. and Abbie (Wells) Kennicott. Her father was a native of Rhode Island and died in 1880, at the age of eighty-six, and her mother was born in Connecticut and died in 1894, aged eighty-nine. Mrs. Cook was one of twins, the last born in a family of three daughters and three sons, two of whom are still living. Her father was a blacksmith, and in 1859 moved to the frontier country of Nebraska, where he spent his last years. The Kennicotts were Methodists in religion. Mr. and Mrs. Cook had three children: Mary Elizabeth, who died at the age of twenty-one; Josephine, who is the wife of Oscar O. Mueller, a lawyer at Lewistown; and Donald H., who married Ruth Bronson, and is now a professor in the State Agricultural College at New Mexico.

Capt. John Potter, of White Sulphur Springs, would be a conspicuous figure in any group of surviving pioneers of the '60s. For upwards of half a century he went about his business, as a miner, merchant, and rancher in various parts of the old territory, though his activities have been chiefly identified with the region around White Sulphur Springs.

Captain Potter, who is further honored by his distinguished service as a Union soldier during the Civil war, and who had a son in the World war, was born on his father's farm in Onondaga County, New York, February 18, 1844, son of Heart and Polly (Everingham) Potter. His parents were also natives of Onondaga County, and Captain John was the seventh in a family of eight children, only two of whom are still living. The father, a farmer, moved to Illinois and was one of the early settlers in LaSalle County, where he bought land at $2.50 an acre. He developed a farm and stock ranch mustered in at old Camp Douglas in Chicago, and there and later continued in the same industry in DeKalb County, Illinois. He was never concerned with public office, contenting himself with casting an intelligent vote, first as a whig and later as a republican. He died at the age of eighty-four and his wife at seventy-eight.

Capt. John Potter was nine years of age when he removed to Illinois, finished his education in public and private schools and at the age of seventeen answered Lincoln's first call for three months troops to put down the rebellion. In April, 1861, he joined Company C of the Tenth Illinois Infantry, being mustered in at old Camp Douglas in Chicago, and during his brief enlistment performing guard duty at Cairo, Illinois. He was discharged at the end of three months and in October of the same year re-enlisted at Ottawa, Illinois, in Company F of the Fifty-third Illinois Infantry. From St. Louis the regiment was sent down the Missouri River, and he took part in the Battle of Shiloh, was all through the Vicksburg campaign, and after the surrender of that city on July 3, 1863, moved East and was in the battles at Jackson, Mississippi. July 12, 1863, he was wounded by a grape shot in the right leg, and after being in the hospital was granted a thirty days' leave, subsequently extended to sixty days. He rejoined his regiment at Natchez, Mississippi, was again at Pittsburg, participated in the raid around Meridian, Mississippi, was at Florence, Alabama, at Rome, Georgia, and saw many phases of the Atlanta campaign. He was made second lieutenant of Company F of the Fifty-third Illinois, was promoted to first lieutenant November 18, 1862, and on June 29, 1863, was appointed captain of Company F. At Altoona Pass he was detailed quartermaster of the Second Brigade, Fourth Division, Seventeenth Army Corps, and later served as provost marshal of the brigade and also as ordnance officer.

Captain Potter after more than three years of service as a Union soldier and officer was mustered out August 5, 1864, and then became associated with his brother H. S. Potter in buying horses and mules for the United States Government. Thus he continued to serve the Government until the close of the war. Following that he was in the livery business at Aurora, Illinois, until November, 1868, at which time the western chapters of his life history began to be written.

From Omaha he traveled to Utah, and until the spring of 1869 was employed as a tie inspector by the Union Pacific Railway. He then made a trip to the Wind River mines at South Pass, Wyoming. Subsequently from Granger Station on the Union Pacific he started overland with mule teams bound for old Fort Ellis, Bozeman, Montana, where he arrived in September, 1869, with a four-mule team. He left there in company with some soldiers of the Seventh United States Cavalry, going to Camp Baker in Smith River Valley, and was associated with the United States Post Trader from November, 1869, until June, 1872. At the establishment of old Fort Logan he was in business at that fort for two years and then bought a store at the Thompson Gulch Mining Camp, where he sold goods for about two years.

After disposing of his stock of merchandise Captain Potter made his first venture as a sheep rancher, his location being five miles south of the present site of White Sulphur Springs. Four years later he sold out and returning to Illinois for the winter busied himself with the purchase of 300 head of full-blood sheep, which the next spring he shipped to Fort Benton at Sioux City, Iowa, and drove them across the country from Fort Benton to White Sulphur Springs, where he found ready sale for his flock to sheep men for breeding purposes. He repeated this enterprise the following year, and made another shipment of 300 head over the same route. His third shipment was made in 1883, and in addition to sheep he also brought five head of pure-blood Hereford cattle, these being the first high grade white-faced cattle brought into the locality of White Sulphur Springs.

In company with James H. Moe, Captain Potter established the Bank of Meagher County at White Sulphur Springs, and served as its president three years. The bank was then reorganized as the First National Bank, and Captain Potter continued as its president until 1896. He resigned from its management to become associated with other men in the purchase of a large sheep ranch known as the Clendennin property at the fork of the Musselshell River, near Martinsdale. For ten years Captain Potter remained as manager of this sheep ranch, the company owning and leasing about 24,000 acres for their purpose. When he disposed of his interest in that enterprise he retired from active business, and has since enjoyed a well earned retirement at White Sulphur Springs.

Captain Potter has carefully kept his name from all political tickets as a candidate for office. He has been affiliated with Diamond City Lodge No. 7 of the Masonic Order since 1869, is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and the Loyal Legion, and in voting cast his ballot as a republican.

In April, 1883, at Sandwich, Illinois, he married Kate Vermilye, a native of that town. Their two children are John V. and Laura B. The son, John, was educated at White Sulphur Springs and in the Montana Agricultural College at Bozeman, from which he was graduated as electrical engineer. He took special technical training at the beginning of the World war with the Westinghouse Company at Springfield, Massachusetts, and in 1917 was commissioned a first lieutenant in the ordnance department. He was on duty at Baltimore and Washington as stores manager of the First Ordnance district, with jurisdiction over four states. Later he was sent for official service to Detroit, Michigan, and in March, 1920, was mustered out of service and now lives in White Sulphur Springs. Laura B. was born in White Sulphur Springs October 8, 1896, and lives at home. She graduated as a stenographer in Quincy, Illinois, and is now in the office of Ford & Linn, attorneys at law, of White Sulphur Springs.

JEFFERSON D. DOGGETT. No community can be any greater than its banking institutions, nor can it make any appreciable progress until it has located in its midst one or more financial concerns, backed by the substantial men of the region. Much of the advancement of Townsend therefore dates back to 1899, when the State Bank of Townsend was incorporated. This bank has the distinction of not only being one of the most reliable in this section, but it is the oldest in Broadwater County, and one of the dependable men connected with it is Jefferson D. Doggett, its vice president.

Jefferson D. Doggett, familiarly known as "Jeff," was born at Virginia City, Montana, on October 31, 1863, a son of Moses Doggett, who was born at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1831, and died on his ranch near Townsend in 1896. His parents moved from Louisville to Indiana and later to Iowa, where they continued to live until claimed by death. In 1859 Moses Doggett, who had in the meanwhile been married at Blakesburg, Iowa, went to Colorado, becoming one of the pioneers of California Gulch, and also of the mining region on which the present city of Leadville is now located, in both places being engaged in mining with considerable success. In the fall of 1862 he returned to Iowa, and spent a short time with his parents at Blakesburg.

In the summer of the following year he crossed the plains with an ox team, arriving at Virginia City, Montana, in August, 1863, and was engaged in placer mining at Alder Gulch for a few months. In 1864 he went to Helena and continued placer mining, working extensively at Last Chance Gulch, removing from there to the Missouri Valley in the fall of 1865, and entered a claim for a homestead near the present site of Townsend, being one of the very earliest pioneers of Broadwater County. From then on until his death he was engaged in ranching and stock raising. He was a real Jeffersonian democrat, and a strong believer in free trade. For a number of years he held the office of justice of the peace. By his first marriage he had two children, namely: Duane, who is a rancher living near Townsend, and LaFayette, who is a farmer of Nebraska. Moses Doggett was married secondly to Susan Rose, who survives him and lives near Valentine, Montana, with her daughter, Mrs. Ida Lyng. Mrs. Doggett was born in Indiana in 1838. She and her husband had the following children: Charles B., who is a rancher in the neighborhood of Townsend, served as sheriff for eight years, and also as assessor, being elected on the democratic ticket; Jefferson D., whose name heads this review; James S., who is a rancher and stock raiser in the neighborhood of Fort Logan, Montana; L. R., who went to the Alaskan gold fields in the early days, has remained there and is regarded as one of the successful miners of that territory; Ida, who married Frank Lyng, a ranchman of Valentine, Montana; Robert, who is a merchant of Helena, Montana, and Lillian, who was a public school teacher of Helena, died in that city when she was thirty-five years of age.

Jefferson D. Doggett, who was the first white child born at Virginia City, was reared in what was Meagher County, but is now Broadwater County, attending its rural schools and remaining on his father's ranch until he was twenty years of age. During 1884 Mr. Doggett was in the stampede to Coeur d'Alene, and remained there for the remainder of that year, being engaged in placer mining, but in 1885 he ran a pack train from Thompson Falls, Montana, to Murray, Idaho. In the fall of 1885 he returned to the Smith River Valley, and was engaged in ranching and the livestock business near White Sulphur Springs until 1898. Mr. Doggett then moved to his ranch on Duck Creek, fifteen miles northeast of Townsend, and still owns this valuable property of 7,000 acres, on which he carries on sheep raising upon an extensive scale. He also owns a ranch of 5,000 acres at Fort Logan, Montana, and a modern residence at Townsend.

In his political sentiments Mr. Doggett is a republican and was representative from Broadwater to the State Assembly during the Thirteenth Session in 1913, and is now chairman of the water board of Townsend, proving himself an upright and capable official, and one who is fully equal to any duties assigned him.

For some time Mr. Doggett has been a member of the board of directors of the Montana Life Insurance Company, but his most important connection with the financial and commercial life of his community is that of vice president of the Townsend State Bank. According to the last statement of the bank its capital is $100,000; its surplus and undivided profits, $17,011.81, and its deposits $696,544.35. The officials of the bank are as follows: J. P. Kearns, president; J. D. Doggett, vice president; N. O. Bowman, vice president; P. H. Murphy, cashier, and J. W. Seibold, assistant cashier. The board of directors is as follows: D. J. McCarthy, John Hines, Sr., Con Sweeney, Jeff Doggett, N. O. Bowman, J. P. Kearns and P. H. Murphy, all men of high standing in Broadwater County.

In 1896 Mr. Doggett was married at Diamond City, Montana, to Miss Amelia Schreiber, a daughter of Philip and Mary (Yochum) Schreiber, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Schreiber was a successful merchant at Pomeroy, Ohio, where he located after coming to the United States from Germany, where he was born. His advent into this country occurred when he was quite young, and he had the advantage of being reared here. He was not spared to live very long after his marriage. Mrs. Doggett is a graduate of the Pomeroy High School. Mr. and Mrs. Doggett became the parents of one son, Howard J., who was born on January 27, 1903, attended the Townsend High School for two years and is now a student of the high school at Long Beach, California.

Well known in Masonry, Mr. Doggett belongs to Valley Lodge No. 21, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Townsend; Helena Consistory, No. 3, Scottish Rite, in which he has been made a Thirty-second Degree Mason, and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Helena, Montana. He is also a member of Helena Lodge No. 193, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Montana Club of Helena and the Townsend Commercial Club.

During the late war Mr. Doggett took a very active part in all local war activities, and was chairman of the War Savings drives, and helped to put all of them over the top. A man of genial personality, he is one of the most popular men in Broadwater County, and is recognized as one of the region's best types of American citizenry, one who can be depended upon to respond quickly and generously to any call made upon his sympathies or patriotism, and to influence others to follow his excellent example. Mr. Doggett is a product of the West and is very proud of the fact, as he has every reason to be, and his fellow citizens are proud of him and what he has accomplished for them and for this section.

J. D. Doggett

SAMUEL K. CAMPBELL, M. D. The community of Harlowton, which has had Doctor Campbell as a residence since 1907, has been fortunate not only in the skill he has exemplified in his profession, but in the energetic responsiveness he has exhibited to all the interests and welfare of the people and the city.

Doctor Campbell spent his early life in the state of Missouri. He was born in Johnson County December 1, 1880. His parents, Robert Lee and Lydia (Huff) Campbell, were natives of the same state. His father was for many years a farmer and later engaged in banking at Warrensburg.

Samuel K. Campbell was the oldest of six children, and grew up on his father's farm in Henry County, Missouri. He acquired a substantial education, at first in the district schools, and subsequently graduated from the high school at Warrensburg and the Missouri State Normal School of that city. Though he had some experience as a merchandise clerk, his mind was set on a professional career, and he acquired his first knowledge of medicine while at home. He then entered the medical department of St. Louis University, graduating in 1905. A few months later he came to Montana and practiced at Bozeman fifteen months before he moved to Harlowton on April 19, 1907. Since then his name has become synonymous with the very best abilities as a physician and surgeon. He served as local surgeon at Harlowton for the Milwaukee Railway, and has been health officer of Wheatland County since the county was organized. He was a member of the Wheatland County Exemption Board from May 17, 1917, until the close of the war, and gave much of his time to the examination of the county's quota of men for the army service. Doctor Campbell was appointed a member of Governor Stewart's staff as surgeon general in 1913 and served until 1917. He is a member of the Montana Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and is also a member of the United States Public Health Association.

A busy man in his profession, he has yet found time to perform a wide routine of duty in his home city. For the past ten years he has held the offices of city clerk and city treasurer of Harlowton, and for eight years has been chairman of the City School Board. Doctor Campbell is a democrat, and is regarded as one of the party leaders in his section of the state. He has some extensive farming and cattle raising interests in Wheatland County, on Hopley Creek.

Doctor Campbell is a member of the Kappa Sigma and Phi Beta Pi college fraternities, and is affiliated with Musselshell Lodge No. 69, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Harlowton Chapter No. 22, Royal Arch Masons; Palestine Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar; Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, and Bozeman Lodge No. 463 of the Elks. He is a member of the Christian Church, while Mrs. Campbell is a Presbyterian. Doctor Campbell has been able to do a great deal of hard, concentrated work in his life, and he owes that ability partly to the sound constitution he developed as a farm boy, and also to his later avocations, which have taken him much out of doors. He has hunted and fished, is a follower of outdoor sports, and an enthusiastic motorist.

October 12, 1910, Doctor Campbell married Miss Laura Foote, of Redwing, Minnesota. They have three children: Robert Edwin, Samuel K., Jr., and Jean Catherine.

WILLIAM C. HUSBAND, city attorney of Harlowton, organizer of the Farmers' National Bank of this city, and one of the best attorneys of Wheatland County, is widely and favorably known throughout this part of the state. He was born at Guelph, Ontario, Canada, on February 23, 1882, a son of William N. and Agnes (McLagan) Husband, the former of whom was born at Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, in 1848, and the latter at Mitchell, Ontario, Canada, in 1854. Of their ten children nine survive, and William C. Husband is the second in order of birth. William N. Husband was a merchant tailor at Guelph, Ontario, Canada, where he lived until 1889, and then came to the United States and located at Hensel, North Dakota, where he was engaged in farming. Subsequently he went into a grain and agricultural implement business at Hensel, North Dakota, and conducted it until his retirement in 1918. In politics he is a republican, and he served as county drainage commissioner for some time, making an excellent record in that office. In 1913 he was elected to the Lower House of the State Assembly, and re-elected in 1915, serving for two terms, and being connected with the introduction and passage of some important legislation.

William C. Husband attended the public schools of Pembina County, North Dakota, and the university of that state, from which he was graduated in 1907, having taken the legal course. That same year he was admitted to practice in the courts of North Dakota, and was engaged for a time in practice at Grand Forks. In the fall of 1908 he was admitted to the bar in Montana, and came to Harlowton in December of that year, since which time he has become one of the leading members of his profession in Wheatland County. Prior to the organization of Wheatland County Mr. Husband served as deputy county attorney of Meagher County for seven years, and is now serving his fourth consecutive term as city attorney of Harlowton. A republican, he has been extremely effective in the party organization, and was a delegate to the Republican National Convention at Chicago in 1912. A booster for Harlowton, he has been president of the Commercial Club for two terms, and did and is doing much for the industrial and financial development of the city. For two years he was in executive charge of the Meagher County Fair Association, and largely responsible for the successful conduct of these exhibitions, which in his opinion are strong factors in promoting the community welfare and arousing local pride. There are few measures which come before the public in which Mr. Husband does not take an effective interest, for he is very public spirited and advanced in his ideas. The Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias hold his membership and receive his fraternal fealty.

On June 12, 1910, Mr. Husband was married to Miss Eva May Stevens, born at Russell, Ontario, Canada. Mr. and Mrs. Husband have three children, namely: Gordon R., Jean Campbell and Evelyn Agnes.

As a lawyer Mr. Husband displays deep powers of thinking, and a thorough knowledge of the well-founded principles of law, drawing his deductions logically from his premises. He treats law as a science, founded upon established principles, and because of his methods he receives a large share of the legal business of this region, for his clients know that their interests will be handled ably and fairly, and his uniform dignified procedure inspires the respect of his associates in the profession.

Mr. Husband has a wide and most favorable reputation as a trial lawyer; in fact, a large proportion of his business is devoted to that branch of the law. This, however, would necessarily follow in line with his splendid abilities as an orator and public speaker, possessing as he does a forceful and at the same time time a convincing personality on any subject he has in hand.

BENJAMIN T. STEVENS. Upon the roll of representative citizens and prominent and influential business men of the southern part of Montana consistently appears the name of Benjamin T. Stevens, of Harlowton. He is one of those sturdy spirits who have contributed largely to the material welfare of the locality in which he resides. He has been a resident of this community for a number of years, during which time he has gradually won his way into the affections of the people, for he possesses those sterling qualities of character which commend themselves to persons of intelligence and the highest morality.

Benjamin T. Stevens was born in Waldo County, Maine, on October 28, 1864, and is the son of Shelito and Mary (Reckleiff) Stevens. Both parents were also natives of Waldo County, the former born in 1830 and the latter in 1840, and both are deceased, the father dying in 1914, at the age of eighty-four years, and the mother in 1886, at the age of forty-six years. Of the ten children born to these worthy parents six are still living. Shelito Stevens taught school in his younger days, but eventually engaged in the lumber business. He hewed a farm out of the wilderness in Waldo County and became a successful general farmer and stock raiser. He was a lover of horses and owned a number of standard bred animals, and also blooded cattle. He was a Quaker in his religious belief and in politics was a democrat, though not an aspirant for public office.

Benjamin T. Stevens spent his boyhood days on the paternal farmstead in "old rock-ribbed Maine," working for his father during the summer and attending the district school during the winter time. Later he spent his summers in sawmill work until seventeen years old, when, being ambitious to strike out for himself, he came to White Sulphur Springs, Montana, the journey being made by rail to Butte, thence by stage to White Sulphur Springs, where he arrived in the spring of 1882. Here he obtained employment on a sheep ranch, where he rode the range for a time. Later he engaged in mining in Thompson Gulch, but a year later he returned to his former occupation on a sheep and cattle ranch. In 1898 Mr. Stevens went to Alaska, where he spent three years in prospecting and mining, then for a similar period he was engaged in the mercantile business at Coldfoot. At the end of that period he disposed of his holdings there and returned to Montana and became associated with the Winnecook Live Stock Company in the capacity of manager. Two years later he became identified with the Urner Merchandise Company, with whom he remained until 1915. He remained connected in a financial way with the Winnecook Company up to 1917. In February, 1915, Mr. Stevens engaged in the real estate business at Harlowton under the name of the Stevens Realty Company, and during the subsequent years he has handled an enormous quantity of city and farm land. Careful and methodical in his deals, he has been a safe and sound advisor in matters relating to property and his opinion on values is considered authoritative.

Mr. Stevens has taken a keen interest in everything looking to the upbuilding of this section and is a stockholder in the Continental Bank and Trust Company and a stockholder in the T. J. Donnellen Live Stock Company, which does a big business in the buying and selling of cattle. He has taken a deep interest in educational matters and has served as a member of the school board during the past five years. He has also served three terms, 1914-16-18, as alderman from the Third Ward, and has consistently stood for the best things for the community.

Politically Mr. Stevens is a stanch supporter of the republican party, while, fraternally he was a member of Star of the West Lodge No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, but demitted and became a charter member of Musselshell Lodge No. 69, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Harlowton.

On February 5, 1908, Mr. Stevens was married to Elizabeth E. Ring, nee Doran, a native of Illinois, and they are the parents of one son, Edwin Shelito. Mr. Stevens is a man of pleasing personal address and enjoys the friendship of all who know him.

JACOB H. KARNOP, one of the substantial business men of Harlowton, has had a somewhat varied experience and has brought out of it ample means and a good knowledge of men and their motives. His garage and supply business is one of the best in the county, and he holds the confidence and respect of his associates and competitors.

Jacob H. Karnop was born on his father's farm in Crawford County, Wisconsin, January 17, 1866, a son of Fred and Wilhelmina Karnop, both of whom are deceased. They were natives of Germany, who came to the United States at an early day and became pioneers of Wisconsin. Of their six children but two are now living, and of them all Jacob H was the third in order of birth. All of the efforts of Fred Karnop were devoted to farming, and he became a successful man in his calling. Growing up in his native county, Jacob H. Karnop learned to be a good farmer, and at the same time attended school in the rural districts. In 1876 he came to Deerlodge County, Montana, making the trip overland with pack horses, and later to what was then the Musselshell Valley in Meagher County, but now included in Wheatland County. For some years thereafter he rode the range as a cowboy, and then in 1891 invested his savings in a ranch and embarked in the cattle business, in which he continued until 1907, when he sold it and located at Harlowton. Realizing that there was a good opening for a first class garage and supply business, in 1911 he went into that line, and has built up an excellent trade. He is also the agent for this section of the Ford cars. Mr. Karnop has been very prominent as an official, serving as city marshal for several terms, deputy sheriff for several terms, and has been deputy stock inspector for a number of years. In politics he is an independent. Fraternally he belongs to the Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America.

On March 9, 1895, Mr. Karnop was married to Ida Smith, a native of Missouri, and they became the parents of six children, namely: Katherine, Frelda, Herman, Hubert, Lucile, and one who died in infancy. A hardworking man, Mr. Karnop has always sought to do his full duty in whatever position he was placed, and when the enforcement of law and order was in his capable hands he proved himself worthy of the confidence reposed in him by his courageousness in pursuing the wrongdoer and insisting that there be no infringement of the law so far as lay in his power.

Wm. H. C. Cheney

WILLIAM H. CHENEY. One of the chief figures in all the region about Sidney is William H. Cheney, whose life has been given to the Northwest, and more especially to Montana, where his interests have been centered for more than fifty-five years. He is now a farmer, cultivating one of the fertile tracts of the locality around Sidney, and Richland numbers him among her highly respected citizens. Although so long identified with the interests of Montana and the Northwest, Mr. Cheney is a native son of Ohio, born in Harrison County August 1, 1838, and he grew up in the home of a successful farmer there and in Iowa, to which latter commonwealth his parents had moved in 1844. His father, Elzy Cheney, was born in Maryland, and he was a son of Elzy Cheney, of Pennsylvania birth, but who subsequently settled in Maryland, where he became a drover and farmer. He was the father of several children, including Joshua and Elzy, and he died in Harrison County, Ohio. Elzy Cheney, the son, married Susanna McDaniel, a daughter of Joseph McDaniel, a Scotchman. Mrs. Cheney died at Sublett, Missouri, at the home of her son, Alfred. Her children who attained years of maturity comprised three sons and three daughters, namely: Hannah and Mary, who married brothers, Thomas and Robert Henry, and all lived in Harrison County, Ohio; Alfred, who died in Sublett, Missouri; William Henry, of Sidney, Montana; Elzy, who died near Bentonsport, Iowa; Sarah, who became the wife of John Harrison and died at Grays Harbor, Washington. Mrs. Harrison at her death left the following children: William, of Abilene, Kansas; Mary, who married George Hodge, of Springfield, Missouri; Elzy, of Aberdeen, Washington; Reason, of Los Angeles, California; Martin, of Aberdeen, Washington, and Susie, who is the housekeeper for her uncle, William H. Cheney.

When the family located in Iowa they established their home in Lee County, on Honey Creek, eight miles west of West Point, where the father died within a month, leaving his widow with four small children to rear and provide for. William was the second child in age, and with his brothers he did some successful small farming for a year or two, and then joined Billy Criswell in the purchase of one of the first threshing machines brought into that country. During the two years the partners followed threshing they made money, and William Cheney gained a capital of $1,000 or $2,000 before he attained the years of maturity. But previous to taking up this enterprise he had worked in a coal bank for wages, and by this means as well as by farming he created the capital which enabled him to buy the threshing outfit. When the machine was sold after the second year the partners separated, Mr. Criswell going to California and Mr. Cheney decided to cast in his lot with the West. Soon afterward with some companions he went to Leavenworth, Kansas, where he purchased two yoke of cattle from Billie Waddell, the junior member of the firm of Russell, Majors & Waddell, and equipped himself for the long and hazardous trip to California. His companions soon became disheartened and discouraged and returned home on an early boat, and Mr. Cheney then sold his oxen to Mr. Waddell and hired to Jones & Cartwright, a sub-contracting firm under Russell, Majors & Waddell.

Mr. Cheney's first freighting trip was to Denver in 1859, which was accomplished without Indian troubles, and on reaching their destination the goods were unloaded in the company's warehouse, and he returned to Leavenworth with the same train. The chief incident of the journey was the tremendous hail storm which struck them and turned over a wagon, but although their damage was slight, the storm almost destroyed a wagon train of pilgrim emigrants a day behind them and rendered them helpless.

Mr. Cheney's second trip into the West was begun at Nebraska City and the same outfit took goods to Fort Laramie, where Mr. Cheney spent the winter engaged in herding the company's cattle, his companion being known as "Old Pat, the Irishman." It was while at Fort Laramie that he heard of the outbreak of the rebellion, and in the spring with Billie Comstock he was ordered to Fort Pierre, South Dakota, with dispatches from the Government to General Harney, ordering that general to Santa Fe. But after starting he was turned back with orders to go to Leavenworth, and the dragoons under his command almost all went south, deserting the army, and taking possession of a boat on the Missouri, entered the Confederate service. At Leavenworth Mr. Cheney was given a Government team and ordered to Fort Scott, Kansas, with a train of wagons, and spending the winter there he returned to Leavenworth in the following spring, where he was engaged in herding mules for two months and was then made wagon master of a train of twenty-five wagons and ordered to join other outfits and proceed to Santa Fe, New Mexico, with quartermaster stores. On the return trip a prairie fire intercepted them, and one train was entirely destroyed by the fire and another run through by a herd of buffalo running from the fire. Reaching Leavenworth, Mr. Cheney was transferred to Kansas City, to Gen. Tom Ewing's command, where he was engaged in gathering supplies during the winter, cacheing them at Kansas City, was sent back to Leavenworth the following spring, and was then sent upon Government orders to Fort Smith, Arkansas, and assumed charge of his company's transportation department as master of transportation. From there he was ordered to St. Louis to assume charge of transportation for General Sully, who had been ordered to fit out an expedition up the Missouri River to cope with the Sioux uprisings occurring in this region. The trip up the Missouri began at St. Joe, five loaded wagons comprising the train outfit for the expedition, and at Sioux City they found the Sixth and Seventh Iowa and Major Brackett's Cavalry, and the entire outfit journeyed overland to Montana, reaching the Yellowstone River at Searss Crossing, and proceeded down stream to Fort Union crossing the river there. The Sixth Iowa was dropped at the first ferry to guard it, while the other troops followed on to Fort Union. They were then in the country of the hostiles, and the Indians followed them down the river, but on the other side, and at the same time the opposite hills were covered with the red skins, waiting the opportunity to strike, but fortunately for the troops the opportune time never arrived. The train proceeded eastward to Bismarck, and Mr. Cheney built the bridge across Apple Creek over which the train proce ded to Fort Rice, where they joined the cavalry they had left there, also the Thirtieth Wisconsin, which had helped construct that fort.

In 1865 Mr. Cheney's train was ordered on the Devil's Lake trip into Dakota under General Sully, and several months were spent on this trip. In 1866 he made a trip into Montana, this time by boat from Fort Pierre and under the command of Colonel Reeves. They proceeded up the Missouri River to Camp Cook, above the mouth of Judith River, where the needed supplies for the camp were left with the quartermaster, the troops immediately returning to Fort Rice to bring back the wives of the soldiers to Fort Buford, from whence they again went down the old Missouri for the last time. At Omaha in 1866 Mr. Cheney turned over everything, men, teams and supplies, and was ordered back to Fort Sully to assist in the construction of that fort, remaining there four years, when he was transferred to St. Paul, and there came under the command of General Hollabird, chief quartermaster of the army. During his service, Mr. Cheney hauled the first lumber for the building of Fort Pembina on the Red River of the North, loading the lumber at Anoka, on the Mississippi River, 2,000 feet to the load, and at the expiration of his year's service he bought teams of condemned mules and engaged in the teaming business for himself, spending two winters in Winnipeg, and during the course of his work there hauled the lumber for the building of one wing of the new penitentiary. His next employment was with Mr. Rideout, the American contractor for timbers for the Canadian Pacific Railroad. He had fourteen teams engaged in this work, but the work proved disastrous to him financially, as he lost all his teams but one in the epidemic of epizootic then prevailing.

Returning in the following year to Montana, Mr. Cheney went back into the locality where he had made his frontier friends, first stopping near the present site of Sidney and for two or three years following furnished wood for fuel for boats on the Yellowstone, and when he finally abandoned this business he located in section 12 in the valley north of Sidney, following the Government survey. After a time he removed to section 10, subsequently entering a quarter of the section, and he has since been a permanent resident of the locality. For thirty years he has continued his residence on his ranch in section 10, participating in the development of this fertile valley and associating in its business and civic affairs. His half section is devoted to alfalfa and the improvements on the place represent the work of his hands or have been done under his command, and his pasture lands back in the hills are splendidly watered. His cattle brand is known as "VC" and the extent of his cattle industry placed him among the prominent shippers of the region. His first home in section 10 was a log shack of two rooms, which in time gave place to his present home of six rooms, and his barns and sheds are ample for the housing of his stock.

Mr. Cheney cast his first presidential ballot for Abraham Lincoln in Missouri in 1860 and throughout his life he has been a consistent supporter of republican principles. His father was a supporter of the old-time whig party. Mr. Cheney has never married.

On December 13, 1920, Mr. Cheney died suddenly at Albuquerque, New Mexico, of apoplexy. Temporary interment was at Los Angeles, California, December 27, 1920.
